FROM THE SHERIFF

We are halfway through 2016 and have seen a lot happen throughout the Sheriff's Department. We have welcomed new employees, said farewell to some of our long-time employees, passed our annual jail inspection, renamed our jail medical facility, honored our fallen deputies, and participated in various community events. Our recent quarterly award ceremony saw us honor over 300 employees for their years of service, acts of valor, and promotion to a higher rank or position. Congratulations to the recipients of these awards, especially Detective J. Swanson and Deputy Katrina Caldwell-Russell for their acts of bravery. I am extremely proud of our officers and consistently say that we have the best personnel in law enforcement. Thank you to everyone for their dedication and service to this department.

Healthy Living

Healthy Eating

1. Eat veggies first.

Don't fill up on the 'meat and potatoes' portion of your meal first. Eat as much vegetables as you can stand before moving on to the other food groups.

2. Stop counting calories.

Researchers found that when people who are counting calories are presented with an empty doughnut box (an image of something 'forbidden' and 'off limits' to them) they later performed worse on tests of attention and reasoning. Meaning, counting calories screws with your brain. Instead they suggest focusing on simpler strategies like avoiding added sugars or not eating past 7 p.m.

3. Drink Up On Water.

Water has multiple purposes for our health and well being. It has been a know fact that we can survive without food, but cannot survive without water. Water keeps you hydrated which helps prevent fatigue, low energy levels, headaches and mood swings. Water is also essential for the proper function of cells in the body. It is used to regulate our body temperature, remove unwanted toxins from your body and also acts as a lubricant around your joints. In addition, many people confuse thirst for hunger and turn towards food when dehydrated, when in actual fact, what their body really wants is water. Keeping our bodies hydrated will help maintain weight and keep us on the right track to a healthy diet.

4 Ways to Encourage Healthy Eating

4. Know Your Total Daily Energy Expenditure (TDEE) and Don't Overeat

Some foods might taste great, are addictive or you are just going through a phase where you are eating "out of emotions". Whatever the reason, overeating can definitely lead to health risks in the long term. In addition, there are a lot of hidden calories in foods and being aware of your daily food intake can help you stay in control of your eating habits.

Total daily energy expenditure (TDEE) calculates the amount of calories your body burns per day based on your height, weight, age and physical activity level. Once you know your TDEE, it's much easier to determine if you're eating too much or not enough.
