1918. In a medical malpractice action against a cardiothoracic surgeon in which plaintiffs claimed that the surgeon was negligent in failing to provide proper and ordinary care to a patient, in failing to properly administer to the site where he placed a permanent arteriovenous access graft (AV graft) in the patient, and in failing to properly monitor the patient after diagnosis of infection, the trial court did not err by overruling the surgeon's objections to the qualifications of plaintiffs' expert witness, an infectious disease specialist, because the expert was not required to have experience in actually performing the surgical procedure to insert or extricate the graft, as appellees had not made any claims with regard to the surgical procedure itself. McKowen v. Ragston, 263 S.W.3d 157, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 245 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

1919. As a pathologist, a doctor, who was an expert witness for the State, could reliably base her opinion concerning bone fractures upon her examination, background, studies, and experience with the tensile strength of pediatric bones, particularly ribs, and the amount of force necessary to break a two and a half year old child's ribs; thus, there was no merit to the argument that a forensic pathologist needed to have a sub speciality in merry-go-round accidents or stair falls in order to testify to the pathological consequences of that type of a fall; accordingly, in a termination of parental rights case, the doctor's testimony regarding the deceased daughter's injuries was admissible. In re J.L., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11102 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 28 2006), (citation omitted).

1920. Trial court did not err in allowing testimony concerning a dog scent lineup; the officer worked as a canine handler for 12 years and had personal training, the officer taught canine scent trailing techniques and had been contacted by other agencies for education on the subject, the dog assisted 30 agencies in 74 scent lineups and never misidentified anyone, there was not evidence that the dog's abilities were affected by having to receive certain medication, and defendant provided nothing indicating that the objectivity of the lineup was compromised by certain actions and the officer took affirmative steps to administer the scent lineup objectively. Martinez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10758 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 19 2006).

1921. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1922. Trial court did not err in excluding certain expert testimony because the witness admitted to lacking expertise in the matter about which the expert was to opine and thus the trial court could have inferred that the witness lacked experience and training in the field and was not qualified, or the trial court could have found that the reliability of the witness's experiment was suspect. Stringer v. Red River Commodities, Inc., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10617 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 13 2006).

1923. In a murder trial, the trial court properly found that a doctor was qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 702 to render expert testimony on whether an individual could die from a stab wound in the buttock, as described in the autopsy report and shown in the crime scene photographs, even though he did not have any experience in pathology; his qualifications included experience as a trauma surgeon, responsible for the evaluation, diagnosis, and treatment of acutely injured patients. Bigler v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10490 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 7 2006).

1924. In a medical malpractice suit, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that an expert/doctor had knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education in the Burch bladder suspension procedure that would assist the jury; the record did not support the assertion that the expert did not use the Burch method and was not trained in it. Cairus v. Gomez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10479 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 6 2006).

1925. Objection based on the qualifications of an expert witness and the foundation for such testimony was not made at trial; therefore, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Halverson v. Podlewski, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8814 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 11 2006).

1926. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that experts proffered by plaintiffs to testify about the design of a sport utility vehicle's side impact protection system were qualified to testify on the actual subject on which they offered an opinion where one of the experts, who testified that he had been involved in vehicle design for 57 years, was offered as an expert with knowledge of the consequences to and behavior of vehicles and occupants in crashes, including side impact crashes, and how to design vehicles to minimize the impact to occupants in vehicle crashes, including side impact crashes. GMC v. Burry, 203 S.W.3d 514, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8284 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1927. Anesthesiologist's expert report did not show that he was qualified, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702, to express an expert opinion with respect to proximate cause of the injuries alleged, the patient's ischemic stroke; the fact that the anesthesiologist took part in the care of persons like the patient did not impart the necessary qualifications to state that the effect of the cessation of the patient's anticoagulant medication caused the patient's stroke, and the anesthesiologist failed to explain how his knowledge and skill qualified him to state that the cessation of the medication proximately caused the patient's stroke and thus, for purposes of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351, the expert report was deficient. Leland v. Brandal, 217 S.W.3d 60, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11248 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006), aff'd, 257 S.W.3d 204, 2008 Tex. LEXIS 574 (Tex. 2008).

1928. Inquiry is whether the trial court has any discretion to grant a 30-day extension under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 and the court holds that it does; a patient and his wife submitted a report addressing all statutorily required elements, but it was deficient because the report failed to adequately articulate how the expert was qualified to render an opinion on proximate cause, and as such, the court disagreed with a dentist that the trial court was without any discretion to allow a 30-day extension. Leland v. Brandal, 217 S.W.3d 60, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11248 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006), aff'd, 257 S.W.3d 204, 2008 Tex. LEXIS 574 (Tex. 2008).

1929. Trial court found that the YSTR methodology had been validated internally and externally and subjected to peer review, that it was generally accepted in the scientific community, and that the YSTR evidence was reliable and relevant; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the YSTR evidence was reliable and relevant. Curtis v. State, 205 S.W.3d 656, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1930. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that a forensic psychiatrist was qualified as an expert in the field of psychiatry and was qualified to testify to the opinions she expressed in a civil commitment case because: (1) the psychiatrist received her bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma; (2) she was a graduate of Emory Medical School; (3) she also completed a one-year internship at Emory Medical School; (4) she completed psychology and psychiatry residency training; (5) after receiving specialized training during her fellowship in forensic psychiatry, she was in private practice; (6) as part of her outpatient practice, she had treated inmates for about eight hours a week for eight years at a county Jail; (7) the psychiatrist had evaluated and treated juveniles, including sex offenders, committed to the Texas Youth Commission and at the state school in Gainesville; (8) at the time of her deposition she still evaluated defendants for the criminal courts in several counties. In re Martinez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7459 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2006).

1931. Equipment maintenance company's no-evidence motion for summary judgment was properly granted pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a on the TrackMobile equipment operator's negligence clam because the operator failed to present the required expert testimony about the proper inspection and maintenance of the TrackMobile and if the company's conduct met that standard of care; expert testimony was required as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 702 because a maintenance company's practices and procedures and industry standards with respect to the inspection and maintenance of a TrackMobile or other rail-car mover engine were not matters within a lay person's general knowledge. Simmons v. Briggs Equip. Trust, 221 S.W.3d 109, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5647 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

1932. Appellees' experts were qualified to testify as to the design of an automobile's side impact protection system because one was a previous automobile designer for appellant autmobile manufacturer, had been subsequently investigating accidents for 30 years, and had built and tested airbags; the other expert was an airbag sensor engineer who had previously worked for a company that designed airbags and airbag sensors for automotive companies including appellant. GMC v. Burry, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5736, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17487 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 29 2006).

1933. In a trial for breach of a warranty on roofing materials, plaintiff's expert was qualified, under Tex. R. Evid. 702, to testify as to the cost of the installation of the foam roof, even if he had never prepared specifications for a new roof or a re-roof or monitored the installation of a foam roof; those qualifications related to installation, not cost. Carlisle Corp. v. Medical City Dallas, Ltd., 196 S.W.3d 855, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5476 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

1934. Defendant in a driving while intoxicated case could not complain on appeal about the absence of sufficient evidence concerning the qualifications of an officer as an expert on the horizontal gaze nystagmus test because she waived the issue at a suppression hearing when the trial court, upon the request of the State, took "judicial notice" of the officer's qualifications as an expert witness from a previous suppression hearing. Taylor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

1935. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding two officers qualified as experts to testify as to the administration and technique of the horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test, even though the record did not make clear that the officers had received practitioner's certificates, because an expert witness did not have to be certified by the State of Texas before his testimony on the subject of the HGN test was admissible. Taylor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

1936. State's witness was qualified to testify as to sex offenders' process of "grooming" because she testified that she worked for the probation department for 15 years and that her job was to keep an eye on people on probation; of those 15 years, she spent five of them as a specialized sex offender caseload supervisor for the trial court, during which she participated in 80 hours of training each year on how to supervise sex offenders and attended sex offender treatment with the sex offenders who were on probation. Davenport v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5166 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

1937. Where an injured seaman brought suit to recover damages from a maritime company, a life care planner was qualified to testify as an expert witness on actual medical costs; he had thirty years of experience in health care management for people with disabilities and a masters degree in rehabilitation counseling; the expert testified regarding the specific basis and methodology for his opinion. SeaRiver Maritime, Inc. v. Pike, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4905 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 8 2006).

1938. In a medical malpractice action, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony from the deceased patient's expert witnesses because the experts were all highly qualified and had extensive experience in their respective fields, and they based their opinions on the objective data contained in the medical records of the deceased patient as required under Tex. R. Evid. 702; the doctors did not challenge the experts' qualifications; rather the doctors' claims of unreliability went to the weight to be given the expert testimony, not its reliability. Brandt v. Surber, 194 S.W.3d 108, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4962 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

1939. In an aggravated sexual assault case, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 702, the State failed to introduce sufficient evidence to establish that the nurse was an expert qualified to testify regarding the effects of HIV; while her job as a nurse almost certainly required some knowledge of HIV, there was nothing in the record establishing that the nurse was qualified as an expert by her knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education on the effects of HIV. Calvo v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3817 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 4 2006).

1940. At a hearing, outside the presence of the jury, a doctor testified that he based his opinion on his practice in emergency medicine and what he saw in the emergency room while treating the victim, a 16-month old child; defendant contended that the doctor was not qualified to testify on what someone believed would happen if they saw an assault; however, the training, experience, research, seminars, and periodicals about which the doctor testified and upon which he based his medical opinion qualified him to testify as an expert witness; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the doctor to testify as an expert witness. Montgomery v. State, 198 S.W.3d 67, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1941. Trial court erred in awarding damages to the surface right property owner due to the oil company's operations on the land because the property owner's expert's qualification and experience as an engineer in the oil and gas industry did not qualify him to testify regarding the value of timber removed by the oil company as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702; therefore, the expert's testimony as to valuation and the amount of damages owed by the oil company had no probative worth. Even if the expert were qualified, his testimony was flawed because it was based on the advice of a forester and an accountant, which was not shown to comply with applicable professional standards, and the expert made assumptions about the amount of land cleared by the oil company, which did not constitute a sufficient basis for his opinion as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705(c). Classic Oil & Gas, Inc. v. Cook, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2936 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 12 2006).

1942. Trial court erred in awarding damages to the surface right property owner due to the oil company's operations on the land because the property owner's expert's qualification and experience as an engineer in the oil and gas industry did not qualify him to testify regarding the value of timber removed by the oil company as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702; therefore, the expert's testimony as to valuation and the amount of damages owed by the oil company had no probative worth. Classic Oil & Gas, Inc. v. Cook, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2936 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 12 2006).

1943. Expert report submitted by a patient in his medical malpractice action arising out of a surgery that he claimed was performed on the wrong party of his body did not comply with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(a) where the patient had failed to establish that his expert was qualified to testify regarding the standard of care applicable to the condition involved in the underlying claim because: (1) information regarding the expert's peer review committee and director positions did not provide sufficient detail from which it could be determined that his experience on the committee and as a director was relevant to the standard of care applicable to hospital personnel in a surgical setting; (2) the expert's general reference to a three year internship/residency in surgery was not sufficient to establish that he had sufficient training and experience with regard to the procedures hospital personnel were required to follow during a surgical procedure eight years after his internship/residency ended; and (3) the patient had failed to show that the preoperative procedures hospital personnel were required to follow in a surgical setting were substantially developed in the expert's field of emergency room medicine; expert testimony was required because the nature of the patient's medical procedure and whether it resulted in the wrong part of the body being operated on were not within the common knowledge of a layperson, and, even under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the patient was required to establish that the expert was qualified to testify regarding causation. Methodist Health Care Sys. of San Antonio, Ltd. v. Rangel, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10858 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 14 2005).

1944. Trial court did not err in precluding defendant's proffered expert witness testimony when the expert did not demonstrate familiarity with the facts of the case, and the expert's field of expertise in the subject of memories of eyewitnesses, who provide an identification, was called into question. Sturgeon v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10904 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 23 2005).

1945. Trial court properly admitted expert testimony from a board-certified pediatrician under Tex. R. Evid. 702, although he was not a neurologist, as to the specific causes and effects of the child's injuries, based on his experience and study of pediatric neurological injuries. Roberts v. Williamson, 111 S.W.3d 113, 2003 Tex. LEXIS 110, 46 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 944 (Tex. 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Ultimate Issue

1946. Trial court did not err by allowing a forensic interviewer to bolster the victim's testimony because the interviewer essentially opined that the child victim did not exhibit signs of manipulation or coaching. Vasquez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6403, 2012 WL 3125171 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 2 2012).

1947. Detective's testimony was improperly admitted because it decided the ultimate fact for the jury; whether the undisputed fact that defendant broke into the house and killed the victim constituted capital murder, and it was not designed to enable the jurors to better comprehend the full significance of the evidence. However, the error was harmless because entering a building or habitation without the effective consent of the owner and killing a person therein constituted capital murder because it was murder in the course of committing burglary. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8122, 2009 WL 3366559 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 21 2009).

1948. Nothing in the testimony was a comment on a doctor's opinion about the truth of the child victim's account of the aggravated sexual assault; the doctor testified that her findings were consistent with the history the victim reported, the doctor's testimony never suggested that the jury was to deduce that defendant was the individual who committed the act, and the doctor was permitted to testify that the findings of the victim's examination were consistent with the male sexual organ and penis entering the vagina. Thus, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702, the doctor's testimony did not amount to improper bolstering. Shell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3384 (Tex. App. Austin May 15 2009).

1949. Court properly excluded expert testimony because the jury was equally competent to form an opinion about the ultimate fact issues, namely the voluntariness of defendant's statement. Because the expert's testimony impermissibly offered a direct opinion as to the truthfulness of defendant's statement, the court properly excluded it. Contreras v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 91, 2009 WL 50601 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 8 2009).

1950. In defendant's indecency with a child case, the trial court properly excluded the testimony of his expert witness who was going to testify as to the reliability of child-victim testimony because, when the State asked the expert what he intended to state as his ultimate opinion, he answered "at this stage of the outcry it will be very difficult for jurors to evaluate credibility or reliability because there have been too many times this child has been interviewed." The expert's testimony directly addressed the victim's credibility and truthfulness. Pinales v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 32, 2009 WL 26886 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 6 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : General Overview

1951. After the investigating detective testified that defendant had worked at his relationship with the victim in a process called grooming, defendant agreed that he was grooming the victim; even if the trial court abused its discretion in admitting this evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 702, the admission of the evidence did not affect defendant's substantial rights in view of his acknowledgment that he was grooming the victim. Worthy v. State, 295 S.W.3d 685, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3672 (Tex. App. Eastland May 28 2009).

1952. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, the court properly allowed the arresting officer to testify regarding defendant's performance on the walk-and-turn and one-legged stand sobriety tests because the tests were grounded in the common knowledge that excessive alcohol consumption could cause problems with coordination, balance, and mental agility. Plouff v. State, 192 S.W.3d 213, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2546 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

1953. In defendant's theft case, a court properly allowed the testimony of a fraud examiner who had not been disclosed to appellant prior to trial because the witness testified to the summaries of information that the trial court had admitted, the summaries were of bank and credit card records admitted into evidence, the witness did not offer opinion testimony on the source of the money or the responsible party, and therefore, the witness testified as a lay witness and his testimony did not exceed the limits placed on the testimony of lay witnesses. Reuter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1314 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

1954. In a dispute between insureds under a homeowners policy and their insurer concerning mold in the insureds' home, the insureds' claims failed on summary judgment because the insureds did not timely designate any expert to testify as to causation and lay testimony was insufficient. While the general causal relationship between water and mold might have been common knowledge, the causation issue in the instant case was not within the general experience and common sense of a lay person. Qualls v. State Farm Lloyds, 226 F.R.D. 551, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5049 (N.D. Tex. 2005).

1955. Where there was no indication in an officer's sworn report that his opinion of a driver's intoxication was based on his training and experience, his qualifications did not have to be established under Tex. R. Evid. 702; further, the walk-and-turn and one-leg stand tests were not based on a novel scientific theory and, under Tex. R. Evid. 701, a police officer was not required to be an expert to express an opinion as to whether the person he observed was intoxicated. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Struve, 79 S.W.3d 796, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : General Overview

1956. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the victim's primary case physician as a lay witness, and therefore he did not have to be qualified as an expert to render an opinion about whether the victim was disabled, because the physician's testimony was based on his perception of the victim and his opinion was helpful to the jury in determining the factual issue of the victim's status as a disabled individual and did not require significant expertise to interpret. Edwards v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5677 (Tex. App. Austin May 29 2014).

1957. Employees of a business purchaser who testified in a trial against the owner of the sold business regarding allegedly improper financial conduct by the owner were fact witnesses pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 701 rather than expert witnesses under Tex. R. Evid. 702, such that documents which the employees referred to were not subject to exclusion under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.6(a) for not being disclosed in a timely manner pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 194, as such disclosure only applied to expert witnesses.

1958. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a Tex. R. Evid. 705 hearing concerning a special agent's testimony because the trial court properly admitted the agent's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 701; the State presented the agent as a lay witness to testify about the pimp subculture and to address the issue of cause, as placed into issue by defendant's cross-examination of the complainant; the questions contemplated drew directly from the agent's personal experience and familiarity with the pimping subculture, including its terms, many of which the complainant had used in her testimony, which the agent gained from interviewing both pimps and prostitutes; questioning the agent about what he learned from his experience assisted the fact-finder in determining a fact in issue, specifically defendant's utilizing the complainant as a prostitute for his personal profit; because Tex. R. Evid. 702 did not apply, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's objections to the relevancy of the agent's testimony on the ground that the State did not establish how his opinion fit the facts of the case as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702. Richardson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4281 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 31 2007).

1959. Psychologist, who testified during defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault on a child, testified as a lay witness because the psychologist's opinions were rationally based on the perception of the witness; a reasonable person could have the opinions expressed by spending a significant amount of time around children, and the psychologist's opinion was not based on scientific theory, but it was helpful and did not require significant expertise to interpret. Scott v. State, 222 S.W.3d 820, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

1960. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, walk-and-turn and one-leg tests were properly admitted, despite testimony that they were improperly performed. Testimony by the arresting officer concerning both tests was lay witness testimony governed by Tex. R. Evid 701 rather than Tex. R. Evid 702. Plouff v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8546 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 18 2005), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 192 S.W.3d 213, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2546 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

1961. Defendant waived appellate review regarding an officer's testimony on the psychological and physiological effects of ecstasy, cocaine, and marijuana because at trial he objected on confrontation grounds, not on the basis put forward on appeal, that the State failed to establish the admissibility of the complained-of testimony pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 701, 702, or 703. Nelson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6710 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : Personal Perceptions

1962. In defendant's drug case, the trial court did not err in allowing a witness to testify as to what tanks were used for because the witness had worked for the business for 16 years at the time of the trial, and the witness testified that the tanks were used to store and move fertilizer and anhydrous ammonia. That was not scientific, technical, or specialized knowledge that was being offered to assist the trier of fact. Meier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8078, 2009 WL 3335282 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 16 2009).

1963. In a trial for child sexual assault, a licensed clinical psychologist was properly allowed to testify as a lay witness where her name was not on the expert list, despite defendant's argument that the psychologist testified in an expert manner under Tex. R. Evid. 702; the testimony that children did not talk about things that troubled them unless they felt safe was that of a lay witness because it satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 701 in part because the opinion was not based on a scientific theory and did not require significant expertise to interpret. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 25 2007).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Personal Knowledge

1964. Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of the nurse that drew defendant's blood because she testified concerning the procedure she normally used for drawing blood and that her signature was on defendant's tube, she was not asked for specific opinions based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge, and her testimony was relevant. Halbirt v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12823, 2013 WL 5658371 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 16 2013).

1965. In condemnation proceedings, an affidavit of the vice president of the corporate general partner of a limited partnership was properly excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 701 regarding the valuation of the property to be take for a water line easement because his opinion was based on his expertise rather than his personal familiarity with the property and he was not timely disclosed as an expert. Reid Rd. Mun. Util. Dist. No. 2 v. Speedy Stop Food Stores, Ltd., 337 S.W.3d 846, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 190, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 658 (Tex. 2011).

1966. Deputy's testimony that the presence and degree of lividity indicated death had occurred over an hour before he first observed the victim's body was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701 because it was based on first-hand knowledge and under Tex. R. Evid. 702 based on his training and experience, which included his 11 years as a crime-scene investigator, during which he had amassed extensive training and experience; the classes conducted by physicians in the county medical examiner's office in which instruction was provided on the approximate times for lividity and rigor mortis to set in on a corpse; medical conferences he attended regularly in which information was provided on lividity as a beginning stage of decomposition; and the fact that he had seen hundreds of homicide victims. Thompson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1633, 2011 WL 782051 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 8 2011).

1967. In an action for breach of contract arising from an agreement to finance and develop a casino, Tex. R. Evid. 702 permitted the financial representative for the developer to testify as to damages; the fact that he could not have personal knowledge concerning the admitted, actual revenues of the finance company did not prevent him from using the company's financial data as a basis for determining the developer's lost profits. Am. Heritage, Inc. v. Nev. Gold & Casino, Inc., 259 S.W.3d 816, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 942 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

1968. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, an officer was properly allowed to testify as to the administration of a one-leg stand test because the evidence related to nonscientific evidence and was admissible as lay opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 701; the testimony was not subject to the criteria of Tex. R. Evid. 702. Taylor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Ultimate Issue

1969. Although the court erred by allowing an expert to testify that a sexual assault occurred, the error was harmless where the child victim told her caregivers and the jury that defendant put his "private" in her "private" on numerous occasions. The victim also provided detailed descriptions of the sexual abuse in age-appropriate language. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

Family Law : Child Custody : Awards : Standards : Best Interests of Child

1970. In a child custody case, the child's licensed professional counselor was properly permitted to testify as an expert regarding what would be in the child's best interest. The court declined to rely on administrative rules against conflicting roles as a basis for the inadmissibility of the testimony. In the Interest of S.A.H., 420 S.W.3d 911, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 887, 2014 WL 294547 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

1971. In a child custody case, the child's licensed professional counselor was properly permitted to testify as an expert regarding what would be in the child's best interest. The court declined to rely on administrative rules against conflicting roles as a basis for the inadmissibility of the testimony. In the Interest of S.A.H., 420 S.W.3d 911, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 887, 2014 WL 294547 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

Family Law : Child Custody : Visitation : Awards : Third Parties : Grandparents

1972. Paternal grandmother testified that she was present at the birth of the children, that she had provided assistance to the children, and that the children enjoyed visiting with her and her other children, in addition to her extended family, but that evidence did not address the primary issue in a Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 153.433 case, that eliminating contact with the grandmother would significantly impair the children's physical health or emotional well-being; furthermore, the testimony of a school district counselor, who had not been trained as a counselor for children in family situations, did not have professional experience dealing with child-grandparent relationships, and had never treated or even seen any of the children involved in the litigation in a clinical setting, did not qualify as expert witness testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and her opinion constituted nothing more than lay personal opinion. The mere opinion of the grandmother and an interested, nonexpert witness that the grandmother should be granted access to the children did not overcome the statutory presumption in Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 153.433(2) that the mother acted in the best interest of the children. In the Interest of M.K.S., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9138, 2010 WL 4644496 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 17 2010).

Family Law : Guardians : General Overview

1973. In a dispute over conservatorship of a child after termination of parental rights, the trial court did not err in ruling under Tex. R. Evid. 702 that a social worker, who was certified and had significant experience, was qualified to conduct a Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 107.051 social study of the grandmother's home and to testify in support of her conclusions. Taylor v. Texas Dept of Protective & Regulatory Servs., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1967 (Mar. 10, 2005).

Family Law : Marital Termination & Spousal Support : Dissolution & Divorce : Property Distribution

1974. In a divorce proceeding, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing an expert witness to testify regarding the net asset value of a business run by appellant former husband during the marriage because the expert had been a certified public accountant for twenty-five years and had experience using the net asset value method for valuing businesses. Mora v. Mora, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3831, 2012 WL 1721540 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 16 2012).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

1975. Error in admitting expert testimony regarding the results of parents' drug tests in a proceeding to terminate their parental rights probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because the expert did not have expertise concerning the actual subject about which he offered his expert opinion, and because the results of the tests were not shown to be reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702. The expert's "opinion" that the samples tested positive for cocaine was beyond the scope of his expertise and based entirely on a written report he received from a laboratory, and even though the scientific theory of testing hair samples for illegal drugs using immunoassay and gas chromatography mass spectrometry or gas chromatography mass spectrometry mass spectrometry might be reliable, there was no showing of the reliable application of that theory in the case because the expert merely speculated that the lab had to have followed protocol or it would have lost its license. In re S.E.W., 168 S.W.3d 875, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3809 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

1976. In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, a caseworker was properly permitted to testify as a fact witness. Contrary to the father's assertion that she expressed the "collective opinion" of the agency, she did not voice an opinion, when asked, about what was in the best interest of the children. Rogers v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 175 S.W.3d 370, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1327 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

1977. Admission of expert testimony by a play therapist was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 703, as the trial court held a Daubert hearing and pursuant to the assessment of factors to assess reliability under Nenno, it was found that such was a legitimate field of expertise and the testimony itself was sufficiently reliable; the expert's testimony was based on her therapy and counseling sessions with a child, wherein he had indicated that his mother was abusive to him and his sister, and was admissible in the mother's parental rights termination proceeding. In re A.J.L., 136 S.W.3d 293, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3825 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

1978. Court declined to hold that expert medical testimony was mandatory in a suit seeking to terminate parental rights under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(D) or (E); mother's rights were properly terminated without expert testimony, based in part on her boyfriend's abuse of the child. In re K.W., 138 S.W.3d 420, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3467 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

1979. As a pathologist, a doctor, who was an expert witness for the State, could reliably base her opinion concerning bone fractures upon her examination, background, studies, and experience with the tensile strength of pediatric bones, particularly ribs, and the amount of force necessary to break a two and a half year old child's ribs; thus, there was no merit to the argument that a forensic pathologist needed to have a sub speciality in merry-go-round accidents or stair falls in order to testify to the pathological consequences of that type of a fall; accordingly, in a termination of parental rights case, the doctor's testimony regarding the deceased daughter's injuries was admissible. In re J.L., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11102 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 28 2006), (citation omitted).

Governments : Local Governments : Elections

1980. In an election contest under Tex. Elec. Code Ann. § 221.003(a), a trial court was not required to accept the opinion of an expert concerning the unreliability of electronic voting devices where he admitted that he had not examined or tested any machines used in the county; his conclusions were unsupported by any analysis or reasoning, and a county elections administrator testified to the contrary by pointing to the fact that signature rosters almost perfectly matched the number of paper votes. The trial court found that the election day count was valid; even if a court-supervised recount was accurate, the benefit to the incumbent was insufficient to affect the outcome of the election. Flores v. Cuellar, 269 S.W.3d 657, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6610 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

Governments : State & Territorial Governments : Licenses

1981. Although an engineering expert was not licensed in Texas, his testimony was admissible under Tex. Occ. Code Ann. §§ 1001.003(c)(1), 1001.004(e)(2) and Tex. R. Evid. 702 in a products liability case. Tidwell v. Terex Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7724 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

Healthcare Law : Actions Against Facilities : Standards of Care : Expert Testimony

1982. In a medical malpractice case, read as a whole, the patient's expert's report and curriculum vitae established his qualifications to offer opinions on the standard of care relevant to defendant's decision to proceed to surgery, but they did not establish his qualifications to offer opinions on the standard of care relevant to defendant's care and treatment of the patient during and after the surgery. Nothing within the report's four corners disclosed or described the expert's training or experience performing, observing, or teaching other physicians about the surgical removal of an ovary and the patient's postoperative care. Cortez v. Tomas, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1092, 2012 WL 407382 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 9 2012).

1983. In a medical malpractice case, the court erred in granting the doctor's motion to dismiss on the basis that the expert was not a qualifying "expert" because he tied his education and training not only to his knowledge of anesthesia care during a cardiac procedure, but also to the medical and health standards of care for general surgeons like the doctor. Additionally, the padding and positioning of a patient during surgery was common to surgeries generally, and the expert made clear that he had knowledge, training, and experience regarding the medical and surgical management duties of the general surgeon during surgical procedures. Barber v. Mercer, 303 S.W.3d 786, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8621 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 15 2009).

1984. Expert's report was inadequate because, besides summarily asserting "knowledge," the expert's report and curriculum vitae did not demonstrate how he gained the requisite experience or training to satisfy the requirement that he had substantial training or experience in total knee replacement surgery and the post-operative care of such a procedure. Carreras, M.D. v. Trevino, 298 S.W.3d 721, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6644 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

Healthcare Law : Actions Against Healthcare Workers : Doctors & Physicians

1985. Trial court properly admitted expert testimony from a board-certified pediatrician under Tex. R. Evid. 702, although he was not a neurologist, as to the specific causes and effects of the child's injuries, based on his experience and study of pediatric neurological injuries. Roberts v. Williamson, 111 S.W.3d 113, 2003 Tex. LEXIS 110, 46 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 944 (Tex. 2003).

Healthcare Law : Actions Against Healthcare Workers : Surgeons

1986. Expert report submitted in a medical malpractice claim arising out of an otolaryngologist's allegedly puncturing a patient's nostril with a hard plastic vacuum tool represented an objective good-faith effort as required by Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(6) given that the expert set forth the standard of care applicable to an otolaryngologist, how it was breached during post-operative care following sinus surgery, and causation. Jassin v. Bennett, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9854 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 29 2012).

Healthcare Law : Treatment : Failures to Disclose & Warn : Prescription Medications

1987. In a negligent prescription case, plaintiff's expert did not adequately demonstrate qualifications, as required by Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.401 and Tex. R. Evid. 702 to submit an expert report on causation. While the doctor's curriculum vitae did establish a background in pharmaceutical matters, the report did not indicate any specific knowledge, experience, education, or training in assessing the causal relationship between the prolonged use of the prescribed drug and the patient's condition. Collini v. Pustejovsky, 280 S.W.3d 456, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1071 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 12 2009).

Healthcare Law : Treatment : Incompetent, Minor & Mentally Disabled Patients : General Overview

1988. Licensed professional counselor was qualified to render a diagnosis that the victim suffered posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) as a result of the abuse because she was authorized to diagnose mental and emotional disorders under Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 503.003(a)(2)-(4)and PTSD was a recognized mental disorder. Melder v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5130 (Tex. App. Tyler May 14 2014).

Legal Ethics : Client Relations : General Overview

1989. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting an attorney's expert testimony that a lawyer who violated the disciplinary rules necessarily violated a fiduciary duty because that testimony was unreliable, as it contravened Texas law. The error was not harmless because it probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment, given the closing arguments and the jury's questions to the trial court. Fleming v. Kinney, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1986 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2013).

1990. Trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that an attorney was qualified to testify as an expert with respect to compliance with the fiduciary duties that attorneys owe to clients in the context of charging litigation expenses as part of an aggregate settlement because: (1) she had a J.D. from a Texas university; (2) she had been licensed to practice law in Texas since 1989; (3) in private practice she worked on mass action litigation; (4) she had served since 2001 as a member of the committee of the State Bar of Texas that drafted and revised proposed language for the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct; and (5) in 2003 she began working as a consultant with a focus on attorney and judicial ethics. Fleming v. Kinney, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1986 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2013).

Public Health & Welfare Law : Healthcare : Mental Health Services : Commitment : Involuntary Commitment of Adults

1991. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that a forensic psychiatrist was qualified as an expert in the field of psychiatry and was qualified to testify to the opinions she expressed in a civil commitment case because: (1) the psychiatrist received her bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma; (2) she was a graduate of Emory Medical School; (3) she also completed a one-year internship at Emory Medical School; (4) she completed psychology and psychiatry residency training; (5) after receiving specialized training during her fellowship in forensic psychiatry, she was in private practice; (6) as part of her outpatient practice, she had treated inmates for about eight hours a week for eight years at a county Jail; (7) the psychiatrist had evaluated and treated juveniles, including sex offenders, committed to the Texas Youth Commission and at the state school in Gainesville; (8) at the time of her deposition she still evaluated defendants for the criminal courts in several counties. In re Martinez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7459 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2006).

Real Property Law : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Procedure

1992. In an eminent domain proceeding in which a land planner designated as an expert by the owner testified that the owner could not achieve full compliance with the town's zoning ordinances after the State's condemnation and that the owner would be required to demolish all of its buildings, the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the land planner's opinion about the allegedly required demolition of the owner's buildings because his opinion was impermissibly speculative and conjectural. Reversal was required because there was a reasonable probability that the inadmissible evidence that characterized the demolition of the owner's buildings as a certainty, rather than a market-affecting factor, improperly influenced the jury's verdict on remainder damages. State v. Little Elm Plaza, Ltd., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 25 2012).

Real Property Law : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Valuation

1993. Trial court did not err in allowing the State's appraisal expert to testify at trial that the condemned property most likely would not be developed for eight years while it was undergoing environmental remediation as the market survey results that the expert conducted supported his conclusion that the property most likely would not be developed until regulatory closure or a letter of no further action was obtained.

1994. In an eminent domain proceeding, because appellant's contention that the State's appraisal expert's opinion under the comparable sales method was tainted by speculation and improper assumptions and appellant's argument that the expert's opinions were unreliable and thus inadmissible were rejeted, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the expert's appraisal opinions.

1995. Appellant's argument that there was no support for the State's appraisal expert's use of a discount rate in appraising property was rejected because appellant cited no authority for its contention that a discount rate analysis was an improper methodology in condemnation practice; and the expert testified that performing a discounted cash flow analysis to determine the environmentally impaired property value was supported by Appraisal Institute literature.

1996. Expert testimony utilizing the sales comparison approach was improperly admitted as to the fair market value of property consisting of a lease for a small parcel of land and a billboard structure with a sign permit because the expert testified that buyers and sellers used valuation approaches based on advertising revenue; revenues from billboard advertising cannot be used as the basis for determining the fair market value of property taken in a condemnation proceeding. State v. Moore Outdoor Props., L.P., 416 S.W.3d 237, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13907, 2013 WL 6002035 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 13 2013).

1997. Trial court did not err in a condemnation case in which the jury found the fair value of the property owner's land to be $250,000 in admitting the testimony of the State's expert appraiser where there were no gaps in the testimony of the appraiser or misapplication of legal rules such that her testimony could have been found to have been unreliable because the appraiser had formed her opinion by comparing the difference between the results of two methods of valuing the property: the cost approach, giving a value of $217,000, and the improved sales comparison approach that gave a value of $205,000. The property owner had not shown that the appraiser could not make valid comparisons for size, and the evidence permitted the conclusion that the owner's entire property was devoted to single-family use and that the applicable zoning ordinance would have allowed the existing use to continue. Williams v. State, 406 S.W.3d 273, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7405 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 19 2013).

1998. In a condemnation proceeding in which plaintiff county acquired a portion of commercial property used for a car wash in order to widen a county roadway, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the county's appraisal expert because the expert's bald assurance that he used a widely accepted appraisal method was insufficient to establish reliability. His report, as well as the underlying data and methodology, did not reflect application of an accepted appraisal method to arrive at the fair market value of the remainder after the taking where he simply took the market value of the whole and assumed--without any basis--that a willing buyer and willing seller would agree to reduce the market value by one-fifth after the taking. Dallas County v. Crestview Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1269 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

1999. Expert testimony valuing property on which a large natural gas processing plant had been built as vacant rural residential property was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and was unreliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702 because the expert failed to explain why the existing use of the property would not be presumed as the highest and best use, did not offer fair market value of the land based on its condition at the time of the condemnation, and did not account for all relevant factors affecting valuation. Enbridge Pipeline (east Texas) L.P. v. Avinger Timber, L.L.C., 326 S.W.3d 390, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8629, 172 Oil & Gas Rep. 722 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 27 2010).

2000. In a condemnation proceeding, admission of appellee's expert testimony regarding temporary damages was not an abuse of discretion. Appellant State's analysis that a hotel needed only 75 percent of the total parking spaces was overly simplistic, as the hotel had on average 75 percent occupancy; according to the expert, on certain nights, the hotel might have 100 percent occupancy. State v. Bristol Hotel Asset Co., 293 S.W.3d 211, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

2001. In a condemnation proceeding as to hotel property, admission of appellee's expert testimony regarding permanent damages was not an abuse of discretion. According to appellant State, a civil engineer disputed the expert's testimony, testifying that reconfigured driveways were not safety concerns, and, as such, the State argued that there was no support for the expert's conclusion that the property diminished five percent; however, in reviewing the record, the court concluded that the engineer did not dispute the expert's assertion that the new drive would create a safety issue that did not exist before condemnation. State v. Bristol Hotel Asset Co., 293 S.W.3d 211, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

2002. Court did not err in admitting a utility company's expert testimony as to the market value of the condemned property in which he did not factor in the improvements that were over 4000 feet from the power lines in assessing damages because, inter alia, the landowners' own expert relied upon several articles that specifically stated the negative impact of power lines to a property diminished with increased distance and disappeared beyond 500 feet. Utley v. LCRA Transmission Servs. Corp., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9129 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 25 2006).

Real Property Law : Homestead Exemptions

2003. In a dispute involving a homestead exemption, experts were properly allowed to testify about the establishment, assertion, and abandonment of homestead protections in Texas, and there was no misstatements of the law made regarding homesteads. Wilcox v. Marriott, 230 S.W.3d 266, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5440 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

Real Property Law : Inverse Condemnation : Procedure

2004. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in an inverse condemnation proceeding by allowing testimony from a billboard owner's expert regarding the income method of valuation for the billboards at issue because the income method was not an impermissible method of valuation, and the expert's income method was not improperly based on advertising revenue. Because the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the expert's testimony regarding the income method, the State's argument that the evidence was legally insufficient without both the income method and the sales comparison method necessarily failed. State v. Clear Channel Outdoor, 462 S.W.3d 68, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8111, 2012 WL 4465338 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

Real Property Law : Property Valuation

2005. Property owner rule applies to corporate entities owning property, and a representative of the corporate owner who is familiar with the market value of the property in question may testify under this rule as to the market value of the property, without being designated as an expert witness. Therefore, a trial court erred by granting a utility district's motion for no-evidence summary judgment in a condemnation action because an affidavit from a vice president associated with a corporate property owner should have been allowed to show fair market value immediately before and immediately after the condemnation of a waterline easement. Speedy Stop Food Stores v. Reid Rd. Mun. Util., 282 S.W.3d 652, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 669 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

Real Property Law : Zoning & Land Use : Historic Preservation

2006. Structural engineer's report was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702 because it was helpful to a zoning board in ruling on an application to demolish property in a historical area, and it provided substantive and probative evidence to justify the denial of a permit under regulations adopted pursuant to Tex. Loc. Gov't Code Ann. § 211.003(b). Christopher Columbus St. Mkt. Llc v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustments of Galveston, 302 S.W.3d 408, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8763 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 13 2009).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Natural Resources Tax : Imposition of Tax

2007. In a dispute over the valuation of oil and gas interests, testimony from a professional appraiser was not conclusory and insufficient because the appraiser testified without objection to his expertise and qualifications, he testified in great detail how he arrived at the appraisal values for the oil and gas interests, he explained that he valued the property using accepted appraisal methods, he testified at length regarding the methods and techniques he used to appraise the properties, he gave his appraisal values using Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 23.175, and he explained that these values exceeded market value. Moreover, an objector also conducted extensive cross-examination of the appraiser regarding his appraisal techniques. Averitt v. Caudle, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2284, 2009 WL 891034 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 2 2009).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Personal Property Tax : Tangible Property : General Overview

2008. In a valuation dispute relating to the taxation of furniture, fixtures, and equipment under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 1.04(7), even if the testimony of an expert regarding market value was considered, a jury's findings were not supported by the evidence because they were outside of the range given by the experts; therefore, a judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) should have been granted; moreover, a no-evidence issue was preserved for review by the filing of a JNOV request. Harris County Appraisal Dist. v. Sigmor Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2456 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : General Overview

2009. In a challenge to the tax liability of a shopping center, the underlying data used by the taxpayer's appraiser was reliable for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702 because the appraiser found properties in the surrounding area that had the same land use code and low-rent classification, and he restricted those results based on size, location, and age. The nine remaining properties represented a reasonable sample for the purposes of Tex. Tax Code § 42.26. Harris County Appraisal v. Hartman Reit Operating P'ship, L.P., 186 S.W.3d 155, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

2010. In a suit challenging a real estate tax assessment, the trial court properly allowed expert testimony from the taxpayer's appraiser. The testimony was relevant, within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, and 702 because the appraiser found a reasonable number of comparable properties, made appropriate adjustments, and compared the median appraisal value of those properties to the appraisal value applied to the property at issue, as required by Tex. Tax Code § 42.26. Harris County Appraisal v. Hartman Reit Operating P'ship, L.P., 186 S.W.3d 155, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : Assessment & Valuation : General Overview

2011. In a dispute regarding open-space valuation of real property, there was no error in the trial court's decision to qualify the taxpayers' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 702; although the expert did not have training specific to ad valorem taxation, he had substantial experience and expertise in agricultural use of land and prudent land management. Calhoun County Appraisal Review Bd. v. Stofer L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : Assessment & Valuation : Valuation

2012. Appraiser's testimony made clear that he followed a statutorily-approved methodology for estimating an appraised value, Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 42.26(a)(3), where he used the appraisal value of the comparable properties as listed in the tax rolls as his starting point, and when he adjusted the values of the comparable properties, he relied on generally accepted appraisal principles that were commonly used among professionals in his field; the appraiser testified that his methodology had been tested, was generally accepted as valid, and was mandated, to some extent, by statute, and the property owner met its burden to show the reliability of the appraiser's testimony, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting his testimony. Harris County Appraisal Dist. v. Houston 8th Wonder Prop., L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3889, 2012 WL 1757591 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 17 2012).

2013. Finding in favor of the taxpayer in a property tax dispute was inappropriate because the testimony of the taxpayer's appraiser was legally insufficient to support the jury's findings. Although there was some evidence of the apartment complex's market value, the evidence did not conclusively establish the market value under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 23.01(b). Cent. Appraisal Dist. v. Western Ah 406, Ltd., 372 S.W.3d 672, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3299, 2012 WL 1438454 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 26 2012).

Torts : Damages : Compensatory Damages : Medical Expenses

2014. Because appellee's chiropractor was qualified to testify as an expert witness on the reasonableness and necessity of appellee's treatment, and his testimony was reliable, there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's damage award for past medical expenses. Treimee Corp. v. Garcia, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 29 2013).

2015. In a personal injury suit, lay testimony was insufficient to support a finding that the car accident caused the $1.1 million in medical expenses awarded by the jury; the Supreme Court of Texas concluded that expert medical evidence was required to prove causation between the accident and the necessity of particular medical expenses. Guevara v. Ferrer, 247 S.W.3d 662, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 795, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1182 (Tex. 2007).

2016. Where an injured seaman brought suit to recover damages from a maritime company, a life care planner was qualified to testify as an expert witness on actual medical costs; he had thirty years of experience in health care management for people with disabilities and a masters degree in rehabilitation counseling; the expert testified regarding the specific basis and methodology for his opinion. SeaRiver Maritime, Inc. v. Pike, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4905 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 8 2006).

Torts : Damages : Compensatory Damages : Pain & Suffering : General Overview

2017. Damages were properly awarded in a medical malpractice case for a mother's pain and mental anguish because the evidence was legally sufficient to show that she was conscious at the time that she was struggling to breathe, even though the testimony of an expert physician was ambiguous; further, taking agonal breaths indicated that one was suffering pain. The physician's testimony, coupled with the testimony of a nurse expert concerning the demeanor of one experiencing agonal breathing, was legally sufficient to support a jury's award of damages. Las Palmas Med. Ctr. & El Paso Healthcare Sys. v. Rodriguez, 279 S.W.3d 413, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 627 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 30 2009).

Torts : Intentional Torts : Assault & Battery : General Overview

2018. In a suit by a 17-year-old church member, who alleged that other church members assaulted and falsely imprisoned her, the trial court properly admitted expert testimony on post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), even though the record showed that the methods and analyses relied upon in formulating the diagnoses involved some subjective interpretation. The record also showed that those methods and analyses had a rate of error generally accepted in the scientific community as reliable, had been accepted as valid in the scientific community for decades, had been subject to extensive peer review and publication, and had been widely used for nonjudicial purposes. Pleasant Glade Assembly of God v. Schubert, 174 S.W.3d 388, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Torts : Intentional Torts : False Imprisonment : General Overview

2019. In a suit by a 17-year-old church member, who alleged that other church members assaulted and falsely imprisoned her, the trial court properly admitted expert testimony on post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), even though the record showed that the methods and analyses relied upon in formulating the diagnoses involved some subjective interpretation. The record also showed that those methods and analyses had a rate of error generally accepted in the scientific community as reliable, had been accepted as valid in the scientific community for decades, had been subject to extensive peer review and publication, and had been widely used for nonjudicial purposes. Pleasant Glade Assembly of God v. Schubert, 174 S.W.3d 388, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Attorneys

2020. In a legal malpractice case, summary judgment was properly granted to several former attorneys because a former client failed to produce any competent expert testimony on causation relating to either negligence or a violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act; there were complex issues concerning the finality of an underlying bank case, appellate procedure, settlement, the effect of agreements, bankruptcy stays, and other related issues that could not have been determined by lay persons. Twist v. Garcia, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7187 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 30 2007).

2021. In a legal malpractice lawsuit, the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 702 in excluding the testimony of an expert witness as conclusory because of a lack of legal support for the expert's asserted opinion that the order of the questions in the jury charge in the underlying negligence case should have been different. Juarez v. Elizondo, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2133 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 21 2007).

2022. Trial court did not err in granting a no-evidence summary judgment in favor of a law firm in a malpractice action because the client presented no expert evidence to show that any acts or omissions of the law firm fell below the applicable standard of care or caused the client any damages. Jennings v. Zimmerman, Axelrod, Meyer, Stern & Wise, P.C., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6518 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 17 2005).

2023. In a legal malpractice suit, the court of appeals erred in finding that expert testimony was not needed because the connection between the attorneys' negligence and the client's loss in an underlying suit in bankruptcy court was obvious and in reversing the trial court's take-nothing judgment; the jury was asked to decide a complicated and very subjective causation issue: whether, in reasonable probability, a bankruptcy judge would have decided the underlying adversary proceeding differently if the attorney had personally tried the case or if he or his associate had introduced other evidence. Alexander v. Turtur & Assocs., 146 S.W.3d 113, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 734, 47 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 992 (Tex. 2004).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Healthcare Providers

2024. Hand and upper extremity specialist who was board certified in orthopedic surgery was qualified to opine on the hospital's standard of care in an action by a patient whose ulnar nerve was severed during elbow surgery. Columbia North Hills v. Bowen, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1092, 2014 WL 345658 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 30 2014).

2025. In a health care liability case arising from a hysterectomy during which the patient's bowel was pricked, it was proper to find that a board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist was not qualified to opine on the causation issues of whether a hypoxic event occurred and whether such an event caused symptoms more than a year later. Alonzo v. Lampkin, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13932 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 13 2013).

2026. Physician, a pediatric otolaryngologist, was qualified to opine on causation where he had experience treating patients who had had their tracheostomy tubes dislodged and had suffered brain damage caused by lack of oxygen as a result. Rio Grande Reg'l Hosp. v. Ayala, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7175, 2012 WL 3637368 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 24 2012).

2027. In a mother's health care liability lawsuit that alleged that defendants' negligence proximately caused her child's legal blindness, the trial court abused its discretion in overruling defendants' objections to the mother's expert report that was written by a neonatologist because nothing in the report indicated that the neonatologist had knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education in ophthalmology, pediatric ophthalmology, the way in which retinopathy of prematurity presented in newborns, or how that disease was treated in general and in the child's case. Accordingly, the trial court could not have reasonably concluded that the neonatologist had genuine expertise regarding the causal relationship between defendants' alleged breach of the applicable standard of care and the child's injury. Caviglia v. Tate, 363 S.W.3d 298, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2018, 2012 WL 899269 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 14 2012).

2028. In a medical malpractice case, the district court did not err in denying defendant doctor's motion to dismiss because, while the report of plaintiff patient's expert was far from perfect, the trial court did not err in finding it adequate. While the expert was not active in a hospital practice at the time at issue, he nevertheless was actively practicing orthopedic medicine and opined that the injury involved was of the type he treated in his practice; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its decision in finding that the expert was qualified to opine on the standard of care. Further, where the report indicated that the etiology of the patient's brachial plexus injury was most likely attributable to a traction injury resulting from positioning during surgery, the report was sufficient to establish a causal connection. Padilla v. Loweree, 354 S.W.3d 856, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7147 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

2029. In a health care liability claim, under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 74.351 and 74.401(c)(2) and Tex. R. Evid. 702, the expert was not qualified to render a causation opinion as to the health care providers' conduct as the expert's last experience in perinatology was more than 20 years ago, and he last wrote in that area over 25 years ago. Tenet Hosps. Ltd. v. De La Riva, 351 S.W.3d 398, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4944 (Tex. App. El Paso June 29 2011).

2030. In a health care liability action, while appellants claimed that the first physician was not qualified to render a reliable expert opinion under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(5)(C) because he served as a member of the Medical Board in the surgeon's termination request and was thus biased, any bias went to first physician's credibility under Tex. R. Evid. 613(b) and did not disqualify him from rendering an expert opinion. Beaumont Spine

Pain & Sports Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Swan, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 768, 2011 WL 379168 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 3 2011).

2031. Doctor was qualified to opine about causation where: (1) the doctor was licensed to practice medicine in Texas; (2) he was board certified in internal medicine and geriatrics and was actively engaged in the practice of these specialties; (3) he regularly engaged in the diagnosis and treatment of patients with Alzheimer's disease; (4) he had had patients with violent behavior like the facility's resident's behavior and who represented a threat to others as well as themselves; (5) he had knowledge of the admission assessment process and the care needed for these patients; and (6) in his opinion, it was reasonably foreseeable that the facility could not meet the resident's needs and that the resident's behavior would likely result in injury to himself or others. Christian Care Ctrs., Inc. v. Golenko, 328 S.W.3d 637, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8826 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 4 2010).

2032. Patient's expert's report was sufficient to satisfy the elements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 concerning the patient's claim that the orthopedic surgeon failed to timely diagnose and treat her ankle fracture because: (1) the report explained that the standard of care required the surgeon to conduct full range of motion testing regarding the patient's injured leg, including the knee, ankle, and foot; (2) the report was not inadequate or conclusory on the statutory elements of standard of care, breach, and causation merely because it contained some collective statements concerning both the surgeon and another doctor; (3) the report satisfied the causation element as the expert stated that due to the surgeon's failure to correctly diagnose the patient's injury, her fracture went undetected for over seven months, and that as a result the patient was subjected to surgery, a prolonged period of disability, loss of foot movement, and chronic pain; and (4) the expert was qualified to offer his opinions, as his report and curriculum vitae established that he was practicing medicine at the time the patient was treated by the surgeon and when he provided the report, that he possessed knowledge of accepted standards of medical care for the diagnosis, care, or treatment of a person with a leg injury, and he had 18 years of experience. Otero v. Richardson, 326 S.W.3d 363, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8018 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 30 2010).

2033. Patient's expert was qualified under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(5)(C) and Tex. R. Evid. 702 because his report and curriculum vitae reflected that he was a licensed physician in good standing in Pennsylvania and Missouri who had been practicing since 1977, that he was a board certified internist, and that he provided medical evaluation, care, and treatment to acute and chronically ill patients with urinary tract infections and urosepsis, and that he had experience assisting and supervising the transfer of such patients to long-term care facilities and had knowledge of the documentation required for such transfers. Tthr, L.P. v. Guyden, 326 S.W.3d 316, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7348 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2010).

2034. In a health care liability suit alleging misdiagnosis of cancer, the Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 report of an expert who was qualified under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.401 with regard to a pathologist's standard of care and breach could also include a causation opinion under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.403 and Tex. R. Evid. 702 as to unnecessary surgery because it was undisputed that no cancer was present. Somerville v. Lawrence, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6583, 2010 WL 3168405 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 12 2010).

2035. Because the physician's expert report did not set forth his qualifications for giving an expert opinion on causation of the patient's death after being placed on a restraint board, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the health care liability claim filed by the patient mother. The physician's curriculum vitae showed only that he was currently practicing in the field of emergency medicine and that he had held several positions as an emergency medicine physician and a general and trauma surgeon. Salais v. Tex. Dep't of Aging & Disability Servs., 323 S.W.3d 527, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6259 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 4 2010).

2036. Doctor's fourth expert report represented an objective, good faith effort to comply with the definition of an expert report provided in Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(6), because the report affirmatively stated that a uniform standard of care applied to each physician and nurse, identified what the standard of care was, and there was no challenge to the doctor's qualifications as a vascular surgeon, nor was there a challenge that defendant did not know how to care for an individual in the patient's alleged condition. Hayes v. Carroll, 314 S.W.3d 494, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3637 (Tex. App. Austin May 14 2010).

2038. In a patient's medical malpractice action that arose from an L2 inferior to S1 superior decompressive laminectomy performed by appellees, a doctor and a neurosurgery clinic, the trial court abused its discretion by finding the patient's expert witness unqualified to render expert testimony as to the standard of care involved in laminectomies because the expert continued to participate in lumbar laminectomy surgeries, and although he was presently unable to hold the title of "lead" surgeon due to an arm injury, he was nevertheless a surgeon who assisted in laminectomies preoperatively, operatively, and postoperatively. Therefore, at the time of the patient's surgery, the patient's expert was practicing health care in a field of practice that involves the same type of care or treatment as that required of appellees, pursuant to Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.402(b)(1). St. Clair v. Alexander, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7682, 2009 WL 3135812 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2009).

2041. Expert was qualified under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.401 to opine as to the standards of care, their breach by a doctor, and causation, even though the doctor was a family practitioner and the expert was an emergency room physician, as § 74.401 focused on the condition involved, which was appendicitis in a patient's case; the expert was licensed to practice medicine in Texas, had been practicing for 20 years, was practicing medicine when the claim arose, and was qualified to opine on causation under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Granbury Minor Emergency Clinic v. Thiel, 296 S.W.3d 261, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6957 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 27 2009).

2042. Doctor's expert report satisfied the requirements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 as well as the qualifications necessary under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 74.402, 74.403 and Tex. R. Evid. 702 to opine on a patient's claim of negligent emergency room treatment of an ankle fracture and adequately linked his determinations regarding the alleged breach of care to the resulting damages. Stephanie M. Philipp, P.A. v. McCreedy, 298 S.W.3d 682, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5786 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 29 2009).

2043. In an action alleging that negligence caused neurological injuries to an infant during birth, an ob/gyn was qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.403(a) to provide and expert report under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(5)C) as to causation. The doctor was an expert in managing labor and delivery, and that expertise qualified the doctor to opine on the causal relationship between labor and delivery and the complications that could stem from labor and delivery, including a newborn's neurological injuries. Livingston v. Montgomery, 279 S.W.3d 868, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1324 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 27 2009).

2045. Summary judgment was properly granted to health care providers in a medical malpractice case because an expert opinion relating to proximate causation was stricken; the expert offered no support for his opinion that the presence of two separate primary cancers resulted in a prognosis identical to the individual prognosis of the more serious cancer. Flores v. Eakin, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6456 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 22, 2008).

2046. Trial court properly denied a motion for summary judgment filed by an anesthesiologist and registered nurse anesthesiologist because a neurologist was qualified as an expert under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(5)(A), as he had experience and academic work in blood flow to the brain, and the husband alleged that the anesthesiologist did not adequately monitor the patient's breathing after her surgery and the omission resulted in decreased blood flow to her brain and her current condition. Gelman v. Cuellar, 268 S.W.3d 123, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2008).

2048. Expert was qualified to opine on causation and therefore the doctor's motion to dismiss a medical malpractice action was properly denied, because he was a board certified internist, he had been an urgent care provider, he was currently an emergency medicine doctor at a hospital, and he had been the director of emergency medicine. Mosely v. Mundine, 249 S.W.3d 775, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2411 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

2050. In a health care liability action brought by a patient's guardian against a rehabilitation hospital, the purported expert reports filed by the guardian did not constitute a good faith effort to comply with the statutory requirements, and the trial court thus properly dismissed the suit pursuant to Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351, where the first report submitted by the guardian was that of a nurse, who was not qualified to testify as an expert witness on the issue of causation because she was not a physician; the second report submitted by the guardian was that of a doctor licensed to practice medicine in the state of Coahuila, Mexico, but because nothing in the record indicated that the doctor was licensed in Texas or any of the states of the United States, he did not meet the statutory definition of a "physician," and, therefore, was not qualified to testify on the issue of causation, and, accordingly, neither the nurse nor the doctor were qualified as an "expert" capable under the statute of opining on causation. Cuellar v. Warm Springs Rehab. Found., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8974 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 14 2007).

2051. Expert was qualified to provide an opinion on causation in a medical malpractice action, and therefore the physician's motion to dismiss under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 was properly denied, because the report indicated that she was a physician who had knowledge and experience concerning the swallowing mechanism and in evaluating elderly patients. Palafox v. Silvey, 247 S.W.3d 310, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10155 (Tex. App. El Paso 2007).

2052. In a health care liability action brought by a patient's parents against a dentist and his alleged employer, the expert report of the parent's expert represented an objective good faith effort to comply with the statutory requirements of a health care liability expert report where: (1) the expert's report focused on the patient's overdose of sedation medication, her monitoring after the procedure, her untimely discharge, and her resulting cerebral hypoxia; (2) his qualifications supported his expertise in the subjects on which he provided opinions in his report because he had been a board-certified anesthesiologist for over 30 years, currently practiced medicine, and was a tenured professor of anesthesiology with the state university; (3) according to the expert's report and curriculum vitae, he had extensive training and experience with the standards of anesthesia management and recovery from medications used in sedating patients; (4) the expert was one of the researchers in a multi-center study on one of the sedation reversal agents used during the patient's procedure; and (5) the report provided the link between the health care providers' breach (overdose of sedation medication, failure to properly reverse deep sedation, failure to monitor properly, untimely discharge, and the placement of the patient in the vehicle) and the expert's conclusion on causation that, if properly medicated or monitored, the patient would have avoided the obstruction of her airway that resulted in hypoxia and brain injury. Comstock v. Clark, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8447 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2007).

2053. Medical malpractice action was dismissed because an expert report filed by a plastic surgeon was insufficient since he was not able to testify about the standard of care for a pulmonologist in relation to the treatment of a burn patient; the expert report never stated that the area of pulmonology was substantially developed in the field of plastic and reconstructive surgery or that the expert had practical knowledge of what was usually done by a pulmonologist who also treated burn patients. Garcia v. Rodriguez, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7193 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 30 2007).

dismiss. Evans v. Arambula, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 21 2007).

2058. In a medical malpractice suit, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that an expert/doctor had knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education in the Burch bladder suspension procedure that would assist the jury; the record did not support the assertion that the expert did not use the Burch method and was not trained in it. Cairus v. Gomez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10479 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 6 2006).

2060. Expert report submitted by a patient in his medical malpractice action arising out of a surgery that he claimed was performed on the wrong party of his body did not comply with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(a) where the patient had failed to establish that his expert was qualified to testify regarding the standard of care applicable to the condition involved in the underlying claim because: (1) information regarding the expert's peer review committee and director positions did not provide sufficient detail from which it could be determined that his experience on the committee and as a director was relevant to the standard of care applicable to hospital personnel in a surgical setting; (2) the expert's general reference to a three year internship/residency in surgery was not sufficient to establish that he had sufficient training and experience with regard to the procedures hospital personnel were required to follow during a surgical procedure eight years after his internship/residency ended; and (3) the patient had failed to show that the preoperative procedures hospital personnel were required to follow in a surgical setting were substantially developed in the expert's field of emergency room medicine; expert testimony was required because the nature of the patient's medical procedure and whether it resulted in the wrong part of the body being operated on were not within the common knowledge of a layperson, and, even under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the patient was required to establish that the expert was qualified to testify regarding causation. Methodist Health Care Sys. of San Antonio, Ltd. v. Rangel, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10858 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 14 2005).

medical doctor was free to testify concerning causation from a breach of the nursing standard of care. Morrell v. Finke, 184 S.W.3d 257, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

2062. In a medical malpractice case, expert testimony regarding the standard of care under 1995 Tex. Gen. Laws 985 (repealed), (current version at Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.401(c)), was not admitted because the expert in question did not have knowledge, skill, experience, or training in the areas of general or orthopedic surgery. Gomez v. Valley Baptist Med. Ctr., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 26 2005).

2065. Trial court did not err in granting summary judgment to doctors in a medical malpractice suit where the court sustained the objections to the patient's expert's affidavit at the hearing because while the affidavit opined that the radiologist should have retaken x-ray films of the hook wire localization and should have followed up with the other medical care providers on the negative pathology report, the record was devoid of any indication that the expert possessed any expertise or training in the field of radiology that would have qualified her to make those opinions. Shelton v. Sargent, 144 S.W.3d 113, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6116 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

2067. In a medical malpractice case, a court properly found that an expert witness was qualified to testify where she was a board certified pathologist at Baylor University, she was a full professor and held an endowed chair, she had written several articles about gastrointestinal cytology, she was familiar with pathology of the gastrointestinal tract, and she testified that it was within a pathologist's area of expertise to estimate the age of a perforation based on examination of cells taken from a colon. Axelrad v. Jackson, 142 S.W.3d 418, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

have survived if appropriately triaged was conclusory and insufficient and failed to state how the hospital's failure to act was a substantial factor in bringing about the mother's death and without which her death would not have occurred. Costello v. Christus Santa Rosa Health Care Corp., 141 S.W.3d 245, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5500 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

2070. Estate's expert's report did not refer to any knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education regarding the standard of care applicable to urologists, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the expert was not qualified to testify about the doctor's actions; the scheduling order did not designate a later date as a deadline to file expert reports but specified a date on which the estate was required to provide the name of expert witnesses expected to testify at trial, such that the trial court did not act prematurely in dismissing the estate's claims. Olveda v. Sepulveda, 141 S.W.3d 679, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4698 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

2071. Testifying expert cannot establish medical standards of care by testifying as to what he would have done, but a defendant doctor can establish a medical standard by which his own conduct is to be judged. Dziedzic v. Stephanou, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7458 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 7 1999).

Torts : Negligence : General Overview

2072. Trial court's determination regarding whether expert testimony is necessary to establish negligence should be reviewed de novo. FFE Transp. Servs. v. Fulgham, 154 S.W.3d 84, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1422, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 267, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17246 (Tex. 2004).

2073. In a negligence action by a truck driver against a freight company arising from a tractor-trailer accident, expert testimony on the company's standard of care was necessary with regard to inspecting for a rusty bolt because the upper coupler assembly, kingpin, and base rail of a refrigerated trailer were specialized equipment. FFE Transp. Servs. v. Fulgham, 154 S.W.3d 84, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1422, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 267, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17246 (Tex. 2004).

Torts : Negligence : Causation : General Overview

2074. No-evidence summary judgment was appropriate in a negligence case because several injured parties failed to present expert testimony to establish a causal link between the exposure to noxious chemicals after a train collision and their symptoms. Carr v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7794, 2011 WL 4489982 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 29 2011).

2075. In a health care liability claim, under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 74.351 and 74.401(c)(2) and Tex. R. Evid. 702, the expert was not qualified to render a causation opinion as to the health care providers' conduct as the expert's last experience in perinatology was more than 20 years ago, and he last wrote in that area over 25 years ago. Tenet Hosps. Ltd. v. De La Riva, 351 S.W.3d 398, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4944 (Tex. App. El Paso June 29 2011).

2076. In an action alleging that negligence caused neurological injuries to an infant during birth, an ob/gyn was qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.403(a) to provide and expert report under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351(r)(5)C) as to causation. The doctor was an expert in managing labor and delivery, and that expertise qualified the doctor to opine on the causal relationship between labor and delivery and the complications that could stem from labor and delivery, including a newborn's neurological injuries. Livingston v. Montgomery, 279 S.W.3d 868, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1324 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 27 2009).

Torts : Negligence : Causation : Cause in Fact

2078. In a negligence case, expert testimony that a tank would have ruptured even if a relief valve had not been disabled was properly excluded because it was not probative of the cause in fact of the explosion or injuries under the actual circumstances; because there was no legally sufficient evidence of causation, other asserted errors were harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44. Goss v. Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 232 S.W.3d 816, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6621 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

2079. Where a contractor, who was installing a bath tub, sued homeowners for negligence after he was electrocuted by exposed live wires sticking out of a hole in the wall and suffered a heart attack, no-evidence summary judgment was improperly granted to the homeowners because, when the onset of a heart attack occurred immediately after an electrocution, it was not necessary for an expert to testify to a "reasonable medical probability" that the electrocution caused the damages, and there were genuine issues of material fact regarding cause in fact and foreseeability; although the homeowners alleged that a doctor's affidavit was conclusory, and unreliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702, and not based on a reasonable medical probability, a statement that an electrocution probably caused the contractor's heart attack was sufficient expert testimony to raise a fact issue as to cause in fact given that there was a fact issue as to whether the heart attack occurred shortly after the contractor was electrocuted. Choice v. Gibbs, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1063 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 13 2007).

2080. In a personal injury accident, an expert was permitted to testify that he conducted an injury causation analysis based on physics and biomechanics and concluded that forces involved in the accident could not have caused the condition that necessitated plaintiff's surgeries. The testimony was not incompetent under Havner, because the evidence failed to conclusively establish the opposite of the expert's conclusion. Gill v. Slovak, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8876 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 27 2005).

2081. Trial court did not err in granting a no-evidence summary judgment in favor of a law firm in a malpractice action because the client presented no expert evidence to show that any acts or omissions of the law firm fell below the applicable standard of care or caused the client any damages. Jennings v. Zimmerman, Axelrod, Meyer, Stern & Wise, P.C., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6518 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 17 2005).

2083. Trial court properly granted manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' no-evidence summary judgment motion, Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(i), because (1) although the former employees claimed that paints and other coating substances used in the construction of the power plants contained asbestos or silica, which was released into the air when the product was sprayed or when it was sanded or ground off the surface to which it had been applied, there was no expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 705(c) that spraying, sanding, or grinding a liquid paint or coating produced friable asbestos fibers likely to cause asbestosis; and (2) although the type of silica that caused silicosis was crystalline silica, the evidence showed that the products in the employees' case contained amorphous silica and there was no evidence that amorphous silica caused silicosis or that grinding and sanding the paint and coatings released a form of silica that was capable of causing injury; thus, the employees never proved an exposure to a form of asbestos or silica that would cause injury and the employees failed to meet their initial burden of showing that they were exposed to asbestos and/or silica in a form that was capable of causing injury from manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' products. In re ROC Pretrial, 131 S.W.3d 129, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 315 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Torts : Negligence : Causation : Proximate Cause : General Overview

2084. In a personal injury suit stemming from a collision between a motorist and a bicyclist, evidence of the bicyclist's intoxication should have been admitted because the bicyclist's vigilance, judgment, and reactions were at issue; the absence of evidence that causally connected alcohol consumption or intoxication to the cause of that collision did not require the exclusion of expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Ticknor v. Doolan, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6717 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 27 2006).

Torts : Negligence : Proof : Evidence : Expert Testimony

2085. In a health care liability case arising from a hysterectomy during which the patient's bowel was pricked, it was proper to find that a board-certified obstetrician/gynecologist was not qualified to opine on the causation issues of whether a hypoxic event occurred and whether such an event caused symptoms more than a year later. Alonzo v. Lampkin, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13932 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 13 2013).

2086. Results of explosions causing the ground to vibrate are in some ways entirely clear, and the temporal proximity of the events, when combined with the anticipated general knowledge jurors would have of the result of shaking the earth, and the interaction between sand and gravel gave such evidence; in the context of the situation in this case, expert testimony was not necessary, and there was some evidence to connect the actions of the company in its seismic testing and the damage occasioned to the owners' water well. Seitel Data, Ltd. v. Simmons, 362 S.W.3d 783, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 175 Oil & Gas Rep. 775 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 24 2012).

2088. Court recognizes authority holding that a trier of fact may decide proximate cause in medical malpractice cases based upon (1) general experience and common sense, (2) scientific principles provided by expert testimony, or (3) a probable causal relationship as articulated by expert testimony, and as applied in the context of back injuries and causation, courts have reasoned that if multiple causes of the injury are shown, then expert testimony is necessary; these concepts would reasonably apply to this field of scientific endeavor as well. Seitel Data, Ltd. v. Simmons, 362 S.W.3d 783, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 175 Oil & Gas Rep. 775 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 24 2012).

2089. Court is not persuaded that expert testimony about the connection between the blasting and the injury is necessary in every case, and will not state such a bright-line rule, and a claimant is required, however, to show a causal connection between the event and the injury; further, in an appeal where the review is under a "no evidence" standard, the evidence would not need to be great, but only more than a scintilla or a suspicion, and in making such a determination, however, the court still must determine what sort of evidence must have been presented, and what evidence actually was presented. Seitel Data, Ltd. v. Simmons, 362 S.W.3d 783, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 175

Oil & Gas Rep. 775 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 24 2012).

2090. Court believes that a juror, applying commonsense understanding, can tie the relationship of the vibrations of the earth caused by seismic testing with reasonable probability to the concurrent abrupt sanding of a water well; hence, although expert testimony is often helpful to the understanding of the effects of seismic testing and is often advised, when there has been convincing lay witness evidence presented, as in this case, it is not absolutely mandatory. Seitel Data, Ltd. v. Simmons, 362 S.W.3d 783, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 175 Oil & Gas Rep. 775 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 24 2012).

2092. Expert opined on all three required elements: standard of care, breach, and causation and the expert's amended report tied the alleged breach to the alleged injury; the doctor was the patient's treating physician and the report referred to the doctor's conduct, and the expert's amended report adequately described the causation element required under chapter 74, and the expert was qualified to opine on the cause of injuries that allegedly occurred as a result of the doctor's alleged negligence as the expert was an expert in discography. Whisenant v. Arnett, 339 S.W.3d 920, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3386 (Tex. App. Dallas May 5 2011).

2095. In a suit alleging that a dentist's cessation of Plavix and aspirin caused a patient's stroke, a report from an anesthesiologist was sufficient to establish that the anesthesiologist was qualified under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 (r)(5)(D) and Tex. R. Evid. 702 to opine on causation. The report stated that the expert had acquired knowledge about the effects of Plavix and aspirin through practical experience; that the expert attended classes on how anticoagulant therapies were processed and how the body responded when those drugs are discontinued; and that the expert had acquired knowledge, training, and experience about the specific issue through published works, consultations, and teaching medical residents. Leland v. Brandal, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8453, 2009 WL 3645067 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 4 2009).

2096. Cause of death was something that ordinarily required expert testimony; although appellants noted that decedent suffered from various maladies involving blood pressure, heart, and the circulatory system, this evidence failed to establish any causal connection between the event and the decedent's injuries. Herring v. Haydon, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3374, 2009 WL 1361654 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 13 2009).

2097. In a case alleging that pain and swelling in a patient's left vulvar area was negligently diagnosed as cellulitis rather than Methicillin Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA), an expert was qualified under Tex. Civ. Prac. &

Rem. Code Ann. § 74.401 to render liability and causation opinions, despite being an infectious disease specialist rather than a gynecologist. Moheb v. Harvey, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 229, 2008 WL 5501166 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 15 2009).

2099. In a legal malpractice case, summary judgment was properly granted to several former attorneys because a former client failed to produce any competent expert testimony on causation relating to either negligence or a violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act; there were complex issues concerning the finality of an underlying bank case, appellate procedure, settlement, the effect of agreements, bankruptcy stays, and other related issues that could not have been determined by lay persons. Twist v. Garcia, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7187 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 30 2007).

2100. In a personal injury suit, lay testimony was insufficient to support a finding that the car accident caused the $1.1 million in medical expenses awarded by the jury; the Supreme Court of Texas concluded that expert medical evidence was required to prove causation between the accident and the necessity of particular medical expenses. Guevara v. Ferrer, 247 S.W.3d 662, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 795, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1182 (Tex. 2007).

Torts : Negligence : Standards of Care : Reasonable Care : General Overview

2101. Testifying expert cannot establish medical standards of care by testifying as to what he would have done, but a defendant doctor can establish a medical standard by which his own conduct is to be judged. Dziedzic v. Stephanou, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7458 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 7 1999).

Torts : Premises Liability & Property : General Premises Liability : Dangerous Conditions : General Overview

2102. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of the patron's expert, a safety engineer, because the trial court could have reasonably determined that the engineer's opinion would not assist a jury in determining if the condition of the walkway posed an unreasonable risk of harm. From photographs and testimony about prior falls and complaints, a jury would have been able to form its own conclusion about whether the walkway posed an unreasonable risk of harm.

Torts : Products Liability : General Overview

2104. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a truck owner's expert, who was a metallurgical and mechanical engineer, in the owner's action that claimed that a manufacturing defect in his truck caused his collision with two parked cars because the truck manufacturer's attacks on the expert's theory of why the nuts on the truck's u-bolt were not tightened sufficiently did not undermine his observation that the nuts on the u-bolt were insufficiently tightened in a way that allowed the u-bolt to fail. To prove a manufacturing defect, the owner did not need to prove that the manufacturing process was flawed, only that it produced a flawed product. Ford Motor Co. v. Ledesma, 173 S.W.3d 78, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

2105. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a truck owner's expert, who was a metallurgical and mechanical engineer, in the owner's action that claimed that a manufacturing defect in his truck caused his collision with two parked cars because the truck manufacturer had not shown an analytical gap sufficient to make the trial court's admission of the expert's testimony regarding the effect of the off-center flattening of the truck's u-bolt error. Evidence casting doubt on whether the expert's theory was realized in the case might affect the credibility of his opinion, but it did not demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by finding that his theory regarding the effect of an asymmetrically flattened u-bolt was reliable. Ford Motor Co. v. Ledesma, 173 S.W.3d 78, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

2106. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a truck owner's accident reconstruction expert in the owner's action that claimed that a manufacturing defect in his truck caused his collision with two parked cars because the manufacturer's criticisms went to the credibility, not the reliability of the expert's theories, and he was subject to vigorous cross-examination regarding the accuracy of his opinions. Ford Motor Co. v. Ledesma, 173 S.W.3d 78, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

2109. Trial court properly granted manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' no-evidence summary judgment motion, Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(i), because (1) although the former employees claimed that paints and other coating substances used in the construction of the power plants contained asbestos or silica, which was released into the air when the product was sprayed or when it was sanded or ground off the surface to which it had been applied, there was no expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 705(c) that spraying, sanding, or grinding a liquid paint or coating produced friable asbestos fibers likely to cause asbestosis; and (2) although the type of silica that caused silicosis was crystalline silica, the evidence showed that the products in the employees' case contained amorphous silica and there was no evidence that amorphous silica caused silicosis or that grinding and sanding the paint and coatings released a form of silica that was capable of causing injury; thus, the employees never proved an exposure to a form of asbestos or silica that would cause injury and the employees failed to meet their initial burden of showing that they were exposed to asbestos and/or silica in a form that was capable of causing injury from manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' products. In re ROC Pretrial, 131 S.W.3d 129, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 315 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Torts : Products Liability : Design Defects

2111. In a products-liability case arising from injuries sustained by a truck driver in attempting to unload a truck trailer, the trial court properly directed a verdict in favor of the trailer's manufacturer on the driver's design-defect claim where the driver had not produced evidence to show that his proposed alternatively designed trailer with a covered rear gutter would be a safer alternative design under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 82.005(b); no evidence reflected that the use of dock plates, when used as intended and spaced evenly over the gutter, would reduce or eliminate the hazard of pallet-jack wheels "falling" into the gutter, and the record also contained no expert testimony that any of the proposed alternative designs satisfied both requirements of § 82.005(b) as a safer alternative design. Champion v. Great Dane L.P., 286 S.W.3d 533, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3222, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18223 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 7 2009).

2113. In a products liability and negligence lawsuit alleging that defective cellulose insulation caused a house fire, the deposition testimony and affidavit of the homeowners' expert witness were properly excluded because they were contradictory, contained conclusory allegations, and failed to rule out alternative causes of the fire; hence, there was no evidence of causation under either the proximate cause standard of negligence or the producing cause standard of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 82.005(a)(2). Jacob v. Int'l Cellulose Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3314 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 27 2007).

2114. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that experts proffered by plaintiffs to testify about the design of a sport utility vehicle's side impact protection system were qualified to testify on the actual subject on which they offered an opinion where one of the experts, who testified that he had been involved in vehicle design for 57 years, was offered as an expert with knowledge of the consequences to and behavior of vehicles and occupants in crashes, including side impact crashes, and how to design vehicles to minimize the impact to occupants in vehicle crashes, including side impact crashes. GMC v. Burry, 203 S.W.3d 514, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8284 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

2115. In a products liability design defect action against a sport utility vehicle's (SUV) manufacturer in which it was alleged that a passenger's side airbag in the SUV should have deployed in an accident involving the SUV and an eighteen-wheeler, the causation testimony of the passenger's biomechanical engineering expert was reliable based on her qualifications and experience in the study of how human bodies moved and reacted when forces were applied to them; the expert did not fail to account for the passenger's left-side injuries, the inward forces applied to the B-pillar of the SUV, or the driver's unconsciousness at the scene, as the manufacturer contended. GMC v. Burry, 203 S.W.3d 514, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8284 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Torts : Products Liability : Manufacturing Defects

2119. Expert was not qualified to testify on the subject of wax migration and contamination in tires and their effect on tire adhesion, even though he had a degree in chemistry, because chemistry is an exceedingly vast science and tire chemistry and design and the adhesion properties of tire components was a highly specialized field. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co. v. Mendez, 204 S.W.3d 797, 2006 Tex. LEXIS 555, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 751 (Tex. 2006).

Torts : Products Liability : Negligence

2120. In an action arising from a car fire, a verdict against a car manufacturer was reversed because there was no evidence that the fire and death were caused by a defect that allowed gas to siphon from the fuel system. The difficulty was that there were significant conflicts in and between testimony by plaintiff's two experts as to nature of the leak; experts could not be as ambivalent as those two were and establish the privilege of offering opinion testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702. GMC v. Iracheta, 161 S.W.3d 462, 2005 Tex. LEXIS 304, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 529, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17372 (Tex. 2005).

2121. Bare opinion by an expert as to nature of a leak in a fuel system, without a basis, was not competent evidence. GMC v. Iracheta, 161 S.W.3d 462, 2005 Tex. LEXIS 304, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 529, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17372 (Tex. 2005).

2122. Expert's testimony was relevant to the issues to be decided by the jury where he conducted an audit of the manufacturer's design process, determining whether the manufacturer acted as a reasonable manufacturer would have in designing the forklift and taking safety considerations into account; the expert also offered testimony regarding the operator's suggested alternative design, contradicting the testimony of the operator's experts by concluding the inclusion of a door in the forklift's design was not a safer alternative, and this testimony was sufficiently tied to the facts of the case to assist the jury in resolving a factual dispute. Costilla v. Crown Equip. Corp., 148 S.W.3d 736, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10163 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Torts : Products Liability : Strict Liability

2123. Former legal client, who claimed that bad legal advice given to his father had prevented him from pursuing product liability claims against a car manufacturer, could not recover against the law firm that gave the advice because he could not show that he would have recovered in the products liability suit, if he had brought it. The client claimed that the seat belts in his father's car were defective, but he could not prove his product liability claims without expert scientific and/or technical expert testimony, and he had not presented any expert testimony to support his claims. Rangel v. Lapin, 177 S.W.3d 17, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 318 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

2124. In a product liability action against the manufacturer of a rifle barrel that exploded, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that testimony by a metallurgy expert, who also described himself as an "amateur gunsmith," was reliable as to opinions on gun design. Testimony as to defects in the steel was not proper from an engineering expert, but that testimony was cumulative and therefore the error was harmless. Olympic Arms, Inc. v. Green, 176 S.W.3d 567, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11825, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17247, 55 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (CBC) 575 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Torts : Public Entity Liability : Immunity : Qualified Immunity

2125. Family was required to proffer the testimony of an expert witness as to whether a reasonable firefighter could have believed that he was justified in entering the intersection as the fireman did after weighing the risk of an accident against the need to respond to the alarm. Fireman was entitled to official immunity under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 108.002 because the fireman made an adequate showing that he acted in good faith; he activated his emergency lights and siren, slowed down as he approached the intersection, activated his air horn and looked in the direction of approaching traffic, and drove slowly through the intersection. Green v. Alford, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2342 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 27 2007).

Torts : Transportation Torts : General Overview

2126. In a personal injury case arising from a auto-pedestrian accident, testimony and exhibits from the injured girls father relating to whether a truck sideswiped another truck before hitting his daughter were properly excluded because the father was being called as an expert in accident reconstruction but was concededly not qualified as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Muhs v. Whataburger, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9229, 2010 WL 4657955 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2010).

2127. In a wrongful death and survival action stemming from a multi-fatality vehicular accident, an accident reconstruction expert's testimony was reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and therefore legally sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiffs. The expert's observations, measurements, and calculations were tied to the physical evidence, which likewise provided support for his conclusions and theory. TXI Transp. Co. v. Hughes, 306 S.W.3d 230, 2010 Tex. LEXIS 212, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 431 (Tex. 2010).

Torts : Transportation Torts : Motor Vehicles

2128. In a personal injury accident, an expert was permitted to testify that he conducted an injury causation analysis based on physics and biomechanics and concluded that forces involved in the accident could not have caused the condition that necessitated plaintiff's surgeries. The testimony was not incompetent under Havner, because the evidence failed to conclusively establish the opposite of the expert's conclusion. Gill v. Slovak, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8876 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 27 2005).

Torts : Transportation Torts : Motor Vehicles : Personal Vehicles

2129. In a collision case, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 702 in allowing a reconstructionist to opine on who entered the intersection on a red light, even though a 2002 Camaro, not the 1989 Mustang involved in the accident, was used experimentally, because the expert explained why the differences did not matter in calculating the coefficient of friction. Lincoln v. Clark Freight Lines, Inc., 285 S.W.3d 79, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1037 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

Torts : Transportation Torts : Rail Transportation : Federal Employers' Liability Act

2130. In a negligence action under the Federal Employers Liability Act, an ergonomist expert was found to be reliable, as the expert was very knowledgeable of the locomotives and seats a railroad employee encountered because the expert had personally evaluated a large number of a railroad company's locomotives and cab seats over the course of his career. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Phillips, 434 S.W.3d 675, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5533 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 22 2014).

Torts : Wrongful Death & Survival Actions : Causation

2131. In a wrongful death case, expert testimony that a driver was the cause of a fatal collision was properly admitted into evidence as reliable, even though no witnesses were interviewed; no witnesses came forward since the accident occurred in an unpopulated area. Further, the expert did not overlook the driver's contention that a decedent had been the one to cross over a median; rather, the driver's account was inconsistent with and contradicted the physical evidence at the scene of the accident. Thomas v. Uzoka, 290 S.W.3d 437, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4354 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 28 2009).

Trade Secrets Law : Civil Actions : Remedies : Damages : General Overview

2132. Expert's testimony regarding damages in a trade secrets action was properly admitted because it was not illogical for the expert to assign a value to each separate piece of the compilation, and it was not suggested how using the geologist's former partner's name as the hypothetical "willing buyer" changed the expert's calculations in any way. Bishop v. Miller, 412 S.W.3d 758, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11614 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 12 2013).

2133. Expert's testimony regarding damages in a trade secrets action was properly admitted because it was not illogical for the expert to assign a value to each separate piece of the compilation, and it was not suggested how using the geologist's former partner's name as the hypothetical "willing buyer" changed the expert's calculations in any way. Bishop v. Miller, 412 S.W.3d 758, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11614 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 12 2013).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Safety Standards : Seat Belts

2134. In a product liability case, a trial court properly determined that an expert was qualified to give an opinion regarding seatbelts in buses because he was a structural engineer with a bachelor's and master's degree who had performed all of the structural analysis and design on a safety school bus project, including seat supports, which led to the development of a Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard, performed data analysis of bus-seat testing for the United States Department of Transportation, and designed computer modeling programs to simulate the performance of seatbelt and airbag systems. MCI Sales & Serv. v. Hinton, 272 S.W.3d 17, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : General Overview

2135. Widow's expert's testimony presented no evidence as to the husband's cause of death, where in workers' compensation cases, expert medical testimony could enable a plaintiff to go to the jury if the evidence established reasonable probability of a causal connection between employment and the present injury, but if there were other plausible causes of the injury or condition that could be negated, the plaintiff had to offer evidence excluding those causes with reasonable certainty; the widow's expert was unable to prove that it was a reasonable probability that the husband contracted tetanus from the May 13th wound in light of the incubation period and in light of numerous other existing probable causes for the infection. Tex. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lerma, 143 S.W.3d 172, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5235 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : Medical Evidence

2136. Finding in favor of the employee in a workers' compensation action was appropriate because an expert witness was qualified to testify since he was a licensed cardiologist with a Ph.D. in biochemistry and he had also done research in cardiology both on animals and in clinical research. N.H. INS. Co. v. Allison, 414 S.W.3d 266, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9604 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 1 2013).

2137. Employee merely provided his medical records and expected the jury to understand them, and laypersons did not have the knowledge to understand the intricacies involved in diagnosing a back injury without some guidance from a medical expert; accordingly, the employee failed to provide more than a scintilla of evidence to support his claim of a compensable injury. State Office of Risk Mgmt. v. Adkins, 347 S.W.3d 394, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6187 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 9 2011).

2138. Designated doctor's report stating the date of the worker's maximum medical improvement (June 27, 2000) and his impairment rating (22 percent) was not reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and violated 28 Tex. Admin. Code § 130.1(c)(3) because the designated doctor's clarification letter admitted that he could not determine whether the second back surgery in December 2005 contributed to the worker's loss of motion. Because the designated doctor's opinion was unreliable it should not have been considered, and therefore the jury would have had no choice but to adopt the treating physician's clinical maximum medical improvement date (April 9, 1999) and impairment rating (eight percent). State Office of Risk Mgmt. v. Ramirez, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4956 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2010).

2140. In a hospital's action against an employee that sought to reverse a determination by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission, which had found that the employee sustained a compensable injury in the course and scope of her employment with the hospital, even assuming that the trial court's exclusion of the medical records of a doctor obtained by a deposition on written questions was error, the hospital failed to show that it was harmful because the excluded evidence was cumulative and did not affect the ability of the experts to explain their medical opinions; although the doctor's test results were excluded, substantially the same evidence was introduced through one of the hospital's experts. Christus Health/St. Joseph Hosp. v. Price, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 754 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 1 2007).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : Witnesses

2141. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a workers' compensation claimant's expert where the diagnoses and opinions expressed by the expert had a sufficient foundation to be admitted into evidence because: (1) the expert was qualified to give his expert opinion; (2) his testimony was not irrelevant, conclusory, or speculative; (3) his testimony was not based on an unreliable foundation; and (4) any analytical gap between the data and the opinion was not so great that it rendered the opinion inadmissible as evidence. Meadwestvaco Corp. v. Booker, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10333, 2010 WL 5550665 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 30 2010).

2142. Designated doctor's report stating the date of the worker's maximum medical improvement (June 27, 2000) and his impairment rating (22 percent) was not reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and violated 28 Tex. Admin. Code § 130.1(c)(3) because the designated doctor's clarification letter admitted that he could not determine whether the second back surgery in December 2005 contributed to the worker's loss of motion. Because the designated doctor's opinion was unreliable it should not have been considered, and therefore the jury would have had no choice but to adopt the treating physician's clinical maximum medical improvement date (April 9, 1999) and impairment rating (eight percent). State Office of Risk Mgmt. v. Ramirez, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4956 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2010).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Judicial Review : Standards of Review

2143. In a hospital's action against an employee that sought to reverse a determination by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission, which had found that the employee sustained a compensable injury in the course and scope of her employment with the hospital, even assuming that the trial court's exclusion of the medical records of a doctor obtained by a deposition on written questions was error, the hospital failed to show that it was harmful because the excluded evidence was cumulative and did not affect the ability of the experts to explain their medical opinions; although the doctor's test results were excluded, substantially the same evidence was introduced through one of the hospital's experts. Christus Health/St. Joseph Hosp. v. Price, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 754 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 1 2007).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Benefit Determinations : Death Benefits

2144. In a workers' compensation case, expert medical causation testimony from the deceased worker's treating physician, who relied on a differential diagnosis, was legally sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding that a workplace injury was the producing cause of death, even though the worker was on a lifelong regimen of immunosuppressant drug therapy related to a kidney transplant. Transcon. Ins. Co. v. Crump, 330 S.W.3d 211, 2010 Tex. LEXIS 616, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1124 (Tex. 2010).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Benefit Determinations : Permanent Partial Disabilities

2145. In a workers' compensation action regarding an employee's impairment rating, the trial court properly admitted testimony from the physician appointed to evaluate the employee on behalf of the employer under Tex. R. Evid. 702; athough the doctor's orthopedic training was in Canada, the doctor was licensed and practiced in Texas, and had been approved as a designated doctor by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission. Barrigan v. MHMR Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 43 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 4 2007).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Compensability : Injuries : General Overview

2146. Expert medical testimony is required in a worker's compensation case to establish the nature of an injury, whether it is temporary or permanent, and the extent of disability or incapacity resulting from the injury. Region Xix Serv. Ctr. v. Banda, 343 S.W.3d 480, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 905 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 9 2011).

2147. Given the substantial medical testimony presented under Tex. R. Evid. 702 regarding an employee's injuries, condition, and physical limitations, the ultimate issue--whether the employee's hands and foot possessed any substantial utility as members of the body--was not beyond the knowledge and experience of the jurors; similarly, the jurors did not require specialized training to determine whether the employee's condition was such that she could not get or keep employment requiring the use of her hands, or one hand and one foot. The employee therefore was not required to present expert testimony to establish total loss of use under Tex. Labor Code Ann. § 408.161. Region Xix Serv. Ctr. v. Banda, 343 S.W.3d 480, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 905 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 9 2011).

Rule 703 Bases of an Expert's Opinion Testimony

An expert may base an opinion on facts or data in the case that the expert has been made aware of, reviewed, or personally observed. If experts in the particular field would reasonably rely on those kinds of facts or data in forming an opinion on the subject, they need not be admissible for the opinion to be admitted.

Comment to 1998 change The former Civil Rule referred to facts or data "perceived by or reviewed by" the expert. The former Criminal Rule referred to facts or data "perceived by or made known to" the expert. The terminology is now conformed, but no change in meaning is intended.

Comment to 1990 change This amendment conforms this rule of evidence to the rules of discovery in utilizing the term "reviewed by the expert." See also Comment to T.R.C.P. Rule 166b.

Comment to 2015 Restyling: All references to an "inference" have been deleted because this makes the Rule flow better and easier to read, and because any "inference" is covered by the broader term "opinion." Courts have not made substantive decisions on the basis of any distinction between an opinion and an inference. No change in current practice is intended.

1. Tex. R. Civ. P. 192 prevails over Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.3(d)'s snap-back provision so long as the expert intends to testify at trial despite the inadvertent document production; that is, once privileged documents are disclosed to a testifying expert, and the party who designated the expert continues to rely upon that designation for trial, the documents may not be retrieved even if they were inadvertently produced. In re Christus Spohn Hosp. Kleberg, 222 S.W.3d 434, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 362, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 682 (Tex. 2007).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

3. In a products liability case, because an affidavit from a neighbor that a lamp was still on prior to a fire was not sworn under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 312.011(1), it could not have been used for summary judgment evidence; however, it was admissible for the limited purpose of information reasonably relied upon by an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 703. The neighbor was not an unknown bystander, nor did the statement repeat a rumor; moreover, the veracity of the statement could have been verified, and a retailer could have presented contrary evidence if the statement was incorrect. Merrell v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 276 S.W.3d 117, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2009).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

4. In a pipeline company's action for negligent damage to a gasoline pipeline, causation was not shown as to claims against developers regarding the platting of the lot because there was no evidence of where digging would have occurred if the lot had been configured differently. An expert witness' assumption that digging would have occurred in a different place was not a reasonable inference from the evidence and did not constitute competent summary judgment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(c). Seaway Prods. Pipeline Co. v. Hanley, 153 S.W.3d 643, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

5. Affidavits of expert witnesses offered in support of homeowners' motion against summary judgment in an action seeking losses for a house fire failed to meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 702, and 703, as the testimony was a pyramid of inferences lacking probative force because it was based on assumed facts that varied from the actual undisputed facts. Rayon v. Energy Specialties, Inc., 121 S.W.3d 7, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9160 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

Civil Procedure : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Experts

6. Trial court did not err in a condemnation case in which the jury found the fair value of the property owner's land to be $250,000 in admitting the testimony of the State's expert appraiser where there were no gaps in the testimony of the appraiser or misapplication of legal rules such that her testimony could have been found to have been unreliable because the appraiser had formed her opinion by comparing the difference between the results of two methods of valuing the property: the cost approach, giving a value of $217,000, and the improved sales comparison approach that gave a value of $205,000. The property owner had not shown that the appraiser could not make valid comparisons for size, and the evidence permitted the conclusion that the owner's entire property was devoted to single-family use and that the applicable zoning ordinance would have allowed the existing use to continue. Williams v. State, 406 S.W.3d 273, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7405 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 19 2013).

Civil Rights Law : Protection of Disabled Persons : General Overview

7. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

Commercial Law (UCC) : Sales (Article 2) : Form, Formation & Readjustment : General Overview

8. In a breach of contract action arising from the sale of large machine tools, an expert witness on damages was properly allowed to testify that he personally contacted customers to ascertain why certain sales were lost or certain orders cancelled; under Tex. R. Evid. 703, he could rely on inadmissible evidence that was the type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field. Toshiba Mach. Co. v. SPM Flow Control, Inc., 180 S.W.3d 761, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9478 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

9. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a buyer's vice president of finance about lost sales. Although the witness testified that he personally contacted the buyer's customers to ascertain why certain sales were lost or certain orders cancelled, an expert could rely on inadmissible facts or data to form an opinion or inference if the facts or data were of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field. Toshiba Mach. Co., Am. v. SPM Flow Control, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4218 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 2 2005), superseded by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9478 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 10, 2005).

Commercial Law (UCC) : Sales (Article 2) : Remedies : General Overview

10. In a breach of contract action arising from the sale of large machine tools, an expert witness on damages was properly allowed to testify that he personally contacted customers to ascertain why certain sales were lost or certain orders cancelled; under Tex. R. Evid. 703, he could rely on inadmissible evidence that was the type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field. Toshiba Mach. Co. v. SPM Flow Control, Inc., 180 S.W.3d 761, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9478 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

11. Confrontation Clause was violated when a testifying medical examiner disclosed out-of-court testimonial statements in an autopsy report that was prepared by a nontestifying medical examiner. Under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(d), the value of that information was outweighed by the danger that the inadmissible statements would be used to prove the truth of the matters stated. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

12. In defendant's drug case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify that the substance deliverd by defendant was cocaine because the case did not involve one expert merely reading to the jury a report conducted by another; the testimony of the expert witness concerning the chemical analysis of the substance, determined by applying his expertise to reliable scientific test data, was admissible as he was subject to cross-examination. Blaylock v. State, 259 S.W.3d 202, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3449 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

13. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, any error arising from the admission of an investigator's opinion on guilt was harmless. Although defendant objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 703 during the prosecution's re-direct, the same question and answer had come in without objection during the defense's prior cross-examination. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

14. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Riot, Rout & Unlawful Assembly

15. In an aggravated assault case, expert testimony regarding defendant's gang affiliation was proper because the expert testified that his group identified defendant as a gang member based on his name being on a list of gang members kept by another gang member, his correspondence with gang members about the internal activities of the Mexican Mafia, distinctive gang tattoos, and a letter stating that defendant had been cleared as a member; therefore, there was a substantial basis for the expert witness's conclusion that defendant was a gang member. Loredo v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6703 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

16. In a sexual assault case, a court erred by failing to allow defendant's expert to testify where the subject of the expert's opinion was relevant, just as the State's expert was permitted to testify that the lack of genital injuries did not indicate that the complainant had not been sexually assaulted, defendant's expert should have been permitted to testify that no sexual assault occurred. One party could not proffer expert testimony and subsequently argue successfully that the testimony was not relevant when the opposing party sought to offer expert testimony on the same subject which reached a different conclusion; in addition, the error was not harmless. Vela v. State, 159 S.W.3d 172, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7257 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

17. In a case involving child indecency, a trial court did not err by allowing an expert to testify regarding defendant's future dangerousness, despite the fact that the expert never met defendant because such contact was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 703; moreover, the expert was qualified to give an opinion based on the expert's training, education, and vast experience with sexual offenders. Rodriguez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3457 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

18. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of fourteen in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the rebuttal testimony of the State's expert who testified that the complainant's "normal" behavior would not necessarily negate sexual abuse; the expert was qualified to provide testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 703 based on his educational and professional background and experience, and the expert's academic and professional background focusing on the treatment and observation of child victims of sexual abuse appropriately matched the subject matter of his testimony focusing on the behavioral patterns of child victims of sexual abuse. Briones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2009 WL 2356626 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 30 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

19. In a driving while intoxicated case, the court did not err by allowing the officer to testify that defendant failed the field sobriety tests because the officer's use of the word "failed" did not give his testimony an "aura of scientific reliability" or cloak it with unearned credibility; the majority of the officer's testimony consisted of a straightforward narrative of each field sobriety test, followed by a particular description of how defendant performed each test. The officer's observations were based on common knowledge and observations and did not, under the circumstances convert his lay witness testimony into expert testimony. Meier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2051, 2009 WL 765490 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 25 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

20. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

21. Because the medical examiner's colleague testified to his independent conclusion concerning the victim's cause of death and did not testify to any of the statements contained in the medical examiner's autopsy report, the colleague's testimony did not violate defendant's right of confrontation. Gilstrap v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 181, 2011 WL 192688 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 12 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Cross-Examination

22. Even if the trial court erred by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the sexual assault nurse examiner, the error was harmless because the same or similar testimony was admitted without objection at another point in the trial; before the State's objection, the nurse testified that she accepted the victims' oral history as true, that the notches in one victim's hymen could be consistent with consensual sexual activity, and that there was no way of knowing when the notches happened. Young v. State, 382 S.W.3d 414, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8627, 2012 WL 4874628 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

23. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

24. Following the entry of defendant's nolo contendere plea to aggravated robbery, the trial court properly considered under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 § 3(a)(1) evidence regarding the murder of defendant's wife at the punishment hearing because the evidence was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant murdered his wife five days before he committed the aggravated robbery offense; further, the medical examiner's hearsay statement that defendant admitted strangling his wife was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 703, and defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Garza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5026, 2009 WL 1424610 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

25. In a civil commitment proceeding alleging that defendant was a sexually violent predator, defendant did not object, and therefore failed to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705, regarding an expert's testimony about an unauthenticated letter that the Special Prosecution Unit asserted defendant wrote. In re Ortiz, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5731, 2010 WL 2854249 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 22 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

26. Defendant waived appellate review regarding an officer's testimony on the psychological and physiological effects of ecstasy, cocaine, and marijuana because at trial he objected on confrontation grounds, not on the basis put forward on appeal, that the State failed to establish the admissibility of the complained-of testimony pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 701, 702, or 703. Nelson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6710 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Discovery

27. Even if Tex. R. Evid. 705 authorized the trial court to order the State to disclose the underlying facts and data relied upon by its experts, the order entered in this case went far beyond requiring disclosure of the facts and data as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 703. Therefore, the trial court abused its discretion by entering the discovery order in this case. In re State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5323, 2013 WL 1846680 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

28. Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by permitting the State's expert to testify because defendant stipulated that he was a qualified expert witness, and the questions asked of the expert were proper because they asked him to opine on whether the facts and circumstances revealed by his investigation measured up to a standard of legal culpability. Even if the trial court erred by admitting the evidence, the error would have been harmless given the other evidence against defendant, including evidence that in the hours before the fatal accident, defendant had been drinking beer and whiskey and smoking marijuana. Blanchard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5140 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

29. Even if the trial court erred by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the sexual assault nurse examiner, the error was harmless because the same or similar testimony was admitted without objection at another point in the trial; before the State's objection, the nurse testified that she accepted the victims' oral history as true, that the notches in one victim's hymen could be consistent with consensual sexual activity, and that there was no way of knowing when the notches happened. Young v. State, 382 S.W.3d 414, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8627, 2012 WL 4874628 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Review : Specific Claims : Evidentiary Errors

30. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. The requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 703 were met because the lab supervisor testified that she had personally overseen a lab technician's work in performing DNA tests and reviewed the results. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

Evidence : Competency : Affirmations & Oaths

31. In a products liability case, because an affidavit from a neighbor that a lamp was still on prior to a fire was not sworn under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 312.011(1), it could not have been used for summary judgment evidence; however, it was admissible for the limited purpose of information reasonably relied upon by an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 703. The neighbor was not an unknown bystander, nor did the statement repeat a rumor; moreover, the veracity of the statement could have been verified, and a retailer could have presented contrary evidence if the statement was incorrect. Merrell v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 276 S.W.3d 117, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

32. In a murder trial where defendant claimed he acted in self-defense, the trial court did not err by excluding testimony from a psychologist regarding the victim's acts of violence because the psychologist's knowledge of any acts committed by the victim came entirely from his review of the medical records which were not admitted into evidence. While the psychologist could rely on the victim's records as a basis for his expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, his proffered testimony was hearsay for which no exception was offered. Mason v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314, 2012 WL 1058792 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 22 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

33. Trial court did not err in admitting the transcription of the doctor's testimony into evidence as an expert witness may rely on records and information prepared by others in reaching his conclusions, Tex. R. Evid. 703, and medical and autopsy reports fell into an exception to the hearsay rule and were allowed into evidence without the preparing doctor appearing in court to explain them, Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (8). Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2011 WL 3435736 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2011).

34. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

35. In a wrongful death case, a court properly excluded expert deposition testimony on hearsay grounds where the expert was not an employee of defendant pharmacy, and there was no evidence that an agency relationship existed. When the family non-suited their claims against the doctor, the subject matter over which the expert was asked to give his opinion became moot; subsequently, he was not called at trial, and, therefore, the trial court excluded his testimony on hearsay grounds. McCluskey v. Randall's Food Mkts., Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 19 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

36. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

38. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the hearsay underlying the opinion of defendant's expert witness during the sentencing phase because although the witness could state that he had reviewed the jail classification as a basis for his expert testimony, the classification itself remained inadmissible and could not be used as a basis for determining defendant's dangerousness in the future. Prystash v. State, 3 S.W.3d 522, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Inferences

39. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

40. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

41. Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

42. In a sexual assault case, the jury was to determine whether defendant penetrated the child's sexual organ and an expert properly relied on a case study to support his opinion that penetration of the child's sexual organ could have occurred even in the absence of physical evidence of penetration; therefore, the discussion of the study served to make the fact of penetration more probable in light of the expert's medical examination findings. Allen v. State, 436 S.W.3d 815, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6465, 2014 WL 2619438 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 13 2014).

43. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : General Overview

44. Tex. R. Evid. 703 does not allow an expert to present opinion testimony based on scientifically unreliable facts or data. Leonard v. State, 385 S.W.3d 570, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1598 (Tex. Crim. App. Nov. 21 2012).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Daubert Standard

45. State had sufficiently demonstrated the reliability of a psychotherapist's expert testimony during defendant's trial for sexually assaulting a minor, his teenage daughter, because the psychotherapist's opinions regarding the characteristics and dynamics of sexually abused children were based on her extensive experience working with, and learning about, abused children. Furthermore, the psychotherapist's opinions did not lack a sufficient basis because she personally met with the victim on several occasions, both before and after the sexual abuse, and an expert could base her opinions on facts made known to her as well as facts personally observed. Dennis v. State, 178 S.W.3d 172, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5295 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Polygraphs

46. Because polygraphs are untrustworthy, an expert cannot reasonably rely upon them as the exclusive basis for the expert's opinion. Mitchell v. State, 420 S.W.3d 448, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 346, 2014 WL 117148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 14 2014).

47. Revocation of defendant's deferred-adjudication community supervision based on the results of polygraph examinations was inappropriate because, while the psychotherapist did make the conclusory statement that those in his field reasonably relied on polygraph results, the sole basis of his opinion was the results of a test that had been held inadmissible because it was not reliable. Total reliance on inadmissible and untrustworthy facts could not be reasonable, nor would such an opinion achieve the minimum level of reliability necessary for admission under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Leonard v. State, 385 S.W.3d 570, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1598 (Tex. Crim. App. Nov. 21 2012).

48. Testimony of defendant's therapist, a licensed sex-offender treatment provider, that the polygraph results were one of the factors taken into consideration in his decision to discharge defendant from the treatment program was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705 Cruz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3780, 2012 WL 1660611 (Tex. App. Austin May 10 2012).

49. Because adjudication hearings are administrative proceedings, in which there is no jury and the judge is not determining guilt of the original offense, the results of polygraph exams are admissible in revocation hearings if such evidence qualifies as the basis for an expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(a). Leonard v. State, 2012

Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

50. When defendant pleaded guilty to injury to a child and received five years' deferred adjudication, the conditions of his community supervision under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a) required that he submit to polygraph exams; defendant's polygraph results were admissible in his community supervision revocation hearing. Tex. R. Evid. 703 allowed the sex offender therapist who had been treating defendant to say, "I discharged the defendant because I felt that he was being dishonest." Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

51. In a sexual assault case, the jury was to determine whether defendant penetrated the child's sexual organ and an expert properly relied on a case study to support his opinion that penetration of the child's sexual organ could have occurred even in the absence of physical evidence of penetration; therefore, the discussion of the study served to make the fact of penetration more probable in light of the expert's medical examination findings. Allen v. State, 436 S.W.3d 815, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6465, 2014 WL 2619438 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 13 2014).

52. Expert's affidavit did not raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to defeat summary judgment because the expert did not evaluate what the client's case would have yielded by way of a judgment if the case had gone to trial. On the contrary, he based his opinion on what the attorneys should have obtained in settlement. Elizondo v. Krist, 415 S.W.3d 259, 2013 Tex. LEXIS 677, 56 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1074 (Tex. 2013).

53. Because adjudication hearings are administrative proceedings, in which there is no jury and the judge is not determining guilt of the original offense, the results of polygraph exams are admissible in revocation hearings if such evidence qualifies as the basis for an expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(a). Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

54. Doctor testified that it was customary in her profession to rely on hospital records, including test results, to form a diagnosis, and this was not challenged, such that the doctor was entitled under Tex. R. Evid. 703 to rely on the results of laboratory testing for genital herpes in diagnosing the victim's condition; furthermore, the doctor also relied on her own experience, education, and training in reaching this diagnosis, which rendered her opinion reliable, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the doctor to testify that the victim suffered from herpes and to testify regarding the basis of the diagnosis, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(a). Cozzens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9336, 2010 WL 4813686 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 24 2010).

55. In parents' medical malpractice action, a physician's expert report was not inadequate because the physician relied on the unsworn statement of the mother in formulating opinions; because the records were silent, the physician used the mother's statement regarding progression of the daughter's symptoms to fill in the gaps. Gannon v. Wyche, 321 S.W.3d 881, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7102 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 31 2010).

56. Because polygraph test results were inadmissible, the trial court did not have the discretion to consider the test results under Tex. R. Evid. 703 in considering whether to revoke defendant's community supervision. Leonard v. State, 315 S.W.3d 578, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2642 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2010).

57. Because in certain instances a medical examiner did not disclose the testimonial hearsay upon which his expert opinion was based, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 703, the jury only heard the direct, in-court testimony of the examiner and defendant's confrontation rights were not violated. Martinez v. State, 311 S.W.3d 104, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2124 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 24 2010), pet. ref'd.

58. In a city resident's action against a mayor challenging a special election, expert testimony offered by the resident was not conclusory because the expert testified regarding the facts supporting the expert's opinion and explained how the expert reached that opinion; the expert stated that through discussions and correspondence with the resident and counsel, the expert had become familiar with the issues in the lawsuit, the three propositions involved, and the violations alleged. Duncan-hubert v. Mitchell, 310 S.W.3d 92, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1889 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 18 2010).

59. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

60. In a patient's action that raised health care liability claims against a doctor based on the patient's allegation that her left eye was permanently impaired as a result of a surgery performed by the doctor, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the report prepared by the patient's expert, a board certified ophthalmologist, complied with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 where the expert's report informed the doctor of the specific conduct that the patient had called into question and provided a basis for the trial court to conclude the claims were meritorious. Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705 allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, which was what the expert had done, and, moreover, the expert's report did not merely state his opinions and inferences because he explained the basis for his conclusions and linked them to the facts. Diaz-Rohena v. Melton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

61. In a health care liability case, the nurses' reports, standing alone, could not meet the statutory report requirement on medical causation under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351; however, qualified physicians were permitted to rely on the nurses' reports in the formation of their expert opinions under Tex. R. Evid. 703. Kelly v. Rendon, 255 S.W.3d 665, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2865 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

62. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 602, regarding evidence of estimates of future medical care, a doctor based an opinion on information supplied by a person in the office, and this statement addressed the reasonable reliance requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 703 for the doctor's expert opinion on the cost of services for future surgeries; to the extent the admission of the evidence might have been error, because it was cumulative, it was harmless, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Nat'l Freight, Inc. v. Snyder, 191 S.W.3d 416, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2833 (Tex. App. Eastland 2006).

63. The State properly cross-examined the sexually violent predator's expert witness regarding prior statements made by one of the individual's victims because, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705(a), the State was entitled to cross-examine the doctor concerning records that he cited as the basis of his opinion and to attempt to use the records to discredit his testimony. In re Polk, 187 S.W.3d 550, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2044 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

64. In a driver's product liability and negligence action against a trailer owner, the trial court properly excluded part of the testimony of the driver's expert witness because his testimony established that he was not qualified to testify regarding the industry standard of care for the inspection of fasteners in tractor-trailer rigs. The expert indicated that he did not know what the standard of care was, and his opinion based on his experience as an accident reconstructionist was not enough to establish the industry standard of care. Fulgham v. FFE Transp. Servs., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5377 (Tex. App. Dallas July 12 2005).

65. Because an expert's testimony was based on sources reasonably relied upon by experts in the field, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the expert's testimony fell within Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703. In re M.G., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3253 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 28 2005).

66. Trial court erred in denying a builder's motion to exclude the testimony of the homeowners' expert witness under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 703. Although the expert had sufficient experience in repairing and remodeling homes to give an expert opinion on reasonable and necessary repair costs, that experience alone was not enough to provide a substantial basis of reliability for his opinion where he relied upon visual inspection and significant experience to justify his conclusions. Royce Homes, L.P. v. Neel, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1514 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 23 2005).

67. Because the one-leg-stand and walk-and-turn field sobriety tests (FSTs) are grounded in the common knowledge that excessive alcohol consumption can cause problems with coordination, balance, and mental agility, a law enforcement officer's testimony about a defendant's coordination, balance, and mental agility problems during these FSTs is considered lay witness opinion testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 701. McClain v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 760 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 1 2005).

68. In a pipeline company's action for negligent damage to a gasoline pipeline, causation was not shown as to claims against developers regarding the platting of the lot because there was no evidence of where digging would have occurred if the lot had been configured differently. An expert witness' assumption that digging would have occurred in a different place was not a reasonable inference from the evidence and did not constitute competent summary judgment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(c). Seaway Prods. Pipeline Co. v. Hanley, 153 S.W.3d 643, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

69. In a wrongful death case, a court properly excluded expert deposition testimony on hearsay grounds where the expert was not an employee of defendant pharmacy, and there was no evidence that an agency relationship existed. When the family non-suited their claims against the doctor, the subject matter over which the expert was asked to give his opinion became moot; subsequently, he was not called at trial, and, therefore, the trial court excluded his testimony on hearsay grounds. McCluskey v. Randall's Food Mkts., Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 19 2004).

70. In a manufacturing defect case brought against a tire company, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony from plaintiffs' experts; the opinions of one expert, a tire failure analyst, were reliable pursuant to Cal. R. Evid. 702 because the expert provided thorough information concerning his methodology and it was clear that his expertise rested on his many years of experience in tire examination. Additionally, the court rejected the tire company's assertion that a report relied on by the expert was inadmissible hearsay; the expert testified that the company that issued the report was a firm of rubber specialists and chemists who used sophisticated techniques, were highly competent, and widely used by experts. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co. v. Mendez, 155 S.W.3d 382, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9112 (Tex. App. El Paso 2004), rev'd on other grounds, 204 S.W.3d 797, 2006 Tex. LEXIS 555 (Tex. 2006).

71. When an expert testifies about the facts or data relied upon to formulate the opinion or inference, and that information is inadmissible, the opponent should request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Depena v. State, 148 S.W.3d 461, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7455 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

72. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a workplace safety expert did not have a reasonable basis for any of his opinions with respect to the legal duties owed by the hospital and how those duties were breached. Moore v. Mem'l Hermann Hosp. Sys., 140 S.W.3d 870, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6067 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

73. Admission of expert testimony by a play therapist was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 703, as the trial court held a Daubert hearing and pursuant to the assessment of factors to assess reliability under Nenno, it was found that such was a legitimate field of expertise and the testimony itself was sufficiently reliable; the expert's testimony was based on her therapy and counseling sessions with a child, wherein he had indicated that his mother was abusive to him and his sister, and was admissible in the mother's parental rights termination proceeding. In re A.J.L., 136 S.W.3d 293, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3825 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

74. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

75. Affidavits of expert witnesses offered in support of homeowners' motion against summary judgment in an action seeking losses for a house fire failed to meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 702, and 703, as the testimony was a pyramid of inferences lacking probative force because it was based on assumed facts that varied from the actual undisputed facts. Rayon v. Energy Specialties, Inc., 121 S.W.3d 7, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9160 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

76. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

77. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

78. Because polygraphs are untrustworthy, an expert cannot reasonably rely upon them as the exclusive basis for the expert's opinion. Mitchell v. State, 420 S.W.3d 448, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 346, 2014 WL 117148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 14 2014).

79. Trial court properly admitted the forensic examiner's testimony because the facts of the hypothetical questions matched the facts of the case, and the relevancy requirement had been met. Eldred v. State, 431 S.W.3d 177, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2460, 2014 WL 856636 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 5 2014).

80. Where defendant was convicted of possession of one to four grams of a controlled substance based on methamphetamine found in the car during a traffic stop, an expert's opinion that the sergeant's failure to follow police procedure suggested that the drugs were planted in the car was inadmissible. Because the expert did not explain why the sergeant's acts were suspicious or why they led to the conclusion that the drugs were planted, there was not a sufficient basis for an expert opinion. Nickols v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11241 (Tex. App.

Eastland Aug. 30 2013).

81. At defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a licensed professional counselor who treated sex offenders; the expert's testimony about grooming for a sexual offense was relevant to assist the jury in understanding defendant's behavior. The expert was permitted to tie the facts of the case to the principles of grooming through hypothetical questions. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

82. Expert testified about testing based on his review of a videotape of the testing, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the expert's testimony given that (1) one witness's testimony provided a basis in fact to support appellee's theory of the accident, and (2) the expert could rely on another's testing in presenting the theory to the jury. Estate of Muniz v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7158 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 12 2013).

83. Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by permitting the State's expert to testify because defendant stipulated that he was a qualified expert witness, and the questions asked of the expert were proper because they asked him to opine on whether the facts and circumstances revealed by his investigation measured up to a standard of legal culpability. Even if the trial court erred by admitting the evidence, the error would have been harmless given the other evidence against defendant, including evidence that in the hours before the fatal accident, defendant had been drinking beer and whiskey and smoking marijuana. Blanchard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5140 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

84. Defendant's commitment as a sexually violent predator was appropriate because the jury could have reasonably found beyond a reasonable doubt that he had a behavioral abnormality that made him likely to engage in a predatory act of sexual violence. Further, each expert explained the facts considered and how those facts affected that expert's evaluation; the evidence assisted the jury in weighing the testimony and the opinion each expert offered and the trial judge could have reasonably concluded that the experts' testimony was not unfairly prejudicial. In re Anderson, 392 S.W.3d 878, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

85. Revocation of defendant's deferred-adjudication community supervision based on the results of polygraph examinations was inappropriate because, while the psychotherapist did make the conclusory statement that those in his field reasonably relied on polygraph results, the sole basis of his opinion was the results of a test that had been held inadmissible because it was not reliable. Total reliance on inadmissible and untrustworthy facts could not be reasonable, nor would such an opinion achieve the minimum level of reliability necessary for admission under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Leonard v. State, 385 S.W.3d 570, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1598 (Tex. Crim. App. Nov. 21 2012).

87. Defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14 was appropriate because a social worker's testimony was properly admitted since she was qualified to give her testimony; she did not need to have personal knowledge of all the facts on which she bases her opinion; and testimony abut the behavior of child sex abuse victims was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Brucia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844, 2012 WL 2926203 (Tex. App. Dallas July 19 2012).

88. Testimony was properly admitted on the diminished value of damaged steel coils. The steel company's owner could testify to value as a property owner under Tex. R. Evid. 701, and an expert marine surveyor's testimony on representative sampling was reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702; further, the expert marine surveyor was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 703 to personally inspect every damaged coil. Custom Transit, L.P. v. Flatrolled Steel, Inc., 375

89. Testimony of defendant's therapist, a licensed sex-offender treatment provider, that the polygraph results were one of the factors taken into consideration in his decision to discharge defendant from the treatment program was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705 Cruz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3780, 2012 WL 1660611 (Tex. App. Austin May 10 2012).

90. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

91. When defendant pleaded guilty to injury to a child and received five years' deferred adjudication, the conditions of his community supervision under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a) required that he submit to polygraph exams; defendant's polygraph results were admissible in his community supervision revocation hearing. Tex. R. Evid. 703 allowed the sex offender therapist who had been treating defendant to say, "I discharged the defendant because I felt that he was being dishonest." Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

92. In a condemnation proceeding in which plaintiff county acquired a portion of commercial property used for a car wash in order to widen a county roadway, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the county's appraisal expert because the expert's bald assurance that he used a widely accepted appraisal method was insufficient to establish reliability. His report, as well as the underlying data and methodology, did not reflect application of an accepted appraisal method to arrive at the fair market value of the remainder after the taking where he simply took the market value of the whole and assumed--without any basis--that a willing buyer and willing seller would agree to reduce the market value by one-fifth after the taking. Dallas County v. Crestview Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1269 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

93. Expert's testimony on lost profits resulting from the conversion of a leased item was unreliable absent any documentary evidence to support his conclusions regarding available leases and lease rates. Wells Fargo Bank Northwest, N.A. v. Rpk Capital Xvi, L.L.C., 360 S.W.3d 691, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1265, 2012 WL 523925 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

94. During a murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the reading of the affidavits upon which the medical examiner relied in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 703 in forming her opinion as to the victim's cause of death. Although the hearsay statements in the affidavits were prejudicial, disclosing the statements assisted the jury in evaluating the weight to give her opinions; therefore, the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. Moulton v. State, 360 S.W.3d 540, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8266 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 19 2011).

95. During defendant's trial for capital murder, the court erred in holding that a defense expert on eyewitness identifications was not permitted to testify before the jury because it was sufficient that the expert based the expert's opinion on facts learned during the expert's testimony; the expert responded to a series of hypotheticals, which exposed the expert to the pertinent facts of the case. Tillman v. State, 354 S.W.3d 425, 2011 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1343 (Tex. Crim. App. Oct. 5 2011).

96. Trial court did not err in admitting the transcription of the doctor's testimony into evidence as an expert witness may rely on records and information prepared by others in reaching his conclusions, Tex. R. Evid. 703, and medical and autopsy reports fell into an exception to the hearsay rule and were allowed into evidence without the preparing doctor appearing in court to explain them, Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (8). Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2011 WL 3435736 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2011).

97. Appellant's counsel conceded that witnesses were not testifying as experts, such that appellant's issues related to the admissibility of these witnesses' testimony as experts, under Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703, 705(b), were moot. Zuffante v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2332 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2011).

98. Testimony of the insureds' expert in a dispute regarding property damage caused by hail was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703, because he was not required to review or discuss the insurance policy and because he used his own professional judgment in discussing an inspector's report. Southland Lloyds Ins. Co. v. Cantu, 399 S.W.3d 558, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2251, 2011 WL 1158244 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 30 2011).

99. During a hearing to civilly commit appellant as a sexually violent predator, appellant's attorney was not ineffective for not objecting to expert testimony on unadjudicated extraneous offenses because the expert testified that the information contained in the records was of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the field. In re Commitment of Grunsfeld, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1337 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 24 2011).

100. Because the medical examiner's colleague testified to his independent conclusion concerning the victim's cause of death and did not testify to any of the statements contained in the medical examiner's autopsy report, the colleague's testimony did not violate defendant's right of confrontation. Gilstrap v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 181, 2011 WL 192688 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 12 2011).

101. Defendant failed to make any objection questioning the reliability of an expert's testimony, and whether the court made defendant's objection that the expert did not personally interview the victim as an objection of qualification or reliability was of no moment because there was no requirement that an expert witness personally interview the victim for his testimony to be admissible, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 703, 418; because defendant made no objection to the reliability of expert testimony, he did not preserve his point for review and the court assumed without deciding that the testimony on the subject was admissible. Cockrell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3208, 2010 WL 1705538 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 28 2010).

102. Expert opinions constituted legally sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict that the patient was a repeat sexually violent predator and had a behavioral abnormality that predisposed him to engage in a predatory act of sexual violence, because the record showed that the State's experts explained how they arrived at their respective opinions, and each expert considered the patient's underlying schizophrenia in the process of reaching an ultimate conclusion that they both shared, that the patient had a behavioral abnormality that predisposed him to a predatory act of sexual violence. In re Commitment of Moore, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 381, 2009 WL 5448789 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 21 2010).

103. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. The requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 703 were met because the lab supervisor testified that she had personally overseen a lab technician's work in performing DNA tests and reviewed the results. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

104. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify on the cause of death because the expert stated that he had training and experience in the area of sodium poisoning during medical school; he attended "classes that covered material dealing with patients that had elevated sodium levels, and "treated patients with elevated sodium levels." Finally, the doctor testified that the methods that he employed were "standard operating procedure, standard medical examiner practice." Overton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8312,

2009 WL 3489844 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 29 2009).

105. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify on the cause of death because the expert was shown to have training in child abuse, sodium levels, sodium intoxication, other causes of elevated sodium levels, head injuries, "pica", and out-of-hospital cardiac arrest. The expert testified that he used standard practice and procedures, including the widely accepted method of differential diagnosis, to determine the cause of the child's illness. Overton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8312, 2009 WL 3489844 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 29 2009).

106. Corporation failed to explain which of an expert's particular statements violated the standards of scientific reliability as set forth in case law and cited evidentiary rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703, 705, plus the corporation failed to provide the court with any citations to the record to support this portion of its argument, which was waived. SCTW Health Care Ctr., Inc. v. AAR Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8071, 2009 WL 3321399 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2009).

107. Trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703 in excluding an expert's opinions as unreliable in a suit for legal malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty involving a suit against a consulting company that had failed to obtain financing; the expert did not identify sources of financing or adequately discuss its availability. Ray D. Robertson, Inc. v. Morin, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170, 2009 WL 2902720 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2009).

108. In a wrongful death action which arose after emergency medical technicians employed by a city were unable to resuscitate the decedent with an automatic external defibrillator (AED), the affidavit of the survivors' medical device expert was admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 703 because it provided sufficient factual substantiation for the expert opinion regarding whether the AED was defective. Schronk v. City of Burleson, 387 S.W.3d 692, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5654 (Tex. App. Waco July 22 2009).

109. In a driving while intoxicated case, the court did not err by allowing the officer to testify that defendant failed the field sobriety tests because the officer's use of the word "failed" did not give his testimony an "aura of scientific reliability" or cloak it with unearned credibility; the majority of the officer's testimony consisted of a straightforward narrative of each field sobriety test, followed by a particular description of how defendant performed each test. The officer's observations were based on common knowledge and observations and did not, under the circumstances convert his lay witness testimony into expert testimony. Meier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2051, 2009 WL 765490 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 25 2009).

110. Trial court did not err by admitting an expert's opinion in a products liability case because the expert could reasonably rely on a witness's unsworn affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 703 as the witness was not an unknown bystander, the statement did not repeat a rumor, the veracity of the witness's statement could be verified, and the retail store could present contrary evidence if the statement was incorrect. Merrell v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9278, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18146 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 16 2008).

111. From a sexually violent predator commitment hearing, an expert's testimony that determining whether the patient chose his victims as part of a revenge motive or whether they were strangers was important in assessing the risk that he would reoffend was properly admitted as it helped the jury in evaluating the weight of the expert's opinions; and in light of the limiting instructions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements. Even if it was error to admit the testimony, such error was not reasonably calculated to cause and probably did not cause rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Salazar, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8856 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 26 2008).

112. Attorney testified without objection as an expert witness on attorney fees, and an expert was not required to have personal knowledge on the matters about which he testified, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 602, 703; the attorney testified that he reviewed the former attorney's file, level of experience, and the work performed and opined that the former attorney's fees were reasonable and necessary, plus the attorney testified about his own representation, and this testimony supported the jury's award of fees. Arthur J. Gallagher & Co. v. Dieterich, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5639 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2008).

113. In defendant's drug case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify that the substance deliverd by defendant was cocaine because the case did not involve one expert merely reading to the jury a report conducted by another; the testimony of the expert witness concerning the chemical analysis of the substance, determined by applying his expertise to reliable scientific test data, was admissible as he was subject to cross-examination. Blaylock v. State, 259 S.W.3d 202, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3449 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

114. In a tax dispute regarding valuation, an expert's premise that an underground storage tank (UST), once installed, became salvage material was a faulty absolute and likely rendered his valuation of the USTs, which represented the largest deviation in the valuations, unreliable; unreliable testimony did not constitute evidence. Harris County Appraisal Dist. v. Sigmor Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2456 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

115. In a medical malpractice action, the trial court did not err in overruling defendants' objection to plaintiff's wife's affidavit, which was reviewed by plaintiff's experts before preparing their expert reports; defendants cited no authorities supporting the proposition that the wife's affidavit did not supply the type of facts or data reasonably relied upon by medical experts in preparing the reports. Hiner v. Gaspard, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7314 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2007).

116. In an aggravated assault case, expert testimony regarding defendant's gang affiliation was proper because the expert testified that his group identified defendant as a gang member based on his name being on a list of gang members kept by another gang member, his correspondence with gang members about the internal activities of the Mexican Mafia, distinctive gang tattoos, and a letter stating that defendant had been cleared as a member; therefore, there was a substantial basis for the expert witness's conclusion that defendant was a gang member. Loredo v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6703 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2007).

117. Award for past medical expenses in a medical malpractice case was proper because an expert, who properly relied upon summaries of the medical bills as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 703, rather than reviewing of all of the actual medical bills, testified that the costs and expenses incurred were reasonable and necessary and were the result of a child's brain injury; further, the jury awarded less than the amount actually incurred by the child's parents. Christus Spohn Health Sys. Corp. v. De La Fuente, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2007).

118. Because Tex. R. Evid. 703 permitted an expert to base his opinion testimony on facts or data made known to him during trial, the court did not conclude that defendant's expert's testimony was lacking because he failed to interview witnesses. Baldree v. State, 248 S.W.3d 224, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5057 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

119. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of defendant's expert on eyewitness identification because the expert's testimony was offered purely as educational material for the jury, which was insufficient to demonstrate that the scientific principles would assist the trier of fact in the case or were sufficiently tied to the pertinent facts of the case. Baldree v. State, 248 S.W.3d 224, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5057 (Tex. App.

Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

120. Although defendant complained that the trial court wrongly admitted expert testimony to determine the amount of pecuniary loss under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 28.06(b) in defendant's criminal mischief trial, the court was to consider all evidence admitted at trial, including improperly admitted evidence; further, (1) after admitting the testimony, the trial court gave defendant the chance to ask for a continuance, promising that it was going to be granted, but defendant did not request one, (2) defendant did not object to the State's failure to qualify the expert witness, and (3) the expert's testimony was not inadmissible because it might have been based on estimates previously provided, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 703. Retana v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2796 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 12 2007).

121. Court did not err in admitting a utility company's expert testimony as to the market value of the condemned property in which he did not factor in the improvements that were over 4000 feet from the power lines in assessing damages because, inter alia, the landowners' own expert relied upon several articles that specifically stated the negative impact of power lines to a property diminished with increased distance and disappeared beyond 500 feet. Utley v. LCRA Transmission Servs. Corp., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9129 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 25 2006).

122. In defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the State's expert testimony was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 703; the expert's testimony was sufficiently tied to the facts of the case to assist the trier of fact in assessing the significance of the results of the victim's physical examination. Estes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5028 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 13 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

123. Where defendant was convicted of possession of one to four grams of a controlled substance based on methamphetamine found in the car during a traffic stop, an expert's opinion that the sergeant's failure to follow police procedure suggested that the drugs were planted in the car was inadmissible. Because the expert did not explain why the sergeant's acts were suspicious or why they led to the conclusion that the drugs were planted, there was not a sufficient basis for an expert opinion. Nickols v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11241 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 30 2013).

124. In a murder trial where defendant claimed he acted in self-defense, the trial court did not err by excluding testimony from a psychologist regarding the victim's acts of violence because the psychologist's knowledge of any acts committed by the victim came entirely from his review of the medical records which were not admitted into evidence. While the psychologist could rely on the victim's records as a basis for his expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, his proffered testimony was hearsay for which no exception was offered. Mason v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314, 2012 WL 1058792 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 22 2012).

125. During a murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the reading of the affidavits upon which the medical examiner relied in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 703 in forming her opinion as to the victim's cause of death. Although the hearsay statements in the affidavits were prejudicial, disclosing the statements assisted the jury in evaluating the weight to give her opinions; therefore, the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. Moulton v. State, 360 S.W.3d 540, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8266 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 19 2011).

126. Following the entry of defendant's nolo contendere plea to aggravated robbery, the trial court properly considered under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 § 3(a)(1) evidence regarding the murder of defendant's wife at the punishment hearing because the evidence was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant murdered his wife five days before he committed the aggravated robbery offense; further, the medical examiner's hearsay statement that defendant admitted strangling his wife was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid.

703, and defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Garza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5026, 2009 WL 1424610 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2009).

127. Court properly allowed a board-certified neuropsychologist to testify about defendant's suitability for probation because the expert testified to her qualifications, which included testifying as an expert witness in numerous criminal and civil matters, and she also testified that the "facts and data" she gathered in her interviews and investigation were the type normally relied upon by experts in her field to form opinions. Farmer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2723, 2009 WL 1081080 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 22 2009).

128. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, any error arising from the admission of an investigator's opinion on guilt was harmless. Although defendant objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 703 during the prosecution's re-direct, the same question and answer had come in without objection during the defense's prior cross-examination. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

129. State had sufficiently demonstrated the reliability of a psychotherapist's expert testimony during defendant's trial for sexually assaulting a minor, his teenage daughter, because the psychotherapist's opinions regarding the characteristics and dynamics of sexually abused children were based on her extensive experience working with, and learning about, abused children. Furthermore, the psychotherapist's opinions did not lack a sufficient basis because she personally met with the victim on several occasions, both before and after the sexual abuse, and an expert could base her opinions on facts made known to her as well as facts personally observed. Dennis v. State, 178 S.W.3d 172, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5295 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

130. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

131. In a sexual assault case, a court erred by failing to allow defendant's expert to testify where the subject of the expert's opinion was relevant, just as the State's expert was permitted to testify that the lack of genital injuries did not indicate that the complainant had not been sexually assaulted, defendant's expert should have been permitted to testify that no sexual assault occurred. One party could not proffer expert testimony and subsequently argue successfully that the testimony was not relevant when the opposing party sought to offer expert testimony on the same subject which reached a different conclusion; in addition, the error was not harmless. Vela v. State, 159 S.W.3d 172, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7257 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

132. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

133. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

134. In a case involving child indecency, a trial court did not err by allowing an expert to testify regarding defendant's future dangerousness, despite the fact that the expert never met defendant because such contact was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 703; moreover, the expert was qualified to give an opinion based on the expert's training, education, and vast experience with sexual offenders. Rodriguez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3457 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 15 2004).

135. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the hearsay underlying the opinion of defendant's expert witness during the sentencing phase because although the witness could state that he had reviewed the jail classification as a basis for his expert testimony, the classification itself remained inadmissible and could not be used as a basis for determining defendant's dangerousness in the future. Prystash v. State, 3 S.W.3d 522, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Daubert Standard

136. Trial court properly admitted the forensic examiner's testimony because the facts of the hypothetical questions matched the facts of the case, and the relevancy requirement had been met. Eldred v. State, 431 S.W.3d 177, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2460, 2014 WL 856636 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 5 2014).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Helpfulness

137. At defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a licensed professional counselor who treated sex offenders; the expert's testimony about grooming for a sexual offense was relevant to assist the jury in understanding defendant's behavior. The expert was permitted to tie the facts of the case to the principles of grooming through hypothetical questions. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Qualifications

138. Trial court properly denied a doctor's motion to dismiss a patient's health care liability claim against him where, considered together in their entirety, a neurosurgeon's report and curriculum vitae served by the patient established the neurosurgeon's qualifications to render opinions as to the applicable standard of care and alleged breach of the standard of care by the doctor because they expressly provided that the neurosurgeon served as a Florida Worker's Compensation Certified Physician Expert Medical Advisor and that he had been licensed, board certified, and in the private practice of neurosurgery from 1976 to the present. As to whether the neurosurgeon was qualified to address the standard of care and alleged breach by the doctor, a radiologist, the neurosurgeon's report provided that he had been thoroughly exposed to neuroradiology through his years of practice and that the interpretation of an MRI scan like that involved in the patient's case was common to both neurosurgery and radiology. Brunson v. Johnston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 442, 2013 WL 173743 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

139. Defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14 was appropriate because a social worker's testimony was properly admitted since she was qualified to give her testimony; she did not need to have personal knowledge of all the facts on which she bases her opinion; and testimony abut the behavior of child sex abuse victims was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Brucia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844, 2012 WL 2926203 (Tex. App. Dallas July 19 2012).

140. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify on the cause of death because the expert stated that he had training and experience in the area of sodium poisoning during medical school; he attended "classes that covered material dealing with patients that had elevated sodium levels, and "treated patients with elevated sodium levels." Finally, the doctor testified that the methods that he employed were "standard operating procedure, standard medical examiner practice." Overton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8312, 2009 WL 3489844 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 29 2009).

141. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed an expert to testify on the cause of death because the expert was shown to have training in child abuse, sodium levels, sodium intoxication, other causes of elevated sodium levels, head injuries, "pica", and out-of-hospital cardiac arrest. The expert testified that he used standard practice and procedures, including the widely accepted method of differential diagnosis, to determine the cause of the child's illness. Overton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8312, 2009 WL 3489844 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 29 2009).

142. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of fourteen in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the rebuttal testimony of the State's expert who testified that the complainant's "normal" behavior would not necessarily negate sexual abuse; the expert was qualified to provide testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 703 based on his educational and professional background and experience, and the expert's academic and professional background focusing on the treatment and observation of child victims of sexual abuse appropriately matched the subject matter of his testimony focusing on the behavioral patterns of child victims of sexual abuse. Briones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2009 WL 2356626 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 30 2009).

143. Court properly allowed a board-certified neuropsychologist to testify about defendant's suitability for probation because the expert testified to her qualifications, which included testifying as an expert witness in numerous criminal and civil matters, and she also testified that the "facts and data" she gathered in her interviews and investigation were the type normally relied upon by experts in her field to form opinions. Farmer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2723, 2009 WL 1081080 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 22 2009).

144. In a murder trial, the trial court properly found that a doctor was qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 703 to render expert testimony on whether an individual could die from a stab wound in the buttock, as described in the autopsy report and shown in the crime scene photographs, even though he did not have any experience in pathology; his qualifications included experience as a trauma surgeon, responsible for the evaluation, diagnosis, and treatment of acutely injured patients. Bigler v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10490 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 7 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : General Overview

145. Defendant waived appellate review regarding an officer's testimony on the psychological and physiological effects of ecstasy, cocaine, and marijuana because at trial he objected on confrontation grounds, not on the basis put forward on appeal, that the State failed to establish the admissibility of the complained-of testimony pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 701, 702, or 703. Nelson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6710 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

146. Admission of expert testimony by a play therapist was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 703, as the trial court held a Daubert hearing and pursuant to the assessment of factors to assess reliability under Nenno, it was found that such was a legitimate field of expertise and the testimony itself was sufficiently reliable; the expert's testimony was based on her therapy and counseling sessions with a child, wherein he had indicated that his mother was abusive to him and his sister, and was admissible in the mother's parental rights termination proceeding. In re A.J.L., 136 S.W.3d 293, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3825 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

Healthcare Law : Actions Against Facilities : Standards of Care : Expert Testimony

147. In a health care liability case, the nurses' reports, standing alone, could not meet the statutory report requirement on medical causation under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351; however, qualified physicians were permitted to rely on the nurses' reports in the formation of their expert opinions under Tex. R. Evid. 703. Kelly v. Rendon, 255 S.W.3d 665, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2865 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

Healthcare Law : Treatment : Failures to Disclose & Warn : Prescription Medications

148. In a negligent prescription case, plaintiff's expert did not adequately demonstrate qualifications to submit an expert report on the issue of causation. Although the report detailed that three physicians diagnosed the patient with dyskinesia related to use of the prescribed drug, the report did not provide any background on the experience or training of those physicians that would have signaled to the trial court that those opinions were reliable, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 703. Collini v. Pustejovsky, 280 S.W.3d 456, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1071 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 12 2009).

Public Health & Welfare Law : Healthcare : Mental Health Services : Commitment : Involuntary Commitment of Adults

149. From a sexually violent predator commitment hearing, an expert's testimony that determining whether the patient chose his victims as part of a revenge motive or whether they were strangers was important in assessing the risk that he would reoffend was properly admitted as it helped the jury in evaluating the weight of the expert's opinions; and in light of the limiting instructions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements. Even if it was error to admit the testimony, such error was not reasonably calculated to cause and probably did not cause rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Salazar, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8856 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 26 2008).

Real Property Law : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Valuation

150. Trial court did not err in a condemnation case in which the jury found the fair value of the property owner's land to be $250,000 in admitting the testimony of the State's expert appraiser where there were no gaps in the testimony of the appraiser or misapplication of legal rules such that her testimony could have been found to have been unreliable because the appraiser had formed her opinion by comparing the difference between the results of two methods of valuing the property: the cost approach, giving a value of $217,000, and the improved sales comparison approach that gave a value of $205,000. The property owner had not shown that the appraiser could not make valid comparisons for size, and the evidence permitted the conclusion that the owner's entire property was devoted to single-family use and that the applicable zoning ordinance would have allowed the existing use to continue. Williams v. State, 406 S.W.3d 273, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7405 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 19 2013).

151. In a condemnation proceeding in which plaintiff county acquired a portion of commercial property used for a car wash in order to widen a county roadway, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the county's appraisal expert because the expert's bald assurance that he used a widely accepted appraisal method was insufficient to establish reliability. His report, as well as the underlying data and methodology, did not reflect application of an accepted appraisal method to arrive at the fair market value of the remainder after the taking where he simply took the market value of the whole and assumed--without any basis--that a willing buyer and willing seller would agree to reduce the market value by one-fifth after the taking. Dallas County v. Crestview Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1269 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

152. Court did not err in admitting a utility company's expert testimony as to the market value of the condemned property in which he did not factor in the improvements that were over 4000 feet from the power lines in assessing damages because, inter alia, the landowners' own expert relied upon several articles that specifically stated the negative impact of power lines to a property diminished with increased distance and disappeared beyond 500 feet. Utley v. LCRA Transmission Servs. Corp., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9129 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 25 2006).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Personal Property Tax : Tangible Property : General Overview

153. In a tax dispute regarding valuation, an expert's premise that an underground storage tank (UST), once installed, became salvage material was a faulty absolute and likely rendered his valuation of the USTs, which represented the largest deviation in the valuations, unreliable; unreliable testimony did not constitute evidence. Harris County Appraisal Dist. v. Sigmor Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2456 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

Torts : Damages : Compensatory Damages : Medical Expenses

154. Award for past medical expenses in a medical malpractice case was proper because an expert, who properly relied upon summaries of the medical bills as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 703, rather than reviewing of all of the actual medical bills, testified that the costs and expenses incurred were reasonable and necessary and were the result of a child's brain injury; further, the jury awarded less than the amount actually incurred by the child's parents. Christus Spohn Health Sys. Corp. v. De La Fuente, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2007).

Torts : Damages : Compensatory Damages : Property Damage : Loss of Use

155. Expert's testimony on lost profits resulting from the conversion of a leased item was unreliable absent any documentary evidence to support his conclusions regarding available leases and lease rates. Wells Fargo Bank Northwest, N.A. v. Rpk Capital Xvi, L.L.C., 360 S.W.3d 691, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1265, 2012 WL 523925 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Attorneys

156. Expert's affidavit did not raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to defeat summary judgment because the expert did not evaluate what the client's case would have yielded by way of a judgment if the case had gone to trial. On the contrary, he based his opinion on what the attorneys should have obtained in settlement. Elizondo v. Krist, 415 S.W.3d 259, 2013 Tex. LEXIS 677, 56 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1074 (Tex. 2013).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Healthcare Providers

157. Trial court properly denied a doctor's motion to dismiss a patient's health care liability claim against him where, considered together in their entirety, a neurosurgeon's report and curriculum vitae served by the patient established the neurosurgeon's qualifications to render opinions as to the applicable standard of care and alleged breach of the standard of care by the doctor because they expressly provided that the neurosurgeon served as a Florida Worker's Compensation Certified Physician Expert Medical Advisor and that he had been licensed, board certified, and in the private practice of neurosurgery from 1976 to the present. As to whether the neurosurgeon was qualified to address the standard of care and alleged breach by the doctor, a radiologist, the neurosurgeon's report provided that he had been thoroughly exposed to neuroradiology through his years of practice and that the interpretation of an MRI scan like that involved in the patient's case was common to both neurosurgery and radiology. Brunson v. Johnston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 442, 2013 WL 173743 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

158. In a health care liability suit alleging that an infant died from a doctor's failure to determine that a line was improperly placed, the expert report properly relied on the autopsy report and medical records, as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 703. Anderson v. Gonzalez, 315 S.W.3d 582, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2977 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 22 2010).

159. In a patient's action that raised health care liability claims against a doctor based on the patient's allegation that her left eye was permanently impaired as a result of a surgery performed by the doctor, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the report prepared by the patient's expert, a board certified ophthalmologist, complied with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 where the expert's report informed the doctor of the specific conduct that the patient had called into question and provided a basis for the trial court to conclude the claims were meritorious. Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705 allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, which was what the expert had done, and, moreover, the expert's report did not merely state his opinions and inferences because he explained the basis for his conclusions and linked them to the facts. Diaz-Rohena v. Melton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Burdens of Proof

160. In a hospital's action against an employee that sought to reverse the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission's finding that the employee sustained a compensable injury in the course and scope of her employment, which was based on the employee's claim that she contracted human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) from a needle stick while working for the hospital, the trial court did not err by allowing the employee's expert to offer her opinion of causation to the jury because the expert was a medical doctor with extensive experience treating patients HIV, including the employee, and her opinion was supported by peer-reviewed medical literature; even without the expert's testimony, the remaining testimony was sufficient to support the jury's verdict because the burden was on the hospital to persuade the jury that the needle stick did not cause the employee's HIV infection, not on the employee to establish that it did, and the record contained no evidence that anything other than the needle stick caused the employee's HIV, a method of transmission that the hospital's experts acknowledged as a common method of transmission of the virus. Christus Health/St. Joseph Hosp. v. Price, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 754 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 1 2007).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : Medical Evidence

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Administrative Law : Agency Adjudication : Hearings : Evidence : Admissibility : General Overview

1. Administrative law judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing a witness to testify on whether a corporation's and a company owner's offering qualified as a security because the witness did not testify on a pure question of law. Tex. State Secs. Bd. v. Miller, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108, 2009 WL 1896075 (Tex. App. Austin July 1 2009).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Expert Witness Discovery

2. Tex. R. Civ. P. 192 prevails over Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.3(d)'s snap-back provision so long as the expert intends to testify at trial despite the inadvertent document production; that is, once privileged documents are disclosed to a testifying expert, and the party who designated the expert continues to rely upon that designation for trial, the documents may not be retrieved even if they were inadvertently produced. In re Christus Spohn Hosp. Kleberg, 222 S.W.3d 434, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 362, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 682 (Tex. 2007).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Privileged Matters : Work Product : Scope

3. Tex. R. Civ. P. 192 prevails over Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.3(d)'s snap-back provision so long as the expert intends to testify at trial despite the inadvertent document production; that is, once privileged documents are disclosed to a testifying expert, and the party who designated the expert continues to rely upon that designation for trial, the documents may not be retrieved even if they were inadvertently produced. Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : General Overview

4. In a cocaine possession trial, there was no error in admitting an officer's testimony that defendant passenger jointly possessed cocaine or in admitting the officer's testimony explaining how he believed the bag of cocaine became positioned behind the driver's seat. The testimony was rationally based on the circumstances the officer perceived in the course of arresting defendant and investigating the case. Salazar v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3983, 2014 WL 1408121 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 10 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Custodial Interference

5. In an interference with child custody case, although a court erred by overruling defendant's objection to an officer's testimony regarding her guilt or innocence, the error was harmless because the evidence against defendant established that she violated the child custody modification order; defendant's own testimony established that her taking possession of the child on October 24 was contrary to the terms of the modification order. Lovell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6062 (Tex. App. Tyler July 12 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Fraud : Securities Fraud : Elements

6. Director of the Enforcement Division of the Texas State Securities Board was properly permitted to testify as an expert that investor agreements between defendant's company and investors were contracts containing a promise to pay in the future for consideration presently received, and were therefore evidence of indebtedness and securities under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 581-4(A), even though the expert's testimony went to the ultimate issue. Digges v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5195, 2012 WL 2444543 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Involuntary Manslaughter : Elements

7. In the homicide trial of a doctor who occluded a patient's breathing tube, a physician was properly allowed to testify that the patient was alive at the time of the occlusion; testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible was not objectionable because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Grotti v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8153 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 14 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

8. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, any error arising from the admission of an investigator's opinion on guilt was harmless. Although defendant objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 704 during the prosecution's re-direct, the same question and answer had come in without objection during the defense's prior cross-examination. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Fleeing & Eluding : Elements

9. In a trial for evading arrest, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to an officer's opinion that defendant intended to flee. The reviewing court noted that opinion testimony regarding the mental state of an accused was not inadmissible per se, that rulings on the admissibility of lay opinion testimony were within the discretion of the trial court under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704, and that counsel may have made a strategic decision not to object. Britt v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 26 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : General Overview

10. In a trial for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to an officer's testimony that he believed defendant was in possession of the missing vehicle, in part because that evidence might have been admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704. Seat v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4322, 2011 WL 2306249 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 8 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

11. In a driving while intoxicated trial, there was no error when officers stated their opinions regarding whether defendant was intoxicated; under Tex. R. Evid. 704, opinion testimony that was otherwise admissible was not objectionable solely because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Birhiray v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10075 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2007).

12. In an intoxicated assault case, Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.07(a)(1), the State's witness's testimony was objectionable because he was not shown to be qualified as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702 on retrograde extrapolation for purposes of blood alcohol tests, nor was his testimony shown to be reliable and, thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 704, the witness's testimony on whether defendant was intoxicated beyond a reasonable doubt, an ultimate issue in the case, was also objectionable; therefore, counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness as he failed to object to the witness testimony. However, counsel's failure to object to the admission of the witness's testimony did not prejudice defendant because there was other substantial evidence of defendant's intoxication at the time of the accident, including testimony that defendant smelled of alcohol and appeared intoxicated, that the inside of defendant's vehicle smelled of the metabolized odor of alcohol, and that defendant had been drinking that day. Blumenstetter v. State, 135 S.W.3d 234, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3074 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

13. In a trial for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to an officer's testimony that he believed defendant was in possession of the missing vehicle, in part because that evidence might have been admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704. Seat v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4322, 2011 WL 2306249 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 8 2011).

14. Although defendant argued that his counsel permitted a witness to testify as to his guilt without objection, given the fact that one such objection was overruled by the trial court, counsel could have chosen not to emphasize the matter further to the jury by additional objections, and, accordingly, it could not be said that the trial court abused its discretion in finding that defendant failed to prove by credible evidence that counsel's performance was deficient. Moreover, the witness was a fact witness, and defendant did not argue that the testimony was not based on the perception of the witness and/or was not helpful to an understanding of a fact in issue. Ex Parte Eggert, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 858, 2010 WL 396321 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 4 2010).

15. Court rejected defendant's contention that his trial counsel fell below an objective standard of reasonable competence for failing to object to an officer's testimony that he did not believe defendant's version of events; under Tex. R. Evid. 704, a lay witness could offer an opinion on an ultimate issue. Adelaja v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4596 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 25 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

16. In an assault case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay, relevance, undue prejudice, improper opinion, and violations of the confrontation clause because the challenged evidence had come in during other portions of the trial without objection. Hecht v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 521, 2009 WL 200979 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Counsel : Effective Assistance

17. In an intoxicated assault case, Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.07(a)(1), the State's witness's testimony was objectionable because he was not shown to be qualified as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702 on retrograde extrapolation for purposes of blood alcohol tests, nor was his testimony shown to be reliable and, thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 704, the witness's testimony on whether defendant was intoxicated beyond a reasonable doubt, an ultimate issue in the case, was also objectionable; therefore, counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness as he failed to object to the witness testimony. However, counsel's failure to object to the admission of the witness's testimony did not prejudice defendant because there was other substantial evidence of defendant's intoxication at the time of the accident, including testimony that defendant smelled of alcohol and appeared intoxicated, that the inside of defendant's vehicle smelled of the metabolized odor of alcohol, and that defendant had been drinking that day. Blumenstetter v. State, 135 S.W.3d 234, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3074 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

18. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motions for a mistrial based on testimony of the victim's therapist because the trial court promptly instructed the jury to disregard the objected-to testimony both times when requested; the court could not conclude that the jury did not follow the trial court's instructions to disregard the therapist's references, and during the re-direct examination by the State, the therapist testified without objection that the victim did not appear to be malingering or lying about what she had told the therapist. King v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7282, 2010 WL 3434634 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 1 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Self-Defense

19. Lay witness opinion testimony was properly allowed from a State's witness regarding whether it was necessary for defendant to use deadly force to protect his brother. The court noted that under Tex. R. Evid. 704, testimony in form of opinion is not objectionable because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by trier of fact. Garcia v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4424 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 9 2005).

20. In a prosecution for aggravated assault in which defendant claimed self-defense, the arresting officer was permitted to give opinion testimony that defendant had not been attacked. Ex parte Nailor, 149 S.W.3d 125, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 518 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Scienter : Specific Intent

21. In a murder trial, counsel was not ineffective in failing to object under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704, to allegedly improper witness testimony concerning defendant's mental state because defendant did not establish that the trial court would have erred in overruling an objection to testimony from two eyewitnesses that defendant intentionally hit the victim with his van. Harris v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2143, 2012 WL 952248 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 20 2012).

22. In a trial for evading arrest, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to an officer's opinion that defendant intended to flee. The reviewing court noted that opinion testimony regarding the mental state of an accused was not inadmissible per se, that rulings on the admissibility of lay opinion testimony were within the discretion of the trial court under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704, and that counsel may have made a strategic decision not to object. Britt v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 26 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Curative Instructions

23. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motions for a mistrial based on testimony of the victim's therapist because the trial court promptly instructed the jury to disregard the objected-to testimony both times when requested; the court could not conclude that the jury did not follow the trial court's instructions to disregard the therapist's references, and during the re-direct examination by the State, the therapist testified without objection that the victim did not appear to be malingering or lying about what she had told the therapist. King v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7282, 2010 WL 3434634 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 1 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

24. In an assault case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay, relevance, undue prejudice, improper opinion, and violations of the confrontation clause because the challenged evidence had come in during other portions of the trial without objection. Hecht v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 521, 2009 WL 200979 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

25. In a murder trial, defendant waived any argument under Tex. R. Evid. 503, 701, 704 to allowing a State's witness to speculate regarding what defendant told his trial counsel. There were no objections on grounds relating to those rules, as required to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Young v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8022, 2009 WL 3295763 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 14 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

26. State asked the second detective, whether, based on that detective's professional opinion self-defense was involved, and defendant's objection was overruled. However, state had asked the first detective to give a professional opinion as to whether defendant acted in self-defense, to which the first detective stated it would have been unlikely, and defendant did not object; thus, defendant waived assertion that the opinion testimony on self-defense and the ultimate issue was improperly admitted. Rocha v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2410 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 17 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

27. Although the court erred by allowing an expert to testify that a sexual assault occurred, the error was harmless where the child victim told her caregivers and the jury that defendant put his "private" in her "private" on numerous occasions. The victim also provided detailed descriptions of the sexual abuse in age-appropriate language. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

28. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault committed by a juvenile, testimony from a school counselor regarding the fact that she thought defendant's behavior would have gotten worse without treatment was admissible during the punishment phase of the trial as lay opinion testimony; her testimony was rationally based on her perceptions and was helpful to the determination of the appropriateness of defendant's punishment. Even if there was an error in admitting this evidence, it was harmless because numerous witnesses testified about defendant's prior bad acts and the escalating nature of his behavior, which included stealing his father's vehicle, breaking into a convenience store, starting fires, acting out in a sexual manner toward other students, and aggravated sexual assault. McNichols v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 510, 2009 WL 196066 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2009).

29. In an interference with child custody case, although a court erred by overruling defendant's objection to an officer's testimony regarding her guilt or innocence, the error was harmless because the evidence against defendant established that she violated the child custody modification order; defendant's own testimony established that her taking possession of the child on October 24 was contrary to the terms of the modification order. Lovell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6062 (Tex. App. Tyler July 12 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

30. State asked the second detective, whether, based on that detective's professional opinion self-defense was involved, and defendant's objection was overruled. However, state had asked the first detective to give a professional opinion as to whether defendant acted in self-defense, to which the first detective stated it would have been unlikely, and defendant did not object; thus, defendant waived assertion that the opinion testimony on self-defense and the ultimate issue was improperly admitted. Rocha v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2410 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 17 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

31. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

32. It was error under Tex. R. Evid. 704 to allow the investigating detective in an assault trial to state his opinion about whether defendant was acting in defense of a third person or in self-defense when he stabbed the victim. However, the error did not require reversal because the State elicited the challenged testimony on redirect and did not ask for elaboration. Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2009 WL 4377196 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 2 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

33. Tex. R. Evid. 704 does not require a surveyor to testify as an expert as to the location of a boundary line in every case involving disputed boundary lines. Neal v. Machaud, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10602 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 13 2006).

34. Appellate court did not reach the issue of whether an expert witness's affidavit was relevant because the threshold issues, whether he was qualified to opine concerning the cause of injury and whether his opinions were reliable, were waived due to inadequate briefing. Sanders v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3651 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 12 2005).

35. Trial court properly allowed an expert to testify that the conduct of a life insurance company constituted bad faith, unfair dealing, and fraud and also that it violated various provisions of the Insurance Code and the Deceptive Trade Practices Act; these opinions on mixed questions of law and fact were proper. Royal Maccabees Life Ins. Co. v. James, 134 S.W.3d 906, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4638 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004), vacated by, opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 146 S.W.3d 340, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9025 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

36. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

37. Testimony may be presented before the jury even if it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of facts; accordingly, an expert may state an opinion on a mixed question of fact and law as long as the opinion is confined to the relevant issues and is based on proper legal concepts. Particularly, expert testimony on proximate cause is admissible so long as it is predicated on the proper legal concept. Dziedzic v. Stephanou, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7458 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 7 1999).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

38. Trial court did not err by admitting the investigator's testimony that he concluded a sexual assault had occurred because he was not offering an opinion that the victim was telling the truth, but rather was testifying about what he relied upon to determine whether he should swear out an affidavit to obtain a warrant for defendant's arrest. Bryant v. State, 340 S.W.3d 1, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6614 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 12 2010).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

39. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, any error arising from the admission of an investigator's opinion on guilt was harmless. Although defendant objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 704 during the prosecution's re-direct, the same question and answer had come in without objection during the defense's prior cross-examination. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

40. Although the court erred by allowing an expert to testify that a sexual assault occurred, the error was harmless where the child victim told her caregivers and the jury that defendant put his "private" in her "private" on numerous occasions. The victim also provided detailed descriptions of the sexual abuse in age-appropriate language. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

41. In an intoxicated assault case, Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.07(a)(1), the State's witness's testimony was objectionable because he was not shown to be qualified as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702 on retrograde extrapolation for purposes of blood alcohol tests, nor was his testimony shown to be reliable and, thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 704, the witness's testimony on whether defendant was intoxicated beyond a reasonable doubt, an ultimate issue in the case, was also objectionable; therefore, counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness as he failed to object to the witness testimony. However, counsel's failure to object to the admission of the witness's testimony did not prejudice defendant because there was other substantial evidence of defendant's intoxication at the time of the accident, including testimony that defendant smelled of alcohol and appeared intoxicated, that the inside of defendant's vehicle smelled of the metabolized odor of alcohol, and that defendant had been drinking that day. Blumenstetter v. State, 135 S.W.3d 234, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3074 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

42. In an arson trial, an expert's opinion that a fire had started was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 704. Drake v. State, 123 S.W.3d 596, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9599 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Qualifications

43. At a hearing, outside the presence of the jury, a doctor testified that he based his opinion on his practice in emergency medicine and what he saw in the emergency room while treating the victim, a 16-month old child; defendant contended that the doctor was not qualified to testify on what someone believed would happen if they saw an assault; however, the training, experience, research, seminars, and periodicals about which the doctor testified and upon which he based his medical opinion qualified him to testify as an expert witness; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the doctor to testify as an expert witness. Montgomery v. State, 198 S.W.3d 67, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Ultimate Issue

44. Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective during a sexual assault trial for failing to object to testimony by a nurse that she had examined over 1,100 subjects of sexual assault; even if the nurse's testimony had addressed an ultimate issue of fact to be determined by the jury, it was not objectionable solely for that reason. Allen v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7273 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 13 2013).

45. Because appellant's claim on appeal about the prosecutor eliciting testimony from a witness did not correspond with his objection at trial, the court overruled appellant's claim; even if the court found the argument matched the trial objection, an expert witness could testify as to an ultimate issue to be decided by the fact finder under Tex. R. Evid. 704. Leal v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3130, 2013 WL 1188033 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 21 2013).

46. Director of the Enforcement Division of the Texas State Securities Board was properly permitted to testify as an expert that investor agreements between defendant's company and investors were contracts containing a promise to pay in the future for consideration presently received, and were therefore evidence of indebtedness and securities under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 581-4(A), even though the expert's testimony went to the ultimate issue. Digges v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5195, 2012 WL 2444543 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

47. Court's admission of the officer's testimony regarding whether defendant was intoxicated was not error simply because the officer testified that his observations persuaded him beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was driving while intoxicated. Reyna v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5038, 2011 WL 2621314 (Tex. App. Austin July 1 2011).

48. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized criminal activity, with the two predicate offenses being aggravated sexual assault of a child, was improper because it was error for the judge to overrule an objection to a question as to whether there was grooming in the case. Both of those questions asked the expert to give her opinion as to whether the testimony of the children was true; the doctor should not have been allowed to imply that the children were telling the truth by claiming that she would not have agreed to be a witness in the case if she saw evidence of deception. Kelly v. State, 321 S.W.3d 583, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4506 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2010).

49. Administrative law judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing a witness to testify on whether a corporation's and a company owner's offering qualified as a security because the witness did not testify on a pure question of law. Tex. State Secs. Bd. v. Miller, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108, 2009 WL 1896075 (Tex. App. Austin July 1 2009).

50. Even if the court decided that a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony was erroneously admitted, the admission of her testimony was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the outcome was not substantially influenced by the admission of the complained-of testimony and the record contained ample evidence, apart from the nurse's opinion that the victim had been sexually assault, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 704, to permit the jury to find defendant guilty of sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011(a)(1)(A), (b)(1). Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

51. Defendant argued on appeal that a question to and an answer from a nurse examiner exceeded the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 702, 704 because they constituted improper opinion testimony regarding the victim's truthfulness, but because this objection did not comport with defendant's trial objection, he waived this complaint pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, plus the nurse offered the same testimony on seven previous occasions and on one subsequent occasion without objection from defendant, and the improper admission of evidence did not constitute reversible error if the same facts were shown by other evidence that was not challenged; even if defendant preserved his complaint, the nurse's testimony was proper because it was limited to her expert opinion on the physical findings that she observed and the record did not contain any evidence that would have supported a finding that the trial court would have abused its discretion in allowing the nurse's testimony if it had been presented with a proper objection. Jernigan v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6310 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 14 2008).

52. In defendant's trial for capital murder, a doctor was qualified to testify as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702 regarding a perpetrator's state of mind, given that (1) the doctor was an assistant professor of pediatrics, (2) he was triple board certified in pediatrics, pediatric emergency medicine, and pediatric infectious diseases, and (3) he experienced hundreds of injuries similar to the child's injuries and knew the injuries were generally consistent with child abuse; thus, he was qualified in regard to whether the injuries presented were intentional and not accidental injuries, such involved specialized knowledge and his testimony assisted the jury in understanding the evidence and determining the fact at issue, and under Tex. R. Evid. 704, the doctor was qualified to render his opinion on the ultimate issue of whether the child's injuries were intentionally inflicted. Martin v. State, 246 S.W.3d 246, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9698 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

53. In a suit by a royalty interest owner against operators of oil and gas properties, an expert's damages testimony was speculative, conclusory, and incompetent; although he examined facts and data that would be appropriate to consider, he failed to specifically identify them or explain how they affected his calculations. Paradigm Oil, Inc. v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 242 S.W.3d 67, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6926, 167 Oil & Gas Rep. 236 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : General Overview

54. On appeal from his conviction for failing to stop at a clearly marked stop line while facing a red light, the appellate court determined that the municipal court did not err in overruling defendant's objections to questions that he claimed called for a conclusion of law or ultimate issue for the jury. The police officers testified based on their observations and experience in patrolling the same area where defendant was cited. Hassan v. State, 440 S.W.3d 684, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8853, 2012 WL 5288353 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 25 2012).

55. In a prosecution for aggravated assault in which defendant claimed self-defense, the arresting officer was permitted to give opinion testimony that defendant had not been attacked. Ex parte Nailor, 149 S.W.3d 125, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 518 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : General Overview

56. Trial court did not err by admitting the investigator's testimony that he concluded a sexual assault had occurred because he was not offering an opinion that the victim was telling the truth, but rather was testifying about what he relied upon to determine whether he should swear out an affidavit to obtain a warrant for defendant's arrest. Bryant v. State, 340 S.W.3d 1, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6614 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 12 2010).

57. Although defendant argued that his counsel permitted a witness to testify as to his guilt without objection, given the fact that one such objection was overruled by the trial court, counsel could have chosen not to emphasize the matter further to the jury by additional objections, and, accordingly, it could not be said that the trial court abused its discretion in finding that defendant failed to prove by credible evidence that counsel's performance was deficient. Moreover, the witness was a fact witness, and defendant did not argue that the testimony was not based on the perception of the witness and/or was not helpful to an understanding of a fact in issue. Ex Parte Eggert, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 858, 2010 WL 396321 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 4 2010).

58. Lay witness opinion testimony was properly allowed from a State's witness regarding whether it was necessary for defendant to use deadly force to protect his brother. The court noted that under Tex. R. Evid. 704, testimony in form of opinion is not objectionable because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by trier of fact. Garcia v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4424 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 9 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : Personal Perceptions

59. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault committed by a juvenile, testimony from a school counselor regarding the fact that she thought defendant's behavior would have gotten worse without treatment was admissible during the punishment phase of the trial as lay opinion testimony; her testimony was rationally based on her perceptions and was helpful to the determination of the appropriateness of defendant's punishment. Even if there was an error in admitting this evidence, it was harmless because numerous witnesses testified about defendant's prior bad acts and the escalating nature of his behavior, which included stealing his father's vehicle, breaking into a convenience store, starting fires, acting out in a sexual manner toward other students, and aggravated sexual assault. McNichols v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 510, 2009 WL 196066 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Ultimate Issue

60. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness's testimony that it was wrong for defendant to shoot the victim because such testimony was expressly permitted under this rule. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13623, 2013 WL 5948124 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 5 2013).

61. Court did not need to determine if a witness expressed an opinion on the ultimate issue because even if she did, appellant was not able to show deficient performance; the witness's testimony was based on her observations while investigating the family, and even if the witness's statement amounted to an opinion, the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701, 704, and counsel's decision not to object was not error or deficient performance. Noland v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911, 2012 WL 2989256 (Tex. App. Austin July 20 2012).

62. Even if a trial court erred in admitting testimony of a child sexual assault victim's mother that she believed her daughter and that her daughter would not lie, the error was harmless because opinion testimony as to the ultimate issue of a case was expressly permitted by the rule; there was other overwhelming evidence to support defendant's conviction. Fitzgerald v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1570, 2012 WL 683400 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 29 2012).

63. Trial court did not err by overruling defendant's objections to witnesses' testimony concerning whether they believed that the complainant failed to exercise due care in driving her vehicle because such testimony was expressly permitted under Tex. R. Evid. 704. Ruiz-Angeles v. State, 346 S.W.3d 261, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6176 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2011).

64. Prosecutor's question to an officer regarding the officer's opinion as to whether defendant, a felon, was in possession of a firearm was not improper merely because it embraced an ultimate issue in the case. Young v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4974, 2010 WL 2638083 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2010).

65. In a murder case involving a sudden passion defense, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 704 in allowing lay testimony that the witness had not seen anything that justified defendant pulling a gun on the victim; contrary to defendant's argument, the witness gave no opinion as to defendant's state of mind at the time that defendant fired several shots. Miller v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6511 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2007).

66. In an interference with child custody case, although a court erred by overruling defendant's objection to an officer's testimony regarding her guilt or innocence, the error was harmless because the evidence against defendant established that she violated the child custody modification order; defendant's own testimony established that her taking possession of the child on October 24 was contrary to the terms of the modification order. Lovell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6062 (Tex. App. Tyler July 12 2006).

67. Court rejected defendant's claim that a witness's testimony expressed an opinion of defendant's state of mind as to whether defendant deliberately drove into the officer, in defendant's murder trial, as the witness was not asked whether defendant intended to strike the officer, but whether the swerve appeared to be a deliberate action, which called for a response based on the witness's observation of the vehicle's movements, and the trial court could have found the question was not an attempt to communicate defendant's actual mental state, but asked for an opinion or inference drawn from the witness's objective perception of events. Davis v. State, 223 S.W.3d 466, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3882 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

68. Objection was made to opinion testimony as calling for a legal conclusion, and the trial court ruled on that objection; although the objection on appeal was somewhat different in that defendant claimed the testimony was a conclusion that should have been reached by the jury, the court found the objection not so different as to have precluded the court's consideration of the issue for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, and the court further found that error was not forfeited by defense counsel's mere restatement of the objectionable testimony. Lovell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 22 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6062 (Tex. App. Tyler July 12, 2006).

69. Witness was asked whether, based on the investigation, defendant violated the law of interference with child custody under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.03(a)(1), to which the witness agreed; because this was in substance, an opinion that defendant was guilty, the trial court should have sustained defendant's objection; however, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44, given that defendant and her ex-husband had a custody arrangement regarding their child and defendant deliberately took the child on a weekend that was not hers. Lovell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 22 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6062 (Tex. App. Tyler July 12, 2006).

70. Psychiatrist's comment during defendant's competency hearing that subsequent information shed doubt on defendant's statement that it was his father who killed his stepmother did not implicate Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 46.02, § 3(g) because it was merely an opinion based on evidence already in the record. Expert witness testimony in the form of an opinion that was otherwise admissible was not objectionable merely because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the jury. Marthiljohni v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 4 2005).

71. Although the court erred by allowing an expert to testify that a sexual assault occurred, the error was harmless where the child victim told her caregivers and the jury that defendant put his "private" in her "private" on numerous occasions. The victim also provided detailed descriptions of the sexual abuse in age-appropriate language. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

72. Defense counsel's questioning of a witness about insurance fraud opened the door for the State to reference the reading of the definition of insurance fraud in defendant's insurance fraud case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 35.02(a); the testimony did not go to an ultimate issue because the witness neither made a legal conclusion about the definition of insurance fraud, nor offered an opinion about whether the case involved it or if defendant committed it, and the testimony was based on common knowledge and personal experience. Gutierrez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1430 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 23 2005).

73. In light of the court's conclusion that an insurance policy was ambiguous, it was not error for the trial court to permit an expert witness to testify as to an interpretation of the policy; the expert was qualified pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 702, and the opinions were on mixed questions of law and fact and were proper pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 704.

Royal Maccabees Life Ins. Co. v. James, 146 S.W.3d 340, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9025 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

74. Trial court properly allowed an expert to testify that the conduct of a life insurance company constituted bad faith, unfair dealing, and fraud and also that it violated various provisions of the Insurance Code and the Deceptive Trade Practices Act; these opinions on mixed questions of law and fact were proper. Royal Maccabees Life Ins. Co. v. James, 134 S.W.3d 906, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4638 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004), vacated by, opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 146 S.W.3d 340, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9025 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

75. In a prosecution for aggravated assault in which defendant claimed self-defense, the arresting officer was permitted to give opinion testimony that defendant had not been attacked. Ex parte Nailor, 149 S.W.3d 125, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 518 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

76. State asked the second detective, whether, based on that detective's professional opinion self-defense was involved, and defendant's objection was overruled. However, state had asked the first detective to give a professional opinion as to whether defendant acted in self-defense, to which the first detective stated it would have been unlikely, and defendant did not object; thus, defendant waived assertion that the opinion testimony on self-defense and the ultimate issue was improperly admitted. Rocha v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2410 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 17 2004).

77. In an arson trial, an expert's opinion that a fire had started was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and Tex. R. Evid. 704. Drake v. State, 123 S.W.3d 596, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9599 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Real Property Law : Adjoining Landowners : Boundaries

78. Tex. R. Evid. 704 does not require a surveyor to testify as an expert as to the location of a boundary line in every case involving disputed boundary lines. Neal v. Machaud, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10602 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 13 2006).

Torts : Negligence : Causation : Proximate Cause : General Overview

79. Testimony may be presented before the jury even if it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of facts; accordingly, an expert may state an opinion on a mixed question of fact and law as long as the opinion is confined to the relevant issues and is based on proper legal concepts. Particularly, expert testimony on proximate cause is admissible so long as it is predicated on the proper legal concept. Dziedzic v. Stephanou, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7458 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 7 1999).

THIS DOCUMENT IS CURRENT THROUGH August 16, 2020

Rule 705 Disclosing the Underlying Facts or Data and Examining an Expert About Them

(a) Stating an Opinion Without Disclosing the Underlying Facts or Data.--Unless the court orders otherwise, an expert may state an opinion - and give the reasons for it - without first testifying to the underlying facts or data. But the expert may be required to disclose those facts or data on cross-examination.

(b) Voir Dire Examination of an Expert About the Underlying Facts or Data.--Before an expert states an opinion or discloses the underlying facts or data, an adverse party in a civil case may-or in a criminal case must-be permitted to examine the expert about the underlying facts or data. This examination must take place outside the jury's hearing.

(c) Admissibility of Opinion.--An expert's opinion is inadmissible if the underlying facts or data do not provide a sufficient basis for the opinion.

(d) When Otherwise Inadmissible Underlying Facts or Data May Be Disclosed; Instructing the Jury.--If the underlying facts or data would otherwise be inadmissible, the proponent of the opinion may not disclose them to the jury if their probative value in helping the jury evaluate the opinion is outweighed by their prejudicial effect. If the court allows the proponent to disclose those facts or data the court must, upon timely request, restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly.

Comment to 1998 change Paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) are based on the former Criminal Rule and are made applicable to civil cases. This rule does not preclude a party in any case from conducting a voir dire examination into the qualifications of an expert.

Comment to 2015 Restyling: All references to an "inference" have been deleted because this makes the Rule flow better and easier to read, and because any "inference" is covered by the broader term "opinion." Courts have not made substantive decisions on the basis of any distinction between an opinion and an inference. No change in current practice is intended.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Pleading & Practice : Defenses, Demurrers & Objections : Motions to Strike : General Overview

1. Trial court did not err in granting a bar's motion to strike plaintiffs' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in their dram shop case against the bar because the expert had no actual blood alcohol level of the drunk driver from which to extrapolate, which made his methodology admittedly less reliable. Furthermore, the expert based his calculations on facts not in evidence and on assumptions that were contrary to facts. Alaniz v. Rebello Food & Bev., L.L.C., 165 S.W.3d 7, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Appellate Review : Standards of Review

2. Trial court properly granted manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' no-evidence summary judgment motion, Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(i), because (1) although the former employees claimed that paints and other coating substances used in the construction of the power plants contained asbestos or silica, which was released into the air when the product was sprayed or when it was sanded or ground off the surface to which it had been applied, there was no expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 705(c) that spraying, sanding, or grinding a liquid paint or coating produced friable asbestos fibers likely to cause asbestosis; and (2) although the type of silica that caused silicosis was crystalline silica, the evidence showed that the products in the employees' case contained amorphous silica and there was no evidence that amorphous silica caused silicosis or that grinding and sanding the paint and coatings released a form of silica that was capable of causing injury; thus, the employees never proved an exposure to a form of asbestos or silica that would cause injury and the employees failed to meet their initial burden of showing that they were exposed to asbestos and/or silica in a form that was capable of causing injury from manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' products. In re ROC Pretrial, 131 S.W.3d 129, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 315 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

3. Equipment maintenance company's no-evidence motion for summary judgment was properly granted pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a on the TrackMobile equipment operator's negligence clam because the operator failed to present the required expert testimony about the proper inspection and maintenance of the TrackMobile and if the company's conduct met that standard of care; expert testimony was required as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705 because a maintenance company's practices and procedures and industry standards with respect to the inspection and maintenance of a TrackMobile or other rail-car mover engine were not matters within a lay person's general knowledge. Simmons v. Briggs Equip. Trust, 221 S.W.3d 109, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5647 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

4. In a pipeline company's action for negligent damage to a gasoline pipeline, causation was not shown as to claims against developers regarding the platting of the lot because there was no evidence of where digging would have occurred if the lot had been configured differently. An expert witness' assumption that digging would have occurred in a different place was not a reasonable inference from the evidence and did not constitute competent summary judgment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(c). Seaway Prods. Pipeline Co. v. Hanley, 153 S.W.3d 643, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : General Overview

5. Appellant maintained that a limiting instruction was insufficient to cure the error of allowing an expert witness to read inflammatory, cumulative, and unnecessary hearsay statements to the jury; however, even though appellant objected to the hearsay, he failed to object to the limiting instruction, and he failed to request a different or additional instruction. In re Yaw, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9023 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 4 2008).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

6. Although defendant, who was convicted of felony driving while intoxicated, complained that the trial court denied his request to voir dire the State's fingerprint expert, defendant did not contend that the jury heard inadmissible evidence as a result of the trial court's ruling. The trial court's error was harmless. Goains v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7875, 2011 WL 4537892 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 28 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : General Overview

7. In the absence of epidemiological studies showing a statistically significant doubling of the risk of childhood leukemia or other diseases from exposure to benzene, expert opinions did not constitute sufficient evidence to support jury awards in favor of individuals who alleged that they suffered injury from benzene in their drinking water. Exxon Corp. v. Makofski, 116 S.W.3d 176, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 6411, 59 Oil & Gas Rep. 84 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Civil Rights Law : Protection of Disabled Persons : General Overview

8. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

9. At defendant's trial for causing serious bodily injury to a child, the trial court did not violate her right to confront witnesses when it allowed a doctor to testify as a substitute witness for the pathologist who performed the autopsy on the victim; the doctor used the autopsy report to explain the basis for her opinion. The doctor's independent evaluation of the evidence collected during the autopsy did not violate the Confrontation Clause. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3020, 2014 WL 1102004 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 19 2014).

10. Confrontation Clause was violated when a testifying medical examiner disclosed out-of-court testimonial statements in an autopsy report that was prepared by a nontestifying medical examiner. Under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(d), the value of that information was outweighed by the danger that the inadmissible statements would be used to prove the truth of the matters stated. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Involuntary Manslaughter : Penalties

11. In the penalty phase of a trial for intoxication manslaughter, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d) in refusing to allow an expert witness to explain that a diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder was based, in part, on what defendant told him about his mental history, including what happened on the night of the accident. Bayas v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5306, 2011 WL 2714114 (Tex. App. El Paso July 13 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

12. In a murder trial, the testimony of a forensic anthropologist regarding the science of toolmark analysis was reliable, within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) and relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401; the expert opined that toolmarks on bone fragments found in defendant's yard were consistent with being made by either a hunting knife or a saw, that the bone fragments had characteristics consistent with being human, and that they showed no signs of healing, indicating that the cuts occurred at or near the time of death. Shepherd v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 133, 2011 WL 166893 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

13. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

14. In a sexual assault case, a court erred by failing to allow defendant's expert to testify where the subject of the expert's opinion was relevant, just as the State's expert was permitted to testify that the lack of genital injuries did not indicate that the complainant had not been sexually assaulted, defendant's expert should have been permitted to testify that no sexual assault occurred. One party could not proffer expert testimony and subsequently argue successfully that the testimony was not relevant when the opposing party sought to offer expert testimony on the same subject which reached a different conclusion; in addition, the error was not harmless. Vela v. State, 159 S.W.3d 172, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7257 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

15. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a clinical supervisor at the Dallas Children's Advocacy Center as expert testimony because she was qualified as she had a bachelor's degree in psychology, a master's degree in counseling and development, and had been licensed in Texas as a professional counselor for over seven years, and she was familiar with, and kept current on, the literature and research in the field of child sexual abuse; and her testimony was specialized and scientific and would assist the jury to understand the evidence or to determine the facts at issue as she testified regarding delayed outcry and the wide range of symptoms and behavioral changes in children who had been abused. Cabrera v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7033 (Tex. App. Dallas June 27 2014).

16. State did not carry its burden to establish some foundation for the reliability of a sexual assault nurse examiner's opinion because she could not elaborate on the extent to which the underlying scientific theory and technique were accepted as valid by the relevant scientific community; she could make only vague references to literature supporting her underlying scientific theory and technique; and she did not appear to understand the concept of the potential rate of error of the technique; thus, the trial court erred by allowing into evidence her opinion that the quick dilation of the child victim's anus was consistent with sexual abuse, but, in light of the child victim's testimony, her mother's testimony about the victim's outcry, a licensed psychologist's testimony, and the nurse's testimony about the tear close to the child's anus, the jury could have convicted defendant without the objectionable portion of the nurse's testimony. Therefore, the error did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Escamilla v. State, 334 S.W.3d 263, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8227 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 13 2010).

17. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of fourteen in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the rebuttal testimony of the State's expert who testified that the complainant's "normal" behavior would not necessarily negate sexual abuse; the testimony was reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) because it was within the scope of the expert's field of expertise and because the expert properly relied upon the principles involved in his field of expertise which related to the behavior and treatment of child victims of sexual abuse. Briones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2009 WL 2356626 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 30 2009).

18. In the punishment phase of a trial for indecency with a child, the trial court did not unduly limit the testimony of defendant's psychological expert; following a hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 705, the trial court admitted all of the testimony that the court understood the witness to have given and defendant did not indicate that he re-urged the matter to the trial court with evidence that would contradict the court's recollection of the witness's testimony. Jimenez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6538 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

19. Even if counsel was deficient in failing to challenge the admissibility of an horizontal gaze nystagmus test, no prejudice was shown because there was overwhelming evidence that defendant had alcohol or other substances in his system. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2064, 2013 WL 765711 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Weapons : Definitions

20. Error in denying voir dire of the State's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) was harmless because the expert was not the only witness to testify on the point at issue, whether the BB gun used in a robbery was a deadly weapon. The unobjected-to testimony of two victims regarding their fear of death or serious bodily injury from having the BB gun pointed at them was sufficient to support the deadly weapon finding. Blackburn v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5598, 2010 WL 2802186 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 16 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Competency to Stand Trial

21. State's expert witness had sufficient facts and data with which to form his opinion that defendant was malingering and displayed elements of competency because he interviewed defendant twice, collected information from numerous collateral sources, and explained how each additional piece of evidence fit into his assessment. Miears v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5960 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 15 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

22. In a drug trial, defense counsel was not rendered ineffective at the sentencing stage by failing to object to the State's questioning of a defense expert about testing administered to defendant for attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) and about notes taken during an interview of defendant because the information was not a privileged communication under Tex. R. Evid. 503. Under Tex. R. Evid. 705(a), once defendant's witness offered an expert opinion, the State was entitled to examine the witness about the factual underpinning of that opinion. Weinn v. State, 281 S.W.3d 633, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1015 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 12 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

23. In a drug case, the arresting officer's testimony that he was suspicious of defendant's claim that a large amount of cash found on his person was gas money for a road trip did not amount to an expert opinion; hence, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to this testimony or to request an expert opinion hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 705, and counsel's failure to object waived the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Hayes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 746 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 1 2008).

24. Because a police officer's testimony in a cocaine possession case that drug dealers often rented cars in other people's names and that they might accept unemployment checks and credit cards as payment for narcotics did not amount to expert testimony, defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a hearing on expert testimony pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 705. Hayes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 745 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 1 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Right to Counsel : Critical Stage

25. Defendant was not denied his constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel when the trial court made a statement explaining its ruling not allowing counsel to voir dire the expert while counsel was not present because the statement was not made during a critical stage of trial. Even if counsel had been present and clarified that he wanted to voir dire the expert under Rule 705(b), counsel would not have been allowed to voir dire the expert because the State had already conducted its direct examination of the expert. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Cross-Examination

26. Even if the trial court erred by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the sexual assault nurse examiner, the error was harmless because the same or similar testimony was admitted without objection at another point in the trial; before the State's objection, the nurse testified that she accepted the victims' oral history as true, that the notches in one victim's hymen could be consistent with consensual sexual activity, and that there was no way of knowing when the notches happened. Young v. State, 382 S.W.3d 414, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8627, 2012 WL 4874628 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

27. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Requests to Charge

28. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying his requested instruction and the alleged error did not cause the jury to reach an improper judgment, Tex. R. Evid. 705(d); Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). The record reflected that the trial court gave a limiting instruction in response to respondent's request during a psychologist's testimony; additionally, in the jury charge, the court instructed that hearsay information contained in records reviewed by the experts had been admitted only for showing the basis of the experts' opinions. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

29. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in refusing the sex offender's requested instruction addressing the records that were reviewed by expert witnesses who testified during his trial where the proffered instruction was not substantially correct because it required the jury to disregard relevant and admissible evidence in the underlying records. In re Commitment of Bath, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586, 2012 WL 3860631 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

30. Following the entry of defendant's nolo contendere plea to aggravated robbery, the trial court properly considered under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 § 3(a)(1) evidence regarding the murder of defendant's wife at the punishment hearing because the evidence was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant murdered his wife five days before he committed the aggravated robbery offense; further, the medical examiner's hearsay statement that defendant admitted strangling his wife was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 703, and defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Garza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5026, 2009 WL 1424610 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2009).

31. At the punishment stage of defendant's trial for stealing property, the trial court did not err by excluding a doctor's report concerning defendant's personality disorder; the report largely restated the doctor's trial testimony. Edrington v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10637 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 21 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : General Overview

32. Challenge to expert testimony was rejected in a case involving a civil commitment for a sexually violent predator under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.001-841.150, because a forensic psychologist based his testimony on sufficient facts and data and on a reliable method used in his field of expertise for forming an opinion, and he applied that method reliably to the facts in this case. There was no analytical gap in the testimony and no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the testimony. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

33. In a civil commitment case involving a sexually violent predator, a trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts or data used by experts were not unfairly prejudicial and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh the value of the facts or data as explanation or support for expert opinions. The trial court did not err in overruling an objection to alleged cumulative and repetitive testimony regarding a patient's sexual convictions, the details of his non-sexual convictions, juvenile convictions, alleged un-adjudicated crimes, and his disciplinary history while incarcerated; moreover, a limiting instruction was not insufficient. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

34. In a sexually violent predator commitment case, a patient's underlying offenses were properly admitted because a trial court could have reasonably concluded that the facts and details would have been helpful to the jury to explain how an expert formed his opinion that the patient suffered from a behavioral abnormality. Given the purpose of admitting the evidence, its cumulative nature, and the trial court's limiting instructions, the conclusion that the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial was reasonable, and the testimony did not cause the rendition of an improper verdict. In re Commitment of Lemmons, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3888, 2014 WL 1400671 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 10 2014).

35. Trial court did not err during a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony from the offender and the State's expert regarding the details of the offender's prior murder conviction because the offender personally testified as to the details of the conviction and the actions he took after the murder, which was not hearsay, and the State's expert testified to many of the same details that the offender related to the jury. Moreover, the trial court provided the jury with a limiting instruction, which it was presumed the jury followed. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

36. Details of a sex offender's 1975 murder conviction were property admitted during his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding because the State's expert explained the facts he considered in forming his opinions and how those facts affected his evaluation of the offender; the trial judge performed a balancing test and could have reasonably concluded the evidence assisted the jury in weighing the testimony and was not unfairly prejudicial, and it also gave the jury a limiting instruction explaining that the information reviewed by the experts was admitted only for the purpose of showing the basis of the expert's opinion. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

37. In a proceeding to civilly commit a sexually violent predator, it was within the trial court's discretion to admit the underlying facts or data on which the experts based their opinions to aid the jury in understanding how the experts formed their opinions regarding the offender's behavioral abnormality. In re Mitchell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12929, 2013 WL 5658425 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

38. In a proceeding to civilly commit a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not err by allowing the State's experts to disclose various facts and data on which their respective opinions were based. The evidence was admissible under this rule and the jury was given a limiting instruction about the appropriate use of the information. In re Tesson, 413 S.W.3d 514, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12919, 2013 WL 5651804 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

39. Hearsay evidence regarding defendant's prior sexual offenses was admissible in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding, Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.001-.151, because it was relied on by the experts who testified for the State, Tex. R. Evid. 705, and the trial court gave limiting instructions to the jury. In re Hernandez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11787, 2013 WL 5302615 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 19 2013).

40. In a sexually violent predator civil commitment case brought under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a)(2), the trial court did not err in admitting hearsay evidence that was relied on by the State's experts in reaching their opinions, including the information regarding prior offenses, and the images and title logs from the videos found in his home, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. In re Chapman, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11404,

41. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

42. In a case involving civil commitment after a determination that a patient was a sexually violent predator, a trial court did not err by allowing the disclosure of the alleged details of the sexual offenses at issue under Tex. R. Evid. 705(a); moreover, the details were not unfairly prejudicial, the danger of improper use did not outweigh the probative value of the facts or data as explanation or support for expert opinions, and the patient did not object to a limiting instruction that was used. The trial court did not err in overruling the objections, and the rulings did not result in an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Reed, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2493, 2012 WL 1072255 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 29 2012).

43. Trial court acted within its discretion in allowing the experts to discuss the details of the patient's offenses and other bad acts he committed that were contained in the records they reviewed in determining that the patient was a sexually violent predator because having each expert explain which facts were considered and how those facts influenced his evaluation assisted the jury in weighing each expert's testimony and the opinion each offered regarding the ultimate issue in the case. In re Day, 342 S.W.3d 193, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3573 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 12 2011).

44. In a civil commitment proceeding alleging that defendant was a sexually violent predator, defendant did not object, and therefore failed to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705, regarding an expert's testimony about an unauthenticated letter that the Special Prosecution Unit asserted defendant wrote. In re Ortiz, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5731, 2010 WL 2854249 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 22 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

45. In a driving while intoxicated case, where counsel was objecting to the officer's qualifications and not to the underlying facts or data to support the officer's opinion, he was not requesting a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing to explore the underlying facts or data of the expert's opinion. Therefore, his appeal on that point was waived. Waltmon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7285 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 12 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

46. In a murder trial, defendant preserved evidentiary error for review under Tex. R. App. P 33 by objecting following cross-examination to the reliability of expert testimony on the possible impact of methamphetamine on defendant; during the cross-examination, the expert testified to having no idea how much methamphetamine defendant took, to not seeing defendant, to being retained the evening before the testimony, and to testifying hypothetically; thus, under Tex. R. Evid. 705, the complete absence of underlying facts and data for the expert testimony on direct were only made known during cross-examination. Acevedo v. State, 255 S.W.3d 162, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 613 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

47. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

48. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by refusing to allow defense counsel to voir the State's expert outside the presence of the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because counsel's statement that he requested voir dire "under the 700 series" was not enough to alert the trial court that counsel wanted to examine the underlying facts or data upon which the expert based his opinion specifically rather than the expert's qualifications generally. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2013).

49. Defendant's argument on appeal that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) to allow a detective to state an opinion did not comport with his trial objection that the testimony was speculation. Therefore, the error was not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9524, 2010 WL 4901389 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Discovery

50. Even if Tex. R. Evid. 705 authorized the trial court to order the State to disclose the underlying facts and data relied upon by its experts, the order entered in this case went far beyond requiring disclosure of the facts and data as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 703. Therefore, the trial court abused its discretion by entering the discovery order in this case. In re State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5323, 2013 WL 1846680 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

51. Even if the trial court erred by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the sexual assault nurse examiner, the error was harmless because the same or similar testimony was admitted without objection at another point in the trial; before the State's objection, the nurse testified that she accepted the victims' oral history as true, that the notches in one victim's hymen could be consistent with consensual sexual activity, and that there was no way of knowing when the notches happened. Young v. State, 382 S.W.3d 414, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8627, 2012 WL 4874628 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2012).

52. Error in denying voir dire of the State's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) was harmless because the expert was not the only witness to testify on the point at issue, whether the BB gun used in a robbery was a deadly weapon. The unobjected-to testimony of two victims regarding their fear of death or serious bodily injury from having the BB gun pointed at them was sufficient to support the deadly weapon finding. Blackburn v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5598, 2010 WL 2802186 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 16 2010).

53. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's request to conduct a voir dire examination of the State's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 705 as the expert never stated any opinion during his punishment-phase testimony; thus, Tex. R. Evid. 705, which applied only to expert opinions, was inapplicable; frther, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 as the failure to allow a Tex. R. Evid. 705 voir dire examination did not influence the jury or had but slight effect on the jury's punishment verdict. Ghahremani v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8584 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 30 2007).

54. In a trial for sexual assault on a child, any error was harmless when the trial court denied defendant's request under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) to voir dire the State's expert, a psychologist; it was the second time the expert testified against defendant on the same allegations, and defense counsel was provided with the expert's notes from sessions with the complainant; there was no harm in not allowing defendant to discover matters which he already knew. Aguilera v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 340 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 19 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

55. Video of a crash test was not admissible as facts or data underlying the automobile manufacturer's expert's opinion because he expressly disclaimed relying on the video in forming his opinion. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

56. Trial court's admission of an aggravated assault victim's medical records, without an opportunity for defendant to first question the records' author on voir dire, did not violate defendant's rights under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because the language of Rule 705 contained no inference or even a suggestion that its provisions overrode the admissibility of a physician's observations, diagnoses, or opinions properly admitted as a business record. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

57. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

58. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

59. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the hearsay underlying the opinion of defendant's expert witness during the sentencing phase because although the witness could state, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid 705(a), that he had reviewed the jail classification as a basis for his expert testimony, the classification itself remained inadmissible and could not be used as a basis for the jury's determination of defendant's dangerousness in the future. Prystash v. State, 3 S.W.3d 522, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Inferences

60. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

61. At the punishment stage of defendant's trial for stealing property, the trial court did not err by excluding a doctor's report concerning defendant's personality disorder; the report largely restated the doctor's trial testimony. Edrington v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10637 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 21 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

62. In a proceeding to civilly commit a patient as a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the factual details of defendant's crimes; the experts testified regarding the facts they considered in forming their opinions and how those facts affected their determination of whether defendant suffered from a behavioral abnormality. The trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction about the use of the evidence. In re Commitment Jackson, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13507, 2013 WL 5874446 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Hearings Out of Jury's Presence

63. At defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request to conduct a voir dire examination of a forensic interviewer at the children's advocacy center; defendant's objected to the relevance of her testimony, he did not request a hearing outside the jury's presence to explore the underlying facts or data of the expert's opinion. Washington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 933 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2014).

64. During defendant's trial for driving while intoxicated, he waived his complaint regarding the officer's testimony about the horizontal gaze nystagmus field sobriety test by failing to object. Defendant made no request under Tex. R. Evid. 705 to conduct a voir dire examination of the officer prior to his testimony. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2352, 2011 WL 1198922 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2011).

65. Defendant's overruled request for a voir dire of an expert to establish whether the expert's testimony was related to defendant's guilt of the charged offense of indecency with a child failed to preserve his claim on appeal that he was seeking a hearing regarding an expert's underlying facts under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b). Elliff v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9160 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 10 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

66. In a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in which the sex offender challenged the admission of testimony by one of the State's experts regarding the details of the sex offender's convictions, the trial court had not erred in allowing disclosure of the underlying facts or data, and its limiting instruction was insufficient to cure any possible prejudicial effect of the details of the offenses. It could not be concluded that the trial court's overruling of the sex offender's objections was in error or that such error probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Allen, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7583, 2012 WL 3860466 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

67. Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the experts to testify about the non-testifying experts' opinions because the matters were reviewed by the experts to form opinions, the court gave a limiting instruction, and the court could reasonably conclude that the probative value of the testimony outweighed its capacity to prejudice the jury. In re Commitment of Garcia, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14986 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 12 2013).

68. Sex offender failed to show that a trial court erred in his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony by one of the State's experts regarding the details of the sex offender's convictions where the sex offender did not object to the expert's testimony on the basis that the details of the underlying offenses and resulting convictions provided an insufficient basis for the expert's opinion, and, additionally, the details regarding the offenses provided by the expert during her testimony were minimal. The trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts or data were not unfairly prejudicial and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh their value as explanation or support for the expert's opinion. In re Commitment of Allen, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7583, 2012 WL 3860466 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

69. In a sex offender commitment proceeding, the trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts of the patient's convictions, and the fact that he had additional victims, were not unfairly prejudicial, and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh their value as explanation or support for the experts' opinions. Experts testified that the fact that the patient admitted to having victims in addition to those for which he was convicted was relevant to their assessment of whether he had a behavioral abnormality. In re Wilson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6714, 2009 WL 2616921 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 27 2009).

70. In a civil commitment case involving a sexually violent predator, a trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts or data used by experts were not unfairly prejudicial and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh the value of the facts or data as explanation or support for expert opinions. The trial court did not err in overruling an objection to alleged cumulative and repetitive testimony regarding a patient's sexual convictions, the details of his non-sexual convictions, juvenile convictions, alleged un-adjudicated crimes, and his disciplinary history while incarcerated; moreover, a limiting instruction was not insufficient. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

71. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

72. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

73. Trial court acted within its discretion in allowing the experts to discuss the details of the patient's offenses and other bad acts he committed that were contained in the records they reviewed in determining that the patient was a sexually violent predator because having each expert explain which facts were considered and how those facts influenced his evaluation assisted the jury in weighing each expert's testimony and the opinion each offered regarding the ultimate issue in the case. In re Day, 342 S.W.3d 193, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3573 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 12 2011).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

74. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Fingerprints & Footprints

75. Court properly allowed testimony by fingerprint experts where they provided sufficient testimony about their experience to qualify as experts. In addition to the fingerprint evidence, the uncontroverted evidence showed that defendant was in possession of the stolen property nine days after the burglary. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5302 (Tex. App. Dallas July 7 2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Polygraphs

76. Testimony of defendant's therapist, a licensed sex-offender treatment provider, that the polygraph results were one of the factors taken into consideration in his decision to discharge defendant from the treatment program was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705 Cruz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3780, 2012 WL 1660611 (Tex. App. Austin May 10 2012).

77. Because adjudication hearings are administrative proceedings, in which there is no jury and the judge is not determining guilt of the original offense, the results of polygraph exams are admissible in revocation hearings if such evidence qualifies as the basis for an expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(a). Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

78. When defendant pleaded guilty to injury to a child and received five years' deferred adjudication, the conditions of his community supervision under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a) required that he submit to polygraph exams; defendant's polygraph results were admissible in his community supervision revocation hearing. Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) allowed the sex offender therapist who had been treating defendant to say, "I felt he was being dishonest because he failed the mandated polygraphs exams." Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : Cross-Examination : Scope

79. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding by restricting the sex offender's cross-examination of one of the State's expert witnesses where the expert provided an extensive psychological analysis that fully explained the basis for his opinion that the sex offender had a behavioral abnormality that made him likely to commit a predatory act of sexual violence because the offer of proof demonstrated that the expert had a valid explanation for giving more consideration to some data in the records over other, contradictory data. Moreover, at the conclusion of the offer of proof, the trial court advised the sex offender's counsel that counsel would be allowed to ask why the expert had rejected the sex offender's assertion that he had not committed the prior crimes, but counsel chose not to do so. In re Commitment of Hinchey, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7582, 2012 WL 3853186 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

80. During defendant's trial for aggravated assault of a family member, the court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in admitting testimony from a witness as an expert on lethality assessment because she did not offer any specifics to support her assertion, and she did not cite any books, articles, journals, or other clinical social workers who practiced in the area; the State did not show that "lethality assessment" was a legitimate field of expertise. Petriciolet v. State, 442 S.W.3d 643, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 31 2014).

81. Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the experts to testify about the non-testifying experts' opinions because the matters were reviewed by the experts to form opinions, the court gave a limiting instruction, and the court could reasonably conclude that the probative value of the testimony outweighed its capacity to prejudice the jury. In re Commitment of Garcia, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14986 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 12 2013).

82. Civil commitment as a sexually violent predator was proper, because the court gave the jury a limiting instruction explaining that the information contained in the records reviewed by the experts was admitted only for the purpose of showing the basis of the expert's opinion, and properly allowed the expert witnesses to testify to the underlying facts and details of the offenses and properly precluded the petitioner from introducing evidence that involved a collateral attack on the attempted-sexual-assault convictions. In re McCarty, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7855 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2013).

83. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by refusing to allow defense counsel to voir the State's expert outside the presence of the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because counsel's statement that he requested voir dire "under the 700 series" was not enough to alert the trial court that counsel wanted to examine the underlying facts or data upon which the expert based his opinion specifically rather than the expert's qualifications generally. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2013).

84. Defendant was not denied his constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel when the trial court made a statement explaining its ruling not allowing counsel to voir dire the expert while counsel was not present because the statement was not made during a critical stage of trial. Even if counsel had been present and clarified that he wanted to voir dire the expert under Rule 705(b), counsel would not have been allowed to voir dire the expert because the State had already conducted its direct examination of the expert. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5108 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2013).

85. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in refusing the sex offender's requested instruction addressing the records that were reviewed by expert witnesses who testified during his trial where the proffered instruction was not substantially correct because it required the jury to disregard relevant and admissible evidence in the underlying records. In re Commitment of Bath, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586, 2012 WL 3860631 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

86. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding by restricting the sex offender's cross-examination of one of the State's expert witnesses where the expert provided an extensive psychological analysis that fully explained the basis for his opinion that the sex offender had a behavioral abnormality that made him likely to commit a predatory act of sexual violence because the offer of proof demonstrated that the expert had a valid explanation for giving more consideration to some data in the records over other, contradictory data. Moreover, at the conclusion of the offer of proof, the trial court advised the sex offender's counsel that counsel would be allowed to ask why the expert had rejected the sex offender's assertion that he had not committed the prior crimes, but counsel chose not to do so. In re Commitment of Hinchey, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7582, 2012 WL 3853186 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

87. Because adjudication hearings are administrative proceedings, in which there is no jury and the judge is not determining guilt of the original offense, the results of polygraph exams are admissible in revocation hearings if such evidence qualifies as the basis for an expert opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(a). Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

88. Doctor testified that it was customary in her profession to rely on hospital records, including test results, to form a diagnosis, and this was not challenged, such that the doctor was entitled under Tex. R. Evid. 703 to rely on the results of laboratory testing for genital herpes in diagnosing the victim's condition; furthermore, the doctor also relied on her own experience, education, and training in reaching this diagnosis, which rendered her opinion reliable, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the doctor to testify that the victim suffered from herpes and to testify regarding the basis of the diagnosis, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(a). Cozzens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9336, 2010 WL 4813686 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 24 2010).

89. Underlying facts and data upon which a doctor based her opinion provided a sufficient basis for that opinion under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) and the State carried its burden to establish some foundation for the reliability of the doctor's opinion. Cozzens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9336, 2010 WL 4813686 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 24 2010).

90. Trial court never denied appellant's request for a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing on the record, nor did the trial court limit the scope of this hearing, and if the trial court impermissibly limited the hearing's scope, it was appellant's duty to bring the issue to trial court's attention; the issue was not preserved. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

91. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(d), facts and data in an autopsy report explained and supported a medical examiner's opinions only if those facts and that data were deemed true; the disclosure of the out-of-court testimonial statements underlying the examiner's opinions, even if offered only for the purpose of explaining and supporting those opinions, constituted the use of testimonial statements to prove the truth of the matters asserted in violation of the Confrontation Clause. Martinez v. State, 311 S.W.3d 104, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2124 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 24 2010), pet. ref'd.

92. None of certain testimony was in violation of the Confrontation Clause because it constituted the opinions of the expert witness who was on the stand and subject to cross-examination, and although the witness told the jury that the medical examiner found the cause of death to be asphyxiation, the examiner's opinion was cumulative of other properly admitted evidence and thus harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); nothing in the expert's testimony refuted the defensive theory, the only testimonial hearsay evidence that was admitted that was not cumulative or irrelevant actually favored defendant, and the significant evidence was admitted that would corroborate the capital murder, even without considering the inadmissible testimony, was strong. Martinez v. State, 311 S.W.3d 104, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2124 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 24 2010), pet. ref'd.

93. In a city resident's action against a mayor challenging a special election, expert testimony offered by the resident was not conclusory because the expert testified regarding the facts supporting the expert's opinion and explained how the expert reached that opinion; the expert stated that through discussions and correspondence with the resident and counsel, the expert had become familiar with the issues in the lawsuit, the three propositions involved, and the violations alleged. Duncan-hubert v. Mitchell, 310 S.W.3d 92, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1889 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 18 2010).

94. While it was proper to require an expert to disclose the facts or data underlying her opinion so that the trial court could determine if the data provided a basis for the opinion and was admissible, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705, there was no general right by the State for pretrial discovery from the defendant; the court's opinion did not expressly or implicitly interpret Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 39.14 as requiring pretrial discovery of medical reports, records, and other such documentation, as the issue of the State's right to discovery was not presented on appeal, and the court rejected defendant's claim that the civil procedure rules provided any basis for finding that the trial court erred. Hoselton v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2009 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 18 2010).

95. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a witness to give an opinion regarding the fingerprints, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702, given that the State contended that it established the witness's qualifications by the testimony of the witness's training and experience, plus the court only had a general objection to consider, even though defendant could have requested to take the witness on voir dire and pointed out specific deficiencies, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(b). Sepeda v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9235, 2009 WL 4348600 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 30 2009).

96. Although a witness said that she reviewed a document prior to trial, there was no evidence of specifically when she reviewed it or whether she used it to refresh her memory under Tex. R. Evid. 612 and defense counsel did not ask if the witness relied on the evidence to form her opinions under Tex. R. Evid. 705, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defense counsel's request for the document or in failing to require the State to produce the document for in camera inspection. Love v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8952, 2009 WL 3930900 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 19 2009).

97. Appellant maintained that a limiting instruction was insufficient to cure the error of allowing an expert witness to read inflammatory, cumulative, and unnecessary hearsay statements to the jury; however, even though appellant objected to the hearsay, he failed to object to the limiting instruction, and he failed to request a different or additional instruction. In re Yaw, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9023 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 4 2008).

98. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

99. In a patient's action that raised health care liability claims against a doctor based on the patient's allegation that her left eye was permanently impaired as a result of a surgery performed by the doctor, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the report prepared by the patient's expert, a board certified ophthalmologist, complied with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 where the expert's report informed the doctor of the specific conduct that the patient had called into question and provided a basis for the trial court to conclude the claims were meritorious. Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705 allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, which was what the expert had done, and, moreover, the expert's report did not merely state his opinions and inferences because he explained the basis for his conclusions and linked them to the facts. Diaz-Rohena v. Melton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

100. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's request to conduct a voir dire examination of the State's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 705 as the expert never stated any opinion during his punishment-phase testimony; thus, Tex. R. Evid. 705, which applied only to expert opinions, was inapplicable; frther, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 as the failure to allow a Tex. R. Evid. 705 voir dire examination did not influence the jury or had but slight effect on the jury's punishment verdict. Ghahremani v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8584 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 30 2007).

101. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a Tex. R. Evid. 705 hearing concerning a special agent's testimony because the trial court properly admitted the agent's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 701; the State presented the agent as a lay witness to testify about the pimp subculture and to address the issue of cause, as placed into issue by defendant's cross-examination of the complainant; the questions contemplated drew directly from the agent's personal experience and familiarity with the pimping subculture, including its terms, many of which the complainant had used in her testimony, which the agent gained from interviewing both pimps and prostitutes; questioning the agent about what he learned from his experience assisted the fact-finder in determining a fact in issue, specifically defendant's utilizing the complainant as a prostitute for his personal profit. Richardson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4281 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 31 2007).

102. In the punishment phase of a trial for indecency with a child, the trial court did not unduly limit the testimony of defendant's psychological expert; following a hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 705, the trial court admitted all of the testimony that the court understood the witness to have given and defendant did not indicate that he re-urged the matter to the trial court with evidence that would contradict the court's recollection of the witness's testimony. Jimenez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6538 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

103. The State properly cross-examined the sexually violent predator's expert witness regarding prior statements made by one of the individual's victims because, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705(a), the State was entitled to cross-examine the doctor concerning records that he cited as the basis of his opinion and to attempt to use the records to discredit his testimony. In re Polk, 187 S.W.3d 550, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2044 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

104. Although the husband claimed that expert testimony should have been excluded because it contained improper character evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), the husband opened the door during direct examination, and because the witness was offered as an expert witness, the wife was permitted, under Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) to disclose the underlying facts the witness used to form an opinion regarding the husband. Moyer v. Moyer, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6966 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2005).

105. Will contestants' objection to an expert's testimony was untimely under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and hence, the issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); however, the court noted that the contestants' request to voir dire the witness to delve into the expert's qualifications did not invoke Tex. R. Evid. 705(b), which pertained to inquiry into the underlying facts or data and was discretionary in any event. In re Estate of Trawick, 170 S.W.3d 871, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6568 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

106. Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) clearly makes certain voir dire on underlying facts or data discretionary in a civil case; the use of the word "may" creates discretionary authority in the trial court, pursuant to Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 311.016(1). In re Estate of Trawick, 170 S.W.3d 871, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6568 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

107. Because an expert's opinion constituted no more than mere possibility, speculation, and surmise, the trial court properly struck the expert's report, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 702, 705. Emmett Props. v. Halliburton Energy Servs., 167 S.W.3d 365, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1624 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

108. Trial court did not err in granting a bar's motion to strike plaintiffs' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in their dram shop case against the bar because the expert had no actual blood alcohol level of the drunk driver from which to extrapolate, which made his methodology admittedly less reliable. Furthermore, the expert based his calculations on facts not in evidence and on assumptions that were contrary to facts. Alaniz v. Rebello Food & Bev., L.L.C., 165 S.W.3d 7, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

109. In a pipeline company's action for negligent damage to a gasoline pipeline, causation was not shown as to claims against developers regarding the platting of the lot because there was no evidence of where digging would have occurred if the lot had been configured differently. An expert witness' assumption that digging would have occurred in a different place was not a reasonable inference from the evidence and did not constitute competent summary judgment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705(c). Seaway Prods. Pipeline Co. v. Hanley, 153 S.W.3d 643, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

110. Because an expert had no actual blood alcohol level from which to extrapolate, the expert's methodology was admittedly less reliable, and the expert also based calculations on facts not in evidence and on assumptions contrary to the facts; thus, the trial court did not err in excluding the expert's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705 in connection with appellants' action under Tex. Alco. Bev. Code Ann. § 2.02(b)(1), (2) of the Dram Shop Act, Tex. Alco. Bev. Code Ann. §§ 2.01-.03, and the court did not consider the expert's evidence in its summary judgment analysis under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a. Alaniz v. Rebello Food & Bev., L.L.C., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8392 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 21 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 165 S.W.3d 7, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

111. When an expert testifies about the facts or data relied upon to formulate the opinion or inference, and that information is inadmissible, the opponent should request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Depena v. State, 148 S.W.3d 461, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7455 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

112. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that a workplace safety expert did not have a reasonable basis for any of his opinions with respect to the legal duties owed by the hospital and how those duties were breached. Moore v. Mem'l Hermann Hosp. Sys., 140 S.W.3d 870, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6067 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

113. When offered evidence is the testimony of an expert witness, the court must apply the principles set forth in the rules governing expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702-705; a two-part test governs whether expert testimony is admissible: (1) the expert must be qualified and (2) the testimony must be relevant and based on a reliable foundation. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

114. Where the defendant's request was not timely or relevant and was concerned with the expert's qualifications, rather than the underlying facts and data, the request was properly denied by the trial court, since Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) authorizes a voir dire examination of an expert witness on the underlying facts or data upon which the expert opinion is based, not the expert's qualifications. Finley v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7959 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 7 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

115. Admission of testimony was not an abuse of discretion and did not cause the rendition of an improper judgment, because the court could reasonably conclude that the facts and details related to the patient's underlying offenses would be helpful to the jury to explain how the psychologist and medical doctor formed their opinions that the patient suffered from a behavioral abnormality. In re Commitment of Cardenas, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6441, 2014 WL 2616972 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2014).

116. In a sexually violent predator commitment case, a patient's underlying offenses were properly admitted because a trial court could have reasonably concluded that the facts and details would have been helpful to the jury to explain how an expert formed his opinion that the patient suffered from a behavioral abnormality. Given the purpose of admitting the evidence, its cumulative nature, and the trial court's limiting instructions, the conclusion that the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial was reasonable, and the testimony did not cause the rendition of an improper verdict. In re Commitment of Lemmons, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3888, 2014 WL 1400671 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 10 2014).

117. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

118. Trial court did not err in overruling objections to the admission of prior offenses evidence because it could have reasonably concluded that the evidence was admissible and would not be unfairly prejudicial given the purpose for admitting the evidence and the limiting instructions to the jury; the trial court could have found that the disclosure of the details of the offenses would be helpful to the jury to understand how the State's expert formed his opinion and the basis for that opinion. In re King, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2014 WL 346109 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 23 2014).

119. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an expert's testimony regarding his estimate of the cost of an exploration permit, as he was an oil and gas executive with decades of experience, his opinion fell within his area of expertise, he took into consideration the lack of shale gas and overall size of the tract in formulating his estimate, and he was not unqualified merely because his opinion might be characterized as "subjective." Harkins v. North Shore Energy, L.L.C., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14929, 2013 WL 6574245 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 12 2013).

120. In a proceeding to civilly commit a patient as a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the factual details of defendant's crimes; the experts testified regarding the facts they considered in forming their opinions and how those facts affected their determination of whether defendant suffered from a behavioral abnormality. The trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction about the use of the evidence. In re Commitment Jackson, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13507, 2013 WL 5874446 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

121. Trial court did not err during a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony from the offender and the State's expert regarding the details of the offender's prior murder conviction because the offender personally testified as to the details of the conviction and the actions he took after the murder, which was not hearsay, and the State's expert testified to many of the same details that the offender related to the jury. Moreover, the trial court provided the jury with a limiting instruction, which it was presumed the jury followed. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

122. Details of a sex offender's 1975 murder conviction were property admitted during his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding because the State's expert explained the facts he considered in forming his opinions and how those facts affected his evaluation of the offender; the trial judge performed a balancing test and could have reasonably concluded the evidence assisted the jury in weighing the testimony and was not unfairly prejudicial, and it also gave the jury a limiting instruction explaining that the information reviewed by the experts was admitted only for the purpose of showing the basis of the expert's opinion. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

123. Expert testimony that an injured worker probably would have been promoted to a highly paid directional driller position was based on speculation and conjecture, given his limited experience in oil drilling and the cyclic nature of the industry; moreover, the erroneous admission of the experts' testimony was harmful because lost earning capacity was an integral part of the case. Chesapeake Operating, Inc. v. Hopel, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13281, 2013 WL 5782916 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 24 2013).

124. In a proceeding to civilly commit a sexually violent predator, it was within the trial court's discretion to admit the underlying facts or data on which the experts based their opinions to aid the jury in understanding how the experts formed their opinions regarding the offender's behavioral abnormality. In re Mitchell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12929, 2013 WL 5658425 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

125. In a proceeding to civilly commit a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not err by allowing the State's experts to disclose various facts and data on which their respective opinions were based. The evidence was admissible under this rule and the jury was given a limiting instruction about the appropriate use of the information. In re Tesson, 413 S.W.3d 514, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12919, 2013 WL 5651804 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

126. Trial court afforded defendant the opportunity to take the forensic technician on voir dire before admitting her testimony or allowing her to present evidence. Halbirt v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12823, 2013 WL 5658371 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 16 2013).

127. Hearsay evidence regarding defendant's prior sexual offenses was admissible in a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding, Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.001-.151, because it was relied on by the experts who testified for the State, Tex. R. Evid. 705, and the trial court gave limiting instructions to the jury. In re Hernandez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11787, 2013 WL 5302615 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 19 2013).

128. In a sexually violent predator civil commitment case brought under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a)(2), the trial court did not err in admitting hearsay evidence that was relied on by the State's experts in reaching their opinions, including the information regarding prior offenses, and the images and title logs from the videos found in his home, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. In re Chapman, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11404, 2013 WL 4773231 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 5 2013).

129. Where defendant was convicted of possession of one to four grams of a controlled substance based on methamphetamine found in the car during a traffic stop, an expert's opinion that the sergeant's failure to follow police procedure suggested that the drugs were planted in the car was inadmissible. Because the expert did not explain why the sergeant's acts were suspicious or why they led to the conclusion that the drugs were planted, there was not a sufficient basis for an expert opinion. Nickols v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11241 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 30 2013).

130. Patient did not object to the trial court's limiting instructions, nor did he request different or additional instructions at the time the limiting instructions were given, and he did not object to the limiting instruction contained in the jury charge; the trial court properly applied Tex. R. Evid. 705(d) by providing the jury with limiting instructions In re Washington, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7211 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 13 2013).

131. In a sexually violent predator case, the trial court properly admitted details about appellant's prior sexual offenses. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that the evidence at issue would be helpful to the jury to explain how the State's experts had formed their respective opinions regarding appellant's behavioral abnormality. In re Camarillo, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7212, 2013 WL 2732662 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 13 2013).

132. Trial court properly applied Tex. R. Evid. 705(d) by providing the jury with a limiting instruction and given the purpose for which the evidence was admitted, the trial judge could have concluded that the information the State's expert disclosed concerning the patient's prior sexual offenses was not unfairly prejudicial. In re Commitment Simmons, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6319, 2013 WL 2285865 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 23 2013).

133. State's expert witness had sufficient facts and data with which to form his opinion that defendant was malingering and displayed elements of competency because he interviewed defendant twice, collected information from numerous collateral sources, and explained how each additional piece of evidence fit into his assessment. Miears v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5960 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 15 2013).

134. Under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d), the trial judge could conclude that the experts' evidence assisted the jury and was not unfairly prejudicial and the appellate court presumed that the jury followed the trial court's limiting instruction. In re Adame, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4847, 2013 WL 3853386 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2013).

135. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying his requested instruction and the alleged error did not cause the jury to reach an improper judgment, Tex. R. Evid. 705(d); Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). The record reflected that the trial court gave a limiting instruction in response to respondent's request during a psychologist's testimony; additionally, in the jury charge, the court instructed that hearsay information contained in records reviewed by the experts had been admitted only for showing the basis of the experts' opinions. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

136. Defendant's commitment as a sexually violent predator was appropriate because the jury could have reasonably found beyond a reasonable doubt that he had a behavioral abnormality that made him likely to engage in a predatory act of sexual violence. Further, each expert explained the facts considered and how those facts affected that expert's evaluation; the evidence assisted the jury in weighing the testimony and the opinion each expert offered and the trial judge could have reasonably concluded that the experts' testimony was not unfairly prejudicial. In re Anderson, 392 S.W.3d 878, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

137. In a manslaughter case, defendant's attorney argued that a toxicology report was admissible because the State's expert pathologist relied on it in formulating his opinion about whether the gunshot wound to defendant's chest had caused his death; although the attorney did not reference Tex. R. Evid. 705, the trial court would have understood that her counsel intended to reference Rule 705. The trial court ruled that it would allow the expert to say that he had relied on the toxicology report, but would not allow the expert to testify regarding the results of the report. Jones v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9752 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 28 2012).

138. Sex offender failed to show that a trial court erred in his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony by one of the State's experts regarding the details of the sex offender's convictions where the sex offender did not object to the expert's testimony on the basis that the details of the underlying offenses and resulting convictions provided an insufficient basis for the expert's opinion, and, additionally, the details regarding the offenses provided by the expert during her testimony were minimal. The trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts or data were not unfairly prejudicial and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh their value as explanation or support for the expert's opinion. In re Commitment of Allen, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7583, 2012 WL 3860466 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

139. In a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in which the sex offender challenged the admission of testimony by one of the State's experts regarding the details of the sex offender's convictions, the trial court had not erred in allowing disclosure of the underlying facts or data, and its limiting instruction was insufficient to cure any possible prejudicial effect of the details of the offenses. It could not be concluded that the trial court's overruling of the sex offender's objections was in error or that such error probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Allen, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7583, 2012 WL 3860466 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

140. Testimony of defendant's therapist, a licensed sex-offender treatment provider, that the polygraph results were one of the factors taken into consideration in his decision to discharge defendant from the treatment program was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 703 and 705 Cruz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3780, 2012 WL 1660611 (Tex. App. Austin May 10 2012).

141. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

142. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in admitting the testimony of the director of a trauma center, who was trained as a clinical psychologist with specialization in psychological trauma, because all of the opinions offered by the director were within the scope of the field of psychology, a legitimate field of study. Jessop v. State, 368 S.W.3d 653, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3176, 2012 WL 1402117 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2012).

143. In a case involving civil commitment after a determination that a patient was a sexually violent predator, a trial court did not err by allowing the disclosure of the alleged details of the sexual offenses at issue under Tex. R. Evid. 705(a); moreover, the details were not unfairly prejudicial, the danger of improper use did not outweigh the probative value of the facts or data as explanation or support for expert opinions, and the patient did not object to a limiting instruction that was used. The trial court did not err in overruling the objections, and the rulings did not result in an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Reed, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2493, 2012 WL 1072255 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 29 2012).

144. Appellant objected to a witness's testimony under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), suggesting a relevancy complaint, but he did not object on expert qualification or reliability grounds or on Tex. R. Evid. 403 grounds; thus, the only issue preserved for review was the claim that the witness's testimony was inadmissible because it was not linked to appellant. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

145. Appellant objected to a doctor's testimony, challenging his qualifications and claiming his testimony was irrelevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), but an objection to the reliability of the doctor's opinion was not raised in the trial court; thus, his reliability complaint was not preserved for review. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

146. When defendant pleaded guilty to injury to a child and received five years' deferred adjudication, the conditions of his community supervision under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a) required that he submit to polygraph exams; defendant's polygraph results were admissible in his community supervision revocation hearing. Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) allowed the sex offender therapist who had been treating defendant to say, "I felt he was being dishonest because he failed the mandated polygraphs exams." Leonard v. State, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. Crim. App. Mar. 7 2012).

147. In a condemnation proceeding in which plaintiff county acquired a portion of commercial property used for a car wash in order to widen a county roadway, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the county's appraisal expert because the expert's bald assurance that he used a widely accepted appraisal method was insufficient to establish reliability. His report, as well as the underlying data and methodology, did not reflect application of an accepted appraisal method to arrive at the fair market value of the remainder after the taking where he simply took the market value of the whole and assumed--without any basis--that a willing buyer and willing seller would agree to reduce the market value by one-fifth after the taking. Dallas County v. Crestview

Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1269 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

148. During a murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the reading of the statements upon which the medical examiner formed her opinion as to the cause of the victim's death. Although the statements were prejudicial, disclosing the statements the medical examiner relied upon in forming her opinion assisted the jury in evaluating the weight to give her opinions; therefore, the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. Moulton v. State, 360 S.W.3d 540, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8266 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 19 2011).

149. Video of a crash test was not admissible as facts or data underlying the automobile manufacturer's expert's opinion because he expressly disclaimed relying on the video in forming his opinion. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

150. Appellant's counsel conceded that witnesses were not testifying as experts, such that appellant's issues related to the admissibility of these witnesses' testimony as experts, under Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703, 705(b), were moot. Zuffante v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2332 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2011).

151. Nowhere did the court see an objection to the reliability or relevance of the witness's testimony and the context did not suggest that appellant objected on either of these grounds, for preservation purposes; it might have been apparent from the context that appellant objection on qualifications grounds, but he did not argue this on appeal. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

152. Appellant never objected to the reliability of a witness's testimony, such that the State was not required to prove the reliability of the testimony, nor was the court required to hold the State to its burden of proof. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

153. Implied objection based on a witness's qualifications did not preserve error related to the reliability of the witness's testimony or the court's alleged failure to hold a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

154. State did not carry its burden to establish some foundation for the reliability of a sexual assault nurse examiner's opinion because she could not elaborate on the extent to which the underlying scientific theory and technique were accepted as valid by the relevant scientific community; she could make only vague references to literature supporting her underlying scientific theory and technique; and she did not appear to understand the concept of the potential rate of error of the technique; thus, the trial court erred by allowing into evidence her opinion that the quick dilation of the child victim's anus was consistent with sexual abuse, but, in light of the child victim's testimony, her mother's testimony about the victim's outcry, a licensed psychologist's testimony, and the nurse's testimony about the tear close to the child's anus, the jury could have convicted defendant without the objectionable portion of the nurse's testimony. Therefore, the error did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Escamilla v. State, 334 S.W.3d 263, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8227 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 13 2010).

155. Admission of the child support officer's testimony to explain the basis of her opinion for retroactive child support was not unfairly prejudicial, because other admissible testimony, consisting of the father's testimony about his income, supported the figure the trial court used to calculate the father's child support obligation. In re J.A.J., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2930 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 22 2010).

156. Patient failed to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his requested jury instruction, because the record reflected that the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the hearsay complaint that was lodged by the patient during the expert's testimony, and the jury charge instructed that hearsay from records reviewed by the experts had been admitted only to show the basis of the expert's opinion, and in closing argument, the trial court allowed the patient's attorney to further explain how the jury should use hearsay in records that were reviewed by the State's experts. In re Commitment of Moore, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 381, 2009 WL 5448789 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 21 2010).

157. Corporation failed to explain which of an expert's particular statements violated the standards of scientific reliability as set forth in case law and cited evidentiary rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 702, 703, 705, plus the corporation failed to provide the court with any citations to the record to support this portion of its argument, which was waived. SCTW Health Care Ctr., Inc. v. AAR Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8071, 2009 WL 3321399 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2009).

158. In a sex offender commitment proceeding, the trial court acted within its discretion in concluding that the underlying facts of the patient's convictions, and the fact that he had additional victims, were not unfairly prejudicial, and that the danger of improper use did not outweigh their value as explanation or support for the experts' opinions. Experts testified that the fact that the patient admitted to having victims in addition to those for which he was convicted was relevant to their assessment of whether he had a behavioral abnormality. In re Wilson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6714, 2009 WL 2616921 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 27 2009).

159. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of fourteen in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the rebuttal testimony of the State's expert who testified that the complainant's "normal" behavior would not necessarily negate sexual abuse; the testimony was reliable under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) because it was within the scope of the expert's field of expertise and because the expert properly relied upon the principles involved in his field of expertise which related to the behavior and treatment of child victims of sexual abuse. Briones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2009 WL 2356626 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 30 2009).

160. Challenge to expert testimony was rejected in a case involving a civil commitment for a sexually violent predator under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.001-841.150, because a forensic psychologist based his testimony on sufficient facts and data and on a reliable method used in his field of expertise for forming an opinion, and he applied that method reliably to the facts in this case. There was no analytical gap in the testimony and no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the testimony. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

161. Trial court did not err by allowing the State's expert to testify even though the State did not furnish defendant with any specific facts or data on which the expert would rely in her testimony because the expert did not testify as to any of defendant's medical records but only discussed the general medical implications of a radical prostatectomy and the trial court found that the State had substantially complied with the discovery order by furnishing defendant with a ranger's investigative report of the alleged crime. Gentry v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9404 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 18 2008).

162. Defendant's overruled request for a voir dire of an expert to establish whether the expert's testimony was related to defendant's guilt of the charged offense of indecency with a child failed to preserve his claim on appeal that he was seeking a hearing regarding an expert's underlying facts under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b). Elliff v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9160 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 10 2008).

163. From a sexually violent predator commitment hearing, an expert's testimony that determining whether the patient chose his victims as part of a revenge motive or whether they were strangers was important in assessing the risk that he would reoffend was properly admitted as it helped the jury in evaluating the weight of the expert's opinions; and in light of the limiting instructions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements. Even if it was error to admit the testimony, such error was not reasonably calculated to cause and probably did not cause rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Salazar, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8856 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 26 2008).

164. Defendant argued that a deputy's employment of the horizontal gaze nystagmus test was not reliable for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and the testimony was not only not helpful to the jury, but was misleading and unfairly prejudicial, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 402, 403, 702, but defendant's objection, which referred broadly to the deputy's administration of the test, was not specific enough to have informed the trial court of the basis of the argument defendant now raised on appeal so as to have afforded the trial court the opportunity to rule on it, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, defendant waived error, if any. Gowin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6873 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 17 2008).

165. In defendant's sexual assault case, the court did not err by denying a hearing on expert testimony because the underlying facts and data supporting the expert's opinion -- her education, training, and experience, years of clinical treatment of victims of family sexual abuse, and knowledge of Hispanic culture -- were not inadmissible. Merlos v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6514 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26, 2008).

166. Trial court was required to exclude defendant's statements to a detective unless the value of the statements as an explanation or support for the detective's expert opinion outweighed the danger that defendant's statements would be used for a purpose other than as an explanation of or support for the opinion, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(d); presuming that a citation to nothing more specific than "Chapter 6" was sufficient to meet the briefing requirements of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), the court did not agree that defendant's statements had any value to impeach the detective, and defendant admitted that the value of the statements was not as an explanation or support for the detective's opinion, but rather as substantive evidence to advance his own self-defense claim, a purpose Rule 705(d) aimed to prevent, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by ruling defendant's hearsay statements inadmissible under Rule 705 or as impeachment evidence. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

167. In a drug case, the arresting officer's testimony that he was suspicious of defendant's claim that a large amount of cash found on his person was gas money for a road trip did not amount to an expert opinion; hence, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to this testimony or to request an expert opinion hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 705, and counsel's failure to object waived the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Hayes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 746 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 1 2008).

168. Because a police officer's testimony in a cocaine possession case that drug dealers often rented cars in other people's names and that they might accept unemployment checks and credit cards as payment for narcotics did not amount to expert testimony, defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a hearing on expert testimony pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 705. Hayes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 745 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 1 2008).

169. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed expert testimony by a nurse concerning her finding no trauma to the child's genitals in her examination because she was qualified by her knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education as an expert witness in the field of child sexual abuse; she testified that she relied on a study in reaching her opinion, and therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the nurse to testify about the results of the study. Archer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6612 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 17 2007).

170. In permitting counsel to conduct a voir dire examination of a psychologist regarding his familiarity with the sexually violent predator commitment statutes, the trial court complied with Tex. R. Evid. 705 by providing an opportunity to test the reliability of the psychologist's opinion testimony without the jury being present. In re Zamora, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5852 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2007).

171. Trial court properly sustained the objection to the admission of a chemist report prepared by the expert's employee and relied upon by the expert, but the trial court properly admitted the expert's testimony because it was not hearsay and was not required to be based on personal knowledge; even if the expert's testimony did improperly reveal underlying facts or data that were inadmissible, for which Tex. R. Evid. 705 would have required the trial court to give a limiting instruction upon request, no such instruction was requested and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the expert's testimony. Collins v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6116 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

172. Doctors testified that interviews with defendant's family members were important in the assessment of defendant and whether she had Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy, and most of defendant's father-in-law's statements directly supported the doctor's opinions, and disclosing this information assisted the jury; the risk of admitting the statements for prejudice purposes did not outweigh the statements' value, and thus the father-in-law's interview summary was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705, even if it was otherwise inadmissible; even if the evidence was improperly admitted, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given the evidence supporting the verdict of felony injury to a child and the small role the statements played in the trial, and given the other stronger evidence that was admitted, the court did not find that the statements caused the jury to recommend a greater sentence than it would have otherwise. Austin v. State, 222 S.W.3d 801, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2739 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

173. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

174. Court did not err in admitting a utility company's expert testimony as to the market value of the condemned property in which he did not factor in the improvements that were over 4000 feet from the power lines in assessing damages because, inter alia, the landowners' own expert relied upon several articles that specifically stated the negative impact of power lines to a property diminished with increased distance and disappeared beyond 500 feet. Utley v. LCRA Transmission Servs. Corp., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9129 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 25 2006).

175. Equipment maintenance company's no-evidence motion for summary judgment was properly granted pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a on the TrackMobile equipment operator's negligence clam because the operator failed to present the required expert testimony about the proper inspection and maintenance of the TrackMobile and if the company's conduct met that standard of care; expert testimony was required as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705 because a maintenance company's practices and procedures and industry standards with respect to the inspection and maintenance of a TrackMobile or other rail-car mover engine were not matters within a lay person's general knowledge. Simmons v. Briggs Equip. Trust, 221 S.W.3d 109, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5647 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

176. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a clinical supervisor at the Dallas Children's Advocacy Center as expert testimony because she was qualified as she had a bachelor's degree in psychology, a master's degree in counseling and development, and had been licensed in Texas as a professional counselor for over seven years, and she was familiar with, and kept current on, the literature and research in the field of child sexual abuse; and her testimony was specialized and scientific and would assist the jury to understand the evidence or to determine the facts at issue as she testified regarding delayed outcry and the wide range of symptoms and behavioral changes in children who had been abused. Cabrera v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7033 (Tex. App. Dallas June 27 2014).

177. At defendant's trial for causing serious bodily injury to a child, the trial court did not violate her right to confront witnesses when it allowed a doctor to testify as a substitute witness for the pathologist who performed the autopsy on the victim; the doctor used the autopsy report to explain the basis for her opinion. The doctor's independent evaluation of the evidence collected during the autopsy did not violate the Confrontation Clause. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3020, 2014 WL 1102004 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 19 2014).

178. At defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request to conduct a voir dire examination of a forensic interviewer at the children's advocacy center; defendant's objected to the relevance of her testimony, he did not request a hearing outside the jury's presence to explore the underlying facts or data of the expert's opinion. Washington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 933 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2014).

179. Where defendant was convicted of possession of one to four grams of a controlled substance based on methamphetamine found in the car during a traffic stop, an expert's opinion that the sergeant's failure to follow police procedure suggested that the drugs were planted in the car was inadmissible. Because the expert did not explain why the sergeant's acts were suspicious or why they led to the conclusion that the drugs were planted, there was not a sufficient basis for an expert opinion. Nickols v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11241 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 30 2013).

180. Trial court's admission of an aggravated assault victim's medical records, without an opportunity for defendant to first question the records' author on voir dire, did not violate defendant's rights under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because the language of Rule 705 contained no inference or even a suggestion that its provisions overrode the admissibility of a physician's observations, diagnoses, or opinions properly admitted as a business record. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

181. During a murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the reading of the statements upon which the medical examiner formed her opinion as to the cause of the victim's death. Although the statements were prejudicial, disclosing the statements the medical examiner relied upon in forming her opinion assisted the jury in evaluating the weight to give her opinions; therefore, the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705. Moulton v. State, 360 S.W.3d 540, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8266 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 19 2011).

182. During defendant's trial for driving while intoxicated, he waived his complaint regarding the officer's testimony about the horizontal gaze nystagmus field sobriety test by failing to object. Defendant made no request under Tex. R. Evid. 705 to conduct a voir dire examination of the officer prior to his testimony. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2352, 2011 WL 1198922 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2011).

183. Defendant's request to voir the State's expert was timely under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) with regard to a receipt for a BB gun purchased for testing; although the exhibit itself had already been admitted into evidence, neither the exhibit nor the specifics from the exhibit had been published to the jury when defendant objected to the exhibit. Blackburn v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5598, 2010 WL 2802186 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 16 2010).

184. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon by admitting expert testimony regarding gang activity where the expert's testimony in the Tex. R. Evid. 705 hearing described his years of professional experience and training, and he testified that his opinion that defendant is or was a gang member was based on his experience with gangs, defendant's admissions to unknown contact officers, photographs of defendant, and defendant's tattoo. In light of the evidence at the time of the Tex. R. Evid. 702 ruling, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the expert was qualified to testify as an expert, and it therefore could not be concluded that the evidence that defendant was or is a gang member affected the jury in an irrational way. Burleson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3250 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 29 2010).

185. Following the entry of defendant's nolo contendere plea to aggravated robbery, the trial court properly considered under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 § 3(a)(1) evidence regarding the murder of defendant's wife at the punishment hearing because the evidence was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant murdered his wife five days before he committed the aggravated robbery offense; further, the medical examiner's hearsay statement that defendant admitted strangling his wife was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 703, and defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 705(d). Garza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5026, 2009 WL 1424610 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2009).

186. In defendant's sexual assault case, the court did not err by denying a hearing on expert testimony because the underlying facts and data supporting the expert's opinion -- her education, training, and experience, years of clinical treatment of victims of family sexual abuse, and knowledge of Hispanic culture -- were not inadmissible. Merlos v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6514 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26, 2008).

187. At the punishment stage of defendant's trial for stealing property, the trial court did not err by excluding a doctor's report concerning defendant's personality disorder; the report largely restated the doctor's trial testimony. Edrington v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10637 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 21 2005).

188. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court properly prevented defense counsel from questioning the arresting officer regarding his expertise; such a request did not amount to a request for a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing to inquire into the underlying facts or data of an expert's opinion. Govea v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7910 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 28 2005).

189. Court properly allowed testimony by fingerprint experts where they provided sufficient testimony about their experience to qualify as experts. In addition to the fingerprint evidence, the uncontroverted evidence showed that defendant was in possession of the stolen property nine days after the burglary. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5302 (Tex. App. Dallas July 7 2005).

190. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

191. Prisoner's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to voir dire the prosecution's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) to determine the foundations of his opinions because it would have been futile to invoke Rule 705(b) where defense counsel knew of the basis of the expert's opinion. Shields v. Dretke, 122 Fed. Appx. 133, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 2910 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 28, 162 L. Ed. 2d 928, 2005 U.S. LEXIS

192. In a sexual assault case, a court erred by failing to allow defendant's expert to testify where the subject of the expert's opinion was relevant, just as the State's expert was permitted to testify that the lack of genital injuries did not indicate that the complainant had not been sexually assaulted, defendant's expert should have been permitted to testify that no sexual assault occurred. One party could not proffer expert testimony and subsequently argue successfully that the testimony was not relevant when the opposing party sought to offer expert testimony on the same subject which reached a different conclusion; in addition, the error was not harmless. Vela v. State, 159 S.W.3d 172, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7257 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

193. In a driving while intoxicated case, where counsel was objecting to the officer's qualifications and not to the underlying facts or data to support the officer's opinion, he was not requesting a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing to explore the underlying facts or data of the expert's opinion. Therefore, his appeal on that point was waived. Waltmon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7285 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 12 2004).

194. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

195. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the hearsay underlying the opinion of defendant's expert witness during the sentencing phase because although the witness could state, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid 705(a), that he had reviewed the jail classification as a basis for his expert testimony, the classification itself remained inadmissible and could not be used as a basis for the jury's determination of defendant's dangerousness in the future. Prystash v. State, 3 S.W.3d 522, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Daubert Standard

196. During defendant's trial for aggravated assault of a family member, the court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in admitting testimony from a witness as an expert on lethality assessment because she did not offer any specifics to support her assertion, and she did not cite any books, articles, journals, or other clinical social workers who practiced in the area; the State did not show that "lethality assessment" was a legitimate field of expertise. Petriciolet v. State, 442 S.W.3d 643, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 31 2014).

197. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c) in admitting the testimony of the director of a trauma center, who was trained as a clinical psychologist with specialization in psychological trauma, because all of the opinions offered by the director were within the scope of the field of psychology, a legitimate field of study. Jessop v. State, 368 S.W.3d 653, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3176, 2012 WL 1402117 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2012).

198. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Helpfulness

199. In a sexual assault case, an officer was properly allowed to testify regarding defendant's "grooming" the victim for sexual assaults because he had been a police officer for thirty years, he had investigated twenty sexual assault and child abuse cases per year, and he testified that it was his opinion based on his investigation that defendant had been "grooming" the victim prior to her outcry. He explained that sexual predators often developed a relationship with a victim to build trust, and then started committing small offenses to see if the victim made an outcry. Weatherly v. State, 283 S.W.3d 481, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2435 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Qualifications

200. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an expert's testimony regarding his estimate of the cost of an exploration permit, as he was an oil and gas executive with decades of experience, his opinion fell within his area of expertise, he took into consideration the lack of shale gas and overall size of the tract in formulating his estimate, and he was not unqualified merely because his opinion might be characterized as "subjective." Harkins v. North Shore Energy, L.L.C., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14929, 2013 WL 6574245 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 12 2013).

201. Trial court properly denied a doctor's motion to dismiss a patient's health care liability claim against him where, considered together in their entirety, a neurosurgeon's report and curriculum vitae served by the patient established the neurosurgeon's qualifications to render opinions as to the applicable standard of care and alleged breach of the standard of care by the doctor because they expressly provided that the neurosurgeon served as a Florida Worker's Compensation Certified Physician Expert Medical Advisor and that he had been licensed, board certified, and in the private practice of neurosurgery from 1976 to the present. As to whether the neurosurgeon was qualified to address the standard of care and alleged breach by the doctor, a radiologist, the neurosurgeon's report provided that he had been thoroughly exposed to neuroradiology through his years of practice and that the interpretation of an MRI scan like that involved in the patient's case was common to both neurosurgery and radiology. Brunson v. Johnston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 442, 2013 WL 173743 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

202. Nowhere did the court see an objection to the reliability or relevance of the witness's testimony and the context did not suggest that appellant objected on either of these grounds, for preservation purposes; it might have been apparent from the context that appellant objection on qualifications grounds, but he did not argue this on appeal. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

203. Implied objection based on a witness's qualifications did not preserve error related to the reliability of the witness's testimony or the court's alleged failure to hold a Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) hearing. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

204. Treating oncologist's report referenced materials he consulted and the company did not complain about the lack of discovery responses from the widow, for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 194.2(f)(4), 195; the implicit assertion was that the scientific literature reviewed supported the oncologist's opinion, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705, the trial court made no ruling requiring disclosure of the literature and did not strike any of the evidence, and the oncologist's affidavit explained how he reached his opinion and he grounded his opinion under oath on reasonable medical probability, such that the court could not say that the opinion concerning etiology was conclusory. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

205. Fusion of review standards cannot be avoided simply by requiring an express ruling on the E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson challenge, along with a ruling on the no-evidence summary judgment motion, but an express Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) determination does clarify the process followed in the trial court, and notifies the nonmovant that the expert's opinion is ruled inadmissible before summary judgment is granted; because Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) allows the expert to express an opinion without first introducing the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires the disclosure, an express ruling notifies the nonmovant of that ruling as well and permits an opportunity to comply with the ruling. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

206. In a sexual assault case, an officer was properly allowed to testify regarding defendant's "grooming" the victim for sexual assaults because he had been a police officer for thirty years, he had investigated twenty sexual assault and child abuse cases per year, and he testified that it was his opinion based on his investigation that defendant had been "grooming" the victim prior to her outcry. He explained that sexual predators often developed a relationship with a victim to build trust, and then started committing small offenses to see if the victim made an outcry. Weatherly v. State, 283 S.W.3d 481, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2435 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

207. In permitting counsel to conduct a voir dire examination of a psychologist regarding his familiarity with the sexually violent predator commitment statutes, the trial court complied with Tex. R. Evid. 705 by providing an opportunity to test the reliability of the psychologist's opinion testimony without the jury being present. In re Zamora, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5852 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2007).

208. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

209. Equipment maintenance company's no-evidence motion for summary judgment was properly granted pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a on the TrackMobile equipment operator's negligence clam because the operator failed to present the required expert testimony about the proper inspection and maintenance of the TrackMobile and if the company's conduct met that standard of care; expert testimony was required as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705 because a maintenance company's practices and procedures and industry standards with respect to the inspection and maintenance of a TrackMobile or other rail-car mover engine were not matters within a lay person's general knowledge. Simmons v. Briggs Equip. Trust, 221 S.W.3d 109, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5647 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

210. At a hearing, outside the presence of the jury, a doctor testified that he based his opinion on his practice in emergency medicine and what he saw in the emergency room while treating the victim, a 16-month old child; defendant contended that the doctor was not qualified to testify on what someone believed would happen if they saw an assault; however, the training, experience, research, seminars, and periodicals about which the doctor testified and upon which he based his medical opinion qualified him to testify as an expert witness; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the doctor to testify as an expert witness. Montgomery v. State, 198 S.W.3d 67, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3377 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

211. Trial court erred in awarding damages to the surface right property owner due to the oil company's operations on the land because the property owner's expert's qualification and experience as an engineer in the oil and gas industry did not qualify him to testify regarding the value of timber removed by the oil company as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702; therefore, the expert's testimony as to valuation and the amount of damages owed by the oil company had no probative worth. Even if the expert were qualified, his testimony was flawed because it was based on the advice of a forester and an accountant, which was not shown to comply with applicable professional standards, and the expert made assumptions about the amount of land cleared by the oil company, which did not constitute a sufficient basis for his opinion as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705(c). Classic Oil & Gas, Inc. v. Cook, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2936 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 12 2006).

212. Even if the expert was qualified, his testimony was flawed because it was based on the advice of a forester and an accountant, which was not shown to comply with applicable professional standards, and the expert made assumptions about the amount of land cleared by the oil company, which did not constitute a sufficient basis for his opinion as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 705. Classic Oil & Gas, Inc. v. Cook, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2936 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 12 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Ultimate Issue

213. In a suit by a royalty interest owner against operators of oil and gas properties, an expert's damages testimony was speculative, conclusory, and incompetent; although he examined facts and data that would be appropriate to consider, he failed to specifically identify them or explain how they affected his calculations. Paradigm Oil, Inc. v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 242 S.W.3d 67, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6926, 167 Oil & Gas Rep. 236 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Opinion Testimony : General Overview

214. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a Tex. R. Evid. 705 hearing concerning a special agent's testimony because the trial court properly admitted the agent's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 701; the State presented the agent as a lay witness to testify about the pimp subculture and to address the issue of cause, as placed into issue by defendant's cross-examination of the complainant; the questions contemplated drew directly from the agent's personal experience and familiarity with the pimping subculture, including its terms, many of which the complainant had used in her testimony, which the agent gained from interviewing both pimps and prostitutes; questioning the agent about what he learned from his experience assisted the fact-finder in determining a fact in issue, specifically defendant's utilizing the complainant as a prostitute for his personal profit. Richardson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4281 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 31 2007).

Governments : Courts : Authority to Adjudicate

215. While the trial court is authorized to conduct a hearing outside of the presence of the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 705, the rule is not to be interpreted as permitting a trial court to enter a pretrial discovery order in criminal cases. In re State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5323, 2013 WL 1846680 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2013).

Public Health & Welfare Law : Healthcare : Mental Health Services : Commitment : Involuntary Commitment of Adults

216. From a sexually violent predator commitment hearing, an expert's testimony that determining whether the patient chose his victims as part of a revenge motive or whether they were strangers was important in assessing the risk that he would reoffend was properly admitted as it helped the jury in evaluating the weight of the expert's opinions; and in light of the limiting instructions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements. Even if it was error to admit the testimony, such error was not reasonably calculated to cause and probably did not cause rendition of an improper judgment. In re Commitment of Salazar, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8856 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 26 2008).

Real Property Law : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Valuation

217. In a condemnation proceeding in which plaintiff county acquired a portion of commercial property used for a car wash in order to widen a county roadway, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the county's appraisal expert because the expert's bald assurance that he used a widely accepted appraisal method was insufficient to establish reliability. His report, as well as the underlying data and methodology, did not reflect application of an accepted appraisal method to arrive at the fair market value of the remainder after the taking where he simply took the market value of the whole and assumed--without any basis--that a willing buyer and willing seller would agree to reduce the market value by one-fifth after the taking. Dallas County v. Crestview Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1269 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 16 2012).

218. Court did not err in admitting a utility company's expert testimony as to the market value of the condemned property in which he did not factor in the improvements that were over 4000 feet from the power lines in assessing damages because, inter alia, the landowners' own expert relied upon several articles that specifically stated the negative impact of power lines to a property diminished with increased distance and disappeared beyond 500 feet. Utley v. LCRA Transmission Servs. Corp., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9129 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 25 2006).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Healthcare Providers

219. Trial court properly denied a doctor's motion to dismiss a patient's health care liability claim against him where, considered together in their entirety, a neurosurgeon's report and curriculum vitae served by the patient established the neurosurgeon's qualifications to render opinions as to the applicable standard of care and alleged breach of the standard of care by the doctor because they expressly provided that the neurosurgeon served as a Florida Worker's Compensation Certified Physician Expert Medical Advisor and that he had been licensed, board certified, and in the private practice of neurosurgery from 1976 to the present. As to whether the neurosurgeon was qualified to address the standard of care and alleged breach by the doctor, a radiologist, the neurosurgeon's report provided that he had been thoroughly exposed to neuroradiology through his years of practice and that the interpretation of an MRI scan like that involved in the patient's case was common to both neurosurgery and radiology. Brunson v. Johnston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 442, 2013 WL 173743 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

220. In a patient's action that raised health care liability claims against a doctor based on the patient's allegation that her left eye was permanently impaired as a result of a surgery performed by the doctor, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the report prepared by the patient's expert, a board certified ophthalmologist, complied with Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 where the expert's report informed the doctor of the specific conduct that the patient had called into question and provided a basis for the trial court to conclude the claims were meritorious. Tex. R. Evid. 703, 705 allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, which was what the expert had done, and, moreover, the expert's report did not merely state his opinions and inferences because he explained the basis for his conclusions and linked them to the facts. Diaz-Rohena v. Melton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

Torts : Negligence : Causation : Cause in Fact

221. Trial court properly granted manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' no-evidence summary judgment motion, Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(i), because (1) although the former employees claimed that paints and other coating substances used in the construction of the power plants contained asbestos or silica, which was released into the air when the product was sprayed or when it was sanded or ground off the surface to which it had been applied, there was no expert testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and 705(c) that spraying, sanding, or grinding a liquid paint or coating produced friable asbestos fibers likely to cause asbestosis; and (2) although the type of silica that caused silicosis was crystalline silica, the evidence showed that the products in the employees' case contained amorphous silica and there was no evidence that amorphous silica caused silicosis or that grinding and sanding the paint and coatings released a form of silica that was capable of causing injury; thus, the employees never proved an exposure to a form of asbestos or silica that would cause injury and the employees failed to meet their initial burden of showing that they were exposed to asbestos and/or silica in a form that was capable of causing injury from manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' products. In re ROC Pretrial, 131 S.W.3d 129, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 315 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

222. Trial court properly granted manufacturers, suppliers, contractors, premises owners, and former employers' no-evidence summary judgment motion, Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(i), because (1) although the former employees claimed that paints and other coating substances used in the construction of the power plants contained asbestos or silica, which was released into the air when the product was sprayed or when it was sanded or ground off the surface to which it had been applied, there was no expert testimony under Tex. Pre-March 1, 1998 Comment The definitions in Rule 801(a), (b), (c) and (d) combined bring within the hearsay rule four categories of conduct. These are described and illustrated below.

(1) A verbal (oral or written) explicit assertion. Illustration: Witness testifies that declarant said "A shot B." Declarant's conduct is a statement because it is an oral expression. Because it is an explicit assertion, the matter asserted is that A shot B. Finally, the statement is hearsay because it was not made while testifying at the trial and is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(2) A verbal (oral or written) explicit assertion, not offered to prove the matter explicitly asserted, but offered for the truth of a matter implied by the statement, the probative value of the statement flowing from declarant's belief as to the matter. Illustration: The only known remedy for X disease is medicine Y and the only known use of medicine Y is to cure X disease. To prove that Oglethorpe had X disease, witness testifies that declarant, a doctor, stated, "The best medicine for Oglethorpe is Y." The testimony is to a statement because it was a verbal expression. The matter asserted was that Oglethorpe had X disease because that matter is implied from the statement, the probative value of the statement as offered flowing from declarant's belief as to the matter. Finally, the statement is hearsay because it was not made while testifying at the trial and is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(3) Non-assertive verbal conduct offered for the truth of a matter implied by the statement, the probative value of the statement flowing from declarant's belief as to the matter. Illustration: In a rape prosecution to prove that Richard, the defendant, was in the room at the time of the rape, W testifies that declarant knocked on the door to the room and shouted, "Open the door, Richard." The testimony is to a statement because it was a verbal expression. The matter asserted was that Richard was in the room because that matter is implied from the statement, the probative value of the statement as offered flowing from declarant's belief as to the matter. Finally, the statement is hearsay because it was not made while testifying at the trial and is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(4) Nonverbal assertive conduct intended as a substitute for verbal expression. Illustration: W testifies that A asked declarant "Which way did X go?" and declarant pointed north. This nonverbal conduct of declarant was intended by him as a substitute for verbal expression and so is a statement. The matter asserted is that X went north because that is implied from the statement and the probative value of the statement as offered flows from declarant's belief that X went north. Finally, the statement is hearsay because it was not made at trial and is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(4) Nonverbal assertive conduct intended as a substitute for verbal expression. Illustration: W testifies that A asked declarant "Which way did X go?" and declarant pointed north. This nonverbal conduct of declarant was intended by him as a substitute for verbal expression and so is a statement. The matter asserted is that X went north because that is implied from the statement and the probative value of the statement as offered flows from declarant's belief that X went north. Finally, the statement is hearsay because it was not made at trial and is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

Comment to 2015 Restyling: Statements falling under the hearsay exclusion provided by Rule 801(e)(2) are no longer referred to as "admissions" in the title to the subdivision. The term "admissions" is confusing because not all statements covered by the exclusion are admissions in the colloquial sense-a statement can be within the exclusion even if it "admitted" nothing and was not against the party's interest when made. The term "admissions" also raises confusion in comparison with the Rule 803(24) exception for declarations against interest. No change in application of the exclusion is intended.

The deletion of former Rule 801(e)(1)(D), which cross-references Code of Criminal Procedure art. 38.071, is not intended as a substantive change. Including this cross-reference made sense when the Texas Rules of Criminal Evidence were first promulgated, but with subsequent changes to the statutory provision, its inclusion is no longer appropriate. The version of article 38.071 that was initially cross-referenced in the Rules of Criminal Evidence required the declarant-victim to be available to testify at the trial. That requirement has since been deleted from the statute, and the statute no longer requires either the availability or testimony of the declarant-victim. Thus, cross-referencing the statute in Rule 801(e)(1), which applies only when the declarant testifies at trial about the prior statement, no longer makes sense. Moreover, article 38.071 is but one of a number of statutes that mandate the admission of certain hearsay statements in particular circumstances. See, e.g., Code of Criminal Procedure art. 38.072; Family Code §§ 54.031, 104.002, 104.006. These statutory provisions take precedence over the general rule excluding hearsay, see Rules 101(c) and 802, and there is no apparent justification for cross-referencing article 38.071 and not all other such provisions.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Business & Corporate Law : Agency Relationships : Authority to Act : Admissions by Agent

1. In a case in which a commercial tenant argued that the trial court erred in excluding a string of emails between its landlord's prior counsel and the tenant's counsel, dated prior to the filing of the underlying lawsuit, the emails were admissible because while the landlord's attorney's statement was in the nature of an opinion rather than a declaration of fact, as long as an agent's statement was made during the existence of the employment relationship and concerned a matter within the scope of that employment, it was admissible against the principal, even if the agent had no authority to speak for the principal, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). However, the exclusion of the email correspondence was harmless because the evidence was merely cumulative, and because the tenant did not reasonably show that the exclusion of the evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Cleveland Reg'l Med. Ctr., L.P. v. Celtic Props., L.C., 323 S.W.3d 322, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7942 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 30 2010).

Civil Procedure : Jurisdiction : Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions : In Personam Actions : General Overview

2. In an appeal from the denial of a special appearance, exhibits challenged by a foreign manufacturer were not hearsay because they were not offered to prove the truth of any matter asserted within the documents. The exhibits helped to establish minimum contacts for purposes of personal jurisdiction and included invoices and letters and emails about product pricing, testing, drawings, shipment, and inspection and about past due payments and letters of credit. Ho Wah Genting Kintron Sdn Bhd v. Leviton Mfg. Co., 163 S.W.3d 120, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1414, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17391 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

Civil Procedure : Jurisdiction : Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions : In Personam Actions : Challenges

3. Personal jurisdiction under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 17.042 was lacking over California residents in an action for breach of a partnership agreement; evidence of ownership of Texas property and related travel did not establish personal jurisdiction, and affidavits that failed to set forth the place and terms of the alleged agreement and contained hearsay statements were properly excluded under Tex. R. Civ. P. 120a(3) and Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Rattner v. Contos, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 894, 2009 WL 330966 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 11 2009).

Civil Procedure : Pleading & Practice : Pleadings : Amended Pleadings : General Overview

4. Will contestant could properly seek discovery of a will proponent regarding her offer of a different will for probate, even though the proponent had amended her petition and offered an earlier will for probate, because under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), admissions of a party-opponent were admissible, and Rule 801(e)(2) included superseded pleadings. In re Willie, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1159 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 14 2012).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Oral Depositions

5. In a will contest, the trial court erred by granting summary judgment on the issue of testamentary capacity because testimony from witnesses that decedent was not in a state of mind to conduct financial affairs when he signed his will was sufficient to show the existence of a material fact issue with respect to testamentary capacity. The court was permitted to consider the partial deposition testimony of several witnesses as statements which were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(3)'s provision for a deposition taken in the same civil proceeding. In re Estate of O'Neil, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7376, 2012 WL 3776490 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2012).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Perpetuation of Testimony

6. Mandamus relief was conditionally granted where a former employee sought to take a presuit deposition under Tex. R. Civ. P. 202 because the record contained no evidence; neither the employee's verified pleadings nor a letter from his counsel was admitted. Even if they had been, pleadings were not competent evidence, and letter contained hearsay within hearsay. In re Contractor's Supplies, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6396, 2009 WL 2488374 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

7. Statements in a proof of loss form relating to the date of hail damage were competent summary judgment evidence because they constituted admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Even if the statements in the proof of loss form were not binding or conclusive, they were considered prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein; moreover, expert testimony was not required on the issue of whether hail occurred on a certain date and caused property damage. United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Lynd Co., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3206, 2012 WL 1430541 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 25 2012).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Standards : General Overview

8. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party. Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

9. In a case alleging breach of guaranty, an affidavit concerning a statement made by an alleged guarantor was not sufficient summary judgment evidence because it was hearsay. Roye Enters. v. Roper, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5945 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 28 2005).

10. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party. Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

11. Hearsay cannot be made the basis of summary judgment. Koehler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3701 (Tex. App. Dallas June 6 2001).

12. Because the contractor's unsworn, handwritten statement was not made during any employment relationship between the department-store corporation and the contractor concerning repairs to the owner's house, the contractor's unsworn statement was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D), which provided an exception to the hearsay rule. Koehler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3701 (Tex. App. Dallas June 6 2001).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : Requests for Instructions

13. Portion of the automobile manufacturer's spreadsheet reflecting the 67 code 56 claims concerning airbags was admissible as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the spreadsheet was created by the manufacturer and produced in discovery, and a witness testified that the 67 open circuits reflected on the spreadsheet were all claims submitted to the manufacturer and paid because technicians confirmed the claims all involved defects. Because the manufacturer did not request a limiting instruction as to the statements from customers listed on the spreadsheet or the remainder of the warranty claims, the inclusion of the items was not ground for complaint on appeal. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Motions for New Trials

14. In a negligent misrepresentation case, the court properly denied a motion for new trial due to juror misconduct because appellant, in order to demonstrate jury misconduct, relied upon four juror affidavits containing remarks made by other jurors during trial breaks, and thus, the affidavits constituted hearsay. Innovative Truck Storage, Inc. v. Airshield Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2007).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Writs : Common Law Writs : Mandamus

15. Mandamus relief was conditionally granted where a former employee sought to take a presuit deposition under Tex. R. Civ. P. 202 because the record contained no evidence; neither the employee's verified pleadings nor a letter from his counsel was admitted. Even if they had been, pleadings were not competent evidence, and letter contained hearsay within hearsay. In re Contractor's Supplies, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6396, 2009 WL 2488374 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Briefs

16. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

17. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

18. State bar complaint was properly introduced into evidence during a disciplinary matter for several reasons; it did not constitute hearsay because it was merely introduced to show that it was used to launch an investigation.

Moreover, to the extent that the lawyer argued that a signature on the complaint was inadmissible as fraudulent, that matter was not preserved for appellate review since no such objection was raised before a trial court. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

19. In an appeal from a divorce judgment, the husband waived his arguments as to the exclusion of his evidence as hearsay where he cited no authority for an excluded statement, but merely argued that it was not presented for the truth of the matter asserted and listed Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, and 803. Lorant v. Lorant, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1641 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2004).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

20. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding courtesy cards completed by bus passengers after the accident containing their witness statements because the statements written on the cards injected the possibility of calculated misstatements into the equation such that the trustworthiness of the witness accounts was called into doubt and they were given to an interested party. Via Metro. Transit Auth. v. Barraza, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14609, 2013 WL 6255761 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

21. In an eviction action, the apartment manager's testimony that the police department received a disturbance call was inadmissible hearsay; its admission was harmless because she had already testified, without objection, that law enforcement had been called to respond to the disturbance. A police officer also testified that he was called to assist other officers on the scene and personally witnessed a disturbance. Black v. Countryside Vill. Apts., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14853, 2013 WL 6506303 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2013).

22. In a child abuse case, if there was error in admitting a doctor's affidavit regarding the child's cause of death over defendant's hearsay objection, it was cured and rendered harmless by the doctor's expansive testimony to these same matters; defendant lodged no objection to this trial testimony. Taylor v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6898 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 28 2007).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Search & Seizure : Probable Cause

23. In defendant's criminal trial, testimony of arresting officer as to an out of court statement that defendant's car "had been possibly involved in a robbery three days earlier" was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) where the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, it was offered to show probable cause for the detention of the defendant for traffic violations. Ellis v. State, 99 S.W.3d 783, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1445 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Procedural Due Process : Self-Incrimination Privilege

24. Trial court did not violate defendant's constitutional privilege against self-incrimination by allowing the State to read into evidence a portion of the testimony he gave at the punishment phase of a previous trial on another charge because the testimony was given for a limited purpose in the prior proceeding in order to mitigate the punishment in that case and was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Lacey v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8017 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2013).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Assistance of Counsel

25. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

26. Out-of-court statements were non-testimonial and did not violate the Confrontation Clause because the statements were non-hearsay statements made by a co-conspirator; moreover, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Agyin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13337 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 30 2013).

27. Confrontation Clause did not require the admission of multi-level hearsay to impeach the complainant and her mother in defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child. The unnamed declarant's statement that someone made child-molestation allegations against defendant was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, because it was an out-of-court-statement offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- to show that someone made child-abuse allegations against defendant to child protective services. Shafer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1902, 2012 WL 745422 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 8 2012).

28. Trial court did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation in a community supervision revocation proceeding by admitting documentary evidence that defendant and the passenger of his truck were listed in police gang unit reports as self-admitted gang members. The challenged evidence was not testimonial hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), because it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- that defendant was a gang member -- but rather for the fact that he was listed in a report as having claimed gang membership. Cantu v. State, 339 S.W.3d 688, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 854 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2011).

29. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling his objections to statements made by a detective in the video-taped interview wherein the detective challenged defendant's version of the events because the statements were not hearsay because they were offered solely to show their effect on defendant's demeanor, thus permitting the jury to evaluate his credibility. Additionally, because the complained-of statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, the Confrontation Clause did not bar admission of the statements. Padilla v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6552, 2009 WL 5247434 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 20 2009), *aff'd,*326 S.W.3d 195, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1239 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

30. In a capital murder case, the statements of a coconspirator were not hearsay and were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E), since the non-testimonial statements were made in furtherance of the conspiracy. The coconspirator's admission of his involvement in the murder to his brother was not a testimonial confession, and so it was irrelevant that confessions by an accomplice that implicated another were not a firmly rooted exception to the hearsay rule, and if the conspiracy at issue was treated broadly as an agreement to commit a robbery and murder and to escape capture, the statements could be understood as being part of a conspiracy, given that they were made to impress upon the brother the importance of the flight of the conspirator and appellant. Arroyo v. State, 239 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5111 (Tex. App. Tyler 2007).

31. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

32. Murder defendant's out-of-court statement that he knew the victim had stolen his boat motor and that he was going to take care of the victim was not hearsay, but an admission of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Therefore, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the statement was admitted. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

33. In a trial for attempted sexual performance by a child, there was no error in the admission, at the punishment phase, of evidence that the Army had found child pornography on defendant's service-issued laptop computer. Defendant's comments in a telephone conversation with his then-wife about the discovery were non-testimonial for purposes of the Confrontation Clause and were properly admitted as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 101(c) and 801. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2062 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2006).

34. Drug defendant's confrontation rights were not violated by the admission of an informant's testimony that a declarant, who agreed to sell her drugs, said that defendant was his right hand man. The Crawford standard did not apply because the declarant's statements were not testimonial; under the Ohio v. Roberts standard, the admission was proper under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid 801(e)(2)(E). Mancilla v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3334 (Tex. App. Dallas May 3 2005).

Contracts Law : Contract Interpretation : Parol Evidence : General Overview

35. Claimants were not allowed to introduce parol evidence to establish survivorship interests in alleged joint accounts because there was no fraud nor mistake pled, nor any claim that certificate of deposit (CD) agreements were incomplete or ambiguous; relying on Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 439, the Deadman's Statute under Tex. R. Evid. 601, the parol evidence rule, the "four corners of the document" rule, hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and double hearsay, an estate was correct in asserting that the claimants could not use extrinsic evidence in an attempt to get around the four corners of the CDs. Clark v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2211 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 27 2008).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Specific Performance

36. In a collection suit by a creditor that purchased the debt from a credit card company, it was proper to admit monthly statements from the credit card company as business records. The documents were not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Simien v. Unifund Ccr Partners, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2687, 2010 WL 1492267 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 15 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Manufacture : General Overview

37. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : General Overview

38. In a criminal prosecution for possession of marihuana, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the hearsay statement made by defendant to his father that he was holding the marihuana for someone else, that defendant owed someone $1,000.00, and that he had to get the marihuana back from his father so he could return it to that person. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), the statement was an admission against interest, a hearsay exception. Esser v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3764 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 29 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Intent to Distribute : Elements

39. In a case dealing with possession of a controlled substance, over 400 grams of cocaine, with intent to deliver that was found in defendant's truck, there was evidence offered through a videotape of the incident in which defendant responded to a question by an officer by stating that the truck was his; defendant affirmatively stated he had no objection to the admission of that videotape; accordingly, proof of ownership of the truck was adequately shown; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801, the erroneous admission of hearsay testimony regarding proof of ownership of the truck was harmless. Barnes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4328 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 19 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

40. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : Aggravated Offenses

41. In a trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under, the trial court did not err by excluding the hearsay recitals in an arrest warrant affidavit and complaint indicating the complainant had previously committed an assault on the defendant; defendant was not prevented from confronting the complainant; he was permitted to cross-examine the complainant concerning his previous conviction for aggravated assault. Bradshaw v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5891 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 6 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

42. In a trial for family assault, testimony concerning the complainant's statements was properly admitted as excited utterance; the complainant was visibly shaken and highly upset and her intoxication did not negate her state of excitement. Hudson v. State, 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

43. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault

call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault

44. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault : Penalties

45. In the punishment phase of a domestic assault trial, any error was harmless from admitting a recording of conversations between a 911 operator and a hospital employee who was responding to the complainant's injuries because the complainant plainly testified at trial that defendant had hit her with a closed fist in her eye. Sanders v. State, 422 S.W.3d 809, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1090, 2014 WL 325028 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 30 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : General Overview

46. There was no hearsay error in admitting an officer's testimony that the owner of the vehicle used in a robbery told the officer that he lent his car to defendant in exchange for illegal drugs because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect. Green v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3611, 2012 WL 1606238 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

47. In a robbery trial, the state was properly permitted to read to the jury an audio-recorded statement defendant made in a telephone call to his wife while he was in jail because under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), defendant's statement was not hearsay and did not have to be against defendant's interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Robinson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 365, 2012 WL 130616 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2012).

48. In a trial for an aggravated robbery that occurred in a motel, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit into evidence, as an admission by a party opponent, the complainant's civil pleading in his lawsuit against the motel. The complainant was not a party opponent. Davis v. State, 177 S.W.3d 355, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2714 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

49. State, not the victim, is the party-opponent of the accused in a criminal proceeding. Therefore, a statement by a victim or complainant in a criminal case is not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) as an admission by a party opponent. Davis v. State, 177 S.W.3d 355, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2714 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

50. Trial court did not err when it allowed a police officer to testify that defendant's girlfriend told the officer that defendant went by a certain name as his "street" name because the girlfiend herself testified that defendant went by that name and, further, the complainant and the other eyewitness both identified defendant and testified they knew him by his street name. Thus, the alleged hearsay was not the only evidence that defendant went by that street name. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : Unarmed Robbery : General Overview

51. Trial court did not err in admitting hearsay evidence through a restaurant's assistant manager, that an employee loaned money to defendant and that defendant said he was going to repay him, because statement's relevancy did not hinge on the truth of the matters asserted but rather was used to establish that a conversation took place. Conley v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4619 (Tex. App. Dallas May 30 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Fraud : Fraud Against the Government : General Overview

52. In a criminal trial for presenting a false insurance card, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.10(a)(5), the statement of the insurance company's computer to officers regarding the validity of the policy was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). However, defendant waived any error by failing to object, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Fuller v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6978 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

53. Defendant was entitled to a new trial for the murder of her stepfather because of new evidence, specifically, information from defendant's former boyfriend about her outcry 30 years earlier regarding sexual abuse by the stepfather; the outcry evidence rebutted the State's claim of recent fabrication. Carsner v. State, 415 S.W.3d 507, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12563, 2013 WL 5561653 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 9 2013).

54. In defendant's murder case, a witness's statement that "spending time with defendant that night was going to be the worst mistake he ever made" was erroneously admitted because the statement was hearsay, and it contained a dramatic piece of information not communicated in the earlier testimony. Martin v. State, 151 S.W.3d 236, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9437 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

55. In a murder case, a court did not err in allowing a witness to testify about another's hearsay statements implicating defendant as the murderer where he failed to object when the same evidence was presented again. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7777 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 26 2004).

56. Witness in murder trial was properly allowed to testify to an out-of-court statement made by defendant's brother. Both the witness and the brother were part of a conspiracy to hinder defendant's apprehension by assisting in disposing of the body and cleaning up the scene; the court therefore found the statement to be an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Byrd v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 791 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 29 2004), aff'd, 187 S.W.3d 436, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2128 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005, no pet.).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

57. District court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to sever her murder for remuneration trial from those of her two co-defendants because the vast majority of statements made by the co-defendants did not tend to implicate defendant in the offense; to the extent the co-defendants' statements could be perceived as prejudicial against defendant, such prejudice could be adequately addressed by lesser curative measures, such as limiting instructions. Even if defendant had been tried separately, one co-defendant's statements would have been admissible against defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Briggs v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7131, 2012 WL 3629811 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 24 2012).

58. In a murder trial, testimony that the witness telephoned and finally contacted the victim on the day of the murder and that the victim simply gave an explanation for a delay (without more) was not hearsay and thus was properly admitted. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

59. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary

60. Officer's statement that a burglary victim named defendant as a possible suspect was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but rather to explain why defendant became a suspect. Keith v. State, 384 S.W.3d 452, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8860 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 25 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Larceny & Theft : General Overview

61. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

62. In defendant's motor vehicle theft case, a court did not err in admitting a statement where the witness's testimony about another's condition was not a statement offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and therefore, the testimony was not hearsay. Roy v. State, 161 S.W.3d 30, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6712 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

63. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Prostitution : General Overview

64. In a trial for promotion of prostitution, an agent's testimony was properly admitted because the statement was not hearsay to the extent that he was testifying to about defendant's statement when the agent inquired into the cost for sex, and statements by purported prostitutes to the agents were also not hearsay because they had legal significance in demonstrating the promotion of prostitution at a club in which defendant was a manager and were not used to prove the fact that the declarant was indeed available and that sex acts would be performed. Yo-Se Hsu v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5472 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 22 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

65. Defendant was entitled to a new trial on two counts of aggravated sexual abuse of a child where the trial court reversibly erred by admitting the testimony of the officer and a child protective services investigator regarding the victim's prior statements because it was inadmissible impeachment evidence of the victim's trial testimony, during which she recanted her allegations against defendant; the error was not harmless because without the investigator's testimony, the State would not have proven penetration. Klein v. State, 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex.

App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

66. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant had run into a store crying, shaking, and screaming that she had just been raped at gunpoint by two men in a van and needed help; the police were called within three to four minutes and arrived approximately five minutes later, when she was still under the influence of the trauma she just experienced and appeared to be in shock. Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

67. In defendant's sexual assault case, a witness's testimony regarding defendant's statement to him was properly admitted where it was clearly not hearsay and thus its admission, even though erroneously described by the trial judge as occurring under Tex. R. Evid 613, was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and did not violate defendant's constitutional rights. Strong v. State, 138 S.W.3d 546, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5107 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Adults : Elements

68. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule of Tex. R. Evid. 801; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

69. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

70. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the victim told a witness that defendant told her to open her mouth and that was going to stick his penis in her mouth. Although a quarter of an hour passed, the victim was shaking and crying. Ervin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8213 (Tex. App. Dallas July 3 2013).

71. In defendant's trial on a charge of continuous sexual assault of a child less than 14 years of age in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02, where defendant claimed that the victim, his stepdaughter, fabricated her allegations so that she could live with her biological father and his wife, the victim's prior consistent statement in the form of a videotaped out-of-court statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) to rebut the allegation of recent fabrication. Castillo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7182, 2011 WL 3853939 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2011).

72. In a sexual assault of a child case, the victim's mother's testimony regarding what the victim told her was admissible as an excited utterance because the time between when the grandmother witnessed the encounter and the victim made the declaration that defendant "put his private in her mouth" was 10 minutes and, throughout that period, the victim cried. Although the mother asked the victim what was wrong, the declaration was not the result of questioning and was a spontaneous declaration regarding the occurrence that caused the emotional state the victim was in at a time that the victim was still in that emotional state. In re A. W. B., 419 S.W.3d 351, 2010 Tex. App.

LEXIS 747 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 2 2010).

73. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021 and indecency with a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, although defendant complained of the trial court's overruling of his hearsay objection to the State's question of what the victim told a professional about defendant's conduct, the admission of the testimony during the direct examination of the forensic interviewer was not harmful because it did no more than reiterate facts admitted elsewhere and even included testimony supportive of the defense. Moreover, even assuming, without deciding, that it was inadmissible hearsay, the substance of the complained-of testimony of the forensic interviewer was admitted elsewhere without limitation or an objection preserved on appeal, and, thus, the error, if any, of the trial court in admitting the statement of the forensic interviewer did not affect a substantial right of defendant and had to be disregarded. Drake v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2010 WL 348365 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 31 2010).

74. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The testimony was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

75. After defendant testified that a child assault victim had fabricated the story to bolster her mother's position to child services workers that she was a good mother, a video recording of a forensic interview of the victim was admissible as showing the child's prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Werner v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8659 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 19 2008).

76. In defendant's sexual assault trial, a trial court erred in permitting the hearsay testimony of a forensic interviewer as an outcry witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, but the error was harmless because overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt remained, especially the testimony of the child victim's counselor. Petrie v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5867 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 6 2008).

77. In a case involving indecency with a child, a videotape that showed a forensic interview of a victim was admissible because defense counsel raised a suggestion that the victim consciously altered her testimony by alleging fabrication and undue influence; therefore, the videotape was a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Defendant's reliance on Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.071 and Long v. State, 742 S.W.2d 302 (Tex. Crim. App. 1987), was misplaced. Torris v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5749 (Tex. App. Dallas July 31 2008).

78. In a trial for sexual assault on a child, the complainant's prior consistent statements were properly admitted because defendant's implication of recent fabrication was clear from the closing argument, which stated that the complainant conspired with a civil attorney to fabricate dates that would support the claim that the complainant was under 17 years old at the time of the incidents for purposes of a civil lawsuit. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

79. Any error in admitting a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony, over defendant's hearsay objection, about a study conducted by another person explaining why a child victim of a sexual assault would not show evidence of trauma to her private parts was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was introduced at trial. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

80. In defendant's sexual assault on a child case, a court properly allowed outcry testimony from a psychotherapist who treated the victim because, although the witness's testimony concerning the victim's statement did not specify the manner or means of defendant's offenses, the victim's statement did clearly allege sexual abuse and clearly identified defendant as the abuser. Newton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2477 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 28 2007).

81. Although a trial court erred when it allowed a child's mother to testify that, shortly after a sexual assault was committed against the child, the child told her what happened during the offense, because the State did not qualify the statement as an outcry statement nor did it justify the admission of the statement as an exception to the hearsay rule, the error was waived when the same evidence was introduced at other points in the trial and defendant made no objection. Vargas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4525 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : Elements

82. In a trial for indecency with a child, the trial court properly sustained the state's objection to a question directed at the victim's grandmother about information she learned from the victim's teacher. Peace v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10631, 2012 WL 6634691 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 21 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

83. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

84. Officer's questions or instructions to a driving while intoxicated suspect, recorded on video, were not statements offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and thus, were not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid 801(d). Fischer v. State, 207 S.W.3d 846, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

85. Because an officer did not testify, his narrative observations of a driving while intoxicated suspect were not admissible as a prior statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1). Fischer v. State, 207 S.W.3d 846, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Traffic Regulation Violations : Elements

86. In cases involving offenses such as failure to signal a lane change, a court can determine whether an officer's decision that a driver committed a traffic violation is objectively reasonable without being presented with a detailed account of the officer's observations, and the testimony of the officer who stops the car is not necessary where only an objective finding is required since hearsay information can be provided; therefore, a motion to suppress evidence found in a car stopped for failing to signal a lane change under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 545.104 was properly denied because the testimony of an officer who did not stop the car was sufficient to meet the burden of proving a reasonable suspicion for the stop. Castro v. State, 227 S.W.3d 737, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 863 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : General Overview

87. In an aggravated sexual assault case, the trial court did not err in permitting a Texas Youth Commission official to testify based on his report summarizing juvenile defendant's behavior while at the Commission as the trial court was not precluded from considering hearsay testimony at a transfer/release hearing. In re R.M., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11908 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 3 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Warrantless Searches : Consent to Search : General Overview

88. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the officer to testify that the truck driver did not know defendant's last name because the testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but only to show why the officer was suspicious and asked for consent to search the vehicle. Dominguez v. State, 474 S.W.3d 688, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4875, 2013 WL 1748810 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Custodial Interrogation

89. Murder defendant's statement to police, while he was in custody, was not the product of interrogation because the record indicated he made unsolicited, spontaneous statements that he was just defending himself with a knife. Because he was not subjected to interrogation, the statements were not obtained in violation of federal or state law and, therefore, were admissible at trial as admissions by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid 801(e)(2). Clark v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 24 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Joinder & Severance : Severance of Defendants

90. District court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to sever her murder for remuneration trial from those of her two co-defendants because the vast majority of statements made by the co-defendants did not tend to implicate defendant in the offense; to the extent the co-defendants' statements could be perceived as prejudicial against defendant, such prejudice could be adequately addressed by lesser curative measures, such as limiting instructions. Even if defendant had been tried separately, one co-defendant's statements would have been admissible against defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Briggs v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7131, 2012 WL 3629811 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 24 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

91. In a suppression hearing, the trial court properly denied defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803 because the rules of evidence did not apply. Diaz v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3203, 2010 WL 1714001 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 28 2010).

92. In cases involving offenses such as failure to signal a lane change, a court can determine whether an officer's decision that a driver committed a traffic violation is objectively reasonable without being presented with a detailed account of the officer's observations, and the testimony of the officer who stops the car is not necessary where only an objective finding is required since hearsay information can be provided; therefore, a motion to suppress evidence found in a car stopped for failing to signal a lane change under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 545.104 was properly denied because the testimony of an officer who did not stop the car was sufficient to meet the burden of proving a reasonable suspicion for the stop. Castro v. State, 227 S.W.3d 737, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 863 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

93. Although an aggravated assault complainant's testimony with respect to his injury was based in large part on hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), any error in the admission of his testimony during the punishment phase of defendant's trial was harmless because the same or similar evidence came in elsewhere without objection. Accordingly, because similar evidence, not based on hearsay was admitted without objection, defendant had failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's failure to object, the result of his punishment trial would have been different. Ramirez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 368, 2009 WL 1567340 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 22 2009).

94. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Tests

95. Failure to object under Tex. R. Evid. 801 was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the witness's testimony did not constitute hearsay. Robinson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9809 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

96. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's affidavit of forgery because it was admissible as a prior inconsistent statement, as the victim's uncertain testimony at trial about whether defendant's boyfriend had permission to write the check in question was inconsistent with her affidavit. Pearce v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 549, 2014 WL 942687 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2014).

97. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony from a detective and a bank employee about the victim's identification of the check as forged because the testimony was not hearsay, as it was offered to explain the bank's procedures and how defendant became a suspect. Pearce v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 549, 2014 WL 942687 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2014).

98. Defendant failed to prove that counsel was deficient for failing to object to a detective's hearsay statements because the detective did not testify as an outcry witness but rather detailed her investigation of the sexual assault and provided an explanation of the events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest; because the statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, they were not hearsay. Aranda v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 28 2013).

99. In a driving while intoxicated case, appellant failed to show that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because it was within the realm of trial strategy for defense counsel to decide not to cross-examine a deputy, and a failure to raise a hearsay objection was assumed to be a matter of trial strategy as well; appellant did not argue that his own statements were inadmissible hearsay since they constituted nonhearsay admissions of a party opponent. Gentry v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5980, 2012 WL 3023169 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 25 2012).

100. Counsel's repeated failure to raise valid hearsay objections to evidence of unproven extraneous offenses undermined the proper functioning of the adversarial process; the prosecutor described defendant to the jury as not only a drug dealer, but as a violent, gun toting gangster. Defendant was probation eligible since none of the offenses had been proven in court, and therefore, counsel's representation was so deficient that the trial on punishment could not be relied upon as having produced a just result. Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS

101. Defendant's counsel was not ineffective because 1) defense counsel's strategy in introducing letters that suggested that the allegations against defendant were concocted was reasonable; 2) the record was silent on why counsel did not object to certain testimony and did not elicit testimony about the victim's past sexual behavior, and, thus, the appellate court had to conclude that defendant had not overcome the presumption that counsel's actions and decisions were reasonably professional and motivated by sound trial strategy; 3) counsel's failure to object to the cards/letters written by defendant was not ineffective as they were not hearsay, but rather, admissions by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A); and 4) there was no evidence in the record that defendant was prejudiced by counsel's actions, including failure to timely request a directed verdict. Holbert v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3395, 2011 WL 1679722 (Tex. App. Waco May 4 2011).

102. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

103. In a case in which a jury convicted defendant of aggravated assault and intoxication assault while operating a vehicle and made an affirmative deadly weapon finding, there was no merit to defendant's claim that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to a statement by the officer overseeing the collection of defendant's blood at a hospital because although the officer stated that other officers told him that defendant was intoxicated, there was no indication that the statement was offered for the truth of the matter asserted, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801; in fact, the statement was elicited in the context of laying the predicate to establish reasonable grounds for the officer's belief that defendant was intoxicated as required before the officer could take a blood sample, pursuant to Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.012, and there was nothing in the record that affirmatively demonstrated that counsel's conduct was not grounded in legitimate trial strategy. Whitmore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8889 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 8 2007).

104. In a case involving child sexual assault, a statement given by the child's mother would have not been admissible as an outcry statement since the child had already told someone else over 18 about an alleged incident, and a videotaped interview of the victim three years later was also not admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072; however, the failure to object to these hearsay items did not result in ineffective assistance of counsel because there was a reasonable trial strategy relating to the believability of the victim. Hankey v. State, 231 S.W.3d 54, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

105. During defendant's criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to evidence of hearsay statements by the victim. Bishop v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4874 (Tex. App. Waco June 7 2006).

106. Where the only direct evidence of defendant's indecency with a child by exposure offense was the complainant's testimony, it was within the trial court's discretion to conclude that defense counsel's failure to object to her hearsay statement, compounded by his failure to object to subsequent bolstering hearsay testimony of her friend, warranted the granting of a new trial in the interest of justice because, throughout the trial, the State emphasized the importance of the fact that the complainant had told others about the alleged offense; the statements at issue were not general, but specific testimony regarding out-of-court statements made by the declarants about the particulars of the alleged incident, and the State had not demonstrated that the complainant's out-of-court statements were admissible as prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801. State v. Wolfe, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3648 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006).

107. In a child sexual abuse case where the State's notice of intention to use a child-abuse victim's hearsay statement pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 referenced three outcry witnesses, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a hearing or object; because the victim changed her story, counsel reasonably could have concluded that the outcry statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801 as a prior consistent statement, and counsel's strategy relied on implying that one of the outcry witnesses had convinced the victim to change her story. Vega v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

108. Counsel was not rendered ineffective by a failure to pick up a file that contained an exculpatory affidavit because the affidavit was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802. Coleman v. State, 188 S.W.3d 708, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8143 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

109. Trial counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to request limiting instructions regarding impeachment by defendant's prior inconsistent statement because the statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A); Tex. R. Evid. 613(a) did not apply. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2005).

110. In the punishment phase of a trial for aggravated robbery, counsel was not rendered ineffective by the failure to object to hearsay testimony by a trial-court clerk. Given that defense counsel used the clerk's testimony, this was not one of those "rare cases" in which counsel's performance could be evaluated absent a record of his strategy. Curtis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8543 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 23 2004).

111. In a criminal trial for aggravated assault, trial counsel did not err in failing to object to an investigating officer's testimony of a cohort's out-of-court statements regarding the incident where the same testimony was later received though the cohort's own testimony, a nonhearsay source. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2004).

112. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

113. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Challenges to Jury Venire : Equal Protection Challenges

114. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony of a police officer, who was told defendant had a gun at the time of the incident; the trial court could have found that the officer was merely stating how defendant became the primary suspect and thus the statement was not hearsay, and while it was true that the State referred to the statement in its closing argument as if it was evidence of the truth as to whether defendant had a gun, defendant did not object or request that the jury be properly instructed on the matter. Sanders v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3217 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 24 2006).

115. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony of a police officer, who was told defendant had a gun at the time of the incident; the trial court could have found that the officer was merely stating how defendant became the primary suspect and thus the statement was not hearsay. Sanders v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3217 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 24 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

116. Because a silent videotape of an informant's drug buy from defendant was not intended as a substitute for verbal expression, Tex. R. Evid. 801(a)(2), it was not a statement and was not testimonial; therefore, admission of the tape did not violate the Confrontation Clause, U.S. Const. amend. IV. Watson v. State, 421 S.W.3d 186, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14603, 2013 WL 6244135 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

117. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

118. In a trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under, the trial court did not err by excluding the hearsay recitals in an arrest warrant affidavit and complaint indicating the complainant had previously committed an assault on the defendant; defendant was not prevented from confronting the complainant; he was permitted to cross-examine the complainant concerning his previous conviction for aggravated assault. Bradshaw v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5891 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 6 2006).

119. In a criminal trial for murder, a witness was permitted to testify that she heard defendant ask the co-conspirator to kill her husband so defendant and the co-conspirator "could be together," and that the co-conspirator later told the witness about the specifics of the murder. The co-conspirator's hearsay statements made in the furtherance of the conspiracy were nontestimonial; therefore, the admission of the statements was not barred by the Confrontation Clause. Wiggins v. State, 152 S.W.3d 656, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10267 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Admission of Codefendant Statements

120. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on defendant's claim that his trial counsel gave him incorrect advice regarding the admissibility of his co-defendant's confession because counsel's belief that the videotaped statement would probably be presented was reasonable where the record indicated the co-defendant was going to testify at trial and the admission of the videotaped confession would not have violated Tex. R. Evid. 801(a) or the Confrontation Clause. Even if counsel had been wrong about the videotaped confession of the co-defendant, he was absolutely correct as to the State's ability to use the co-defendant as a witness because the State could have subpoenaed the co-defendant and compelled him to testify without violating the co-defendant's constitutional right against self-incrimination since the co-defendant already had pled guilty to his charge. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 25 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Cross-Examination

121. Court properly rejected defendant's "bolstering" argument because both witnesses testified at trial and were subject to cross-examination. In addition, the complained-of evidence pertained to the witnesses' identification of defendant as the perpetrator after perceiving him. Valencia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3815, 2011 WL 1900180 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 19 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Videotaped Testimony

122. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on defendant's claim that his trial counsel gave him incorrect advice regarding the admissibility of his co-defendant's confession because counsel's belief that the videotaped statement would probably be presented was reasonable where the record indicated the co-defendant was going to testify at trial and the admission of the videotaped confession would not have violated Tex. R. Evid. 801(a) or the Confrontation Clause. Even if counsel had been wrong about the videotaped confession of the co-defendant, he was absolutely correct as to the State's ability to use the co-defendant as a witness because the State could have subpoenaed the co-defendant and compelled him to testify without violating the co-defendant's constitutional right against self-incrimination since the co-defendant already had pled guilty to his charge. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 25 2005).

123. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child where the child was impeached on cross-examination, the child's videotaped statement was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Graves v. State, 176 S.W.3d 422, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9099 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

124. Court properly denied defendant's motion for mistrial after the prosecutor referenced inadmissible hearsay, because the prosecutor's statement was not the kind of extreme, prejudicial statement that could not have been cured by the court's instruction to disregard. Romero v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10442 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 20 2013).

125. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Impeachment

126. Trial counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to request limiting instructions regarding impeachment by defendant's prior inconsistent statement because the statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A); Tex. R. Evid. 613(a) did not apply. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept.

127. Notwithstanding the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's girlfiend's out-of-court statement to a police officer as a prior inconsistent statement where the officer testified that the girlfriend had told him that she had not seen defendant for the few days surrounding the offense but at trial, she testified that he had been with her at the time of the robbery. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Right to Present

128. In an intoxication manslaughter case, the exclusion of hearsay did not thwart defendant's ability to present a defense because he presented evidence that the primary investigator conducted a shoddy investigation, was untrustworthy, and was no longer a state trooper. Defendant also presented evidence that he drank wine with dinner, and that he "seemed fine" when they left the restaurant. Mole v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2838, 2009 WL 1099433 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 23 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Curative Instructions

129. Court properly denied defendant's motion for mistrial after the prosecutor referenced inadmissible hearsay, because the prosecutor's statement was not the kind of extreme, prejudicial statement that could not have been cured by the court's instruction to disregard. Romero v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10442 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 20 2013).

130. Defendant waived any error in the trial court's denial of a mistrial in his aggravated robbery trial. Defendant did not request a curative instruction after the trial court sustained his objection to hearsay testimony by the complainant that his employee identified defendant in a photo lineup and stated that the guy probably came back over to shoot the complainant. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2147 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 23 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

131. Although the trial court erred by denying a limiting instruction because the witnesses' prior statements did not fall within any hearsay exception and so were admissible for impeachment purposes only, the error was harmless. Absent from the inconsistent statements, the record contained other evidence from which the jury could have inferred that defendant did not act in self-defense, and the trial court's charge instructed the jury that a witness's prior inconsistent statement could only be considered for impeachment purposes to asses the witness's credibility. Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

132. Trial court did not err in admitting a letter the district attorney issued to defendant before her arrest because: (1) the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as it was admitted to show that defendant had notice that her activities might have been illegal, rather than to prove that the letter's contents were true; (2) defendant failed to request a limiting instruction, and therefore she could not complain on appeal about the letter's admission for all purposes; and (3) defendant's due process rights were not violated, as the State did not expressly represent the letter as a correct statement of the law until its closing argument, after the trial court had instructed the jury as to the applicable law. Pardue v. State, 252 S.W.3d 690, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2421 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : General Overview

133. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Revocation : Proceedings

134. In defendant's community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in admitting an exhibit containing his letters that were intercepted by the mail clerk of the correctional facility. The letters authored by defendant were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(e)(2)(A), which provided an exception for an admission by a party-opponent. Rivera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8306, 2012 WL 4712902 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 3 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History

135. At a punishment trial, sufficient evidence of identity established that defendant was the same person identified in a prior conviction alleged in the enhancement paragraphs; the proof included evidence, admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801, that defendant pleaded true to the same enhancement paragraph in an aggravated kidnapping jury trial one year earlier. Tomlinson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5182 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

136. Although an aggravated assault complainant's testimony with respect to his injury was based in large part on hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), any error in the admission of his testimony during the punishment phase of defendant's trial was harmless because the same or similar evidence came in elsewhere without objection. Accordingly, because similar evidence, not based on hearsay was admitted without objection, defendant had failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's failure to object, the result of his punishment trial would have been different. Ramirez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 368, 2009 WL 1567340 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 22 2009).

137. Defendant's many statements to officers who had been dispatched to incidents in which she had been involved did not constitute inadmissible hearsay, and therefore were properly admitted during sentencing, because they were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as the statements were defendant's own statements that were offered against her. Sims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 31 2007).

138. At a punishment trial, sufficient evidence of identity established that defendant was the same person identified in a prior conviction alleged in the enhancement paragraphs; the proof included evidence, admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801, that defendant pleaded true to the same enhancement paragraph in an aggravated kidnapping jury trial one year earlier. Tomlinson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5182 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

139. Trial court did not err during a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony from the offender and the State's expert regarding the details of the offender's prior murder conviction because the offender personally testified as to the details of the conviction and the actions he took after the murder, which was not hearsay, and the State's expert testified to many of the same details that the offender related to the jury. Moreover, the trial court provided the jury with a limiting instruction, which it was presumed the jury followed. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : General Overview

140. Trial court erred in allowing a detective to recount to the jury that defendant's statement concerning his role as a mere lookout in a robbery did not match any other statements from any other witnesses. Although the statement was indirect hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(a) and (d), the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), in light of the evidence concerning defendant's role in the robbery. Wilson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4234 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 2 2005).

141. Even though a trial court failed to conduct a reliability hearing on a grandmother's testimony regarding a minor victim's outcry statement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the admission of the evidence as an exception to hearsay was harmless because the statement that defendant had "done stuff" was so vague that it failed to corroborate the allegations of molestation; moreover, the trial court was also not required to conduct a reliability hearing on a police officer before allowing testimony regarding a conversation with the victim about defendant's alleged foot fetish where the officer was called as an expert regarding sexual predators, erotica, and deviant behavior. Leachman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3283 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

142. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because, although the trial court erred in admitting into evidence a television news clip that contained hearsay, the error did not constitute reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 22.2(b). The exhibit did not contain any information that was not otherwise before the jury; the reporter testified at trial and was available for cross-examination and his testimony in open court was more damaging than the short news clip. Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

143. Court did not err in permitting the sexual assault nurse examiner to read a portion of the complainant's statement contained in the examination record, because substantially similar evidence was admitted, and the complainant's credibility had been attacked; the examiner never offered a diagnosis that reflected an opinion directly or indirectly on the credibility of the complainant, and the statement read by the examiner followed and was consistent with the evidence admitted through the complainant's lengthy testimony at trial, which was subjected to exhaustive cross-examination. Luttrell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7496 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 9 2010).

144. Assuming that allowance of a mother's accusations toward defendant was improper hearsay, such allowance was not reversible error because the same facts were shown by unchallenged testimony of defendant's admissions to the accusations; under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), nonconstitutional error that did not affect substantial rights was disregarded. Tucker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7009, 2009 WL 2767304 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 2 2009).

145. Even if a trial court improperly admitted an exhibit that constituted hearsay in a drug case, a reversal was not warranted under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because defendant's substantial rights were not affected; the State relied on other evidence to show a confidential informant's identity. Bouldin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5498 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

146. Defendant did not preserve for review his hearsay argument regarding statements by a seven-year-old complainant in a sexual assault case, which were admitted through the testimony of her mother, a forensic investigator, and a physician, because the only basis on which defendant objected at trial was that complainant was not competent to testify. Hunter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1783 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 9 2006).

147. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, admission of testimony from a Child Protective Services investigator, which included information she received from police officers and medical personnel, was not reversible error. Defendant's hearsay objections were waived because the same evidence was admitted through other witnesses without objection. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

148. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve error in the trial court's decision to sustain the State's hearsay objections when he attempted to testify regarding statements the victim made to him. Defendant did not make a formal offer of proof concerning this proposed evidence, and therefore, he could not claim on appeal that the statements were outside the definition of hearsay. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6800 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 28 2004).

149. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Constitutional Issues

150. Because defendant specifically objected to the 911 call as hearsay and on the basis that the caller was not in court to cross-examine under U.S. Const. amend. VI, defendant sufficiently preserved the error. However, defendant did not object if the 911 call was admitted as non-hearsay. West v. State, 406 S.W.3d 748, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8036 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 2 2013).

151. In a case involving assault on a public servant, defendant did not preserve a Sixth Amendment challenge based on the Confrontation Clause merely by raising a hearsay objection. Reaves v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

152. Even if the trial court erred by admitting hearsay evidence of a detective's testimony concerning what a DPS lab forensic scientist had told him, the error was cured by the subsequent admission of the same or similar evidence without objection. Clerkley v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7693 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

153. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that a witness's statements were nonhearsay because he never argued that contention before the trial court. Pittman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9057 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 31 2012).

154. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the victim's diary because defense counsel failed to make any suggestion that the diary was admissible as impeachment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 613, as a general assertion that the diary was not hearsay was insufficient to make the trial court aware of a Rule 613 argument. Fletcher v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5429, 2012 WL 2783298 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 10 2012).

155. Defendant failed to preserve hearsay error because counsel objected after the witness responded, rather than when the question calling for hearsay was asked. Counsel also did not renew his objection, did not obtain a running objection, and did not request a hearing outside the jury's presence. Salazar v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4983, 2012 WL 2357744 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2012).

156. Objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403 did not preserve hearsay or confrontation objections to the admission of a letter that an accomplice received in jail. Green v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3611, 2012 WL 1606238 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

157. In defendant's kidnapping trial, in which defendant was charged with kidnapping the victim on the orders of a higher-ranking gang member with whom the victim had ended a romantic relationship, evidence of statements made by the other gang member over the telephone ordering defendant to put the victim in the trunk of a car and other statements were admissible as co-conspirator statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Guffey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3293, 2012 WL 1470185 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 26 2012).

158. In a case involving the revocation of deferred adjudication community supervision where the State sought to introduce a recipe for cooking methamphetamine, defendant preserved a hearsay objection because an identification of the exhibit as a "recipe for ice" was somewhat ambiguous and did not convey the document's actual contents; moreover, defendant objected to the document as hearsay almost immediately after a witness identified it. Leitao v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 325, 2009 WL 112768 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 15 2009).

159. Hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 was inadequate under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 where counsel asserted a reiteration of a previous objection but had not previously objected on hearsay grounds, where counsel failed to obtain a ruling, and where the evidence was admitted without objection elsewhere. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

160. In a murder trial, defendant failed to preserve hearsay error with regard to a statement that the complainant made to a witness because defendant permitted the contents of the complainant's statement to come in without objection and therefore failed to comply with Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Gay v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8753 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 1 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

161. Issue of whether the nurse's testimony should have been excluded as hearsay was not preserved for review, because defendant withdrew his objection and never gave the trial court a chance to consider whether the nurse's testimony was hearsay. Arcos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5134, 2011 WL 2652262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 7 2011).

162. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, there was no error in the admission of a trooper's testimony that defendant advised another trooper that she was coming from Denton on her way home; under Tex. R. Evid. 801, defendant's admission was not hearsay, and the complained-of admission came in later without objection. Farmer v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11132 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 28 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

163. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

164. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant preserved error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 regarding the admission of a videotaped interview of complainant because defense counsel objected at trial to the State's proffer of the videotape as a prior consistent statement. Tovar v. State, 221 S.W.3d 185, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Admission of Evidence

165. At defendant's trial for causing serious bodily injury to a child, the trial court admitted the autopsy photographs as business records. Although a photograph or slide is not an out-of-court statement, defendant counsel had no objection at trial; therefore, defendant waived any error in the admission of these exhibits. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3020, 2014 WL 1102004 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 19 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : General Overview

166. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

167. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the game warden's police report into evidence because the report could have been admitted without condition to rebut even a subtle charge of recent fabrication. Stone v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14801, 2013 WL 6405485 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 5 2013).

168. Trial court did not err by excluding a defense witness's testimony as it related to defendant's neighbor's involvement both with illegal drugs and narcotics agents because it was properly excluded as hearsay, as defendant offered the neighbor's statement to prove the truth of the matter asserted, namely that the neighbor gave defendant to the narcotics agents. Ivie v. State, 407 S.W.3d 305, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

169. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's hearsay objection to a tape recording between defendant and another person because that person did not testify and defendant announced his intent in introducing the recording was to prove that he did not commit the crime of burglary of a habitation. Pardee v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6823, 2012 WL 3516485 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 16 2012).

170. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the State to introduce testimony about defendant's criminal record during the guilt-innocence phase of his trial because the State was authorized under Tex. R. Evid. 806 to impeach defendant's hearsay testimony; the two witnesses' testimony was hearsay, as they were statements of defendant made out of court to prove that defendant had purchased the laptop from a friend. The Theus factors also weighed in favor of admission, as all of defendant's prior convictions but one involved crimes of moral turpitude or theft, defendant's otherwise remote convictions were followed by additional convictions, and had the jury believed the witnesses' hearsay statements it likely would have acquitted defendant. Schmidt v. State, 373 S.W.3d

171. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of a prior consistent statement that he made to his mother on the night of the incident under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because defendant had a motive to lie about the incident as soon as he shot his gun at the victim's vehicle. Because defendant had the same motive to lie at the time of his statement to his mother as he did during his testimony at trial, his statement to his m other was not admissible to rebut a charge of recent fabrication. Marshall v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1083, 2012 WL 424918 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 9 2012).

172. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a tattoo of "187" on defendant's hand as a statement that defendant committed murder pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) because the record showed that defendant did not have the tattoo on the night of the shooting, it was placed on him after he was in jail in connection with the underlying murder charge, and went to his state of mind at the time of the shooting and clarified the circumstances surrounding the shooting. It was clear from the placement of the tattoo on his hand that it was an open and obvious statement he wanted everyone to see and it directly contradicted his defensive theory that he acted in self defense. Salazar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6835, 2011 WL 3770297 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26 2011).

173. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting hearsay evidence because most of the challenged testimony was an explanation of how defendant became the suspect. The officer took the jury step-by-step through the investigation to explain how all of the piece of evidence fit together to make defendant the suspect in the murder. Lacaze v. State, 346 S.W.3d 113, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5095 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

174. Trial court did not err by admitting defendant's statement to police officers over defendant's hearsay objection because the statement was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Hart v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3996, 2011 WL 2028216 (Tex. App. Dallas May 25 2011).

175. In assessing whether the cross-examination of a witness makes an implied charge of recent fabrication or improper motive, a reviewing court should focus on the purpose of the impeaching party, the surrounding circumstances, and the interpretation put on them by the trial court, as well as clues from the voir dire, opening statements, and closing arguments; the question is whether from the totality of the questioning, giving deference to the trial judge's assessment of tone, tenor, and demeanor, a reasonable trial judge could conclude that the cross-examiner is mounting a charge of recent fabrication or improper motive; if so, it is not an abuse of discretion to admit a prior consistent statement that was made before any such motive to fabricate arose. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : New Trial

176. Where the only direct evidence of defendant's indecency with a child by exposure offense was the complainant's testimony, it was within the trial court's discretion to conclude that defense counsel's failure to object to her hearsay statement, compounded by his failure to object to subsequent bolstering hearsay testimony of her friend, warranted the granting of a new trial in the interest of justice because, throughout the trial, the State emphasized the importance of the fact that the complainant had told others about the alleged offense; the statements at issue were not general, but specific testimony regarding out-of-court statements made by the declarants about the particulars of the alleged incident, and the State had not demonstrated that the complainant's out-of-court statements were admissible as prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801. State v. Wolfe, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3648 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Clearly Erroneous Review : General Overview

177. In a murder trial, a witness was properly allowed to testify as to a statement by a participant in the crime as to a discussion about whose gun was used because the statement was an adoptive admission. The statement was made in defendant's presence, defendant never expressed surprise or disagreement, and the statement was made in the context of the declarant relating all of the events that occurred in relation to the shooting of the victim, including the struggle that occurred over the gun. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 40 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 5 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 555, 163 L. Ed. 2d 468, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7937, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

178. Defendant was entitled to a new trial on two counts of aggravated sexual abuse of a child where the trial court reversibly erred by admitting the testimony of the officer and a child protective services investigator regarding the victim's prior statements because it was inadmissible impeachment evidence of the victim's trial testimony, during which she recanted her allegations against defendant; the error was not harmless because without the investigator's testimony, the State would not have proven penetration. Klein v. State, 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

179. In defendant's drug case, any error in the denial of admission of the testimony of a police officer as an admission of a party-opponent was harmless where defendant did not attempt to call the other police officer as an impeachment witness, nor did he attempt to offer into evidence the original police report or the other officer's supplement with the varying statement. Shepard v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2793 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 6 2006).

180. In a murder trial, the court improperly admitted draft affidavits relaying a history of domestic violence that were never signed, notarized, or introduced in any prior court proceeding; the admission of the hearsay evidence was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because other similar evidence was before the jury, including prior applications for protective orders. Rogers v. State, 183 S.W.3d 853, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10705 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

181. Although coconspirator's out-of-court statement rhetorically asking why did defendant have to hit the victim did not advance the objective of the conspiracy to hinder defendant's apprehension, and thus should not have been admitted at defendant's murder trial, the error in admitting the out-of-court statement pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) was harmless; therefore, the error in admitting the coconspirator's out-of-court statement did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Byrd v. State, 187 S.W.3d 436, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2128 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

182. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, admission of testimony from a Child Protective Services investigator, which included information she received from police officers and medical personnel, was not reversible error. Defendant's hearsay objections were waived because the same evidence was admitted through other witnesses without objection. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

183. Although a trial court abused its discretion in allowing the State to introduce a sexual assault complainant's diary into evidence because the disputed evidence did not qualify as non-hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1), the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and did not have a substantial or injurious effect on the jury's verdict and did not affect defendant's substantial rights because the complainant testified in detail regarding her sexual encounters with defendant independent of the diary. Further, although on cross-examination the complainant admitted that one of the entries in her diary involving the second time she and defendant had engaged in sexual activity was not true, the record reflected that the jury had acquitted defendant on that count; thus, the trial court's error in admitting the hearsay might have actually served to benefit defendant. Dunbar v. State, 2005 Tex. App.

184. An officer's testimony was not hearsay because it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but to explain the sequence of events leading to defendant's arrest, and even if the testimony was hearsay, any error was harmless because defendant admitted in his own testimony the underlying facts, that he was at a high school, near where a stolen car had been parked, before he encountered the police. Jones v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6966 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 2 2004).

185. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14, the State was improperly allowed to present evidence through the outcry witness that her mother had suspected that defendant was molesting the child even before she had made any outcry. However, the error was harmless since it was unlikely that the single recounting of hearsay about a witness' "suspicion," especially when strongly and directly denied by the declarant herself, had more than a slight influence on the verdict. May v. State, 139 S.W.3d 93, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

186. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony of a witness to the murder, the admission of a statement that was hearsay was non-constitutional error subject to a harm analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), and that the impact of the witness's hearsay testimony that defendant was angry with the victim regarding a transmission was relatively insignificant when considered in connection with the other evidence supporting defendant's guilt, and did not have a substantial and injurious effect on the jury's verdict. Alvarado v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5019 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 3 2004).

187. In a capital murder trial, the admission of a poem written to defendant by defendant's brother who assisted in the crime was hearsay and it was improperly admitted. However, the State provided ample evidence, including eyewitness testimony, establishing that defendant and defendant's brother shot and stabbed the victims; thus, the erroneous admission of the poem did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict and the error was harmless. Windland v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4709 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2004).

188. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Cumulative Errors

189. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

190. In a prosecution of defendant for aggravated robbery, any error in the admission of testimony relating to how the police established another person had an alibi was rendered harmless when substantially the same evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection. Benitez v. Tex., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7651 (Tex. App. Dallas July 15 2014).

191. In the punishment phase of a domestic assault trial, any error was harmless from admitting a recording of conversations between a 911 operator and a hospital employee who was responding to the complainant's injuries because the complainant plainly testified at trial that defendant had hit her with a closed fist in her eye. Sanders v. State, 422 S.W.3d 809, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1090, 2014 WL 325028 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 30 2014).

192. Defendant's conviction for possession of between 4 and 200 grams of cocaine with intent to deliver was appropriate because his failure to continue to object each time the allegedly inadmissible evidence was offered with regard to his W-2, he failed to preserve error. Moreover, even if the officer's testimony was improperly admitted as hearsay evidence, its admission did not harm defendant since the officer later testified without objection that the W-2 bore the same information connecting defendant to the subject property. Anderson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12822, 2013 WL 5657445 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 16 2013).

193. Trial court could have reasonably found that the sergeant's statement that a confidential informant told him that the persons of interest were armed had a purpose other than the truth of the matter stated because it explained the aggressive behavior the officers exhibited at the scene. Even if the statement was hearsay, it was cumulative of other evidence that defendant and his accomplices had firearms with them in the hotel room. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

194. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

195. Because the State's Exhibits 55-60 contained impermissible hearsay, the trial court abused its discretion by overruling defendant's objection to the exhibits; however, the error was harmless, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), because the record showed there was substantial evidence to prove defendant matched the description of the robbery suspect independent of the hearsay evidence. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5357 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2013).

196. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

197. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 7 2012).

198. Even though the trial court erred by excluding from evidence videos of interviews with children using improper interview techniques on the ground that they were inadmissible hearsay, the error was harmless because defendant did not identify for the trial court areas on the recordings that were of particular importance or relevance and his expert witness was able to testify without reservation about what he observed on the videos and the jury saw examples of many of the techniques he said were improper. Pittman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9057 (Tex.

App. Tyler Oct. 31 2012).

199. Defendant's conviction for possession of a controlled substance, namely cocaine, with intent to deliver in an amount of 4 grams or more but less than 200 grams was proper because the evidence admitted without objection was substantially the same as the officers' statements regarding the confidential informant objected to by defendant and thus, any error in admitting the confidential informant's hearsay statements was harmless, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. Even if defendant had objected each time the alleged inadmissible evidence was offered, any error in admitting the evidence would be nonconstitutional error. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6310, 2012 WL 3104272 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2012).

200. Even if the trial court erred by admitting hearsay text messages from defendant's cell phone, the error was harmless because the methamphetamine itself was properly admitted, the fact that defendant possessed the cell phone was admissible, the fact that drug dealers used cell phones was admissible, and the "drug notes" indicating methamphetamine sales and defendant's identification, both found in defendant's laptop bag, sufficiently corroborated accomplice testimony. Black v. State, 358 S.W.3d 823, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 317 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 12 2012).

201. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021 and indecency with a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, although defendant complained of the trial court's overruling of his hearsay objection to the State's question of what the victim told a professional about defendant's conduct, the admission of the testimony during the direct examination of the forensic interviewer was not harmful because it did no more than reiterate facts admitted elsewhere and even included testimony supportive of the defense. Moreover, even assuming, without deciding, that it was inadmissible hearsay, the substance of the complained-of testimony of the forensic interviewer was admitted elsewhere without limitation or an objection preserved on appeal, and, thus, the error, if any, of the trial court in admitting the statement of the forensic interviewer did not affect a substantial right of defendant and had to be disregarded. Drake v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2010 WL 348365 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 31 2010).

202. In defendant's indecency with a child case, any error by the trial court in admitting a videotaped statement was harmless because the testimony included the same facts that were admitted into evidence without objection. Therefore, the trial court's error in admitting the videotape did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Jiminez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7555, 2009 WL 3102010 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 29 2009).

203. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

204. Even though the trial court erred by excluding the accomplice's testimony that defendant appeared surprised when the accomplice exhibited the gun during the robbery, because defendant's surprised reaction was not hearsay, as it was not intended as a substitute for any verbal communication to the accomplice, the error was harmless because two eyewitnesses testified that defendant was the gunman. Woodard v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2897, 2009 WL 1124385 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 28 2009).

205. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the wife's testimony concerning a statement she had previously made to her daughter, because the statement was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, the error was harmless because the wife did not testify about what she meant by telling her daughter "what was going on," and she had previously testified at length without objection about a prior incident with defendant. Edwards v. State, 2009

Tex. App. LEXIS 2873, 2009 WL 1140092 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 27 2009).

206. Court properly admitted an officer's testimony to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest because this was harmless error because the same information was admitted without objection through other witnesses. Flores v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6491 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25, 2008).

207. In a burglary case, testimony that defendant had been kicked out of his father's house for the same offense was inadmissible hearsay; however, the error was not reversible since defendant's substantial rights were not affected. Defendant made several admissions, he had a previous conviction as a juvenile, and his father and stepmother stopped taking defendant's calls or attending his hearings. Craine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6261 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18 2008).

208. In a burglary case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay due to testimony that persons of defendant's age did not burglarize homes and terrorize their neighborhoods; moreover, defendant was not harmed by testimony that he cut the glass out of a victim's home because he admitted such. Moreover, defendant was not harmed by testimony about the condition that he left the burglarized homes in. Craine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6261 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18 2008).

209. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the complainant's statement, "I'm siding with what the emergency people told me" was hearsay. However, the error was harmless because defendant ran over the complainant's ankle, there was substantial evidence to prove that fact independent of the hearsay testimony; the complainant testified that she fell off the moving vehicle, lost consciousness, and awoke in the same area with a crushed ankle. Davidson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

210. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, even if it was error for the court to admit an officer's hearsay testimony regarding the details of the police dispatch, the error was harmless; the same substantive evidence was introduced through another officer's testimony without objection when she testified regarding the type of car defendant was driving and the circumstance surrounding her interview of the robbery complainants. Carson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3091 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

211. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

212. In a murder trial, hearsay was improperly admitted when a detective was permitted to testify that a suspect was eliminated based on the detective's conversation with the suspect's romantic partner, for the sole purpose of proving that the suspect was somewhere other than the victim's home at the time of the killing; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 in light of the other evidence: defendant's DNA, fingerprint, and palm print were on a bloody fire extinguisher and on the coaxial cable with which the killer strangled the victim, and defendant did not dispute that none of the DNA or fingerprint evidence connected the other suspect to the crime scene. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

213. In a murder trial, any hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 was harmless when a detective was permitted to testify as to DNA test results as a basis for eliminating other suspects because the expert who performed the DNA analyses later testified that the tests ruled out the other suspects as contributors to the DNA collected at the crime scene, the very same conclusion that was implicit in the detective's testimony. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

214. In a case involving indecency and aggravated sexual assault, a trial court did not err by admitting certain evidence regarding recorded conversations between defendant and a minor child and the fact that a mother later pressured the child to change her story; even if they constituted hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, the same or similar testimony was admitted elsewhere. Weaver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9200 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 21 2007).

215. In a murder trial, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) to allow a detective to testify about a co-defendant's out-of-court statement regarding the co-defendant's intent, plan, and preparation to commit a robbery. However, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2; other evidence implicated defendant as a suspect in the robbery, including eyewitness statements, defendant's seeking medical treatment for a gunshot wound, and defendant's confession to entering the crime scene to "get some change." Henry v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6794 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 23 2007).

216. Detective's answers to questions concerning whether a particular person was of interest in the murder investigation and whether defendant's wife received a phone call after talking to investigators did not relay out of court statements and therefore were not hearsay. Assuming that the detective's testimony concerning the victim's relationship with defendant's wife and where the victim was when he was shot relayed out of court statements, the detective's testimony did not constitute hearsay because it was admitted to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest for the victim's murder. Garcia v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 28 2007).

217. During defendant's criminal trial for two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's admission of out of court testimony concerning the child's dream in which defendant was having sexual relations with her aunt; the evidence concerned a dream that was never asserted to be true; it concerned the child's state of mind, not defendant's state of mind or conduct. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9509 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 2 2006).

218. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

219. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

220. Documents seized from the vehicle of defendant's mother pursuant to a search warrant were admissible because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted but to show that defendant had access to the vehicle in which defendant fled the crime scene. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

221. Although a murder victim's written statement that was made by four months before her death and that described a physical altercation with defendant was erroneously admitted because it was objectionable hearsay, the error was harmless because there was substantial evidence of defendant's guilt, exclusive of the written statement, because reference to the statement was relatively limited, and because many of the facts mentioned in the statement were properly in the record through other testimony. Barrett v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2251, 2014 WL 792123 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 27 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Review : Standards of Review : Contrary & Unreasonable Standard

222. District court denied a state inmate's petition under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254, challenging his conviction and sentence for murder, because the inmate did not show he was denied effective assistance of counsel or that a state habeas court made findings that were contrary to clearly established federal law when it rejected the inmate's claims; although the inmate claimed that the trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation when it admitted hearsay testimony, the district court found that the trial court properly admitted testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance; even assuming arguendo that the trial court erred, the error was harmless in light of the other incriminating evidence the State introduced. Turnbow v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77098 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 17 2007).

Estate, Gift & Trust Law : Nonprobate Transfers : Jointly Held Property : Bank Accounts

223. Claimants were not allowed to introduce parol evidence to establish survivorship interests in alleged joint accounts because there was no fraud nor mistake pled, nor any claim that certificate of deposit (CD) agreements were incomplete or ambiguous; relying on Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 439, the Deadman's Statute under Tex. R. Evid. 601, the parol evidence rule, the "four corners of the document" rule, hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and double hearsay, an estate was correct in asserting that the claimants could not use extrinsic evidence in an attempt to get around the four corners of the CDs. Clark v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2211 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 27 2008).

Evidence : General Overview

224. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a 12-year-old boy's translation of his deaf aunt's statement to him that she communicated through sign language as hearsay because defendant failed to establish the nephew's competency, proficiency, and reliability as a translator of sign language. Moland v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1062, 2012 WL 403885 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 9 2012).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

225. Defendant's objection to a certified copy of a prior federal judgment convicting him of two felonies as unauthenticated had no merit because the Texas Rules of Evidence allowed the trial court to admit a certified copy of a public record as properly authenticated.. Rowell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596, 2011 WL 3612297 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 18 2011).

226. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter from a witness because, at the conclusion of the witness's testimony, he was excused without any request that he be subject to recall, the witness could not be located when defendant offered the letter into evidence, and thus, the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination. Furthermore, the letter was not authenticated and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6577, 2009 WL 2581286 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 20 2009).

227. In defendant's capital murder case, a court properly admitted an anonymous letter regarding defendant, addressed to a reporter, where in addition to being found on defendant's computer, the letter contained numerous intimate details of defendant's life, confirmed by other evidence, that collectively supported an inference that she was the author; given those circumstances, it was a reasonable exercise of the trial court's discretion to conclude that the letter was written by defendant, and because the letter was shown to be written by defendant, it was not hearsay when offered against her. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

228. Nothing in the worker's Social Security disability finding document indicated that the worker was cross-examined at his disability hearing as required by Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); it was not clear whether the disability finding was the worker's "statement" as it was a document issued by a federal agency and not the worker himself, and because the document was not certified, its authenticity was at issue, Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Belmarez v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7945, 2011 WL 4696750 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2011).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

229. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

Evidence : Competency : Affirmations & Oaths

230. At defendant's trial for kidnapping and murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a video-recorded witness statement. Because the witness statement was not given under oath, it was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A). Gamez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6774, 2012 WL 3329200 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 15 2012).

Evidence : Competency : Interpreters

231. If the proponent of an out-of-court translation of an out-of-court statement of a party can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the trial court that the party authorized the interpreter to speak for him on the particular occasion, or otherwise adopted the interpreter as his agent for purposes of translating the particular statement, then the out-of-court interpretation may properly be admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(C) or (D). If the trial court is not so satisfied, it should sustain a hearsay objection to the out-of-court translation, under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Saavedra v. State, 297 S.W.3d 342, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1560 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

232. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document contained hearsay statements not within an exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

233. There was no error when a medical examiner who was not present at an autopsy testified about photographs taken during the autopsy because the photographs were not an out-of-court statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and there was no question under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) that they accurately depicted the appearance of the victim's body. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

234. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by admitting the recording of the call a cab driver made to 9-1-1. The statements overheard by the cab driver were made by defendant and offered against him; thus, the statements were admissible as admissions by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

235. In defendant's indecency with a child case, any error by the trial court in admitting a videotaped statement was harmless because the testimony included the same facts that were admitted into evidence without objection. Therefore, the trial court's error in admitting the videotape did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Jiminez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7555, 2009 WL 3102010 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 29 2009).

236. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant preserved error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 regarding the admission of a videotaped interview of complainant because defense counsel objected at trial to the State's proffer of the videotape as a prior consistent statement. Tovar v. State, 221 S.W.3d 185, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Affidavits

237. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

238. Statements in a letter relating to defendant's abusive conduct causing the victim's suicidal thoughts were admissible under the rule of optional completeness because those statements were from the same document and on the same subject as the statements used by defendant, and defendant's cross-examination of the victim could have left a false impression with the jury that the victim's suicidal thoughts were due to issues other than defendant's conduct. Lofton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9666 (Tex. App.--Dallas Dec. 9, 2011).

239. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

240. Upon summary judgment in a lessor's action for damages under an equipment lease agreement, the trial court was permitted to consider exhibits consisting of documents the lessee generated that reflected payments made under the lease because they were admissions by a party opponent and excluded from the hearsay rule. Choice Asset Mgmt., Inc. v. Cit Tech. Fin. Servs., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11584 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 11 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Summaries

241. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006, as it was shown that the records were voluminous, were made available to the customers for inspection, and the underlying records were admissible as non-hearsay admissions of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). C.M. Asfahl Agency v. Tensor, Inc., 135 S.W.3d 768, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 808 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

242. Court properly excluded testimony because the proffered testimony centered on what the victim told the witness regarding a boy wanting to have sexual intercourse with her, and that constituted hearsay. Vega v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7948 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 24 2014).

243. In an eviction action, the apartment manager's testimony that the police department received a disturbance call was inadmissible hearsay; its admission was harmless because she had already testified, without objection, that law enforcement had been called to respond to the disturbance. A police officer also testified that he was called to assist other officers on the scene and personally witnessed a disturbance. Black v. Countryside Vill. Apts., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14853, 2013 WL 6506303 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2013).

244. Defendant's conviction for possession of between 4 and 200 grams of cocaine with intent to deliver was appropriate because his failure to continue to object each time the allegedly inadmissible evidence was offered with regard to his W-2, he failed to preserve error. Moreover, even if the officer's testimony was improperly admitted as hearsay evidence, its admission did not harm defendant since the officer later testified without objection that the W-2 bore the same information connecting defendant to the subject property. Anderson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12822, 2013 WL 5657445 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 16 2013).

245. Even if the trial court erred by admitting hearsay evidence of a detective's testimony concerning what a DPS lab forensic scientist had told him, the error was cured by the subsequent admission of the same or similar evidence without objection. Clerkley v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7693 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

246. Appellant did not object at trial on Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) grounds or any grounds that would have put the trial court on notice that he was objecting to the introduction of such evidence, plus his hearsay, speculation, and relevancy objections did not preserve error under Rule 404(b), such that he failed to preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Hawkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 7 2013).

247. Even assuming the issue was preserved, a question did not relate to an extraneous offense, and the trial court sustained appellant's hearsay objection, after which appellant did not take any action, and as he obtained all the relief he requested, he could not complain on appeal. Hawkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 7 2013).

248. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because, although the trial court erred in admitting into evidence a television news clip that contained hearsay, the error did not constitute reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 22.2(b). The exhibit did not contain any information that was not otherwise before the jury; the reporter testified at trial and was available for cross-examination and his testimony in open court was more damaging than the short news clip. Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

249. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

250. Appellant did not raise a hearsay objection, and because his trial objection did not comport with his appellate issue, the issue was waived. Johnson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7721 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

251. Defendant's conviction for possession of a controlled substance, namely cocaine, with intent to deliver in an amount of 4 grams or more but less than 200 grams was proper because the evidence admitted without objection was substantially the same as the officers' statements regarding the confidential informant objected to by defendant and thus, any error in admitting the confidential informant's hearsay statements was harmless, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. Even if defendant had objected each time the alleged inadmissible evidence was offered, any error in admitting the evidence would be nonconstitutional error. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6310, 2012 WL 3104272 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2012).

252. In a murder trial where defendant claimed he acted in self-defense, the trial court did not err by excluding testimony from a psychologist regarding the victim's acts of violence; because the psychologist's knowledge of any acts committed by the victim came entirely from his review of the medical records, the psychologist's proffered testimony was hearsay for which no exception was offered under Tex. R. Evid. 801-804. Mason v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314, 2012 WL 1058792 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 22 2012).

253. Even if the trial court erred by admitting hearsay text messages from defendant's cell phone, the error was harmless because the methamphetamine itself was properly admitted, the fact that defendant possessed the cell phone was admissible, the fact that drug dealers used cell phones was admissible, and the "drug notes" indicating methamphetamine sales and defendant's identification, both found in defendant's laptop bag, sufficiently corroborated accomplice testimony. Black v. State, 358 S.W.3d 823, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 317 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 12 2012).

254. Statements in a letter relating to defendant's abusive conduct causing the victim's suicidal thoughts were admissible under the rule of optional completeness because those statements were from the same document and on the same subject as the statements used by defendant, and defendant's cross-examination of the victim could have left a false impression with the jury that the victim's suicidal thoughts were due to issues other than defendant's conduct. Lofton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9666 (Tex. App.--Dallas Dec. 9, 2011).

255. Court properly rejected defendant's "bolstering" argument because both witnesses testified at trial and were subject to cross-examination. In addition, the complained-of evidence pertained to the witnesses' identification of defendant as the perpetrator after perceiving him. Valencia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3815, 2011 WL 1900180 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 19 2011).

256. Counsel's repeated failure to raise valid hearsay objections to evidence of unproven extraneous offenses undermined the proper functioning of the adversarial process; the prosecutor described defendant to the jury as not only a drug dealer, but as a violent, gun toting gangster. Defendant was probation eligible since none of the offenses had been proven in court, and therefore, counsel's representation was so deficient that the trial on punishment could not be relied upon as having produced a just result. Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3522, 2011 WL 1902066 (Tex. App. Tyler May 11 2011).

257. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the boyfriend of one of the victims (subsequently her husband), because at the time the boyfriend testified the victim had already testified in detail as to defendant's alleged conduct and the role of the victim's mother, the boyfriend did not mention any individual in connection with the molestation, and the record did not establish the inescapable conclusion that the State's sole purpose in eliciting the boyfriend's testimony was to prove that the victim had told him that she had been molested by defendant. De La Garza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1617, 2011 WL 768872 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 7 2011).

258. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

259. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009

Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

260. In an intoxication manslaughter case, the exclusion of hearsay did not thwart defendant's ability to present a defense because he presented evidence that the primary investigator conducted a shoddy investigation, was untrustworthy, and was no longer a state trooper. Defendant also presented evidence that he drank wine with dinner, and that he "seemed fine" when they left the restaurant. Mole v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2838, 2009 WL 1099433 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 23 2009).

261. In a case involving the revocation of deferred adjudication community supervision where the State sought to introduce a recipe for cooking methamphetamine, defendant preserved a hearsay objection because an identification of the exhibit as a "recipe for ice" was somewhat ambiguous and did not convey the document's actual contents; moreover, defendant objected to the document as hearsay almost immediately after a witness identified it. Leitao v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 325, 2009 WL 112768 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 15 2009).

262. In a case involving assault on a public servant, defendant did not preserve a Sixth Amendment challenge based on the Confrontation Clause merely by raising a hearsay objection. Reaves v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2008).

263. In a burglary case, testimony that defendant had been kicked out of his father's house for the same offense was inadmissible hearsay; however, the error was not reversible since defendant's substantial rights were not affected. Defendant made several admissions, he had a previous conviction as a juvenile, and his father and stepmother stopped taking defendant's calls or attending his hearings. Craine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6261 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18 2008).

264. In a burglary case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay due to testimony that persons of defendant's age did not burglarize homes and terrorize their neighborhoods; moreover, defendant was not harmed by testimony that he cut the glass out of a victim's home because he admitted such. Moreover, defendant was not harmed by testimony about the condition that he left the burglarized homes in. Craine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6261 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18 2008).

265. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the complainant's statement, "I'm siding with what the emergency people told me" was hearsay. However, the error was harmless because defendant ran over the complainant's ankle, there was substantial evidence to prove that fact independent of the hearsay testimony; the complainant testified that she fell off the moving vehicle, lost consciousness, and awoke in the same area with a crushed ankle. Davidson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

266. In a child abuse case, if there was error in admitting a doctor's affidavit regarding the child's cause of death over defendant's hearsay objection, it was cured and rendered harmless by the doctor's expansive testimony to these same matters; defendant lodged no objection to this trial testimony. Taylor v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6898 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 28 2007).

267. Any error in admitting a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony, over defendant's hearsay objection, about a study conducted by another person explaining why a child victim of a sexual assault would not show evidence of trauma to her private parts was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was introduced at trial. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

268. Even if a trial court improperly admitted an exhibit that constituted hearsay in a drug case, a reversal was not warranted under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because defendant's substantial rights were not affected; the State relied on other evidence to show a confidential informant's identity. Bouldin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5498 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

269. Trial court properly excluded a deposition because it had been taken in another lawsuit and, although appellant's opinion at the time would have been within the exception to the hearsay rule provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), the deposition's contents were inadmissible hearsay because the statements contained within it pertained to the other party's statements and state of mind rather than to appellant's. Trantham v. Isaacks, 218 S.W.3d 750, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 501 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 892, 128 S. Ct. 340, 169 L. Ed. 2d 155, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10018 (2007).

270. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

271. In a criminal trial for sexual assault, the court did not err by excluding hearsay statements of a physician admitted through a police officer who spoke to the physican after he attended to the rape victim; the testimony was hearsay not within an exception. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

272. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

273. Defendant's conviction of felony murder under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02(b)(3) following the death of child for whom defendant was babysitting was affirmed; the trial court did not err in admitting a redacted version of defendant's videotaped deposition taken during prior wrongful death litigation because the testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Kemmerer v. State, 113 S.W.3d 513, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 5895 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : General Overview

274. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did the veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to the veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : Impeachment Evidence

275. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

276. In a trial for defendant's murder of a stepchild, defendant was not entitled to introduce, as a prior inconsistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801, a statement by the child's other parent about hating children because defendant called the other parent to the stand for the primary purpose of placing before the jury the inadmissible hearsay statement as substantive evidence of the other parent's guilt; any probative value the impeachment evidence might have had was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Lewis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9519 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 5 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : Rehabilitation

277. Trial court properly admitted a written statement of a witness claiming that defendant told his girlfriend to run over a decedent with his truck, as the statement was admissible and not hearsay under the rule of optional completeness and the rule allowing the admission of a prior consistent statement after a claim of recent fabrication, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Moore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2774 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

278. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statements into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

279. In a criminal trial, defendant's testimony about the victim's statement that she was going to injure herself to support the assault charge and then hit herself in the face was not hearsay because it was offered to describe one person's observations about how another person acted. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

280. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

281. In a will contest, the trial court erred by granting summary judgment on the issue of testamentary capacity because testimony from witnesses that decedent was not in a state of mind to conduct financial affairs when he signed his will was sufficient to show the existence of a material fact issue with respect to testamentary capacity. The court was permitted to consider the partial deposition testimony of several witnesses as statements which were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(3)'s provision for a deposition taken in the same civil proceeding. In re Estate of O'Neil, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7376, 2012 WL 3776490 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2012).

282. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting hearsay evidence because most of the challenged testimony was an explanation of how defendant became the suspect. The officer took the jury step-by-step through the investigation to explain how all of the piece of evidence fit together to make defendant the suspect in the murder. Lacaze v. State, 346 S.W.3d 113, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5095 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

283. Detective's answers to questions concerning a nightclub where defendant was seen on the night of a murder did not relay out of court statements and therefore were not hearsay. Assuming that the detective's testimony concerning a witness to the murder relayed an out of court statement, the detective's testimony did not constitute hearsay because it was admitted to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest for the victim's murder. Garcia v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 28 2007).

284. In defendant's burglary case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify that, as she could not come to a conclusion on the latent fingerprint, she asked other examiners to examine the print, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony, when taken in context, did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of the other examiner's conclusions about the print and was therefore, not hearsay; the only information imparted by the testimony was that others had examined the print and had reached a conclusion, and that their conclusions were the same. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

285. In a case of fleeing from arrest, a police officer's testimony regarding another officer's statement to defendant was not subject to exclusion as hearsay. Because defendant acquiesced in the other officer's statement, the statement was an adoptive admission and was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B). Gant v. State, 153 S.W.3d 294, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11841 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1574, 164 L. Ed. 2d 307, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2315, 74 U.S.L.W. 3530 (U.S. 2006).

286. Victim's co-worker's testimony was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, her testimony was offered pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. proc. Ann. art. 38.36(a) to provide her perception of the relationship between the victim and defendant prior to the victim's death. Montgomery v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10546 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 24 2004).

287. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony of a witness to the murder, the admission of a statement that was hearsay was non-constitutional error subject to a harm analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), and that the impact of the witness's hearsay testimony that defendant was angry with the victim regarding a transmission was relatively insignificant when considered in connection with the other evidence supporting defendant's guilt, and did not have a substantial and injurious effect on the jury's verdict. Alvarado v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5019 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 3 2004).

288. Admission of a statement that is hearsay is nonconstitutional error subject to a harm analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); a nonconstitutional error must be disregarded unless it affected defendant's "substantial rights" by having a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Shaw v. State, 122 S.W.3d 358, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9864 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

289. Defendant's conviction of felony murder under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02(b)(3) following the death of child for whom defendant was babysitting was affirmed; the trial court did not err in admitting a redacted version of defendant's videotaped deposition taken during prior wrongful death litigation because the testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Kemmerer v. State, 113 S.W.3d 513, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 5895 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

290. In defendant's criminal trial, testimony of arresting officer as to an out of court statement that defendant's car "had been possibly involved in a robbery three days earlier" was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) where the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, it was offered to show probable cause for the detention of the defendant for traffic violations. Ellis v. State, 99 S.W.3d 783, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1445 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

291. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

292. When a defendant's friend made a statement to police that they had just assaulted the victim, the statement was admissible as an adoptive admission within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 801; the defendant did not object to the statement when it was made, and actually confirmed it moments later. Bean v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 9 1998).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

293. Exhibit should not have been excluded on the basis of the hearsay objection, because the business records affidavit made by the custodian of records precisely tracked the requirements in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

294. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

295. In a creditor's suit to recover unpaid debt on a credit card account, the trial court erroneously excluded the billing statements and notices informing the debtor of changes in his credit card agreement where the creditor properly established the applicability of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6)'s business records hearsay exception because an employee of the company that provided administrative services for the creditor's credit card accounts testified that: (1) she had worked for the company for nearly seven years; (2) the company provided support for the creditor's credit card accounts; (3) her job responsibilities gave her the right to access the kind of information included in the monthly billing statements for the debtor's account; (4) she was the custodian of those records; (5) the statements in the debtor's billing statements were made at or near the time of the information recorded therein by a person with knowledge; and (6) the debtor's billing statements and other billing statements like it were made and kept in the regular course of the company's business. Moreover, the billing records could qualify for the business records hearsay exception even if they were business records of a third party to the lawsuit because the employee testified that the records were kept in the course of the company's business, that the company issued billing statements and provided collections and litigation support, and that she had no indication of any lack of trustworthiness in the way the documents were handled, generated, or kept. Citibank (s.D.), N.A. v. Tate, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9959 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 16 2010).

296. Trial court erred in admitting the complained-of documents, because there was no indication that the business knew of the events recorded on the third-party documents, when the witness testified about the telemarketing application, he stated that the information was inputted by someone at the company, although he had no personal information about how the information was inputted or how the information was obtained, and the same observation could be made about the account statements and the cardholder agreement. Riddle v. Unifund Ccr

Patrns, 298 S.W.3d 780, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7805 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 7 2009).

297. Trial court's exclusion of an affidavit as inadmissible hearsay was proper where it could not serve as an authentication to business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) because it had not been on file for the requisite fourteen days before the subsequent trial; the affidavit had been signed only five days prior to the subsequent trial. Benchmark Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2947, 2009 WL 1153385 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 30 2009).

298. In a murder case, an autopsy report was properly admitted as a public record and a business record because the report set forth matters observed pursuant to a duty imposed by law, including the location and the nature of the injuries; a doctor testified and was subject to cross-examination and he was also a signatory to the report. Terrazas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6696 (Tex. App. Austin July 28 2006).

299. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant's proffer of evidence about the victim's written medical report included no affidavit or live testimonial sponsorship from a records custodian; therefore, the medical records were hearsay, and the trial court properly excluded their admission. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

300. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

301. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

302. In a breach of contract and fraudulent inducement case, a trial court properly refused to admit an exhibit because it was irrelevant to either claim; moreover, it did not fit within the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Case Corp. v. Hi-Class Bus. Sys. of Am., Inc., 184 S.W.3d 760, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10549 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

303. Documents that a successor administrator of a decedent's estate used to establish the loss to the estate concerning the decedent's house, which occurred during the former administrator's administration, were not inadmissible hearsay in a breach of fiduciary duty action against the former administrator because the documents were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) that related to the mortgage on the house. A number of the documents concerning the house were duplicates of evidence duly admitted in related proceedings, and there was no evidence indicating that the documents were inadmissible hearsay in the related proceedings. Sierad v. Barnett, 164 S.W.3d 471, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

304. In a personal injury case, letters written by a doctor to plaintiff's attorney were inadmissible because they admittedly were generated to facilitate settlement of a legal claim. The difficulty of lay persons reading and understanding medical records was inherent in the records themselves, especially when no explanatory expert testimony was presented, and for those reasons, the two excluded letters did not qualify under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Grove v. Overby, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6822 (Tex. App. Austin July 29 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

305. At defendant's trial for causing serious bodily injury to a child, the trial court admitted the autopsy photographs as business records. Although a photograph or slide is not an out-of-court statement, defendant counsel had no objection at trial; therefore, defendant waived any error in the admission of these exhibits. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3020, 2014 WL 1102004 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 19 2014).

306. At defendant's trial for theft of a plasma television, the State was permitted to admit a purchasing requisition form showing the cost of replacing the television under the business records exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803; the authenticating witness testified that he was the head of the security, he made the form in the regular course of business near the time of the events in question, such forms were created to inform the finance department of the price of a needed item, and he was authorized to keep and control such forms; the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Baker v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7886 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 4 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

307. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Dying Declarations : General Overview

308. In defendant's murder case, a witness was properly allowed to testify to the victim's statements made at the hospital because it was undisputed that his injuries were severe and his prognosis was grim. Given the extent of the victim's injuries, the witness's impression that the victim knew there was a possibility he would die after being removed from the ventilator, and the giving of last rites, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony under the dying declarations exception to the hearsay rule. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Dying Declarations : Belief of Imminent Death

309. In defendant's murder case, a witness was properly allowed to testify to the victim's statements made at the hospital because it was undisputed that his injuries were severe and his prognosis was grim. Given the extent of the victim's injuries, the witness's impression that the victim knew there was a possibility he would die after being removed from the ventilator, and the giving of last rites, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony under the dying declarations exception to the hearsay rule. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Former Testimony of Unavailable Declarants

310. At defendant's trial for murder, the trial court did not err by admitting the prior testimony from an accomplice witness that constituted hearsay under Tex. R Evid. 801(d); he was unavailable under the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 804 because he invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Lockridge v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6147 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2013).

311. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Market Reports & Commercial Publications : General Overview

312. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

313. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

314. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

315. Defendant failed to show that the court erred in admitting the statements made to the nurse for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, because the qualifications of the person hearing the statements was not the important consideration, and the fact that the nurse could have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the conclusion that the statements were inadmissible. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13160, 2013 WL 5773573 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 23 2013).

316. In defendant's sexual abuse case, the victim's hearsay statements to a doctor were properly admitted because the doctor testified that she had specialized training in treating conditions related to sexual abuse, and that she always asked her patients for a thorough medical history prior to making any diagnosis. The doctor found that the victim had a "notch" on her hymen, which was a "suspicious" finding consistent with what the victim had told her about the abuse she suffered. Whitman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 936, 2012 WL 361740 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

317. Defendant failed to carry his burden of establishing that a hearsay exception applied to make the clinical social worker's testimony admissible into evidence, because defendant did not establish that truth-telling was a vital component of the social worker's treatment of the niece or that the niece was aware that being truthful was essential to her therapy. Harrington v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2138, 2010 WL 1137046 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 25 2010).

318. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The testimony was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

319. Where defendant was convicted of the aggravated sexual assault of his thirteen-year-old niece, the trial court erred by admitting the therapist's testimony that the child told her that family members were pressuring her and her mother to drop the charges; the State offered the therapist's statements to show how the child reacted to perceived pressures; the same testimony was admitted through other witnesses without objection. Arguelles v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2007).

320. In a personal injury suit, where appellee filed affidavits for the authentication of medical bills and appellant filed a chiropractor's controverting affidavit, the controverting affidavit and report were sufficient under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001(f) to controvert appellee's affidavit as to chiropractic expenses but appellant's chiropractor did not show that the chiropractor was qualified to controvert the reasonableness of the medical doctor's, radiologist's, or pharmacist's bills. Hong v. Bennett, 209 S.W.3d 795, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10105 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

321. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant's proffer of evidence about the victim's written medical report included no affidavit or live testimonial sponsorship from a records custodian; therefore, the medical records were hearsay, and the trial court properly excluded their admission. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : General Overview

322. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 7 2012).

323. Because an officer did not testify, his narrative observations of a driving while intoxicated suspect were not admissible as a prior statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1). Fischer v. State, 207 S.W.3d 846, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

324. In a medical malpractice case, the trial court did not err in excluding, as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), a statement by a witness who would have testified that the doctor was afraid that he had done something wrong; the statement was offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and the present sense impression rule of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) did not apply because there was no evidence of contemporaneity. Daniels v. Yancey, 175 S.W.3d 889, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8789 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : Contemporaneous Statements

325. In defendant's murder case, the court properly excluded testimony of a witness regarding what the victim told the witness about altercations between the victim and defendant because the testimony concerning what the victim said to the witness at least two days after the event in question was not a present sense impression, there was no evidence in the record that the victim was "in the instant grip of violent emotion, excitement or pain" immediately before or during his recounting of the events, and the victim's statements were not self-inculpatory. Eisenman v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2008).

326. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

327. Debtor argued that the certificate of title only stood as hearsay evidence, but that was not the law, plus the notation on the certificate of title is the only way for a lienholder to secure an automobile lien, for purposes of Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 501.111(a). Wyatt v. Capital One Auto Fin., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 563, 71 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (CBC) 8 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 29 2010).

328. In a murder case, an autopsy report was properly admitted as a public record and a business record because the report set forth matters observed pursuant to a duty imposed by law, including the location and the nature of the injuries; a doctor testified and was subject to cross-examination and he was also a signatory to the report. Terrazas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6696 (Tex. App. Austin July 28 2006).

329. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Law Enforcement Reports

330. Trial court did not err by excluding from evidence written witness statements attached to an officer's accident report because the statements were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and they did not fall under the public records exception, as witness statements in an officer's file did not qualify. Sherbin v. Dean Word Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5362, 2010 WL 2698761 (Tex. App. Austin July 9 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Recollection Refreshed

331. In defendant's assault case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify about the incident because the officer did not say that his testimony was based on another officer's report, nor did he quote or read from that officer's report or testify to any conclusions made by the other officer; rather, the officer refreshed his memory about his personal observations by reviewing the other officer's report, then testified from his own memory of those observations. Thrower v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2590 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 10 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : Confrontation Clause Requirements

332. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause were not violated by the admission of a chemist's testimony and related exhibits related to the laboratory results obtained by a nontestifying chemist; Crawford did not apply to the baggies of controlled substances admitted as exhibits because they were not "statements" under Tex. R. Evid. 801(a). Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : General Overview

333. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the victim told a witness that defendant told her to open her mouth and that was going to stick his penis in her mouth. Although a quarter of an hour passed, the victim was shaking and crying. Ervin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8213 (Tex. App. Dallas July 3 2013).

334. In a sexual assault of a child case, the victim's mother's testimony regarding what the victim told her was admissible as an excited utterance because the time between when the grandmother witnessed the encounter and the victim made the declaration that defendant "put his private in her mouth" was 10 minutes and, throughout that period, the victim cried. Although the mother asked the victim what was wrong, the declaration was not the result of questioning and was a spontaneous declaration regarding the occurrence that caused the emotional state the victim was in at a time that the victim was still in that emotional state. In re A. W. B., 419 S.W.3d 351, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 747 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 2 2010).

335. In defendant's murder case, the court properly admitted the deaf victim's written statements under the excited utterance exception because the statements related to a startling event: she wrote that she was raped, hit, and threatened with a knife that evening, the deputy testified that the statements were made while the victim was scared and angry, and thus, it was reasonable for the trial court to infer that the victim was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9779 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

336. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer testimony regarding the victim's statements because, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, an shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident when she spoke to the officer. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9054, 2009 WL 4051980 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 24 2009).

337. In a failure to stop case, the court properly excluded testimony that defendant's husband told her that he had been involved in an accident because the traffic accident was not such a startling event that the husband was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event or condition when the statement was made; the accident was not of a serious nature, the vehicle was still operable, the injuries were relatively minor, and the statements were made in response to a question and were untrue since the driver of the other car had not left the scene. Martinez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 927 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 8 2007).

338. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

339. Court properly admitted a child's statements as excited utterances where the police officer testified that the child had appeared to be upset not only when he entered the room, but for some time afterward, as she continued to express fear and distress regarding the disappearance and, she believed, death of her mother. Lagunas v. State, 187 S.W.3d 503, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6957 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Criminal Trials

340. Police officer's testimony regarding the complainant's statements made shortly after the alleged assault occurred was properly admitted because the following circumstances supported application of the excited utterance hearsay exception: (1) the officer testified he arrived on the scene within six minutes of the 911 call; (2) the trial court reasonably could have concluded that no significant amount of time elapsed between the officer's arrival and his conversation with the complainant; (3) the officer described the complainant as being visibly shocked, dazed, and very upset and sad; and (4) the officer also observed that the complainant was bleeding from lacerations on his arm. Salinas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14761, 2013 WL 6328863 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 5 2013).

341. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

342. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802, in admitting, as excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), testimony from a deceased witness's wife about his statements. It could not reasonably be disputed that the decedent's statement shortly after the murder related to a startling event, and the wife testified that the decedent was completely out of it, rambling, and really nervous and scared. Wells v. State, 319 S.W.3d 82, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2595 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 14 2010).

343. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

344. In a domestic assault case, the court properly admitted the victim's statement as an excited utterance because the victim's answer to a standard form provided by the officer said she would feel danger after the officer left. Based on those facts, which indicated that the victim might still then have been dominated by emotions when making her statements, the trial judge's discretionary decision was not so clearly wrong as to lie outside that zone within which reasonable persons might disagree. James v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8494, 2009 WL 3643554 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 5 2009).

345. Court properly allowed a police officer to testify because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect in the case and the status of the investigation; therefore, the officer's testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Moreover, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, and shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

346. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, there was no error in admitting the statement of a 911 caller whom officers called back because the statement was properly found to be an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; at the time of the statement, defendant had not been apprehended, and an officer testified that the caller sounded upset. Jarrell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6357 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

347. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 801, in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to the police as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the officer stated that the complainant was very excited, very nervous, almost to the point where the complainant's nervousness made the officer nervous; further, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the sexual assault occurred within the past few hours, supporting the admission. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

348. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to a relative as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although the relative described the complainant's demeanor as absolutely flat and without emotion, the relative further explained that the complainant was beyond upset, just absolutely flat and in shock about what had just happened. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

349. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

350. In a trial for family assault, testimony concerning the complainant's statements was properly admitted as excited utterance; the complainant was visibly shaken and highly upset and her intoxication did not negate her state of excitement. Hudson v. State, 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

351. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

352. In an assault trial, the victim's statement to police, which she made when they responded to a 911 call from a third person, was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The victim was extremely agitated when officers arrived at the scene and was so upset that officers initially could not understand her. Bufkin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

353. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant had run into a store crying, shaking, and screaming that she had just been raped at gunpoint by two men in a van and needed help; the police were called within three to four minutes and arrived approximately five minutes later, when she was still under the influence of the trauma she just experienced and appeared to be in shock. Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

354. In a murder trial, the trial court properly admitted, under the excited utterance exception, a hearsay statement that the declarant could not believe defendant had shot someone. Even if the declarant's knowledge came from a third person, the only out-of-court statement offered into evidence was the declarant's. The State did not have to show that the third party's statement fell within a hearsay exception. Ross v. State, 154 S.W.3d 804, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11407 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

355. Excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule justified the admission of testimony that the declarant, a murder victim, had told the witness that he was afraid of the defendant; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the victim was under the influence of a startling event. Headley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Elements

356. Trial court did not err by excluding from evidence written witness statements attached to an officer's accident report because the construction workers' statements were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and they did not fall under the excited utterance exception, as the record did not indicate how much time elapsed between the accident and the statements or demonstrate the demeanor of the workers at the time of the statements. Sherbin v. Dean Word Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5362, 2010 WL 2698761 (Tex. App. Austin July 9 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Res Gestae

357. Appellant argued that the trial court erred in not allowing him to elicit testimony that appellant said he was made to do the crime, but nothing showed that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the complained-of statement; the court could not say whether the spontaneity of appellant's statement existed to take such out of the realm of premeditation, given that the witness said he was unsure of the exact timing of the statement, plus he assumed it was made more than two minutes after appellant had been apprehended and the statement was made after the tension had ceased. Falade v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9408, 2011 WL 5984536 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 1 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : General Overview

358. In an aggravated assault case, defendant should have been allowed to testify that the victim threatened to file a "false" assault charge against her because the statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; instead, it was offered to show that the victim had an intent to lie. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

359. In defendant's capital murder trial for the killing of his wife and son, his wife's statement that defendant did not want her to have contact with her parents and that she wished to divorce appellation were expressions of her state of mind at the time they were made and were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Payne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3270, 2011 WL 1662856 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 29 2011).

360. In defendant's capital murder trial for the killing of his wife and son, his wife's statement begging her sister-in-law to avenge her death was not a statement of mind but a supposition that her husband would be responsible if she were killed. That kind of statement did not fit into the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Payne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3270, 2011 WL 1662856 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 29 2011).

361. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, the trial court properly admitted the recording of a telephone conversation between a confidential informant (CI) and the individual who purchased methamphetamine from defendant; the recording was properly admitted as to the purchaser-coconspirator under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) and was properly admitted as to the CI under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of the CI's then existing plan to provide the purchaser with transportation to a meeting place with defendant. Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

362. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

363. In a murder case, because the victim's statement that defendant "gave her the creeps" was permissible hearsay, and went to the nature of the relationship between the victim and defendant, the court did not err in admitting the statement. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

364. In defendant's trial for robbery and kidnapping, testimony about defendant's accomplice's statement was not hearsay because the testimony was elicited to show what effect the statement had on the victim's state of mind. Edwards v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 10 2008).

365. In the trial of an officer for lying in a warrant affidavit about the reliability of an informant, the trial court properly allowed testimony that the alleged informant was reluctant to deal with the subject of the warrant, while prohibiting more specific testimony that the informant was afraid because of the informant's belief that the subject had killed a man. The latter statement was properly excluded as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802 and did not fall within the hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it was a statement of memory or belief offered to prove that the subject had killed a man. Delapaz v. State, 228 S.W.3d 183, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2377 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

366. Trial court properly excluded a deposition because it had been taken in another lawsuit and, although appellant's opinion at the time would have been within the exception to the hearsay rule provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), the deposition's contents were inadmissible hearsay because the statements contained within it pertained to the other party's statements and state of mind rather than to appellant's. Trantham v. Isaacks, 218 S.W.3d 750, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 501 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 892, 128 S. Ct. 340, 169 L. Ed. 2d 155, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10018 (2007).

367. During defendant's criminal trial for two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's admission of out of court testimony concerning the child's dream in which defendant was having sexual relations with her aunt; the evidence concerned a dream that was never asserted to be true; it concerned the child's state of mind, not defendant's state of mind or conduct. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9509 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 2 2006).

368. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803(3), the statements made by a witness, that the victim told the witness that the defendant had been partying, tearing things up, and smoking pot in the victim's residence, amounted to the admission of inadmissible hearsay, and the trial court erred by admitting testimony regarding the events or existing conditions that were the cause of the victim's mental and emotional state. Skeen v. State, 96 S.W.3d 567, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8181 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Earlier Acts

369. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Later Acts

370. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court erred by sustaining the hearsay objection to the victim's statement that "she was gonna call the law" because it evinced a state of mind concerning her future conduct and was admissible. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

371. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

372. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

373. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

374. Trial court did not err by allowing into evidence a statement by an accomplice that he found the gun in defendant's bedroom because the statement was not hearsay, nor was defendant's statement to a detective that he possessed the gun for approximately 10 minutes and accidently shot himself while trying to dislodge a bullet. Robertson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9554 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

375. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly admitted a witness's testimony that defendant told her he had killed someone "in front of the bar" because the statement was an admission by a party; therefore, it was not hearsay. Additionally, defendant admitted to the trial court that the statement was a statement that exposed him to criminal liability and was probably a statement against interest. Walton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8046, 2009 WL 3326759 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 15 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 512, 178 L. Ed. 2d 379, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 8559 (U.S. 2010).

376. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

377. Court properly admitted evidence as a statement against interest because defendant's question to the witness -- "how she would feel towards him if the police said that he had killed the two ladies" -- was self-inculpatory, and the circumstances of the relationship between defendant and the witness tended to corroborate the trustworthiness of the statement. Juarez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 77, 2009 WL 41648 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2009).

378. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

379. In an action brought by a corporation's stockholders (a husband and wife) against a lawyer (the husband's brother) when he advised that they were legally prohibited from selling or trading their any of their shares, the trial court did not err by failing to admit under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D) a recording of a conversation with a nonlawyer that utilized the lawyer's office space and who reportedly provided contract labor for the lawyer as the stockholders failed to show that the statements by the nonlawyer related to matters within the scope of the nonlawyer's employment, if any, by the lawyer. Gordon v. Gordon, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5696 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 31 2008).

380. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, there was no error in the admission of a trooper's testimony that defendant advised another trooper that she was coming from Denton on her way home; under Tex. R. Evid. 801, defendant's admission was not hearsay, and the complained-of admission came in later without objection. Farmer v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11132 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 28 2006).

381. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), the State was permitted to cross-examine a murder defendant on statements alleged to have been made by him against his own interest. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2005).

382. In a drug case, a court did not err by excluding an audiotape statement of a witness purportedly showing that he confessed to having exclusive possession of the cocaine because the witness's guilt was not inconsistent with defendant's because possession was not mutually exclusive, and the statement was given after being arrested and in the context of interrogation, at a time when motivation to curry favor with law enforcement existed. Minor v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5470 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 14 2005).

383. Court erred in excluding inculpatory hearsay statements made by a possible perpetrator of a murder for which defendant was convicted where the corroborating evidence, even in light of evidence tending to undermine the trustworthiness of the possible perpetrator's statements, was sufficiently convincing to indicate trustworthiness. The statements, if believed, could have created a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt. Eby v. State, 165 S.W.3d 723, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2580 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

384. In a murder trial, testimony was properly admitted by two witnesses regarding hearsay statements by friends of defendant concerning their plans to commit a robbery with him. The hearsay statements were against penal interest, even if they would not, at the time they were made, have subjected the declarants to liability for capital murder, because the declarants could have been liable for criminal conspiracy. Lafitte v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10247 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 18 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS

1790 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10, 2005).

385. In a criminal prosecution for possession of marihuana, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the hearsay statement made by defendant to his father that he was holding the marihuana for someone else, that defendant owed someone $1,000.00, and that he had to get the marihuana back from his father so he could return it to that person. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), the statement was an admission against interest, a hearsay exception. Esser v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3764 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 29 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

386. At defendant's trial for multiple sexual offenses involving child victims, the trial court did not err in overruling defense counsel's objection to the testimony of an alleged improper outcry witness because there was no hearsay statement as the witness did not testify about any statements made by the children. Perez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 640, 2014 WL 1260989 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 23 2014).

387. At defendant's trial for multiple sexual offenses involving child victims, the trial court did not err in overruling defense counsel's objection to the testimony of an alleged improper outcry witness because there was no hearsay statement as the witness did not testify about any statements made by the children. Perez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 640, 2014 WL 1260989 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 23 2014).

388. Even if it could be said that the child's statement in the video-recorded interview was entirely consistent with her trial testimony, the out-of-court statement was not made before the alleged improper influence or motive which defendant implied (through his cross-examination of State's witnesses) gave rise to the recitation of the incident; because the statement offered by the State was not made before the purported motive to fabricate or improper influence was brought to bear, the child's statement in the video did not qualify as a prior consistent statement. Bays v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9529 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 7 2011).

389. Issue of whether the nurse's testimony should have been excluded as hearsay was not preserved for review, because defendant withdrew his objection and never gave the trial court a chance to consider whether the nurse's testimony was hearsay. Arcos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5134, 2011 WL 2652262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 7 2011).

390. Court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the investigator to testify as a second outcry witness, because the investigator's statement could be classified as an outcry witness statement and was admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2(a), since the complainant's outcry regarding the additional instances of sexual abuse did not occur until the investigator's interview. Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3491, 2010 WL 1854150 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 6 2010).

391. In defendant's sexual assault case, it was error to have permitted a witness to testify concerning the child's statements because the State failed to offer proof that the witness was the proper outcry witness whose testimony was an exception to the hearsay rule. It was error to fail to conduct the hearing once the hearsay objection was raised. Rawls v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8054, 2009 WL 3321006 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2009).

392. In defendant's sexual assault trial, a trial court erred in permitting the hearsay testimony of a forensic interviewer as an outcry witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, but the error was harmless because overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt remained, especially the testimony of the child victim's counselor. Petrie v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5867 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 6 2008).

393. In a sexual assault of a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a determination of the proper outcry witness because, given that counsel could have concluded three witnesses all qualified as outcry witnesses and that a detective was not giving outcry testimony, there was no need to request a determination of the outcry witness; the detective's testimony was admissible because his testimony as to what the aunt said was offered to impeach the aunt and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Byars v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3363 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2008).

394. In a case involving child sexual assault, a statement given by the child's mother would have not been admissible as an outcry statement since the child had already told someone else over 18 about an alleged incident, and a videotaped interview of the victim three years later was also not admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072; however, the failure to object to these hearsay items did not result in ineffective assistance of counsel because there was a reasonable trial strategy relating to the believability of the victim. Hankey v. State, 231 S.W.3d 54, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

395. In defendant's sexual assault on a child case, a court properly allowed outcry testimony from a psychotherapist who treated the victim because, although the witness's testimony concerning the victim's statement did not specify the manner or means of defendant's offenses, the victim's statement did clearly allege sexual abuse and clearly identified defendant as the abuser. Newton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2477 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 28 2007).

396. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

397. During defendant's criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to evidence of hearsay statements by the victim. Bishop v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4874 (Tex. App. Waco June 7 2006).

398. Defendant did not preserve for review his hearsay argument regarding statements by a seven-year-old complainant in a sexual assault case, which were admitted through the testimony of her mother, a forensic investigator, and a physician, because the only basis on which defendant objected at trial was that complainant was not competent to testify. Hunter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1783 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 9 2006).

399. In a child sexual abuse case where the State's notice of intention to use a child-abuse victim's hearsay statement pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 referenced three outcry witnesses, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a hearing or object; because the victim changed her story, counsel reasonably could have concluded that the outcry statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801 as a prior consistent statement, and counsel's strategy relied on implying that one of the outcry witnesses had convinced the victim to change her story. Vega v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

400. At a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a second outcry witness was not admissible as a prior consistent statement of the victim because the State did not confine its presentation of the testimony to consistent reports of the incident. The State presented the testimony to prove the truth of the matter asserted by the victim, that she was exposed to defendant's penis, and to present details not included in other testimony. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1834 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

401. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14, the State was improperly allowed to present evidence through the outcry witness that her mother had suspected that defendant was molesting the child even before she had made any outcry. However, the error was harmless since it was unlikely that the single recounting of hearsay about a witness' "suspicion," especially when strongly and directly denied by the declarant herself, had more than a slight influence on the verdict. May v. State, 139 S.W.3d 93, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

402. Even though a trial court failed to conduct a reliability hearing on a grandmother's testimony regarding a minor victim's outcry statement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the admission of the evidence as an exception to hearsay was harmless because the statement that defendant had "done stuff" was so vague that it failed to corroborate the allegations of molestation; moreover, the trial court was also not required to conduct a reliability hearing on a police officer before allowing testimony regarding a conversation with the victim about defendant's alleged foot fetish where the officer was called as an expert regarding sexual predators, erotica, and deviant behavior. Leachman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3283 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : General Overview

403. Defendant's statement about killing a dog was not hearsay. Alcala v. State, 476 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13924, 2013 WL 6053837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 14 2013).

404. In an illegal possession of a weapon case, audio portions of the patrol-car videotape were properly admitted because the conversation with the dispatcher was not hearsay; the substance of the conversation was not an issue during trial, and the conversation itself was not offered for any particular purpose other than to establish that an officer was conducting an investigation into the suspects' backgrounds. Gomez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2966 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2008).

405. In a case in which a jury convicted defendant of aggravated assault and intoxication assault while operating a vehicle and made an affirmative deadly weapon finding, there was no merit to defendant's claim that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to a statement by the officer overseeing the collection of defendant's blood at a hospital because although the officer stated that other officers told him that defendant was intoxicated, there was no indication that the statement was offered for the truth of the matter asserted, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801; in fact, the statement was elicited in the context of laying the predicate to establish reasonable grounds for the officer's belief that defendant was intoxicated as required before the officer could take a blood sample, pursuant to Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.012, and there was nothing in the record that affirmatively demonstrated that counsel's conduct was not grounded in legitimate trial strategy. Whitmore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8889 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 8 2007).

406. In defendant's burglary case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify that, as she could not come to a conclusion on the latent fingerprint, she asked other examiners to examine the print, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony, when taken in context, did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of the other examiner's conclusions about the print and was therefore, not hearsay; the only information imparted by the testimony was that others had examined the print and had reached a conclusion, and that their conclusions were the same. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : General Overview

407. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized criminal activity, with the two predicate offenses being aggravated sexual assault of a child, was improper because the trial court clearly abused its discretion in overruling defendant's repeated hearsay objections, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), (d). In so doing, those witnesses were permitted to repeat the children's allegations as facts, fill the gap left by the failure of the children's outcry witness, and describe the sordid details of the alleged child sex ring as if they were personally aware of it. Kelly v. State, 321

S.W.3d 583, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4506 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2010).

408. Where the only direct evidence of defendant's indecency with a child by exposure offense was the complainant's testimony, it was within the trial court's discretion to conclude that defense counsel's failure to object to her hearsay statement, compounded by his failure to object to subsequent bolstering hearsay testimony of her friend, warranted the granting of a new trial in the interest of justice because, throughout the trial, the State emphasized the importance of the fact that the complainant had told others about the alleged offense; the statements at issue were not general, but specific testimony regarding out-of-court statements made by the declarants about the particulars of the alleged incident, and the State had not demonstrated that the complainant's out-of-court statements were admissible as prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801. State v. Wolfe, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3648 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006).

409. In a case of deadly conduct, the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection to a police officer's testimony as to the certainty of a trial witness's identification of defendant; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801, the challenged statement was not hearsay because the witness was cross-examined about identification. Martinez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1993 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 16 2006).

410. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a videotaped child assessment center interview with the victim because it was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); defense counsel had attempted to cast doubt on the victim's credibility and admitting the tape did not constitute improper bolstering. Perez-Del Rio v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1844 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 2 2006).

411. In a child sexual abuse case where the State's notice of intention to use a child-abuse victim's hearsay statement pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 referenced three outcry witnesses, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a hearing or object; because the victim changed her story, counsel reasonably could have concluded that the outcry statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801 as a prior consistent statement, and counsel's strategy relied on implying that one of the outcry witnesses had convinced the victim to change her story. Vega v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

412. In a child sexual abuse case, the admission of the testimony of an investigator and a police officer regarding the complainant's prior statements was reversible error because any legitimate probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 607 was substantially outweighed by the prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the State had ample notice that the complainant would recant, and conflicting evidence alone did not trigger Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Klein v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 950 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

413. Trial court did not err in admitting the videotaped interview of the child victim, and the admission of the videotape was not governed by Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.071 because the victim testified in court prior to the videotape's admission; the trial court did not err in admitting the videotape as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), given that defendant attacked the victim's credibility, and defendant was not free to complain that the videotape was too broad to be a prior consistent statement because the trial objection did not preserve error on this point. Monreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 773 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 31 2006).

414. Trial court could have found that the interviewer's testimony as to the questions asked and how the answers were given was necessary to counter defendant's implied charge of improper influence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); thus, the trial court did not err in allowing the interviewer to testify, and the court noted that defendant did not object when other witnesses testified about what the interviewer asked and the victim said during their interview. Segura v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7783 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 23 2005).

415. Witness' statements were admissible as prior consistent statements where, although the statements at issue were taken after the witness was arrested on an outstanding probation violation warrant, he made the statements without any discussion with police of possible benefit to him and before entering into any negotiations with the prosecution. Davis v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7233 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

416. Trial court did not act unreasonably in accepting the State's argument that a videotape of the child victim's statements of abuse against defendant was admissible because it was a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1), there were other motives, and that in order to satisfy the rule, it was not necessary that the prior consistent statement had been made before all motives to fabricate arose; the court noted that the only evidence regarding an existing motive came from defendant's closing argument. Franklin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6620 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

417. Testimony by a physician of what the child victim said was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 613, and although prior consistent statements were generally not admissible unless they fell under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), the physician's testimony fell within that exception because it was consistent with the child's testimony and was offered to rebut an implied charge of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive; furthermore, any error in the admission of the evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the child testified to the abuse and other witnesses testified about the child's change in behavior. Patterson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2005).

418. Although a trial court abused its discretion in allowing the State to introduce a sexual assault complainant's diary into evidence because the disputed evidence did not qualify as non-hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1), the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and did not have a substantial or injurious effect on the jury's verdict and did not affect defendant's substantial rights because the complainant testified in detail regarding her sexual encounters with defendant independent of the diary. Further, although on cross-examination the complainant admitted that one of the entries in her diary involving the second time she and defendant had engaged in sexual activity was not true, the record reflected that the jury had acquitted defendant on that count; thus, the trial court's error in admitting the hearsay might have actually served to benefit defendant. Dunbar v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3676 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 12 2005).

419. At a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a second outcry witness was not admissible as a prior consistent statement of the victim because the State did not confine its presentation of the testimony to consistent reports of the incident. The State presented the testimony to prove the truth of the matter asserted by the victim, that she was exposed to defendant's penis, and to present details not included in other testimony. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1834 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

420. Victim's testimony was not hearsay because it satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C); the victim identified defendant as the person who robbed him and shot him and testified that his identification was not based solely on seeing defendant the day of the robbery. According to the victim, he had previously known defendant, and they had gone to a football game together with a group of people. Millican v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11617 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 22 2004).

421. Notwithstanding the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's girlfiend's out-of-court statement to a police officer as a prior inconsistent statement where the officer testified that the girlfriend had told him that she had not seen defendant for the few days surrounding the offense but at trial, she testified that he had been with her at the time of the robbery. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

422. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child where the child was impeached on cross-examination, the child's videotaped statement was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Graves v. State, 176 S.W.3d 422, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9099 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

423. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting only those portions of witnesses' statements that were consistent with their testimony. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), the prior consistent statements were admissible to rebut the charge made by defendant that the witnesses' testimony were motivated or improperly influenced by the favorable treatment provided them by the State. Castillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8317 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 15 2004).

424. With respect to the victim's probation officer's testimony, defendant objected on the grounds that the officer was not properly identified as an outcry witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, but the State did not offer the officer's testimony as such, and the court found no error in the admission of the officer's testimony in connection with defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child because where there were attempts to impeach the credibility of the victim, testimony from the officer would not have constituted hearsay because, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), it related a prior consistent statement made by the victim, who was subject to cross-examination and whose prior statement rebutted a charge of motive or recent fabrication; moreover, the content of the officer's testimony was admitted elsewhere through direct testimony from the victim, and even if the trial court erred in admitting the testimony, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights, and, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), error could not have been predicated on a ruling admitting evidence unless a substantial right of the party was affected. Sanchez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7043 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 5 2004).

425. Admitting a previously recorded statement of a State witness as a prior consistent statement was proper because defendant's cross-examination had raised an inference of recent fabrication improper influence. Wisdom v. State, 143 S.W.3d 276, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6379 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

426. Allowing an officer to testify that a witness at trial had identified defendant from a videotaped lineup was testimony involving identification and, thus, was not hearsay. Headley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

427. In defendant's sexual assault case, a witness's testimony regarding defendant's statement to him was properly admitted where it was clearly not hearsay and thus its admission, even though erroneously described by the trial judge as occurring under Tex. R. Evid 613, was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and did not violate defendant's constitutional rights. Strong v. State, 138 S.W.3d 546, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5107 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

428. The trial court properly admitted the victim's videotaped interview because the victim's consistent statements in her videotaped interview were admissible to rebut defendant's charge of recent fabrication and improper motive, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Defendant attempted to show the victim related facts that were inconsistent with her testimony at trial, and was motivated to lie because of her father's remarriage and her desire to see her parents reunited. Box v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4233 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 11 2004).

429. Defendant's argument that the trial court erred in overruling his hearsay objection to the affidavit of the witness was without merit as the statement constituted admissible identification evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C); the witness stated that the defendant signed an affidavit of non-interest in her presence and she verified defendant's identification by requiring that he present a valid driver's license. Bodmer v. State, 161 S.W.3d

9, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2792 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

430. Trial court did not err by admitting the complainant's videotaped testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) where defendant attempted to show that the complainant's testimony at trial had been influenced by her mother, and that the videotape was offered by the State to rebut the charge of improper influence; because the conversation between complainant and her mother regarding the assault took place before the videotape was made, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. In re E.D., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1043 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 5 2004).

431. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Identifications

432. Complainant's told an officer he recognized appellant in the photo array as the shooter, and the officer's statement regarding the complainant's prior identification was non-hearsay because it fell within the exclusion under the rule, as the complainant testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination, plus the statement identified appellant after the complainant perceived his photograph. Cuevas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9770 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 6 2013).

433. Even if the identification statement were hearsay, the admission of the statement would have been harmless error, given that the complainant testified at trial that he made a prior identification of appellant to police and there was no objection. Cuevas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9770 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 6 2013).

434. Appellant claimed the statement was harmful because it aided the complainant's testimony and identification of appellant, but this argument fell short because bolstering was no longer a valid objection given the hearsay exclusion under the rule. Cuevas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9770 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 6 2013).

435. Officer's testimony was admissible as an identification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because, during the conversation, the victim identified defendant as her husband, indicated that defendant was the individual who assaulted her, defendant was responsible for the injuries, and the victim testified and was subject to cross-examination. Diaz v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9552, 2011 WL 6145120 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 7 2011).

436. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C), limiting admissible testimony under the identification exclusion to the hearsay rule solely to the declarant's naming of the identified individual and not allowing testimony regarding what the declarant identified the individual as doing is unduly restrictive. Delacerda v. State, 425 S.W.3d 367, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 21 2011).

437. Eyewitness's statement to an officer that he recognized the person he saw in the back of the truck, who was not the shooter and not defendant, when defendant's picture was in the same display, was an indispensable part of his statement of identification about which the officer could testify pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). Delacerda v. State, 425 S.W.3d 367, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 21 2011).

438. Detective's comment about the victim's actual identification of defendant was not hearsay because of the victim's previous identification testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). Garcia-sandoval v. State, 2010

Tex. App. LEXIS 2580, 2010 WL 1571207 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2010).

439. Victim testified at trial and was cross-examined about her identification of defendant; thus, the photographic lineup and testimony about the photographic lineup and about the victim's identification did not constitute improper bolstering, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the photographic lineup into evidence. Morgan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2853, 2010 WL 1224318 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2010).

440. Officer's testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(c); the victim testified about her identification of defendant at trial and was subject to cross-examination, and her statement was one of identification after perceiving a person, such that the officer's testimony was not improper bolstering. Thompson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 11, 2010).

441. Defendant complained that an officer's videotaped statement that two witnesses had implicated defendant as the shooter was inadmissible hearsay that was testimonial; the court noted that while the rules generally prohibited the admission of out of court statements offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, a statement was not deemed hearsay if it involved identification of one perceived by the declarant, who later testified at trial and was available for cross-examination, under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). York v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3827, 2009 WL 1493255 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

442. Informant was present at trial, was recalled after an officer was recalled and was thus subject to cross-examination, the statement involved an identification of defendant, and the informant's testimony showed that she had ample opportunity to perceive defendant, such that this statement was one of identification for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) and was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); moreover, the officer merely reiterated the informant's identification recited in her previous testimony. Patterson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3196 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 12 2009).

443. Witness testified during the trial that she was shown the photo spread containing defendant's photograph and that she identified him as the shooter and the witness also identified defendant in court as the shooter, and she was cross-examined by defense counsel; thus, an officer's statements relating to the witness's identification were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

444. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing an officer to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) about two child victims' identification of defendant because the victims testified at trial and were subject to cross-examination concerning their identification. Jamon v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2289, 2009 WL 891864 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 2 2009).

445. In a murder trial, no hearsay error occurred under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802 when a detective testified to a witness's out-of-court identification, which was translated from Cambodian by the complainant's offspring. Because the witness testified at trial, the out-of-court identification was not hearsay in itself, and the interpreter served as a mere language conduit for the witness. Driver v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 778, 2009 WL 276539 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 5 2009).

446. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801, there was no error in allowing third-party testimony of an extrajudicial identification by a complainant in support of the complainant's own identification testimony; the complainant testified at trial and was extensively cross-examined by defense counsel. Rubio v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2439 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 7 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

447. Court did not err by overruling defendant's hearsay objection because the declarant testified at trial, the witness's testimony that the declarant told her defendant had shot at him was consistent with his testimony at trial, and the testimony was offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of recent fabrication. Whitley v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7856, 2014 WL 3611592 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 23 2014).

448. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred in admitting a written statement of a sexual assault victim over his hearsay objection was not preserved for review because defendant did not argue to the trial court that there was never any suggestion that the victim's fabrication of his complaint against defendant was recent; it was incumbent on defendant to alert the trial court to any elements of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) that would require exclusion of the victim's statement. Dauben v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6040, 2014 WL 2566469 (Tex. App. Waco June 5 2014).

449. Because the minor victim's interview was consistent with his trial testimony, and it predated an alleged improper influence on his testimony, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statement as a prior consistent statement exception to hearsay to rebut an allegation of recent fabrication. Because the victim's earlier statement did not differ in relevant substance with his in-court testimony, the statement was generally consistent and the victim's Tennessee interview predated at least one of the improper influences alleged by defendant's counsel. Dibello v. State, 432 S.W.3d 913, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2812 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 13 2014).

450. In a prosecution of defendant for continuous sexual abuse of a young child, the trial court did not err in admitting a video tape of an interview wherein the victim discussed what had been done to her by defendant, notwithstanding defendant's contention the video was inadmissible under this rule. Given that the video memorialized statements made long before trial, there existed basis upon which the trial court could have reasonably determined that the comments preceded the prosecutor's supposed effort to influence the victim. Graves v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2532, 2014 WL 887355 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 5 2014).

451. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the game warden's police report into evidence because the report could have been admitted without condition to rebut even a subtle charge of recent fabrication. Stone v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14801, 2013 WL 6405485 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 5 2013).

452. Defendant was entitled to a new trial for the murder of her stepfather because of new evidence, specifically, information from defendant's former boyfriend about her outcry 30 years earlier regarding sexual abuse by the stepfather; the outcry evidence rebutted the State's claim of recent fabrication. Carsner v. State, 415 S.W.3d 507, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12563, 2013 WL 5561653 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 9 2013).

453. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an audio recording of the motorist's 911 call. It was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the district court to conclude that the relevant statements on the call were not inadmissible as hearsay, either because the statements on the call were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, or because the statements fell under one of the recognized exceptions to the hearsay rule. Condarco v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10741 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2013).

454. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness' written statement as a prior consistent statement offered to rebut a claim of recent fabrication because at the time the State proffered the statement, the trial court had before it sufficient information from which it could conclude that defense counsel's questioning of the witness reasonably implied an intent by the witness to fabricate. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

455. Nothing supported the claim that the statements qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), and appellant did not assert this at trial or make an offer of proof. Carrion v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5673 (Tex. App. Eastland May 9 2013).

456. Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of a detective and an investigator concerning the victim's prior consistent account of the incident under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because defendant engaged in several instances of cross-examination with numerous witnesses that the trial court could have reasonably concluded charged the victim with fabricating her story concerning the incident with defendant. Turcios v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5099 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 24 2013).

457. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court erred by admitting a video of the victims' interviews at a child advocacy center as prior consistent statements because the younger victim told one of her friends "her secret" about defendant; that friend told her own mother, who went to the victim's teacher who called child services, who then arranged the interviews. Thus, the interviews occurred after both victims had made outcries, specifically about defendant, and accordingly, the court abused its discretion by admitting the part of the older victim's interview not related to her outcry and the entirety of the younger victim's interview. In re C.N., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2256 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 7 2013).

458. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a witness's prior recorded statement to detectives where defense counsel had questioned the witness over and over about how he knew a revolver was used in the crime and whether he heard it from defendant's mouth. The questioning suggested that the witness was not being truthful in his trial testimony about the revolver, and, as a result, his prior statement was admissible to rebut the implied charge of recent fabrication. Bailey v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108, 2013 WL 1282249 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 4 2013).

459. Detective's testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) where the victim testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination concerning her statement to the detective. Hill v. State, 392 S.W.3d 850, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 453, 2013 WL 174062 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 16 2013).

460. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a friend of the victim to testify about journal entries allegedly written by the victim as prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because the trial court reasonably could have found that defense counsel's cross-examination implicitly charged that the victim's direct examination testimony that defendant sexually assaulted her by forcing her to engage in oral sex was a recent fabrication, made during the trial, in light of her allegedly conflicting statement in a 2008 note. The trial court reasonably could have found that the victim's journal statements met the consistency requirements of Rule 801(e)(1)(B) because the journal statements concerned the exact same incidents of sexual abuse about which the victim testified at trial and the journal statements did not necessarily exclude acts of forcible contact and were generally consistent with the testimony at trial. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 106, 2013 WL 84903 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 8 2013).

461. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it overruled defendant's objections and admitted the witness's prior inconsistent statements to the victim's sister; the witness's other out-of-court statements implicating defendant were made to the victim's husband at the crime scene and to defendant's wife at the hospital. Murga v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1972, 2012 WL 807081 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 13 2012).

462. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of a prior consistent statement that he made to his mother on the night of the incident under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because defendant had a motive to lie about the incident as soon as he shot his gun at the victim's vehicle. Because defendant had the same motive to lie at the time of his statement to his mother as he did during his testimony at trial, his statement to his m other was not admissible to rebut a charge of recent fabrication. Marshall v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1083, 2012 WL 424918 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 9 2012).

463. Even if it could be said that the child's statement in the video-recorded interview was entirely consistent with her trial testimony, the out-of-court statement was not made before the alleged improper influence or motive which defendant implied (through his cross-examination of State's witnesses) gave rise to the recitation of the incident; because the statement offered by the State was not made before the purported motive to fabricate or improper influence was brought to bear, the child's statement in the video did not qualify as a prior consistent statement. Bays v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9529 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 7 2011).

464. While a great-grandmother's description of a child sexual assault victim's statements allegedly describing the abuse by defendant was only a general allegation suggesting something in the realm of child abuse had occurred, and did not qualify under the outcry statute, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2(1)(B), the description was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Bays v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9531 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 7 2011).

465. Nothing in the worker's Social Security disability finding document indicated that the worker was cross-examined at his disability hearing as required by Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); it was not clear whether the disability finding was the worker's "statement" as it was a document issued by a federal agency and not the worker himself, and because the document was not certified, its authenticity was at issue, Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Belmarez v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7945, 2011 WL 4696750 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2011).

466. During defendant's trial for indecency with a child, the court did not err in admitting a police officer's testimony about what the victim told him defendant did to her as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); the thrust of the defense was that the victim was motivated to lie about defendant because she disliked him and did not want him marrying her mother. Vollmer v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7110, 2011 WL 3833028 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 31 2011).

467. In defendant's trial on a charge of continuous sexual assault of a child less than 14 years of age in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02, where defendant claimed that the victim, his stepdaughter, fabricated her allegations so that she could live with her biological father and his wife, the victim's prior consistent statement in the form of a videotaped out-of-court statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) to rebut the allegation of recent fabrication. Castillo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7182, 2011 WL 3853939 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2011).

468. Court did not err in permitting the sexual assault nurse examiner to read a portion of the complainant's statement contained in the examination record, because substantially similar evidence was admitted, and the complainant's credibility had been attacked; the examiner never offered a diagnosis that reflected an opinion directly or indirectly on the credibility of the complainant, and the statement read by the examiner followed and was consistent with the evidence admitted through the complainant's lengthy testimony at trial, which was subjected to exhaustive cross-examination. Luttrell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7496 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 9 2010).

469. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of his 10-year-old granddaughter, a recorded interview between a social worker and the victim failed to qualify as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because the victim had not yet testified at the time the recorded statement was introduced. Maloy v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5413, 2010 WL 2705161 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 9 2010).

470. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of his four-year-old daughter, the court did not err in admitting the State's offer of proof of the testimony of the victim's therapist; even though there were inconsistencies between the victim's statement to the therapist and her trial testimony, the statements were largely consistent. The statement was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Ramos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3698, 2010 WL 1965886 (Tex. App. Dallas May 6 2010).

471. Court could assume without deciding that defendant was correct that a videotape was not admissible as a prior consistent statement or prior inconsistent statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 801(e)(1)(B), even though he failed to raise the latter objection at trial and raised the former with insufficient specificity because the videotape was still admissible (1) to rebut the suggestion that the police fed the witness his answers to their questions, and (2) to show that the witness was not parroting what the police told him; defendant did not object or seek a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), such that the jury was free to consider the tape's contents for any purposes, plus the videotape was admissible to clarify what the witness actually said, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107. Franks v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3224, 2010 WL 1730032 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2010).

472. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly admitted a witness's testimony as a prior consistent statement because defense counsel raised the defensive theory of a family feud over housing arrangements, and the record showed that during questioning, as well as opening statements and closing arguments, counsel made an implied charge that the child's allegations were the product of improper influence by the victim's mother and her family in retaliation against defendant's mother for the housing dispute. The trial court specifically noted that the basis was to rebut charges of coaching or fabrication due to a family feud over housing. In re A.C.T., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 726, 2010 WL 374392 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 3 2010).

473. When the entire record was reviewed, the defensive theory in defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(2)(B) was fabrication or motivation for lying by the victim; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a prior consistent statement before the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Newsome v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9402, 2009 WL 4718866 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 10 2009).

474. Implication of an attack on a witness was that his present memories about his mother's murder were recently fabricated and had been influenced by the family in the intervening years; his statements were consistent with his trial testimony and were made prior to the time that the supposed improper influence or motive to falsify arose, such that the statements were not hearsay and were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

475. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court did not err in admitting a prior consistent statement of the complainant because defendant's cross-examination of the complainant focused on her counseling and punishment for lying, her repeated denials to counselors and investigators that she had been sexually assaulted, and what defendant asserted were inconsistent statements in the earlier trial. The trial court could have determined that defense counsel was mounting a charge of recent fabrication. Hutson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7873, 2009 WL 3210704 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 8 2009).

476. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter from a witness because, at the conclusion of the witness's testimony, he was excused without any request that he be subject to recall, the witness could not be located when defendant offered the letter into evidence, and thus, the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination. Furthermore, the letter was not authenticated and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6577, 2009 WL 2581286 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 20 2009).

477. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter by a defense witness, given that (1) the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), as he had been excused without any request that he be subject to recall and he could not be located when the letter was offered, plus (2) the letter was not authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4166, 2009 WL 1653056 (Tex. App. Eastland June 11 2009).

478. In defendant's sexual assault case, the trial court did not err in permitting the prosecutor to elicit testimony from a witness regarding prior consistent statements the victim made because defendant's wife testified that she believed the victim fabricated the sexual assault. The trial court could reasonably have concluded that the defense charged recent fabrication or improper motive, and that the prior statements were closer in time to the incident and made under circumstances and at a time where there was no "supposed motive to falsify." Weatherly v. State, 283 S.W.3d 481, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2435 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

479. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err by allowing the State to introduce a DVD recording of the seven-year-old victim's forensic interview under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) as her outcry alleging defendant's abuse and interview both occurred about a year and a half before trial, and the video statement was recorded before any action by the child protective services. Werner v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9448 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 19 2008).

480. In a sexual assault case, statements made by the child to the sexual assault nurse were properly admitted because, in her testimony, the nurse read the "history," which she had taken from the victim and that was already in evidence without objection, and the statements were consistent with the victim's trial testimony. Mendoza v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9006 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 4 2008).

481. After defendant testified that a child assault victim had fabricated the story to bolster her mother's position to child services workers that she was a good mother, a video recording of a forensic interview of the victim was admissible as showing the child's prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Werner v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8659 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 19 2008).

482. Defendant contended at trial that the victim voluntarily performed oral sex on him, that there was no penetration, and that the victim lied about having been assaulted; because appellant attacked the victim's credibility, the trial court did not err in determining that her prior consistent statement to a nurse was admissible, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(c), 801(e)(1)(B). West v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8599 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 14 2008).

483. Recorded statement could not be admitted to refute the suggestion that one victim falsely accused defendant because the victim's alleged motive to lie arose before the statement was recorded, but the defense intimated that the victim had been coached in her testimony by the prosecutor, and although the questioning could have been characterized as merely challenging the victim's credibility, the court had to defer to the trial court; because Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) set forth a minimal foundation requirement of an implied or express charge of fabrication or improper motive, the trial court's decision to allow the evidence was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement. Martinez v. State, 276 S.W.3d 75, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7043 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

484. In a case involving indecency with a child, a videotape that showed a forensic interview of a victim was admissible because defense counsel raised a suggestion that the victim consciously altered her testimony by alleging fabrication and undue influence; therefore, the videotape was a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Defendant's reliance on Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.071 and Long v. State, 742 S.W.2d 302 (Tex. Crim. App. 1987), was misplaced. Torris v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5749 (Tex. App. Dallas July 31 2008).

485. Court properly admitted a witness's statement to the police as a prior consistent statement because defendant accused the witness of having told a story to the police different from what he was telling at trial, and a reasonable trial judge could have concluded that defendant mounted a charge that the witness fabricated his testimony specifically because of the agreement with the prosecutor; evidence of the witness's prior statement rebutted that charge. Williams v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2874 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 22 2008).

486. Court properly admitted witnesses' statements as prior consistent statements because, before the statements were offered into evidence by the State, the defense cross-examined both men about whether they had talked to each other about the incident before trial; at the time the statements were offered into evidence, both witnesses were subject to recall and could have been cross-examined about the statements if the defense had chosen to do so. Stewart v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2747 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 17 2008).

487. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the complainant's prior consistent statement, because a reasonable trial court could conclude that defense counsel was mounting a charge of recent fabrication during cross-examination, when in admitting the statement the trial judge expressly stated that he considered the cross-examination as a challenge to the complainant's credibility. White v. State, 256 S.W.3d 380, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1026 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

488. In a trial for sexual assault on a child, the complainant's prior consistent statements were properly admitted because defendant's implication of recent fabrication was clear from the closing argument, which stated that the complainant conspired with a civil attorney to fabricate dates that would support the claim that the complainant was under 17 years old at the time of the incidents for purposes of a civil lawsuit. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

489. Predicate for admission of a prior consistent statement is laid by the content, tone, and tenor of cross-examination, which either does or does not open the door to the admissibility of a prior consistent statement by an express or implied suggestion that the witness is fabricating testimony in some relevant respect; such an attack may not be immediately apparent from the specific wording of the questions asked, but may become obvious only during the attorney's final argument. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

490. In assessing whether the cross-examination of a witness makes an implied charge of recent fabrication or improper motive, a reviewing court should focus on the purpose of the impeaching party, the surrounding circumstances, and the interpretation put on them by the trial court, as well as clues from the voir dire, opening statements, and closing arguments; the question is whether from the totality of the questioning, giving deference to the trial judge's assessment of tone, tenor, and demeanor, a reasonable trial judge could conclude that the cross-examiner is mounting a charge of recent fabrication or improper motive; if so, it is not an abuse of discretion to admit a prior consistent statement that was made before any such motive to fabricate arose. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

491. In a trial for child sexual assault in which the complainant's age at the time of the sexual incidents was at issue, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit the complainant's prior consistent statements about the time of the incidents; defendant was entitled to cross-examine the complainant as to who told her what dates to allege because the complainant herself blamed her lawyer for inconsistencies in her deposition testimony; cross-examination that tested the memory of a witness did not rise to the level of a charge of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. Hammons v. State, 221 S.W.3d 720, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 663 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), rev'd on other grounds, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007, no pet).

492. Court rejected defendant's claim that the trial court erred in allowing certain testimony; although defendant argued that the statement did not qualify as a prior consistent statement, while there might have been discrepancies, there was still the consistent allegation of abuse, and defendant did not contest that there was an express or implied charge of recent fabrication, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8147 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 14 2006).

493. In a juvenile delinquency adjudication, testimony from the complainant's friend concerning the alleged sexual assault was admissible to rebut appellant's charges against the complainant of recent fabrication and improper motive; under Tex. R. Evid. 801, the complainant's friend was permitted to testify to an out of court statement made to her by complainant about the alleged sexual assault. In re F.E.C., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11244 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 13 2006).

494. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in deciding to admit an incriminating videotaped interview of a complainant, under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), to rebut defense counsel's inference of recent fabrication or improper influence because the defense counsel through his cross-examination of the complainant suggested her testimony was fabricated or the subject of improper influence, and the videotape included many statements consistent with the complainant's trial testimony and some inconsistent statements. Rodriguez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4416 (Tex. App. Dallas May 24 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Inconsistent Statements

495. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's affidavit of forgery because it was admissible as a prior inconsistent statement, as the victim's uncertain testimony at trial about whether defendant's boyfriend had permission to write the check in question was inconsistent with her affidavit. Pearce v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 549, 2014 WL 942687 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2014).

496. At defendant's trial for kidnapping and murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a video-recorded witness statement. Because the witness statement was not given under oath, it was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A). Gamez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6774, 2012 WL 3329200 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 15 2012).

497. Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A) did not apply because the prior statement was not given under oath and subject to the penalty of perjury. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

498. Inconsistent statement was not separately admissible as substantive evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A) because it was not given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at a trial, hearing, or other proceeding. Spearman v. State, 307 S.W.3d 463, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1026 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 10 2010).

499. Because defendant failed to respond to the State's relevance objection and because there was nothing in the record to show that a witness actually made any prior inconsistent statements, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A), to which Scott's hearsay exceptions under Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 803(8) would apply, the court could not say that the trial court abused its discretion by not allowing defendant to impeach the witness. Scott v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 131, 2009 WL 51035 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

500. Although the trial court erred by denying a limiting instruction because the witnesses' prior statements did not fall within any hearsay exception and so were admissible for impeachment purposes only, the error was harmless. Absent from the inconsistent statements, the record contained other evidence from which the jury could have inferred that defendant did not act in self-defense, and the trial court's charge instructed the jury that a witness's prior inconsistent statement could only be considered for impeachment purposes to asses the witness's credibility. Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

501. In defendant's indecency with a child case, the trial court properly allowed a forensic interviewer to testify to prior consistent statements made by the complainant in her videotaped interview because the court allowed the State to introduce the testimony that the complainant told her that defendant had touched her "middle part" underneath her clothing when they were both standing in the kitchen of defendant's apartment to counter a portion of the videotape reflecting that the complainant was in her mother's house when it happened. Hoover v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1549 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 27 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : General Overview

502. Defendant never attempted to overcome the State's hearsay objections, plus the statements did not fit within the scope of the rule; the statements had to be offered against the State and had to have been made by a coconspirator of the State during the course and in furtherance of a conspiracy, but each statement was made by one of defendant's coconspirators, and there was no evidence or assertion that the State was a party to the conspiracy such that the statements would be excluded from the definition of hearsay. Alvarez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1574, 2014 WL 585837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 13 2014).

503. Out-of-court statements were non-testimonial and did not violate the Confrontation Clause because the statements were non-hearsay statements made by a co-conspirator; moreover, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Agyin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13337 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 30 2013).

504. Record supported a finding that appellant and co-defendant conspired to commit the murder, and the trial court thus would not have abused its discretion in finding that co-defendant's statements to a witness were admissible against co-defendant and appellant under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E); thus, the statements would have been admissible against appellant even if he was tried separately, such that the trial court would not have abused its discretion in determining that there was a lack prejudice in this regard and in denying appellant's motion to sever. Moesch v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7120, 2012 WL 3629847 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 24 2012).

505. Owner was trying to use an alleged statement to show that a conspiracy existed, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E), without other proof of the conspiracy, and the subcontractor objected to this type of testimony contained in an affidavit, such that the hearsay testimony was not proper summary judgment evidence. P. McGregor Enters. v. Hicks Constr. Group, Llc, 420 S.W.3d 45, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 87, 2012 WL 28538 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 5 2012).

506. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, the trial court properly admitted the recording of a telephone conversation between a confidential informant (CI) and the individual who purchased methamphetamine from defendant; the recording was properly admitted as to the purchaser-coconspirator under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) and was properly admitted as to the CI under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of the CI's then existing plan to provide the purchaser with transportation to a meeting place with defendant. Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

507. In a murder trial, there was no error in the admission of a co-conspirator's statements made in the course of conversations about how the victim had purportedly died and about disposing of the body because the challenged statements fell were co-conspirator statements and adoptive admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B), (E). King

v. State, 189 S.W.3d 347, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2100 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

508. Although coconspirator's out-of-court statement rhetorically asking why did defendant have to hit the victim did not advance the objective of the conspiracy to hinder defendant's apprehension, and thus should not have been admitted at defendant's murder trial, the error in admitting the out-of-court statement pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) was harmless; therefore, the error in admitting the coconspirator's out-of-court statement did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Byrd v. State, 187 S.W.3d 436, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2128 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

509. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on defendant's claim that his trial counsel gave him incorrect advice regarding the admissibility of his co-defendant's confession because counsel's belief that the videotaped statement would probably be presented was reasonable where the record indicated the co-defendant was going to testify at trial and the admission of the videotaped confession would not have violated Tex. R. Evid. 801(a) or the Confrontation Clause. Even if counsel had been wrong about the videotaped confession of the co-defendant, he was absolutely correct as to the State's ability to use the co-defendant as a witness because the State could have subpoenaed the co-defendant and compelled him to testify without violating the co-defendant's constitutional right against self-incrimination since the co-defendant already had pled guilty to his charge. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 25 2005).

510. While a witness in a capital murder case subsequently withdrew from the conspiracy, his testimony that he recommended defendant as someone who would be willing to participate in the offense was admissible as a statement made by a coconspirator during the course of, and in furtherance of, the conspiracy under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Pena v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5110 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 30 2005).

511. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, a witness was properly allowed to testify regarding a conversation that she had with a gang member about defendant's order to shoot an ex-member. The statement of the planned shooter was made in furtherance of the conspiracy under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) because he was explaining to the witness why she had to drive him to his girlfriend's house to get a car: he needed the car in order to comply with the shooting orders. Maynard v. State, 166 S.W.3d 403, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4003 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

512. Drug defendant's confrontation rights were not violated by the admission of an informant's testimony that a declarant, who agreed to sell her drugs, said that defendant was his right hand man. The Crawford standard did not apply because the declarant's statements were not testimonial; under the Ohio v. Roberts standard, the admission was proper under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid 801(e)(2)(E). Mancilla v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3334 (Tex. App. Dallas May 3 2005).

513. In a criminal trial for murder, a witness was permitted to testify that she heard defendant ask the co-conspirator to kill her husband so defendant and the co-conspirator "could be together," and that the co-conspirator later told the witness about the specifics of the murder. The co-conspirator's hearsay statements made in the furtherance of the conspiracy were nontestimonial; therefore, the admission of the statements was not barred by the Confrontation Clause. Wiggins v. State, 152 S.W.3d 656, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10267 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

514. Detective's testimony that a witness had implicated defendant in his confession was admissible because of the co-conspirator exclusion of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Ballantine v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7551 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2004).

515. When a defendant's friend made a statement to police that they had just assaulted the victim, the statement was admissible as an adoptive admission within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 801; the defendant did not object to the statement when it was made, and actually confirmed it moments later. Bean v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 9 1998).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Members of Conspiracy

516. Trial court did not abuse its direction in overruling the corporation's hearsay objection because: (1) the trial court may have considered the corporation's administrator's deposition to be admissible as the corporation's statement in a representative capacity, that the administrator was authorized to make such statements, or that the administrator's deposition testimony concerned matters within the scope of the son's agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), (C), (D); and (2) the trial court may have admitted the administrator's deposition testimony, and the exhibits thereto, as a statement by a co-conspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Much of the content at issue was cumulative. San Pedro Impulsora De Inmuebles Especiales, S.A. De C.V. v. Villarreal, 330 S.W.3d 27, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9174 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Statements During Conspiracy

517. Trial court did not err by admitting a witness's testimony into evidence because it was not inadmissible hearsay, as it was undisputed that the witness was a co-conspirator of defendant in the rape and murder and the challenged statements were made during the course of and in furtherance of their conspiring to assault the victim. TreviÃ»o v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5388, 2013 WL 1883080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2013).

518. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

519. Any conspiracy that a person might have entered into with defendant did not exist until after the statements were made, and because the statements were not made during the conspiracy, the statements were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

520. Defendant's argument that statements were not admissible as statements of a coconspirator because he was not part of a conspiracy at the time the statements were made was unpersuasive because coconspirator statements were admissible when the coconspirator was part of a conspiracy in which the defendant also participated or later joined; statements like the declarant's that were made to induce involvement in the conspiracy were statements made in furtherance thereof, and the State was also required to prove that the statements were made in the course of a conspiracy. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

521. Victim testified that he was ordered by "pretty much" all three robbers to remove his possessions and relinquish them, and as to defendant, this statement was an admission by a party opponent and not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801, and any such statements made by the other two robbers were statements made by coconspirators in the course of the conspiracy. Denton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1706 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 7 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Statements Furthering Conspiracy

522. Court's admission of a statement made by a co-defendant was proper because the co-defendant made the statement with an intent to induce the kidnapping victim to cooperate in the furthering of the crime by driving her car, withdrawing cash, and using her credit card to get gas. Casaus v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 8 2014).

523. Trial court did not err by admitting a witness's testimony into evidence because it was not inadmissible hearsay, as it was undisputed that the witness was a co-conspirator of defendant in the rape and murder and the challenged statements were made during the course of and in furtherance of their conspiring to assault the victim. TreviÃ»o v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5388, 2013 WL 1883080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2013).

524. Co-conspirator's statements to a witness and in front of another after the murder were made in furtherance of the conspiracy in order to conceal the murder, such that the statements were not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them over a hearsay objection. Orona v. State, 341 S.W.3d 452, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 24 2011).

525. Defendant's statements to a co-defendant were made in furtherance of the conspiracy where defendant was attempting to induce the co-defendant to enter into a conspiracy to rob the store. Therefore, the challenged statements fell within the co-conspirator statements exception to the hearsay rule and were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Brown v. State, 334 S.W.3d 789, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5483 (Tex. App. Tyler July 14 2010).

526. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the court properly admitted a co-conspirator's statement because the officer's testimony about the statement "waste him, dog, waste him" and "shoot him, and get out of here," was not hearsay; the officer was attempting to arrest or detain the suspect while defendant was in a nearby car. The statement was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but rather to provide the jury the context in which defendant was eventually arrested. Clifton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6533, 2009 WL 2567946 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 20 2009).

527. Defendant's argument that statements were not admissible as statements of a coconspirator because he was not part of a conspiracy at the time the statements were made was unpersuasive because coconspirator statements were admissible when the coconspirator was part of a conspiracy in which the defendant also participated or later joined; statements like the declarant's that were made to induce involvement in the conspiracy were statements made in furtherance thereof, and the State was also required to prove that the statements were made in the course of a conspiracy. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

528. In defendant's murder case, a witness's out-of-court statements were admissible as statements in furtherance of the conspiracy because, according to the witness, the co-conspirator told her that defendant had given her his nine-millimeter gun; the victim was killed with a nine-millimeter gun. Thus, the co-conspirator's statement created an alibi for defendant by taking a nine-millimeter gun out of his possession, and the co-conspirator's statements affirmatively advanced the conspiracy to hinder defendant's apprehension. Guevara v. State, 297 S.W.3d 350, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 494 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 28 2009).

529. District court denied a state inmate's petition under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254, challenging his conviction and sentence for murder, because the inmate did not show he was denied effective assistance of counsel or that a state habeas court made findings that were contrary to clearly established federal law when it rejected the inmate's claims; although the inmate claimed that the trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation when it admitted hearsay testimony, the district court found that the trial court properly admitted testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance; even assuming arguendo that the trial court erred, the error was harmless in light of the other incriminating evidence the State introduced. Turnbow v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77098 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 17 2007).

530. In a capital murder case, the statements of a coconspirator were not hearsay and were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E), since the non-testimonial statements were made in furtherance of the conspiracy. The coconspirator's admission of his involvement in the murder to his brother was not a testimonial confession, and so it was irrelevant that confessions by an accomplice that implicated another were not a firmly rooted exception to the hearsay rule, and if the conspiracy at issue was treated broadly as an agreement to commit a robbery and murder and to escape capture, the statements could be understood as being part of a conspiracy, given that they were made to impress upon the brother the importance of the flight of the conspirator and appellant. Arroyo v. State, 239 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5111 (Tex. App. Tyler 2007).

531. Members of the reconstruction team were clearly agents of the Texas Department of Public Safety (DPS) and they were authorized by DPS to make statements like those contained in their report; the reconstruction team's report was an admission by the DPS, and it was admissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling DPS' objections to the report. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Bonilla, 481 S.W.3d 646, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5797 (Tex. App. El Paso May 30 2014).

532. In defendant's murder trial, there was no error in the admission of testimony by a witness about statements defendant made in a telephone call because they were within the hearsay exemption for statements of a party-opponent. Van Exel v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8464 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 4 2014).

533. Trial court did not err by admitting the witness's testimony that defendant urged her to say that the victim assaulted her so that defendant could assert the affirmative defense of defense of a third person because the statements were made by defendant and offered against him. Thus, they constituted an admission of a party opponent and did not implicate the prior inconsistent statement rule. Stairhime v. State, 439 S.W.3d 499, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7905 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 22 2014).

534. Under this rule, defendant's testimony from his co-defendant's trial was not hearsay; consequently, the exception to the hearsay rule for statements against interest did not govern the admissibility of defendant's previous testimony and the statements were not barred by the hearsay rule. Jackson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6346, 2014 WL 2611106 (Tex. App. Dallas June 11 2014).

535. Although the rule provided a hearsay exception for certain statements by a party's agent or servant, the page of an affidavit did not state who assured the affiant that reimbursements had been approved, and appellants did not otherwise cite any statements they contended constituted admissions by a party opponent. Berryman's South Fork, Inc. v. J. Baxter Brinkmann Int'l Corp., 418 S.W.3d 172, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14226, 2013 WL 6097965 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 20 2013).

536. Upon summary judgment in a lessor's action for damages under an equipment lease agreement, the trial court was permitted to consider exhibits consisting of documents the lessee generated that reflected payments made under the lease because they were admissions by a party opponent and excluded from the hearsay rule. Choice Asset Mgmt., Inc. v. Cit Tech. Fin. Servs., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11584 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 11 2013).

537. At defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a detective to testify about the in-custody interrogation because what defendant told him was not hearsay. Sneed v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10702 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 22 2013).

538. Where defendant was convicted of continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting his wife's testimony about defendant's out-of-court statements about the offense. Under this rule, a criminal defendant's own statements, when being offered against him, are not hearsay. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

539. Trial court did not violate defendant's constitutional privilege against self-incrimination by allowing the State to read into evidence a portion of the testimony he gave at the punishment phase of a previous trial on another charge because the testimony was given for a limited purpose in the prior proceeding in order to mitigate the punishment in that case and was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Lacey v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8017 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2013).

540. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting statements that defendant made to a jailer where the evidence was admissible as an admission by a party-opponent, as it was offered to prove that defendant admitted guilt in the instant case-he was being held for murder and said he would have to limit himself to one murder every two years. The jailer's testimony clarified the circumstances surrounding the victim's shooting, directly contradicted defendant's theory of the case that his accomplices were wrongly accusing him of firing the gun so that they would receive a favorable deal in their own cases, and was not likely to impress the jury in some irrational but nevertheless indelible way. Haynes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

541. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's statement to a witness who had been in jail with him before the trial, that defendant was the "shooter," where the State did not offer the inmate's testimony as evidence of an extraneous offense separate and apart from the charged offense but, instead offered the evidence as proof that defendant fired the shots that killed the victim. The statement was an admission by a party-opponent, supported the allegation that defendant killed the victim, directly contradicted defendant's defensive theory that his accomplices only named him as the shooter to get a reduced sentence, and was not likely to impress the jury in some irrational but nevertheless indelible way. Haynes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

542. Texas Workforce Commission had the authority to determine that the all of an employee's unpaid salary was due to be paid on September 25 based on the parties' agreement, Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 61.013, thus placing the entire amount within its jurisdiction to award under Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 61.051(c). A company representative's testimony that he agreed to the September 25 date was not hearsay because it was an admission by a party-opponent. Jmj Acquisitions Mgmt. v. Peterson, 407 S.W.3d 371, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7340 (Tex. App. Dallas June 13 2013).

543. Appellant claimed that testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) as party admissions, but they did not provide any record citation to establish that they presented this to the trial court, and even if they did, Rule 801(e)(2) only excluded admissions of a party opponent from the definition of hearsay and did not address restrictions applicable to the admissibility of evidence of similar accidents as discussed in certain case law. Estate of Muniz v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7158 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 12 2013).

544. Trial court properly ruled that a witness's testimony related to statements made by defendant that were reflected in the witness's written statement to investigators was inadmissible hearsay; the statements by defendant were not admissions by a party opponent because it was defendant who sought to elicit them; therefore, they were not offered against him as required under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Williams v. State, 402 S.W.3d 425, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7031 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 11 2013).

545. On appeal of defendant's conviction for murder, he objected to the introduction of his testimony from his previous trial on the ground that it constituted hearsay. The trial court did not err by admitting the testimony, because a criminal defendant's own statements, when being offered against him, were not hearsay under Tex. R.

Evid. 801(e)(2). Lockridge v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6147 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2013).

546. Because appellant's statements to a witness were not offered by the State against appellant, they did not amount to admissions by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Carrion v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5673 (Tex. App. Eastland May 9 2013).

547. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

548. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a copy of defendant's resume into evidence because the State argued that the resume consisted of an admission by a party opponent as defendant prepared his own resume. Wood v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 31 2013).

549. Defendant's statement that he would hurt anyone who snitched was an admission by a party opponent and therefore was not hearsay. Keith v. State, 384 S.W.3d 452, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8860 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 25 2012).

550. In defendant's community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in admitting an exhibit containing his letters that were intercepted by the mail clerk of the correctional facility. The letters authored by defendant were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(e)(2)(A), which provided an exception for an admission by a party-opponent. Rivera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8306, 2012 WL 4712902 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 3 2012).

551. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by admitting the recording of the call a cab driver made to 9-1-1. The statements overheard by the cab driver were made by defendant and offered against him; thus, the statements were admissible as admissions by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

552. Facts on proofs of loss amounted to admissions by the insured's principal and were competent evidence for purposes of summary judgment, and purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Lynd Co., 399 S.W.3d 206, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6770 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 15 2012).

553. Trial court did not err in allowing evidence of an extraneous offense of terroristic threat where the statement was an admission by a party-opponent, supporting the allegation that defendant killed the victim in the instant case and the victim in another case. The testimony at issue was some evidence that defendant threatened to kill a fellow jail inmate, which constituted a threat to commit an offense involving violence, and that defendant made the threat in order to make that inmate and another inmate afraid of him and his ability and willingness to use violence. Mcgregor v. State, 394 S.W.3d 90, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6552, 2012 WL 3244196 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

554. Defendant's statements on recordings of telephone conversations from jail were admissions by a party-opponent and, as such, were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Hernandez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6508, 2012 WL 3194310 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2012).

555. In a driving while intoxicated case, appellant failed to show that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because it was within the realm of trial strategy for defense counsel to decide not to cross-examine a deputy, and a failure to raise a hearsay objection was assumed to be a matter of trial strategy as well; appellant did not argue that his own statements were inadmissible hearsay since they constituted nonhearsay admissions of a party opponent. Gentry v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5980, 2012 WL 3023169 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 25 2012).

556. Statements in a proof of loss form relating to the date of hail damage were competent summary judgment evidence because they constituted admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Even if the statements in the proof of loss form were not binding or conclusive, they were considered prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein; moreover, expert testimony was not required on the issue of whether hail occurred on a certain date and caused property damage. United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Lynd Co., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3206, 2012 WL 1430541 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 25 2012).

557. Deposition testimony was not hearsay, because it was an admission by a party opponent, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2); pleadings on file introduced by the non-movant were proper summary judgment evidence, and the trial court properly considered the deposition and the tenant's pleadings over the tenant's hearsay objection. Simi, Inc. v. Heb Grocery Co., Lp, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2676, 2012 WL 3528977 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 5 2012).

558. In determining that a proposed acquisition of a utility was in the public interest, the Texas Public Utility Commission properly struck as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) portions of proposed testimony that discussed withdrawn testimony, including statements by an expert witness who was hired by the Commission's staff. The withdrawn testimony did not constitute admissions by party-opponents under Rule 801(e)(2) because it did not come from opposing parties, nor was it admissible under the public-record exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) because it was not admitted into the record or prepared under the supervision of a public official. Nucor Steel -- Tex. v. PUC, 363 S.W.3d 871, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108, 2012 WL 895994 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 15 2012).

559. Will contestant could properly seek discovery of a will proponent regarding her offer of a different will for probate, even though the proponent had amended her petition and offered an earlier will for probate, because under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), admissions of a party-opponent were admissible, and Rule 801(e)(2) included superseded pleadings. In re Willie, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1159 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 14 2012).

560. Court agreed with the State that a statement was not hearsay because it was an admission by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), and appellant's right to confrontation was not violated because he had the chance at trial to cross-examine and confront the witnesses against him. Perez-Peraza v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 343, 2012 WL 135672 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 18 2012).

561. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements defendant made in a letter concerning the murder because the statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as they were admissible as admissions of a party opponent. The statements were relevant because in the letter defendant did not claim, as he did at trial, that the shooting was accidental, and they were not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, as the statements supported the State's contention that defendant intentionally shot the victim, it related to defendant's state of mind which was a central issue at trial, and the letter was brief and not cumulative of other evidence. Benitez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9871, 2011 WL 6306643 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

562. Appellant argued that the trial court erred in not allowing him to elicit testimony that appellant said he was made to do the crime, but nothing showed that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the complained-of statement; the court could not say whether the spontaneity of appellant's statement existed to take such out of the realm of premeditation, given that the witness said he was unsure of the exact timing of the statement, plus he assumed it was made more than two minutes after appellant had been apprehended and the statement was made after the tension had ceased. Falade v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9408, 2011 WL 5984536 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 1 2011).

563. During a trial for failure to comply with sex offender registration requirements, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a data sheet that defendant filled out for a probation officer that gave defendant's address because the form was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Darnell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9049, 2011 WL 5515470 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 10 2011).

564. Appellant claimed that the trial court erred in overruling his hearsay objection to a letter allegedly containing his signature, but the court found that the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and was a party's own statements under Rule 801(e)(2)(A); the letter, addressed to the complaining witness, indicated what appellant did on the day in question, and the letter did not mention that he was with his brother most of that morning, and the brother was surprised the letter failed to mention him. Vallair v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7055, 2011 WL 3847418 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 31 2011).

565. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a tattoo of "187" on defendant's hand as a statement that defendant committed murder pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) because the record showed that defendant did not have the tattoo on the night of the shooting, it was placed on him after he was in jail in connection with the underlying murder charge, and went to his state of mind at the time of the shooting and clarified the circumstances surrounding the shooting. It was clear from the placement of the tattoo on his hand that it was an open and obvious statement he wanted everyone to see and it directly contradicted his defensive theory that he acted in self defense. Salazar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6835, 2011 WL 3770297 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26 2011).

566. Appellant claimed that the victim's testimony about what appellant had told her concerning a prior offense was inadmissible, but regardless of whether the victim's testimony qualified as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the trial court would not have abused its discretion in admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) as an admission by a party opponent. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4811, 2011 WL 2507002 (Tex. App. Austin June 24 2011).

567. Even if one assumed that statements were party-opponent admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, otherwise relevant evidence could be excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 403; in addition to possibly confusing the jury and unfairly prejudicing the State's case, admission of the statements would have been cumulative, and the trial court did not err in excluding these statements. Mcneal v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4629, 2011 WL 2420271 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

568. Defendant's counsel was not ineffective because 1) defense counsel's strategy in introducing letters that suggested that the allegations against defendant were concocted was reasonable; 2) the record was silent on why counsel did not object to certain testimony and did not elicit testimony about the victim's past sexual behavior, and, thus, the appellate court had to conclude that defendant had not overcome the presumption that counsel's actions and decisions were reasonably professional and motivated by sound trial strategy; 3) counsel's failure to object to the cards/letters written by defendant was not ineffective as they were not hearsay, but rather, admissions by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A); and 4) there was no evidence in the record that defendant was prejudiced by counsel's actions, including failure to timely request a directed verdict. Holbert v. State, 2011 Tex.

569. Police testimony regarding appellant's dragging of his dog constituted an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) because appellant previously admitted to police that he had dragged the dog, but only for a short distance. Zamora v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10246, 2010 WL 5541706 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 30 2010).

570. In defendant's prosecution for continuous sexual abuse of a young child, any statement by defendant to the victim's mother while the mother visited defendant in jail was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) as the statement was made by a party and offered against that party. Ramos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10330, 2010 WL 5419000 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 29 2010).

571. In appellant's prosecution for assault causing bodily injury against a family member, a friend's testimony about the coercion of appellant's girlfriend to write a letter retracting allegations of domestic abuse was not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) because the testimony was about what appellant, a party, stated to the girlfriend after the assault and was, thus, an admission by a party opponent. Franklin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2010 WL 2949959 (Tex. App. El Paso July 28 2010).

572. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the victim's mother's testimony that defendant told her that he used condoms because he had a sexually transmitted disease and did not want to give it to his wife because the statement, as defendant's own statement, was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). For the same reason, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a document that purported to be a portion of a love note from defendant to the victim. Battle v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5088, 2010 WL 2698294 (Tex. App. Dallas July 6 2010).

573. Investigator testified that he did not ask defendant any questions, and thus the trial court could have found that these voluntary statements made were admissions by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), plus his statements were cumulative of evidence already admitted without objection, and thus the trial court did not err in admitting these statements. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

574. Statements by an investigator to defendant, made during a videotaped interview, indicating that defendant's friend had implicated defendant did not fall under any of the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) and the statements were not admissions by a party opponent, such that the trial court erred in admitting this. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2186 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 11 2010).

575. Although the trial court erred in admitting certain testimony, which did not fall under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), the same facts at issue were later placed before the jury and to which defendant did not object, and he was not harmed under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2186 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 11 2010).

576. Victim's testimony regarding what defendant said to her was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Norman v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8796, 2009 WL 3805830 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

577. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly admitted a witness's testimony that defendant told her he had killed someone "in front of the bar" because the statement was an admission by a party; therefore, it was not hearsay. Additionally, defendant admitted to the trial court that the statement was a statement that exposed him to criminal liability and was probably a statement against interest. Walton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8046, 2009

WL 3326759 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 15 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 512, 178 L. Ed. 2d 379, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 8559 (U.S. 2010).

578. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's testimony regarding her examination under oath conducted to settle a civil claim for insurance proceeds in her criminal trial for arson, because the statements under oath were admissions by defendant; since defendant's examination under oath was not hearsay when offered against her, no hearsay exception was needed to admit the statements. Montgomery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7223, 2009 WL 2933749 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 15 2009).

579. Threat by defendant while he was in the process of the offense was a res gestae statement that was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and because failure to object to admissible evidence did not constitute ineffective assistance, counsel could not be found ineffective on these grounds; defendant failed to show that counsel's performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1432, 2009 WL 469553 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

580. Testimony reflected out-of-court statements made by defendant that were personally heard by the witness, and thus the witness's testimony concerning defendant's out-of-court statements was admissible as admissions by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objections to this testimony. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

581. In an action for breach of contract arising from a licensing agreement, the trial court committed error by refusing to admit into evidence defendants' superseded pleading in which they admitted that manufacturing income was subject to the agreement. The Court of Appeals of Texas held that a superseded pleading from a party-opponent is not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Quick v. Plastic Solutions of Tex., Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9821 (Tex. App. El Paso June 27 2008).

582. In a medical malpractice case, the probative value of statements from superseded pleadings regarding two nonsuited doctors was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because counsel, representing the parents of an injured child, first alluded to the doctor's party status, thus opening the door to rebuttal, and the statements, which were made by the parents, constituted admissions by party-opponents under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and were not hearsay. Bay Area Healthcare Group, Ltd. v. McShane, 239 S.W.3d 231, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 527, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 866 (Tex. 2007).

583. Defendant's many statements to officers who had been dispatched to incidents in which she had been involved did not constitute inadmissible hearsay, and therefore were properly admitted during sentencing, because they were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as the statements were defendant's own statements that were offered against her. Sims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 31 2007).

584. Regarding appellants' argument that two investors could not recover for fraud because they were unable to testify at trial, it was immaterial that a direct relationship did not exist between those two investors and appellants because privity was not required, and the third investor could properly testify to appellants' representations under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Matis v. Golden, 228 S.W.3d 301, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3796 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

585. Borrower on a promissory note, which was assigned by a bank to a company, could testify as to the content of letters because letters of acceleration sent by the bank were also statements of the party opponent, the company, due to the assignation; as a result, the borrower's testimony was not hearsay. Cadle Co. v. Salazar, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2876 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2007).

586. Victim testified that he was ordered by "pretty much" all three robbers to remove his possessions and relinquish them, and as to defendant, this statement was an admission by a party opponent and not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801, and any such statements made by the other two robbers were statements made by coconspirators in the course of the conspiracy. Denton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1706 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 7 2007).

587. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated robbery, defendant's statements that he possessed a knife and was going to take the victim's money or kill him qualified as admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801; the statements were not hearsay and were admissible as substantive evidence. Herring v. State, 202 S.W.3d 764, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1878 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

588. In defendant's drug case, any error in the denial of admission of the testimony of a police officer as an admission of a party-opponent was harmless where defendant did not attempt to call the other police officer as an impeachment witness, nor did he attempt to offer into evidence the original police report or the other officer's supplement with the varying statement. Shepard v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2793 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 6 2006).

589. In defendant's capital murder case, a court properly admitted an anonymous letter regarding defendant, addressed to a reporter, where in addition to being found on defendant's computer, the letter contained numerous intimate details of defendant's life, confirmed by other evidence, that collectively supported an inference that she was the author; given those circumstances, it was a reasonable exercise of the trial court's discretion to conclude that the letter was written by defendant, and because the letter was shown to be written by defendant, it was not hearsay when offered against her. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

590. In a trial for attempted sexual performance by a child, there was no error in the admission, at the punishment phase, of evidence that the Army had found child pornography on defendant's service-issued laptop computer. Defendant's comments in a telephone conversation with his then-wife about the discovery were non-testimonial for purposes of the Confrontation Clause and were properly admitted as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 101(c) and 801. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2062 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2006).

591. Courth found that the question "Are uncontroverted unobjected to statements of counsel about occurrences in the courtroom evidence of those occurrences which can be considered on appeal?" may be some evidence that the event occurred and may, under some circumstances, establish that the event occurred, and this is comparable to the principle whereby silence can be accepted as an adoptive admission, as under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B). Thieleman v. State, 187 S.W.3d 455, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2110 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

592. Uncontroverted assertion by counsel about an event may be taken as true only if: (1) the event could not have happened without being noticed; and (2), the assertion is of the sort that would provoke a denial by opposing counsel if it were not true; if these two conditions are met, the opposing party may be held to have adoptively admitted the assertion, as in Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B), and the assertion will be accepted as both true and sufficient to preserve an issue for appellate review. Thieleman v. State, 187 S.W.3d 455, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2110 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

593. Behavior of a testifying witness will probably be a focus of attention, while a sleeping juror will not be, unless the attention of the court is drawn to the objectionable behavior at the time it occurs, and failure to contradict an assertion in such circumstances may raise the issue of adoptive admission, as in Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B); disagreement as to what occurred may be addressed by proffer of a bill of exception under Tex. R. App. P.

33.2(c)(3). Thieleman v. State, 187 S.W.3d 455, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2110 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

594. Although a hospital and administrator objected to allegedly hearsay statements by a person that were repeated by a doctor in the doctor's deposition, the person was chief of medical records at the hospital, and thus the person's statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). Titus Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Tretta, 180 S.W.3d 271, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9717 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

595. There was no merit to defendants' contention that the State could not use a child victim's prior videotaped complaint in trial because after she recanted her statements, she became the State's party opponent. Party opponents in a criminal proceeding are the State and the defendants, not the victim. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4091 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 26 2005).

596. In a child support modification case, the trial court did not err in admitting copies of bank statements from a father's concessions business bank account where he acknowledged at the modification hearing that he had produced the bank statements to the mother in response to discovery requests. Therefore, the bank statements were not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B) because they were admissible as admissions by a party opponent. In re A.J.J., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3058 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 21 2005).

597. Murder defendant's statement to police, while he was in custody, was not the product of interrogation because the record indicated he made unsolicited, spontaneous statements that he was just defending himself with a knife. Because he was not subjected to interrogation, the statements were not obtained in violation of federal or state law and, therefore, were admissible at trial as admissions by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid 801(e)(2). Clark v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 24 2005).

598. In a murder trial, a witness was properly allowed to testify as to a statement by a participant in the crime as to a discussion about whose gun was used because the statement was an adoptive admission. The statement was made in defendant's presence, defendant never expressed surprise or disagreement, and the statement was made in the context of the declarant relating all of the events that occurred in relation to the shooting of the victim, including the struggle that occurred over the gun. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 40 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 5 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 555, 163 L. Ed. 2d 468, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7937, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

599. In a case of fleeing from arrest, a police officer's testimony regarding another officer's statement to defendant was not subject to exclusion as hearsay. Because defendant acquiesced in the other officer's statement, the statement was an adoptive admission and was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B). Gant v. State, 153 S.W.3d 294, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11841 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1574, 164 L. Ed. 2d 307, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2315, 74 U.S.L.W. 3530 (U.S. 2006).

600. Where defendant was charged with injury to a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing defendant's brother to testify that their mother told the brother that defendant had beaten his baby and that he needed psychiatric help. The trial court implicitly concluded that defendant's response that he "f----ed up" constituted an adoption by silent acquiescence of the mother's statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B). Lynch v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11312 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 15 2004).

601. Admission of defendant's letter to his girlfriend implying that he would commit suicide to keep himself from hurting anyone was not abuse of discretion because, although he never admitted to the specific assault, whether the letter admitted facts which tended to show the guilt of the accused under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) fell within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Lewis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10217 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 16

602. Trial court properly admitted defendant's statement that when he found the victim he was going to kill her because it was an admission by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and was not offered for the purpose of proving action in conformity therewith on a particular occasion, but was offered to show defendant's intent and knowledge as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the State sought to show that defendant's statement conflicted with his defensive theory that the group members were merely going to beat up the victim and not kill her. Ponce-Duron v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10149 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2004).

603. In a wrongful death case, a court properly excluded expert deposition testimony on hearsay grounds where the expert was not an employee of defendant pharmacy, and there was no evidence that an agency relationship existed. When the family non-suited their claims against the doctor, the subject matter over which the expert was asked to give his opinion became moot; subsequently, he was not called at trial, and, therefore, the trial court excluded his testimony on hearsay grounds. McCluskey v. Randall's Food Mkts., Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 19 2004).

604. In a criminal prosecution for arson, the trial court correctly overruled defendant's hearsay objection to evidence of her out-of-court admission. Adams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8725 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 29 2004).

605. In a personal injury action against an employer, the trial court properly admitted into evidence as non-hearsay an employee's statements that he was transporting merchandise and picking up deposits for his employer at the time of a motor vehicle accident. Although the employee's shift had not yet begun, the statements concerned matters within the scope of his employment; independent corroboration that the employee was acting in the scope of his employment was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). Tucker's Bevs., Inc. v. Fopay, 145 S.W.3d 765, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8119 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

606. Borrower's former trial testimony was not hearsay, but was an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2); as such, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not require the trial court to have found the borrower unavailable under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1) as a preliminary condition to admitting his testimony. Oyster Creek Fin. Corp. v. Richwood Invs. II, Inc., 176 S.W.3d 307, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7269 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

607. Although the State argued that defendant's acknowledgment had to be considered an adoptive admission of the detective's accusation that she had stolen the jewelry under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B), defendant's statement, "I'll be back," could not be construed as an acknowledgment or admission that defendant stole the jewelry as this alone could not give rise to a reasonable inference of possession, and even assuming her response could be interpreted as an acknowledgment or admission of any kind, at best defendant merely indicated that she may have known the location of the jewelry, and such knowledge did not equate to possession or appropriation. Cantu v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6313 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 15 2004).

608. There was no error in a trial court's admission of statements by a doctor's nurse regarding a conversation that the doctor had with his patient as to the communication that took place between them the day before, as such statements were not hearsay but rather, were an admission by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2); the patient sued the doctor for negligence, alleging that it was medical malpractice for the doctor not to have seen the patient on a particular date, and the communication regarded the symptoms that the patient had indicated he had, which did not indicate the presence of an infection and which, if made by the patient would have been an admission, and if made by the doctor and not opposed by the patient would have been an adoptive admission. Ramsey v. Cravey, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5724 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

609. In defendant's sexual assault case, a witness's testimony regarding defendant's statement to him was properly admitted where it was clearly not hearsay and thus its admission, even though erroneously described by the trial judge as occurring under Tex. R. Evid 613, was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and did not violate defendant's constitutional rights. Strong v. State, 138 S.W.3d 546, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5107 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

610. In an action alleging an alter ego theory, letters and asset purchase agreement of an individual defendant were not hearsay because they were admissions by a party-opponent. Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

611. In an action alleging an alter ego theory, letters and asset purchase agreement of an individual defendant were not hearsay because they were admissions by a party-opponent. Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

612. Witness in murder trial was properly allowed to testify to an out-of-court statement made by defendant's brother. Both the witness and the brother were part of a conspiracy to hinder defendant's apprehension by assisting in disposing of the body and cleaning up the scene; the court therefore found the statement to be an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Byrd v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 791 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 29 2004), aff'd, 187 S.W.3d 436, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2128 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005, no pet.).

613. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006, as it was shown that the records were voluminous, were made available to the customers for inspection, and the underlying records were admissible as non-hearsay admissions of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). C.M. Asfahl Agency v. Tensor, Inc., 135 S.W.3d 768, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 808 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

614. Where a defendant listened to a witness's description of the murders and surrounding events without disputing them, and pointed out that the witness should have been there because he would have had some fund, he manifested his agreement with and adoption of the statements within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B), and the witness's statements were admissible. Paredes v. State, 129 S.W.3d 530, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

615. Undercover officer's testimony that after he purchased cocaine from defendant's partner and the arrest team entered the house and defendant's partner yelled "flush the dope" as she was running towards the back of the apartment, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance because the statement was made as defendant's partner ran towards the back of the house in an attempt to destroy evidence before the arrest team could seize it, while she was under the stress and excitement caused by the approaching arrest team. Wilkerson v. State, 933 S.W.2d 276, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4504 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 1996).

616. Members of the reconstruction team were clearly agents of the Texas Department of Public Safety (DPS) and they were authorized by DPS to make statements like those contained in their report; the reconstruction team's report was an admission by the DPS, and it was admissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling DPS' objections to the report. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Bonilla, 481 S.W.3d 646, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5797 (Tex. App. El Paso May 30 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Adopted Statements

617. Portion of the automobile manufacturer's spreadsheet reflecting the 67 code 56 claims concerning airbags was admissible as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the spreadsheet was created by the manufacturer and produced in discovery, and a witness testified that the 67 open circuits reflected on the spreadsheet were all claims submitted to the manufacturer and paid because technicians confirmed the claims all involved defects. Because the manufacturer did not request a limiting instruction as to the statements from customers listed on the spreadsheet or the remainder of the warranty claims, the inclusion of the items was not ground for complaint on appeal. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

618. In condemnation proceedings, a trial court improperly excluded a state-certified appraiser's testimony as it constituted an admission under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B) by adoption as a municipal water district called the appraiser as a witness to testify at the special commissioners' hearing regarding the valuation of property to be taken for a water line easement. Reid Rd. Mun. Util. Dist. No. 2 v. Speedy Stop Food Stores, Ltd., 337 S.W.3d 846, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 190, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 658 (Tex. 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Authorized Statements

619. Hearsay objection was irrelevant, because the witness's recorded testimony from the prior suit, the judgment from which the claimant sought to enforce in the instant action, was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D) as the admission of a party-opponent. Tryco Enters. v. Robinson, 390 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7810, 2012 WL 4021126 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 13 2012).

620. Trial court did not abuse its direction in overruling the corporation's hearsay objection because: (1) the trial court may have considered the corporation's administrator's deposition to be admissible as the corporation's statement in a representative capacity, that the administrator was authorized to make such statements, or that the administrator's deposition testimony concerned matters within the scope of the son's agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), (C), (D); and (2) the trial court may have admitted the administrator's deposition testimony, and the exhibits thereto, as a statement by a co-conspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Much of the content at issue was cumulative. San Pedro Impulsora De Inmuebles Especiales, S.A. De C.V. v. Villarreal, 330 S.W.3d 27, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9174 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2010).

621. Court abused its discretion in admitting the officer's testimony and the error was not harmless, because the State failed to satisfy its burden that the interpreter acted as defendant's language conduit, and the officer's testimony of what defendant said to the interpreter was not properly admitted as a hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(C) or Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). Saavedra v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3878 (Tex. App. Dallas May 24 2010).

622. If the proponent of an out-of-court translation of an out-of-court statement of a party can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the trial court that the party authorized the interpreter to speak for him on the particular occasion, or otherwise adopted the interpreter as his agent for purposes of translating the particular statement, then the out-of-court interpretation may properly be admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(C) or (D). If the trial court is not so satisfied, it should sustain a hearsay objection to the out-of-court translation, under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Saavedra v. State, 297 S.W.3d 342, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1560 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

623. Court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objections to statements admitted at trial because the interpreter-victim was apparently able to translate accurately because the fact that a witness complied with demands for his money, his wallet, putting his hands down, and getting out of the car demonstrated the reliability of the victim as a language conduit for defendant. Pitts v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2796 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 17 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Extrajudicial Statements

624. Because a text message offered against defendant contained his own statement in his individual capacity, the text message was not hearsay; rather, because it constituted his own statement, it was properly admitted into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Aekins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13694, 2013 WL 5948188 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 6 2013).

625. Trial court did not err by admitting defendant's statement to police officers over defendant's hearsay objection because the statement was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Hart v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3996, 2011 WL 2028216 (Tex. App. Dallas May 25 2011).

626. Text messages that defendant authored were not hearsay; rather, they constituted an admission by a party under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and were properly admitted into evidence. Lozano v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9430 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 29 2007).

627. Murder defendant's out-of-court statement that he knew the victim had stolen his boat motor and that he was going to take care of the victim was not hearsay, but an admission of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A). Therefore, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the statement was admitted. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

628. In a trial for possession of marihuana, the court should have admitted a codefendant's statement taking responsibility for some of the drugs under Tex. R. Evid 803; however, the error in excluding the statement was harmless because defendant was able to present a defense and to argue effectively that the drugs belonged to the codefendant and because the State consistently argued that both parties were guilty of the offense. Bradley v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4425 (Tex. App. Tyler May 24 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Vicarious Statements

629. Trial court did not err by allowing evidence concerning the employer's internal accident review board to be presented to the jury because it was excluded from the hearsay rule as an admission by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D), as the board was composed of agents or employees of the employer and the board's findings were made in the scope of its members' agency or employment. Pilgrim's Pride Corp. v. Burnett, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 964, 2012 WL 381714 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 3 2012).

630. In a construction dispute, statements by the contractors' employees were admissible as vicarious admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). Walker & Assocs. Surveying v. Roberts, 306 S.W.3d 839, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1369 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 26 2010).

631. In this medical malpractice case, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D) because the witness did not know the identity of the woman she talked to at a hospital, the witness never saw whether the woman was wearing a badge, and the witness could not testify as to the indicia of control or agency relationship necessary to impute any actions of this unidentified woman to the hospital; even if the trial court erred, the error would have been harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) in light of the evidence that the hospital's admission forms disclaimed any agency relationship between the hospital, its parent company, and the doctors who performed services at the hospital. Farlow v. Harris Methodist Fort Worth Hosp., 284 S.W.3d 903, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9836, 64 A.L.R.6th 741 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

632. In a premises liability suit arising from a slip and fall, plaintiff offered hearsay testimony allegedly made by defendant's employee to show defendant's knowledge of the hazardous condition; the testimony was not admissible as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801, because plaintiff offered no evidence to show that the declarant was defendant's employee or servant. Stensrud v. Leading Edge Aviation Servs. of Amarillo, Inc., 214 S.W.3d 98, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10748 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

633. Appellant's double hearsay arguments were not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), as his double hearsay complaint was not made during an argument regarding the admissibility of an affidavit; his objections indicated a complaint to the admission of the affidavit, not a complaint about double hearsay in the affidavit, and although a similar double hearsay argument was raised in a motion in limine, the matter was not explicitly ruled upon, plus a ruling on a motion in limine would not suffice for a trial objection. Richard v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5872, 2012 WL 2945970 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2012).

634. Appellant's claim that the admission of a hearsay document was error had to be looked at within the confines of the limiting instruction given that precluded use of the affidavit to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and appellant did not object to the limiting instruction; the contents of the affidavit were not inadmissible on hearsay grounds and appellant's claim could not be sustained. Richard v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5872, 2012 WL 2945970 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2012).

635. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

636. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant could not question the investigating officer about prior inconsistent statements that the victim allegedly had made to the officer who initially took her statement and to a caseworker; this multiple hearsay was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because even if the victim's statements had been admissible under the prior inconsistent statement rule, which would have passed the first level of hearsay, defendant offered no explanation of how the contents of a report by the officer who initially took the victim's statement or the investigating officer's testimony based on that report fell within any hearsay exception. Segura v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1303 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 21 2008).

637. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

638. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document contained hearsay statements not within an exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

639. Even absent waiver, any error by a trial court in admitting double hearsay did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury's verdict. The evidence before the jury included defendant's written confession, an eyewitness's identifications of defendant, and testimony that defendant gave the detectives a false alibi and hid when law enforcement wanted to question him about the murder. Mims v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4019 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 30 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

640. Detective's testimony that his investigation centered on defendant after taking witness's statements was admissible to show how defendant became a suspect and was not inadmissible as backdoor hearsay. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2005).

641. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, admission of testimony from a Child Protective Services investigator, which included information she received from police officers and medical personnel, was not reversible error. Defendant's hearsay objections were waived because the same evidence was admitted through other witnesses without objection. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

642. In a firearm possession case, a bystander's statement to police that defendant was in possession of a gun was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and a statement made to defendant by another person was not hearsay either. The statements were offered to show why the officer approached defendant and that defendant was aware that the officer was following him. Sanders v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 28 2005).

643. In a murder case, videotapes were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because they were offered to prove that conversations had taken place, and in addition, the tapes were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defendant opened the door by suggesting that the conversations had not occurred. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2005).

644. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

645. Appellate court overruled defendant's argument that the trial court erred in admitting testimony by an undercover detective that drug trafficking had occurred in the apartment prior to the search because the detective responded that he was given the complaint, without stating the contents of the complaint, and when the detective began to testify about the contents of the complaint, the trial court sustained defense counsel's hearsay objection; the question asked the detective to explain what prompted his investigation of the activities in the apartment, not whether drugs were actually being sold from that apartment. Dickson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4151 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2005).

646. In defendant's appeal of the revocation of his community supervision for failure to report to the county as ordered, the trial court did not err in overruling his hearsay objection to the community supervision officer's testimony about letters from the post office, which asserted that it had no forwarding address for defendant because the officer's testimony that the letters were sent and returned was not hearsay as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d).

The officer's lack of personal knowledge of the statements contained in the letters was irrelevant because the letters were not introduced for the statements contained therein, but to prove the State actually sent the letters attempting to contact defendant. Wheat v. State, 165 S.W.3d 802, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3548 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

647. In a trial for an aggravated robbery that occurred in a motel, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit into evidence, as an admission by a party opponent, the complainant's civil pleading in his lawsuit against the motel. The complainant was not a party opponent. Davis v. State, 177 S.W.3d 355, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2714 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

648. State, not the victim, is the party-opponent of the accused in a criminal proceeding. Therefore, a statement by a victim or complainant in a criminal case is not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2) as an admission by a party opponent. Davis v. State, 177 S.W.3d 355, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2714 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

649. In an aggravated robbery case, a submission form that accompanied evidence to be tested by the laboratory was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because there was nothing on the form that was offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Raby v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2380 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 30 2005).

650. In an evading arrest and aggravated assault of a public servant case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the officer's statements at trial when he offered the dispatcher's report, an out-of-court statement, as the statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; instead, the statement was offered to establish why the police initiated their pursuit of defendant as they did. Hogues v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1524 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 25 2005).

651. In a murder trial, the trial court properly admitted, under the excited utterance exception, a hearsay statement that the declarant could not believe defendant had shot someone. Even if the declarant's knowledge came from a third person, the only out-of-court statement offered into evidence was the declarant's. The State did not have to show that the third party's statement fell within a hearsay exception. Ross v. State, 154 S.W.3d 804, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11407 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

652. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, even if the victim's alleged statement itself was admissible, it was shrouded by additional layers of hearsay not falling under any exception. The tape consisted of an out-of-court statement by an anonymous caller reporting her daughter's out-of-court statement that the victim told her, in an out-of-court statement, that her father sexually assaulted her (rather than defendant). Because the tape contained layers of inadmissible hearsay, the trial court properly excluded it. Holmes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2004).

653. In an aggravated sexual assault case, the trial court did not err in permitting a Texas Youth Commission official to testify based on his report summarizing juvenile defendant's behavior while at the Commission as the trial court was not precluded from considering hearsay testimony at a transfer/release hearing. In re R.M., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11908 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 3 2004).

654. In defendant's murder case, a witness's statement that "spending time with defendant that night was going to be the worst mistake he ever made" was erroneously admitted because the statement was hearsay, and it contained a dramatic piece of information not communicated in the earlier testimony. Martin v. State, 151 S.W.3d 236, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9437 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

655. In a criminal prosecution for evading arrest in a vehicle, hearsay statements that the officer relied on as a basis for the arrest warrant were admissible as nonhearsay. The officer was permitted to testify that he overheard a cell phone caller ask "Did Little Mike get away, or did the police get him?" "Little Mike" was defendant's nickname. Powell v. State, 151 S.W.3d 646, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Waco 2004), reversed by 189 S.W.3d 285, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 681 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

656. In a murder case, a court did not err in allowing a witness to testify about another's hearsay statements implicating defendant as the murderer where he failed to object when the same evidence was presented again. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7777 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 26 2004).

657. Trial court erred in admitting the victim's mother's testimony concerning the grandmother's statement because it was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(c), which included any matter explicitly asserted and any matter implied by a statement, and the grandmother's statement was offered for the implication that she knew her husband and granddaughter were alone together and that the granddaughter was being sexually assaulted. The error was deemed harmless in light of the fact that there was ample evidence of the step-grandfather's guilt, including the testimony from the victim, the outcry testimony of the victim's mother, and the medical evidence. Mosley v. State, 141 S.W.3d 816, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6923 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

658. In defendant's motor vehicle theft case, a court did not err in admitting a statement where the witness's testimony about another's condition was not a statement offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and therefore, the testimony was not hearsay. Roy v. State, 161 S.W.3d 30, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6712 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

660. Where defendant complained on appeal of a letter that was admitted over his objection that was accompanied by a limiting instruction, since it was not admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but rather to prove that it was received by the witness, the hearsay rule did not prevent its admittance. Valencia v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5591 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 24 2004).

661. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

662. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

663. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

664. In a prosecution for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, the trial court correctly sustained a hearsay objection regarding an offer by the vehicle's owner to drop all charges against defendant if he paid her restitution, as defense counsel was soliciting an answer which would have constituted a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Kirksey v. State, 132 S.W.3d 49, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2448 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004).

665. Because defendant did not request notice of the State's intent to use evidence of crimes committed by third persons under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), no notice was required of the intent to use evidence that a grandmother attempted to bribe a child to remain quiet about sexual abuse; moreover, the evidence was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was merely offered to show that the child maintained the allegations despite the bribe. Franco v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1655 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2004).

666. Admission of a statement that is hearsay is nonconstitutional error subject to a harm analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); a nonconstitutional error must be disregarded unless it affected defendant's "substantial rights" by having a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Shaw v. State, 122 S.W.3d 358, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9864 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

667. Where defendant was convicted of intoxication manslaughter and intoxication assault, the trial court abused its discretion by allowing defendant's prior felony convictions to be introduced to impeach his credibility, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 609, where the convictions were improperly admitted as hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 806, when they were not in fact hearsay as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Enriquez v. State, 56 S.W.3d 596, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 5450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2001).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

668. Defense counsel performed adequately during defendant's trial for failure to comply with sex offender registration requirements by not objecting to hearsay in a parole officer's statement about a renter staying in defendant's Texas home because the officer's testimony did not indicate a hearsay source; the statement appeared to be based on the officer's personal observations. Dunbar v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6413, 2014 WL 2741237 (Tex. App. Austin June 13 2014).

669. Prior to calling a detective, a witness heard defendant say that he had strangled a woman, after which he demonstrated how, and thus the record reasonably showed that the witness was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement of the event when she spoke to the detective, for excited utterance purposes, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Owens v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6214, 2014 WL 2568483 (Tex. App. Dallas June 9 2014).

670. Even if the trial court erred by overruling defendant's hearsay objection, the error, if any, was harmless because the objected-to evidence was cumulative of other properly admitted evidence. Owens v. State, 2014 Tex.

App. LEXIS 6214, 2014 WL 2568483 (Tex. App. Dallas June 9 2014).

671. State used an investigator to sponsor statements and drawings made by the child to prove that defendant stomped on the child's brother, and these statements and drawings were unquestionably hearsay, but fell under the excited utterance exception because the statements and drawings were made by the child immediately or shortly after being told his brother was dead and thus made out of impulse rather than through reason. Almaguer v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3842, 2014 WL 1415182 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 10 2014).

672. Assuming arguendo that the excited utterance exception did not apply and statements and drawings were testimonial hearsay, any Confrontation Clause error was harmless, given defendant's admission to hitting the child and the doctor's testimony that the child died as a result of blunt force abdominal trauma, plus defendant's flight to Mexico could be taken as consciousness of guilt. Almaguer v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3842, 2014 WL 1415182 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 10 2014).

673. Any error in the admission of the child's mother's out-of-court hearsay statements regarding defendant's drug use, employment, and housing was harmless because evidence similar to the testimony was admitted at trial without objection and it was cumulative of other evidence. In the Interest of R.T.M., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3683, 2014 WL 1357242 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 3 2014).

674. Court properly admitted testimony about information relayed to a police officer by a 911 dispatcher because the officer's testimony was not offered to prove that a bus driver had been attacked. Rather, the statement was admitted to explain how the officer came to investigate the offense, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Walls v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3159, 2014 WL 1208017 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 20 2014).

675. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

676. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

677. Although defendant contended that the unidentified declarant's report of a driving while intoxicated case was hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this testimony because the trial court could have found that the officer's testimony about the report helped explain how defendant became a suspect. Lyle v. State, 418 S.W.3d 901, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15243, 2013 WL 6689387 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

678. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding courtesy cards completed by bus passengers after the accident containing their witness statements because the statements written on the cards injected the possibility of calculated misstatements into the equation such that the trustworthiness of the witness accounts was called into doubt and they were given to an interested party. Via Metro. Transit Auth. v. Barraza, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14609,

2013 WL 6255761 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

679. Defendant failed to show that the court erred in admitting the statements made to the nurse for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, because the qualifications of the person hearing the statements was not the important consideration, and the fact that the nurse could have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the conclusion that the statements were inadmissible. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13160, 2013 WL 5773573 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 23 2013).

680. Victim's statement to an investigator was hearsay. Mares v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11983, 2013 WL 5433321 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 25 2013).

681. At best, the victim's hearsay statements were inconclusive as they related to the shooter's identity, and it did not form such a vital portion of the case that defendant was effectively precluded from presenting a defense, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the statement. Mares v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11983, 2013 WL 5433321 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 25 2013).

682. State's ability to object to the admissibility of the victim's statement did not make the trial unfair, and even if the State had introduced the victim's statement, defendant would have been entitled to impeach the evidence, and thus he was not deprived of a fair trial because of the State's hearsay objection. Mares v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11983, 2013 WL 5433321 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 25 2013).

683. Because defendant specifically objected to the 911 call as hearsay and on the basis that the caller was not in court to cross-examine under U.S. Const. amend. VI, defendant sufficiently preserved the error. However, defendant did not object if the 911 call was admitted as non-hearsay. West v. State, 406 S.W.3d 748, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8036 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 2 2013).

684. Testimony by indecency with a child victim's mother that the victim stated that she felt uncomfortable when she could feel defendant in the pool was inadmissible hearsay; the victim's statement described an emotion, but was not admissible as a then-existing state of mind. Linney v. State, 401 S.W.3d 764, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 7 2013).

685. Even assuming that a witness's statements were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), a trial court did not err in excluding another witness's immunity agreement to impeach the hearsay statements; the statements did not reach the "formal" level that would raise them to the level of "testimonial" statements, such that they would implicate the Confrontation Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Marmolejo v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2013).

686. Appellant appeared to challenge a declaration on confrontation grounds, but this argument did not comport with his trial objection that was based on hearsay, and thus the issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; even if the matter were preserved, the argument lacked merit because a dying declaration was admissible at common law even though one who stood accused was not given a chance to confront. Bundick v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4350 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 4 2013).

687. Exhibit should not have been excluded on the basis of the hearsay objection, because the business records affidavit made by the custodian of records precisely tracked the requirements in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

688. Court did not need to consider if certain testimony was hearsay because even assuming it was, any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the father did not object to any of certain testimony that was cumulative of and substantially similar to the challenged testimony. In re R.L.A., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745, 2013 WL 1092210 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2013).

689. To prevail on his ineffective assistance claims, the father had to show that counsel's performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness based on the failure to make hearsay objections and seek limiting instructions, and then the father had to show that but for these errors, the results of the proceedings would have been different; as the father failed to meet the second prong, given that his conclusory allegation did not meet the prejudice requirement, the court did not need to address the first prong, and the court overruled this issue. In re R.L.A., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745, 2013 WL 1092210 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2013).

690. Business record affidavit had 21 pages of documents attached, including certain affidavits, and although they were notarized and therefore self-authenticating, they could still be inadmissible if they were hearsay. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

691. Having found there was no basis upon which the overruling of a debtor's hearsay objection could have been supported, the court had to decide if the error resulted in an improper judgment. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

692. Without the challenged paragraphs, there would have been insufficient evidence to prove the assignment of the debtor's account to the company and therefore insufficient evidence upon which a judgment could have been rendered in the company's favor; the affidavits in question did not fall under the business records exception, and thus the judgment turned on improperly admitted evidence, to which a hearsay objection should have been sustained, and the court reversed. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

693. Trial court did not err in allowing state troopers to testify, over defendant's hearsay objection, regarding information they had received from an anonymous tipster where the information was used at trial to show how and why defendant came to the attention of the troopers and, in that sense, was admissible to prove that the troopers detained defendant after they acquired specific information concerning a drug-smuggling operation involving a tractor-trailer whose description matched the appearance of defendant's tractor-trailer. Because defendant had challenged the conduct of the troopers on the grounds that they lacked reasonable suspicion for the traffic stop and probable cause for his arrest, the details of the out-of-court statements by the anonymous tipster were admissible to show the reasonableness of the troopers' conduct. Iglesias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

694. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

695. Financial history should have been excluded from evidence in light of the company's hearsay objection; no testimony was offered, either live or by affidavit, that could have proved the "financial history" was not hearsay, was a business record, or otherwise satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule. Shamrock Foods Co. v. Munn & Assocs., Ltd., 392 S.W.3d 839, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 244, 2013 WL 150810 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 15 2013).

696. Even assuming witness testimony as to the radio's serial number was hearsay, the serial number was documented in other evidence that was admitted at trial, including business records containing the number, and although the witness did not personally obtain the number, his testimony connected the records to the radio through his personal knowledge of and involvement in the investigation; in the absence of a challenge to the sufficiency of the business records affidavit, the court could not find that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the business records that contained the serial number over appellant's hearsay objection. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

697. As the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting business records containing a radio's serial number, testimony as to that number was duplicative of evidence that was properly admitted, and even assuming the testimony was inadmissible hearsay, any error did not harm appellant; as there was no harm, the court could not reverse the judgment on this basis even if the testimony was inadmissible hearsay. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

698. Even had the debtor raised one certain complaint about an affidavit, he did not object to it before or during the hearing, and while he referred the court to a part of his rehearing motion in which he claimed he objected to incompetent hearsay in the affidavit, his actual objection was that the note was presented with an affidavit and the affiant not present for questioning, and it was just hearsay, and the debtor did not appeal the denial of his motion for reconsideration. Wilner v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10595, 2012 WL 6632508 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 21 2012).

699. Determination of companies' challenge to that the summary judgment ruling on an aider claim was intertwined with the determination of the evidentiary issue of whether a regulation was not hearsay, and thus it was necessary for the court to consider the issue that challenged the exclusion of the regulation. Highland Capital Mgmt., L.P. v. Ryder Scott Co., 402 S.W.3d 719, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10120, 2012 WL 6082713 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 6 2012).

700. Court concludes that Regulation S-X of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 17 C.F.R. § 210.4-10(a)(2), is not hearsay. Highland Capital Mgmt., L.P. v. Ryder Scott Co., 402 S.W.3d 719, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10120, 2012 WL 6082713 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 6 2012).

701. In a forcible detainer action, a business records affidavit that authenticated the notice to vacate was not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it substantially complied with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10), although it did not precisely track the language of Rule 902(10). Although the affidavit was prepared by a third party, the foreclosure purchaser's law firm, the trial court could have concluded that the purchaser reasonably relied on the accuracy of the records in the ordinary course of its business and that they were trustworthy. Baty v. Morequity, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9876 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2012).

702. Assuming that the trial court erred in admitting a detective's hearsay testimony, such an error would have been non-constitutional error, and the court had to disregard it unless appellant's substantial rights were affected. Gladney v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806, 2012 WL 5949473 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 28 2012).

703. Other evidence showing appellant's guilt of murder was overwhelming and made the State's inability to produce the murder weapon trivial, and given the insignificance of the evidence about an anonymous phone call concerning the weapon as compared to the weight of the evidence that was admitted showing appellant was the shooter, the hearsay evidence had either no effect or only a slight effect on the jury's finding, and thus appellant's substantial rights were not affected for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2. Gladney v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806, 2012 WL 5949473 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 28 2012).

704. Court did not find that gaps and hearsay statements triggered the Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses against appellant; he did not show how the admission of hearsay statements or notations required reversal. Grimaldo v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9647, 2012 WL 5869603 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 21 2012).

705. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that a witness's statements were nonhearsay because he never argued that contention before the trial court. Pittman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9057 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 31 2012).

706. Parties stipulated that an owner did not sign an exhibit, and he testified that he had not seen the document, plus counsel was able to cross-examine the contractor and examine the owner concerning the document, which neutralized his claimed basis for a hearsay objection; the trial court did not err in admitting the exhibit because the hearsay objection was properly overruled, and even if it was error, it was harmless because other similar evidence was introduced without objection. Aguilar v. Hernandez, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8755, 2012 WL 5187923 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 18 2012).

707. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the record reasonably showed that the statement was made by the complainant shortly after she had been sexually assaulted and she was still dominated by the fear, emotions, and/or pain of the incident when she spoke, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling appellant's hearsay objection. Herrera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8411, 2012 WL 4748203 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 5 2012).

708. Trial court did not erroneously admit evidence of admonishments given prior to a photo lineup because the admonishments were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the extrajudicial statements were offered for the purpose of showing what was said. Hendershot v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6632 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2012).

709. Appellant did not dispute that the proffered evidence was hearsay, and it was his responsibility to specify the exception on which he relied, but he failed to cite one; even if the court found the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, on which appellant focused, appellant did not address the hearsay issue, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony on inadmissible hearsay grounds. Quevedo v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6178, 2012 WL 3055470 (Tex. App. Dallas July 27 2012).

710. Court found that any error in admitting certain exhibits was harmless under the standard of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); any error in admitting the exhibits over a hearsay objection did not require reversal of the judgment under Rule 44.2(b). Peluso v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5122, 2012 WL 2450818 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2012).

711. Chief medical examiner did not testify as to what a doctor found to be the cause of death, and the State did not offer into evidence the autopsy report the doctor prepared, and thus the examiner's testimony did not violate appellant's right to confrontation under the Sixth Amendment, given that it was not testimonial hearsay; the examiner testified concerning his opinion on the cause of death and he was subject to cross-examination in this regard. Hutcherson v. State, 373 S.W.3d 179, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5042, 2012 WL 2377196 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 25 2012).

712. Counsel raised an objection on grounds of hearsay and the right to cross-examine, and although the objection did not expressly note the Confrontation Clause, such a violation denied one the right to cross-examine witnesses; the objections were made with enough specificity to have made the trial court aware of appellant's complaint, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4597, 2012 WL 2106549 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

713. Appellant's specific objections, along with adverse rulings, preserved his hearsay and Confrontation Clause issues for review and he did not waive such regarding testimony on direct examination. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4597, 2012 WL 2106549 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

714. Appellant did not obtain a ruling on his renewed objections when the State sought to question a witness on rebuttal, and no objection was made during that questioning, such that the issues raised regarding hearsay and the Confrontation Clause were not preserved as to that testimony; the court noted that under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible hearsay admitted without an objection was not denied value just given that it was hearsay. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4597, 2012 WL 2106549 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

716. Preserved error was that an officer provided backdoor hearsay, which violated appellant's confrontation rights, but the officer's re-direct testimony established the same fact, and any possible error in the admission of this testimony was not preserved for review; the court found there was no likelihood that the alleged claim of error of admitting almost the same testimony materially affected the deliberations and outcome, and assuming the trial court erred, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a). Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4597, 2012 WL 2106549 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

717. Exclusion of testimony did not result in reversible error, as there was no evidence that the witness had any first-hand knowledge, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 602, of appellant's health condition and the trial court did not err in sustaining the hearsay objection; although some of the proffered testimony was not hearsay and consisted of the witness's observations and inferences, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 701, even that was cumulative, and thus the excluded testimony could not have added anything to the admitted evidence. Frangias v. State, 367 S.W.3d 806, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3065, 2012 WL 1356704 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 19 2012).

718. Appellant objected on grounds of hearsay and relevancy and he claimed the evidence was more prejudicial than probative, but he did not raise an objection on confrontation or insufficiency grounds at trial and thus he did not preserve those arguments for review. Mclamore v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2909 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 12 2012).

719. Court had held that several exceptions could be relied upon to allow proof of the value of stolen property, including the business-records exception, the exception for records of documents affecting an interest in property, and the exception for market reports and such, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a witness's testimony in this regard over appellant's hearsay objection; in the alternative, any error was harmless because (1) appellant's community supervision was conditioned on him not committing any offense, (2) although it was alleged that appellant committed theft of property worth at least $ 1,500, proof of a lesser included offense would have sufficed to render judgment adjudicating his guilt, (3) theft of property valued at less than $ 50 was a lesser-included offense of theft of property of a higher amount, and (4) even if there was no properly admitted evidence of the value of the wheels and tires, the court could presume they had some value because the witness had not replaced them for months after the theft. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

720. In determining that a proposed acquisition of a utility was in the public interest, the Texas Public Utility Commission properly struck as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) portions of proposed testimony that discussed withdrawn testimony, including statements by an expert witness who was hired by the Commission's staff. The withdrawn testimony did not constitute admissions by party-opponents under Rule 801(e)(2) because it did not come from opposing parties, nor was it admissible under the public-record exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) because it was not admitted into the record or prepared under the supervision of a public official. Nucor Steel -- Tex. v. PUC, 363 S.W.3d 871, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108, 2012 WL 895994 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 15 2012).

721. Because appellant did not obtain a ruling on hearsay, authentication, and Tex. R. Civ. P. 194 objections, which were objections to the form of evidence, they could not be considered on appeal. Petro-Hunt, L.L.C. v. Wapiti Energy, L.L.C., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1860, 2012 WL 761144 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 8 2012).

722. Appellant did not timely object on the basis of hearsay when a witness made two statements and did not request a running objection; thus, appellant did not preserve any error based on those statements for appeal. Glover v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1491, 2012 WL 604026 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 27 2012).

723. Appellant did not object to the evidence offered by witnesses in valuing an automated teller machine, front-end loader, or cost of repairs in his trial for theft and criminal mischief, and thus any objection related to hearsay and lay and expert opinions was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Lee v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2012 WL 592192 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 23 2012).

724. Appellant based her objection at trial upon an exhibit's alleged hearsay status because of the exhibit's purported failure to qualify as a business record, but she did not object on constitutional grounds, and an objection concerning hearsay rules did not preserve an argument concerning one's right of confrontation; because appellant failed to urge an objection regarding her right of confrontation under U.S. Const. amend. VI, XIV at trial, she forfeited her issue on appeal, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Buckner v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1258, 2012 WL 503522 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2012).

725. Motorist did not bring a hearsay objection to the trial court's attention, and merely complained the testimony was speculative; thus, this issue was not preserved for review. Carter v. Johnson, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1239, 2012 WL 566089 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 15 2012).

726. Whether appellant's statements were speculative or contained hearsay were objections to form, which had to be ruled on or they were waived, but an objection that an affidavit was conclusory could be raised on appeal, as was the claim that an affiant failed to establish her qualifications as an expert; thus, the court reviewed the city's objections to conclusory statements and whether appellant was qualified to give her opinion. Strother v. City of Rockwall, 358 S.W.3d 462, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 715 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 27 2012).

727. Appellant's attempt to impeach a doctor's credibility was not covered under Tex. R. Evid. 806, and when applicable, the rule allowed the declarant's credibility to be challenged; the declarant's credibility was not an issue at trial, and a witness's testimony regarding information he received from the declarant was relevant only if the jury found the declarant's statement was accurate and truthful, and because the declarant's statement was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was inadmissible and the trial court properly excluded it. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d 790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

728. Appellant failed to preserve error on his specific complaint on appeal, and thus he forfeited the hearsay and confrontation complaints. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d 790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

729. To the extent appellant's complaint could be construed to include certain testimony to which appellant raised hearsay and Confrontation Clause objections, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the objections because the same or similar evidence had been previously received without objection. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d

790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

730. Appellant claimed that his medical records were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), but this was not presented at trial as a ground for overruling the State's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and although the records were included in the bill of exceptions, such was not made on the predicate for admission under either hearsay exception appellant raised for the first time on appeal; even if the court assumed that the trial court understood the bill of exceptions to be a proffer of admission, the records did not establish that appellant suffered from a medical condition that was relevant to his prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the patient history did not show that he had a condition that mimicked the symptoms of intoxication, and no other potential relevance for the records was shown, such that exclusion of the records did not affect a substantial right under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

731. Program director's affidavit did not explain how she learned of the purported publication of allegedly defamatory information to another student employee, and to the extent one had to suppose that the director learned about the alleged publication from the employee, her recounting of the information amounted to hearsay that was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); even if the affidavit statements were not hearsay, it appeared as if the statements purportedly made by the medical center to the other student employee would have been protected, given that they had a shared interest in the information. Gonzalez v. Methodist Charlton Med. Ctr., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9613, 2011 WL 6091255 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 7 2011).

732. Trial court erred in sustaining appellees' objections to letters attached to a summary judgment affidavit by a testator's cousin; the letters were not included as summary judgment evidence to prove the truth stated in the letters under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), but to provide some evidence as to when a controversy arose between the parties on the issue of the testator's intent. Estate of Denman, 362 S.W.3d 134, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9262, 2011 WL 5869479 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 23 2011).

733. Defense counsel did not make any argument to the trial court as to why the evidence was admissible, either because it was not hearsay or because an exception applied, and thus these arguments were not preserved for appeal. Chalker v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8944, 2011 WL 5428970 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2011).

734. Allowing the prosecutor to testify about an email regarding another out-of-court statement allegedly made by a detective would have involved violations of the hearsay rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 801, 805, and appellant did not identify any exception, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802; appellant did not show that the trial court erred in refusing to allow the prosecutor to testify about the email. Zavala v. State, 401 S.W.3d 171, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8671, 2011 WL 5156843 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 1 2011).

735. Because a tenant did not object, she did not preserve for review any error from the trial court's admission of hearsay testimony. White v. Fritz, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8502, 2011 WL 5067698 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 26 2011).

736. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault, aggravated kidnapping, and unlawful possession of a firearm, the court did not err in admitting a docket sheet from one of defendant's prior convictions; while the docket sheet was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), it was admissible under the public records exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Brown v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7319, 2011 WL 3915663 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2011).

737. Appellant claimed that the trial court erred in overruling his hearsay objection to a letter allegedly containing his signature, but the court found that the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and was a party's own statements under Rule 801(e)(2)(A); the letter, addressed to the complaining witness, indicated what appellant did on the day in question, and the letter did not mention that he was with his brother most of that morning, and the brother was surprised the letter failed to mention him. Vallair v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7055, 2011 WL 3847418 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 31 2011).

738. While a trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) in admitting hearsay testimony by appellee's friend recounting appellant's statements to appellee, the error was harmless as the testimony was merely cumulative of other properly admitted evidence. Jasik v. Mauricio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7078, 2011 WL 3849473 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2011).

739. Trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) in overruling defendant's hearsay objection to an officer's testimony because evidence that the officer's attention was directed to defendant was not admitted to show defendant was guilty of a robbery; rather, it was admitted to show what the police did and why they searched defendant's person and vehicle. Melvin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5432, 2011 WL 3329207 (Tex. App. Tyler July 13 2011).

740. Appellant objected immediately after witnesses answered questions, and this was when alleged grounds for an objection became apparent because neither question was phrased so as to have elicited a hearsay response, and the objections were timely for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Briscoe v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

741. Even assuming that counsel was deficient for failing to make hearsay objections, the hearsay did not directly implicate appellant, and other non-hearsay testimony linked appellant to the offenses, and his claim of ineffective assistance failed. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4663, 2011 WL 2463049 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2011).

742. Appellant's failure to adequately brief an issue waived the complaint on appeal; appellant did not explain why each objection was error or how the evidence offered was not hearsay. Goodenberger v. Ellis, 343 S.W.3d 536, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4062 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2011).

743. Although hearsay was a frequent objection to summary judgment evidence, other grounds included that the statements were irrelevant, defectively vague, and violated of the Statute of Frauds and the Statute of Conveyances; because the trial court may have granted the objections for reasons other than hearsay and those grounds were not challenged, appellant waived his complaint regarding objections that were sustained. Goodenberger v. Ellis, 343 S.W.3d 536, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4062 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2011).

744. In a breach of contract action, a trial court did not err in considering an assignment by a predecessor to a leasing company and a business records affidavit by the predecessor's president; because the affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the assignment, which was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), was admissible under the hearsay exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Game Sys. v. Forbes Hutton Leasing, Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4098, 2011 WL 2119672 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 26 2011).

745. To convict appellant of delivery of a simulated controlled substance, the State was required to prove that appellant sold two rocks in a manner to lead a reasonable person to believe he purchased a controlled substance, under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 482.002, and the State did not have to prove that an undercover officer paid for the rocks with marked $ 20 bills; it was clear that counsel sought to show that the officer could not have reasonably believed that the two rocks were cocaine, counsel stressed that there was no testimony directly linking appellant to the $ 20 bill, and it was reasonable that counsel chose to overlook the assumed hearsay testimony in an attempt to not call attention to potentially damaging evidence, and thus appellant failed to show ineffective assistance. Evans v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3835, 2011 WL 2089692 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 19 2011).

746. Assuming that the trial court would have erred in overruling a hearsay objection to a witness's testimony, the court could not determine that counsel was deficient in not objecting; because the record was silent as to counsel's reasons for not objecting, the court could not speculate to deem his performance deficient, plus appellant testified to the crimes, and where hearsay evidence was improperly admitted, but the same facts were otherwise proven by admissible evidence, there was no reversible error. Stroble v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3205 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 28 2011).

747. Appellant argued that counsel was ineffective for not objecting on hearsay grounds to testimony, which appellant claimed violated her right to confrontation, but a hearsay objection would not have preserved the Confrontation Clause argument appellant sought to raise on appeal. Mcfatridge v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2620 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 6 2011).

748. Appellant's confrontation issue was not preserved because she only made a hearsay objection, which did not preserve error on Confrontation Clause grounds, plus the objection was sustained and appellant did not pursue the matter to an adverse ruling. Mcfatridge v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2620 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 6 2011).

749. Appellant had not shown that a witness's testimony would have been admissible at trial, and much of the witness's proposed testimony appeared to be inadmissible hearsay; ineffective assistance was not shown. Biggers v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2137 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 24 2011).

750. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an exhibit, a pen packet, over appellant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the pen packet relating to appellant's prior felony conviction fell within the exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), (22), and nothing indicated that the documents lacked trustworthiness. Price v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2020, 2011 WL 946978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 17 2011).

751. Under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), the State had to prove extraneous offenses to the jury; if counsel had objected, the State could have chosen to subpoena appellant's victims, and it was possible that counsel made the strategic decision not to object to hearsay because it would have been more damaging to appellant's case to have the victims testify, and the court presumed that counsel performed at a level of prevailing professional norms. Basey v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1695, 2011 WL 825014 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

752. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the production of a decedent's medical records during discovery might have authenticated them but did not render them admissible in a will contest. The medical records were hearsay and inadmissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 803(6) because no custodian established the requirements of the exception. In the Estate of Vackar, 345 S.W.3d 588, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1684 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 9 2011).

753. To the extent that a witness's testimony that the co-conspirator pointed toward the garage while referring to "the dog" constituted inadmissible hearsay, its admission was harmless because the fact that the victim was in the garage was admitted into evidence through other testimony. Orona v. State, 341 S.W.3d 452, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 24 2011).

754. Any error in admitting a witness's hearsay testimony about the victim asking appellant not to take her car was harmless; the record made clear that the victim did not want appellant to take her car and told him so, and any additional testimony about this fact did not affect appellant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Smith

v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1021, 2011 WL 477917 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 11 2011).

755. Officer's testimony amounted to an explanation from police as to how appellant became a suspect in the case, and the questions prompting the responses were not designed to elicit hearsay testimony, and thus the testimony was admissible; also, the testimony was cumulative of other testimony, such that any harm was harmless. Zamora v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10246, 2010 WL 5541706 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 30 2010).

756. Because a creditor's trial exhibit satisfied the requirements for the admission of third-party business records and because the challenged affidavits satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling hearsay objections. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

757. Appellant never raised a hearsay objection to admission of the recordings themselves and therefore failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and even had appellant preserved a valid hearsay objection, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because certain exhibits were the same as the testimony. Dial v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9273, 2010 WL 4705529 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2010).

758. Defendant did not preserve for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) a hearsay issue regarding the admission of the complainant's testimony about a statement made by defendant because the complainant previously had mentioned defendant's statement without objection; moreover, a criminal defendant's own statements are not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Sierra v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8039, 2010 WL 3866270 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 5 2010).

759. To the extent appellant claimed testimony should have been excluded because it was hearsay and violated Tex. R. Evid. 403, nothing was presented for review; appellant cited no authority and made only a cursory argument that the admission of testimony violated Rule 403. Mccutchen v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7760, 2010 WL 3699987 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 22 2010).

760. Trial court did not err in a divorce action in permitting the mother to offer testimony concerning one child's opinion of the father, the child's viewpoint of the father's parenting skills, and the child's viewpoint of the father as a role model; the testimony was offered to show the child's state of mind while the father was caring for the child. Therefore, it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Koenig v. Koenig, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7423, 2010 WL 3518232 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

761. During grandparents' trial for the murder of one granddaughter and serious bodily injury to another granddaughter, defense counsel did not render ineffective assistance when certain hearsay statements, as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), were admitted without objection; all of the unobjected-to testimony was cumulative of other testimony given at trial. Ramirez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7169 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2010).

762. First level of hearsay in a statement identified declarants as "other individuals," but no hearsay exception was offered that was applicable to them, such that the trial court did not err in sustaining a hearsay objection to this statement. Montalvo v. County of Refugio, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3120, 2010 WL 1731651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

763. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 805, without knowing the identity of the declarant, the court could not say that the first part of a statement qualified as any exception to the hearsay rule; because not all levels of hearsay contained within the statement satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err in sustaining a hearsay objection to this statement. Montalvo v. County of Refugio, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3120, 2010 WL 1731651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

764. Statements of the victim's friend were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804, because none of the exceptions in Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1)-(3) applied, and Tex. R. Evid. 804(a) was not a hearsay exception and only provided guidance as to who was an unavailable witness. Kresse v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3031, 2010 WL 1633383 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 22 2010).

765. Testimony by an investigator about our of court statements from a witness was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because the evidence--a description of the suspect and a license plate number--explained how defendant became a suspect; the license plate number yielded the name of a woman, and a deputy recognized the woman's name and recalled she had an associate fitting defendant's description. Pruitt v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2596, 2010 WL 1490083 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 14 2010).

766. Court agreed that seller waived any hearsay complaint with an affidavit by failing to object and obtain a ruling below. Sprayberry v. Siesta Mhc Income Ptnrs., L.P., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2517, 2010 WL 1404598 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 8 2010).

767. Any error in the trial court's admission of contested testimony was harmless because appellant later allowed similar evidence to be introduced without objection, and the contested evidence was merely cumulative of properly admitted evidence; the error, if any, in admitting the hearsay testimony did not probably cause the rendition of an improper judgment. Astoria Indus. of Iowa v. Brand Fx Body Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2010).

768. Even if the court presumed that the assistant district attorney's testimony amounted to inadmissible hearsay evidence, defendant failed to preserve this complaint for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because he did not subsequently object when the State elicited substantially similar testimony from the attorney and he did not procure a running objection or request a hearing outside of the jury's presence. Dreyer v. State, 309 S.W.3d 751, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2222 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2010).

769. Although defendant asserted harm from inadmissible hearsay, the improper admission of evidence was not reversible error when, as here, the same or similar evidence was admitted without objection at another point in the trial. Dreyer v. State, 309 S.W.3d 751, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2222 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2010).

770. Defendant did not make a request or objection with sufficient specificity to apprise the trial court of his complaint asserting a violation of the Confrontation Clause, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and an objection based on hearsay grounds, as defendant made, did not preserve error on Confrontation Clause grounds. Dreyer v. State, 309 S.W.3d 751, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2222 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2010).

771. Assuming arguendo that reports were inadmissible hearsay, the court found their admission to be harmless because like evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection. In re L.T., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2010 WL 1222052 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 30 2010).

772. Trial court did not rule on a company's objections to an attorney fee affidavit, such that the objections as to the form of the affidavit were waived; moreover, general objections of hearsay and that the affidavit was without foundation would be too general to present an issue for review, even if it had been preserved through an adverse ruling, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(a). Petroleum Analyzer Co. Lp v. Olstowski, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1558

(Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 4 2010).

773. Defendant merely concluded that 19 objectionable statements constituted hearsay, but did not explain why, and thus the matter was inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) and the court declined to address it. Thompson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 11, 2010).

774. Court recognized that one resident testified that an insurance representative informed him that the fire was caused by the homeowner's cigarette, but the court did not consider this testimony to create more than a scintilla of evidence as to this issue because the homeowners objected to the testimony as hearsay and the residents did not allege any applicable hearsay exception, plus the insurance documents provided no support for the representative's alleged statement, and the residents' own expert testified that a claims adjuster was not qualified to determine the cause of a fire. Hemenas v. Caston, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1023, 2010 WL 521116 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 11 2010).

775. Because the trial court excluded the patient's expert report on a ground that had not been challenged on appeal, the court presumed that the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection; thus, the court overruled the patient's issue without considering whether her offensive use of the report waived the statutory restrictions on her subsequent use of the report over objection. Fowler v. Samuel, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 787, 2009 WL 5710146 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 4 2010).

776. Assuming without deciding that the trial court erred in admitting certain statements, the erroneous admission of hearsay evidence was non-constitutional error for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and the court had fair assurance that the error, if any, in admitting the evidence was harmless; the jury had sufficient evidence from which to find defendant's guilt of theft notwithstanding whether the jury believed defendant was associated with another person. Barwari v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 686, 2010 WL 338198 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 1 2010).

777. Because a sergeant's statement was neither hearsay nor testimonial, the fact that it might have been employed in the creation of the photo array was immaterial, defendant had not identified any authority supporting his claim that a photo array was inadmissible because officers identified a suspect through out-of-court conversations, plus defendant did not object to the array on this basis in any event, and thus he had not preserved this issue for review. Stafford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 475, 2010 WL 318231 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 28 2010).

778. Contrary to a company's claims, questions complained of did not call for hearsay nor did the witness respond with hearsay testimony; even if the trial court erred, the company was required to show reversible error for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1), and the company failed to demonstrate that error in the admission of testimony led to the rendition of an improper judgment. Weeks Marine, Inc. v. Barrera, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 438, 2010 WL 307878 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 27 2010).

779. In defendant's online solicitation case, the trial court did not err by admitting the chat logs between defendant and the officer posing as a teenager because the investigation traced the IP address used by defendant to defendant's apartment, and defendant admitted he used to have the particular screen name at issue. The officer asked defendant if they could "safely assume" it was defendant on the chats with the "teenager," and defendant answered, "Yes, sir." Bailey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9440, 2009 WL 4725348 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 475, 178 L. Ed. 2d 301, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 7971 (U.S. 2010).

780. State's question was improper because it assumed facts not in evidence, but the State was not offering testimony and thus the question did not amount to hearsay. Butler v. State, 300 S.W.3d 474, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS

8651 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 12 2009).

781. Admission of the first part of a hearsay statement was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because other witnesses testified that to the same fact. Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

782. Second portion of a hearsay statement indicated one possible motive for the murder of the victim; the State did not refer to the inadmissible hearsay testimony in final argument and given the strength of the evidence of murder, the court did not find that this hearsay statement had a substantial effect on the jury's verdict, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

783. On appeal, defendant argued that testimony was inadmissible under extraneous evidence grounds, but defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve the issue for appellate review on a different theory. Norman v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8796, 2009 WL 3805830 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

784. Court noted that much of an investigator's testimony was hearsay and no objection was made; such hearsay might have been excluded on request, but once admitted, the evidence enjoyed a status equal to that of all other admissible evidence. Clayton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7705, 2009 WL 3151207 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 2 2009).

785. Several instances did not involve hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and defendant had not explained how the trial court would have erred in overruling any such objections, such that the court rejected his claim of ineffective assistance in this regard. McEuen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6361, 2009 WL 2476540 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 13 2009).

786. Content of defendant's statement could not be inferred from testimony showing that he voluntarily met with a detective and was not hearsay; because the trial court abused its discretion by excluding this testimony, the court had to determine if defendant suffered harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Galvez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6300, 2009 WL 2476600 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 12 2009).

787. For purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), the court was unable to say that defendant's substantial rights were affected by exclusion of a detective's testimony, which was not hearsay, because the record contained other evidence from which the jury could have concluded that defendant's actions were consistent with innocence. Galvez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6300, 2009 WL 2476600 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 12 2009).

788. Although defendant noted on appeal that the State's introduction of hearsay evidence violated his right to confront the witnesses against him, he did not make that objection at trial, and that argument was waived. Vasquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6117, 2009 WL 5915945 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 6 2009).

789. Although defendant objected to the evidence as hearsay, he did not obtain an express ruling on that objection under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and while the State conceded the objection was implicitly overruled, defendant did not cite authority supporting an argument that the trial court erred in overruling his objection; he merely argued that the evidence was insufficient because it was hearsay and the result was the same as if he had failed to object in the trial court, and because the admissibility of the evidence was not challenged on appeal, the evidence was before the court for all purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 802, in connection with defendant's challenge to a restitution order. Vasquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6117, 2009 WL 5915945 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 6 2009).

790. To the extent testimony was objectionable as hearsay, no such objection was made at trial, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Campbell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5369, 2009 WL 2025344 (Tex. App. Dallas July 14 2009).

791. Defendant did not object to a hearsay statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(a), 802; the jury was therefore permitted to consider this hearsay evidence for any purpose. Walker v. State, 291 S.W.3d 114, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4863 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 23 2009).

792. Certain testimony specifically impeached the accuracy of the victim's testimony, and to the extent that a witness's testimony presented evidence of the child victim's veracity, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 608(a), the court agreed with the State that the testimony did not constitute hearsay; however, much of the witness's testimony seemed to go beyond merely rehabilitating the child's character for truthfulness, and therefore arguably constituted hearsay, but even if failing to object to hearsay was not a viable trial strategy, defendant failed to meet the second prong of the test for ineffective assistance, as the testimony was cumulative and its introduction arguably harmless and defendant failed to show prejudice. Mitchell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4137, 2009 WL 1623422 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 11 2009).

793. Defendant complained that an officer's videotaped statement that two witnesses had implicated defendant as the shooter was inadmissible hearsay that was testimonial; the court noted that while the rules generally prohibited the admission of out of court statements offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, a statement was not deemed hearsay if it involved identification of one perceived by the declarant, who later testified at trial and was available for cross-examination, under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). York v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3827, 2009 WL 1493255 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

794. Defendant argued testimony was inadmissible hearsay, but made no argument for the contentions made, plus the record was silent as to counsel's strategy in not objecting; defendant did not argue that exclusion of the testimony would have probably resulted in a different outcome and defendant therefore failed to meet his burden to show ineffective assistance. Ruiz v. State, 293 S.W.3d 685, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3632 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 27 2009).

795. Any error in overruling defendant's hearsay objection was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(d), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); other evidence was admitted of defendant's improper jail conduct and prior criminal history and the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Henley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3653, 2009 WL 1464247 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2009).

796. Court agreed that a statement was hearsay, but defendant failed to object and thus failed to preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Patterson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3196 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 12 2009).

797. Resident and his wife offered nothing in support of the 911 records to satisfy the requirements of self-authentication established by Tex. R. Evid. 902; without the required certification by a records custodian or other person authorized to certify them, the 911 records had no probative value and were incompetent summary-judgment evidence properly excluded as hearsay. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

798. Even though the trial court erred by excluding the accomplice's testimony that defendant appeared surprised when the accomplice exhibited the gun during the robbery, because defendant's surprised reaction was not hearsay, as it was not intended as a substitute for any verbal communication to the accomplice, the error was harmless because two eyewitnesses testified that defendant was the gunman. Woodard v. State, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 2897, 2009 WL 1124385 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 28 2009).

799. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the wife's testimony concerning a statement she had previously made to her daughter, because the statement was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, the error was harmless because the wife did not testify about what she meant by telling her daughter "what was going on," and she had previously testified at length without objection about a prior incident with defendant. Edwards v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2873, 2009 WL 1140092 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 27 2009).

800. Argument was not preserved for appeal because the trial court never ruled on the admissibility of a witness's testimony regarding any prior crimes a person told him he committed and counsel did not object when the testimony was presented in court; even if counsel's general objection to hearsay testimony preserved this complaint, there was no harm. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

801. None of the testimony that was given at trial constituted hearsay and the court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel in this regard. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

802. While the State conceded that a question called for a hearsay response, the State argued that defendant's objection was untimely and preserved nothing for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), and the court agreed; defendant offered no legitimate reason to justify waiting to object until after the question was answered and nothing in the record justified defendant's waiting to object until after the witness answered the question, and thus the untimely objection failed to preserve error. Mendez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1066, 2009 WL 385020 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 12 2009).

803. Personal jurisdiction under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 17.042 was lacking over California residents in an action for breach of a partnership agreement; evidence of ownership of Texas property and related travel did not establish personal jurisdiction, and affidavits that failed to set forth the place and terms of the alleged agreement and contained hearsay statements were properly excluded under Tex. R. Civ. P. 120a(3) and Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Rattner v. Contos, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 894, 2009 WL 330966 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 11 2009).

804. Alleged hearsay testimony was offered to explain how defendant became a suspect and not for the truth of the matter asserted, and was therefore not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

805. Two of defendant's hearsay objections were waived on appeal because the same evidence was introduced from another source without objection from defendant. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

806. Defendant contended that without allegedly improper hearsay testimony, the evidence was insufficient to uphold the verdict of guilt of aggravated kidnapping; even if the trial court erred in admitting the alleged hearsay testimony, the court had to consider the testimony in assessing the sufficiency of the evidence. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

807. Because the trial court sustained a hearsay objection regarding testimony and a party did not argue on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) that this ruling was erroneous, this argument was waived. Moe v. Option One Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 350, 2009 WL 136892 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

808. Defendant's conviction for arson of a habitation was appropriate because, in light of an investigator's status as a law enforcement official, the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and 803(8)(B), and defendant's failure to provide any argument on appeal refuting the trial court's classification of the statements offered from the DA packet as inadmissible hearsay under the rules, the appellate court was unable to say that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding those portions of the DA packet in which another individual was designated as a co-defendant. Charles v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

809. None of the objections at trial were based on hearsay and therefore any hearsay objection made for the first time on appeal was waived. Musgrove v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9484 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 18 2008).

810. Statement conveyed events as the witness perceived them, and thus the statement fell under the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); the witness testified that the woman in question made the statement in response to the argument she was observing between defendant, another, and the victim, plus testimony tending to show that defendant was a suspect and explained the circumstances leading up to a murder was admissible, and thus the trial court did not err in admitting this statement over defendant's hearsay objection in his murder trial. Brown v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9063 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 4 2008).

811. Testimony was offered to show how defendant became a suspect and did not leave the jury with the inescapable conclusion that a witness was testifying through a detective, and thus the court rejected defendant's claim of backdoor hearsay. Lucas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8976 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 3 2008).

812. Although defendant objected to testimony at one point during the witness's testimony, defendant failed to object to the testimony the first time it was raised at trial; under Tex. R. Evid. 802, the responsibility fell upon defendant and his counsel to object to the admission of the hearsay, and having failed to object, defendant had to be prepared to accept the consequences that hearsay could be considered by the trier of fact as probative evidence to be considered with other evidence admitted at trial. Lucas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8976 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 3 2008).

813. When the State sought to admit a pen packet, defense counsel objected to it as hearsay, but did not object to authentication; this was not an improper objection because if the record was actually not authenticated, then it would have been subject to a hearsay objection, but the court agreed that counsel should make a more specific objection to preserve the issue of authentication. Fox v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8527 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 13 2008).

814. Defendant objected to an exhibit on hearsay grounds and claimed on appeal that the evidence was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), but the State established the admissibility of the documents as a record of regularly conducted activity under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and the fact that defendant might have been correct about the applicability of the medical diagnosis exception was not conclusive of the issue; the trial court was correct in admitting the evidence as a record of regularly conducted activity and there was no abuse of discretion. Matthews v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8544 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 13 2008).

815. In a personal injury action in which appellee truck driver pleaded a claim for negligent hiring against appellant foreign corporation by alleging that it hired a Texas corporation to deliver products to Texas when appellant retained control over the Texas corporation and knew or should have known that the Texas corporation employed an incompetent driver, appellee had offered a carrier agreement to demonstrate the existence of a legal relationship between appellant and the Texas corporation, and because the carrier agreement appeared to be signed by the director of appellant, and appellant did not properly challenge the agreement's authenticity, the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's hearsay objection. Ltd. Logistics Servs. v. Villegas, 268 S.W.3d 141, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS

6536 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2008).

816. Trial court did not act outside the zone of reasonable disagreement by overruling defendant's hearsay objection to an officer recitation of the victim's hearsay statement that defendant had gotten angry and pushed her into a wall and by admitting it as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); when the officer responded to the victim's 911 case, he found her clearly upset and it was a reasonable inference that 911 response time was fairly quick. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

817. Trial court erred by overruling defendant's federal Confrontation Clause objection to an officer's testimony about the victim's statements to him, and thus the court analyzed the matter for harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); given that (1) the hearsay was not important to the State's case, (2) the hearsay was similar in nature to testimony offered by another witness, (3) the inferences the jury was likely to draw from the victim's statements were the exact same inferences the jury likely drew from other testimony that was admitted, and (4) the case was very strong against defendant, given the eyewitness testimony that defendant stabbed the victim to death, the error did not contribute to defendant's conviction or punishment. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

818. Concerning defendant's hearsay objections to a witness's certain testimony, assuming the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the testimony, the court proceeded to a harm analysis, and because error in admitting a statement in violation of the hearsay rules of evidence was non-constitutional, the court applied Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); given the evidence of defendant's guilt, any error in permitting this testimony did not influence the jury's verdict and the error was harmless. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

819. Defendant did not raise the issue of relevancy on appeal and those objections did not support defendant's present complaint of hearsay or the denial of his right to confrontation; as to his final hearsay objection and denial of the right to confront certain witnesses, defendant did not show a legitimate reason for the delay in raising these complaints until after the publication of the audio recordings to the jury, and thus the final objection raising these issues was untimely and these issues were not preserved for review. Bates v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6130 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 13, 2008).

820. Widow had to object and secure a ruling on her objection that an affidavit contained hearsay, and because she failed to do so, the complaints were overruled as not preserved; the court had adopted the majority position among the Texas courts of appeals, which refused to presume that objections were overruled when a trial court granted a motion for summary judgment. Pouncy-Pittman v. Pappadeaux Seafood Kitchen, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5780 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 31 2008).

821. Statements of what a juror told defense counsel were hearsay and did not constitute admissible evidence in a hearing on a motion for a new trial. Saucedo v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3908 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 22 2008).

822. Trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant to introduce into evidence an audio/video recording that was made during defendant's transport to jail; the State objected on hearsay grounds and that it was cumulative, and the trial court's ruling that the evidence was inadmissible was correct and within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Ramirez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3275 (Tex. App. Eastland May 8 2008).

823. Defendant argued that the failure of the State to introduce the contraband into evidence, for purposes of defendant's conviction under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.117, violated his state due process rights under Tex. Const. art. I, § 19, but at trial, defendant based his objection on hearsay and federal constitutional grounds, not state constitutional grounds, and thus defendant's complaint on appeal was not preserved for review. Ray v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3295 (Tex. App. Dallas May 8 2008).

824. There was no motion for a new trial and the court did not have a record that reveals counsel's reasoning for not objecting to hearsay statements, and thus the court had to presume that counsel had a valid reason for not objecting; the court was unable to conclude that there was no plausible reason for opting not to object to that testimony and the court would not speculate to find counsel's performance deficient in light of the silent record. Hayes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3163 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 1 2008).

825. Testimony in a murder trial did not constitute indirect hearsay in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 801 and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because at most, the jury might have deduced that the declarant told the investigators something that led them to acquire a warrant; the trial court could have reasonably determined that that inferential leap did not provide the requisite degree of certainty that the State's sole intent in pursuing the line of questioning was to convey the contents of the out-of-court statement. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

826. In an illegal possession of a weapon case, audio portions of the patrol-car videotape were properly admitted because the conversation with the dispatcher was not hearsay; the substance of the conversation was not an issue during trial, and the conversation itself was not offered for any particular purpose other than to establish that an officer was conducting an investigation into the suspects' backgrounds. Gomez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2966 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2008).

827. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, even if it was error for the court to admit an officer's hearsay testimony regarding the details of the police dispatch, the error was harmless; the same substantive evidence was introduced through another officer's testimony without objection when she testified regarding the type of car defendant was driving and the circumstance surrounding her interview of the robbery complainants. Carson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3091 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

828. Statement was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the affiant was not repeating an out-of-court statement of another; she was giving a statement as to her own belief based on her personal knowledge. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

829. Affiant did not aver that another person's statement was based upon communication that she understood that the person had with someone else; the affiant stated that it was her understanding that when the person made a representation, he spoke on behalf of a company, and thus the court rejected the claim of triple hearsay. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

830. Portion of a sentence indicating that an employee no longer had the approval of a prime contractor to provide services was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, but the rest of the statement, stating what action the affiant took and that the action was based on a statement made by another, was not hearsay. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

831. In a summary judgment proceeding, the trial court erred in failing to exclude hearsay statements in affidavits. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

832. Without certain hearsay statements, the employer failed to establish that it terminated the employee for cause, making summary judgment on the issue improper. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App.

LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

833. Given that Tex. R. Evid. 803 created an exception to the hearsay rule for public records and reports and judgments of previous convictions, to the extent that defendant's complaint was that pen packets were hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the hearsay objection. Smith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2849 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

834. Because defendant did not assert in the trial court that certain records constituted inadmissible character evidence, defendant forfeited that complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33; furthermore, when making objections, defendant agreed that the records were business records, but appeared to argue that they contained double hearsay, but defendant failed to specify or identify the objectionable part of the exhibit, and thus the objections were insufficiently specific to have preserved the hearsay complaint defendant also made on appeal. Starn v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2402 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 3 2008).

835. Defendant was required under Tex. R. App. P. 33 to make an objection with sufficient specificity that the trial court could be aware of what defendant was complaining about, and because the initial hearsay objection was to the entirety of medical records, the objection was too general and insufficient and the court was unable to say that the inadmissible material that formed the basis of the objection was apparent from the context, and thus error was not preserved; even assuming that the hearsay objection was sufficient to preserve error, the statements in question were made by medical personnel for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803, although defendant complained of certain injuries, his actions were inconsistent with any desire for treatment, and that defendant was escorted to a police car following his return to the emergency room was consistent with admission of the evidence for diagnosis and treatment and defendant did not show that the probative value of the evidence was outweighed by its prejudicial nature. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

836. As a certified copy of a public record, the State's exhibit of defendant's driving record was well within Tex. R. Evid. 803 and its admission did not constitute inadmissible hearsay. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

837. Because all of certain documents were admitted into evidence, the court was unable to say that the trial court erred in allowing a fingerprint expert to testify, comparing the various identified prints with defendant's known prints at the time of booking to determine his identity, and thus the court rejected defendant's hearsay complaint. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

838. Trial court was not considering documents as hearsay and admitting them under an exception, but was viewing the evidence as a buyer's attempt to itemize the property the seller converted and place a value thereon; the seller did not attempt to show on appeal why the evidence, when viewed in that context, was inadmissible, nor did the seller reassert the objections uttered below, and thus the dispute was waived. Birkenfeld v. Metro Gen. Mgmt., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1913 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 14 2008).

839. Defendant argued that the exclusion of certain witness statements denied him his due process right to support his defensive theory, but the evidence concerned hearsay, not someone who was actually present at the time of the crime and the testimony consisted of mere general statements; thus, the court disagreed with defendant's argument. Guerrero v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 13 2008).

840. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant could not question the investigating officer about prior inconsistent statements that the victim allegedly had made to the officer who initially took her statement and to a caseworker; this multiple hearsay was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because even if the victim's statements had been admissible under the prior inconsistent statement rule, which would have passed the first level of hearsay, defendant offered no explanation of how the contents of a report by the officer who initially took the victim's statement or the investigating officer's testimony based on that report fell within any hearsay exception. Segura v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1303 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 21 2008).

841. Because an affidavit consisted entirely of hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the affidavit. Corona v. Pilgrim's Pride Corp., 245 S.W.3d 75, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 492 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

842. Without a court order sustaining a hearsay objection, an investigation log was proper summary judgment evidence. Poteet v. Kaiser, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9749 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 13 2007).

843. During defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony of a police officer and a detective where their testimony was offered to establish the course of the detective's investigation and to show how defendant became the robbery suspect; thus, the testimony did not constitute backdoor hearsay. Hurd v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9363 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2007).

844. In a case involving indecency and aggravated sexual assault, a trial court did not err by admitting certain evidence regarding recorded conversations between defendant and a minor child and the fact that a mother later pressured the child to change her story; even if they constituted hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, the same or similar testimony was admitted elsewhere. Weaver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9200 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 21 2007).

845. Defendant failed to preserve for review the complaint that the trial court admitted hearsay testimony because he did not object to the admission of the same or similar testimony from other witnesses. Wild v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8536 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 26 2007).

846. Trial court erred in overruling the company's objections to the affidavit of the owners' attorney and to the attached exhibits; the attorney was a witness in this regard and his testimony did not fall within any of the five exceptions enumerated in Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 3.08, the attorney was an inappropriate person to present any facts as to the question at issue, but even if the trial court found that one of the Rule 3.08 exceptions applied to the attorney, the affidavit still failed because it contained hearsay and conclusory remarks and failed to prove his personal knowledge. Southtex 66 Pipeline Co. v. Spoor, 238 S.W.3d 538, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8352, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 68 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

847. Attorney's affidavit concerning the status of a pipeline company with the Railroad Commission contained inadmissible hearsay, was conclusory, and failed to prove the attorney's personal knowledge; nothing in the affidavit showed that the attorney was qualified to explain the contents of a Railroad Commission document, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 602 and the attorney's reference to unnamed employees did not correct the fatal flaws in the affidavit and was inadmissible as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Southtex 66 Pipeline Co. v. Spoor, 238 S.W.3d 538, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8352, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 68 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

848. Court did not address the hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 as to certain exhibits because they were not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the resolution of the issues before the court, even if they fell under a hearsay exception; another exhibit contained an affidavit from an attorney in another case and contained the same information found in that case and had no bearing on the issues before the court. Southtex 66 Pipeline Co. v. Spoor, 238 S.W.3d 538, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8352, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 68 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

849. In order to invoke the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, defendant had to show that the portion of the statement he sought to admit was part of the same statement previously admitted by the opposing party, but his statement to a detective was not part of his statement to a nurse, as the statement given to the nurse was for medical assessment and the statement given to the detective was for criminal investigation purposes. Ramirez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8349 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 23 2007).

850. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's motion for a mistrial; the victim's father's hearsay statement, not given in an emotional tone, that the victim admitted to having had sex with defendant was moderately prejudicial to defendant, but a curative instruction was requested and given, and the court had to presume that it was effective because the comment, while mildly prejudicial, was not so prejudicial that the expenditure of further time and expense would have been wasteful; furthermore, defendant's convictions of sexual assault and indecency with a child remained certain even absent the improper hearsay statement, given that the victim recounted in detail three sexual encounters with defendant. Ladesic v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8106 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 11 2007).

851. Although a debtor argued that account statements were hearsay, the record custodian properly authenticated them under Tex. R. Evid. 902 as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and the debtor presented no supporting argument that the statements lacked trustworthiness. Sikander Ghia v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8194 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2007).

852. Defendant did not adequately explain, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), how testimony was hearsay or how it violated the Confrontation Clause, and thus the court found these issues inadequately briefed. Garcia v. State, 246 S.W.3d 121, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8051 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 949, 129 S. Ct. 404, 172 L. Ed. 2d 295, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7457 (2008).

853. At defendant's trial for theft of a plasma television, the State was permitted to admit a purchasing requisition form showing the cost of replacing the television under the business records exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803; the authenticating witness testified that he was the head of the security, he made the form in the regular course of business near the time of the events in question, such forms were created to inform the finance department of the price of a needed item, and he was authorized to keep and control such forms; the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Baker v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7886 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 4 2007).

854. Assuming without deciding that witnesses' statements regarding the relationship between defendant and the victim were inadmissible hearsay statements and that the trial court erred in admitting them, the court had to conduct a harm analysis of this nonconstitutional error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 to determine whether the error called for reversal, and the court found that any error the trial court committed did not have a substantial effect on the jury's verdict and did not affect defendant's substantial rights; the statements related to defendant's relationship with the victim, and the jury heard evidence that the victim died from a gunshot wound to the back of the head, that guns were found in defendant's hotel room, and that she confessed in many notes to the shooting, but claimed it was an accident. Miller v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7528 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 13 2007).

855. Business record exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 is an exception to the general rule prohibiting hearsay and Tex. R. Evid. 1006 is more properly viewed as an exception to the best evidence rule. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

856. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803, the record was devoid of any evidence that defendant's young daughter understood why she was in therapy or that she needed to be truthful in her statements that her mother stomped on the child victim's stomach, and thus the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the daughter's hearsay statement as within the medical diagnosis exception; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the daughter herself testified to seeing defendant step on the child's stomach, and thus fair assurance existed that the less powerful, cumulative testimony of the other witness concerning this fact did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect. Stevens v. State, 234 S.W.3d 748, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6845 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

857. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel related to counsel's failure to object to testimony offered during the punishment phase, given that (1) the challenged evidence, including defendant's juvenile and adult criminal records, were admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3 and were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as public records, (2) defendant's reliance on certain case law regarding his confrontation argument was distinguishable, as that case dealt with incident and disciplinary reports, and defendant's case dealt with certified court documents of the criminal records, and (3) even if the court found that the exhibits violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 or were hearsay, counsel's reasons for his actions did not appear in the record, and because his conduct could have been part of a reasonable trial strategy, without more, the court had to defer to counsel's decisions not to object to the evidence and deny relief. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6301 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2007).

858. Court overruled defendant's claim that he was denied his right to confront witnesses because defendant failed to raise this ground at trial; he mentioned hearsay, but such was not sufficient to preserve error based on the Confrontation Clause. Gilaelamadrid-Hock v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5991 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 26 2007).

859. Trial court properly sustained the objection to the admission of a chemist report prepared by the expert's employee and relied upon by the expert, but the trial court properly admitted the expert's testimony because it was not hearsay and was not required to be based on personal knowledge; even if the expert's testimony did improperly reveal underlying facts or data that were inadmissible, for which Tex. R. Evid. 705 would have required the trial court to give a limiting instruction upon request, no such instruction was requested and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the expert's testimony. Collins v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6116 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

860. Trial court did not err in allowing the jury to hear defendant's videotaped statement in his murder trial; defendant in his own words, not the words of the detective, admitted killing his ex-wife with scissors, and thus the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Chon Ki Yi v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5648 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 19 2007).

861. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel because he failed to show a reasonable probability that, but for the admission of his videotaped statement admitting to the murder, the result of the case would have been different; his sons testified that defendant went upstairs where his ex-wife was shortly before the murder, he left later and never returned, and the boys then found their mother's body, covered in stab wounds, and there was ample evidence in addition to the inaudible portions of the videotaped statement to support the finding that defendant murdered his ex-wife; thus, defendant was unable to show that, had counsel objected to the videotaped statement on hearsay grounds, the result of the case would have been different, and because the court found that the trial court did not err in overruling the hearsay objection, defendant also failed to meet the first prong of the test for ineffective assistance. Chon Ki Yi v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5648 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 19 2007).

862. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child, the fact of the victim's discussion with her sister might well have been admitted to clarify certain matters as to how the information came to light in her family, rather than to prove an implied statement to the sister that defendant molested the victim, and given the relevance of the evidence for other purposes, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting it, and the court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred in admitting hearsay evidence under Tex. R. Evid.

801. Montgomery v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5682 (Tex. App. Dallas July 19 2007).

863. Trial court would not have committed error in overruling, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, an objection to the victim's statement to an officer on the basis of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the trial court could have found that the victim was dominated by the emotions and fear of the event at the time she gave the statement and thus it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Austin July 18 2007).

864. Detective's answers to questions concerning a nightclub where defendant was seen on the night of a murder did not relay out of court statements and therefore were not hearsay. Assuming that the detective's testimony concerning a witness to the murder relayed an out of court statement, the detective's testimony did not constitute hearsay because it was admitted to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest for the victim's murder. Garcia v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 28 2007).

865. Detective's answers to questions concerning whether a particular person was of interest in the murder investigation and whether defendant's wife received a phone call after talking to investigators did not relay out of court statements and therefore were not hearsay. Assuming that the detective's testimony concerning the victim's relationship with defendant's wife and where the victim was when he was shot relayed out of court statements, the detective's testimony did not constitute hearsay because it was admitted to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest for the victim's murder. Garcia v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 28 2007).

866. Witness did not relay out of court statements when testifying regarding what he decided to do after seeing on the news that someone had been killed at a nightclub and his testimony did not constitute hearsay. Garcia v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5080 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 28 2007).

867. Defendant raised the subject of the victim's letters and inquired into specific portions of their content, which entitled the State to introduce, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, those portions of the letters addressing the same subject, but the State was not entitled to introduce the letters in their entirety, and the letters were thus reviewed by both sides to determine what portions to redact; by creating false impressions of the relationship between defendant and the victim, defendant invited a reply from the State to fully explain the content of the letters, and hearsay was admissible when it went to clarify other hearsay evidence elicited by the opposition, such that the court found no error in the admission of the letters. Rios v. State, 230 S.W.3d 252, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5123 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

868. In a negligent misrepresentation case, the court properly denied a motion for new trial due to juror misconduct because appellant, in order to demonstrate jury misconduct, relied upon four juror affidavits containing remarks made by other jurors during trial breaks, and thus, the affidavits constituted hearsay. Innovative Truck Storage, Inc. v. Airshield Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2007).

869. Defendant initially objected to a witness's statement as containing hearsay and as having been disavowed by the witness, and defendant then objected because the statement denied his constitutional rights, but neither objection preserved a double hearsay issue. Freeman v. State, 230 S.W.3d 392, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3965 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

870. Employer objected to statements on hearsay grounds, but did not obtain a ruling, and the employer further argued that statements in affidavits were conclusory; the hearsay objections were waived for failure to obtain a ruling, but the conclusory objections were not. Atchison v. Spawmaxwell Co., L.P., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4054 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 24 2007).

871. Volunteer offered an affidavit and statement from a person whom the volunteer claimed showed the nursing home was aware of a premises defect, but even if the affidavit and statement were not hearsay, their admission would not have changed the outcome of the case for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because the volunteer provided no evidence concerning the person's employee status and the volunteer's conclusory statement was insufficient to raise a fact issue; the affidavit contained no admissible evidence sufficient to have imputed knowledge of the alleged defect to the nursing home. Griggs v. Amarillo Nursing Ctr., Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3876 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 17 2007).

872. Trial court erred in admitting a document because it contained several instances of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and thus it should not have been admitted for all purposes, and because the offer was not limited, it was an offer for all purposes, including the truth of the matter asserted; the State's claim that the hearsay objection was forfeited by wrongdoing had no basis in Texas evidence law; however, error was not harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the jury never heard the hearsay contained in the document. Sapp v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2875 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2007).

873. Texas Rules of Evidence contain no such provision as Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(6); in the absence of application of the doctrine of equitable forfeiture by wrongdoing to hearsay by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals or the Texas Rules of Evidence, the court holds that the doctrine, under current Texas jurisprudence, operates only to bar Confrontation claims and is irrelevant to a hearsay objection. Sapp v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2875 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2007).

874. Witness's prior out of court statement to police, if offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted, likely constituted inadmissible hearsay, and thus the statements were subject to a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and because counsel did not request the instruction at the first opportunity, the evidence was admitted for all purposes; the record was undeveloped as to counsel's reasons for not requesting the instruction, no new trial motion was filed to create such a record, and thus defendant did not overcome the presumption of reasonable assistance; even if the court found counsel's performance was not within the range of professional assistance, defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different had counsel sought to limit the use of the witness's statements sooner than in the jury charge, as this testimony was not the only evidence that could have defeated defendant's self-defense theory in the murder trial. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2896 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

875. Although defendant objected to one exhibit on hearsay grounds, defendant's objection to another exhibit did not adequately apprise the trial court of the complaint that the document contained hearsay, and thus error, if any, was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Cude v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2765 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 11 2007).

876. Defendant did not preserve error on a Confrontation Clause complaint; defense counsel briefly mentioned cross-examination only in the context of making a hearsay objection and even if such could have been construed to include a Confrontation Clause objection, it was not specific to preserve error on that ground. Austin v. State, 222 S.W.3d 801, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2739 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

877. Because a witness's alleged hearsay statements were not admitted through another's testimony, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's request to introduce evidence to impeach the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 806. Francis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

878. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's mistrial motion based on hearsay objections; as to one witness's testimony, the court found that (1) although certain testimony was hearsay, it merely provided background information about events that occurred before the offenses in question, and the testimony was not prejudicial because it did not relate to defendant's guilt or innocence, such that any error resulting from the jury's hearing of the witness's answer was harmless and an instruction to disregard was adequate, (2) by the time certain testimony was elicited, other testimony had been admitted into evidence without objection, such that any error was harmless, (3) certain of the witness's testimony was beneficial to defendant and thus any error was harmless, (4) the witness said the victim told the witness how much money the victim lost in the robbery, and later the victim testified to the same amount, such that any error was harmless, and (5) testimony was already in the record that the victims were requested to hand over their belongings, and thus any error the resulted from the jury's hearing of a witness's same testimony was harmless. Denton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1706 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 7 2007).

879. Court rejected defendant's claim that the victim's failure to identify the actual declarants by name rendered the testimony inadmissible hearsay, as such only affected the weight and credibility of the testimony, not its admissibility, and thus defendant's hearsay objection was not valid, and a mistrial was not warranted. Denton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1706 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 7 2007).

880. Testimony was objected to as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and the trial court properly sustained the objection, and as such, it was not considered in the court's analysis; the statement was one made out of court and was inadmissible for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and no hearsay exception applied to render the statement admissible. Mark III Sys. v. Sysco Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1339 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 22 2007).

881. Particular exhibit was a series of purchase orders made by a construction company that documented its purchase of materials; the company offered testimony from one who was able to verify the method by which the records were made, such that the exhibit met the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Royce Homes, L.P. v. Espinosa, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1029 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 8 2007).

882. In a termination proceeding, the court was unable to conclude that without certain testimony, the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services would not have established that the mother was not suitable, and the court was unable to find that the admission probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment or probably prevented the mother from properly presenting the case to the court on appeal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44. In re V.A., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 805 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 1 2007).

883. Court disagreed that the other three extraneous acts referred to in defendant's confession to aggravated sexual assault of a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(1)(B) were not proven beyond a reasonable doubt; defendant's own witnesses confirmed that defendant acknowledged guilt, a detective testified that the victim told the detective about the incidents, and even inadmissible hearsay testimony admitted without objection was entitled to probative value, and defendant's theory at trial was that he took responsibility for his acts and that he was a good candidate for rehabilitation. Pollone v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 174 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 11 2007).

884. Descendants appeared to argue that appellees' summary judgment evidence constituted inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and the court assumed without deciding that the issue was preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); the judgment recited that the trial court considered the descendants' response to the motion and descendants' objections, but the trial court did not expressly rule on descendants' motion or objections. Walton v. Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc'y of Pa., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 180 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2007).

885. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, witnesses' testimony did not lead to an inescapable conclusion regarding what the child told them, and each testified that the investigation continued, and a wide range of statements by the child could have caused this; neither witness's testimony allowed the jury to infer the details of what the child said in court and thus the court rejected defendant's claim of a violation of the hearsay rule. Gauna v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11128 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 29 2006).

886. Defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve error on defendant's Confrontation Clause and due process claims under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, and to the extent certain points of error were based on those provisions, they were waived. Mitchell v. State, 238 S.W.3d 405, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11090 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

887. In defendant's trial on charges of sexual assault, the trial court did not err by admitting letters from the files of the Amarillo Diocese concerning defendant's relationship with the Catholic Church during the period before and after the assault because two of these letters were written by defendant and thus, by definition, not hearsay as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 801; the third letter was written to defendant from the Amarillo Diocese and was apparently admitted as a business record, and any error in the admission of the third letter was harmless. Salazar v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9839 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 14 2006).

888. Given that Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 64.03 did not require an evidentiary hearing to determine whether DNA evidence existed, the court rejected an inmate's claim that the trial court erred in considering certain affidavits claimed to be hearsay. Fontenot v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7469 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 24 2006).

889. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel because the record contained no explanation as to why counsel failed to object to hearsay testimony, to request a necessity defense, and object to improper argument; ineffective assistance was not raised in defendant's new trial motion and the alleged errors did not rise to a level such that no reasonable attorney would have made those decisions. Forney v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7482 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 24 2006).

890. Trial court did not err by admitting a document created by Pontiac showing the GTO's serial number and a note from the seller to the buyer stating the GTO was no longer for sale because the documents were not admitted for the truth of the matter asserted but to show the ongoing series of communications and faxes between the buyer and the seller concerning the buyer's purchase of the GTO. Marten v. Silva, 200 S.W.3d 297, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

891. Absent compliance with the timeliness Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001(d), affidavits are hearsay and must qualify under an exception to the hearsay rule to be admissible, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801-804. Nye v. Buntin, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7067 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 11 2006).

892. Ordinarily, the statements a child made to three individuals would have been inadmissible hearsay at trial, but an outcry statement was an exception to the hearsay rule for the first report of sexual abuse that the victimized child made to an adult, pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2(a). Ozuna v. State, 199 S.W.3d 601, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7134 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

893. For purposes of defendant's conviction of the felony offense of assault, family violence, the evidence was insufficient to prove that the trial court made an affirmative finding of family violence pursuant to Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 71.004 and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.013 or that the assault involved family violence, and the appropriate remedy was to remand the case for defendant to be punished for a Class A misdemeanor; the State was required to prove either that there had been an affirmative finding of family violence for a 1996 conviction or that the prior victim was a member of defendant's family or household, for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 71.005, but the evidence was insufficient to show either; the criminal docket might have suggested that the case involved family violence, but the court was not able to determine who made the assertion, and the court noted that defendant did not object to the admission of this document and the court was free to consider hearsay in its sufficiency review, and the court rejected the State's argument that defendant's failure to offer evidence that the victim was not a member of his family or household was evidence that she was, given that, under Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 and Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 2.01, a defendant was not to be compelled to give evidence against himself and the State had the burden of proof. Crawford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6520 (Tex. App. Tyler July 26 2006).

894. By not obtaining a written ruling, an individual did not preserve objections to an affidavit based on hearsay. Clarendon Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 199 S.W.3d 482, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6420 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

895. Although defendant claimed ineffective assistance via counsel's failure to object to hearsay testimony, the court noted that there might have been strategic reasons for not objecting to the testimony, but the court was not able to speculate in the face of a silent record, and the court thus rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Dodson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5530 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 29 2006).

896. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

897. Defendant failed to preserve error regarding an expert's testimony pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33, given that (1) defendant's objection to any of the expert's testimony was overly broad and untimely, and (2) defendant's objection on appeal differed substantially from that raised at trial, and thus any error was waived; even if the error was properly preserved, the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and defendant did not object or identify any out-of-court statement that was made for purposes other than medical diagnosis and treatment, and thus the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Estes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5028 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 13 2006).

898. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in allowing hearsay testimony, the issue was inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) because defendant failed to present the court with a clear or concise argument in support of the contention and failed to present appropriate references to authorities, and thus the court overruled the issue. Alvarez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4904 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 8 2006).

899. Because a party did not raise a hearsay complaint in the trial court, the court did not consider that issue for the first time on appeal. Bradley v. Mid-Century Ins. Co., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4847 (Tex. App. Dallas June 7 2006).

900. Affidavit in support of a new trial motion contained two levels of hearsay, it did not state who heard certain juror statements or how counsel learned of the statements, and no one had personal knowledge of any jury misconduct; furthermore, a juror would have been unable to testify to the content of jury deliberations under Tex. R. Evid. 606, and thus the trial court was not required to hold a hearing on the motion and the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it overruled the motion by operation of law under Tex. R. App. P. 21. Lingo-Perkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4877 (Tex. App. Tyler June 7 2006).

901. Although defendant argued that the admission of a hearsay statement denied defendant the right to confrontation, defendant did not object at trial on Confrontation Clause grounds, and because defendant's point on appeal did not comport with the objection made at trial, defendant forfeited the point under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Clay v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3819 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 4 2006).

902. Counsel was not ineffective for not lodging certain hearsay objections; counsel could have concluded that a statement would have been admitted as an excited utterance or a present sense impression, and counsel could have found that the State could have obtained the same testimony by recalling a witness to clarify the statements, and furthermore, counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to another question, given that the State meant to ask the witness if, at the time of defendant's arrest, the witness identified defendant as the person the witness, not another, saw lighting the fire in question. Ortiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3893 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 4 2006).

903. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of arson of open-space land under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 28.02; an eyewitness saw defendant squatted down beside a tree with something smoldering, and although defendant claimed that these statements were hearsay, the court noted that hearsay admitted without objection had probative value and defendant's conviction could be based on the testimony of one eyewitness, and there was additional evidence implicating defendant in the crime, including defendant's possession of a lighter. Ortiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3893 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 4 2006).

904. Even if the court assumed that the trial court erred on hearsay grounds in allowing an officer to testify about the out-of-court statements made by an eyewitness, the record failed to show that the error required reversal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44; the jury heard the eyewitness testify in person, without objection, to the same matter the officer testified about, and thus the trial court's error, if error, was harmless. Benitez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3679 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 3 2006).

905. Because defendant failed to object on the basis that testimony violated defendant's constitutional right to confrontation, defendant waived the complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve error on the confrontation claim. Benitez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3679 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 3 2006).

906. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, given that (1) other than generally stating that testimony violated the Confrontation Clause, defendant offered no argument or authority to show it violated the clause, and defendant thus did not show that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the testimony, (2) even if testimony was hearsay, the record was silent regarding the reasons for counsel's failure to object and defendant failed to overcome the presumption that counsel acted within the range of reasonable behavior, and (3) even if counsel was deficient, defendant failed to show that but for the deficiency, the result of the proceeding would have been different, given that the jury could have rationally inferred that defendant planned to murder the victim. Reyes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3649 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4160 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 16, 2006).

907. Defendant's claim that the trial court violated defendant's right to confrontation by admitting testimony from a witness regarding a statement by defendant's former girlfriend was not preserved for review, given that defendant did not timely object each time the witness was asked the question; even if an earlier objection could have been construed as timely, defendant still failed to preserve error because the hearsay objection did not comport with the complaint on appeal, and defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve error on defendant's Confrontation Clause complaint. Reyes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3649 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4160 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 16, 2006).

908. Court overruled defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on the fact that counsel did not object to hearsay testimony by a doctor who examined the child victim over two years after the alleged incident; without a record that revealed the reason for the challenged conduct, the court was unable to speculate whether counsel was effective. Cervantes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3164 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 19 2006).

909. Court overruled defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on the fact that counsel did not object to hearsay testimony by a doctor who examined the child victim more than two years after the alleged incident; without a record that revealed the reason for the challenged conduct, the court was unable to speculate whether counsel was effective. Cervantes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3164 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 19 2006).

910. Defendant's prior objections regarding certain testimony were sufficient to preserve error and the trial court did not err in admitting an officer's testimony because it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the officer did not testify to the statements by the child victim's mother and their substance, but merely that her statements were not consistent, and the officer testified regarding the acts between the mother and defendant, but not what was said between them, and even if the trial court erred, it was harmless error for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given the overwhelming evidence against defendant for aggravated sexual assault of a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021. Rachell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3264 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 13 2006).

911. Defendant's prior objections regarding certain testimony were sufficient to preserve error and the trial court did not err in admitting an officer's testimony because it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the officer did not testify to the statements by the child victim's mother and their substance, but merely that her statements were not consistent, and the officer testified regarding the acts between the mother and defendant, but not what was said between them; even if the trial court erred, it was harmless error for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44, given the overwhelming evidence against defendant for aggravated sexual assault of a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021. Rachell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3264 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 13 2006).

912. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and in allowing an officer to testify about the information received from a confidential informant; the nonhearsay aspect was to inform the jury how defendant became a suspect, and the hearsay aspect suggested that defendant possessed cocaine, however, the evidence already showed defendant possessed cocaine and without the officer's testimony, the jury would have been deprived of an understanding of the events leading up to defendant's arrest. Parker v. State, 192 S.W.3d 801, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2750 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

913. Even assuming an officer's testimony as to what a ballistics report concluded was subject to Tex. R. Evid. 702, any resulting error was harmless and any error as a result of impermissible hearsay or on the basis of a Confrontation Clause violation was waived and not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because these claims were not asserted at trial; assuming the trial court committed error in overruling the objection, the court found no reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the court had a fair assurance that the error did not influence the jury. Rincon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2758 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 5 2006).

914. Messages retrieved from a murder victim's voicemail were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted therein and they assisted the jury in establishing the time of the victim's death. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 23 2006).

915. Defendant objected at trial to the admission of his wife's statement on the grounds of hearsay, not on an alleged violation of the Confrontation Clause, and thus the matter was not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, given that the hearsay objection did not preserve error on the Confrontation Clause claim. Eustis v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1552 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3250 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 13, 2006).

916. In a trial for murder and attempted murder, there was no error in the admission of documents found in a search of defendant's car, including hotel receipts, a church bulletin, and handwritten notes, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the documents were not offered for the truth of the matters asserted but to show the circumstances surrounding the investigation and leading to defendant's arrest. Yanez v. State, 187 S.W.3d 724, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1289 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

917. Trial court admitted the evidence conditionally under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and appellant did not renew a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801and Tex. R. Evid. 802, and thus this issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Watson v. Michael Haskins Photography, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9838 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 23 2005).

918. Defendant's hearsay objection at trial was insufficient to preserve error on the issue under the Confrontation Clause, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Rios v. State, 263 S.W.3d 1, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9602 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

919. In a medical malpractice case, the trial court did not err in excluding, as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), a statement by a witness who would have testified that the doctor was afraid that he had done something wrong; the statement was offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and the present sense impression rule of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) did not apply because there was no evidence of contemporaneity. Daniels v. Yancey, 175 S.W.3d 889, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8789 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

920. "Crime stoppers" tip that defendant murdered the victim was offered to show how a police officer began to suspect defendant, not prove that defendant was guilty; thus, the officer's testimony was not hearsay, as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. Martinez v. State, 186 S.W.3d 59, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8678 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

921. Court was unable to say that the trial court denied a mother the due process right to a fair trial in the termination of her parental rights under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1); even if the trial court erred in admitting hearsay evidence, there was no demonstration of harmful error. In re C.J.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10788 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 12 2005).

922. Trial court did not err in limiting a witness's testimony concerning an alleged incident; it would have been hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because the witness did not see the alleged incident personally, and the trial court could have determination that the hearsay testimony was about an incident not sufficiently similar to the abuse alleged by the victim in this case. Segura v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7783 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 23 2005).

923. Defendant did not make an offer of proof, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, to demonstrate what testimony would have been if allowed, and thus defendant did not preserve error; however, to the extent the court was able to glean the substance of the evidence that was excluded, the questions called for hearsay responses, as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), because a witness was asked to testify about a statement made by a third person, and the testimony defendant claimed was erroneously excluded was actually admitted elsewhere and defendant failed to show harm. Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7049 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2005).

924. Defendant only objected to certain testimony on "hearsay" grounds, which did not preserve error for review, and because defendant did not request a hearing, defendant waived any complaint regarding the lack of a hearing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072(2)(b)(2). Garcia v. State, 228 S.W.3d 703, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7200 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

925. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the victim's videotaped testimony because the State provided defendant with the notice called for in Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2(b)(1), including a written summary of the child victim's outcry statement to forensic interviewer, the trial court addressed the admissibility of the outcry statement to the interviewer during defendant's pretrial motion-in-limine hearing, at the hearing the State played the tape for the trial court, and the trial court found that the interviewer was the proper outcry witness. Chavez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6660 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

926. In a case alleging breach of guaranty, an affidavit concerning a statement made by an alleged guarantor was not sufficient summary judgment evidence because it was hearsay. Roye Enters. v. Roper, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5945 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 28 2005).

927. Trial court acted within its discretion in admitting the wife's statement under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the officer noticed that the wife was visibly upset, shaking, trembling and crying, and that her cheek was red, and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the wife was still under the emotion, excitement, fear, or pain of the alleged assault when she told the officer that defendant slapped her. Solorzano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5694 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2005).

928. Even if the court assumed that certain testimony was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), not subject to any exception pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, any error in admitting such testimony was not harmful to have warranted reversal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a); the testimony had no bearing on the jury's finding that neither the general contractor nor the business had a right to control the injury-causing activity and/or the defect-producing work on the premises. Collins v. J.E. Kingham Constr., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5630 (Tex. App. Tyler July 20 2005).

929. In a murder case, videotapes were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because they were offered to prove that conversations had taken place, and in addition, the tapes were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defendant opened the door by suggesting that the conversations had not occurred. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2005).

930. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to testimony of a witness who said what an injured officer said on hearsay grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 801, nor did the trial court err in admitting the statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the statement was in response to a general question of what happened and the statement was made immediately after the officer was shot, and thus the officer was still dominated by the emotions of the event, for purposes of Rule 803(2), and furthermore, the officer's statement was consistent with defendant's plea of guilty to the charge that defendant shot the officer, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02(a), (b)(2). Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5093 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2005).

931. Defendant objected at trial to certain testimony solely on hearsay grounds, but on appeal, defendant claimed that the admission of the testimony denied defendant the right to confrontation under the federal and state constitutions; because a hearsay objection was not the same as an objection to a violation of confrontation rights, and because defendant's complaint on appeal did not comport with the objection at trial, any alleged error was forfeited. Cantrell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5143 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 30 2005).

932. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a police officer to testify that police received several anonymous tips identifying defendant as the perpetrator in an armed robbery. The evidence indicated that the State elicited the testimony for the purpose of establishing how defendant was developed as a suspect; the evidence was thus not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 673, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4229 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

933. Trial court erred in allowing a detective to recount to the jury that defendant's statement concerning his role as a mere lookout in a robbery did not match any other statements from any other witnesses. Although the statement was indirect hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(a) and (d), the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), in light of the evidence concerning defendant's role in the robbery. Wilson v.

State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4234 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 2 2005).

934. Documents that a successor administrator of a decedent's estate used to establish the loss to the estate concerning the decedent's house, which occurred during the former administrator's administration, were not inadmissible hearsay in a breach of fiduciary duty action against the former administrator because the documents were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) that related to the mortgage on the house. A number of the documents concerning the house were duplicates of evidence duly admitted in related proceedings, and there was no evidence indicating that the documents were inadmissible hearsay in the related proceedings. Sierad v. Barnett, 164 S.W.3d 471, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

935. Appellate court overruled defendant's argument that the trial court erred in admitting testimony by an undercover detective that drug trafficking had occurred in the apartment prior to the search because the detective responded that he was given the complaint, without stating the contents of the complaint, and when the detective began to testify about the contents of the complaint, the trial court sustained defense counsel's hearsay objection; the question asked the detective to explain what prompted his investigation of the activities in the apartment, not whether drugs were actually being sold from that apartment. Dickson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4151 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2005).

936. Father's statements did not constitute impermissible hearsay because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); instead, they were offered to show what precipitated defendant juvenile's assault. In re R.M., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3759 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 18 2005).

937. In defendant's appeal of the revocation of his community supervision for failure to report to the county as ordered, the trial court did not err in overruling his hearsay objection to the community supervision officer's testimony about letters from the post office, which asserted that it had no forwarding address for defendant because the officer's testimony that the letters were sent and returned was not hearsay as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The officer's lack of personal knowledge of the statements contained in the letters was irrelevant because the letters were not introduced for the statements contained therein, but to prove the State actually sent the letters attempting to contact defendant. Wheat v. State, 165 S.W.3d 802, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3548 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

938. In a child support modification case, the trial court did not err in admitting copies of bank statements from a father's concessions business bank account where he acknowledged at the modification hearing that he had produced the bank statements to the mother in response to discovery requests. Therefore, the bank statements were not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B) because they were admissible as admissions by a party opponent. In re A.J.J., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3058 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 21 2005).

939. In a products liability action arising from an auto accident, an unidentified witness' videotaped account of the accident, which included a statement that "the tire blew up," was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was offered to support a theory of a defective wheel assembly. Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Ramirez, 159 S.W.3d 897, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1429, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 256, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17242 (Tex. 2004).

940. Officer's answer to the State's question seeking to determine whether or not the officer discovered through an investigation if defendant's son witnessed the offense was not inadmissible backdoor hearsay evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). No hearsay evidence was admitted because what the son had revealed to the officer was never introduced into evidence. Hajjar v. State, 176 S.W.3d 554, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11824 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

941. Because there was never a response from a witness to the State's question regarding whether the witness recalled defendant's son acknowledging that the son witnessed the offense, there was no statement of a witness as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(a). Hajjar v. State, 176 S.W.3d 554, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11824 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

942. Nothing showed that the victim's facial expressions were intended as a substitute for verbal expression, and thus the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) in connection with defendant's appeal from an indecency with a child conviction. Arizmendis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10567 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

943. Trial court did not err when it allowed a police officer to testify that defendant's girlfriend told the officer that defendant went by a certain name as his "street" name because the girlfiend herself testified that defendant went by that name and, further, the complainant and the other eyewitness both identified defendant and testified they knew him by his street name. Thus, the alleged hearsay was not the only evidence that defendant went by that street name. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

944. Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's girlfiend's out-of-court statements where her threat to an eyewitness was offered to show the threat was made, not to prove any "matter asserted" therein. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

945. Notwithstanding the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's girlfiend's out-of-court statement to a police officer as a prior inconsistent statement where the officer testified that the girlfriend had told him that she had not seen defendant for the few days surrounding the offense but at trial, she testified that he had been with her at the time of the robbery. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

946. Refusal to admit an audiotape of defendant's interview by a representative of the police was affirmed because while the audiotape was not hearsay, the trial court could have reasonably determined that the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, considerations of undue delay, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. The audiotape was not offered into evidence to prove the matter asserted but to prove the nature of defendant's speech impediment at the time of his arrest in order to show that he was not exaggerating his speech deformity at trial, defendant testified at trial, and there was nothing to suggest that defendant's speech deformity was greater at trial than it had been at the time of his arrest, nor was any suggestion made that he was faking it. Rachell v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8638 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 30 2004).

947. Any error by the trial court in admitting hearsay testimony from a complainant's mother was harmless under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the complained-of testimony was admitted elsewhere without objection. The jury had already heard the complainant testify that defendant had propositioned her on the day in question. Cunningham v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8370 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 17 2004).

948. Trial court committed reversible error in admitting a manufacturer's database of consumer complaints, the testimony of four witnesses, and several narrative reports regarding other incidents of unintended acceleration by the manufacturer's vehicles. The evidence of other incidents was far more than cumulative: it was emphasized at every opportunity; it was used to prove a defect when the actual evidence had been destroyed; and it was calculated to show the manufacturer was malicious rather than mistaken in suggesting the accident was the consumer's fault. Nissan Motor Co. v. Armstrong, 145 S.W.3d 131, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 737, 47 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 955, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17123 (Tex. 2004).

949. Trial court erred in admitting the victim's mother's testimony concerning the grandmother's statement because it was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(c), which included any matter explicitly asserted and any matter implied by a statement, and the grandmother's statement was offered for the implication that she knew her husband and granddaughter were alone together and that the granddaughter was being sexually assaulted. The error was deemed harmless in light of the fact that there was ample evidence of the step-grandfather's guilt, including the testimony from the victim, the outcry testimony of the victim's mother, and the medical evidence. Mosley v. State, 141 S.W.3d 816, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6923 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

950. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve error in the trial court's decision to sustain the State's hearsay objections when he attempted to testify regarding statements the victim made to him. Defendant did not make a formal offer of proof concerning this proposed evidence, and therefore, he could not claim on appeal that the statements were outside the definition of hearsay. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6800 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 28 2004).

951. Testimony from defendant's friend and business associate, in defendant's trial for theft, to the effect that defendant had asked the friend to pay the bank money he owed defendant and thereby satisfy defendant's overdraft, was not hearsay because it was not offered to show the truth of anything in defendant's utterance, but to show the directive to pay the bank rather than defendant, and it was not primarily an assertion of a fact, but a directive or request of the friend, offered to show that defendant made an effort to pay the bank and thereby show that he did not intend to deprive the bank of the $ 6,444 outstanding from the overdraft of his account. Kubecka v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6769 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 27 2004).

952. Where defendant argued that the officer's testimony that the officer ran defendant's nickname in the computer led to the inescapable conclusion that the complainant had identified defendant as the assailant and was "backdoor hearsay," the testimony was offered not to "prove the truth of the matter asserted," (here, that defendant committed an aggravated assault), but rather to explain how defendant became a suspect and the testimony was not hearsay. Terry v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5899 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 1 2004).

953. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party. Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

954. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), the documents at issue from police computers were not hearsay because they were not used to establish that a warrant for defendant was active, but merely to show that the steps that the detectives took to investigate defendant were reasonable; thus, the exhibits were offered to show what they said, and not for their truth. Davis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4748 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 27 2004).

955. In a capital murder trial, the admission of a poem written to defendant by defendant's brother who assisted in the crime was hearsay and it was improperly admitted. However, the State provided ample evidence, including eyewitness testimony, establishing that defendant and defendant's brother shot and stabbed the victims; thus, the erroneous admission of the poem did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict and the error was harmless. Windland v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4709 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2004).

956. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objection because the tape containing hearsay statements concerning defendant's alleged involvement in the murder was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but to show why the investigation focused on defendant. Clark v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4488 (Tex. App. Tyler May 5 2004).

957. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objection because the tape containing hearsay statements concerning defendant's alleged involvement in the murder was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but to show why the investigation focused on defendant. Clark v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4488 (Tex. App. Tyler May 5 2004).

958. Although defendant asserted that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding proffered evidence, where the mother's testimony that her brother tried to sexually assault their sister was based on statements her own mother had made to her, because the proffered statements were hearsay, the trial court did not err in excluding them. Martinez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3716 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 28 2004).

959. Even though a trial court failed to conduct a reliability hearing on a grandmother's testimony regarding a minor victim's outcry statement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the admission of the evidence as an exception to hearsay was harmless because the statement that defendant had "done stuff" was so vague that it failed to corroborate the allegations of molestation; moreover, the trial court was also not required to conduct a reliability hearing on a police officer before allowing testimony regarding a conversation with the victim about defendant's alleged foot fetish where the officer was called as an expert regarding sexual predators, erotica, and deviant behavior. Leachman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3283 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

960. Although defendant contended that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the state's motion in limine excluding his mother's testimony about threats that defendant allegedly received on the phone from the victim, the state took the witness on voir dire and established that she did not hear any threats on the phone herself, but rather was informed of these threats by defendant, her son, such that any further testimony by the mother about the phone calls would have been based on inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and 802; it was proper for the trial court to grant the state's motion in limine and exclude the mother's testimony about the alleged threats. Burgett v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10212 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 4 2003).

961. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

962. In a products-liability case that involved a vehicular accident, the appellate court was not persuaded that it was an error to admit the videotaped testimony of a witness to the accident that stated a tire blew up given that the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted: that the tire blew up. Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Ramirez, 79 S.W.3d 113, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3358 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002), rev'd on other grounds, 159 S.W.3d 897, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1429 (Tex. 2004).

963. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate; hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex.

964. Appellant did not properly preserve a bolstering issue, but did properly preserve the issues of a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 701 and hearsay for review, but the court did not reach the issues because evidence that appellant was in the area on the night of the murders came in through many witnesses without objection. Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

965. Hearsay cannot be made the basis of summary judgment. Koehler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3701 (Tex. App. Dallas June 6 2001).

966. Detective's testimony was not hearsay because his testimony concerning the police department's prior investigations for the "same type of offense" was not offered to establish that defendant had been investigated for or committed other instances of indecent exposure. Rather, the testimony was offered to explain the course of his investigation and how defendant came to be a suspect, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Denmon v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2180, 2014 WL 857671 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 27 2014).

967. Although a murder victim's written statement that was made by four months before her death and that described a physical altercation with defendant was erroneously admitted because it was objectionable hearsay, the error was harmless because there was substantial evidence of defendant's guilt, exclusive of the written statement, because reference to the statement was relatively limited, and because many of the facts mentioned in the statement were properly in the record through other testimony. Barrett v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2251, 2014 WL 792123 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Declarants

968. Trial court did not err during a sexually violent predator commitment proceeding in admitting testimony from the offender and the State's expert regarding the details of the offender's prior murder conviction because the offender personally testified as to the details of the conviction and the actions he took after the murder, which was not hearsay, and the State's expert testified to many of the same details that the offender related to the jury. Moreover, the trial court provided the jury with a limiting instruction, which it was presumed the jury followed. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

969. Trial court did not err by permitting the expert to testify about the results of the computer analysis of the car fingerprint because the information was not hearsay, as the computer was not a declarant. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7868 (Tex. App. Dallas June 26 2013).

970. Detective's statement "I learned where the vehicle wrecked" did not constitute hearsay because the statement was not made by one "other than the declarant" as required under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Lightner v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5365 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2013).

971. At defendant's trial for theft of property, the trial court was permitted to admit a computer generated printout from a store register into evidence; because no person added anything to the record, there was no declarant and the computer printout was not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Therefore, the State was not required to lay a predicate to admit the document as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Haskins v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4769, 2010 WL 2524797 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2010).

972. Trial court did not err in excluding a witness's testimony because the witness was not the declarant; defendant failed to establish the proper predicate for impeachment and attempted to characterize the testimony as evidence of identification for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801, but the court was not persuaded. Chapman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3184 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 25 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Nonverbal Conduct

973. Where defendant was convicted of the aggravated sexual assault of his thirteen-year-old niece, the trial court erred by admitting the therapist's testimony that the child told her that family members were pressuring her and her mother to drop the charges; the State offered the therapist's statements to show how the child reacted to perceived pressures; the same testimony was admitted through other witnesses without objection. Arguelles v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2007).

974. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, although defendant claimed that witnesses' testimony violated the hearsay prohibition under Tex. R. Evid. 801 by referring to the child's nonverbal conduct that was intended as a substitute for verbal expression, defendant did not hypothesize, nor was the court able to imagine, what verbal expression the child's glum affect and shift in demeanor were intended as a substitute for. Gauna v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11128 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 29 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Statements

975. At defendant's trial for multiple sexual offenses involving child victims, the trial court did not err in overruling defense counsel's objection to the testimony of an alleged improper outcry witness because there was no hearsay statement as the witness did not testify about any statements made by the children. Perez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 640, 2014 WL 1260989 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 23 2014).

976. At defendant's trial for multiple sexual offenses involving child victims, the trial court did not err in overruling defense counsel's objection to the testimony of an alleged improper outcry witness because there was no hearsay statement as the witness did not testify about any statements made by the children. Perez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 640, 2014 WL 1260989 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 23 2014).

977. Because a silent videotape of an informant's drug buy from defendant was not intended as a substitute for verbal expression, Tex. R. Evid. 801(a)(2), it was not a statement and was not testimonial; therefore, admission of the tape did not violate the Confrontation Clause, U.S. Const. amend. IV. Watson v. State, 421 S.W.3d 186, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14603, 2013 WL 6244135 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

978. On appeal of defendant's conviction for sexual assault, he failed to prove his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to inadmissible hearsay testimony during trial. Testimony from witnesses about the alleged rape and the fact that victim had been diagnosed with a behavior disorder were offered to illustrate the victim's mental capacity, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted; neither witness mentioned an out-of-court statement. Dunn v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8711 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 16 2013).

979. Detective's statement "I learned where the vehicle wrecked" did not constitute hearsay because the statement was not made by one "other than the declarant" as required under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Lightner v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5365 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2013).

980. At defendant's trial for retaliation, the trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of his step-daughter because it contained defendant's hearsay statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) explaining why did not appear in court. The State's hearsay objection was properly sustained. Austin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1234, 2013 WL

490000 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2013).

981. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and hearsay purposes, a photograph was not an out-of-court statement. Herrera v. State, 367 S.W.3d 762, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2940, 2012 WL 1297553 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2012).

982. Lender's alleged statements that full payment of a note would result in full release of the lien were not hearsay because they were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Comiskey v. FH Partners, LLC, 373 S.W.3d 620, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2876 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2012).

983. There was no showing that appellant's out-of-court statements were necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression, plus appellant did not testify, and if the trial court had admitted his statements, there would have been no chance to cross-examine appellant on his statements; thus, to admit the statements would have permitted any defendant to place his version of the facts before the jury through hearsay statements without being subject to cross-examination, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding appellant's self-serving statements. Greene v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2792, 2011 WL 1403167 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 13 2011).

984. Trial court did not err by admitting investigator's statements into evidence during sentencing because none of the statements constituted hearsay: (1) in the first, the investigator was not offering his statement of the official prison data compilation of 78 serious staff assaults for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) in the second, the investigator did not disclose any out-of-court statement when he testified concerning why assaults on inmates were not reported; and (3) in the third, there was no statement, as the investigator was merely recounting an event of an inmate who was beaten and starved to death. Coble v. State, 330 S.W.3d 253, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1297 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

985. In an equipment supplier's breach of contract action against an electrical subcontractor, the court did not err in admitting testimony from the supplier's vice president about a change-order request and an agreed modification to a training requirement in the contract; the testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it contained no out-of-court statements. Austin Traffic Signal Constr. Co., L.P. v. Transdyn Controls, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7059, 2010 WL 3370292 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 24 2010).

986. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized criminal activity, with the two predicate offenses being aggravated sexual assault of a child, was improper because the trial court clearly abused its discretion in overruling defendant's repeated hearsay objections, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), (d). In so doing, those witnesses were permitted to repeat the children's allegations as facts, fill the gap left by the failure of the children's outcry witness, and describe the sordid details of the alleged child sex ring as if they were personally aware of it. Kelly v. State, 321 S.W.3d 583, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4506 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2010).

987. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause were not violated by the admission of a chemist's testimony and related exhibits related to the laboratory results obtained by a nontestifying chemist; Crawford did not apply to the baggies of controlled substances admitted as exhibits because they were not "statements" under Tex. R. Evid. 801(a). Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

988. It was not clear that an officer was testifying about an out-of-court statement made by an informant at one point and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the objection. Patterson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3196 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 12 2009).

989. Witness's statement to defendant and his wife was a crude exclamation or insult that did not assert any matter and thus it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and the trial court erred by excluding it as such; the trial court did allow testimony that the witness slammed the door in the faces of defendant and his wife and thus the court was unable to say that the trial court's erroneous exclusion of the expletive effectively prevented defendant from presenting his defense. Svitak v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 796, 2009 WL 279462 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

990. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

991. Trial court did not err in excluding a witness's testimony because the witness was not the declarant; defendant failed to establish the proper predicate for impeachment and attempted to characterize the testimony as evidence of identification for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801, but the court was not persuaded. Chapman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3184 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 25 2007).

992. In a trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under, the trial court did not err by excluding the hearsay recitals in an arrest warrant affidavit and complaint indicating the complainant had previously committed an assault on the defendant; defendant was not prevented from confronting the complainant; he was permitted to cross-examine the complainant concerning his previous conviction for aggravated assault. Bradshaw v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5891 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 6 2006).

993. Witness told the jury that a man told the witness that appellant was trying to get the man to say that he committed the crime, and this was clearly hearsay; the witness did not relay that part of the man's admission that was inculpatory of the man, that he killed one victim, and thus the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the statement pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

994. In considering a Confrontation Clause analysis, error in admitting a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); the witness did not say that a man claimed that appellant killed two victims, the witness's testimony about the man's statement was not emphasized, and in light of other testimony and evidence of appellant's guilt of capital murder, the error was harmless. Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Truth of Matter Asserted

995. In defendant's trial for aggravated assault of an officer, his hearsay objection to statements made by a store clerk to a dispatcher and then by the dispatcher to the officer regarding the presence of a robbery suspect at the store was rejected, because the statements were offered not to prove the truth of the matter, that defendant had committed a robbery, but to explain why the officer stopped defendant and the circumstances of the assault. Kindred v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107, 2014 WL 3732941 (Tex. App. Austin July 25 2014).

996. Trial court erred when it admitted testimony about the removal of a blanket over defendant's hearsay objection, as the statement was clearly offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted: that defendant had disposed of the blanket. Kinsey v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5551 (Tex. App. Eastland May 22 2014).

997. Court properly admitted testimony about information relayed to a police officer by a 911 dispatcher because the officer's testimony was not offered to prove that a bus driver had been attacked. Rather, the statement was admitted to explain how the officer came to investigate the offense, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Walls v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3159, 2014 WL 1208017 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 20 2014).

998. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony from a detective and a bank employee about the victim's identification of the check as forged because the testimony was not hearsay, as it was offered to explain the bank's procedures and how defendant became a suspect. Pearce v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 549, 2014 WL 942687 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2014).

999. Trial court could have found that the father's statement was not offered for its truth, for hearsay purposes, as the testimony followed a narrow line of inquiry showing how the alleged abuse came to be investigated years after it occurred, and the prosecutor argued the testimony was offered to show the father's reaction to the complainant's statement. Manderscheid v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14768, 2013 WL 6405470 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 5 2013).

1000. Statements by three witnesses that defendant was outside yelling something about killing a dog were not hearsay because they were offered to show what was said to show how one witness was awakened in the middle of the night and why he was looking outside rather than for the truth of the matter stated therein. Alcala v. State, 476 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13924, 2013 WL 6053837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 14 2013).

1001. Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objection, because the detective's statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but simply as statements made during defendant's interviews in an effort to ascertain the true cause of the child's injuries. Fincher v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11991, 2013 WL 5429928 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 25 2013).

1002. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an audio recording of the motorist's 911 call. It was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the district court to conclude that the relevant statements on the call were not inadmissible as hearsay, either because the statements on the call were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, or because the statements fell under one of the recognized exceptions to the hearsay rule. Condarco v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10741 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2013).

1003. Trial court did not err by allowing into evidence a statement by the first accomplice in which the second accomplice told the first accomplice to pick up the gun and hide it because it was not hearsay, as it explained why the first accomplice arrived at defendant's house and took possession of the weapon used in the shooting. Robertson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9554 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

1004. Trial court did not err by allowing into evidence a statement by an accomplice that he found the gun in defendant's bedroom because the statement was not hearsay, nor was defendant's statement to a detective that he possessed the gun for approximately 10 minutes and accidently shot himself while trying to dislodge a bullet. Robertson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9554 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

1005. On appeal of defendant's conviction for sexual assault, he failed to prove his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to inadmissible hearsay testimony during trial. Testimony from witnesses about the alleged rape and the fact that victim had been diagnosed with a behavior disorder were offered to illustrate the victim's mental capacity, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted; neither witness mentioned an out-of-court statement. Dunn v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8711 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 16 2013).

1006. Newspaper articles that are offered to prove the truth of what the article is reporting are inadmissible hearsay. Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Walker v. Hitchcock Indep. Sch. Dist., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8746 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 16 2013).

1007. Documents provided to insurers regarding asbestos claims, offered to show that the insurers had notice of the claims, were not hearsay because they were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Chi. Bridge & Iron Co., 406 S.W.3d 326, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7856, 2013 WL 3270615 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2013).

1008. Trial court could have reasonably found that the sergeant's statement that a confidential informant told him that the persons of interest were armed had a purpose other than the truth of the matter stated because it explained the aggressive behavior the officers exhibited at the scene. Even if the statement was hearsay, it was cumulative of other evidence that defendant and his accomplices had firearms with them in the hotel room. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

1009. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting a witness from testifying about what was said during her phone conversations with appellant and another person, as what was said constituted hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and appellant did not offer an explanation that the statements qualified as an exception to the hearsay rule. Carrion v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5673 (Tex. App. Eastland May 9 2013).

1010. Because the State's Exhibits 55-60 contained impermissible hearsay, the trial court abused its discretion by overruling defendant's objection to the exhibits; however, the error was harmless, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), because the record showed there was substantial evidence to prove defendant matched the description of the robbery suspect independent of the hearsay evidence. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5357 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2013).

1011. Detective's testimony that a black male had robbed the complainants with a black and silver handgun and that fingerprints were taken from the scene was not inadmissible hearsay because it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but rather was offered to explain how the detective began his investigation and why defendant became a suspect. Lightner v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5365 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2013).

1012. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the officer to testify that the truck driver did not know defendant's last name because the testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but only to show why the officer was suspicious and asked for consent to search the vehicle. Dominguez v. State, 474 S.W.3d 688, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4875, 2013 WL 1748810 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

1013. Trial court did not err by excluding a defense witness's testimony as it related to defendant's neighbor's involvement both with illegal drugs and narcotics agents because it was properly excluded as hearsay, as defendant offered the neighbor's statement to prove the truth of the matter asserted, namely that the neighbor gave defendant to the narcotics agents. Ivie v. State, 407 S.W.3d 305, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

1014. In a divorce, a wife's testimony from a prescription information sheet regarding the husband's prescriptions was inadmissible hearsay because (1) the wife did not prepare the sheet, and (2) the information in the sheet was offered for the truth of the matter asserted, which was the reasons one would take the medication. Howell v. Howell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1991, 2013 WL 784542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 28 2013).

1015. Defendant failed to prove that counsel was deficient for failing to object to a detective's hearsay statements because the detective did not testify as an outcry witness but rather detailed her investigation of the sexual assault and provided an explanation of the events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest; because the statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, they were not hearsay. Aranda v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 28 2013).

1016. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

1017. Financial history should have been excluded from evidence in light of the company's hearsay objection; no testimony was offered, either live or by affidavit, that could have proved the "financial history" was not hearsay, was a business record, or otherwise satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule. Shamrock Foods Co. v. Munn & Assocs., Ltd., 392 S.W.3d 839, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 244, 2013 WL 150810 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 15 2013).

1018. Even though the trial court erred by excluding from evidence videos of interviews with children using improper interview techniques on the ground that they were inadmissible hearsay, the error was harmless because defendant did not identify for the trial court areas on the recordings that were of particular importance or relevance and his expert witness was able to testify without reservation about what he observed on the videos and the jury saw examples of many of the techniques he said were improper. Pittman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9057 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 31 2012).

1019. Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling hearsay objections to the officer's statements made during defendant's videotaped interview, because the officer's statements during the interview were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and were relevant to show what was said to bring about certain responses from defendant that led officers to believe that defendant had not been truthful in his prior statements to police; the officer's statements were admitted as part of defendant's recorded interview with police and served to establish the context of the statement defendant made to police. Humphrey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8315, 2012 WL 4739925 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 4 2012).

1020. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's hearsay objection to a tape recording between defendant and another person because that person did not testify and defendant announced his intent in introducing the recording was to prove that he did not commit the crime of burglary of a habitation. Pardee v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6823, 2012 WL 3516485 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 16 2012).

1021. Sergeant's testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as the statement was not offered for the truth because what the sergeant was told was not true; even if the testimony was hearsay, it was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that the same testimony was elicited in other testimony to which there was no objection, and appellant's substantial rights were not affected. Dempsey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6871, 2012 WL 3525653 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2012).

1022. Trial court did not err by excluding evidence of the father's psychological evaluation, which included an evaluation of his predilection to pedophilia, because since the father's stated reason to admit the evidence could be accomplished by permitting the mother to testify concerning actions she took to investigate allegations of child abuse against the father in 2003, the trial court was within its discretion to find that there was no other purpose for which the evaluation could have been offered than for the truth of its contents. In addition, the trial court was within its discretion to decide that the evaluation itself would have been cumulative of the mother's testimony and that admitting it would have needlessly confused the jury. In the Interest of W.B.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5562, 2012 WL 2856067 (Tex. App. Eastland July 12 2012).

1023. Lender's alleged statements that full payment of a note would result in full release of the lien were not hearsay because they were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Comiskey v. FH Partners, LLC, 373 S.W.3d 620, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2876 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2012).

1024. In a trial for abuse of official capacity by a deputy sheriff, testimony that a judge provided a phone number that defendant gave to a State witness was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because the testifying witness did not give the judge's statement or offer the contents of the statement--the phone number and the name of the person to whom it belonged--for the truth of the matter asserted. Hernandez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2894, 2012 WL 1255202 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 12 2012).

1025. Witness had no personal knowledge about the value of wheels and repeated only what an automobile dealer told him, such that the witness's testimony was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and this was inadmissible unless an exception to the rule applied. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

1026. Appellant claimed the purpose for which the State offered the evidence was not a purpose discussed in the rules; however, the exceptions to the hearsay rules are not dependent on the reason why a party wants to offer the hearsay, and the only relevant inquiry concerning the purpose of hearsay is whether the out-of-court statement is being offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Why the proponent wishes to admit the evidence, beyond offering it for the truth of the matter asserted, is immaterial, and how the hearsay evidence supports the proponent's trial theory or fits into the proponent's trial strategy does not affect its admissibility under an exception under the rules. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

1027. Confrontation Clause did not require the admission of multi-level hearsay to impeach the complainant and her mother in defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child. The unnamed declarant's statement that someone made child-molestation allegations against defendant was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, because it was an out-of-court-statement offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- to show that someone made child-abuse allegations against defendant to child protective services. Shafer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS

1902, 2012 WL 745422 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 8 2012).

1028. In defendant's criminal prosecution for bribery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter into evidence because the letter was offered for a nonhearsay purpose to show that defendant knew the author and not to prove the truth of the matter asserted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

1029. Even had appellant limited his request to the parts of his statements he claimed the trial court should have admitted, self-serving declarations were generally considered to be inadmissible hearsay when offered into evidence by a defendant, and parts of the recorded statements appellant argued the trial court did not admit were properly excluded as hearsay, as each part appellant claimed was improperly excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) was a statement of memory or belief offered to prove the fact remembered or believed. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

1030. Whether a statement that defendant's daughter testified that her aunt made regarding her lack of surprise as to defendant's conduct constituted hearsay was within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and therefore, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child and for indecency with a child by exposure. The testimony of defendant's daughter tended to show that the State was indeed seeking to show her state of mind and why she failed to report the incident earlier, and the prosecution neither pressed the issue nor mentioned the testimony in its closing arguments. Grant v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6606, 2011 WL 3652548 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

1031. Statement was not hearsay because it was not offered to show a witness was telling the truth about where suspects had gone, but only to show the officers' actions and why they went to where appellant and others were apprehended; any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the challenged testimony was cumulative of other testimony admitted without objection. Briscoe v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

1032. Officer's statement was not hearsay because he merely recounted the particulars of his investigation and how appellant became a suspect, and any error was harmless because the testimony in question was cumulative of other testimony. Briscoe v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

1033. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling appellant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the statement was not hearsay; the trial court could have found that a witness's statement was offered to show what was said to her and what she did, in addition to the circumstances that led to appellant's arrest, plus any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the challenged testimony was cumulative of other testimony admitted without objection. Briscoe v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

1034. Statement was not hearsay because it was an officer's explanation regarding the origin of his investigation and how appellant became a suspect, plus the question that prompted his response was not designed to bring about hearsay testimony; any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the challenged testimony was cumulative of other testimony admitted without objection. Briscoe v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

1035. State's questions were not designed to elicit hearsay testimony, but allowed the investigators to explain the process of the investigation and how appellant was a suspect, such that the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's hearsay objection. Bible v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3737, 2011 WL 1902021 (Tex. App. Waco May 11 2011).

1036. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), the complainant's testimony that she was offered money to drop the charges against defendant and to sign an affidavit of non-prosecution was relevant as evidence of defendant's consciousness of his guilt and was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; the trial court did not err in admitting it. Johnson v. State, 425 S.W.3d 344, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3430 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 5 2011).

1037. Most of an officer's statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, and thus they were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Calderon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3352, 2011 WL 1734068 (Tex. App. El Paso May 4 2011).

1038. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it overruled defendant's hearsay objections because the statements at issue were not hearsay; the statements were offered to explain their effect on the detective and were not offered for the purpose of proving that the men did not witness the stabbings. Fernandez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2912, 2011 WL 1467820 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 19 2011).

1039. At defendant's robbery trial, a detective was questioned about information he obtained in the course of his investigation; when he began to divulge what co-defendant told him, defendant raised a hearsay objection. The detective's testimony was hearsay within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was offered for the truth of the matter asserted: that defendant was with co-defendant before, during, and after the robbery and they used the crime's proceeds to buy drugs. Sanders v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1568, 2011 WL 742646 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 3 2011).

1040. Trial court did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation in a community supervision revocation proceeding by admitting documentary evidence that defendant and the passenger of his truck were listed in police gang unit reports as self-admitted gang members. The challenged evidence was not testimonial hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), because it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- that defendant was a gang member -- but rather for the fact that he was listed in a report as having claimed gang membership. Cantu v. State, 339 S.W.3d 688, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 854 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2011).

1041. State's questions to the investigators were not designed to elicit hearsay testimony; instead the questions allowed the investigators to comment on their investigations and how defendant became a suspect, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objections. Lopez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10251, 2010 WL 5541704 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 30 2010).

1042. Text messages received by appellant were relevant evidence of his ability to follow community supervision conditions and terms, if granted, including those under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a)(1)-(2), (14), and this evidence was also proper to aid the jury in determining the appropriate length of his sentence, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1); the trial court could have reasonably found that the State introduced the text messages not for the truth of the matter asserted, but to impeach the credibility of character witnesses to test their knowledge of appellant, and no abuse of discretion was found. Barrientos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8879, 2010 WL 4395423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 4 2010).

1043. Court did not consider the State's closing arguments when determining whether the State offered text messages for the truth of the matter asserted. Barrientos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8879, 2010 WL 4395423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 4 2010).

1044. Even if text messages had constituted inadmissible hearsay and the trial court erred in permitting the questioning, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); the jury assessed punishment at five years and a fine for appellant, for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02(b), 12.33, and given the testimony supporting the guilty verdict, the admission of the text messages could not have caused more than a slight influence on the punishment decision. Barrientos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8879, 2010 WL 4395423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 4 2010).

1045. Because the wife had the burden to prove that they represented to others that they were married, this was not a situation covered by the exception allowing a news report to show the surrounding circumstances of the article's subject matter, and the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the two obituaries referring to the ward and wife as married; however, the admission of the obituaries was not calculated to cause and probably did not cause the rendition of an improper judgment because if that evidence was excluded, there remained sufficient evidence to support the trial court's determination that an informal marriage existed between the wife and ward. Barbee v. Barbee, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8386, 2010 WL 4132766 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 20 2010), no pet.

1046. Trial court did not err by admitting investigator's statements into evidence during sentencing because none of the statements constituted hearsay: (1) in the first, the investigator was not offering his statement of the official prison data compilation of 78 serious staff assaults for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) in the second, the investigator did not disclose any out-of-court statement when he testified concerning why assaults on inmates were not reported; and (3) in the third, there was no statement, as the investigator was merely recounting an event of an inmate who was beaten and starved to death. Coble v. State, 330 S.W.3d 253, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1297 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1047. In a drug trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 in admitting an unauthenticated journal found at defendant's residence because the initials and other entries in the ledger were not admitted to show the persons whose initials were listed actually owed the amount of money listed or purchased the quantities of drugs listed; rather, they were admitted to show that this "drug ledger" was a tool of the drug dealing trade, and thus was circumstantial evidence that drug trafficking was occurring on the premises. Woolverton v. State, 324 S.W.3d 794, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7510 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 14 2010).

1048. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding two letters as hearsay; the bank relied on the contents to support its argument, and thus the letters were offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted. First-citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Am. Constructors, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3887, 2010 WL 2010802 (Tex. App. Austin May 21 2010).

1049. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), the complained-of testimony established how defendant became a suspect, and thus it was not hearsay. Nickerson v. State, 312 S.W.3d 250, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 4 2010).

1050. Court could assume without deciding that defendant was correct that a videotape was not admissible as a prior consistent statement or prior inconsistent statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 801(e)(1)(B), even though he failed to raise the latter objection at trial and raised the former with insufficient specificity because the videotape was still admissible (1) to rebut the suggestion that the police fed the witness his answers to their questions, and (2) to show that the witness was not parroting what the police told him; defendant did not object or seek a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), such that the jury was free to consider the tape's contents for any purposes, plus the videotape was admissible to clarify what the witness actually said, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107. Franks v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3224, 2010 WL 1730032 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2010).

1051. Victim's testimony that she was afraid because she saw robbers with a gun and that they told her to move was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because the robbers' statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but their effect on the victim. Colvin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1827, 2010 WL 917852 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 16 2010).

1052. Warrants were admitted without the supporting affidavits and the hearsay statements of the affiant and the State did not use any information contained in the warrants for the truth of the matter asserted; thus, there was no likelihood that the jury's verdict was adversely affected by any error caused by the admission of the warrants, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Lowery v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1230, 2010 WL 610915 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 23 2010).

1053. Trial court could have reasonably found that a witness's testimony did not lead to any inescapable conclusions that another witness was testifying through him, and the testimony with respect to another witness showed how the investigation linked defendant to the crime; thus, the testimony in question was not admitted to prove the content of either witness's testimony or its truth, but rather to explain how defendant became a suspect, and thus the testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Lowery v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1230, 2010 WL 610915 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 23 2010).

1054. Officer's testimony that he heard a general broadcast to look out for a specific white car was offered to support the officer's reasonable suspicion and decision to investigate further; in this context, the testimony was not hearsay. Lara v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1114, 2010 WL 547488 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 18 2010).

1056. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

1057. Both parts of a statement were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because they were offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, namely, that the victim had ended her romantic relationship with defendant and he had made a threat against he because the relationship had ended; thus, the trial court abused its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

1058. Gonzalez v. State does not stand for the proposition that the forfeiture-by-wrongdoing doctrine is an exception to the hearsay rule; it applies to an objection based on a Confrontation Clause violation. Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

1059. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the court properly allowed an officer's testimony because it was not offered to show that defendant "burglarized a woman's apartment." The testimony established the investigation that linked defendant to the apartment complex where the complainant's vehicle was found, and eventually, the investigation led to defendant being a suspect in the instant case. Martinez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8627, 2009 WL 3734154 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 10 2009).

1060. Documents that were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted were not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 in an action by a business purchaser against an owner of the purchased business who allegedly engaged in improper conduct that harmed the business.

1061. Any error by the court in considering an officer's testimony concerning statements made to him by a witness was harmless because, assuming that the trial court considered the complained-of testimony for the truth of the matter asserted, there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was properly introduced. Three eyewitnesses identified defendant as the gunman, and a vehicle matching the description of the vehicle driven by the gunman was found in close proximity of defendant's residence. In re E.S., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6690, 2009 WL 2623352 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26 2009).

1062. Court properly allowed a police officer to testify because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect in the case and the status of the investigation; therefore, the officer's testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Moreover, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, and shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

1063. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling his objections to statements made by a detective in the video-taped interview wherein the detective challenged defendant's version of the events because the statements were not hearsay because they were offered solely to show their effect on defendant's demeanor, thus permitting the jury to evaluate his credibility. Additionally, because the complained-of statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, the Confrontation Clause did not bar admission of the statements. Padilla v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6552, 2009 WL 5247434 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 20 2009), *aff'd,*326 S.W.3d 195, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1239 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1064. Detective's testimony regarding her investigation, when taken in context, could lead to inescapable conclusions as to the substance of defendant's out-of-court statement, such that the testimony was inadmissible as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Galvez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6300, 2009 WL 2476600 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 12 2009).

1065. Officer's testimony that informants told him defendant was dealing drugs was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was offered to explain why the investigation was initiated and why it focused on defendant. Gillett v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5830 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 30 2009).

1066. Defendant objected to the victim's testimony concerning a book on the grounds of leading, and after he made his hearsay objection, the State rephrased its questions and no objections were raised, and when the exhibit was offered, defendant objected on the grounds of duplicity and relevancy, such that defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 on claims that the testimony was hearsay and irrelevant; moreover, the victim's statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but were offered to show his state of mind and basis for his actions, such that the statements were not hearsay and were relevant. Miller v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4157, 2009 WL 1653070 (Tex. App. Eastland June 11 2009).

1067. Statements by officers were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted. The officers' statements were offered either to provide context for defendant's statements or to show the effect of the officers' statements on defendant, and accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection.

Hernandez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3333, 2009 WL 1331649 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 14 2009).

1068. Witness's statement that another person had said defendant had a gun outside a house was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because the statement was not offered to prove that defendant had a gun, but to explain why defendant was not allowed entry into the house. Therefore, the statement was properly admitted. Phillips v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2150, 2009 WL 824755 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2009).

1069. State Bar complaint against an attorney was not admitted to prove an operative fact; the trial court limited the admission of the complaint as evidence that the complaint was used to launch the State Bar's investigation against the attorney. Because the complaint was not admitted to prove the allegations made therein by the attorney's client, it was not hearsay. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

1070. Witness's statement was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was offered at least in part to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and defendant's statement was also hearsay because it was offered to prove defendant's belief as to why something happened, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the statements as hearsay. Svitak v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 796, 2009 WL 279462 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

1071. Witness's statement to defendant and his wife was a crude exclamation or insult that did not assert any matter and thus it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and the trial court erred by excluding it as such; the trial court did allow testimony that the witness slammed the door in the faces of defendant and his wife and thus the court was unable to say that the trial court's erroneous exclusion of the expletive effectively prevented defendant from presenting his defense. Svitak v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 796, 2009 WL 279462 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

1072. State bar complaint was properly introduced into evidence during a disciplinary matter for several reasons; it did not constitute hearsay because it was merely introduced to show that it was used to launch an investigation. Moreover, to the extent that the lawyer argued that a signature on the complaint was inadmissible as fraudulent, that matter was not preserved for appellate review since no such objection was raised before a trial court. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

1073. In a case involving the revocation of deferred adjudication community supervision where the State sought to introduce a recipe for cooking methamphetamine, a hearsay objection was meritless because the State did not offer the recipe to prove that one was able to manufacture methamphetamine by following the steps but, presumably, to show that defendant deserved a greater punishment for possessing something that purported to be a methamphetamine recipe. Therefore, the recipe was not offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and it was not hearsay. Leitao v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 325, 2009 WL 112768 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 15 2009).

1074. In an assault against a public servant case, a deputy's statement as to the reasons he put defendant into a patrol car was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was not offered to prove that defendant was a suspect in an assault involving another victim. The evidence was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Reaves v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2008).

1075. Court properly admitted an officer's testimony to explain how defendant became a suspect in the investigation and to establish the course of events and circumstances leading to defendant's arrest because this was harmless error because the same information was admitted without objection through other witnesses. Flores

v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6491 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25, 2008).

1076. Because a statement was offered as proof of a representation on which parties claiming an easement by estoppel had relied, the making of the statement was an operative fact and was not offered to prove the truth of the matter stated, but simply that the statement was made; thus, the testimony was not hearsay. Allen v. Allen, 280 S.W.3d 366, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6527 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

1077. In a driving while intoxicated case, there was no error in admitting the 911 recording because the 911 recording was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted--namely, that defendant was intoxicated--but to explain the reason why the officer was dispatched to the subdivision and one of the reasons why the officer suspected that defendant was intoxicated. Davis v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6459 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 20, 2008).

1078. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing eyewitnesses to recall the names of the pill bottles found in defendant's car because the statements did not constitute hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); defendant was not charged with possession or consumption of any of the pills found and the statements were not offered for the truth, but provided context as to why medical personnel reacted as they did, given that defendant argued at her driving while intoxicated trial that she was improperly denied medical assistance. Bailey v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5137 (Tex. App. Waco July 9 2008).

1079. Court agreed that testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, it was offered to show why an officer knew to look for a car with damage, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it overruled defendant's hearsay objection to the officer's testimony regarding how he knew to look for a damaged vehicle. Ramirez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3523 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 15 2008).

1080. In a sexual assault of a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a determination of the proper outcry witness because, given that counsel could have concluded three witnesses all qualified as outcry witnesses and that a detective was not giving outcry testimony, there was no need to request a determination of the outcry witness; the detective's testimony was admissible because his testimony as to what the aunt said was offered to impeach the aunt and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Byars v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3363 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2008).

1081. In defendant's drug case, the court did not err by admitting a videotape of a witness's interrogation by police because it was introduced to "rebut the witness's claims that the police threatened and coerced her into falsely stating that defendant was at the parking lot in order to conduct the drug deal;" the videotape was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Kennedy v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3424 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 8 2008).

1082. In defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the record did not lead the court to the conclusion that certain testimony was offered to prove the truth of a witness's statements to another under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and it appeared that the State offered the testimony for the purpose of showing the effect that learning of the statement had on another; the elicited testimony described only how the victim's mother came to be concerned for her child's welfare while in the care of defendant, and the trial court could have found that the testimony would not have proven the substance of the statement in question, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it permitted the disputed testimony. Marine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3161 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 1 2008).

1083. In defendant's attempted indecency with a child case, the court erred in admitting hearsay evidence of the girl's age during the State's direct examination of the store's loss-prevention investigator because the investigator's statement that the mother told him the child was born in December, 1996 was hearsay because it was offered for the truth of the matter that the child was under seventeen years old. Rivera-Reyes v. State, 252 S.W.3d 781, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2988 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

1084. Affiant's statement was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the statement in question was offered to prove the fact in question. Winn v. Spectrum Primary Care, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

1085. Trial court did not err in admitting a letter the district attorney issued to defendant before her arrest because: (1) the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as it was admitted to show that defendant had notice that her activities might have been illegal, rather than to prove that the letter's contents were true; (2) defendant failed to request a limiting instruction, and therefore she could not complain on appeal about the letter's admission for all purposes; and (3) defendant's due process rights were not violated, as the State did not expressly represent the letter as a correct statement of the law until its closing argument, after the trial court had instructed the jury as to the applicable law. Pardue v. State, 252 S.W.3d 690, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2421 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

1086. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed testimony from witnesses regarding their actions following the victim reporting the abuse to them because the State did not offer the statements to prove their contents; rather, the State offered them to show what the recipients did after hearing the information and to explain the course of events that followed; the jury was instructed accordingly. Dillon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9339 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2007).

1087. In a case of fraudulent use of identifying information with intent to harm and defraud another, a credit application was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because it was not offered to prove the truth of the statements within the application but, rather, to show that an application in the victim's name was made. Rezaie v. State, 259 S.W.3d 811, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

1088. Challenged statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because they were not presented to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but were instead elicited to prove defendant's answers to the questions. Chuber v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9227 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 28 2007).

1089. Police officer testified about an anonymous informant for the purpose of showing how the investigation became focused on defendant; his testimony also explained how he acted in response to information he received after speaking with an unknown person at a club where defendant's fellow gang members were known to frequent, but his testimony did not relate historical aspects of the case or contain specific hearsay statements; the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the officer's testimony did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of his conversation at the nightclub; thus, the officer's testimony was not admitted to prove the content of an informant's testimony or its truth, but rather to explain how defendant became a suspect, which was not inadmissible hearsay. Rivera v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6508 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2007).

1090. Sales receipt admitted in the case showed how defendant's sister, and thus defendant, were linked to the use of the victim's credit card and was not to prove the truth of the matter asserted for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801, and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the receipt in defendant's aggravated robbery trial. Kimble v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5092 (Tex. App. Dallas June 29 2007).

1091. Trial court did not err in admitting a document entitled, "Application for Protective Order," to which defendant timely objected on hearsay grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 801; the document contained statements that defendant had engaged in conduct constituting family violence, but the State claimed that the document was not offered for the truth of the matter, but for a permissible purpose, and even though the purpose of the offer was not stated to the trial judge, the court had to affirm, given this ground of admissibility. Sapp v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4790 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 21 2007).

1092. Record did not indicate that the State sought to invoke Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 to admit the child victim's statements through his mother's testimony and defendant was correct that the trial court erred in permitting the mother to testify as to what the child generally told her about the abuse, as the testimony was offered to prove the truth of the matter, the severity of defendant's conduct, which amounted to inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and absent the invocation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the trial court erred in overruling defendant's objection; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the facts to which the mother testified were included in the same facts that defendant introduced through her own testimony and through other testimony of the mother without objection, and the court was unable to say that the erroneous admission of the mother's testimony had a substantial effect in determining defendant's punishment for injury to a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04(a). Toliver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4059 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 24 2007).

1093. In defendant's trial for injury to a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04(a), the child's mother's testimony concerning out-of-court statements by hospital personnel that were offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted constituted inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, but even if defendant's counsel's performance was deficient for failing to object, defendant did not show that there was a reasonable probability that, but for the error, the outcome of the trial would have been different; defendant testified to the injuries she caused the child, the same testimony admitted through the mother, and thus it was harmless error admitting the mother's testimony in this regard. Toliver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4059 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 24 2007).

1094. Given defendant's reason to admit the evidence, a videotaped statement of the child victim, to show demeanor and character, the trial court would have been within its discretion to exclude the evidence because the videotape would have been cumulative of the victim's trial testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, and because the court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence on non-hearsay grounds, the court did not need to analyze whether the evidence fell within an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 47.1; the court noted that had the tape been offered to show the truth of the matters asserted, it would have been hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Shanta v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2887 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

1095. In a domestic violence case, because threatening e-mails sent by defendant to the victim were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, they were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801; moreover, an out-of-court statement made by a party and offered against him at trial is not hearsay. Ashford v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 946 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 8 2007).

1096. In a trial for defendant's murder of his 81-year-old neighbor, there was no hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) in the admission of testimony that the complainant attempted to obtain food for defendant from an assistance organization where the complainant worked; the witness's statement that defendant needed to fill out paperwork was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- how one would obtain food from the organization -- but rather to show that defendant killed a woman who was trying to help him. Peterson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10431 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 7 2006).

1097. Trial court properly admitted an officer's testimony regarding what was written on the back of a business card because the officer's testimony was not offered for the purpose of proving that the phone numbers on the back of the card were the numbers of two certain individuals; instead, the officer's testimony was offered only to show that appellant had a business card containing the information in his possession and, therefore, was not hearsay. Rodriguez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9916 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 16 2006).

1098. In defendant's criminal street gang case, evidence of an interview with the gang's leader was properly admitted because the prosecution's argument focused on the implications and inferences drawn from the leader giving an interview to an openly racist radio program, and therefore, it was not admitted for the truth of the matters asserted therein. Chaddock v. State, 203 S.W.3d 916, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8861 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

1099. Trial court did not err by admitting a document created by Pontiac showing the GTO's serial number and a note from the seller to the buyer stating the GTO was no longer for sale because the documents were not admitted for the truth of the matter asserted but to show the ongoing series of communications and faxes between the buyer and the seller concerning the buyer's purchase of the GTO. Marten v. Silva, 200 S.W.3d 297, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

1100. Court properly admitted statements made by officers when interviewing defendant because the statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; the statements were questions that an officer asked defendant, and they were admitted in order to give context to defendant's replies; it would have been difficult to redact them in their entirety and have defendant's statements still make sense to the jury. Kirk v. State, 199 S.W.3d 467, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6060 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1101. In a criminal trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court overruled defendant's hearsay objection to the officer's testimony that a woman sitting in the car driven from the crime scene provided police with defendant's name; the testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but rather, to inform the jury how defendant became a suspect. Hall v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5193 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

1102. In a case dealing with possession of a controlled substance, over 400 grams of cocaine, with intent to deliver that was found in defendant's truck, there was evidence offered through a videotape of the incident in which defendant responded to a question by an officer by stating that the truck was his; defendant affirmatively stated he had no objection to the admission of that videotape; accordingly, proof of ownership of the truck was adequately shown; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801, the erroneous admission of hearsay testimony regarding proof of ownership of the truck was harmless. Barnes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4328 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 19 2006).

1103. Because certain testimony was not solicited to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and the trial court did not err in permitting an officer to testify as to why the assistance of immigration services was sought in locating defendant. Ramirez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3375 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 27 2006).

1104. By the employee's own admission, the initial injury occurred on March 1, 2000, when the employee immediately knew of the injury and its cause, which was sufficient to commence the accrual of the cause of action, for purposes of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003(a), and thus, the trial court properly granted the employer summary judgment because the employee's action was not filed within two years as the statute required; regarding the employee's claim of suffering a separate injury in July 2000, the employee had not provided evidence of the factual details of that incident or the "repetitious trauma," and the employee's affidavit in this regard was conclusory and contained prohibited hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the employee's claim that a medical provider advised the employee not to work was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Espinoza v. Universal City Animal Hosp., Inc., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3343 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 26 2006).

1105. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

1106. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

1107. Documents seized from the vehicle of defendant's mother pursuant to a search warrant were admissible because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted but to show that defendant had access to the vehicle in which defendant fled the crime scene. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

1108. Witness told the jury that a man told the witness that appellant was trying to get the man to say that he committed the crime, and this was clearly hearsay; the witness did not relay that part of the man's admission that was inculpatory of the man, that he killed one victim, and thus the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the statement pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

1109. In considering a Confrontation Clause analysis, error in admitting a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); the witness did not say that a man claimed that appellant killed two victims, the witness's testimony about the man's statement was not emphasized, and in light of other testimony and evidence of appellant's guilt of capital murder, the error was harmless. Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

Evidence : Judicial Admissions : Pleadings

1110. In an action for breach of contract arising from a licensing agreement, the trial court committed error by refusing to admit into evidence defendants' superseded pleading in which they admitted that manufacturing income was subject to the agreement. The Court of Appeals of Texas held that a superseded pleading from a party-opponent is not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Quick v. Plastic Solutions of Tex., Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9821 (Tex. App. El Paso June 27 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Curative Admissibility

1111. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statements into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

1112. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object when the prosecutor elicited testimony showing that defendant had assaulted a murder victim because the hearsay evidence was admissible under the rule of optional completeness, given that the portion of the statement admitted by the defense gave the false impression that defendant was not present when the victim was murdered. Salazar v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4983, 2012 WL 2357744 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

1113. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

1114. In a murder trial, the court improperly admitted draft affidavits relaying a history of domestic violence that were never signed, notarized, or introduced in any prior court proceeding; the admission of the hearsay evidence was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because other similar evidence was before the jury, including prior applications for protective orders. Rogers v. State, 183 S.W.3d 853, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10705 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

1115. Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's girlfiend's out-of-court statements where her threat to an eyewitness was offered to show the threat was made, not to prove any "matter asserted" therein. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

1116. In a criminal prosecution for evading arrest in a vehicle, hearsay statements that the officer relied on as a basis for the arrest warrant were admissible as nonhearsay. The officer was permitted to testify that he overheard a cell phone caller ask "Did Little Mike get away, or did the police get him?" "Little Mike" was defendant's nickname. Powell v. State, 151 S.W.3d 646, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Waco 2004), reversed by 189 S.W.3d 285, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 681 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1117. In a criminal trial for aggravated assault, trial counsel did not err in failing to object to an investigating officer's testimony of a cohort's out-of-court statements regarding the incident where the same testimony was later received though the cohort's own testimony, a nonhearsay source. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2004).

1118. Where defendant argued that the officer's testimony that the officer ran defendant's nickname in the computer led to the inescapable conclusion that the complainant had identified defendant as the assailant and was "backdoor hearsay," the testimony was offered not to "prove the truth of the matter asserted," (here, that defendant committed an aggravated assault), but rather to explain how defendant became a suspect and the testimony was not hearsay. Terry v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5899 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 1 2004).

1119. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony of a witness to the murder, the admission of a statement that was hearsay was non-constitutional error subject to a harm analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), and that the impact of the witness's hearsay testimony that defendant was angry with the victim regarding a transmission was relatively insignificant when considered in connection with the other evidence supporting defendant's guilt, and did not have a substantial and injurious effect on the jury's verdict. Alvarado v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5019 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 3 2004).

1120. In a capital murder trial, the admission of a poem written to defendant by defendant's brother who assisted in the crime was hearsay and it was improperly admitted. However, the State provided ample evidence, including eyewitness testimony, establishing that defendant and defendant's brother shot and stabbed the victims; thus, the erroneous admission of the poem did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict and the error was harmless. Windland v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4709 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2004).

1121. In a criminal prosecution for possession of marihuana, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the hearsay statement made by defendant to his father that he was holding the marihuana for someone else, that defendant owed someone $1,000.00, and that he had to get the marihuana back from his father so he could return it to that person. Under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A), the statement was an admission against interest, a hearsay exception. Esser v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3764 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 29 2004).

1122. Where a defendant listened to a witness's description of the murders and surrounding events without disputing them, and pointed out that the witness should have been there because he would have had some fund, he manifested his agreement with and adoption of the statements within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B), and the witness's statements were admissible. Paredes v. State, 129 S.W.3d 530, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

1123. In defendant's criminal trial, testimony of arresting officer as to an out of court statement that defendant's car "had been possibly involved in a robbery three days earlier" was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) where the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, it was offered to show probable cause for the detention of the defendant for traffic violations. Ellis v. State, 99 S.W.3d 783, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1445 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

1124. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803(3), the statements made by a witness, that the victim told the witness that the defendant had been partying, tearing things up, and smoking pot in the victim's residence, amounted to the admission of inadmissible hearsay, and the trial court erred by admitting testimony regarding the events or existing conditions that were the cause of the victim's mental and emotional state. Skeen v. State, 96 S.W.3d 567, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8181 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

1125. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

1126. At defendant's trial for retaliation, the trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of his step-daughter because it contained defendant's hearsay statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) explaining why did not appear in court. The State's hearsay objection was properly sustained. Austin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1234, 2013 WL 490000 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2013).

1127. In defendant's kidnapping trial, in which defendant was charged with kidnapping the victim on the orders of a higher-ranking gang member with whom the victim had ended a romantic relationship, evidence of statements made by the other gang member over the telephone ordering defendant to put the victim in the trunk of a car and other statements were admissible as co-conspirator statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E). Guffey v. State,

2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3293, 2012 WL 1470185 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 26 2012).

1128. In a personal injury action in which appellee truck driver pleaded a claim for negligent hiring against appellant foreign corporation by alleging that it hired a Texas corporation to deliver products to Texas when appellant retained control over the Texas corporation and knew or should have known that the Texas corporation employed an incompetent driver, appellee had offered a carrier agreement to demonstrate the existence of a legal relationship between appellant and the Texas corporation, and because the carrier agreement appeared to be signed by the director of appellant, and appellant did not properly challenge the agreement's authenticity, the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's hearsay objection. Ltd. Logistics Servs. v. Villegas, 268 S.W.3d 141, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6536 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2008).

1129. During defendant's criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to evidence of hearsay statements by the victim. Bishop v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4874 (Tex. App. Waco June 7 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : General Overview

1130. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did the veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to the veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

1131. Predicate for admission of a prior consistent statement is laid by the content, tone, and tenor of cross-examination, which either does or does not open the door to the admissibility of a prior consistent statement by an express or implied suggestion that the witness is fabricating testimony in some relevant respect; such an attack may not be immediately apparent from the specific wording of the questions asked, but may become obvious only during the attorney's final argument. Hammons v. State, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

1132. Police officer testified about an anonymous informant for the purpose of showing how the investigation became focused on defendant; his testimony also explained how he acted in response to information he received after speaking with an unknown person at a club where defendant's fellow gang members were known to frequent, but his testimony did not relate historical aspects of the case or contain specific hearsay statements; the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the officer's testimony did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of his conversation at the nightclub; thus, the officer's testimony was not admitted to prove the content of an informant's testimony or its truth, but rather to explain how defendant became a suspect, which was not inadmissible hearsay. Rivera v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6508 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

1133. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate;

hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2473 (Tex. App. Tyler 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1206, 123 S. Ct. 1283, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1051, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1631 (2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

1134. In defendant's murder trial, there was no error in the admission of testimony by a witness about statements defendant made in a telephone call because they were within the hearsay exemption for statements of a party-opponent. Van Exel v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8464 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 4 2014).

1135. Trial court did not err in allowing state troopers to testify, over defendant's hearsay objection, regarding information they had received from an anonymous tipster where the information was used at trial to show how and why defendant came to the attention of the troopers and, in that sense, was admissible to prove that the troopers detained defendant after they acquired specific information concerning a drug-smuggling operation involving a tractor-trailer whose description matched the appearance of defendant's tractor-trailer. Because defendant had challenged the conduct of the troopers on the grounds that they lacked reasonable suspicion for the traffic stop and probable cause for his arrest, the details of the out-of-court statements by the anonymous tipster were admissible to show the reasonableness of the troopers' conduct. Iglesias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

1136. Whether a statement that defendant's daughter testified that her aunt made regarding her lack of surprise as to defendant's conduct constituted hearsay was within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and therefore, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child and for indecency with a child by exposure. The testimony of defendant's daughter tended to show that the State was indeed seeking to show her state of mind and why she failed to report the incident earlier, and the prosecution neither pressed the issue nor mentioned the testimony in its closing arguments. Grant v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6606, 2011 WL 3652548 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

1137. In a case in which a commercial tenant argued that the trial court erred in excluding a string of emails between its landlord's prior counsel and the tenant's counsel, dated prior to the filing of the underlying lawsuit, the emails were admissible because while the landlord's attorney's statement was in the nature of an opinion rather than a declaration of fact, as long as an agent's statement was made during the existence of the employment relationship and concerned a matter within the scope of that employment, it was admissible against the principal, even if the agent had no authority to speak for the principal, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D). However, the exclusion of the email correspondence was harmless because the evidence was merely cumulative, and because the tenant did not reasonably show that the exclusion of the evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Cleveland Reg'l Med. Ctr., L.P. v. Celtic Props., L.C., 323 S.W.3d 322, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7942 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 30 2010).

1138. Documents that were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted were not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 in an action by a business purchaser against an owner of the purchased business who allegedly engaged in improper conduct that harmed the business.

1139. Assuming that allowance of a mother's accusations toward defendant was improper hearsay, such allowance was not reversible error because the same facts were shown by unchallenged testimony of defendant's admissions to the accusations; under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), nonconstitutional error that did not affect substantial rights was disregarded. Tucker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7009, 2009 WL 2767304 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 2 2009).

1140. In a criminal trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court overruled defendant's hearsay objection to the officer's testimony that a woman sitting in the car driven from the crime scene provided police with defendant's name; the testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but rather, to inform the jury how defendant became a suspect. Hall v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5193 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

1141. Defendant waived any error in the trial court's denial of a mistrial in his aggravated robbery trial. Defendant did not request a curative instruction after the trial court sustained his objection to hearsay testimony by the complainant that his employee identified defendant in a photo lineup and stated that the guy probably came back over to shoot the complainant. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2147 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 23 2005).

1142. Even absent waiver, any error by a trial court in admitting double hearsay did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury's verdict. The evidence before the jury included defendant's written confession, an eyewitness's identifications of defendant, and testimony that defendant gave the detectives a false alibi and hid when law enforcement wanted to question him about the murder. Mims v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4019 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 30 2004).

1143. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006, as it was shown that the records were voluminous, were made available to the customers for inspection, and the underlying records were admissible as non-hearsay admissions of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). C.M. Asfahl Agency v. Tensor, Inc., 135 S.W.3d 768, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 808 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

1144. Trial court did not err when it allowed a police officer to testify that defendant's girlfriend told the officer that defendant went by a certain name as his "street" name because the girlfiend herself testified that defendant went by that name and, further, the complainant and the other eyewitness both identified defendant and testified they knew him by his street name. Thus, the alleged hearsay was not the only evidence that defendant went by that street name. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10576 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 22 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

1145. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting statements that defendant made to a jailer where the evidence was admissible as an admission by a party-opponent, as it was offered to prove that defendant admitted guilt in the instant case-he was being held for murder and said he would have to limit himself to one murder every two years. The jailer's testimony clarified the circumstances surrounding the victim's shooting, directly contradicted defendant's theory of the case that his accomplices were wrongly accusing him of firing the gun so that they would receive a favorable deal in their own cases, and was not likely to impress the jury in some irrational but nevertheless indelible way. Haynes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

1146. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's statement to a witness who had been in jail with him before the trial, that defendant was the "shooter," where the State did not offer the inmate's testimony as evidence of an extraneous offense separate and apart from the charged offense but, instead offered the evidence as proof that defendant fired the shots that killed the victim. The statement was an admission by a party-opponent, supported the allegation that defendant killed the victim, directly contradicted defendant's defensive theory that his accomplices only named him as the shooter to get a reduced sentence, and was not likely to impress the jury in some irrational but nevertheless indelible way. Haynes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

1147. Trial court did not err by excluding evidence of the father's psychological evaluation, which included an evaluation of his predilection to pedophilia, because since the father's stated reason to admit the evidence could be accomplished by permitting the mother to testify concerning actions she took to investigate allegations of child abuse against the father in 2003, the trial court was within its discretion to find that there was no other purpose for which the evaluation could have been offered than for the truth of its contents. In addition, the trial court was within its discretion to decide that the evaluation itself would have been cumulative of the mother's testimony and that admitting it would have needlessly confused the jury. In the Interest of W.B.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5562, 2012 WL 2856067 (Tex. App. Eastland July 12 2012).

1148. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements defendant made in a letter concerning the murder because the statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as they were admissible as admissions of a party opponent. The statements were relevant because in the letter defendant did not claim, as he did at trial, that the shooting was accidental, and they were not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, as the statements supported the State's contention that defendant intentionally shot the victim, it related to defendant's state of mind which was a central issue at trial, and the letter was brief and not cumulative of other evidence. Benitez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9871, 2011 WL 6306643 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

1149. In a wrongful death and survival action stemming from a multi-fatality vehicular accident, it was reversible error to admit evidence of the illegal immigrant status of defendant driver. The observation that driver's statements were party admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) did not establish that they were more probative than prejudicial and did not explain why other witnesses were permitted to be questioned or why extrinsic evidence was admitted on the subject. TXI Transp. Co. v. Hughes, 306 S.W.3d 230, 2010 Tex. LEXIS 212, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 431 (Tex. 2010).

1150. In a medical malpractice case, the probative value of statements from superseded pleadings regarding two nonsuited doctors was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because counsel, representing the parents of an injured child, first alluded to the doctor's party status, thus opening the door to rebuttal, and the statements, which were made by the parents, constituted admissions by party-opponents under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and were not hearsay. Bay Area Healthcare Group, Ltd. v. McShane, 239 S.W.3d 231, 2007 Tex. LEXIS 527, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 866 (Tex. 2007).

1151. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

1152. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v.

State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

1153. In a child sexual abuse case, the admission of the testimony of an investigator and a police officer regarding the complainant's prior statements was reversible error because any legitimate probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 607 was substantially outweighed by the prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the State had ample notice that the complainant would recant, and conflicting evidence alone did not trigger Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Klein v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 950 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

1154. Because defendant did not request notice of the State's intent to use evidence of crimes committed by third persons under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), no notice was required of the intent to use evidence that a grandmother attempted to bribe a child to remain quiet about sexual abuse; moreover, the evidence was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it was merely offered to show that the child maintained the allegations despite the bribe. Franco v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1655 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2004).

1155. Detective's testimony was not hearsay because his testimony concerning the police department's prior investigations for the "same type of offense" was not offered to establish that defendant had been investigated for or committed other instances of indecent exposure. Rather, the testimony was offered to explain the course of his investigation and how defendant came to be a suspect, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Denmon v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2180, 2014 WL 857671 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

1156. Messages retrieved from a murder victim's voicemail were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted therein and they assisted the jury in establishing the time of the victim's death. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 23 2006).

1157. Trial court properly admitted defendant's statement that when he found the victim he was going to kill her because it was an admission by a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and was not offered for the purpose of proving action in conformity therewith on a particular occasion, but was offered to show defendant's intent and knowledge as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the State sought to show that defendant's statement conflicted with his defensive theory that the group members were merely going to beat up the victim and not kill her. Ponce-Duron v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10149 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Crimes : General Overview

1158. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate; hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2473 (Tex. App. Tyler 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1206, 123 S. Ct. 1283, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1051, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1631 (2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Autopsies

1159. There was no error when a medical examiner who was not present at an autopsy testified about photographs taken during the autopsy because the photographs were not an out-of-court statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and there was no question under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) that they accurately depicted the appearance of the victim's body. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : DNA

1160. In a murder trial, any hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 was harmless when a detective was permitted to testify as to DNA test results as a basis for eliminating other suspects because the expert who performed the DNA analyses later testified that the tests ruled out the other suspects as contributors to the DNA collected at the crime scene, the very same conclusion that was implicit in the detective's testimony. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Sobriety Tests

1161. In a criminal trial arising from a collision, the other driver's out-of-court statements were admissible as excited utterance because they were made shortly after the collision while the driver was still in her wrecked vehicle and were made to her daughter, not to law enforcement officers. Pointe v. State, 371 S.W.3d 527, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4295, 2012 WL 1948880 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 30 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

1162. Defendant was entitled to a new trial on two counts of aggravated sexual abuse of a child where the trial court reversibly erred by admitting the testimony of the officer and a child protective services investigator regarding the victim's prior statements because it was inadmissible impeachment evidence of the victim's trial testimony, during which she recanted her allegations against defendant; the error was not harmless because without the investigator's testimony, the State would not have proven penetration. Klein v. State, 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1163. In a child sexual abuse case, the admission of the testimony of an investigator and a police officer regarding the complainant's prior statements was reversible error because any legitimate probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 607 was substantially outweighed by the prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the State had ample notice that the complainant would recant, and conflicting evidence alone did not trigger Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B). Klein v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 950 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1164. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did the veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to the veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : General Overview

1165. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the victim's diary because defense counsel failed to make any suggestion that the diary was admissible as impeachment evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 613, as a general assertion that the diary was not hearsay was insufficient to make the trial court aware of a Rule 613 argument. Fletcher v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5429, 2012 WL 2783298 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 10 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : Admissibility

1166. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the State to introduce testimony about defendant's criminal record during the guilt-innocence phase of his trial because the State was authorized under Tex. R. Evid. 806 to impeach defendant's hearsay testimony; the two witnesses' testimony was hearsay, as they were statements of defendant made out of court to prove that defendant had purchased the laptop from a friend. The Theus factors also weighed in favor of admission, as all of defendant's prior convictions but one involved crimes of moral turpitude or theft, defendant's otherwise remote convictions were followed by additional convictions, and had the jury believed the witnesses' hearsay statements it likely would have acquitted defendant. Schmidt v. State, 373 S.W.3d 856, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5657, 2012 WL 2888213 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 16 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Conduct

1167. In a murder case, a court properly allowed the State to impeach a witness with his prior inconsistent grand jury statement where he was shown a copy of his grand jury testimony and he acknowledged that he had previously testified that, during a telephone conversation, defendant told him that "they are here." The State used the brother's prior statements for the limited purpose of attacking his credibility because of his inconsistent statements, and not to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Bolton v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 24 2004).

1168. Where defendant was convicted of intoxication manslaughter and intoxication assault, the trial court abused its discretion by allowing defendant's prior felony convictions to be introduced to impeach his credibility, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 609, where the convictions were improperly admitted as hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 806, when they were not in fact hearsay as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Enriquez v. State, 56 S.W.3d 596, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 5450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2001).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Inconsistent Statements

1169. Trial court did not err by admitting the witness's testimony that defendant urged her to say that the victim assaulted her so that defendant could assert the affirmative defense of defense of a third person because the statements were made by defendant and offered against him. Thus, they constituted an admission of a party opponent and did not implicate the prior inconsistent statement rule. Stairhime v. State, 439 S.W.3d 499, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7905 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 22 2014).

1170. In a drug trial, counsel's failure to interview defendant's brother (an alternative possessor of the drugs) was not ineffective assistance, in part because the strategy was to prevent the jury from hearing evidence of defendant's oral confession; if the brother had testified inconsistently, the confession could have been admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22, § 5, for impeachment purposes, even though it would not have been admissible under the prior-inconsistent-statement exception to the hearsay rule. Chavis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9975 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 4 2012).

1171. Any error by the court in considering an officer's testimony concerning statements made to him by a witness was harmless because, assuming that the trial court considered the complained-of testimony for the truth of the matter asserted, there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was properly introduced. Three eyewitnesses identified defendant as the gunman, and a vehicle matching the description of the vehicle driven by the gunman was found in close proximity of defendant's residence. In re E.S., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6690, 2009 WL 2623352 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26 2009).

1172. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

1173. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Rehabilitation

1174. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a friend of the victim to testify about journal entries allegedly written by the victim as prior consistent statements under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B) because the trial court reasonably could have found that defense counsel's cross-examination implicitly charged that the victim's direct examination testimony that defendant sexually assaulted her by forcing her to engage in oral sex was a recent fabrication, made during the trial, in light of her allegedly conflicting statement in a 2008 note. The trial court reasonably could have found that the victim's journal statements met the consistency requirements of Rule 801(e)(1)(B) because the journal statements concerned the exact same incidents of sexual abuse about which the victim testified at trial and the journal statements did not necessarily exclude acts of forcible contact and were generally consistent with the testimony at trial. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 106, 2013 WL 84903 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 8 2013).

1175. Because defendant implied that his girlfriend was lying to secure a favorable plea bargain, her statement to her mother before the plea agreement was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); defendant raised an implied charge that his girlfriend fabricated her testimony and had a motive to fabricate her testimony as a result of the plea bargain, and her consistent statement made before she entered the plea agreement was admissible to rebut that charge. Hobday v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 109 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 10 2007).

1176. Defendant's cross-examination implied that the victim had been improperly influenced, which led to a fabrication of statements; the victim's statements to the investigator were made prior to an alleged improper influence, and thus the trial court did not err in allowing the statements to be admitted as prior consistent statements pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e). Rodarte v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6938 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

1177. In a wrongful death case, a court properly excluded expert deposition testimony on hearsay grounds where the expert was not an employee of defendant pharmacy, and there was no evidence that an agency relationship existed. When the family non-suited their claims against the doctor, the subject matter over which the expert was asked to give his opinion became moot; subsequently, he was not called at trial, and, therefore, the trial court excluded his testimony on hearsay grounds. McCluskey v. Randall's Food Mkts., Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 19 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

1178. In a murder trial where defendant claimed he acted in self-defense, the trial court did not err by excluding testimony from a psychologist regarding the victim's acts of violence; because the psychologist's knowledge of any acts committed by the victim came entirely from his review of the medical records, the psychologist's proffered testimony was hearsay for which no exception was offered under Tex. R. Evid. 801-804. Mason v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314, 2012 WL 1058792 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 22 2012).

1179. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

1180. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Refreshing Recollection : Refreshing During Testimony

1181. In defendant's assault case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify about the incident because the officer did not say that his testimony was based on another officer's report, nor did he quote or read from that officer's report or testify to any conclusions made by the other officer; rather, the officer refreshed his memory about his personal observations by reviewing the other officer's report, then testified from his own memory of those observations. Thrower v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2590 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 10 2008).

Family Law : Child Custody : Awards : General Overview

1182. In a child custody proceeding, it was error to admit an e-mail written by the mother's boyfriend in which he purportedly discussed wanting to be with another man's wife; the e-mail was inadmissible hearsay because it was introduced to prove the truth of the assertion that the boyfriend was interested in the wives of other men. However, the admission did not cause reversible error because it was cumulative and was not controlling on the material issue. In re Marriage of Ivers, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3800 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 30 2004).

Family Law : Child Support : Obligations : Modification : General Overview

1183. In a child support modification case, the trial court did not err in admitting copies of bank statements from a father's concessions business bank account where he acknowledged at the modification hearing that he had produced the bank statements to the mother in response to discovery requests. Therefore, the bank statements were not hearsay pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(B) because they were admissible as admissions by a party opponent. In re A.J.J., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3058 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 21 2005).

Family Law : Family Protection & Welfare : Cohabitants & Spouses : Abuse, Endangerment & Neglect

1184. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule of Tex. R. Evid. 801; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

1185. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Governments : Legislation : Statutes of Limitations : Time Limitations

1186. Statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule should have applied to appellant's testimony about decedent's intent to give her a parcel of land because the evidence showed that decedent still owned the 1100 acres at the time appellant claimed the statement was made to her (and the evidence also showed that appellant had continuously possessed, occupied, and cultivated the plot and adjacent 10 acres), and although appellant's testimony of decedent's statement of a parol gift appeared self-serving as to appellant, it was also adverse to appellant because once appellant made her claim as a parol gift, as opposed to by adverse possession, the limitations period for anyone claiming adversely to her was extended. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

Immigration Law : Duties & Rights of Aliens : Discrimination

1187. In a wrongful death and survival action stemming from a multi-fatality vehicular accident, it was reversible error to admit evidence of the illegal immigrant status of defendant driver. The observation that driver's statements were party admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) did not establish that they were more probative than prejudicial and did not explain why other witnesses were permitted to be questioned or why extrinsic evidence was admitted on the subject. TXI Transp. Co. v. Hughes, 306 S.W.3d 230, 2010 Tex. LEXIS 212, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 431 (Tex. 2010).

Insurance Law : Motor Vehicle Insurance : Coverage : Compulsory Coverage : Certificates of Insurance

1188. In a criminal trial for presenting a false insurance card, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.10(a)(5), the statement of the insurance company's computer to officers regarding the validity of the policy was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). However, defendant waived any error by failing to object, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Fuller v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6978 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2009).

Labor & Employment Law : Disability & Unemployment Insurance : Unemployment Compensation : Review

1189. On a trial de novo following a denial of unemployment benefits, there was no competent evidence on which to base a summary judgment upholding the decision that the employee was discharged for misconduct because the Texas Workforce Commission attached the entire record of its hearing to the motion. The record contained items that were irrelevant to de novo review, such as the Commission's findings, and even if the employee's testimony was admissible as the admission of a party-opponent, it did not support the judgment. Gardini v. Tex. Workforce Comm'n & Dell Prods., L.P., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10029 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 12 2004).

Labor & Employment Law : Discrimination : Disparate Treatment : Proof : Burdens of Proof

1190. In an employment discrimination case, the employee's summary judgment testimony about hearing an out-of-court statement by a human resources director was not competent evidence because it was hearsay. Rincones v. Whm Custom Servs., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2013).

Labor & Employment Law : Wage & Hour Laws : Statutes of Limitations

1191. Texas Workforce Commission had the authority to determine that the all of an employee's unpaid salary was due to be paid on September 25 based on the parties' agreement, Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 61.013, thus placing the entire amount within its jurisdiction to award under Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 61.051(c). A company representative's testimony that he agreed to the September 25 date was not hearsay because it was an admission by a party-opponent. Jmj Acquisitions Mgmt. v. Peterson, 407 S.W.3d 371, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7340 (Tex. App. Dallas June 13 2013).

Legal Ethics : Sanctions : Disciplinary Proceedings : General Overview

1192. State Bar complaint against an attorney was not admitted to prove an operative fact; the trial court limited the admission of the complaint as evidence that the complaint was used to launch the State Bar's investigation against the attorney. Because the complaint was not admitted to prove the allegations made therein by the attorney's client, it was not hearsay. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

Real Property Law : Adverse Possession : General Overview

1193. Statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule should have applied to appellant's testimony about decedent's intent to give her a parcel of land because the evidence showed that decedent still owned the 1100 acres at the time appellant claimed the statement was made to her (and the evidence also showed that appellant had continuously possessed, occupied, and cultivated the plot and adjacent 10 acres), and although appellant's testimony of decedent's statement of a parol gift appeared self-serving as to appellant, it was also adverse to appellant because once appellant made her claim as a parol gift, as opposed to by adverse possession, the limitations period for anyone claiming adversely to her was extended. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

Torts : Business Torts : Fraud & Misrepresentation : Actual Fraud : Elements

1194. Regarding appellants' argument that two investors could not recover for fraud because they were unable to testify at trial, it was immaterial that a direct relationship did not exist between those two investors and appellants because privity was not required, and the third investor could properly testify to appellants' representations under Tex. R. Evid. 801. Matis v. Golden, 228 S.W.3d 301, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3796 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Torts : Damages : Compensatory Damages : Medical Expenses

1195. In a personal injury suit, where appellee filed affidavits for the authentication of medical bills and appellant filed a chiropractor's controverting affidavit, the controverting affidavit and report were sufficient under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001(f) to controvert appellee's affidavit as to chiropractic expenses but appellant's chiropractor did not show that the chiropractor was qualified to controvert the reasonableness of the medical doctor's, radiologist's, or pharmacist's bills. Hong v. Bennett, 209 S.W.3d 795, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10105 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Tex. Evid. R. 802

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Jurisdiction : Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions : In Personam Actions : General Overview

1. In a suit by a securities purchaser, the Texas courts did not have personal jurisdiction over companies that provided custodial accounts. The purchaser did not establish specific jurisdiction on an agency theory; although his financial advisor identified himself as an agent, that statement was admitted for the limited purpose of showing that it was made and was not evidence of agency. Equity Trust Co. v. Hebert, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9800 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 4 2004).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Perpetuation of Testimony

2. Mandamus relief was conditionally granted where a former employee sought to take a presuit deposition under Tex. R. Civ. P. 202 because the record contained no evidence; neither the employee's verified pleadings nor a letter from his counsel was admitted. Even if they had been, pleadings were not competent evidence, and letter contained hearsay within hearsay. In re Contractor's Supplies, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6396, 2009 WL 2488374 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Pretrial Judgments : Default : Default Judgments

3. Nothing in Tex. R. Evid. 802 limits its application to contested hearings. The rule is not ambiguous and requires no explication. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

4. In entering a default judgment in a bank's action against two salesman, wherein the bank alleged claims of fraud, breach of contract, conspiracy, and civil theft, the trial court committed no error in awarding unliquidated damages based on affidavits. Neither Tex. R. Civ. P. 243 nor Tex. R. Evid. 802 barred the trial court's reliance on the affidavits. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

5. In a spousal support enforcement case, a former husband was unable to raise the issues of hearsay and authentication to challenge summary judgment evidence because these complaints were not presented to the trial court, and no ruling was obtained. Eberstein v. Hunter, 260 S.W.3d 626, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : Affidavits

6. Where the heirs claimed title to a portion of Padre Island alleging that a deed conveying the property was fraudulent, an affidavit provided by an affiant who lacked personal knowledge and relied upon hearsay was not competent summary judgment evidence. The affiant's testimony about out-of-court sources carried no probative weight over a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Kerlin v. Arias, 274 S.W.3d 666, 2008 Tex. LEXIS 992, 52 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 103 (Tex. 2008).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : Attorney Expenses & Fees : Statutory Awards

7. In an open meetings dispute, a former employee was unable to challenge affidavits offered in support of an attorney's fee award based on hearsay because he never filed a controverting affidavit. Moreover, the affidavits were timely provided to the employee where they were given to him more than 30 days before the evidence was presented in the trial court. Rogers v. City of McAllen, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6381 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 21, 2008).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Damages : General Overview

8. Although a creditor had not properly pleaded a claim upon which a suit on a sworn account could be based in a case against a debtor involving credit extensions to fund the purchase of goods or services at the point of purchase and for cash advances, the trial court erred in not granting a default judgment on liability because the creditor's allegations against the debtor were sufficient to allege a traditional suit for breach of contract; although the damages were not liquidated, the creditor submitted damages evidence in the form of a request for admissions that were deemed admitted and an affidavit of its attorney, which provided sufficient evidence to prove the creditor's damages because the trial court would have been able to ascertain the amount of damages from that evidence. Sherman Acquisition II LP v. Garcia, 229 S.W.3d 802, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4793 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Writs : Common Law Writs : Mandamus

9. Mandamus relief was conditionally granted where a former employee sought to take a presuit deposition under Tex. R. Civ. P. 202 because the record contained no evidence; neither the employee's verified pleadings nor a letter from his counsel was admitted. Even if they had been, pleadings were not competent evidence, and letter contained hearsay within hearsay. In re Contractor's Supplies, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6396, 2009 WL 2488374 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : General Overview

10. In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the State introduced evidence of the father's anti-social behavior in the form of criminal convictions and the revocation of community supervision; on review of the order terminating the father's parental rights, Tex. R. Evid. 802 did not require the court of appeals of disregard records which contained hearsay admitted without objection. In re S.K.A., 236 S.W.3d 875, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8202 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

11. Numerous appellate courts have expressly determined that hearsay is a defect of form, and thus waived if no objection is made in the trial court; while this analysis is ordinarily applied to hearsay statements made in affidavits, there is no reason to treat hearsay statements in depositions any differently. Vega v. Autozone West, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6833 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 5 2013).

12. Hearsay objection to a tenant's summary judgment affidavit in a dispute over unpaid rent was waived by failure to raise the objection in the trial court. Rosales v. Williams, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 957 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist.

Feb. 11 2010).

13. In a child custody case, a father was unable to argue on appeal that allowing the testimony and a report from an amicus attorney violated Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 107.007(a) and amounted to hearsay because he did not object at trial. Conn v. Rhodes, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6587, 2009 WL 2579577 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

14. In a spousal support enforcement case, a former husband was unable to raise the issues of hearsay and authentication to challenge summary judgment evidence because these complaints were not presented to the trial court, and no ruling was obtained. Eberstein v. Hunter, 260 S.W.3d 626, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

15. In a dispute between a hospital and a health maintenance organization regarding Medicaid coverage for a patient, the hospital waived a hearsay objection because it failed to obtain a ruling. Methodist Hosps. of Dallas v. Amerigroup Tex., Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3488 (Tex. App. Dallas May 7 2007).

16. With respect to an affidavit admitted at a trial involving a property boundary dispute, where appellants failed to present a hearsay objection at trial, the issue was waived on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Moreover, under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible evidence admitted without objection is not denied probative value merely because it is hearsay. Neal v. Machaud, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10602 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 13 2006).

17. In an appeal from a divorce judgment, the husband waived his arguments as to the exclusion of his evidence as hearsay where he cited no authority for an excluded statement, but merely argued that it was not presented for the truth of the matter asserted and listed Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, and 803. Lorant v. Lorant, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1641 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2004).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

18. In a case where a father sought modification of a parent-child relationship, assuming that testimony from the mother amounted to inadmissible hearsay evidence, the appellate court was unable to say that it probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. In re R.A.M., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 606, 2013 WL 257367 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

19. In a termination of parental rights case, an alleged error relating to the admission of hearsay evidence was deemed harmless because evidence relating to the reasons for the removal of children were reiterated with greater specificity without objection by other witnesses, including the mother herself. The mother's brief did not specify the substance of the testimony that she found objectionable nor did it establish how that evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. In the Interest of L.M., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2720 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 4 2012).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Reversible Errors

20. In a case involving insurance, a trial court's exclusion of two issues of a trade publication from evidence did not result in a reversible error because there was no evidence that the two issues had been read. Moreover, although the two insureds contended that the material was not offered for the truth of the matters asserted therein, it appeared that they offered these two issues to show that several broker parties should have known of the truth of statements made in this material, and should have had such knowledge at the time these issues were published; the hearsay rules could not have been avoided by this kind of circular reasoning. Envtl. Procedures, Inc. v. Guidry, 282 S.W.3d 602, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009), appeal after remand and supplemental opinion at 388 S.W.3d 845, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 957 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 2013).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : Sufficiency of Evidence

21. Trial court did not err by granting the ex-husband's motion to modify the parent-child relationship, because there was a material change in circumstances since the parties had been named joint managing conservators; the husband testified the police were called to the ex-wife's home, she voluntarily relinquished child custody to him, and they had been living with him. In reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, the appellate court was permitted to consider hearsay admitted without objection. In the Interest of B.A.E., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10002, 2013 WL 4041551 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 9 2013).

22. Evidence was legally sufficient to support the finding that the employee operated the vehicle at the time of the accident, because the claimant testified that the employee was the operator of the vehicle that collided with the car she and her father were traveling in, and appellants never objected to the claimant's identification of the employee as the operator of the vehicle on hearsay grounds or any other grounds. Wilson v. Martinez, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5690, 2011 WL 3063354 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2011).

23. Because defendant oil and gas well operator failed to object to hearsay testimony at trial regarding plaintiff mineral interest owners' claim of underpayment of royalties, under Tex. R. Evid. 802, even if the evidence was hearsay, the appellate court could consider it in an evidentiary sufficiency review. Moore v. Jet Stream Invs., Ltd., 261 S.W.3d 412, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 661 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Assistance of Counsel

24. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

25. Confrontation Clause did not require the admission of multi-level hearsay to impeach the complainant and her mother in defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child. The unnamed declarant's statement that someone made child-molestation allegations against defendant was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, because it was an out-of-court-statement offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- to show that someone made child-abuse allegations against defendant to child protective services. Shafer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1902, 2012 WL 745422 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 8 2012).

26. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

27. In a murder trial, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the trial court admitted, as an excited utterance, evidence of a statement by the victim to his mother that defendant had just threatened to kill him. The statement was not testimonial. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Compensatory Damages : General Overview

28. In entering a default judgment in a bank's action against two salesman, wherein the bank alleged claims of fraud, breach of contract, conspiracy, and civil theft, the trial court committed no error in awarding unliquidated damages based on affidavits. Neither Tex. R. Civ. P. 243 nor Tex. R. Evid. 802 barred the trial court's reliance on the affidavits. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : General Overview

29. In a drug trial, there was no error in excluding defendant's compendium of complaints against one of the officers involved in the investigation because the document was riddled with hearsay and hearsay upon hearsay. Oliver v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10588, 2012 WL 6634591 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 20 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Intent to Distribute : Elements

30. In a case dealing with possession of a controlled substance, over 400 grams of cocaine, with intent to deliver that was found in defendant's truck, there was evidence offered through a videotape of the incident in which defendant responded to a question by an officer by stating that the truck was his; defendant affirmatively stated he had no objection to the admission of that videotape; accordingly, proof of ownership of the truck was adequately shown; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, the erroneous admission of hearsay testimony regarding proof of ownership of the truck was harmless. Barnes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4328 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 19 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

31. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

32. In a trial for family assault, testimony concerning the complainant's statements was properly admitted as excited utterance; the complainant was visibly shaken and highly upset and her intoxication did not negate her state of excitement. Hudson v. State, 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

33. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault

34. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault : Penalties

35. In the punishment phase of a domestic assault trial, any error was harmless from admitting a recording of conversations between a 911 operator and a hospital employee who was responding to the complainant's injuries because the complainant plainly testified at trial that defendant had hit her with a closed fist in her eye. Sanders v. State, 422 S.W.3d 809, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1090, 2014 WL 325028 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 30 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : General Overview

36. There was no hearsay error in admitting an officer's testimony that the owner of the vehicle used in a robbery told the officer that he lent his car to defendant in exchange for illegal drugs because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect. Green v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3611, 2012 WL 1606238 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : Armed Robbery : General Overview

37. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02, 29.03 because a rational jury could believe a witness's hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802, admitted without objection, that defendant had implicated himself in the robbery and, accordingly, in light of the other evidence, could conclude that defendant committed the robbery. Betancourt v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 874 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 31 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

38. In defendant's murder case, a witness's statement that "spending time with defendant that night was going to be the worst mistake he ever made" was erroneously admitted because the statement was hearsay, and it contained a dramatic piece of information not communicated in the earlier testimony. Martin v. State, 151 S.W.3d 236, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9437 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

39. In a murder trial, testimony that the witness telephoned and finally contacted the victim on the day of the murder and that the victim simply gave an explanation for a delay (without more) was not hearsay and thus was properly admitted. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

40. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Larceny & Theft : General Overview

41. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

42. In a sufficiency review of the evidence for a theft conviction, hearsay that was admitted without objection was probative of the fact that defendant did not leave merchandise in a dressing room. Thornton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7332 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2005).

43. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

44. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant had run into a store crying, shaking, and screaming that she had just been raped at gunpoint by two men in a van and needed help; the police were called within three to four minutes and arrived approximately five minutes later, when she was still under the influence of the trauma she just experienced and appeared to be in shock. Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

45. In a trial for child sexual assault, the victim's medical records, containing her statement about prior incidents, were properly admitted. The evidence was probative of both the previous relationship between defendant and the victim and of defendant's state of mind; the evidence is not graphically prejudicial, providing no details of the purported prior incident. Perez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11395 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Adults : Elements

46. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule of Tex. R. Evid. 802; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

47. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

48. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The testimony was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

49. In defendant's sexual assault on a child case, a court properly allowed outcry testimony from a psychotherapist who treated the victim because, although the witness's testimony concerning the victim's statement did not specify the manner or means of defendant's offenses, the victim's statement did clearly allege sexual abuse and clearly identified defendant as the abuser. Newton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2477 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 28 2007).

50. In a trial for indecency with a child, it was proper to exclude evidence of conduct by the complainant's mother, such as extramarital affairs and involvement in pornography and drug abuse; the reviewing court noted that much of the testimony probably also constituted objectionable speculation or hearsay, at least from the witnesses through whom defendant sought to introduce it. Jimenez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6538 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

51. Although a trial court erred when it allowed a child's mother to testify that, shortly after a sexual assault was committed against the child, the child told her what happened during the offense, because the State did not qualify the statement as an outcry statement nor did it justify the admission of the statement as an exception to the hearsay rule, the error was waived when the same evidence was introduced at other points in the trial and defendant made no objection. Vargas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4525 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : Elements

52. In an intoxication manslaughter trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, medical records that contained the notes of a substance abuse counselor regarding defendant's 40-year history of drinking six to eight beers a day were properly admitted as business records. Sullivan v. State, 248 S.W.3d 746, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Hit & Run Accidents : Elements

53. In a trial for failing to stop and render assistance, a police report stating that defendant was the driver of the vehicle that struck the victim had probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 802 because it was admitted without objection. Camacho v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4740, 2011 WL 2474489 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 23 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Arrests : Probable Cause

54. In a drug case, a trial court did not err by allowing a detective to testify as to what defendant had stated to another detective during a translation because hearsay testimony relating to the existence of probable cause was admissible if that issue was before the jury. Here, defendant argued lack of probable cause to the jury, focusing on the validity of a stop and arrest based on the detective's testimony; moreover, defendant raised probable cause in his opening statement, and it was the material issue in the case. Reyes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4816, 2009 WL 1801033 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Voluntariness

55. Court affirmed defendant's capital murder conviction because his videotaped confession was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 as it was voluntarily given and testimony concerning the inclusion of defendant's picture in a lineup was not improperly admitted hearsay as it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Delao v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9995 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

56. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

57. Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failure to object to the extraneous offenses mentioned in the presentence report, because defendant's complaints were based on Tex. R. Evid 404(b) (extraneous evidence) and 802 (hearsay), and because the rules of evidence, including the rules pertaining to hearsay, did not apply to the contents of the presentence report. Champion v. State, 126 S.W.3d 686, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 964 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Tests

58. Failure to object under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the witness's testimony did not constitute hearsay. Robinson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9809 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

59. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

60. In a case involving child sexual assault, a statement given by the child's mother would have not been admissible as an outcry statement since the child had already told someone else over 18 about an alleged incident, and a videotaped interview of the victim three years later was also not admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072; however, the failure to object to these hearsay items did not result in ineffective assistance of counsel because there was a reasonable trial strategy relating to the believability of the victim. Hankey v. State, 231 S.W.3d 54, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

61. Counsel was not rendered ineffective by a failure to pick up a file that contained an exculpatory affidavit because the affidavit was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802. Coleman v. State, 188 S.W.3d 708, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8143 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

62. In a sexual assault case, counsel was ineffective where he failed to object to hearsay testimony that did not qualify as outcry evidence and allowed defendant to testify, knowing that doing so would permit the State to introduce evidence of defendant's previous incriminating oral statement. Failing to object to the previous statement in any way, counsel allowed the testimony to come in as evidence of defendant's guilt, rather than as only impeachment evidence to his testimony. Glasgow v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2979 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 20 2005).

63. In the punishment phase of a trial for aggravated robbery, counsel was not rendered ineffective by the failure to object to hearsay testimony by a trial-court clerk. Given that defense counsel used the clerk's testimony, this was not one of those "rare cases" in which counsel's performance could be evaluated absent a record of his strategy. Curtis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8543 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 23 2004).

64. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

65. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

66. In an assault case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay, relevance, undue prejudice, improper opinion, and violations of the confrontation clause because the challenged evidence had come in during other portions of the trial without objection. Hecht v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 521, 2009 WL 200979 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2009).

67. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

68. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : General Overview

69. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Presentence Reports

70. Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failure to object to the extraneous offenses mentioned in the presentence report, because defendant's complaints were based on Tex. R. Evid 404(b) (extraneous evidence) and 802 (hearsay), and because the rules of evidence, including the rules pertaining to hearsay, did not apply to the contents of the presentence report. Champion v. State, 126 S.W.3d 686, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 964 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Restitution

71. Following defendant's conviction for theft in a real estate scheme, defendant failed to object, as hearsay, to a presentence investigation report at sentencing; therefore, the report was a sufficient factual basis to support the trial court's restitution order. Nugent v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8827 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 12 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Motions for New Trial

72. In a trial for assault--family violence, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), 802 from an unredacted video containing a hearsay statement of an alleged prior extraneous offense could be cured by a new trial rather than dismissal. State v. Harbor, 425 S.W.3d 508, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3033 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 19 2012).

73. New trial could not be granted based on the trial court's recollection of an informal postverdict chat with jurors. The court observed without deciding that an attempt to tender a trial judge's affidavit or testimony at a new trial hearing could result in the State raising any number of objections, including hearsay. State v. Krueger, 179 S.W.3d 663, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8899 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

74. New trial could not be granted based on the trial court's recollection of an informal postverdict chat with jurors. The jurors' assertions were not the kinds of "facts" that a court could judicially notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201. State v. Krueger, 179 S.W.3d 663, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8899 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

75. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Registration

76. In a trial for failure to register as a sex offender, a witness's statement to police about where defendant was living could be used substantively because defendant did not object. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3051, 2014 WL 2619087 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 20 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

77. Assuming that allowance of a mother's accusations toward defendant was improper hearsay, such allowance was not reversible error because the same facts were shown by unchallenged testimony of defendant's admissions to the accusations; under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), nonconstitutional error that did not affect substantial rights was disregarded. Tucker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7009, 2009 WL 2767304 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 2 2009).

78. In a drug case, the alleged admission of hearsay evidence from a police department chemist relating to her identification of the State's exhibit containing crack cocaine did not amount to a reversible error because the substance of the testimony came into evidence a number of times without any objection. Rutledge v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2448 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 9 2009).

79. In an assault case, there was no reversible error based on hearsay, relevance, undue prejudice, improper opinion, and violations of the confrontation clause because the challenged evidence had come in during other portions of the trial without objection. Hecht v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 521, 2009 WL 200979 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

80. Defendant did not preserve for review his hearsay argument regarding statements by a seven-year-old complainant in a sexual assault case, which were admitted through the testimony of her mother, a forensic investigator, and a physician, because the only basis on which defendant objected at trial was that complainant was not competent to testify. Hunter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1783 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 9 2006).

81. In a sufficiency review of the evidence for a theft conviction, hearsay that was admitted without objection was probative of the fact that defendant did not leave merchandise in a dressing room. Thornton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7332 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2005).

82. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

83. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by overruling his objection to a portion of a detective's testimony regarding defendant's failure to immediately come to the hospital to attend to the child victim on the ground that it was inadmissible hearsay because defendant did not obtain a ruling from the trial court on his objection to the rephrased question. Even if he had preserved the error, the trial court's admission of the testimony was harmless because the detective offered substantially similar testimony at the beginning of the exchange that was not objected to and the detective's statements merely recounted the particulars of her investigation into the incident and how defendant became a suspect, which was admissible. Samora v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6759, 2010 WL 3279536 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 19 2010).

84. Hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was inadequate under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 where counsel asserted a reiteration of a previous objection but had not previously objected on hearsay grounds, where counsel failed to obtain a ruling, and where the evidence was admitted without objection elsewhere. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

85. In a murder trial, defendant failed to preserve hearsay error with regard to a statement that the complainant made to a witness because defendant permitted the contents of the complainant's statement to come in without objection and therefore failed to comply with Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Gay v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8753 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 1 2007).

86. Defendant's failure to make specific objections waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issues of hearsay in a police officer's testimony concerning an unsafe lane change and the lack of closing arguments; to the extent defendant's general objection to the officer's testimony could be construed as a more general contention that a conviction could not be based on hearsay evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 802 allows consideration of inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection. James v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7608 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 19 2007).

87. In a murder trial, a hearsay objection was waived because defendant failed to identify a specific statement in an exchange that was hearsay or show how it qualified as such. Mims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

88. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

89. Issue of whether the nurse's testimony should have been excluded as hearsay was not preserved for review, because defendant withdrew his objection and never gave the trial court a chance to consider whether the nurse's testimony was hearsay. Arcos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5134, 2011 WL 2652262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 7 2011).

90. Testimony from an officer that he was conducting surveillance on defendant's residence due to complaints about drug activity did not constitute hearsay because it was a general description of possible criminality; no objection was made to testimony relating to specific complaints, so that error was not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lester v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6006 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 6 2008).

91. In a case involving intoxication manslaughter, defendant did not preserve an error relating to a paramedic's testimony for appellate review because no hearsay objection was raised; moreover, a motion to suppress filed before the trial court was based on a violation of Miranda, and this was not the same issue raised on appeal. Wooten v. State, 267 S.W.3d 289, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5497 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

92. Where a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was admitted for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 613, the reviewing court did not address defendant's arguments that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to impeach its own witness and that the error was compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds and did not request a limiting instruction. Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

93. Where a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was admitted for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 613, it was not error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to impeach its own witness and the error was not compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds and did not request a limiting instruction. Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Jury Instructions

94. Where a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was admitted for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 613, the reviewing court did not address defendant's arguments that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to impeach its own witness and that the error was compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds and did not request a limiting instruction. Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

95. Where a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was admitted for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 613, it was not error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to impeach its own witness and the error was not compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds and did not request a limiting instruction. Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

96. Victim's prior inconsistent statement about the assault was hearsay and contained hearsay within hearsay, but defendant's counsel never objected to it on either basis and any objection defendant had to the statement was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1); unobjected-to-hearsay has probative value as substantive evidence, and is considered in reviewing sufficiency challenges pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Rios v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1832 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

97. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting hearsay evidence because most of the challenged testimony was an explanation of how defendant became the suspect. The officer took the jury step-by-step through the investigation to explain how all of the piece of evidence fit together to make defendant the suspect in the murder. Lacaze v. State, 346 S.W.3d 113, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5095 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

98. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14, the State was improperly allowed to present evidence through the outcry witness that her mother had suspected that defendant was molesting the child even before she had made any outcry. However, the error was harmless since it was unlikely that the single recounting of hearsay about a witness' "suspicion," especially when strongly and directly denied by the declarant herself, had more than a slight influence on the verdict. May v. State, 139 S.W.3d 93, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

99. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Cumulative Errors

100. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

101. In a prosecution of defendant for aggravated robbery, any error in the admission of testimony relating to how the police established another person had an alibi was rendered harmless when substantially the same evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection. Benitez v. Tex., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7651 (Tex. App. Dallas July 15 2014).

102. Any error in admitting the officer's hearsay testimony was harmless because evidence of the additional fact that defendant had rented and occupied the house "for several weeks" did not move the jury from a state of non-persuasion to one of persuasion on the issue of knowing possession of marijuana. Guillen v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3739, 2014 WL 1387977 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2014).

103. In the punishment phase of a domestic assault trial, any error was harmless from admitting a recording of conversations between a 911 operator and a hospital employee who was responding to the complainant's injuries because the complainant plainly testified at trial that defendant had hit her with a closed fist in her eye. Sanders v. State, 422 S.W.3d 809, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1090, 2014 WL 325028 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 30 2014).

104. Defendant's conviction for possession of between 4 and 200 grams of cocaine with intent to deliver was appropriate because his failure to continue to object each time the allegedly inadmissible evidence was offered with regard to his W-2, he failed to preserve error. Moreover, even if the officer's testimony was improperly admitted as hearsay evidence, its admission did not harm defendant since the officer later testified without objection that the W-

2 bore the same information connecting defendant to the subject property. Anderson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12822, 2013 WL 5657445 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 16 2013).

105. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

106. Even if the trial court erred by admitting a jail book in sheet as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the error was harmless because no party emphasized the unexplained divergence of dates between the date defendant was arrested and the date he bonded out. Crutchfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1942 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2013).

107. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

108. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 7 2012).

109. Defendant's conviction for possession of a controlled substance, namely cocaine, with intent to deliver in an amount of 4 grams or more but less than 200 grams was proper because the evidence admitted without objection was substantially the same as the officers' statements regarding the confidential informant objected to by defendant and thus, any error in admitting the confidential informant's hearsay statements was harmless, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. Even if defendant had objected each time the alleged inadmissible evidence was offered, any error in admitting the evidence would be nonconstitutional error. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6310, 2012 WL 3104272 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2012).

110. During sentencing in defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court's admission of hearsay statements under Tex. R. Evid. 802 from defendant's friend who said that defendant's daughter had told her that defendant sexually abused her was harmless error, because it was very similar to evidence admitted without objection through the daughter's testimony concerning the repeated instances of sexual abuse by defendant. Prieto v. State, 337 S.W.3d 918, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2606 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 7 2011).

111. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by overruling his objection to a portion of a detective's testimony regarding defendant's failure to immediately come to the hospital to attend to the child victim on the ground that it was inadmissible hearsay because defendant did not obtain a ruling from the trial court on his objection to the rephrased question. Even if he had preserved the error, the trial court's admission of the testimony was harmless because the detective offered substantially similar testimony at the beginning of the exchange that was not objected to and the detective's statements merely recounted the particulars of her investigation into the incident and how defendant became a suspect, which was admissible. Samora v. State, 2010

Tex. App. LEXIS 6759, 2010 WL 3279536 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 19 2010).

112. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

113. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the complainant's statement, "I'm siding with what the emergency people told me" was hearsay. However, the error was harmless because defendant ran over the complainant's ankle, there was substantial evidence to prove that fact independent of the hearsay testimony; the complainant testified that she fell off the moving vehicle, lost consciousness, and awoke in the same area with a crushed ankle. Davidson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

114. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, even if it was error for the court to admit an officer's hearsay testimony regarding the details of the police dispatch, the error was harmless; the same substantive evidence was introduced through another officer's testimony without objection when she testified regarding the type of car defendant was driving and the circumstance surrounding her interview of the robbery complainants. Carson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3091 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

115. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

116. In a murder trial, hearsay was improperly admitted when a detective was permitted to testify that a suspect was eliminated based on the detective's conversation with the suspect's romantic partner, for the sole purpose of proving that the suspect was somewhere other than the victim's home at the time of the killing; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 in light of the other evidence: defendant's DNA, fingerprint, and palm print were on a bloody fire extinguisher and on the coaxial cable with which the killer strangled the victim, and defendant did not dispute that none of the DNA or fingerprint evidence connected the other suspect to the crime scene. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

117. In a murder trial, any hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was harmless when a detective was permitted to testify as to DNA test results as a basis for eliminating other suspects because the expert who performed the DNA analyses later testified that the tests ruled out the other suspects as contributors to the DNA collected at the crime scene, the very same conclusion that was implicit in the detective's testimony. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

118. Although defendant complained that a trial court committed reversible error in allowing a police officer to read his offense report during his testimony, which defendant claimed was hearsay in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 802, the record was unclear as to whether the officer was actually viewing his offense report, and, in any event, any error in admitting the testimony was harmless because the officer later testified without objection that there was an open container on the seat of defendant's vehicle, making the previous testimony cumulative. Goudeau v. State, 209 S.W.3d 713, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9813 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

119. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

120. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

121. Documents seized from the vehicle of defendant's mother pursuant to a search warrant were admissible because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted but to show that defendant had access to the vehicle in which defendant fled the crime scene. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : General Overview

122. In a sufficiency review of the evidence for a theft conviction, hearsay that was admitted without objection was probative of the fact that defendant did not leave merchandise in a dressing room. Thornton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7332 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2005).

Estate, Gift & Trust Law : Trusts : Modification & Termination

123. In a trustee's appeal of the probate court's order that terminated an irrevocable trust and ordered the assets delivered to the trustor, the trustee incorrectly argued that certain testimony in the probate court was inadmissible hearsay evidence that lacked any probative value even though it was admitted without objection; under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied probative value merely because it was hearsay. Uzzell v. Roe, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5239, 2009 WL 1981389 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2009).

Evidence : General Overview

124. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a 12-year-old boy's translation of his deaf aunt's statement to him that she communicated through sign language as hearsay because defendant failed to establish the nephew's competency, proficiency, and reliability as a translator of sign language. Moland v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1062, 2012 WL 403885 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 9 2012).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

125. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

Evidence : Competency : Interpreters

126. If the proponent of an out-of-court translation of an out-of-court statement of a party can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the trial court that the party authorized the interpreter to speak for him on the particular occasion, or otherwise adopted the interpreter as his agent for purposes of translating the particular statement, then the out-of-court interpretation may properly be admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(C) or (D). If the trial court is not so satisfied, it should sustain a hearsay objection to the out-of-court translation, under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Saavedra v. State, 297 S.W.3d 342, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1560 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : General Overview

127. In a case seeking to recover for damage to a wrecked vehicle, an argument that affidavits under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001 were incompetent due to the fact that they did not concern the cost and necessity of service was rejected because a driver failed to object; inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection was not denied probative value merely because it was hearsay. Therefore, the failure to meet the requirements of § 18.001 went to the admissibility of the affidavits, but not their competence. Adams v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 264 S.W.3d 424, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6486 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

128. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

129. Court properly excluded testimony because the proffered testimony centered on what the victim told the witness regarding a boy wanting to have sexual intercourse with her, and that constituted hearsay. Vega v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7948 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 24 2014).

130. In an eviction action, the apartment manager's testimony that the police department received a disturbance call was inadmissible hearsay; its admission was harmless because she had already testified, without objection, that law enforcement had been called to respond to the disturbance. This unobjected-to hearsay was probative evidence upon which the trial court was permitted to rely. Black v. Countryside Vill. Apts., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14853, 2013 WL 6506303 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2013).

131. Defendant's conviction for possession of between 4 and 200 grams of cocaine with intent to deliver was appropriate because his failure to continue to object each time the allegedly inadmissible evidence was offered with regard to his W-2, he failed to preserve error. Moreover, even if the officer's testimony was improperly admitted as hearsay evidence, its admission did not harm defendant since the officer later testified without objection that the W-2 bore the same information connecting defendant to the subject property. Anderson v. State, 2013 Tex. App.

132. Trial court did not err by granting the ex-husband's motion to modify the parent-child relationship, because there was a material change in circumstances since the parties had been named joint managing conservators; the husband testified the police were called to the ex-wife's home, she voluntarily relinquished child custody to him, and they had been living with him. In reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, the appellate court was permitted to consider hearsay admitted without objection. In the Interest of B.A.E., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10002, 2013 WL 4041551 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 9 2013).

133. Numerous appellate courts have expressly determined that hearsay is a defect of form, and thus waived if no objection is made in the trial court; while this analysis is ordinarily applied to hearsay statements made in affidavits, there is no reason to treat hearsay statements in depositions any differently. Vega v. Autozone West, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6833 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 5 2013).

134. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02, 29.03 because a rational jury could believe a witness's hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 802, admitted without objection, that defendant had implicated himself in the robbery and, accordingly, in light of the other evidence, could conclude that defendant committed the robbery. Betancourt v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 874 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 31 2013).

135. In a case where a father sought modification of a parent-child relationship, assuming that testimony from the mother amounted to inadmissible hearsay evidence, the appellate court was unable to say that it probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. In re R.A.M., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 606, 2013 WL 257367 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

136. Defendant's conviction for possession of a controlled substance, namely cocaine, with intent to deliver in an amount of 4 grams or more but less than 200 grams was proper because the evidence admitted without objection was substantially the same as the officers' statements regarding the confidential informant objected to by defendant and thus, any error in admitting the confidential informant's hearsay statements was harmless, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. Even if defendant had objected each time the alleged inadmissible evidence was offered, any error in admitting the evidence would be nonconstitutional error. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6310, 2012 WL 3104272 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2012).

137. Evidence was legally sufficient to support the finding that the employee operated the vehicle at the time of the accident, because the claimant testified that the employee was the operator of the vehicle that collided with the car she and her father were traveling in, and appellants never objected to the claimant's identification of the employee as the operator of the vehicle on hearsay grounds or any other grounds. Wilson v. Martinez, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5690, 2011 WL 3063354 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2011).

138. Even if the trial court erred by admitting therapy notes and records on the ground that they contained hearsay statements, the error was harmless because much of the evidence contained in the therapy notes was cumulative of the testimony already given by the father, the therapist, and an investigator for the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services, and even without the therapy notes, ample evidence existed to support the trial court's best-interest finding under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(2). The record showed that: (1) the therapist testified that all four children feared their mother; (2) the children did not want to return to their mother; (3) the children were doing well in their placements; and (4) evidence of the mother's past conduct supported the inference that she would be unable to meet her children's physical and emotional needs or provide a stable home environment were the children returned to her care. Rader v. Tex. Dep't of Family, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4594, 2011 WL 2437679

(Tex. App. Austin June 15 2011).

139. During sentencing in defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court's admission of hearsay statements under Tex. R. Evid. 802 from defendant's friend who said that defendant's daughter had told her that defendant sexually abused her was harmless error, because it was very similar to evidence admitted without objection through the daughter's testimony concerning the repeated instances of sexual abuse by defendant. Prieto v. State, 337 S.W.3d 918, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2606 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 7 2011).

140. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the boyfriend of one of the victims (subsequently her husband), because at the time the boyfriend testified the victim had already testified in detail as to defendant's alleged conduct and the role of the victim's mother, the boyfriend did not mention any individual in connection with the molestation, and the record did not establish the inescapable conclusion that the State's sole purpose in eliciting the boyfriend's testimony was to prove that the victim had told him that she had been molested by defendant. De La Garza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1617, 2011 WL 768872 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 7 2011).

141. During grandparents' trial for the murder of one granddaughter and serious bodily injury to another granddaughter, defense counsel did not render ineffective assistance when certain hearsay statements were admitted without objection; all of the unobjected-to testimony was cumulative of other testimony given at trial. Ramirez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7169 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2010).

142. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

143. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

144. When defendant and a man were in the camper when the officers served the warrant, methamphetamine, manufacturing precursors, and drug manufacturing paraphernalia were in plain sight; in determining whether defendant possessed the contraband, Tex. R. Evid. 802 permitted the jury to consider the officer's hearsay statement that a confidential informant had spoken with defendant about manufacturing methamphetamine in the camper trailer. The evidence was sufficient evidence for the jury to determine that defendant had custody, control, or management over the contraband for purposes of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 1.07(39); the evidence was sufficient to support her conviction for possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine in an amount less than one gram, in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.115. Judd v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS

145. In a child custody case, a father was unable to argue on appeal that allowing the testimony and a report from an amicus attorney violated Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 107.007(a) and amounted to hearsay because he did not object at trial. Conn v. Rhodes, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6587, 2009 WL 2579577 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

146. In a trustee's appeal of the probate court's order that terminated an irrevocable trust and ordered the assets delivered to the trustor, the trustee incorrectly argued that certain testimony in the probate court was inadmissible hearsay evidence that lacked any probative value even though it was admitted without objection; under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied probative value merely because it was hearsay. Uzzell v. Roe, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5239, 2009 WL 1981389 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2009).

147. In a drug case, a trial court did not err by allowing a detective to testify as to what defendant had stated to another detective during a translation because hearsay testimony relating to the existence of probable cause was admissible if that issue was before the jury. Here, defendant argued lack of probable cause to the jury, focusing on the validity of a stop and arrest based on the detective's testimony; moreover, defendant raised probable cause in his opening statement, and it was the material issue in the case. Reyes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4816, 2009 WL 1801033 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2009).

148. In a drug case, the alleged admission of hearsay evidence from a police department chemist relating to her identification of the State's exhibit containing crack cocaine did not amount to a reversible error because the substance of the testimony came into evidence a number of times without any objection. Rutledge v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2448 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 9 2009).

149. On review of the sufficiency of the evidence supporting defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child, the appellate court was permitted to consider hearsay testimony from a pediatrician who testified as to the complainant's statements of abuse. The testimony was admitted without objection and had probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Moncada v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1697, 2009 WL 563990 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 3 2009).

150. Defendant's conviction for the misdemeanor offense of assault on a family member was proper because, when a deputy responded to the victim's 911 call, he found the victim upset, crying, and in pain, with a large gash on his face; the victim, his mother, and his brother additionally all similarly described defendant's assault of the victim. And, unobjected-to hearsay statements, such as statements made to the deputy at the scene of the altercation, were not denied probative value merely because they were hearsay. Carter v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9399 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

151. Trial court did not err in excluding videotaped forensic interviews of the two children as hearsay, although the children could not answer some of defendant's counsel's questions, because the videotapes contained admissible statements along with clearly inadmissible statements, and defendant failed to segregate or identify the potentially admissible statements. The trial judge was not required to sort through the evidence to determine which statements were admissible. Hoang v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8771 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 24 2008).

152. In a case seeking to recover for damage to a wrecked vehicle, an argument that affidavits under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001 were incompetent due to the fact that they did not concern the cost and necessity of service was rejected because a driver failed to object; inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection was not denied probative value merely because it was hearsay. Therefore, the failure to meet the requirements of § 18.001 went to the admissibility of the affidavits, but not their competence. Adams v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins.

153. In an open meetings dispute, a former employee was unable to challenge affidavits offered in support of an attorney's fee award based on hearsay because he never filed a controverting affidavit. Moreover, the affidavits were timely provided to the employee where they were given to him more than 30 days before the evidence was presented in the trial court. Rogers v. City of McAllen, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6381 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 21, 2008).

154. Because defendant oil and gas well operator failed to object to hearsay testimony at trial regarding plaintiff mineral interest owners' claim of underpayment of royalties, under Tex. R. Evid. 802, even if the evidence was hearsay, the appellate court could consider it in an evidentiary sufficiency review. Moore v. Jet Stream Invs., Ltd., 261 S.W.3d 412, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 661 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

155. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the complainant's statement, "I'm siding with what the emergency people told me" was hearsay. However, the error was harmless because defendant ran over the complainant's ankle, there was substantial evidence to prove that fact independent of the hearsay testimony; the complainant testified that she fell off the moving vehicle, lost consciousness, and awoke in the same area with a crushed ankle. Davidson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

156. In a case involving intoxication manslaughter, defendant did not preserve an error relating to a paramedic's testimony for appellate review because no hearsay objection was raised; moreover, a motion to suppress filed before the trial court was based on a violation of Miranda, and this was not the same issue raised on appeal. Wooten v. State, 267 S.W.3d 289, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5497 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

157. Evidence was factually sufficient to support a conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.04 for driving while intoxicated; although defendant presented witnesses who testified that she was not the driver, the evidence was conflicting, and a police officer's hearsay testimony was properly considered under Tex. R. Evid. 802 because defendant did not object. Richardson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 344 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2008).

158. Father's failure to object to videotaped statements of his children's deceased mother in child custody proceedings caused a waiver of any subsequent hearsay objection; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied its probative value merely because it was hearsay. In re N.B.B., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8639 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 31 2007).

159. Father's failure to object to statements of a social worker in child custody proceedings caused a waiver of any subsequent hearsay objection; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied its probative value merely because it was hearsay. In re N.B.B., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8639 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 31 2007).

160. In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the State introduced evidence of the father's anti-social behavior in the form of criminal convictions and the revocation of community supervision; on review of the order terminating the father's parental rights, Tex. R. Evid. 802 did not require the court of appeals of disregard records which contained hearsay admitted without objection. In re S.K.A., 236 S.W.3d 875, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8202 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

161. Defendant's failure to make specific objections waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issues of hearsay in a police officer's testimony concerning an unsafe lane change and the lack of closing arguments; to the extent defendant's general objection to the officer's testimony could be construed as a more general contention that a conviction could not be based on hearsay evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 802 allows consideration of inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection. James v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7608 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 19 2007).

162. In a murder trial, a hearsay objection was waived because defendant failed to identify a specific statement in an exchange that was hearsay or show how it qualified as such. Mims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

163. Although a creditor had not properly pleaded a claim upon which a suit on a sworn account could be based in a case against a debtor involving credit extensions to fund the purchase of goods or services at the point of purchase and for cash advances, the trial court erred in not granting a default judgment on liability because the creditor's allegations against the debtor were sufficient to allege a traditional suit for breach of contract; although the damages were not liquidated, the creditor submitted damages evidence in the form of a request for admissions that were deemed admitted and an affidavit of its attorney, which provided sufficient evidence to prove the creditor's damages because the trial court would have been able to ascertain the amount of damages from that evidence. Sherman Acquisition II LP v. Garcia, 229 S.W.3d 802, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4793 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

164. In a dispute between a hospital and a health maintenance organization regarding Medicaid coverage for a patient, the hospital waived a hearsay objection because it failed to obtain a ruling. Methodist Hosps. of Dallas v. Amerigroup Tex., Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3488 (Tex. App. Dallas May 7 2007).

165. With respect to an affidavit admitted at a trial involving a property boundary dispute, where appellants failed to present a hearsay objection at trial, the issue was waived on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Moreover, under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible evidence admitted without objection is not denied probative value merely because it is hearsay. Neal v. Machaud, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10602 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 13 2006).

166. Court affirmed defendant's capital murder conviction because his videotaped confession was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 as it was voluntarily given and testimony concerning the inclusion of defendant's picture in a lineup was not improperly admitted hearsay as it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Delao v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9995 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

167. Because the ex-husband did not object to the ex-wife's trial inventory, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, the trial court could rely on the values of the property as contained in that inventory; in addition, the trial court could have relied on the testimony of the ex-wife that the fair market value of the residence was a little less than the tax-appraised value. McKamie v. McKamie, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8726 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 5 2006).

168. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

169. In a criminal trial for sexual assault, the court did not err by excluding hearsay statements of a physician admitted through a police officer who spoke to the physican after he attended to the rape victim; the testimony was hearsay not within an exception. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

170. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

171. Nothing in Tex. R. Evid. 802 limits its application to contested hearings. The rule is not ambiguous and requires no explication. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

172. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statements into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

173. In a criminal trial, defendant's testimony about the victim's statement that she was going to injure herself to support the assault charge and then hit herself in the face was not hearsay because it was offered to describe one person's observations about how another person acted. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

174. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting hearsay evidence because most of the challenged testimony was an explanation of how defendant became the suspect. The officer took the jury step-by-step through the investigation to explain how all of the piece of evidence fit together to make defendant the suspect in the murder. Lacaze v. State, 346 S.W.3d 113, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5095 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

175. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(1)(B)(i), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that only the victim's statement to the forensic interviewer, and not to the victim's mother, described the alleged offense, and thus the trial court properly allowed the interviewer to testify as the outcry witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2 and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802. Olivas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 18 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 2 2008).

176. In defendant's burglary case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify that, as she could not come to a conclusion on the latent fingerprint, she asked other examiners to examine the print, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony, when taken in context, did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of the other examiner's conclusions about the print and was therefore, not hearsay; the only information imparted by the testimony was that others had examined the print and had reached a conclusion, and that their conclusions were the same. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

177. During defendant's criminal trial for two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the investigating detective was permitted to testify as to hearsay evidence relating the child's grandmother's concern that another illicit sexual contact had occurred; the testimony was admissible as "the whole on the same subject" inquired into by the State and thus allowed by Tex. R. Evid. 107. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9509 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 2 2006).

178. Defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI and Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 solely because his attorney failed to object to certain testimony that was allegedly intended to elicit a hearsay statement, Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 801, 802, was without merit where the record was silent regarding counsel's trial strategy for not objecting immediately to the testimony and the court could not say that no reasonable counsel would not have objected to the testimony. As the record reflected that counsel filed pretrial motions, vigorously cross-examined witnesses, and objected to the admission of other evidence, defendant failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that, but for his counsel's failure to object to the particular testimony, a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have resulted. Payne v. State, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 2198 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 15 1998).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

179. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

180. In a creditor's suit to recover unpaid debt on a credit card account, the trial court erroneously excluded the billing statements and notices informing the debtor of changes in his credit card agreement where the creditor properly established the applicability of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6)'s business records hearsay exception because an employee of the company that provided administrative services for the creditor's credit card accounts testified that: (1) she had worked for the company for nearly seven years; (2) the company provided support for the creditor's credit card accounts; (3) her job responsibilities gave her the right to access the kind of information included in the monthly billing statements for the debtor's account; (4) she was the custodian of those records; (5) the statements in the debtor's billing statements were made at or near the time of the information recorded therein by a person with knowledge; and (6) the debtor's billing statements and other billing statements like it were made and kept in the regular course of the company's business. Moreover, the billing records could qualify for the business records hearsay exception even if they were business records of a third party to the lawsuit because the employee testified that the records were kept in the course of the company's business, that the company issued billing statements and provided collections and litigation support, and that she had no indication of any lack of trustworthiness in the way the documents were handled, generated, or kept. Citibank (s.D.), N.A. v. Tate, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9959 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 16 2010).

181. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant's proffer of evidence about the victim's written medical report included no affidavit or live testimonial sponsorship from a records custodian; therefore, the medical records were hearsay, and the trial court properly excluded their admission. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

182. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

183. Even if the trial court erred by admitting a jail book in sheet as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the error was harmless because no party emphasized the unexplained divergence of dates between the date defendant was arrested and the date he bonded out. Crutchfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1942 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

184. In an intoxication manslaughter trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, medical records that contained the notes of a substance abuse counselor regarding defendant's 40-year history of drinking six to eight beers a day were properly admitted as business records. Sullivan v. State, 248 S.W.3d 746, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Former Testimony of Unavailable Declarants

185. At defendant's trial for murder, the trial court did not err by admitting the prior testimony from an accomplice witness that constituted hearsay under Tex. R Evid. 802; he was unavailable under the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 804 because he invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Lockridge v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6147 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2013).

186. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Market Reports & Commercial Publications : General Overview

187. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

188. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

189. Defendant failed to show that the court erred in admitting the statements made to the nurse for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, because the qualifications of the person hearing the statements was not the important consideration, and the fact that the nurse could have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the conclusion that the statements were inadmissible. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13160, 2013 WL 5773573 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 23 2013).

190. In defendant's sexual abuse case, the victim's hearsay statements to a doctor were properly admitted because the doctor testified that she had specialized training in treating conditions related to sexual abuse, and that she always asked her patients for a thorough medical history prior to making any diagnosis. The doctor found that the victim had a "notch" on her hymen, which was a "suspicious" finding consistent with what the victim had told her about the abuse she suffered. Whitman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 936, 2012 WL 361740 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

191. Defendant failed to carry his burden of establishing that a hearsay exception applied to make the clinical social worker's testimony admissible into evidence, because defendant did not establish that truth-telling was a vital component of the social worker's treatment of the niece or that the niece was aware that being truthful was essential to her therapy. Harrington v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2138, 2010 WL 1137046 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 25 2010).

192. There was no err in allowing the jury to hear the testimony of the pediatric nurse who examined one of the child complainants, because defendant had not demonstrated that the trial court's implied ruling, that the nurse's examination was for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment, was so clearly wrong as to lie outside the zone within which reasonable people might disagree; the nurse testified that she performed a medical examination on the complainant, the nurse explained that her standard examination consisted of a head-to-toe physical, with special attention on the genital and anal area and testing for sexually transmitted diseases, and the nurse testified that if she found any injury, then she would prescribe a course of treatment. Lucero v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9908 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 31, 2009).

193. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The testimony was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

194. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant's proffer of evidence about the victim's written medical report included no affidavit or live testimonial sponsorship from a records custodian; therefore, the medical records were hearsay, and the trial court properly excluded their admission. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : General Overview

195. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 7 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : Contemporaneous Statements

196. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Criminal Trials

197. Prior written statement of a witness with memory loss was properly admitted as recorded recollection under Tex. R. Evid. Rule 803(5) because the witness sufficiently vouched for the accuracy of the statement through unobjected-to hearsay testimony that the witness told an officer that the statement was true at the time she wrote it. Under Tex. R. Evid. 802, hearsay not objected to had probative value. In re J.W., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9830, 2009 WL 5155784 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 30 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : General Overview

198. In defendant's murder case, the court properly admitted the deaf victim's written statements under the excited utterance exception because the statements related to a startling event: she wrote that she was raped, hit, and threatened with a knife that evening, the deputy testified that the statements were made while the victim was scared and angry, and thus, it was reasonable for the trial court to infer that the victim was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9779 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

199. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer testimony regarding the victim's statements because, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, an shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident when she spoke to the officer. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9054, 2009 WL 4051980 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 24 2009).

200. In a failure to stop case, the court properly excluded testimony that defendant's husband told her that he had been involved in an accident because the traffic accident was not such a startling event that the husband was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event or condition when the statement was made; the accident was not of a serious nature, the vehicle was still operable, the injuries were relatively minor, and the statements were made in response to a question and were untrue since the driver of the other car had not left the scene. Martinez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 927 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 8 2007).

201. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

202. Court properly admitted a child's statements as excited utterances where the police officer testified that the child had appeared to be upset not only when he entered the room, but for some time afterward, as she continued to express fear and distress regarding the disappearance and, she believed, death of her mother. Lagunas v. State, 187 S.W.3d 503, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6957 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Criminal Trials

203. Police officer's testimony regarding the complainant's statements made shortly after the alleged assault occurred was properly admitted because the following circumstances supported application of the excited utterance hearsay exception: (1) the officer testified he arrived on the scene within six minutes of the 911 call; (2) the trial court reasonably could have concluded that no significant amount of time elapsed between the officer's arrival and his conversation with the complainant; (3) the officer described the complainant as being visibly shocked, dazed, and very upset and sad; and (4) the officer also observed that the complainant was bleeding from lacerations on his arm. Salinas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14761, 2013 WL 6328863 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 5 2013).

204. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

205. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802, in admitting, as excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), testimony from a deceased witness's wife about his statements. It could not reasonably be disputed that the decedent's statement shortly after the murder related to a startling event, and the wife testified that the decedent was completely out of it, rambling, and really nervous and scared. Wells v. State, 319 S.W.3d 82, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2595 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 14 2010).

206. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

207. In a domestic assault case, the court properly admitted the victim's statement as an excited utterance because the victim's answer to a standard form provided by the officer said she would feel danger after the officer left. Based on those facts, which indicated that the victim might still then have been dominated by emotions when making her statements, the trial judge's discretionary decision was not so clearly wrong as to lie outside that zone within which reasonable persons might disagree. James v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8494, 2009 WL 3643554 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 5 2009).

208. Court properly allowed a police officer to testify because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect in the case and the status of the investigation; therefore, the officer's testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Moreover, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, and shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

209. In a murder trial, there was no hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 802 in admitting the victim's statement to a friend that the defendant was chasing the victim because the statement was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the testimony showed that the victim was still dominated by the emotions of being chased and bumped by defendant when the victim arrived at the friend's home at 4 a.m., acting scared, weird, and paranoid. Mims v. State, 238 S.W.3d 867, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8534 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

210. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, there was no error in admitting the statement of a 911 caller whom officers called back because the statement was properly found to be an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; at the time of the statement, defendant had not been apprehended, and an officer testified that the caller sounded upset. Jarrell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6357 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

211. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 802, in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to the police as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the officer stated that the complainant was very excited, very nervous, almost to the point where the complainant's nervousness made the officer nervous; further, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the sexual assault occurred within the past few hours, supporting the admission. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

212. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to a relative as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although the relative described the complainant's demeanor as absolutely flat and without emotion, the relative further explained that the complainant was beyond upset, just absolutely flat and in shock about what had just happened. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

213. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

214. In a murder trial, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the trial court admitted, as an excited utterance, evidence of a statement by the victim to his mother that defendant had just threatened to kill him. The statement was not testimonial. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

215. In defendant's robbery case, a court properly admitted the complainant's hearsay testimony as an excited utterance where a neighbor testified that when the complainant came to his apartment, she was crying and still partially bound by the wire used by her attacker, and seemed "pretty upset." Considering the complainant's shaken and excited demeanor when she spoke with the neighbor, reasonable people could conclude that the complainant was dominated by the emotions of the event when speaking with him although 30 minutes had passed since the crime. Campos v. State, 186 S.W.3d 93, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9814 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

217. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

218. Outcry statement by a child sexual assault victim did not quality as an excited utterance because the statement was made almost two years after the first assault. The court rejected the argument that the "startling event" was a revelation made to the victim just prior to the outcry by her father's girlfriend because the testimony indicated that the victim considered how and what to reveal about the assault several months before she made her outcry to her father's girlfriend. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 25 2005).

219. In a trial for unlawfully carrying a handgun, the trial court properly admitted an officer's testimony about a witness's statement that defendant approached the car she was occupying, demanded that it be moved, and partially removed a gun from his pocket. The statement was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though the record did not reflect how much time passed after the confrontation, because the officer testified that the witness was very upset and was crying. Spielman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3854 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 19 2005).

220. In an assault trial, the victim's statement to police, which she made when they responded to a 911 call from a third person, was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The victim was extremely agitated when officers arrived at the scene and was so upset that officers initially could not understand her. Bufkin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

221. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant had run into a store crying, shaking, and screaming that she had just been raped at gunpoint by two men in a van and needed help; the police were called within three to four minutes and arrived approximately five minutes later, when she was still under the influence of the trauma she just experienced and appeared to be in shock. Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

222. Each case that involves a period of unconsciousness between the time of a startling event and a statement must be reviewed in light of the facts and circumstances of the case to determine whether the statement is admissible as an excited utterance. The declarant need not necessarily have been unconscious for the entire period between the startling event and the statement, so long as the record supports the reasonable conclusion that the declarant did not have a meaningful opportunity to reflect. Apolinar v. State, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

223. In a trial for aggravated robbery, a statement made by the victim four days after the attack was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the victim was unconscious for part of the four days and, based on the circumstances, it was reasonable to conclude that he had no meaningful opportunity to reflect. The record supported findings that between the stabbing and his surgery, the victim was still in shock, that he was then unconscious until the time that he made the statement, and that at the time of the statement he was animated, angry, and excited. Apolinar v. State, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

224. Excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule justified the admission of testimony that the declarant, a murder victim, had told the witness that he was afraid of the defendant; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the victim was under the influence of a startling event. Headley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : General Overview

225. In an aggravated assault case, defendant should have been allowed to testify that the victim threatened to file a "false" assault charge against her because the statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; instead, it was offered to show that the victim had an intent to lie. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

226. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

227. In a murder case, because the victim's statement that defendant "gave her the creeps" was permissible hearsay, and went to the nature of the relationship between the victim and defendant, the court did not err in admitting the statement. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

228. In defendant's trial for robbery and kidnapping, testimony about defendant's accomplice's statement was not hearsay because the testimony was elicited to show what effect the statement had on the victim's state of mind. Edwards v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 10 2008).

229. In the trial of an officer for lying in a warrant affidavit about the reliability of an informant, the trial court properly allowed testimony that the alleged informant was reluctant to deal with the subject of the warrant, while prohibiting more specific testimony that the informant was afraid because of the informant's belief that the subject had killed a man. The latter statement was properly excluded as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802 and did not fall within the exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it was a statement of memory or belief offered to prove that the subject had killed a man. Delapaz v. State, 228 S.W.3d 183, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2377 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Later Acts

230. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court erred by sustaining the hearsay objection to the victim's statement that "she was gonna call the law" because it evinced a state of mind concerning her future conduct and was admissible. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

231. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

232. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

233. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

234. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

235. Court properly admitted evidence as a statement against interest because defendant's question to the witness -- "how she would feel towards him if the police said that he had killed the two ladies" -- was self-inculpatory, and the circumstances of the relationship between defendant and the witness tended to corroborate the trustworthiness of the statement. Juarez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 77, 2009 WL 41648 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2009).

236. Accomplice's statement was properly admitted because the reliability of the statements to the officer was established through confirmation that the accomplice's backpack was in the trunk of defendant's car and that another participant was nearby in a stolen truck similar to the one the accomplice was driving. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9455 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 17 2008).

237. In a drug case, a court did not err by excluding an audiotape statement of a witness purportedly showing that he confessed to having exclusive possession of the cocaine because the witness's guilt was not inconsistent with defendant's because possession was not mutually exclusive, and the statement was given after being arrested and in the context of interrogation, at a time when motivation to curry favor with law enforcement existed. Minor v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5470 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 14 2005).

238. In a murder trial, testimony was properly admitted by two witnesses regarding hearsay statements by friends of defendant concerning their plans to commit a robbery with him. The hearsay statements were against penal interest, even if they would not, at the time they were made, have subjected the declarants to liability for capital murder, because the declarants could have been liable for criminal conspiracy. Lafitte v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10247 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 18 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1790 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10, 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

239. In a case in which defendant was convicted of indecency with a child, among other offenses, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the outcry statements that the victim made to her foster mother after determining that the outcries were reliable because although the victim did not testify about the outcries, she did testify that defendant had touched her on her private part and therefore confirmed, in part, her statements in the outcries, and the foster mother's testimony and written reports indicated that the victim had made the outcries spontaneously and in her own terminology. Moreover, the trial court could have reasonably determined that a child of the victim's age would not have normally imagined things such as a parent's touching her private area or naked people kissing and touching each other, and the record did not disclose a motive that the victim would have had to fabricate the outcries. Woodruff v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6132, 2012 WL 3041114 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2012).

240. Issue of whether the nurse's testimony should have been excluded as hearsay was not preserved for review, because defendant withdrew his objection and never gave the trial court a chance to consider whether the nurse's testimony was hearsay. Arcos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5134, 2011 WL 2652262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 7 2011).

241. Mother was the proper outcry witness, because the victim described the offense in a discernible manner to the mother before he talked with the sexual assault nurse examiner for the hospital, when the victim clearly communicated to his mother that defendant penetrated the anus of the victim; while the mother testified that the term "ding-a-ling" was not a term that she used and she did not know how the victim was familiar with that term, her actions immediately following the allegation indicated that she understood the victim was alleging a specific incident of sexual abuse. Alexander v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9753, 2010 WL 4983437 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 9 2010).

242. Court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the investigator to testify as a second outcry witness, because the investigator's statement could be classified as an outcry witness statement and was admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, § 2(a), since the complainant's outcry regarding the additional instances of sexual abuse did not occur until the investigator's interview. Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3491, 2010 WL 1854150 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 6 2010).

243. In defendant's sexual assault case, it was error to have permitted a witness to testify concerning the child's statements because the State failed to offer proof that the witness was the proper outcry witness whose testimony was an exception to the hearsay rule. It was error to fail to conduct the hearing once the hearsay objection was raised. Rawls v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8054, 2009 WL 3321006 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2009).

244. In a case involving child sexual assault, a statement given by the child's mother would have not been admissible as an outcry statement since the child had already told someone else over 18 about an alleged incident, and a videotaped interview of the victim three years later was also not admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072; however, the failure to object to these hearsay items did not result in ineffective assistance of counsel because there was a reasonable trial strategy relating to the believability of the victim. Hankey v. State, 231 S.W.3d 54, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

245. Defendant maintained that the trial court erred in admitting, during defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault on a child, a videotape of the complainant's interview with a police officer; defendant argued that the videotape contained the complainant's outcry statement, which had to be relayed through testimony of a live witness; nevertheless, during a hearing, defendant did not mention the videotape, and he did not object at trial. Scott v. State, 222 S.W.3d 820, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

246. In defendant's sexual assault on a child case, a court properly allowed outcry testimony from a psychotherapist who treated the victim because, although the witness's testimony concerning the victim's statement did not specify the manner or means of defendant's offenses, the victim's statement did clearly allege sexual abuse and clearly identified defendant as the abuser. Newton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2477 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 28 2007).

247. In a trial for child sexual assault, there was no error in admitting a statement about the offense that the complainant made to a friend's parent; although the statement was not outcry, it was also not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802 because it was offered to show the circumstances under which the friend's parent called the police, not the truth of the matter asserted. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 25 2007).

248. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

249. Hearsay statement by a child-sexual-assault complainant to a forensic interviewer was properly admitted as outcry under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, even though the complainant told other witnesses that defendant had taken off her clothes and climbed on top of her, because it was her statement to the forensic interviewer that described the penetration. Garza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8308 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 21 2006).

250. Defendant did not preserve for review his hearsay argument regarding statements by a seven-year-old complainant in a sexual assault case, which were admitted through the testimony of her mother, a forensic investigator, and a physician, because the only basis on which defendant objected at trial was that complainant was not competent to testify. Hunter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1783 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 9 2006).

251. Outcry statement by a child sexual assault victim did not quality as an excited utterance because the statement was made almost two years after the first assault. The court rejected the argument that the "startling event" was a revelation made to the victim just prior to the outcry by her father's girlfriend because the testimony indicated that the victim considered how and what to reveal about the assault several months before she made her outcry to her father's girlfriend. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 25 2005).

252. At a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a second outcry witness was not admissible as a prior consistent statement of the victim because the State did not confine its presentation of the testimony to consistent reports of the incident. The State presented the testimony to prove the truth of the matter asserted by the victim, that she was exposed to defendant's penis, and to present details not included in other testimony. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1834 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

253. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his minor daughters, outcry testimony was properly admitted from two witnesses because the testimony contained information regarding specific instances of sexual contact and did not entirely overlap. Testimony from a third witness, an investigator, should not have been admitted because the statements were not specific; however, counsel's failure to object did not render his assistance ineffective. Everett v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 795 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 2 2005).

254. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of 14, the State was improperly allowed to present evidence through the outcry witness that her mother had suspected that defendant was molesting the child even before she had made any outcry. However, the error was harmless since it was unlikely that the single recounting of hearsay about a witness' "suspicion," especially when strongly and directly denied by the declarant herself, had more than a slight influence on the verdict. May v. State, 139 S.W.3d 93, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

255. At the time the prosecutor proffered the out-of-court statement, defendant objected only that the statutory predicate had not been fully satisfied in that the requisite showing of reliability was deficient; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, absent such showing, the statute could not operate to take the statement out of the pale of the general rule excluding hearsay. In short, defendant lodged a hearsay objection, not an objection to a violation of confrontation; the two were neither synonymous nor necessarily coextensive, and having ruled that the statutory predicate had been met, and that the hearsay objection was therefore not well taken, the trial court had no notice of any other ground for exclusion. Holland v. State, 802 S.W.2d 696, 1991 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 14 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : General Overview

256. Testimony from an officer that he was conducting surveillance on defendant's residence due to complaints about drug activity did not constitute hearsay because it was a general description of possible criminality; no objection was made to testimony relating to specific complaints, so that error was not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lester v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6006 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 6 2008).

257. In defendant's burglary case, the court properly allowed an officer to testify that, as she could not come to a conclusion on the latent fingerprint, she asked other examiners to examine the print, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony, when taken in context, did not lead to any inescapable conclusions as to the substance of the other examiner's conclusions about the print and was therefore, not hearsay; the only information imparted by the testimony was that others had examined the print and had reached a conclusion, and that their conclusions were the same. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : General Overview

258. At a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a second outcry witness was not admissible as a prior consistent statement of the victim because the State did not confine its presentation of the testimony to consistent reports of the incident. The State presented the testimony to prove the truth of the matter asserted by the victim, that she was exposed to defendant's penis, and to present details not included in other testimony. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1834 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

259. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Identifications

260. In a murder trial, no hearsay error occurred under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802 when a detective testified to a witness's out-of-court identification, which was translated from Cambodian by the complainant's offspring. Because the witness testified at trial, the out-of-court identification was not hearsay in itself, and the interpreter served as a mere language conduit for the witness. Driver v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 778, 2009 WL 276539 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 5 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

261. In a trial for child sexual assault in which the complainant's age at the time of the sexual incidents was at issue, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 802 to admit the complainant's prior consistent statements about the time of the incidents; defendant was entitled to cross-examine the complainant as to who told her what dates to allege because the complainant herself blamed her lawyer for inconsistencies in her deposition testimony; cross-examination that tested the memory of a witness did not rise to the level of a charge of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. Hammons v. State, 221 S.W.3d 720, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 663 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), rev'd on other grounds, 239 S.W.3d 798, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1632 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007, no pet).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Statements During Conspiracy

262. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Statements Furthering Conspiracy

263. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the court properly admitted a co-conspirator's statement because the officer's testimony about the statement "waste him, dog, waste him" and "shoot him, and get out of here," was not hearsay; the officer was attempting to arrest or detain the suspect while defendant was in a nearby car. The statement was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but rather to provide the jury the context in which defendant was eventually arrested. Clifton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6533, 2009 WL 2567946 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 20 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

264. In defendant's murder trial, there was no error in the admission of testimony by a witness about statements defendant made in a telephone call because they were within the hearsay exemption for statements of a party-opponent. Van Exel v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8464 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 4 2014).

265. Testimony did not constitute hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802(2)(e) and thus the trial court did not err in overruling the objection. Lowery v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1230, 2010 WL 610915 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 23 2010).

266. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's testimony regarding her examination under oath conducted to settle a civil claim for insurance proceeds in her criminal trial for arson, because the statements under oath were admissions by defendant; since defendant's examination under oath was not hearsay when offered against her, no hearsay exception was needed to admit the statements. Montgomery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7223, 2009 WL 2933749 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 15 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Authorized Statements

267. Hearsay objection was irrelevant, because the witness's recorded testimony from the prior suit, the judgment from which the claimant sought to enforce in the instant action, was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(D) as the admission of a party-opponent. Tryco Enters. v. Robinson, 390 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7810, 2012 WL 4021126 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 13 2012).

268. If the proponent of an out-of-court translation of an out-of-court statement of a party can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the trial court that the party authorized the interpreter to speak for him on the particular occasion, or otherwise adopted the interpreter as his agent for purposes of translating the particular statement, then the out-of-court interpretation may properly be admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(C) or (D). If the trial court is not so satisfied, it should sustain a hearsay objection to the out-of-court translation, under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Saavedra v. State, 297 S.W.3d 342, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1560 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

269. Court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objections to statements admitted at trial because the interpreter-victim was apparently able to translate accurately because the fact that a witness complied with demands for his money, his wallet, putting his hands down, and getting out of the car demonstrated the reliability of the victim as a language conduit for defendant. Pitts v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2796 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 17 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Extrajudicial Statements

270. In a trial for possession of marihuana, the court should have admitted a codefendant's statement taking responsibility for some of the drugs under Tex. R. Evid 803; however, the error in excluding the statement was harmless because defendant was able to present a defense and to argue effectively that the drugs belonged to the codefendant and because the State consistently argued that both parties were guilty of the offense. Bradley v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4425 (Tex. App. Tyler May 24 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

271. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

272. Detective's testimony that his investigation centered on defendant after taking witness's statements was admissible to show how defendant became a suspect and was not inadmissible as backdoor hearsay. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2005).

273. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

274. In a sexual assault case, counsel was ineffective where he failed to object to hearsay testimony that did not qualify as outcry evidence and allowed defendant to testify, knowing that doing so would permit the State to introduce evidence of defendant's previous incriminating oral statement. Failing to object to the previous statement in any way, counsel allowed the testimony to come in as evidence of defendant's guilt, rather than as only impeachment evidence to his testimony. Glasgow v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2979 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 20 2005).

275. In a burglary trial, the registration card from the motel where police found defendant was admissible, even if not properly offered as a business record, because it was not hearsay. Rather, it was introduced for the purpose of showing how the investigation proceeded. Rodriguez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1164 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 11 2005).

276. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, even if the victim's alleged statement itself was admissible, it was shrouded by additional layers of hearsay not falling under any exception. The tape consisted of an out-of-court statement by an anonymous caller reporting her daughter's out-of-court statement that the victim told her, in an out-of-court statement, that her father sexually assaulted her (rather than defendant). Because the tape contained layers of inadmissible hearsay, the trial court properly excluded it. Holmes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2004).

277. In defendant's murder case, a witness's statement that "spending time with defendant that night was going to be the worst mistake he ever made" was erroneously admitted because the statement was hearsay, and it contained a dramatic piece of information not communicated in the earlier testimony. Martin v. State, 151 S.W.3d 236, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9437 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

278. In a murder case, a court properly allowed the State to impeach a witness with his prior inconsistent grand jury statement where he was shown a copy of his grand jury testimony and he acknowledged that he had previously testified that, during a telephone conversation, defendant told him that "they are here." The State used the brother's prior statements for the limited purpose of attacking his credibility because of his inconsistent statements, and not to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Bolton v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist.

June 24 2004).

279. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

280. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

281. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

282. In a prosecution for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, the trial court correctly sustained a hearsay objection regarding an offer by the vehicle's owner to drop all charges against defendant if he paid her restitution, as defense counsel was soliciting an answer which would have constituted a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Kirksey v. State, 132 S.W.3d 49, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2448 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004).

283. Victim's prior inconsistent statement about the assault was hearsay and contained hearsay within hearsay, but defendant's counsel never objected to it on either basis and any objection defendant had to the statement was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1); unobjected-to-hearsay has probative value as substantive evidence, and is considered in reviewing sufficiency challenges pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Rios v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1832 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2003).

284. At the time the prosecutor proffered the out-of-court statement, defendant objected only that the statutory predicate had not been fully satisfied in that the requisite showing of reliability was deficient; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, absent such showing, the statute could not operate to take the statement out of the pale of the general rule excluding hearsay. In short, defendant lodged a hearsay objection, not an objection to a violation of confrontation; the two were neither synonymous nor necessarily coextensive, and having ruled that the statutory predicate had been met, and that the hearsay objection was therefore not well taken, the trial court had no notice of any other ground for exclusion. Holland v. State, 802 S.W.2d 696, 1991 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 14 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

285. Any error in admitting the officer's hearsay testimony was harmless because evidence of the additional fact that defendant had rented and occupied the house "for several weeks" did not move the jury from a state of non-persuasion to one of persuasion on the issue of knowing possession of marijuana. Guillen v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3739, 2014 WL 1387977 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2014).

286. Any error in the admission of the child's mother's out-of-court hearsay statements regarding defendant's drug use, employment, and housing was harmless because evidence similar to the testimony was admitted at trial without objection and it was cumulative of other evidence. In the Interest of R.T.M., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3683, 2014 WL 1357242 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 3 2014).

287. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

288. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

289. Defendant failed to show that the court erred in admitting the statements made to the nurse for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, because the qualifications of the person hearing the statements was not the important consideration, and the fact that the nurse could have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the conclusion that the statements were inadmissible. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13160, 2013 WL 5773573 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 23 2013).

290. Although appellant complained about appellee's testimony about her father's delivery of an eviction notice to appellant, the complaint was waived by appellant's failure to appear and challenge the hearsay testimony before the county court. Johnson v. Mohammed, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5808 (Tex. App. Austin May 10 2013).

291. Testimony by indecency with a child victim's mother that the victim stated that she felt uncomfortable when she could feel defendant in the pool was inadmissible hearsay; the victim's statement described an emotion, but was not admissible as a then-existing state of mind. Linney v. State, 401 S.W.3d 764, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 7 2013).

292. Trial court did not err in allowing state troopers to testify, over defendant's hearsay objection, regarding information they had received from an anonymous tipster where the information was used at trial to show how and why defendant came to the attention of the troopers and, in that sense, was admissible to prove that the troopers detained defendant after they acquired specific information concerning a drug-smuggling operation involving a tractor-trailer whose description matched the appearance of defendant's tractor-trailer. Because defendant had challenged the conduct of the troopers on the grounds that they lacked reasonable suspicion for the traffic stop and probable cause for his arrest, the details of the out-of-court statements by the anonymous tipster were admissible to show the reasonableness of the troopers' conduct. Iglesias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

293. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

294. Financial history should have been excluded from evidence in light of the company's hearsay objection; no testimony was offered, either live or by affidavit, that could have proved the "financial history" was not hearsay, was a business record, or otherwise satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule. Shamrock Foods Co. v. Munn & Assocs., Ltd., 392 S.W.3d 839, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 244, 2013 WL 150810 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 15 2013).

295. In review of the commission's decision, the trial court's role was to consider evidence and hear testimony presented to show whether the commission's decision was supported by substantial evidence, but when the trial court sustained appellees' objection and excused the patrolman's witnesses, he did not make an offer of proof, call other witnesses, or try to admit any other evidence; on appeal, the patrolman complained that the trial court should not have considered the transcript, but after his initial objection, he did not object when the transcript was admitted, and he was the one who asked for admission, such that he waived any objection to the admission, including his objection that certain parts of the transcript were not translated, and the trial court had discretion to consider the transcript, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802. Reyes v. City of Laredo, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10361, 2012 WL 6553636 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 14 2012).

296. Assuming that testimony contained inadmissible hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, a father had to show that counsel's decision not to object was not based on sound trial strategy. Medellin v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8225, 2012 WL 4466511 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26 2012).

297. Counsel asked where a witness obtained his understanding of the facts to which he testified, and the witness stated what his grandmother told him; this was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802 and properly excluded. In re Estate of Snow, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7450 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 30 2012).

298. Statement about what someone else said was inadmissible hearsay. In re Estate of Snow, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7450 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 30 2012).

299. Appellant did not dispute that the proffered evidence was hearsay, and it was his responsibility to specify the exception on which he relied, but he failed to cite one; even if the court found the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, on which appellant focused, appellant did not address the hearsay issue, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony on inadmissible hearsay grounds. Quevedo v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6178, 2012 WL 3055470 (Tex. App. Dallas July 27 2012).

300. Court found that any error in admitting certain exhibits was harmless under the standard of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); any error in admitting the exhibits over a hearsay objection did not require reversal of the judgment under Rule 44.2(b). Peluso v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5122, 2012 WL 2450818 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2012).

301. Appellant did not obtain a ruling on his renewed objections when the State sought to question a witness on rebuttal, and no objection was made during that questioning, such that the issues raised regarding hearsay and the Confrontation Clause were not preserved as to that testimony; the court noted that under Tex. R. Evid. 802, inadmissible hearsay admitted without an objection was not denied value just given that it was hearsay. Thompson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4597, 2012 WL 2106549 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

302. Witness had no personal knowledge about the value of wheels and repeated only what an automobile dealer told him, such that the witness's testimony was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and this was inadmissible unless an exception to the rule applied. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

303. Allowing the prosecutor to testify about an email regarding another out-of-court statement allegedly made by a detective would have involved violations of the hearsay rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 801, 805, and appellant did not identify any exception, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802; appellant did not show that the trial court erred in refusing to allow the prosecutor to testify about the email. Zavala v. State, 401 S.W.3d 171, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8671, 2011 WL 5156843 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 1 2011).

304. While a trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony by appellee's friend recounting appellant's statements to appellee, the error was harmless as the testimony was merely cumulative of other properly admitted evidence. Jasik v. Mauricio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7078, 2011 WL 3849473 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2011).

305. Because the evidence presented in a police report was admitted elsewhere during defendant's trial, without objection, even if it was hearsay error for the trial court to allow the State to read the entire police report, the error was harmless. Washmon v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3085 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

306. Court agreed that seller waived any hearsay complaint with an affidavit by failing to object and obtain a ruling below. Sprayberry v. Siesta Mhc Income Ptnrs., L.P., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2517, 2010 WL 1404598 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 8 2010).

307. In a case in which a jury found that defendant juvenile engaged in delinquent conduct by committing the offenses of aggravated sexual assault and indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in excluding certain testimony of various witnesses and did not prevent defendant from fully presenting his defensive theory where: (1) the proffered testimony of the victim's mother as set forth in defendant's bill of exceptions was properly excluded as speculative pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 602; (2) the victim's mother was not shown to be qualified as an expert to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 702; (3) at trial, defendant was allowed to question the victim and her sister regarding the meeting they allegedly had with their grandparents during the time period after the victim's outcry but prior to the Monday morning interview with a deputy; and (4) the only testimony excluded by the trial court during defense counsel's examination of the victim and her sister was testimony regarding statements made by their grandparents during the alleged meeting, which was properly excluded on hearsay grounds pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Although defendant's bill of exceptions set forth the testimony that he asserted that the victim would have offered regarding what she told her grandparents during the alleged meeting, defense counsel did not question the victim regarding what she told her grandparents during that meeting, and, additionally, defense counsel did not argue that the trial court improperly sustained the State's hearsay objections to statements of the grandparents. In re J.R.N., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280, 2009 WL 6312273 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2010).

308. Even if appellant adequately briefed her points, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's evidentiary rulings, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 402, 601, 802 and Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Pool v. Diana, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2208 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2010).

309. In defendant's online solicitation case, the trial court did not err by admitting the chat logs between defendant and the officer posing as a teenager because the investigation traced the IP address used by defendant to defendant's apartment, and defendant admitted he used to have the particular screen name at issue. The officer asked defendant if they could "safely assume" it was defendant on the chats with the "teenager," and defendant answered, "Yes, sir." Bailey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9440, 2009 WL 4725348 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 475, 178 L. Ed. 2d 301, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 7971 (U.S. 2010).

310. Although defendant objected to the evidence as hearsay, he did not obtain an express ruling on that objection under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and while the State conceded the objection was implicitly overruled, defendant did not cite authority supporting an argument that the trial court erred in overruling his objection; he merely argued that the evidence was insufficient because it was hearsay and the result was the same as if he had failed to object in the trial court, and because the admissibility of the evidence was not challenged on appeal, the evidence was before the court for all purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 802, in connection with defendant's challenge to a restitution order. Vasquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6117, 2009 WL 5915945 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 6 2009).

311. Defendant did not object to a hearsay statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(a), 802; the jury was therefore permitted to consider this hearsay evidence for any purpose. Walker v. State, 291 S.W.3d 114, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4863 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 23 2009).

312. Defendant complained that an officer's videotaped statement that two witnesses had implicated defendant as the shooter was inadmissible hearsay that was testimonial; the court noted that while the rules generally prohibited the admission of out of court statements offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, a statement was not deemed hearsay if it involved identification of one perceived by the declarant, who later testified at trial and was available for cross-examination, under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C). York v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3827, 2009 WL 1493255 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

313. Defendant lodged a proper and timely hearsay objection to a witness's testimony concerning a person's statement to him, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and an analysis of the witness's testimony revealed that it contained two levels of hearsay, for analysis purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 805, with the first layer of hearsay concerning what defendant told the person about his involvement in the crime, which constituted a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); because the second layer of hearsay, the person's statement that defendant admitted involvement in the crimes, would not subject the person to prosecution and did not satisfy Rule 803(24), the admission of the double hearsay was an abuse of discretion. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

314. Secret Service agent's testimony concerned what defendant told investigators was said by defendant, and this testimony was clearly hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805, and the second layer of hearsay was not excluded from the hearsay rule by any exception, such as Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), because any statement by the witness about defendant's involvement in the crimes would not implicate the witness; defendant did not renew the hearsay objection he previously raised to another witness's substantially similar testimony, and because the substantively equivalent testimony to which he earlier objected was later admitted without objection, defendant did not preserve this issue for appellate review. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

315. Trial court impliedly sustained defendant's vague hearsay objection by ordering the State to rephrase the question and defendant's limiting instruction request went only to the issue of nonresponsiveness; the record did not support the view that the trial court was given an opportunity to address the issue being raised on appeal, that the trial court failed to instruct the jury to disregard. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

316. Defendant's conviction for arson of a habitation was appropriate because, applying the Woods factors to the victims' daughter's former boyfriend's unsworn statements in the presence of the prosecutor and investigator, defendant failed to show the boyfriend's statements were trustworthy. Additionally, another of the boyfriend's former girlfriend's sworn statement to the investigator noted that the boyfriend bragged to her about how he and defendant set fire to the home. Charles v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

317. Although defendant objected to testimony at one point during the witness's testimony, defendant failed to object to the testimony the first time it was raised at trial; under Tex. R. Evid. 802, the responsibility fell upon defendant and his counsel to object to the admission of the hearsay, and having failed to object, defendant had to be prepared to accept the consequences that hearsay could be considered by the trier of fact as probative evidence to be considered with other evidence admitted at trial. Lucas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8976 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 3 2008).

318. Testimony in a murder trial did not constitute indirect hearsay in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 801 and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because at most, the jury might have deduced that the declarant told the investigators something that led them to acquire a warrant; the trial court could have reasonably determined that that inferential leap did not provide the requisite degree of certainty that the State's sole intent in pursuing the line of questioning was to convey the contents of the out-of-court statement. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

319. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, even if it was error for the court to admit an officer's hearsay testimony regarding the details of the police dispatch, the error was harmless; the same substantive evidence was introduced through another officer's testimony without objection when she testified regarding the type of car defendant was driving and the circumstance surrounding her interview of the robbery complainants. Carson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3091 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

320. In a credit cardholder's action against his credit card company for breach of contract, among other things, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting an unsworn letter from the company to the cardholder because the letter was not hearsay in its entirety, and the trial judge stated that he did not consider the hearsay portion of the letter in finding that the company did not offer the letter for the truth of the matter asserted therein, namely that the company contacted a merchant regarding charges that the merchant was making to the cardholder's account; rather, the letter was offered by the company to demonstrate that it responded in writing to the cardholder's inquiries concerning his account, and even assuming that the trial judge erred in admitting the letter, appellate review of the record revealed that the admission of the evidence did not cause an improper judgment and was not reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44. Elkins v. Capital One Bank, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 605 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2008).

321. Because an affidavit consisted entirely of hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the affidavit. Corona v. Pilgrim's Pride Corp., 245 S.W.3d 75, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 492 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

322. During defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony of a police officer and a detective where their testimony was offered to establish the course of the detective's investigation and to show how defendant became the robbery suspect; thus, the testimony did not constitute backdoor hearsay. Hurd v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9363 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2007).

323. Defendant claimed that the trial court's evidentiary rulings effectively prevented her from presenting her defense to capital murder, that the child victim's parents were the perpetrators of the crime, and the court analyzed the evidence to determine if the trial court's evidentiary rulings were clearly erroneous; the court found that (1) absent evidence that the children became involved in the physical disputes the parents previously had, the court was unable to hold that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding this evidence, and in any event, defendant did not raise her due process argument in this regard to the trial court, such that two related subpoints were not properly before the court, (2) certain excluded evidence did not add much, if anything, to the defense and did not prevent defendant from putting on a defense, such that defendant's due process rights were not violated, and (3) another witness statement was hearsay and did not meet any exceptions, and the exclusion of the statement in question did not prevent defendant from putting on a defense, and no indicia of reliability existed concerning the witness's statement, and defendant did not call this witness to testify. Stevens v. State, 234 S.W.3d 748, 2007 Tex.

App. LEXIS 6845 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

324. Ordinarily the statements made by the minor victim to two individuals would have been inadmissible as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802, but outcry testimony admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 was admitted as an exception to the hearsay rule. Delane v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5928 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2007).

325. In defendant's trial for assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01, although defendant claimed that the victim's statement to an officer was hearsay, the court noted that hearsay admitted without objection was not to be denied probative value merely because it was hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, and once the trier of fact weighed the probative value of the evidence, the court was not able to deny that evidence or ignore it in the court's review of sufficiency of the evidence. Jackson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5846 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2007).

326. In a termination of parental rights case, when a witness testified to the mother's history with the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services, the mother did not raise hearsay objections; she raised that objection only twice in reference to questions asked about allegations made in a referral, such that the mother did not preserve her complaint on appeal. Boyd v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5696 (Tex. App. Austin July 20 2007).

327. Probation officers' reports were admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 without objection and the trial court could have properly considered the testimony and the reports when assessing a sentence, as well as considering live testimony, and thus the court rejected defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance when the testimony was admitted, which defendant claimed contained hearsay. Torres v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5641 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 19 2007).

328. Evidence was sufficient to show that a rungu was a club and prohibited weapon for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 46.01(1) and thus the court affirmed defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 46.02; the State presented testimony showing that the rungu was a throwing instrument used for hunting and killing and rendering animals unconscious, and from this, the trial court could have reasonably found that the rungu functioned as a weapon or club and was specially designed, made, or adapted for the purpose of inflicting serious injury. Warr v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5675 (Tex. App. Dallas July 19 2007).

329. Other than citing generally to case law concerning the standard for reviewing rulings on the admissibility of evidence and Tex. R. Evid. 602 and Tex. R. Evid. 802 concerning lack of personal knowledge and hearsay, defendant, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), provided no substantive legal analysis, argument, or authority to support his contention that the trial court erred in overruling his objections, and thus the point was inadequately briefed and presented nothing for review. Warr v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5675 (Tex. App. Dallas July 19 2007).

330. Trial court would not have committed error in overruling, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, an objection to the victim's statement to an officer on the basis of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the trial court could have found that the victim was dominated by the emotions and fear of the event at the time she gave the statement and thus it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Austin July 18 2007).

331. Witness's prior out of court statement to police, if offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted, likely constituted inadmissible hearsay, and thus the statements were subject to a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and because counsel did not request the instruction at the first opportunity, the evidence was admitted for all purposes; the record was undeveloped as to counsel's reasons for not requesting the instruction, no new trial motion was filed to create such a record, and thus defendant did not overcome the presumption of reasonable assistance; even if the court found counsel's performance was not within the range of professional assistance, defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different had counsel sought to limit the use of the witness's statements sooner than in the jury charge, as this testimony was not the only evidence that could have defeated defendant's self-defense theory in the murder trial. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2896 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

332. Testimony was objected to as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and the trial court properly sustained the objection, and as such, it was not considered in the court's analysis; the statement was one made out of court and was inadmissible for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and no hearsay exception applied to render the statement admissible. Mark III Sys. v. Sysco Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1339 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 22 2007).

333. Although defendant complained that a trial court committed reversible error in allowing a police officer to read his offense report during his testimony, which defendant claimed was hearsay in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 802, the record was unclear as to whether the officer was actually viewing his offense report, and, in any event, any error in admitting the testimony was harmless because the officer later testified without objection that there was an open container on the seat of defendant's vehicle, making the previous testimony cumulative. Goudeau v. State, 209 S.W.3d 713, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9813 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

334. In a suit for fraud and negligent misrepresentation, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding an investor's testimony about the details of alleged out-of-court conversations because such testimony reasonably could have been found to be hearsay and therefore inadmissible. Racciato v. Davies, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6988 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 8 2006).

335. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

336. Appellant failed to appear and therefore to object to alleged hearsay evidence, which had to be objected to when admitted, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and thus appellant was not able to raise that argument on appeal. Piper v. Edwards, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1788 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 9 2006).

337. In a trial for murder and attempted murder, there was no error in the admission of documents found in a search of defendant's car, including hotel receipts, a church bulletin, and handwritten notes, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the documents were not offered for the truth of the matters asserted but to show the circumstances surrounding the investigation and leading to defendant's arrest. Yanez v. State, 187 S.W.3d 724, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1289 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

338. Where a detective's interview with the first robbery suspect led him to defendant, the State's questioning of the detective regarding the interview with the first suspect was not inadmissible backdoor hearsay because the testimony was offered to show how defendant became a suspect and it did not leave the jury with the inescapable conclusion that the first suspect was testifying through the detective; because there was no hearsay problem with the testimony, defendant's right to confrontation was not violated. McCreary v. State, 194 S.W.3d 517, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1230 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

339. Although the homeowners asserted many complaints regarding a witness's testimony, including a hearsay complaint, no objections were made at trial, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33, and furthermore, inadmissible hearsay, admitted without objection, was not to be denied probative value just because it was hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Moreno v. Towne Lake Garden Ass'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10862 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 14 2005).

340. Because a witness' testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, it did not constitute hearsay; even if the testimony was hearsay, because the testimony was cumulative, if there was error, it was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that defendant did not demonstrate that the admission of the testimony affected defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Alexander v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 7, 2005).

341. Trial court did not err in excluding testimony of a witness concerning the victim's sexual activities; the testimony consisted of speculation that the victim and another engaged in some sort of sexual activity, the court questioned whether the evidence qualified as a specific instance of past sexual behavior as contemplated by Tex. R. Evid. 412, it was difficult to find that the evidence explained or rebutted the medical evidence, for purposes of Rule 412(b)(2)(A), and the prejudicial effect of the testimony outweighed the probative value such that the evidence constituted inadmissible hearsay. Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

342. Evidence from a witness that the victim said she had 33 sexual partners did not rebut or explain, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 412(b)(2)(A), the medical evidence, given that there was no evidence as to when the alleged encounters took place, and the excluded evidence constituted inadmissible hearsay; even if the trial court had been incorrect in its application of Rule 412, the court would have upheld the ruling on an alternative holding. Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

343. Trial court admitted the evidence conditionally under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and appellant did not renew a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801and Tex. R. Evid. 802, and thus this issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Watson v. Michael Haskins Photography, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9838 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 23 2005).

344. Although defendant claimed that the trial court erroneously admitted hearsay statements, the same statements were admitted without objection, and thus reversal was not required; the court noted that defendant misstated the effect of hearsay evidence admitted without objection under Tex. R. Evid. 802, and the court clarified that inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection was not to be denied probative value merely because it was hearsay. Lynn v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6623 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18 2005).

345. Trial court acted within its discretion in admitting the wife's statement under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the officer noticed that the wife was visibly upset, shaking, trembling and crying, and that her cheek was red, and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the wife was still under the emotion, excitement, fear, or pain of the alleged assault when she told the officer that defendant slapped her. Solorzano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5694 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2005).

346. Even if the court assumed that certain testimony was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), not subject to any exception pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, any error in admitting such testimony was not harmful to have warranted reversal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a); the testimony had no bearing on the jury's finding that neither the general contractor nor the business had a right to control the injury-causing activity and/or the defect-producing work on the premises. Collins v. J.E. Kingham Constr., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5630 (Tex. App. Tyler July 20 2005).

347. Life care plans and affidavit testimony on past medical expenses was admissible because even assuming that the evidence was hearsay, the evidence was not objected to on this basis, and as such, it was admissible, competent and sufficient to support summary judgment. Fortis Benefits v. Cantu, 170 S.W.3d 755, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5539 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

348. Under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the trial court admitted a witness's testimony regarding a child's abuse allegations as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 802 because the child made the original outcry during the witness's interview. Patterson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2005).

349. Although a particular statement was hearsay, there was no objection thereto, and thus it could have been considered probative by the jury pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Soulas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4618 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2005).

350. Witness' proffered testimony was inadmissible testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 802 where the competitors obtained the witness' affidavit and arranged for him to testify by telephone at the hearing on the manufacturer's motion for preliminary injunction. The witness' affidavit did not fall under any exception to the hearsay rule, and his telephonic testimony was inadmissible because he had not been previously deposed and it would not have been visually recorded under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 30.012. IAC, Ltd. v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 160 S.W.3d 191, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1728 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

351. Rational trier of fact could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant exercised care, custody, control, and management over the contraband and that defendant knew the substance possessed was contraband, and therefore, the evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction. The court found that (1) a police officer's testimony that a confidential informant said that defendant was selling narcotics was probative evidence of defendant's guilt of possession of crack cocaine, (2) although defendant could have objected to the out-of-court statements as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802, defendant did not, nor did defendant request the trial court to limit consideration of the statements, (3) the out-of-court statements of the informant had sufficient probative value, in and of themselves, to establish an affirmative link between defendant and the cocaine found in defendant's home, (4) the contraband was both in plain view and recovered from a hidden location accessible only to one who exercised control over the house, and (5) given the manufacturing and packaging materials also found, this evidence sufficed to prove that defendant possessed the cocaine found in the closet and intended to distribute it. Poindexter v. State, 153 S.W.3d 402, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 3 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

352. Where a statement originally came in only as impeachment evidence but later was read without objection, the statement was substantive evidence of guilt under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Blanton v. State, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2210 (Tex. Crim. App. June 30, 2004).

353. Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failure to object to the extraneous offenses mentioned in the presentence report, because defendant's complaints were based on Tex. R. Evid 404(b) (extraneous evidence) and 802 (hearsay), and because the rules of evidence, including the rules pertaining to hearsay, did not apply to the contents of the presentence report. Champion v. State, 126 S.W.3d 686, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 964 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

354. Although defendant contended that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the state's motion in limine excluding his mother's testimony about threats that defendant allegedly received on the phone from the victim, the state took the witness on voir dire and established that she did not hear any threats on the phone herself, but rather was informed of these threats by defendant, her son, such that any further testimony by the mother about the phone calls would have been based on inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and 802; it was proper for the trial court to grant the state's motion in limine and exclude the mother's testimony about the alleged threats. Burgett v.

State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10212 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 4 2003).

355. Admission of a memorandum of agreement between a parent and Child Protective Services did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 802. The agreement was not admitted to prove the truth of its contents, but rather to prove that the agreement had been made and what its terms were. In re M.S., 115 S.W.3d 534, 2003 Tex. LEXIS 108, 46 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 999 (Tex. 2003).

356. Evidence of a police transmission describing a robbery suspect was inadmissible in an aggravated robbery case because it constituted hearsay since the relevancy turned on the truthfulness or accuracy of the contents of the statement; defendant failed to preserve his argument that the transmission was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(C) because it was not raised before the trial court. Johnson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10949 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2003).

357. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate; hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2473 (Tex. App. Tyler 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1206, 123 S. Ct. 1283, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1051, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1631 (2003).

358. Detective's testimony was not hearsay because his testimony concerning the police department's prior investigations for the "same type of offense" was not offered to establish that defendant had been investigated for or committed other instances of indecent exposure. Rather, the testimony was offered to explain the course of his investigation and how defendant came to be a suspect, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Denmon v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2180, 2014 WL 857671 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Statements

359. On appeal of defendant's conviction for sexual assault, he failed to prove his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to inadmissible hearsay testimony during trial. Testimony from witnesses about the alleged rape and the fact that victim had been diagnosed with a behavior disorder were offered to illustrate the victim's mental capacity, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted; neither witness mentioned an out-of-court statement. Dunn v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8711 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 16 2013).

360. Where the heirs claimed title to a portion of Padre Island alleging that a deed conveying the property was fraudulent, an affidavit provided by an affiant who lacked personal knowledge and relied upon hearsay was not competent summary judgment evidence. The affiant's testimony about out-of-court sources carried no probative weight over a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Kerlin v. Arias, 274 S.W.3d 666, 2008 Tex. LEXIS 992, 52 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 103 (Tex. 2008).

361. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Truth of Matter Asserted

362. Trial court erred when it admitted testimony about the removal of a blanket over defendant's hearsay objection, as the statement was clearly offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted: that defendant had disposed of the blanket. Kinsey v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5551 (Tex. App. Eastland May 22 2014).

363. On appeal of defendant's conviction for sexual assault, he failed to prove his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to inadmissible hearsay testimony during trial. Testimony from witnesses about the alleged rape and the fact that victim had been diagnosed with a behavior disorder were offered to illustrate the victim's mental capacity, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted; neither witness mentioned an out-of-court statement. Dunn v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8711 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 16 2013).

364. Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling hearsay objections to the officer's statements made during defendant's videotaped interview, because the officer's statements during the interview were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and were relevant to show what was said to bring about certain responses from defendant that led officers to believe that defendant had not been truthful in his prior statements to police; the officer's statements were admitted as part of defendant's recorded interview with police and served to establish the context of the statement defendant made to police. Humphrey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8315, 2012 WL 4739925 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 4 2012).

365. Confrontation Clause did not require the admission of multi-level hearsay to impeach the complainant and her mother in defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child. The unnamed declarant's statement that someone made child-molestation allegations against defendant was inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, because it was an out-of-court-statement offered for the truth of the matter asserted -- to show that someone made child-abuse allegations against defendant to child protective services. Shafer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1902, 2012 WL 745422 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 8 2012).

366. Whether a statement that defendant's daughter testified that her aunt made regarding her lack of surprise as to defendant's conduct constituted hearsay was within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and therefore, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child and for indecency with a child by exposure. The testimony of defendant's daughter tended to show that the State was indeed seeking to show her state of mind and why she failed to report the incident earlier, and the prosecution neither pressed the issue nor mentioned the testimony in its closing arguments. Grant v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6606, 2011 WL 3652548 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

367. Court properly allowed a police officer to testify because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect in the case and the status of the investigation; therefore, the officer's testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Moreover, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, and shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

368. In a case involving insurance, a trial court's exclusion of two issues of a trade publication from evidence did not result in a reversible error because there was no evidence that the two issues had been read. Moreover, although the two insureds contended that the material was not offered for the truth of the matters asserted therein, it appeared that they offered these two issues to show that several broker parties should have known of the truth of statements made in this material, and should have had such knowledge at the time these issues were published; the hearsay rules could not have been avoided by this kind of circular reasoning. Envtl. Procedures, Inc. v. Guidry, 282 S.W.3d 602, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009), appeal after remand and supplemental opinion at 388 S.W.3d 845, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 957 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 2013).

369. In defendant's drug case, the court did not err by admitting a videotape of a witness's interrogation by police because it was introduced to "rebut the witness's claims that the police threatened and coerced her into falsely stating that defendant was at the parking lot in order to conduct the drug deal;" the videotape was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Kennedy v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3424 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 8 2008).

370. In defendant's attempted indecency with a child case, the court erred in admitting hearsay evidence of the girl's age during the State's direct examination of the store's loss-prevention investigator because the investigator's statement that the mother told him the child was born in December, 1996 was hearsay because it was offered for the truth of the matter that the child was under seventeen years old. Rivera-Reyes v. State, 252 S.W.3d 781, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2988 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

371. Record did not indicate that the State sought to invoke Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 to admit the child victim's statements through his mother's testimony and defendant was correct that the trial court erred in permitting the mother to testify as to what the child generally told her about the abuse, as the testimony was offered to prove the truth of the matter, the severity of defendant's conduct, which amounted to inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802 and absent the invocation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, the trial court erred in overruling defendant's objection; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the facts to which the mother testified were included in the same facts that defendant introduced through her own testimony and through other testimony of the mother without objection, and the court was unable to say that the erroneous admission of the mother's testimony had a substantial effect in determining defendant's punishment for injury to a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04(a). Toliver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4059 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 24 2007).

372. In defendant's trial for injury to a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04(a), the child's mother's testimony concerning out-of-court statements by hospital personnel that were offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted constituted inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 802, but even if defendant's counsel's performance was deficient for failing to object, defendant did not show that there was a reasonable probability that, but for the error, the outcome of the trial would have been different; defendant testified to the injuries she caused the child, the same testimony admitted through the mother, and thus it was harmless error admitting the mother's testimony in this regard. Toliver v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4059 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 24 2007).

373. In a case dealing with possession of a controlled substance, over 400 grams of cocaine, with intent to deliver that was found in defendant's truck, there was evidence offered through a videotape of the incident in which defendant responded to a question by an officer by stating that the truck was his; defendant affirmatively stated he had no objection to the admission of that videotape; accordingly, proof of ownership of the truck was adequately shown; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, the erroneous admission of hearsay testimony regarding proof of ownership of the truck was harmless. Barnes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4328 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 19 2006).

374. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

375. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

376. Documents seized from the vehicle of defendant's mother pursuant to a search warrant were admissible because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted but to show that defendant had access to the vehicle in which defendant fled the crime scene. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Inferences

377. In a trial for possession hydromorphone, no hearsay error resulted from admitting unsealed and opened vials of medicine because they were not admitted to identify the substance (the truth of the matter asserted) but rather to support an inference that defendant's possession was not a one-time mistake. Moore v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5823, 2014 WL 2521537 (Tex. App. Tyler May 30 2014).

Evidence : Judicial Notice

378. New trial could not be granted based on the trial court's recollection of an informal postverdict chat with jurors. The jurors' assertions were not the kinds of "facts" that a court could judicially notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201. State v. Krueger, 179 S.W.3d 663, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8899 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Curative Admissibility

379. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statements into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

380. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler

Mar. 15 2006).

381. In a trial for unlawfully carrying a handgun, the trial court properly admitted an officer's testimony about a witness's statement that defendant approached the car she was occupying, demanded that it be moved, and partially removed a gun from his pocket. The statement was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though the record did not reflect how much time passed after the confrontation, because the officer testified that the witness was very upset and was crying. Spielman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3854 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 19 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

382. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

383. Victim's prior inconsistent statement about the assault was hearsay and contained hearsay within hearsay, but defendant's counsel never objected to it on either basis and any objection defendant had to the statement was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1); unobjected-to-hearsay has probative value as substantive evidence, and is considered in reviewing sufficiency challenges pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802. Rios v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1832 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

384. Father's failure to object to videotaped statements of his children's deceased mother in child custody proceedings caused a waiver of any subsequent hearsay objection; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied its probative value merely because it was hearsay. In re N.B.B., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8639 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 31 2007).

385. Father's failure to object to statements of a social worker in child custody proceedings caused a waiver of any subsequent hearsay objection; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, hearsay admitted without objection would not be denied its probative value merely because it was hearsay. In re N.B.B., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8639 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 31 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

386. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate; hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2473 (Tex. App. Tyler 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1206, 123 S. Ct. 1283, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1051, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1631 (2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

387. In defendant's murder trial, there was no error in the admission of testimony by a witness about statements defendant made in a telephone call because they were within the hearsay exemption for statements of a party-opponent. Van Exel v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8464 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 4 2014).

388. In an eviction action, the apartment manager's testimony that the police department received a disturbance call was inadmissible hearsay; its admission was harmless because she had already testified, without objection, that law enforcement had been called to respond to the disturbance. This unobjected-to hearsay was probative evidence upon which the trial court was permitted to rely. Black v. Countryside Vill. Apts., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14853, 2013 WL 6506303 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2013).

389. Trial court did not err in allowing state troopers to testify, over defendant's hearsay objection, regarding information they had received from an anonymous tipster where the information was used at trial to show how and why defendant came to the attention of the troopers and, in that sense, was admissible to prove that the troopers detained defendant after they acquired specific information concerning a drug-smuggling operation involving a tractor-trailer whose description matched the appearance of defendant's tractor-trailer. Because defendant had challenged the conduct of the troopers on the grounds that they lacked reasonable suspicion for the traffic stop and probable cause for his arrest, the details of the out-of-court statements by the anonymous tipster were admissible to show the reasonableness of the troopers' conduct. Iglesias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

390. In a case in which defendant was convicted of indecency with a child, among other offenses, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the outcry statements that the victim made to her foster mother after determining that the outcries were reliable because although the victim did not testify about the outcries, she did testify that defendant had touched her on her private part and therefore confirmed, in part, her statements in the outcries, and the foster mother's testimony and written reports indicated that the victim had made the outcries spontaneously and in her own terminology. Moreover, the trial court could have reasonably determined that a child of the victim's age would not have normally imagined things such as a parent's touching her private area or naked people kissing and touching each other, and the record did not disclose a motive that the victim would have had to fabricate the outcries. Woodruff v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6132, 2012 WL 3041114 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2012).

391. Whether a statement that defendant's daughter testified that her aunt made regarding her lack of surprise as to defendant's conduct constituted hearsay was within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and therefore, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child and for indecency with a child by exposure. The testimony of defendant's daughter tended to show that the State was indeed seeking to show her state of mind and why she failed to report the incident earlier, and the prosecution neither pressed the issue nor mentioned the testimony in its closing arguments. Grant v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6606, 2011 WL 3652548 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

392. In a case in which a jury found that defendant juvenile engaged in delinquent conduct by committing the offenses of aggravated sexual assault and indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in excluding certain testimony of various witnesses and did not prevent defendant from fully presenting his defensive theory where: (1) the proffered testimony of the victim's mother as set forth in defendant's bill of exceptions was properly excluded as speculative pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 602; (2) the victim's mother was not shown to be qualified as an expert to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 702; (3) at trial, defendant was allowed to question the victim and her sister regarding the meeting they allegedly had with their grandparents during the time period after the victim's outcry but prior to the Monday morning interview with a deputy; and (4) the only testimony excluded by the trial court during defense counsel's examination of the victim and her sister was testimony regarding statements made by their grandparents during the alleged meeting, which was properly excluded on hearsay grounds pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802.

Although defendant's bill of exceptions set forth the testimony that he asserted that the victim would have offered regarding what she told her grandparents during the alleged meeting, defense counsel did not question the victim regarding what she told her grandparents during that meeting, and, additionally, defense counsel did not argue that the trial court improperly sustained the State's hearsay objections to statements of the grandparents. In re J.R.N., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280, 2009 WL 6312273 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2010).

393. Assuming that allowance of a mother's accusations toward defendant was improper hearsay, such allowance was not reversible error because the same facts were shown by unchallenged testimony of defendant's admissions to the accusations; under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), nonconstitutional error that did not affect substantial rights was disregarded. Tucker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7009, 2009 WL 2767304 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 2 2009).

394. Trial court did not err in excluding videotaped forensic interviews of the two children as hearsay, although the children could not answer some of defendant's counsel's questions, because the videotapes contained admissible statements along with clearly inadmissible statements, and defendant failed to segregate or identify the potentially admissible statements. The trial judge was not required to sort through the evidence to determine which statements were admissible. Hoang v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8771 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 24 2008).

395. In a credit cardholder's action against his credit card company for breach of contract, among other things, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting an unsworn letter from the company to the cardholder because the letter was not hearsay in its entirety, and the trial judge stated that he did not consider the hearsay portion of the letter in finding that the company did not offer the letter for the truth of the matter asserted therein, namely that the company contacted a merchant regarding charges that the merchant was making to the cardholder's account; rather, the letter was offered by the company to demonstrate that it responded in writing to the cardholder's inquiries concerning his account, and even assuming that the trial judge erred in admitting the letter, appellate review of the record revealed that the admission of the evidence did not cause an improper judgment and was not reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44. Elkins v. Capital One Bank, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 605 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

396. When defendant and a man were in the camper when the officers served the warrant, methamphetamine, manufacturing precursors, and drug manufacturing paraphernalia were in plain sight; in determining whether defendant possessed the contraband, Tex. R. Evid. 802 permitted the jury to consider the officer's hearsay statement that a confidential informant had spoken with defendant about manufacturing methamphetamine in the camper trailer. The evidence was sufficient evidence for the jury to determine that defendant had custody, control, or management over the contraband for purposes of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 1.07(39); the evidence was sufficient to support her conviction for possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine in an amount less than one gram, in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.115. Judd v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7400, 2009 WL 3019712 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 23 2009).

397. Evidence was factually sufficient to support a conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.04 for driving while intoxicated; although defendant presented witnesses who testified that she was not the driver, the evidence was conflicting, and a police officer's hearsay testimony was properly considered under Tex. R. Evid. 802 because defendant did not object. Richardson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 344 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 16 2008).

Evidence : Relevance : General Overview

398. On review of the sufficiency of the evidence supporting defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child, the appellate court was permitted to consider hearsay testimony from a pediatrician who testified as to the complainant's statements of abuse. The testimony was admitted without objection and had probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 802. Moncada v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1697, 2009 WL 563990 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 3 2009).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

399. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

400. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

401. In a trial for child sexual assault, the victim's medical records, containing her statement about prior incidents, were properly admitted. The evidence was probative of both the previous relationship between defendant and the victim and of defendant's state of mind; the evidence is not graphically prejudicial, providing no details of the purported prior incident. Perez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11395 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2004).

402. Detective's testimony was not hearsay because his testimony concerning the police department's prior investigations for the "same type of offense" was not offered to establish that defendant had been investigated for or committed other instances of indecent exposure. Rather, the testimony was offered to explain the course of his investigation and how defendant came to be a suspect, which was an acceptable, non-hearsay purpose for admitting an out-of-court statement. Denmon v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2180, 2014 WL 857671 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Crimes : General Overview

403. Several factors relevant to determine whether hearsay statements by a five-year-old child witness in a child sexual abuse case were reliable were the spontaneity and consistent repetition of the statement, the mental state of the declarant, the use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age, and the lack of a motive to fabricate; hearsay is an out-of-court assertion offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted and as a general rule is inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and Tex. R. Evid. 802 because an oath, personal appearance at trial and cross-examination are conventional indicia of reliability of testimony. Smith v. State, 88 S.W.3d 652, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2473 (Tex. App. Tyler 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1206, 123 S. Ct. 1283, 154 L. Ed. 2d 1051, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 1631 (2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : DNA

404. In a murder trial, any hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 802 was harmless when a detective was permitted to testify as to DNA test results as a basis for eliminating other suspects because the expert who performed the DNA analyses later testified that the tests ruled out the other suspects as contributors to the DNA collected at the crime scene, the very same conclusion that was implicit in the detective's testimony. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Sobriety Tests

405. In a criminal trial arising from a collision, the other driver's out-of-court statements were admissible as excited utterance because they were made shortly after the collision while the driver was still in her wrecked vehicle and were made to her daughter, not to law enforcement officers. Pointe v. State, 371 S.W.3d 527, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4295, 2012 WL 1948880 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 30 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Conduct

406. In a murder case, a court properly allowed the State to impeach a witness with his prior inconsistent grand jury statement where he was shown a copy of his grand jury testimony and he acknowledged that he had previously testified that, during a telephone conversation, defendant told him that "they are here." The State used the brother's prior statements for the limited purpose of attacking his credibility because of his inconsistent statements, and not to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Bolton v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 24 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Inconsistent Statements

407. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive and the trial court had to admonish her during her testimony for offering explanations rather than answers. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

408. Trial court's decision to allow a sheriff's office investigator to testify to statements that an assault/domestic violence victim made to her as extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statements was not an abuse of discretion where the victim unequivocally admitted making statements to the investigator, but when confronted with her prior statements, her answers in large part were not responsive. The testimony of the investigator could have been admitted for the purpose of showing what the victim said rather than the truth of the matter stated, and defendant did not demonstrate that the testimony of the investigator was more probative than prejudicial. Sharp v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3216 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 20 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : General Overview

409. Witness' proffered testimony was inadmissible testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 802 where the competitors obtained the witness' affidavit and arranged for him to testify by telephone at the hearing on the manufacturer's motion for preliminary injunction. The witness' affidavit did not fall under any exception to the hearsay rule, and his telephonic testimony was inadmissible because he had not been previously deposed and it would not have been visually recorded under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 30.012. IAC, Ltd. v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 160 S.W.3d 191, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1728 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

410. In a sexual abuse case, a court did not err by failing to declare a mistrial where an expert relied on the victim's mother's testimony in determining that defendant had a fetish, which was a factor that the expert considered in evaluating defendant's risk for reoffending; consequently, the expert could disclose such inadmissible hearsay. Although the expert's answer pertaining to defendant's engaging in that behavior with his wife was nonresponsive to the question posed by the prosecutor during direct examination, the error was harmless because the trial court properly sustained the hearsay objection and instructed the jury to disregard. Cooper v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5304 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2005).

411. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting a detective's hearsay over defendant's objection where the detective was a fingerprint expert who compared the latent print found on the cash box with defendant's prints and determined that the latent print matched defendant's right index finger. The witness explained the scientific methodology involved in fingerprint comparison and how he determined that the latent print matched defendant's print, and the judge intentionally referenced the witness's expert witness status in an effort to explain why he overruled the hearsay objection. Webber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Family Law : Child Custody : Awards : General Overview

412. In a child custody proceeding, it was error to admit an e-mail written by the mother's boyfriend in which he purportedly discussed wanting to be with another man's wife; the e-mail was inadmissible hearsay because it was introduced to prove the truth of the assertion that the boyfriend was interested in the wives of other men. However, the admission did not cause reversible error because it was cumulative and was not controlling on the material issue. In re Marriage of Ivers, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3800 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 30 2004).

Family Law : Family Protection & Welfare : Cohabitants & Spouses : Abuse, Endangerment & Neglect

413. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule of Tex. R. Evid. 802; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Family Law : Marital Termination & Spousal Support : Dissolution & Divorce : Property Distribution

414. Because the ex-husband did not object to the ex-wife's trial inventory, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 802, the trial court could rely on the values of the property as contained in that inventory; in addition, the trial court could have relied on the testimony of the ex-wife that the fair market value of the residence was a little less than the tax-appraised value. McKamie v. McKamie, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8726 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 5 2006).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

415. In a termination of parental rights case, an alleged error relating to the admission of hearsay evidence was deemed harmless because evidence relating to the reasons for the removal of children were reiterated with greater specificity without objection by other witnesses, including the mother herself. The mother's brief did not specify the substance of the testimony that she found objectionable nor did it establish how that evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. In the Interest of L.M., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2720 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 4 2012).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Best Interests of Child

416. Even if the trial court erred by admitting therapy notes and records on the ground that they contained hearsay statements, the error was harmless because much of the evidence contained in the therapy notes was cumulative of the testimony already given by the father, the therapist, and an investigator for the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services, and even without the therapy notes, ample evidence existed to support the trial court's best-interest finding under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(2). The record showed that: (1) the therapist testified that all four children feared their mother; (2) the children did not want to return to their mother; (3) the children were doing well in their placements; and (4) evidence of the mother's past conduct supported the inference that she would be unable to meet her children's physical and emotional needs or provide a stable home environment were the children returned to her care. Rader v. Tex. Dep't of Family, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4594, 2011 WL 2437679 (Tex. App. Austin June 15 2011).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Procedure

417. In a termination of parental rights case, a family service plan that had been filed with the court as required by Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 263.101, was properly admitted as a public record. In the Interest of R.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8394, 2011 WL 5026229 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

418. In a termination of parental rights case, medical records were properly admitted as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 802, 803(6) because the custodian affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the Interest of R.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8394, 2011 WL 5026229 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

Governments : Courts : Rule Application & Interpretation

419. Nothing in Tex. R. Evid. 802 limits its application to contested hearings. The rule is not ambiguous and requires no explication. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

Labor & Employment Law : Discrimination : Actionable Discrimination

420. In an employment discrimination case, plaintiff could not aver to statements by a coworker who interpreted discussions between plant managers and a supervisor because, as recounted by plaintiff, the evidence was hearsay. Gonzalez v. Champion Techs., Inc., 384 S.W.3d 462, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9379 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 13 2012).

Labor & Employment Law : Discrimination : Disparate Treatment : Proof : Burdens of Proof

421. In an employment discrimination case, the employee's summary judgment testimony about hearing an out-of-court statement by a human resources director was not competent evidence because it was hearsay. Rincones v. Whm Custom Servs., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2013).

Labor & Employment Law : Discrimination : Retaliation : Elements : Protected Activities

422. In an employment retaliation case, it was error to exclude as hearsay statements in the employee's summary judgment affidavit regarding his complaint to the plant manager about race-based harassment from coworkers because the value of the statements was not the truth of the matter but rather the fact that the employee made the complaint and thus engaged in a protected activity. Gonzalez v. Champion Techs., Inc., 384 S.W.3d 462, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9379 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 13 2012).

Torts : Damages : General Overview

423. In entering a default judgment in a bank's action against two salesman, wherein the bank alleged claims of fraud, breach of contract, conspiracy, and civil theft, the trial court committed no error in awarding unliquidated damages based on affidavits. Neither Tex. R. Civ. P. 243 nor Tex. R. Evid. 802 barred the trial court's reliance on the affidavits. Texas Commerce Bank v. New, 3 S.W.3d 515, 1999 Tex. LEXIS 105, 42 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1175 (Tex. 1999).

Tex. Evid. R. 803

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Banking Law : Consumer Protection : Credit Card Agreements : General Overview

1. In a collections case brought by the purchaser of credit card debt, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), 803(6) in admitting business records of the original lender, based on affidavits stating that the affiants were the record custodian and media manager for the purchaser, that the records custodian was personally familiar with how the purchaser prepared and maintained its records, that both affiants had personal knowledge of the business record practices of an intermediate purchaser, and that both vouched for the accuracy of the records that were initially created by the lender. Nice v. Dodeka, L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8922, 2010 WL 4514174 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 10 2010).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

2. In a credit card company's action for breach of contract for a cardholder's failure to pay his credit card debt, a custodian of records for the company properly authenticated the documents referenced in her summary judgment affidavit as "business records" and the affidavit contained sufficient factual support and was not, therefore, conclusory; the cardholder did not present any evidence to raise a fact issue as to whether the documents were properly authenticated business records, and he also failed to identify any statements in the affidavit that he contended were opinions or legal conclusions. Duran v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2060 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2008).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Opposition : Supporting Materials

3. In a debt collection case, a trial court did not err by striking an affidavit opposing summary judgment from a managing partner and in refusing to grant leave to amend the affidavit because there was no facts upon which the partner based his conclusion regarding the last payment made on a note, and there were no readily controvertible facts shown that were known to the partner; moreover, he did not identify the company where payments were made, how he knew that the records were kept in the ordinary course of business, or which company kept the records in the regular course of business. Because the conclusory nature of the affidavit constituted a defect in substance, no amendment was allowed. CA Partners v. Spears, 274 S.W.3d 51, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6789 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Standards : General Overview

4. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party and the documents did not satisfy the business records' exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

5. In a fraud and negligence action, a client was not permitted to raise the issues of authenticity and hearsay on appeal from the grant of summary judgment based on the admission of an employment contract because the client did not obtain a ruling on the objections from the trial court. Yazdchi v. Am. Arbitration Ass'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2005).

6. In airport facility lessees' challenge to the city appraisal district's tax assessment on improvements the lessees constructed under their leases and subleases with the city, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting certificates of occupancy stating that the city had accepted the facilities as the certificates and an affidavit referencing them as they were not hearsay, and even if they were, the certificates were admissible public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in that they memorialized the city's issuance of certificates of occupancy to the lessees of the facilities. Travis Cent. Appraisal Dist. v. Signature Flight Support Corp., 140 S.W.3d 833, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5783 (Tex. App. Austin 2004).

7. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party and the documents did not satisfy the business records' exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : Attorney Expenses & Fees : Reasonable Fees

8. Trial court affirmatively stated that it had considered the factors set forth in Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 1.04(b), reprinted in Tex. Gov't Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G app. A-1 (Tex. State Bar R. art. X, sec. 9) in awarding attorney's fees, and absent objection, counsel's unsworn testimony sufficiently established the amount of fees incurred. Thus, although the supporting affidavits were hearsay because they did not comply with the requirements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001 and the invoices were hearsay because they were not properly authenticated as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), their admission was harmless error. Good v. Baker, 339 S.W.3d 260, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2167 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 25 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Briefs

9. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

10. In an action seeking to recover on a credit card debt, a debtor failed to preserve an error relating to an alleged failure to satisfy the business records exception to the hearsay rule in summary judgment evidence because there was no ruling from the trial court on the objections, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(2). McGrew v. Citibank N.A., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4529, 2009 WL 1693473 (Tex. App. Waco June 17 2009).

11. Exhibit consisting of receipt books was properly admitted as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), as the books were kept in the regular course of business and reflected the record of payments made and a witness testified to checking the receipts and accounting for monies received, and therefore there was a sufficient evidentiary basis for the admission. Thomas v. State, 226 S.W.3d 697, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3878 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2007).

12. In an appeal from a divorce judgment, the husband waived his arguments as to the exclusion of his evidence as hearsay where he cited no authority for an excluded statement, but merely argued that it was not presented for the truth of the matter asserted and listed Tex. R. Evid. 801, 802, and 803. Lorant v. Lorant, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1641 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2004).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

13. In an electrical supplier's collection action against a contractor and others, arising from unpaid items, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding certain business invoices because there was wavering testimony and conflicting information, such that it deemed them untrustworthy. Border States Elec. Supply of Tex., Inc. v. Coast to Coast Elec., LLC, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5681, 2014 WL 3953961 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 29 2014).

14. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding expert-opinion evidence based on its finding that the evidence was not subject to the public record exception of the hearsay rule, because it had limited knowledge of the qualifications of the authors of the opinion testimony, and had limited knowledge of the reliability of such testimony. Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc. v. Tex. Disposal Sys. Landfill, Inc., 434 S.W.3d 142, 2014 Tex. LEXIS 381, 57 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 531, 43 Media L. Rep. (BNA) 1086 (Tex. May 9 2014).

15. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a California police report of domestic violence made by the mother against the father because it was admissible as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). L.M. & Y.Y. v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5683, 2012 WL 2923132 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2012).

16. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) did not apply and excluding four documents from the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission regarding appellee's solid waste permit because at the time the documents were presented, the trial court had little or no information regarding the authors' qualifications to give the expert opinions set forth in the documents or regarding the reliability of the opinions. Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc. v. Texas Disposal Systems Landfill, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4005, 2012 WL 1810215 (Tex. App. Austin May 18 2012).

17. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the contact log narrative of the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services' investigator as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) because it appeared to track the investigator's observations that were made during the investigation. In the Interest of B.G.M., 2011 Tex.

App. LEXIS 6040 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 4 2011).

18. Because defendant filed a verified denial regarding an agreement and a credit application was for different work than was alleged to have been completed in the agreement, plaintiff did not establish that the circumstances indicated the trustworthiness of the documents; therefore, plaintiff did not demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to admit the agreement and credit application into evidence as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Old Republic Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4933, 2011 WL 2623994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 30 2011).

19. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining a father's objections to admission of an "updated" record, as the objection from the father's attorney prevented the attorney general from authenticating the "updated" record without testifying under oath; when the trial judge sustained the father's objection to the "updated" record, the attorney general had to prove the authenticity of the document by some other means; however, the attorney general made no attempt to call any witnesses to testify at the hearing and the document was not self-authenticating because it was not under seal, a certified copy of a public record, or supported by a business records affidavit. In re K.R., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5756 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2007).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

20. Trial court erred in admitting under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) an investigative report prepared by a third party on behalf of an employer in response to a former employee's complaint of sexual harassment filed with the Texas Commission of Human Rights where it was prepared in an adversarial setting and was not the regular practice of the employer to make such a report because the report was prepared by an industrial relations counselor specially employed to answer the Commission's request and, therefore, lacked the high probability of trustworthiness that attached to records that were regularly kept and routinely relied on; however, the jury's verdict did not turn on the erroneous admission of the report because most of what was contained in the report was also elicited in the testimony of witnesses. Mackey v. U.P. Enters., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6044 (Tex. App. Tyler July 29 2005).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

21. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting two exhibits containing reports of hair follicle drug tests of appellants under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, as there was insufficient indicia of trustworthiness or reliability, the error was harmless because other evidence that two children and the mother's boyfriend tested positive for cocaine was admitted without objection, and termination of the mother's parental rights did not turn on the admission of the second and third sets of positive drug test results. In the Interest of S.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9946, 2012 WL 5991391 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2012).

22. Assuming that the trial court erred by admitting as evidence a mediator's report to the trial court in which the mediator indicated that the case had been settled on the ground that it was inadmissible hearsay, the error was harmless because there was other evidence that the parties had reached a settlement agreement, including testimony that the deletion of the parties' brother's name had been discussed early in the negotiations and that the deletion was pointed out to all parties before the conclusion of the mediation. Mcdonald v. Fox, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9518, 2012 WL 5591795 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 15 2012).

23. Even if the trial court erred in excluding any evidence that it ruled was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) because the excluded investigative reports, which did not show any illegal activity more recent than that shown in admitted evidence, were cumulative. State v. Elite Med, L.L.C., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502, 2011 WL 3610414 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 17 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Reversible Errors

24. In a wrongful death and survival action stemming from a collision of a sport utility vehicle and a gravel truck, because the factual findings in a Department of Public Safety (DPS) accident report, as well as the opinions set forth in it, were all admitted into evidence via testimony and exhibits other than the accident report, any trial court error in excluding the opinion testimony of a DPS officer or the accident report pursuant to the hearsay exception set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) did not cause the rendition of an improper judgment and therefore did not constitute reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1). TXI Transp. Co. v. Hughes, 224 S.W.3d 870, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4124 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Communications Law : Telephone Services : Wireless Services

25. Where defendant was charged with murder, the trial court did not err by admitting defendant's cell phone records and testimony from the custodian of record under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. The phone records denoted defendant's whereabouts on the day of the murder. Wilson v. State, 195 S.W.3d 193, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 815 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

26. During the punishment phase of defendants murder trial, the trial court committed reversible error in admitting into evidence disciplinary records from the jail, probation department, and the Texas Youth Commission because the offense reports constituted hearsay and were not admissible under the business records exception. The admission of these records violated his right to confront the witnesses against him, because they contained several testimonial statements from witnesses who did not testify at trial. Smith v. State, 420 S.W.3d 207, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15280, 2013 WL 6699495 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

27. In an animal cruelty case, forms from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and their admission did not violate the Confrontation Clause because they were not testimonial but rather were compiled for diagnostic or medical treatment purposes. Holz v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2017, 2010 WL 1041068 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 23 2010).

28. At the punishment stage of trial, a pen pack documenting a prior conviction was not categorically exempt from Confrontation Clause analysis, even if it was a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). However, the document was not testimonial because the objective circumstances indicated that it was not prepared for prosecutorial use. Grey v. State, 299 S.W.3d 902, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8572 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 4 2009).

29. Because a witness's statements that three men had attacked her son and then ran toward a house were nontestimonial in nature, the trial court did not err in admitting that evidence as an excited utterance. Rios v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3444, 2009 WL 1406249 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 20 2009).

30. District court denied a state inmate's petition under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254, challenging his conviction and sentence for murder, because the inmate did not show he was denied effective assistance of counsel or that a state habeas court made findings that were contrary to clearly established federal law when it rejected the inmate's claims; although the inmate claimed that the trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation when it admitted hearsay testimony, the district court found that the trial court properly admitted testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance; even assuming arguendo that the trial court erred, the error was harmless in light of the other incriminating evidence the State introduced. Turnbow v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77098 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 17 2007).

31. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of those exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th Cir. Tex. 2007).

32. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which were 22 and 25 years old which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of those exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th Cir. Tex. 2007).

33. In a murder case, defendant's confrontation rights under the Sixth Amendment were not violated by the introduction of a friend's testimony that the victim came to his house in the middle of the night stating that defendant was chasing him and bumping his car; the statements were not hearsay either since an exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803 applied due to the fact that the victim was still dominated by the fear of the event at the time the statements were made. Mims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

34. Where defendant was tried for two counts of indecency with a child and two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child by penetration, the trial court did not err by admitting testimony from the complainant's grandmother relating a statement the complainant made about defendant "tickling" her and pulling up her blouse; the complainant's statement met all the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803, as it was made while the complainant was in the grip of fear and without time for reflection; because the statement was not testimonial, the admission of the complainant's statement did not violate the Confrontation Clause even though defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine her. McCarty v. State, 227 S.W.3d 415, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4604 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

35. In federal habeas proceedings, a state prisoner did not make a substantial showing of the denial of his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation by the district court's admission of an accomplice's statement implicating the prisoner as the perpetrator of a murder as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the remarks were blurted out after the accomplice fled a routine traffic stop, was chased by police officers, and was apprehended while officers were inventorying weapons found in his vehicle. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

36. Admission of an accomplice's statement and a prisoner's jail disciplinary records at trial did not violate the prisoner's Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights under Crawford because both pieces of evidence were admitted under the prevailing law at the time of the prisoner's trial. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

37. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

38. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, there was no error under the Confrontation Clause in permitting an officer to testify about the vehicle registration; the computer entry showing vehicle registration was akin to a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and was thus non-testimonial under a Crawford analysis. Nieschwietz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5255 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 21 2006).

39. In a murder trial, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the trial court admitted, as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), evidence of a statement by the victim to his mother that defendant had just threatened to kill him. The statement was not testimonial. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

40. Although a domestic violence complainant's statements to a police officer near the scene of the offense were admissible under the excited utterances exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), because she was crying, sobbing, and appeared hysterical at the time that she identified defendant and then, in a series of accusations against him, detailed blow by blow the assault made upon her, that did not mean that the statements were ipso facto nontestimonial hearsay outside the scope of the Confrontation Clause and admissible into evidence. Each case must be examined on its facts to determine if the evidence is testimonial and controlled by Crawford. Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 660, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3773 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

41. Merely because a declarant is excited, the statements made do not lose their character as testimonial statements subject to the Confrontation Clause. Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 660, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3773 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

42. Sixth Amendment was violated by the admission of a victim's statement, which was taken by police at the hospital, as excited utterance because the statement was "testimonial" as a matter of law; the error, however, was harmless. Because defendant did not brief his claims separately, the court assumed that defendant claimed no greater protection under the state constitution than that provided by the federal constitution. Wall v. State, 143 S.W.3d 846, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7467 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004), affirmed by 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Contracts Law : Breach : Causes of Action : General Overview

43. In a breach of contract case, a trial court erred by refusing to admit a creditor's business records into evidence because a witness testified that she was personally acquainted with the facts in an affidavit, that she was the custodian of the records, and that she was familiar with how they were prepared and maintained; it did not matter that the creditor, as the purchaser of the account, was not the original author of the documents. The records were trustworthy because creator of the documents had to keep careful records of credit card accounts, otherwise it could have faced civil or criminal penalties, and the error probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment since the creditor was preventing from presenting its case against a debtor. Dodeka, L.C.C. v. Campos, 377 S.W.3d 726, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3435 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 2 2012).

Contracts Law : Formation : Capacity of Parties : Mental Capacity

44. Business records concerning a decedent and his health were admissible in a declaratory judgment action because evidence of the decedent's irrationality and dementia in the months preceding and following the signing of certain contracts naming his friend as the payable on death beneficiary was probative of the decedent's capacity to contract on the date at issue. In the Estate of Minton, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1061, 2014 WL 354527 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 30 2014).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Specific Performance

Evid. 803(6), monthly statements from the credit card company and the credit card company's agreement with the debtor because the documents were shown to be incorporated by the creditor, accurate, and trustworthy. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Partners, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2687, 2010 WL 1492267 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 15 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Delivery, Distribution & Sale : Elements

46. In a trial for delivering a controlled substance to a minor, it was proper to admit as excited utterance testimony as to statements made by the minor's mother, who was described as frantic, that she thought her son had overdosed on methamphetamine. Garza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6480 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 15 2011).

47. In a trial for delivering a controlled substance to a minor, it was proper to admit, either as excited utterance or as a statement against interest, the testimony of an officer as to a statement made by the minor that he felt weird after smoking the methamphetamine. Garza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6480 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 15 2011).

48. Statement against interest regarding smoking methamphetamine was corroborated, as required by Tex. R. Evid 803(24), by medical evidence. Garza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6480 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 15 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Manufacture : General Overview

49. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : General Overview

50. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant's girlfriend to testify that another person had stated that the contraband belonged to him; the proffered evidence was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 402, to whether defendant possessed a controlled substance with intent to deliver it, in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(a), and defendant offered no independent facts corroborating the hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Menton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7799 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 22 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

51. Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant committed the offense of aggravated assault by intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causing either bodily injury or serious bodily injury to his wife by choking or strangling her with his hand, and that he used his hand as a deadly weapon during the commission of the offense; physician, in a prior trial, had testified as to the extent of the wife's injuries; the wife's statements to a paramedic at the time of the incident were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and the wife was still suffering from the residual effects of the injuries, which included a stroke. Wesber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3376 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2004).

52. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding a telephone call where the statements made by the victim to her mother met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, being assaulted, the victim was still crying and visibly upset when officers arrived, and all of her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. In addition, the statements made by the victim's mother to the victim's father also met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, receiving a telephone call from her daughter that she was being assaulted, the evidence indicated that the mother was was crying, and upset as a result of receiving the telephone call, and her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

53. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding the victim's fear that defendant would retaliate against her or her family where the statement was offered to show that the victim was afraid, not that defendant would retaliate against her or her family; therefore, it was admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

54. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude evidence of a blood test suggesting the victim was intoxicated, and proof of fundamental trustworthiness, or indicia of reliability of the blood test result was missing under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

55. In a trial for family assault, testimony concerning the complainant's statements was properly admitted as excited utterance; the complainant was visibly shaken and highly upset and her intoxication did not negate her state of excitement. Hudson v. State, 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

56. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

57. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault

58. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

59. In an assault causing bodily injury to a family member case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01 and Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 71.005, the complainant's statements to two police officers were properly admitted as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because her statements were related to the startling event as she stated that defendant was upset because he could not find his keys and struck her in the face and choked her around the neck; only a short amount of time elapsed between the assault and when the statements were made to the officers; and the complainant was still under the stress of excitement caused by the assault and dominated by the emotions, fear, and pain of the event as the first officer testified that when the complainant stepped out of the bathroom and made her statements she was clearly upset, shaken, and crying and the second officer testified that after the complainant came out of the bathroom, she appeared very upset, she was crying, her shirt was stretched out a little bit, and she had a swollen bottom lip... Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Endangerment : General Overview

60. In a criminal prosecution for endangering a child arising from the sexual assault of defendant's two children by her live-in boyfriend, two exhibits containing the medical records of the child-victims fell within the hearsay exception for records of regularly conducted activity set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); however, it was error to admit the exhibits because they contained a second layer of hearsay statements of abuse made by the children, and it was not clear that the children made these statements for the purpose of proper diagnosis within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : General Overview

61. In a robbery trial, the state was properly permitted to read to the jury an audio-recorded statement defendant made in a telephone call to his wife while he was in jail because under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2), defendant's statement was not hearsay and did not have to be against defendant's interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Robinson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 365, 2012 WL 130616 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2012).

62. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, a witness's statement was properly admitted where it was sufficiently self-inculpatory to be reliable, and the statement was trustworthy because the declarant's guilt was not inconsistent with defendant's guilt. The evidence at trial indicated that two men committed the robbery, one who was the driver of a pick-up truck matching the description of defendant's truck, and defendant admitted being at the scene of the second robbery when he said in his statement that he stopped and the declarant got out of the truck with what appeared to be a shotgun. Davila v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4781 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2004).

63. In a case where defendant's cousin assisted him in the crime of aggravated robbery, the hearsay statement of the cousin confessing to the crime was admissible at defendant's trial as a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Lopez v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 6 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : Armed Robbery : General Overview

64. At an aggravated robbery trial, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding defendant's statements to a police officer because the statements, although admitting that defendant was trying to steal a van, sought to shift blame for a shooting to an accomplice and thus were not statements against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Lynn v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9095 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 15 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Terrorism : General Overview

65. In a proceeding relating to defendant's threats to kill his ex-wife, the ex-wife's statement to police was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Defendant's loading a shotgun and issuing threats was startling enough to produce a state of nervous excitement, and only 10 to 20 minutes elapsed between the threats and the ex-wife's first statement, at which time she was scared, had been crying, and was shaking all over. Champion v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3733 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Violation of Protective Orders

66. Where defendant was charged with assaulting the victim in violation of a protective order, the trial court properly admitted the victim's hearsay statements to the arresting officer that she had had problems with defendant in the past. The testimony was admissible as a spontaneous statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Polley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11317 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 16 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

67. In a murder trial, there was no hearsay error in admitting pawn shop tickets showing that defendant was in Houston on two of the days when an alibi witness testified that he was in New Orleans because the tickets were admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Brumfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137, 2010 WL 5187690 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2010).

68. There was no error in the exclusion of a murder defendant's statement to a witness in which he conceded concealing the body but denied committing the murder; the statement did not qualify as a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it absolved him of the greater offense of murder. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5214 (Tex. App. Dallas June 19 2006).

69. In a murder trial, an out-of-court statement made by the victim that her relationship with the defendant, her ex-boyfriend, was over, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement showing future intent, and also her state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

70. In a murder trial, an out-of-court statement made by the victim, that she was afraid of the defendant taking her home, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of her existing state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

71. In a capital murder trial, it was proper to exclude testimony from an inmate that a witness said he had shot a man because there were insufficient corroborating circumstances indicating the trustworthiness of the statement, for purposes of the statement-against-interest exception to the hearsay rule. Mason v. State, 416 S.W.3d 720, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13527, 2013 WL 5861492 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 31 2013).

72. Murder victim's statements concerning a plan and intent to meet a "man" on the following Saturday were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

73. Defendant's conviction of capital murder was affirmed because a 9-1-1 call was admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule where the caller made the call less than five minutes after victims were shot inside her home. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

74. In a murder trial, the trial court properly excluded, under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), portions of an accomplice's written statement that were uncorroborated. Gonzales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4532 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Inchoate Crimes : Conspiracy : General Overview

75. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, a witness was properly allowed to testify regarding a conversation that she had with a gang member about defendant's order to shoot an ex-member. The statement of the planned shooter was a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because, although reluctant, he was taking steps to carry out his orders; therefore, his statement tended to expose him to criminal charges for conspiracy to commit murder at a minimum. Maynard v. State, 166 S.W.3d 403, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4003 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

76. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, a witness was properly allowed to testify regarding a conversation that she had with a gang member about defendant's order to shoot an ex-member; corroboration was not required for accomplice testimony under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.14 because the witness was not an accomplice as a matter of law, even though she knew of the plan and did not report it to the police, and the jury could have found that she was not an accomplice. The statement of the planned shooter could be used to corroborate the testimony of other coconspirators, and that testimony in turn provided sufficient evidence for the conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 15.02. Maynard v. State, 166 S.W.3d 403, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4003 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

77. Statements made by defendant's co-conspirators to a police officer were not so much against their own penal interests to reach the level of reliability as required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Barnes v. State, 56 S.W.3d 221, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 4834 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

Penal Code Ann. § 38.04, a person other than defendant admitted to driving a car that first pulled over in response to an officer's overhead lights, then drove off, committed several traffic violations, and subsequently stopped a second time when the road was blocked by a second officer's cruiser; although his hearsay statement to defendant's great-grandmother sufficiently exposed him to criminal liability, his statement was not admissible as a statement against his penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because he had no relationship, familial or otherwise, with defendant's great-grandmother, his statement lacked spontaneity where it was purportedly made in response to a query from defendant's great-grandmother regarding his reluctance to testify at defendant's upcoming trial, and the trustworthiness of his statement was directly attacked or controverted by the two officers' testimonies. Rodriguez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9105, 2010 WL 4628580 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 16 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Fleeing & Eluding : Elements

79. In a trial for evading arrest, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the introduction an audio recording of testimony police radio transmissions from the night of the arrest, which was admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Britt v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 26 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Perjury : General Overview

80. Challenged juror's proffered testimony fell within the statement against interest hearsay exception, under Tex. R. Evid. 803, because (1) during voir dire, the juror indicated that he knew both parties and their children and that the father had been his high school basketball coach, but he denied that this would give him a bias in the case or that he would show favoritism toward the father; (2) these representations were fundamentally inconsistent with the juror's alleged posttrial admission that he had decided how to vote before the start of trial and his alleged statement that he did not want to let his coach down; and (3) these discrepancies would have potentially subjected the juror to a perjury charge, under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.02. Clark v. Clark, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2010 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 20 2008).

Evid. 803(6) where a State witness testified that (1) he was the custodian of the records; (2) the report was prepared by an arson investigator near the time of the investigation; (3) the investigator spoke to the witnesses, police, and defendant about the fire; (4) investigators routinely make reports following their investigations; and (5) the investigator's employer kept the reports in the course of its regular business. Mboob v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1714 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 23, 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary

82. In a burglary trial, a statement by a five year old declarant was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), despite a lapse of several days between the burglary and the statement, because the declarant was very upset after seeing an officer investigating a property, asked if a five-year-old child could go to jail, and confessed to being present at on the property when defendant entered into and damaged the property. In re D.A.A., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6126, 2009 WL 2397333 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 6 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Forgery : General Overview

83. In a case where defendant was convicted of forgery of one of the victim's stolen checks, although 1 1/2 hours to 2 1/2 hours had passed since the intruders left and the victim's daughter spoke with the victim, the victim was upset, weeping, and traumatized by the events and was worried that the intruders would wipe out her account; thus, the daughter's testimony regarding the mother's statements that her checks were stolen were an excited utterance pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the hearsay statements under the excited utterance exception. Kendig v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10803 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 30 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Larceny & Theft : General Overview

84. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

85. In a motor vehicle theft case, a court properly admitted an accomplice's statement as a statement against interest where he was an employee of the car rental agency, he admitted that he knew defendant and had made arrangements with him to exchange the vehicles, and the accomplice's position as an employee of the car rental agency put him in a position to commit the crime and conceal it. The evidence presented sufficient corroborating circumstances to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. Roy v. State, 161 S.W.3d 30, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6712 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

86. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS

3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

87. In a theft and arson prosecution, the arson report was properly admitted as a business record under Tex. R. Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

88. In a child sexual abuse case, a court properly admitted the hearsay of a nurse where the nurse asked the child victim if she understood why she was at the hospital, the child related that it was because defendant had touched her, and without any prompting by the nurse or leading questions, the child went on to provide details regarding the sexual abuse. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

89. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

90. In an indecency with a child by sexual contact case, without anything to indicate that the victim understood the purpose of the forensic interview, and that the importance of being truthful was so the counselor could effectively assess or diagnose her, it was error for the trial court to admit the videotaped statements of the victim's interview under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Wright v. State, 154 S.W.3d 235, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 56 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

91. In a sexual assault of a child case, a court properly allowed a sexual assault examiner to testify about statements made by the victim during a physical exam where the statements were statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment. Barrera v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9621 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

92. In sexual assault case, complainant's hearsay statement to a hospital social worker was properly admitted and documented in the complainant's medical record where: (1) The complainant was aware that his mother had taken him to the hospital for a sexual assault examination; (2) for the purposes of a sexual assault examination, it was standard hospital procedure for a social worker to receive a history specifically regarding the abuse allegations; (3) the doctor expressly testified that the history obtained by the social worker was necessary for the diagnosis and treatment of the child; and (4) thus, the record demonstrated that the hospital social worker, participating as part of a team of medical personnel, obtained a history of the sexual abuse allegations in a critical early step necessary for the purposes of the diagnosis and treatment of a child admitted to undergo a sexual assault examination. French v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2924 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

93. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of the complainant in violation of his rights of confrontation and cross-examination where the medical record evidence, including statements given by the complainant to her examining physician and documented in the medical record, was admissible under the exception for statements made for the purposes of diagnosis or treatment; the complainant knew that she was at the office for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment, and the record showed that the examination results were used to diagnose and treat the complainant for a sexually transmitted disease. Joseph v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

94. In a criminal appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the appellate court would not consider defendant's argument that the trial court erred by allowing into evidence a medical report and testimony of a pediatrician who examined the victim. Defendant's argument that the evidence was not made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment did not comport with his objection at trial; therefore, it was not preserved for review. Frueboes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 31 2004).

95. Sexual assault victim, who was 14 at the time, understood that he was seeing the county youth services director to get help for committing sexual assault and that his statements to the director were made for the purpose of medical treatment; thus, hearsay evidence of defendant's extraneous sexual assault offenses against the victim was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) and defendant's conviction for sexual assault of a child was affirmed. Cannon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1105 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 4 2004).

96. Trial court did not err by allowing the state to present hearsay evidence in defendant's indecency with a child trial, consisting of a mother's testimony concerning what her daughter told her about an extraneous offense allegedly committed by defendant against her, where the evidence was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the daughter told her mother about the incident immediately after a church member stood up in church and made statements about the allegations of child sexual abuse against defendant, the pastor, the daughter became very upset after hearing the statements in church, and remained upset and was crying as she told her mother what defendant had done to her, and the daughter's statements were made before there was time to contrive and misrepresent. Powell v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10851 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 31 2003).

97. Child's statements to a nurse and a therapist regarding sexual abuse were properly admitted as statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Wimer v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10262 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 10 2003).

98. Where the victim did not disclose until she was 18 years of age that defendant fathered her son when she was 12 years of age, the victim's belated outcry statement did not qualify as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); while the original assault was undoubtedly shocking, the record did not reflect that defendant was still, six years later, dominated by the excited state produced by the attack. Harvey v. State, 123 S.W.3d 623, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9837 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

99. In a sexual assault of a child case, the mother's testimony, relating statements made by the 14-year-old victim and seeking to establish the truth of facts remembered regarding past events, was inadmissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(3). Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

100. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid 803; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

101. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

102. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the victim told a witness that defendant told her to open her mouth and that was going to stick his penis in her mouth. Although a quarter of an hour passed, the victim was shaking and crying. Ervin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8213 (Tex. App. Dallas July 3 2013).

103. In a trial for child sexual assault, no prejudice resulted from any error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) in admitting a nurse's testimony that the complainant identified defendant as her abuser during a sexual assault examination because the same evidence came in later through the testimony of a forensic interviewer. Starnes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3715 (Tex. App. Dallas May 19 2010).

104. In a trial for indecency with a child by contact there was no error in admitting a videotape of the complainant's interview at a child advocacy center to refresh her memory, as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 803(5). Although the complainant testified that no improper touching had occurred, she also responded that she did not know to several of the State's questions regarding the incident. Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 851, 2010 WL 391850 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 5 2010).

105. In a sexual assault of a child case, the victim's mother's testimony regarding what the victim told her was admissible as an excited utterance because the time between when the grandmother witnessed the encounter and the victim made the declaration that defendant "put his private in her mouth" was 10 minutes and, throughout that period, the victim cried. Although the mother asked the victim what was wrong, the declaration was not the result of questioning and was a spontaneous declaration regarding the occurrence that caused the emotional state the victim was in at a time that the victim was still in that emotional state. In re A. W. B., 419 S.W.3d 351, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 747 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 2 2010).

106. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021 and indecency with a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, although defendant complained of the trial court's overruling of his hearsay objection to the State's question of what the victim told a professional about defendant's conduct, the admission of the testimony during the direct examination of the forensic interviewer was not harmful because it did no more than reiterate facts admitted elsewhere and even included testimony supportive of the defense. Moreover, even assuming, without deciding, that it was inadmissible hearsay, the substance of the complained-of testimony of the forensic interviewer was admitted elsewhere without limitation or an objection preserved on appeal, and, thus, the error, if any, of the trial court in admitting the statement of the forensic interviewer did not affect a substantial right of defendant and had to be disregarded. Drake v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2010 WL 348365 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 31 2010).

107. In a case involving sexual abuse of a child, a trial court did not admit inadmissible hearsay from a sexual assault nurse examiner because statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment constituted a hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and the child involved understood the need to be truthful. The child knew that she was reporting the crime, she made a decision to talk to her family, despite knowing that her father would have been angry, and she knew she was seeing the nurse for treatment. Little v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7091, 2009 WL 2882932 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

108. In a case involving the sexual abuse of a child, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an exhibit offered by the State, which were records of the examinations performed by medical personnel following the child's outcry. The statements within the exhibit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the child told medical personnel that she was receiving treatment because defendant had forced her to perform oral sex, and she stated that defendant had told her not to tell about their sexual activities because he could have went to jail. Constance v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3627, 2009 WL 1477791 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 27 2009).

109. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

110. In a case involving aggravated sexual abuse of a child, a nurse was properly allowed to testify regarding a victim's statements, which were contained in a medical report; under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) it was necessary to take a history of the abuse in order to properly diagnose and treat the victim for infections or sexually transmitted diseases. The trial court did not admit the evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. § 38.072, § 2(a). Uribes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 885, 2009 WL 330972 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 11 2009).

111. In a sexual assault of a child case, a nurse's testimony was properly admitted because the object of the sexual assault exam was to ascertain whether the child had been sexually abused and to determine if further medical attention was needed, and statements describing acts of sexual abuse were pertinent to the victim's medical diagnosis and treatment. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3713 (Tex. App. El Paso May 22 2008).

112. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, a physician's testimony about hearsay statements made by the victim during a sexual assault examination that identified defendant as the offender and described the assault was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim's statements were pertinent to medical diagnosis or treatment. Guzman v. State, 253 S.W.3d 306, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1066 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

113. Any error in admitting a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony, over defendant's hearsay objection, about a study conducted by another person explaining why a child victim of a sexual assault would not show evidence of trauma to her private parts was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was introduced at trial. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

114. Medical records stated that the 10-year-old complainant was the victim of serial penetrative sexual acts by defendant (her father), and they had been occurring since she was a young girl; the medical records also included a progress report detailing the mother's version of the events leading up to defendant's arrest; because all the statements involved the causation and source of the complainant's injuries or statements by a parent for purposes of diagnosing or treating the complainant, they were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803; thus, the trial court properly admitted the medical records into evidence over defendant's hearsay objection. Davidson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

115. In a child sexual abuse case, statements to a physician regarding alleged sexual acts between defendant and a minor victim were admissible because they were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4973 (Tex. App. Austin June 9 2006).

116. Although a trial court erred when it allowed a child's mother to testify that, shortly after a sexual assault was committed against the child, the child told her what happened during the offense, because the State did not qualify the statement as an outcry statement nor did it justify the admission of the statement as an exception to the hearsay rule, the error was waived when the same evidence was introduced at other points in the trial and defendant made no objection. Vargas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4525 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 26 2006).

117. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial, a doctor's testimony regarding statements made to her by one of the alleged child victims was properly admitted because there was sufficient evidence that the child understood the need to be truthful. Green v. State, 191 S.W.3d 888, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3658 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : Elements

118. In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(1)(B)(i) and (a)(2)(B), even if the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statements under the hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), any such error was harmless because the victim herself testified without objection to the very statements contained in the objected-to medical record. Vanhoy v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6591, 2011 WL 3631316 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

119. Blood test results were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in appellant's prosecution for intoxication assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.07 because the test was not done at law enforcement's request but as part of appellant's treatment at the hospital for a hip injury following an automobile collision. Desilets v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097, 2010 WL 3910588 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 6 2010).

120. In a prosecution under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.04, a law enforcement officer's observations of defendant, dictated on videotape, were not admissible because they were the functional equivalent of a police or offense report under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B). The contemporaneous recording did not render the observations admissible as present sense impression under R. 803(1). Fischer v. State, 207 S.W.3d 846, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

121. Under former 1 Tex. Admin. Code §/Aa159.23(c)(7), an officer's failure to swear an arrest report did not deprive it of the assurance of veracity or render it inadmissible; supported by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), arrest reports were admissible without being sworn and the ALJ properly concluded that the report should be admitted. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Caruana, 363 S.W.3d 558, 2012 Tex. LEXIS 265, 55 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 479 (Tex. 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : Elements

122. In an intoxication manslaughter trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, medical records that contained the notes of a substance abuse counselor regarding defendant's 40-year history of drinking six to eight beers a day were properly admitted as business records. Sullivan v. State, 248 S.W.3d 746, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Weapons : Use : General Overview

123. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude evidence of a blood test suggesting the victim was intoxicated, and proof of fundamental trustworthiness, or indicia of reliability of the blood test result was missing under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Accessories : Aiding & Abetting

124. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a videotape in a capital murder trial because the understandable portions contained only statements not falling under any recognized exception to the hearsay rule; admitting presence at the scene was not necessarily against an accomplice's penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), as mere presence at the scene of the offense, by itself, is insufficient to support criminal responsibility as a party. Frank v. State, 183 S.W.3d 63, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10647 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : General Overview

125. In a juvenile delinquency proceeding, the mother's testimony recounting the nine-year-old victim's outcry to her about the assault was admissible under the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule; the State was not required to comply with Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 54.031. In re M.A.M., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3826 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 5 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Eyewitness Identification : Photo Identifications

126. Out-of-court identification of appellant was not admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); however, the trial court's erroneous admission of the identification was harmless error because it did not affect appellant's substantial rights or the jury's verdict under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

127. In a suppression hearing, the trial court properly denied defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803 because the rules of evidence did not apply. Diaz v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3203, 2010 WL 1714001 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 28 2010).

128. Court properly relied upon an officer's unsworn hearsay document at defendant's suppression hearing because, although it was better practice to produce the witness or attach the documentary evidence to an affidavit, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 28.01, § 1(6) did not create a "best evidence" rule that mandated such a procedure in a motion to suppress hearing. The offense report included defendant's name, correct offense date, and specific information that coincided with the same basic information to which defendant testified at the hearing, and defendant did not argue that the offense report was, in any way, unauthentic, inaccurate, unreliable, or lacking in credibility. Ford v. State, 305 S.W.3d 530, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1440 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Pleas

129. Trial court did not err in excluding testimony as to defendant's deceased husband's statements to two witnesses that he was the one that should have been arrested for obtaining drugs by a forged prescription rather than defendant, who did not know the prescription was forged, because defendant failed to show that his statements fell within the excited-utterance hearsay exception provided in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The husband made the statement to one witness weeks after defendant was arrested, therefore such a large amount of time had passed that the trial court did not err in implicitly finding that the statements resulted from reason or reflection and were made while the husband was no longer dominated by the emotions or excitement of learning about defendant's arrest. Ex Parte Buffington-Bennett, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3158 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 28

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

130. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

131. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Tests

132. Failure to object under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the witness's testimony did not constitute hearsay. Robinson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9809 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2007).

133. Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to ask the trial court for a limiting instruction regarding the admission of an alleged assault victim's statements to officers because they were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) where the victim called 911 and the victim was distraught when they arrived. Alli v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

134. In a robbery case, trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance due to a failure to object to the testimony of officers about a victim's statement, which was made while he was still bleeding and was frantic, yelling, and frightened, because this would likely have been admitted as an excited utterance. Moreover, there was no prejudice where the officers' testimony added no new details to the victim's testimony at trial. Helmke v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12471, 2013 WL 5570474 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2013).

135. In a robbery case, trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance due to a failure to object to a property release form because this would have likely been admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Helmke v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12471, 2013 WL 5570474 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2013).

136. Trial counsel's performance was not deficient in not objecting on hearsay grounds to the Sexual Abuse Nurse Examiner's report because this rule provided legal grounds for admission of the report. Moreno v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9446 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 31 2013).

137. Assuming that it was hearsay when an officer testified that a trainee signaled to him that there was a gun in the passenger seat, counsel could have reasonably believed that the statement was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Therefore, counsel was not ineffective in failing to object. Bacon v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6765, 2010 WL 3271288 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 19 2010).

138. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

139. Defendant failed to overcome a presumption of reasonable professional assistance of counsel, even if there was a failure to preserve error since defense counsel did not continue to object each time the State asked questions that related to out-of-court statements by a sexual assault victim. Counsel was not questioned about his conduct, and it was possible that a new trial strategy had been formed based on the trial evidence; the victim's testimony had been impeached, her prior statements had been admitted into evidence over hearsay objections, and the jury had heard that defendant had threatened the victim. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1000, 2008 WL 5622655 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 11 2009).

140. In an assault case, defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because there was no reversible error relating to the exclusion of evidence, a victim's medical records could have been admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and through the testimony of another witness, and counsel was not given an opportunity to explain his strategy as it related to the timing of a mistrial motion. Because the claims of ineffectiveness were all alleged errors of omission beyond the record, counsel's performance was not found deficient since defendant failed to show the conduct was so outrageous that no competent attorney would have engaged in it. Fillmore v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6573 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 27, 2008).

141. There was no merit to defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, enhanced by three prior felony convictions, for failing to file a motion to suppress and/or objecting at trial to the admission of the business records of defendant's employer, along with an affidavit of the custodian of records of the employer that tracked verbatim Tex. R. Evid. 902, and even though the records were not physically attached to the affidavit in the clerk's record but were included in the record of exhibits, defendant was not harmed because his girlfriend testified before the jury that he was not at work on the date of the incident. Delgado v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

142. In an aggravated assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to proffer a hearsay objection to the victim's written statement and testimony by a nurse regarding the victim's description of the assault because the record showed that counsel did in fact object to hearsay; moreover, the statement reasonably could be viewed as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because of the victim's emotional state, and because it was cumulative of the nurse's testimony, any error in failing to request a limiting instruction as to the nurse's testimony was harmless. Green v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2381 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 28 2007).

143. Although defendant claimed error in trial counsel's failure during defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial to object to the testimony of a registered nurse and sexual assault nursing examiner relating to the content of her interview with the child complainant, because statements of a child relating to the offense which were made in the course of seeking medical diagnosis or treatment were exempted from the rule precluding hearsay statements, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, counsel's failure to object to admissible evidence did not constitute ineffective representation under the Sixth Amendment. Todd v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 389 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2007).

144. Inmate was not entitled to 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 relief on his claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the prosecution's evidence regarding the inmate's expulsion from middle school, because trial counsel reasonably believed that at least some evidence showing that the inmate had been expelled and possibly the reasons therefore was going to be admitted at trial, and counsel's decision to challenge that evidence on cross-examination was objectively reasonable. Gutierrez v. Dretke, 392 F. Supp. 2d 802, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32496 (W.D. Tex. 2005).

145. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child, his counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the attending nurse's testimony and report, because the hearsay exception set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) applied. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

146. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel's failure to object to the admission of a forensic report was not ineffective assistance because an affidavit from the custodian of the hospital's records was sufficient for compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and a statement made by the victim to a nurse was admissible under Rule 803(4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3596 (Tex. App. Eastland May 12 2005).

147. Defense counsel's failure to lodge a Confrontation Clause objection to a co-offender's out-of-court statements at the time defendant was tried was not outside the broad range of reasonable professional assistance because, at the time defendant was tried, the admission of hearsay did not violate the Confrontation Clause if the statement fell within a firmly rooted hearsay objection or if the statement contained such particularized guarantees of trustworthiness that adversarial testing would be expected to add little to its reliability. Defense counsel's hearsay objection had been overruled on the ground that the co-offender's statements were against his penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

148. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

149. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of defendant's medical records on the ground that the State failed to lay a proper foundation under Tex. R. Evid. 803 where he failed to show that the State would have been unable to establish the elements if counsel had objected. Further, other evidence established that defendant had been infected with herpes prior to the sexual assault. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

150. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding a telephone call where the statements made by the victim to her mother met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, being assaulted, the victim was still crying and visibly upset when officers arrived, and all of her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. In addition, the statements made by the victim's mother to the victim's father also met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, receiving a telephone call from her daughter that she was being assaulted, the evidence indicated that the mother was was crying, and upset as a result of receiving the telephone call, and her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar.

151. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding the victim's fear that defendant would retaliate against her or her family where the statement was offered to show that the victim was afraid, not that defendant would retaliate against her or her family; therefore, it was admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

152. Counsel was not required to object to a hearsay statement of the complainant admitted through the testimony of a police officer during a criminal trial for aggravated assault; the statement was more than likely an excited utterance admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Mathis v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9987 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 24 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

153. Co-arrestee's statements to his girlfriend, later his common-law wife, regarding a large amount of methamphetamine that went undiscovered by officers during a traffic stop were non-testimonial for purposes of the Confrontation Clause and were statements against penal interest and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Walker v. State, 406 S.W.3d 590, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3046, 2013 WL 1154209 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 21 2013).

154. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

155. In a capital murder trial, the Confrontation Clause was violated by the admission of excerpts from an accomplice's written confession, which was made in the course of six meetings with detectives; although the statement might have been admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, it was exactly the kind of testimonial statement prohibited under a Crawford analysis. Springsteen v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2340 (Tex. Crim. App. May 24 2006).

156. In a capital murder trial, there was no error in the admission of a witness's testimony that an accomplice confessed to her; the statement was a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803and did not violate the Confrontation Clause because it was a casual remark to an acquaintance. Springsteen v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2340 (Tex. Crim. App. May 24 2006).

157. Confrontation Clause was violated by the admission of an assault victim's out-of court statements made during a hospital interview by a deputy because a reasonable person in the victim's shoes would have had the capacity to make a testimonial statement and would have been aware that he was being interviewed as part of a criminal investigation; the statement's qualification as an excited utterance did not alter its testimonial nature. Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

158. Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas rejects any per se or categorical approach in determining whether excited utterances may or may not be classified as testimonial hearsay; the excited utterance inquiry focuses on whether the declarant was under the stress of a startling event, while the testimonial hearsay inquiry focuses on whether a reasonable declarant, similarly situated (that is, excited by the stress of a startling event), would have had the capacity to appreciate the legal ramifications of her statement. Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App.

LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

159. Trial court did not err in allowing an officer to testify regarding a witness's out-of-court statements where the statements qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were made in relation to startling events while the witness was still dominated by the emotion caused by those events. Furthermore, even assuming that Crawford barred the admission of the statements, defendant was not harmed by the error because the statements were not important to the State's case for aggravated assault, as the lawfully admitted evidence presented by the State overwhelmingly established defendant's guilt. Arias v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4341 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 8 2005).

160. The Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourteenth District, Houston declines to join those courts that have established a bright-line rule that excited utterances can never be testimonial because the fact that a statement is an excited utterance as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is only one factor that can be considered when determining whether the statement is testimonial for purposes of analyzing a Confrontation Clause claim. Texas courts have held that a declarant's state of excitement can last long after the initial crime and that excited utterances can be made both spontaneously and in response to questioning, therefore each situation should be analyzed individually. Spencer v. State, 162 S.W.3d 877, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3162 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

161. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding the record of the results of a test of defendant's blood-alcohol level sufficiently reliable to be admissible under the business-record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and not to have deprived him of his constitutional right to meaningful confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses against him, because the blood-alcohol test results were part of a group of records produced by the hospital pursuant to a subpoena, and the records were accompanied by the affidavit of the custodian of the hospital's records in which the custodian recited that he kept the records in the regular course of business and that the records were made in the regular course and scope of the hospital's business at or near the time of the event. Furthermore, the surgeon who treated defendant testified that, although he did not conduct or observe the blood draw, he and other doctors routinely relied on such procedures and records in treating patients, and there was no evidence that an unauthorized or unqualified person drew the blood or that the persons who drew or tested the blood did their jobs inappropriately. Blackwell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1816 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

162. Admission of a co-offender's out-of-court statements at defendant's capital murder trial, which were allowed on the ground that they were against the co-offender's penal interest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), did not violate the Sixth Amendment because the co-offender's statements describing his involvement in the murder were not made at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, at a former trial, or as the product of police interrogation, but, instead, were made to friends and fellow gang members at an informal gathering. Thus, the statements were not the product of an ex parte examination or testimonial hearsay. Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

163. Defense counsel's failure to lodge a Confrontation Clause objection to a co-offender's out-of-court statements at the time defendant was tried was not outside the broad range of reasonable professional assistance because, at the time defendant was tried, the admission of hearsay did not violate the Confrontation Clause if the statement fell within a firmly rooted hearsay objection or if the statement contained such particularized guarantees of trustworthiness that adversarial testing would be expected to add little to its reliability. Defense counsel's hearsay objection had been overruled on the ground that the co-offender's statements were against his penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

164. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve his claim that his confrontation rights were violated by a police officer's testimony concerning statements made to him by the complainant where defendant did not make a timely and specific objection in the trial court once the State established that the statements fell within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Crawford v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6472 (Tex. App. Dallas July 21 2004).

165. In a murder case, the trial court did not err in ruling that an article taken from an Internet medical journal was a treatise and, under Tex. Evid. R. 803(18), was not admissible as an exhibit; because cross-examination as to the article was permitted, there was no violation of the constitutional right of confrontation. Sanchez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3783 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2004).

166. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of the complainant in violation of his rights of confrontation and cross-examination where the medical record evidence, including statements given by the complainant to her examining physician and documented in the medical record, was admissible under the exception for statements made for the purposes of diagnosis or treatment; the complainant knew that she was at the office for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment, and the record showed that the examination results were used to diagnose and treat the complainant for a sexually transmitted disease. Joseph v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

167. Where an assault victim, defendant's common law wife, was still in the emotional grip of the assault when she made her statements to the responding officer, so that her out-of-court statements, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), fell under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, but she did not testify, and there was no showing the victim was not available to testify, admission of her statements violated appellant's constitutional right of confrontation. Johnson v. State, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 6689 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 4 2000), criticized by Hudson v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8270 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13, 2001).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Admission of Codefendant Statements

168. Fact that defendant's spouse confessed to the unadjudicated offense of possession of marijuana did not make it any more or less probable that defendant was a party to the offense; thus, it was proper to exclude the spouse's admission. Moore v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5823, 2014 WL 2521537 (Tex. App. Tyler May 30 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Child Witnesses

169. Admission of videotaped interview of a child was not proper because it was hearsay in that Tex. Code. Crim. Proc. art. 38.072 did not authorize the introduction of a videotape of an alleged "outcry," and the videotape did not fall under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the child was not aware that she was seeing the therapist for purposes of medical treatment in connection with the abuse by defendant. However, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the majority of the videotape was merely cumulative of the child's testimony at trial. Lewis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10217 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 16 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Videotaped Testimony

170. Admission of videotaped interview of a child was not proper because it was hearsay in that Tex. Code. Crim. Proc. art. 38.072 did not authorize the introduction of a videotape of an alleged "outcry," and the videotape did not fall under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the child was not aware that she was seeing the therapist for purposes of medical treatment in connection with the abuse by defendant. However, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the majority of the videotape was merely cumulative of the child's testimony at trial. Lewis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10217 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 16 2004).

171. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude a videotape of the scene where victim died while certain portions of the videotape contained testimony falling within the hearsay exception for excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and other portions contained hearsay falling within no recognized exception. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

172. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault, a motion for a mistrial based on hearsay testimony given by defendant's son was denied where an objection was sustained, and the jury was told to disregard the statement. Isenberger v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 11 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Presentation

173. Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.075, requiring corroboration of inmate testimony, did not apply to statements defendant made to the inmates because the statements, even if they were statements against interest, were not confessions or admissions tending to connect him to a robbery, but were requests that the inmates say that an accomplice had committed the robbery alone. Phillips v. State, 436 S.W.3d 333, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. Waco May 15 2014).

174. In a murder trial, the trial court properly excluded, under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), portions of an accomplice's written statement that were uncorroborated. Gonzales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4532 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2005).

175. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, a witness was properly allowed to testify regarding a conversation that she had with a gang member about defendant's order to shoot an ex-member; corroboration was not required for accomplice testimony under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.14 because the witness was not an accomplice as a matter of law, even though she knew of the plan and did not report it to the police, and the jury could have found that she was not an accomplice. The statement of the planned shooter could be used to corroborate the testimony of other coconspirators, and that testimony in turn provided sufficient evidence for the conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 15.02. Maynard v. State, 166 S.W.3d 403, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4003 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : General Overview

176. Court did not err by instructing in a supplemental charge during the punishment phase that the jury could only consider the suicide note for the same limited purpose imposed during the guilt/innocence phase because the note was not reintroduced into evidence and the court was responding to a jury question. Kirchner v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5330 (Tex. App. El Paso May 16 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Curative Instructions

177. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault, a motion for a mistrial based on hearsay testimony given by defendant's son was denied where an objection was sustained, and the jury was told to disregard the statement. Isenberger v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 11 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

178. In a trial for unlawfully carrying a weapon, there was no reversible error in denying a request for a limiting instruction in the jury charge as to hearsay statements relating to whether defendant had a gun; if the trial court admitted the statements as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the statements were admissible for all purposes and were not subject to a limiting instruction. Cockrell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8940 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 18 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Use of Particular Evidence

179. Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.075, requiring corroboration of inmate testimony, did not apply to statements defendant made to the inmates because the statements, even if they were statements against interest, were not confessions or admissions tending to connect him to a robbery, but were requests that the inmates say that an accomplice had committed the robbery alone. Phillips v. State, 436 S.W.3d 333, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. Waco May 15 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : General Overview

180. At defendant's probation revocation hearing, the contents of his probation file were admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although defendant's current probation officer did not have personal knowledge of all the entries in the probation file, he testified that defendant's former probation officer prepared the file and had personal knowledge of the facts recorded in the file. Canseco v. State, 199 S.W.3d 437, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4664 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

181. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

182. At a probation revocation hearing, a witness who did not personally supervise defendant was properly allowed to testify from his probation file. A predicate was laid for the business records hearsay exception when the witness testified that probation officers kept notes when they met with probationers and entries were made in the probationer's record within 48 hours Jefferson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11796 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 29 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Revocation : Proceedings

183. In a proceeding to revoke defendant's community supervision for burglary of a habitation, the State offered an exhibit of defendant's community supervision records from Louisiana; the trial court overruled defendant's hearsay objection and admitted the exhibit as a business record and a government record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Clay v. State, 361 S.W.3d 762, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1255, 2012 WL 503513 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2012).

184. Under the business record exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), appellant's probation record was properly admitted for the trial court's consideration because, at the hearing on the motion to revoke, appellant's probation officer testified that the "chronos" in appellant's file, which contained the chronology of events set out in the records from the probation department, were recorded at or near the time of the occurrence or event that gave rise to them by a person with personal knowledge of the "chronos" events, and that the files were kept in the ordinary course of the probation department. Norman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5391, 2011 WL 2732673 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2011).

185. Even if the "chronos" in appellant's file, which contained the chronology of events set out in the records from the probation department, were not admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the evidence of the six other violations of probation was sufficient to revoke appellant's probation. Norman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5391, 2011 WL 2732673 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

186. Two pen packets were properly authenticated and were not hearsay because they were accompanied by affidavits carrying the state seal and certifying that they were true and correct copies of original records maintained in the regular course of business; in addition, the packets contained defendant's fingerprint cards and other identifying information. Carr v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13396, 2013 WL 5873299 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 30 2013).

187. Complainant's diary excerpt was admitted during the punishment phase of the trial, when it was no longer in dispute that defendant had sexually abused the complainant; the statement was admissible under the "state of mind" exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was not offered to prove the fact remembered or believed, but as punishment evidence to show the complainant's state of mind while recovering from the abuse, and evidence of the physical pain and emotional turmoil defendant inflicted on the complainant. Spurgeon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4843, 2011 WL 2520280 (Tex. App. Dallas June 27 2011).

188. In a murder case, a trial court did not err by admitting testimony regarding defendant's behavior at a Texas Youth Commission residential treatment facility because such evidence fell under the public records exception for hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(A); the State introduced the testimony from defendant's counselor regarding defendant's violent physical acts, gang activity, and intimidation. The objected-to portions of the testimony were merely sterile recitations of defendant's offenses of the type that had been held admissible at the punishment phase of trial. Bautista v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6806, 2009 WL 2622405 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 27 2009).

189. Where petitioner death row inmate argued ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel, during the penalty phase, sought and obtained admission of a psychiatric report on the inmate prepared by a doctor years earlier when the inmate was 15 years old, and that the report suggested the inmate was a future danger, the report was not hearsay admitted in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment because the report was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), (16), and further, the inmate's statements in the report as to his criminal activity did not violate the Fifth Amendment because the psychiatric consultation was not a custodial interrogation; the ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed. Coble v. Dretke, 417 F.3d 508, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14438 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 444 F.3d 345, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 7171 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

190. Trial court did not err during the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial in finding that the statements of two of his alleged prior victims were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), considering the apparent emotional state of the women when police officers encountered them. One officer testified that the first victim was upset and very emotional when he saw her and that she was still crying while she answered his questions, and the other officer described the second victim as being very upset, very emotionally distraught, and almost hysterical. Marc v. State, 166 S.W.3d 767, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4228 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

191. In a criminal prosecution, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a prior conviction for purposes of enhancing punishment; because it was admitted pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the business records exception to the hearsay rule, rather than Tex. R. Evid. 803(22), the public document exception. If the trial judge's decision is correct on any theory of law applicable to the case, it will be sustained. Macias v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS

10996 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 8 2004).

192. In the punishment phase of defendant's murder case, a court did not err by admitting medical records where a registered nurse testified that she treated defendant's boyfriend for a stab wound in 2000, she recognized the medical record, she was one of the registered nurses involved in the trauma, her handwriting was on the record, she had probably directed a co-worker to take notes, and she signed the bottom of the record. The nurse testified that the medical records were kept as part of the records of the hospital. Williams v. State, 176 S.W.3d 476, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Restitution

193. Trial court did not err in allowing a county investigator to testify about restitution records where he was a "qualified witness" pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803 because he showed his personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were created and maintained. Cooper v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1899 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

194. Even if the trial court erred by admitting the December 2010 judgment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(22), other evidence showed that the patient had been convicted of indecency with a child by contact; thus, the order of civil commitment was proper as the patient had been convicted of more than one qualifying sexually violent offense under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.002(8)(A), 841.003(b). In re Commitment of Hernandez, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806, 2011 WL 6229575 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 15 2011).

195. Where a trial court erroneously admitted statements that were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) as spontaneous statements, the State filed to comply with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, which would have prevented introduction of statements of outcry witnesses; the admission of the hearsay evidence probably had an injurious influence on the jury's deliberation and therefore affected a substantial right of defendant, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, such that reversal and remand for a new trial was warranted. Hughes v. State, 128 S.W.3d 247, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Tyler 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

196. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in allowing the arresting officer to testify about statements made by an undercover officer; although defendant made a hearsay objection before the testimony was given, defendant did not renew his objection when the hearsay statement exceeded the present-sense-impression exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Johnson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4286 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 2 2005).

197. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant failed to preserve his Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) complaint for review where he objected to a witness's testimony regarding statements made by defendant's alleged accomplice on relevance grounds but did not object on hearsay grounds. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

198. In a domestic violence case, defendant's objection to the State's trial assertion that a 911 tape was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), on the ground that a sufficient predicate had not been made to show a present sense impression, without stating in what regard the predicate was deficient, was too general to preserve the issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Warfel v. State, 2005 Tex. App.

LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

199. Admission of defendant's jail records in defendant's murder trial was proper under the business records exception to the hearsay rule because the records were not prepared for purposes of litigation and conviction, but they were instead part of a record routine for objective observation purposes. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

200. In reviewing a conviction for child sexual assault, the court would not consider complaints about outcry testimony that defendant raised for the first time on appeal. Turner v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8384 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 16 2004).

201. In a criminal trial, where defendant claimed that the trial court erred in excluding a handwritten note allegedly written by an assistant district attorney, defendant failed to preserve his argument that the note was admissible as a statement against interest where defendant did not offer the note as evidence at trial. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

202. In a criminal appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the appellate court would not consider defendant's argument that the trial court erred by allowing into evidence a medical report and testimony of a pediatrician who examined the victim. Defendant's argument that the evidence was not made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment did not comport with his objection at trial; therefore, it was not preserved for review. Frueboes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 31 2004).

203. In a trial for indecency with a child under the age of 17 years, defendant objected, during a psychiatric witness's voir dire, to testimony regarding the complainant's statements about one incident; the separate objections under Tex. R. Evid. 403, 404(b), 602, 803(1) and 803(4), were overruled and appellant was not required to later repeat the individual objections before the jury. However, defendant argued on appeal that it was error to admit the hearsay statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis when the child did not have personal knowledge of the incident, in that the child was not sure whether he was touched by a penis or a finger; this argument appeared to be a unique blend of Tex. R. Evid. 602 and 803(4), which was not presented to the trial court with sufficient specificity to preserve the objection and which was also contrary to the law because defendant was not challenging the lack of personal knowledge by the witnesses. Ramirez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1063 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 5 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

204. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred when it admitted the hearsay testimony of a pediatrician because the victim's statements to the pediatrician were not made for the purpose of medical treatment but were instead made for the purpose of a criminal investigation, because defendant failed to object to any other portion of the pediatrician's testimony concerning what the victim told her, defendant did not preserve error. Gonzalez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 208, 2014 WL 97295 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 9 2014).

205. Defendant in an indecency with a child case did not preserve an argument that hearsay evidence was admissible under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule because he failed to argue in the trial court that a relevant hearsay exception applied. Peace v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10631, 2012 WL 6634691 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 21 2012).

206. At defendant's trial for theft, the trial court admitted an exhibit containing photocopies of credit receipts and purchase orders as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); defendant objected under the best evidence rule. Because defendant did not challenge the admission of the exhibit on the grounds that the testifying witness did not have knowledge of how the record was prepared, the error was not preserved for review. Thompson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4019, 2011 WL 2112810 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 26 2011).

207. During defendant's trial for sexual assault, the trial court admitted hearsay testimony from the complainant's friend as to details of her telephone conversation with the complainant as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); because defendant also explored the conversation and the complainant's emotional state during it on cross examination, defendant failed to preserve his hearsay objection for appellate review. Jennings v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10241, 2010 WL 5392684 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 29 2010).

208. Defendant failed to preserve an argument relating to the admission of hearsay statements under the excited utterance exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though defense counsel made a timely, specific hearsay objection to one question, because he did not object to other questions that elicited the same or similar responses and did not obtain a running objection or a court ruling outside the jury's presence, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Peralta v. State, 338 S.W.3d 598, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9436 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 30 2010).

209. Defendant preserved for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by admitting the victim's counselor's hearsay testimony because at trial, defendant objected to the counselor's testimony on the ground that it would constitute hearsay; he asserted his objection in a timely manner and with sufficient specificity to make the trial court aware of his complaint. Taylor v. State, 263 S.W.3d 304, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6198 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

210. On appeal of defendant's conviction for two counts of capital murder, he claimed that the trial court erred in allowing inadmissible hearsay accounts from his disciplinary records of uncharged prison misconduct; defendant contended the reports were inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), as matters observed by "other law enforcement personnel. Because his trial objections did not comport with the specific claim he raised on appeal, defendant failed to preserve the error for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Robles v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

211. Defendant in a child sexual abuse case waived his objection to testimony by the child's school counselor on the grounds that she was not a licensed professional counselor as required by Tex. R. Evid. 803, because he did not raise his objection at trial. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

212. Trial court had not erroneously admitted the medical report prepared by the doctor who examined the child, a victim of sexual assault, because, as defendant argued, the State did not establish the proper predicate for the business records exception; defense counsel's objection "Just object to its entry, Your Honor. Don't feel like the proper foundation and predicate has been laid for its entry," did not inform the trial court of that deficiency. Weaver v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9996 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

213. Murder defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 803 regarding the exclusion of evidence that a third party had a murder plan because defendant failed to sponsor the evidence on that ground. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5214 (Tex. App. Dallas June 19 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Admission of Evidence

214. Trial court did not err by allowing an expert witness to testify to statements the victim made to him regarding the allegations against defendant because they were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, as the victim made the statements to the expert for the purpose of the victim's medical diagnosis or treatment; defendant failed to point to hearsay statements that were allegedly made by other witnesses. Bailey v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 208 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 11 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : General Overview

215. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

216. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting an officer to testify about a witness's statements because the record supported a finding that the witness, who was a friend of the victim, was still dominated by the emotions and fear of the event as the officer, who arrived only six to eleven minutes after being dispatched to the scene, testified that the victim was upset, excited, and nervous and was running around yelling that his friend had just been shot. Reyes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4776 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 27 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

217. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the victim's counselor because the State met its burden to make the record reflect that truth-telling was a vital component of the victim's counseling and that he was aware that that was the case. In re H.L.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3081 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2014).

218. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that defendant failed to lay sufficient predicate to show that the victim's previous statement was admissible as a past recollection record because there was nothing in the record to indicate that she knew she was being recorded at the time she made the statement or that she subsequently verified the accuracy of her statement while she could still recall the relevant events. Mury v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12662, 2013 WL 5856337 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 11 2013).

219. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting testimony from the victim's widow as a present sense impression because the victim's statement during his telephone conversation with his wife were nonreflective and described the event he was perceiving. Dean v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11011 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 29 2013).

220. Trial court did not err by allowing a witness's prior statement to be read in the record as a recorded recollection because the witness testified that she could not recall significant details of what occurred due to the passage of time. Sanchez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10155 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 15 2013).

221. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a statement defendant made to his mother that he stabbed a guy who came after him with a stick because it was not an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), as at least 15 to 20 minutes passed between the stabbing and the statement while defendant presumably walked back to his mother's house, sufficient time in which he could have formulated a story about why he stabbed the victim. Blue v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7895, 2012 WL 4095988 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 19 2012).

222. Trial court did not err by admitting an officer's testimony about the complainant's out-of-court statements under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because shortly before the complainant made the statement he had been the victim of an armed robbery at gunpoint and, according to the testimony of two witnesses, this experience caused the complainant to be very excited; the statement was related to the circumstances of the occurrence preceding it as in the statement the complainant identified defendant as one of the robbers. Even if the trial court had erred by admitting the testimony the error would have been harmless because similar statements were also testified to by two other witnesses. Amador v. State, 376 S.W.3d 339, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 16 2012).

223. Trial court did not err by admitting the video recording of the police officer's interview with the victim at the scene of the investigation under the excited utterance exception to hearsay because when the victim was speaking to the officer, she had to be calmed several times and the officer testified she was very upset and crying. Alanis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5232, 2012 WL 2501026 (Tex. App. Tyler June 29 2012).

224. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a statement made by defendant to an officer at the time of his arrest following the foot chase, that he ran because he thought he had outstanding warrants or tickets, because given the circumstances under which the statement was made, the trial court reasonably could have found the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) to be inapplicable. The trial court could have concluded that defendant knew he was being chased under the suspicion of exposing himself to young girls on a playground, giving him enough time to think about his story. Ingram v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 260 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 12 2012).

225. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the sexual assault nurse examiner regarding hearsay statements made by the victim under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because: (1) the 16-year-old victim was seen by the nurse in an emergency room setting less than 48 hours after the assaultive conduct ended; (2) there was nothing in the record to negate that the victim possessed the necessary awareness of the need to be truthful during the medical history portion of the exam; (3) the nurse specifically testified that obtaining the history from the victim was necessary for medical treatment; and (4) based on the victim's statements that she had been sexually abused over an extended period of time by more than one assailant and the abuse included penetration of the female sexual organ and anus, the nurse examined those areas of the victim's body. Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7151, 2011 WL 3848985 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

226. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the uncle's testimony under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because, even though a day had elapsed between the assault and the victim's meeting her uncle, the uncle testified that in her initial telephone the victim was very upset, sobbing, and hysterical, and that when they met she was still upset and crying before telling him that defendant had inflicted her injuries. Walls v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7109, 2011 WL 3840992 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

227. Trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statement to a police officer as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because a reasonable person could have concluded that she made her statement while still dominated by the emotion, fear, and pain of the startling event as only a short amount of time had elapsed between the event and the officer's arrival, where he found the victim visibly upset and that her body bore signs of injury. Stoltz v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5738, 2011 WL 3199337 (Tex. App. El Paso July 27 2011).

228. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an animal control officer's testimony concerning what the baby's father said to her after he was told that the baby had been bitten by a dog because it was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The officer testified that the father was screaming and crying and had collapsed on the floor shortly before making the statement. Nadal v. State, 348 S.W.3d 304, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

229. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a detective's testimony about the victim's statement because it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though one hour had passed between the crime and the statement, as the detective described the victim as very visibly shaken, very upset, scared, excited, and crying. Dixon v. State, 358 S.W.3d 250, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1745 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

230. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the victim's second 911 call as an excited utterance because the victim's voice was quivering and she sounded very upset, scared, and excited. Dixon v. State, 358 S.W.3d 250, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1745 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

231. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit the victim's statement to her employer three days before the accident because her statement of "whatever" in response to termination for failing a drug test was not an admission of drug use and therefore the statement was not admissible as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Somers v. State, 333 S.W.3d 747, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9384 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 24 2010).

232. Within minutes of yelling for help, the victim, who was still shaken up, recounted to a witness and company that defendant had hit him in the face when he became angry at the victim for not wanting to spend any more money on beer at a bar; a reasonable person could conclude that the victim made the statements about the bar attack while still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the startling event that provoked the victim to flee his home only moments before; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the victim's statements into evidence under the excited utterance exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803. Bermudez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7629 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 20 2007).

233. Operator for 911 testified that she received a call at about 1:30 in the morning from the victim's mother and there was a lot of yelling, some type of disturbance; the operator finally got the victim's mother to talk to her on the phone and she told the operator that the victim, her 15-year-old daughter, had accused defendant, her step-father, of touching her, that the victim was upset and ran out of the house, and then the victim's mother got off the phone to go find the victim outside; the operator's description of the 911 call showed that the victim's mother was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event where defendant "groped" her daughter when she made the telephone call; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the testimony into evidence as an excited utterance. Mestas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6947 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2007).

234. When defendant touched the 15-year-old victim for the second time, she screamed and went into her mother's bedroom; after the victim told her mother what had happened, her mother went into the living room screaming and yelling at defendant; thus, the mother's statements were made immediately after learning defendant had "groped" her 15-year-old daughter; because the mother was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event when she made the statements, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the complained-of testimony into evidence as an excited utterance. Mestas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6947 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2007).

235. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the hearsay testimony of the victim's counselor under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim specifically testified that she was receiving therapy for post-traumatic stress disorder and the record supported the inference that the victim understood that she needed to be truthful with the counselor to receive proper treatment and that the facts surrounding the victim's encounter with defendant were reasonably pertinent to the counselor's treatment of the victim for her issues concerning the resolution of the sexual assault. Taylor v. State, 263 S.W.3d 304, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6198 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

236. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit a police report into evidence because the portions defendant attempted to offer, transcribed statements made by a prospective informant, were not factual findings and therefore were outside the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 803; the statements were not shown to be otherwise exempt from the hearsay rule. Ramirez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5825 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2007).

237. Trial court did not err by admitting a detective's testimony recounting statements the victim made to him shortly after the robbery under the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because an officer who spoke to the victim prior to the interview, stated that she was a little bit distraught and visibly shaken but had begun to calm down. The detective testified that he spoke with the victim 45 to 50 minutes after the robbery and she was still visibly shaken and upset, and looked like she had been crying. Young v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11371 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 21 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

238. In defendant's murder case, the court erred during the punishment phase by admitting evidence of defendant's jail record because it was a report of crimes and acts of misconduct reported to or observed by law enforcement personnel, and reflected law enforcement personnel's rulings regarding culpability and the punishment imposed by law enforcement personnel. Kennedy v. State, 193 S.W.3d 645, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2517 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

239. Trial court did not err in allowing an officer to testify regarding a witness's out-of-court statements where the statements qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were made in relation to startling events while the witness was still dominated by the emotion caused by those events. Furthermore, even assuming that Crawford barred the admission of the statements, defendant was not harmed by the error because the statements were not important to the State's case for aggravated assault, as the lawfully admitted evidence presented by the State overwhelmingly established defendant's guilt. Arias v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4341 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 8 2005).

240. Merely because a declarant is excited, the statements made do not lose their character as testimonial statements subject to the Confrontation Clause. Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 660, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3773 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

241. Although a court erred by admitting an officer's statement as an excited utterance because the victim's statements were not spontaneous, the error was harmless because the officer's testimony was cumulative of eyewitness testimony that implicated defendant in the assault. Oveal v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 164 S.W.3d 735, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3517 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

242. In an injury to a child case, while the trial court erred in admitting the gang intelligence form into evidence as it constituted matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel and was therefore not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule, the error was harmless as the same information was subsequently introduced, without objection, during an officer's testimony. Furthermore, any error was waived as no objection was made as to the officer testimony regarding defendant's involvement in a gunfight or an assault. Aranda v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10370 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2004).

243. Statements did not fall within the excited utterance hearsay exception because the speaker, although angry, was not dominated by emotions, and he made his statements in response to an officer's questions, not spontaneously. The admission did not affect defendant's substantial rights, however, because the evidence was cumulative and other evidence overwhelmingly supported the conviction for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Reyes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9717 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 3 2004).

244. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

245. Where the victim did not disclose until she was 18 years of age that defendant fathered her son when she was 12 years of age, the victim's belated outcry statement did not qualify as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); while the original assault was undoubtedly shocking, the record did not reflect that defendant was still, six years later, dominated by the excited state produced by the attack. Harvey v. State, 123 S.W.3d 623, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9837 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

246. Out-of-court identification of appellant was not admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); however, the trial court's erroneous admission of the identification was harmless error because it did not affect appellant's substantial rights or the jury's verdict under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

247. Officer's testimony that a codefendant would have cooperated but feared for his life was hearsay because the codefendant's mental state was evidenced by inference and therefore did not qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3); but, because the statement was irrelevant to prove any fact or element of the charge against defendant, a trial court's admission of the hearsay testimony was harmless error pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Barnes v. State, 56 S.W.3d 221, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 4834 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

248. Defendant lost any constitutional right to confront his mother in court when he killed her; the admission of the evidence that defendant argued should have been excluded did not contribute to his conviction or sentence and was otherwise harmless as the unchallenged evidence supporting the elements of the offense of capital murder was overwhelming. Samuelson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9222, 2014 WL 4179440 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 21 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Cumulative Errors

249. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

250. In defendant's trial for theft from a store, although defendant objected to the admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) of a receipt prepared by the store to show the value of the items, and the objection was overruled, a witness subsequently testified without objection as to the value of the stolen property, rendering any error harmless. Mays v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7330, 2014 WL 3058462 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2014).

251. At defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not commit reversible error by overruling his hearsay objection to testimony from an outcry witness who said that the victim told her defendant had raped her several years earlier. Even if the trial court erred in admitting the testimony as an excited utterance because it was made years after the first assault, the same facts were received elsewhere without objection. Washington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 933 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2014).

252. In a case involving indecency with a child, it was not necessary to determine if a trial court erred by allowing a victim's brother to testify about the event surrounding the victim's revelation where the State argued that Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) applied because the same evidence was admitted through the victim's testimony and her mother's testimony. The admission of inadmissible evidence was harmless error if other evidence that proved the same fact was properly admitted elsewhere. In re C. D., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7591, 2013 WL 3203220 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 20 2013).

253. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

254. Even if the trial court erred by admitting a jail book in sheet as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the error was harmless because no party emphasized the unexplained divergence of dates between the date defendant was arrested and the date he bonded out. Crutchfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1942 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2013).

255. Victim's statements to her mother that she and defendant had engaged in sexual intercourse and oral sex on multiple occasions were not excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were not made suddenly or immediately after the victim heard defendant refer to her as a liar and a whore, but rather were made after she spoke to her boyfriend who encouraged her to talk to her mother. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the statements as excited utterances, the error was harmless because the State introduced evidence from a nurse who examined the victim after she made the allegations and defendant did not object when the nurse testified about the history of the sexual relationship between the victim and defendant. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

256. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

257. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio

Nov. 7 2012).

258. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting the ATM receipt as the State did not lay a business records exception predicate, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); however, the error was harmless, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, in light of the other abundant evidence of defendant's guilt. Gatewood v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9302, 2011 WL 5903656 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 23 2011).

259. Even if it was error to admit, under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), a codefendant's plea stipulation implicating defendant, the evidence was cumulative of the codefendant's testimony; therefore, defendant's substantial rights were not affected, as required for reversal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2. Zuniga v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4579, 2011 WL 2435417 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2011).

260. Even assuming that a trial court abused its discretion by admitting alleged hearsay statements regarding defendant's prior relationship with the murder victim, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights because: (1) the jury heard defendant testify to some of the same facts as the other witnesses, specifically that he and the victim fought, they argued over drugs, the victim filed charges against him, the victim sought a protective order against him, and he threw a rock at the victim; (2) defendant did not dispute that he had threatened the victim or been physically abusive in the past; (3) during closing argument, the State did not emphasize the prior instances of abuse, but focused on the events surrounding the victim's death; and (4) the record contained other evidence from which the jury could conclude that defendant committed the offense of murder. Sanders v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2535, 2011 WL 1304882 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 6 2011).

261. In a trial for child sexual assault, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) in allowing a nurse examiner to testify to hearsay statements made by the complainant was harmless because the evidence was cumulative of testimony from the complainant and a forensic examiner that was admitted without objection. Duran v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9058, 2010 WL 4611769 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 16 2010).

262. In a trial for child sexual assault, no prejudice resulted from any error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) in admitting a nurse's testimony that the complainant identified defendant as her abuser during a sexual assault examination because the same evidence came in later through the testimony of a forensic interviewer. Starnes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3715 (Tex. App. Dallas May 19 2010).

263. In a trial for driving while intoxicated (DWI), any hearsay error under Tex. R. Evid. 803 did not require reversal because the admission of a request by defendant's husband for the police to help in keeping defendant out of a DWI was harmless, given the extensive testimony tending to show that defendant had operated a motor vehicle while intoxicated. Snokhous v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3629, 2010 WL 1930088 (Tex. App. Austin May 14 2010).

264. In a prosecution of defendant for sexual assault of a child, even if the trial court erred in admitting into evidence during the punishment phase an order setting defendant's bail and imposing conditions pending trial and a motion to find defendant's bond insufficient, the error was harmless. Even if the documents themselves were inadmissible, a community supervision officer could testify as to their substance. Segler v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1727, 2010 WL 864396 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 11 2010).

265. Assuming that the fourth requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) had to be restrictively construed, it was error under Rule 803(5) to admit a witness's statement to police that he saw defendant pull a gun and that defendant had said he was going to kill the victim because the witness testified to the contrary at trial. However, the statement was useful for impeachment and partially admissible as a statement against interest. Spearman v. State, 307 S.W.3d

463, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1026 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 10 2010).

266. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021 and indecency with a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, although defendant complained of the trial court's overruling of his hearsay objection to the State's question of what the victim told a professional about defendant's conduct, the admission of the testimony during the direct examination of the forensic interviewer was not harmful because it did no more than reiterate facts admitted elsewhere and even included testimony supportive of the defense. Moreover, even assuming, without deciding, that it was inadmissible hearsay, the substance of the complained-of testimony of the forensic interviewer was admitted elsewhere without limitation or an objection preserved on appeal, and, thus, the error, if any, of the trial court in admitting the statement of the forensic interviewer did not affect a substantial right of defendant and had to be disregarded. Drake v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2010 WL 348365 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 31 2010).

267. In a sexual abuse case, error, if any, in allowing hearsay testimony regarding defendant's sexual assault of the child victim's younger sister was harmless because defendant did not challenge other testimony containing the same facts, but of a significantly more descriptive and incriminating nature. Vivid testimony specifically setting forth the nature of defendant's "touching" of the sister was not challenged. Murphy v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6226, 2009 WL 2450990 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 12 2009).

268. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

269. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, although the admission of the trooper's inventory report was error because the inventory report on defendant's pickup was done by the arresting officer, directly implicating Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B)'s concern with the adversarial nature of the process and was done at the scene by the arresting officer, the admission of that evidence was harmless. Whether defendant had beer in his pickup was not hotly contested and was proven by other properly admitted evidence. Russell v. State, 290 S.W.3d 387, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3317 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 13 2009).

270. Trial court did not err in admitting jail disciplinary reports under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), with the exception of reports that contained inadmissible testimonial statements. However, admission of the testimonial statements was harmless because although the reports were read aloud to the jury, they were never emphasized again by the State in any way. Smith v. State, 297 S.W.3d 260, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 527 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

271. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err when it overruled his objection and admitted into evidence the complete video recording of the child's forensic interview because defendant conceded that the accusations made by the child and specific details provided by her during the video recording of her forensic interview were consistent with her trial testimony. Even if the trial court erred when it admitted the video recording, the error was harmless because the same facts were proved by the child's properly admitted testimony. Estrada v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 387, 2009 WL 144327 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 22 2009).

272. As to a hearsay objection in a sexual assault case, defendant only specifically stated his intended testimony for the first time on appeal; defendant apparently sought to introduce testimony to show a victim's state of mind as it related to consent. Therefore, there was no error in sustaining a hearsay objection raised by the State; even if the trial court and the State had understood the specifics of the testimony that defendant intended to elicit, there was no harm shown because substantially similar testimony was later received into evidence. Zuniga v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6905 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 10 2008).

273. In a trial for child sexual abuse, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) was harmless, within the meaning of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), when the trial court admitted a photograph of an accusation that the complainant wrote on the chalkboard in a therapy session. The single out-of-court statement could not have had more than a slight effect on the jury's assessment of the complainant's credibility, given that the complainant testified in court explicitly describing the sexual assault. Consuelo v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6203 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 15 2008).

274. In defendant's theft case, although the State failed to lay a proper predicate for admission of receipts under the business records exception because there was no evidence that the information contained in the exhibits came from a "person with knowledge" of that information, the error was harmless. The exhibits showed that a computer and a cash register, respectively, were charged to the theft victim, and that evidence was cumulative of other testimony. Underwood v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5936 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 7 2008).

275. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

276. Even if the trial court erred by admitting an officer's testimony that witnesses had told him that the assailant was wearing a tan jacket, the error was harmless because its admission had no effect on the jury's verdict. Two witnesses knew defendant prior to witnessing his struggle with the victim, one witness gave an officer directions to defendant's home, and although two officers noticed a tan jacket on the hood of a car in the driveway of defendant's home, another officer found defendant inside a shed in the back of the house. Matez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4418 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 7 2007).

277. In defendant's burglary case, a court erred by allowing one officer to testify that a finger print, in his opinion, belonged to defendant because the testimony necessarily revealed the substance of the third officer's conclusion, namely that in his opinion, the print belonged to defendant; under Tex. R. Evid. 803, that was hearsay; however, the error was harmless because the testimony was cumulative of other testimony regarding the conclusion. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

278. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, there was no error in the admission as a present-sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803 of a statement that defendant had been drinking all day; the contemporaneous event was an argument between defendant and the declarant that concluded moments before the declarant, seeking to explain defendant's behavior, made the statement; further, any error in the admission was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because there was other evidence in the record to establish defendant's intoxication. Brdecka v. State,

2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2072 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 13 2007).

279. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting statements that he made to his therapist because such statements were not made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment as contemplated by Tex. R. Evid. 803, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the statements, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the child sexual assault complainant provided explicit detailed testimony about the sexual assaults; further, there was properly admitted evidence that the complainant told his school counselor about the assaults. Romero v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9835 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 14 2006).

280. Even if the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the medical records of the sexual assault of the 10-year-old complainant under Tex. R. Evid. 803, any error would be harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the medical records established the same facts that the jury had already heard during complainant's testimony and a videotape of her interview with a detective. Davidson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

281. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

282. Appellate court did not need to address whether a trial court abused its discretion in admitting a child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule when, even if it did, any error was harmless because: (1) the complainant testified to the same facts that were the subject of her hearsay statements to the counselor; (2) there were eight witnesses other than the counselor who testified to some extent about the complainant's allegations; (3) the counselor was the second-to-last witness to testify for the State, and the hearsay statements that the counselor testified to were merely cumulative of the testimony that the jury had already heard; (4) the vast majority of the counselor's testimony was not hearsay; and (5) the State did not mention the counselor in its opening statement and only briefly mentioned the counselor's testimony in its closing argument, which suggested that his testimony was not an integral part of the State's case. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : General Overview

283. Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant committed the offense of aggravated assault by intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causing either bodily injury or serious bodily injury to his wife by choking or strangling her with his hand, and that he used his hand as a deadly weapon during the commission of the offense; physician, in a prior trial, had testified as to the extent of the wife's injuries; the wife's statements to a paramedic at the time of the incident were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and the wife was still suffering from the residual effects of the injuries, which included a stroke. Wesber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3376 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Appeals : Certificate of Appealability

284. Trial court properly admitted a statement by a witness to police that defendant had shot a motorist; the statement was an exited utterance under Rule 803(2) of the Texas Rules of Criminal Evidence, and counsel was not ineffective under the Sixth Amendment for not opposing its admission. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 204 Fed.

Appx. 489, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28253 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

285. In federal habeas proceedings, a state prisoner did not make a substantial showing of the denial of his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation by the district court's admission of an accomplice's statement implicating the prisoner as the perpetrator of a murder as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the remarks were blurted out after the accomplice fled a routine traffic stop, was chased by police officers, and was apprehended while officers were inventorying weapons found in his vehicle. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

286. Admission of an accomplice's statement and a prisoner's jail disciplinary records at trial did not violate the prisoner's Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights under Crawford because both pieces of evidence were admitted under the prevailing law at the time of the prisoner's trial. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Cognizable Issues : Ineffective Assistance

287. Jail disciplinary records fell under the business record exception to the bar on hearsay statements under Rule 803(6) of the Texas Rules of Criminal Evidence. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 204 Fed. Appx. 489, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28253 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Review : Specific Claims : Evidentiary Errors

288. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. A police officer's testimony about what the victim told him the day after the rape was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the victim was still very upset, crying, and traumatized at the time. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

289. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. A nurse's testimony about what the rape victim told her about the assault was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the victim made the statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Review : Standards of Review : Contrary & Unreasonable Standard

290. District court denied a state inmate's petition under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254, challenging his conviction and sentence for murder, because the inmate did not show he was denied effective assistance of counsel or that a state habeas court made findings that were contrary to clearly established federal law when it rejected the inmate's claims; although the inmate claimed that the trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation when it admitted hearsay testimony, the district court found that the trial court properly admitted testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance; even assuming arguendo that the trial court erred, the error was harmless in light of the other incriminating evidence the State introduced. Turnbow v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77098 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 17 2007).

Environmental Law : Hazardous Wastes & Toxic Substances : Cleanup

291. In the State's suit to recover costs incurred under Tex. Nat. Res. Code Ann. § 91.113(f) in cleaning up a company's abandoned salt water disposal facility, the trial court did not err by admitting the State's documentary evidence showing the amounts spent by the Railroad Commission to clean up the site as the documents were not summaries prepared for trial, but documents prepared by and filed with the Commission reporting and compiling the amounts paid. Martin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6167 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 3 2007).

Evidence : General Overview

292. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a 12-year-old boy's translation of his deaf aunt's statement to him that she communicated through sign language as hearsay because defendant failed to establish the nephew's competency, proficiency, and reliability as a translator of sign language. Moland v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1062, 2012 WL 403885 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 9 2012).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

293. In defendant's theft case, a court properly admitted deposit slips from bank and credit card records under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the records were authenticated with an affidavit executed by the custodian of records for each institution and properly admitted; Rule 803(6) clearly permitted the testimony of the custodian of records to be offered by affidavit. Garza v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7430, 2012 WL 6042579 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2012).

294. Summary judgment in favor of the customer was proper, because the bank failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a contract existed or whether the customer authorized the charges to the credit card account, when the bank's only summary judgment evidence was inadmissible; since the bank's affidavit neither named the affiant in the body of the affidavit or the jurat, and the affiant's signature was completely illegible, the bank's affidavit did not substantially comply with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) and was insufficient to establish the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Fia Card Services, N.A. v. Frausto, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9924, 2011 WL 6260653 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 15 2011).

295. Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude the bank witness's affidavit and attachments, because the witness's testimony adequately demonstrated the basis for her personal knowledge of the manner in which the bank kept its records and the other facts to which she testified; Texas Rules of Evidence did not require that the qualified witness who provided the predicate for the admission of business records be their creator or have personal knowledge of the contents of the record, when the witness was required only to have personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were kept. Damron v. Citibank (s.D.) N.A., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7054, 2010 WL 3377777 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2010).

296. In defendant's murder case, a court properly admitted evidence of the victim's handwritten letters because it was admissible as relating to the victim's state of mind, and the State authenticated the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on the letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

297. In the slaughterhouses' appeal of the trial court's issuance of a permanent injunction and award of expenses to the State, pursuant to Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 433.099, the appellate court rejected the slaughterhouses' claim that the trial court erred by admitting the State's exhibits, which included handwritten compilation of expenses incurred by the State, because a Department of State Health Services representative testified that the exhibits were a record regularly kept in the course of business, that he was a custodian of the record, that it was the regular practice of the Department to keep such records, and that the records were made at or near the time of the occurrence by a person with knowledge or by a person furnished with such knowledge; therefore the State laid the necessary predicate for admission of the exhibits as properly authenticated business records. Qaddura v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9209 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 26 2006).

298. In a domestic violence case, the trial court did not err by admitting a 911 tape of a call from the victim as a business record; a 911 tape is admissible as a business record if properly authenticated, and the custodian testified that the tape was made in the ordinary course of business at the time of the event recorded. Warfel v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

299. In a child sexual assault case, the admission of defendant's medical records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) was proper because the records were properly authenticated by their custodian in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) as having been made and kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity. Eslora v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005).

300. In a defamation action, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not specify that the certification on the employee and the employer's exhibits contain an accurate date, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that the incorrect date stamp was the result of a fraudulent act; thus, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to admit the exhibits under the public documents exception to the hearsay rule. Adi v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 565, 163 L. Ed. 2d 475, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7988, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

301. Probate court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the 1993 tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the affidavit and tax return were timely filed pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the affidavit, the accountant affirmed that he was the custodian of records, that the 12 pages consisted of the 1993 1040 U.S. Individual Income Tax Return and the decedent's W-2, that the 12 pages were kept by him in the regular course of business, and that the records were made at or near the time or reasonably soon thereafter, and that the records were the original or exact duplicates of the original. Valdez v. Hollenbeck, 410 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

302. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the mortgage company's evidence where the agent's affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) by averring to facts that satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the agent averred that she was providing the records as the custodian, that she had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records, that the records were made in the regular course of business, and that it was the regular practice of the business to keep such records. Khalilnia v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2991, 2013 WL 1183311 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 21 2013).

303. Insurance company documents were presented as business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the cell phone documents were presented pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902 with the accompanying affidavit; because the documents were produced in the normal and regular course of business of the entity that kept the records, defendant was not denied his right of confrontation. Lozoya v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1973, 2013 WL 708489 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2013).

304. In a bank's forcible-detainer case against a property occupant, the bank's claim to a superior right to possess the property was not based on a business-records affidavit containing inadmissible hearsay where the affiant averred that she was both an employee and a custodian of records of the bank's law firm and that she had actual or constructive care, custody, and control of the attached records relating to the bank's forcible-detainer proceeding against the occupant, and where she stated that the records were made in the regular course of the law firm's business by someone with personal knowledge and that it was the regular course of business to keep such records. Kaldis v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6609, 2012 WL 3229135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

305. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(10), 902 in excluding a letter from the United States Department of Transportation showing that defendant had never held an airplane pilot's certificate because the document was a copy of a letter that, though written on letterhead, was not under seal or certified. Teczar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2919, 2011 WL 1743756 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2011).

306. In a personal injury case, the court properly excluded appellant's "business records" because they were repetitive and likely to confuse the jury, it was cumulative of other evidence, and appellant's handwritten notes and figures were abstract, indecipherable, were confusing, and were unlikely to help the jury with the calculation of appellant's lost earnings. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

307. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the judgment for defendant's conviction of boating while intoxicated because the supervisor's testimony that the judgment bore a seal purporting to be that of the county district clerk would have satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In addition, as evidence of a finalized judgment of conviction, counsel could not have brought forth a sustainable objection based on hearsay. Reese v. State, 273 S.W.3d 344, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8518 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

308. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

309. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

310. In a breach of contract action, the summary judgment evidence offered by a creditor was admissible; a record of the monthly payments qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as a business record, and the affidavit of the creditor's employee substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Capers v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9175 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

311. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

312. Assault victim's medical records were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the affidavit of the custodian of hospital records stated that the records were kept in the regular course of the hospital's business, that the hospital was the custodian's employer, that the victim's medical records were made by a hospital employee with knowledge of the events, and that the employee made the records at or near the time of the event. Thus, the affidavit satisfied both Rule 803(6) and Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), including the notice provision of Rule 902(10). Reyes v. State, 48 S.W.3d 917, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3983 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

313. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

314. Information contained on chain-of-evidence forms involved routine information that did not involve any subjective interpretation or analysis by the police personnel and were properly admitted on that basis. Ash v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1315 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 16 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

315. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence since defendant claimed the document was admissible because it contained statements against interest; however, he did not make this complaint at trial, so the appellate court would not consider it on review. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

316. As initially offered by the State, a chart regarding intoxication was demonstrative evidence used as a visual aid and the information regarding defendant was entered onto the chart as the officer testified and so was not an out of court statement offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. The chart was therefore not inadmissible simply because it contained the same information used in the inadmissible police report. Baker v. State, 177 S.W.3d 113, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 662 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

317. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude a videotape of the scene where victim died while certain portions of the videotape contained testimony falling within the hearsay exception for excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and other portions contained hearsay falling within no recognized exception. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

318. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting autopsy photographs because the photographs were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as part of the business record of the autopsy report as the assistant medical examiner, who was the custodian of the office's records, testified that autopsy reports were made at or near the time that the autopsy was conducted by the medical examiner who conducted the autopsy; the records were kept in the regular course of the office's business; and he recognized the three photographs offered by the State as photographs from the murder victim's autopsy Delacerda v. State, 425 S.W.3d 367, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 21 2011).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

319. Recorded admissions that defendant made in phone calls from jail were properly identified under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because in addition to the information provided by the recordings, a ranger testified that the exhibits were of recorded jailhouse conversations obtained from jail personnel and identified most of the voices on the recordings;

the jury also heard defendant's live testimony. Capps v. State, 244 S.W.3d 520, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), (Tex. App. -- Fort Worth, pet. ref'd).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Affidavits

320. Employee's letter accompanying cell tower records was sufficient to authenticate the records, even if it did not meet the requirements of an affidavit, because it met the requirements of an unsworn declaration; the letter contained all of the declarations required to establish that the records were prepared through regularly conducted activities and was signed under penalty of perjury. Dominguez v. State, 441 S.W.3d 652, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6190, 2014 WL 2582975 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2014).

321. In a forcible detainer action, a business records affidavit that authenticated the notice to vacate was not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it substantially complied with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10), although it did not precisely track the language of Rule 902(10). Although the affidavit was prepared by a third party, the foreclosure purchaser's law firm, the trial court could have concluded that the purchaser reasonably relied on the accuracy of the records in the ordinary course of its business and that they were trustworthy. Baty v. Morequity, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9876 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2012).

322. In a will contest, the trial court erred by granting summary judgment on the issue of testamentary capacity because testimony from witnesses that decedent was not in a state of mind to conduct financial affairs when he signed his will was sufficient to show the existence of a material fact issue with respect to testamentary capacity. The appellate court did not consider the medical records attached to the motions for summary judgment, because they were not proven up with a medical record's affidavit in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). In re Estate of O'Neil, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7376, 2012 WL 3776490 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2012).

323. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

324. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

325. Assuming that the trial court erred by admitting as evidence a mediator's report to the trial court in which the mediator indicated that the case had been settled on the ground that it was inadmissible hearsay, the error was harmless because there was other evidence that the parties had reached a settlement agreement, including testimony that the deletion of the parties' brother's name had been discussed early in the negotiations and that the deletion was pointed out to all parties before the conclusion of the mediation. Mcdonald v. Fox, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9518, 2012 WL 5591795 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 15 2012).

326. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

327. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

328. In a sexual abuse case, error, if any, in allowing hearsay testimony regarding defendant's sexual assault of the child victim's younger sister was harmless because defendant did not challenge other testimony containing the same facts, but of a significantly more descriptive and incriminating nature. Vivid testimony specifically setting forth the nature of defendant's "touching" of the sister was not challenged. Murphy v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6226, 2009 WL 2450990 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 12 2009).

329. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, although the admission of the trooper's inventory report was error because the inventory report on defendant's pickup was done by the arresting officer, directly implicating Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B)'s concern with the adversarial nature of the process and was done at the scene by the arresting officer, the admission of that evidence was harmless. Whether defendant had beer in his pickup was not hotly contested and was proven by other properly admitted evidence. Russell v. State, 290 S.W.3d 387, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3317 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 13 2009).

330. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err when it overruled his objection and admitted into evidence the complete video recording of the child's forensic interview because defendant conceded that the accusations made by the child and specific details provided by her during the video recording of her forensic interview were consistent with her trial testimony. Even if the trial court erred when it admitted the video recording, the error was harmless because the same facts were proved by the child's properly admitted testimony. Estrada v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 387, 2009 WL 144327 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 22 2009).

331. Any error in admitting a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony, over defendant's hearsay objection, about a study conducted by another person explaining why a child victim of a sexual assault would not show evidence of trauma to her private parts was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that was introduced at trial. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

332. Defendant preserved for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by admitting the victim's counselor's hearsay testimony because at trial, defendant objected to the counselor's testimony on the ground that it would constitute hearsay; he asserted his objection in a timely manner and with sufficient specificity to make the trial court aware of his complaint. Taylor v. State, 263 S.W.3d 304, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6198 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

333. Even if the trial court erred by admitting an officer's testimony that witnesses had told him that the assailant was wearing a tan jacket, the error was harmless because its admission had no effect on the jury's verdict. Two witnesses knew defendant prior to witnessing his struggle with the victim, one witness gave an officer directions to defendant's home, and although two officers noticed a tan jacket on the hood of a car in the driveway of defendant's home, another officer found defendant inside a shed in the back of the house. Matez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4418 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 7 2007).

334. Trial court properly excluded a deposition because it had been taken in another lawsuit and, although appellant's opinion at the time would have been within the exception to the hearsay rule provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), the deposition's contents were inadmissible hearsay because the statements contained within it pertained to the other party's statements and state of mind rather than to appellant's. Trantham v. Isaacks, 218 S.W.3d 750, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 501 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 892, 128 S. Ct. 340, 169 L. Ed. 2d 155, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10018 (2007).

335. Officer testified as to statements of defendant's wife and stepdaughter, the complainants, made in an alleged family violence situation; however, the admission of the hearsay statements did not violate the Confrontation Clause because both complainants testified; even if the State called the complainants to testify so that otherwise inadmissible prior inconsistent statements could be admitted, there was no harm committed. Villarreal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6304 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2006).

336. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

337. Merely because a declarant is excited, the statements made do not lose their character as testimonial statements subject to the Confrontation Clause. Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 660, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3773 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

338. In a fraud and negligence action, a client was not permitted to raise the issues of authenticity and hearsay on appeal from the grant of summary judgment based on the admission of an employment contract because the client did not obtain a ruling on the objections from the trial court. Yazdchi v. Am. Arbitration Ass'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : Impeachment Evidence

339. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

340. In a criminal trial, defendant's testimony about the victim's statement that she was going to injure herself to support the assault charge and then hit herself in the face was not hearsay because it was offered to describe one person's observations about how another person acted. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

341. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

342. Any error in the admission of the testimony was harmless because the same or similar evidence was admitted at another point in the trial without objection. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

343. Documents that comply with the specified categories of Tex. R. Evid. 803 are admissible without regard to whether the declarant is available to testify. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

344. Witness had no personal knowledge about the value of wheels and repeated only what an automobile dealer told him, such that the witness's testimony was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and this was inadmissible unless an exception to the rule applied. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

345. Appellant argued that the trial court erred in admitting an exhibit of a recorded conversation between appellant and his wife, but prior to the State's offer of the exhibit, the jury heard testimony that appellant gave authorization for the murder and that appellant's wife told a witness to relay a message in this regard, all without objection by appellant; whether or not the evidence was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule was irrelevant and error in the admission of evidence was harmless as the same evidence was admitted without objection. Gonzales v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9231, 2011 WL 5843686 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 22 2011).

346. Because the trial court admitted a pen packet without requesting that the State provide a basis for its admissibility, the State was not required to voice an exception to the hearsay rule. Price v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2020, 2011 WL 946978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 17 2011).

347. Court recognized that one resident testified that an insurance representative informed him that the fire was caused by the homeowner's cigarette, but the court did not consider this testimony to create more than a scintilla of evidence as to this issue because the homeowners objected to the testimony as hearsay and the residents did not allege any applicable hearsay exception, plus the insurance documents provided no support for the representative's alleged statement, and the residents' own expert testified that a claims adjuster was not qualified to determine the cause of a fire. Hemenas v. Caston, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1023, 2010 WL 521116 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 11 2010).

348. Defendant made several objections to the contents of a written statement, but he did not object that the State had failed to lay the proper predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5), such that the argument was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

349. Court did not address the hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 as to certain exhibits because they were not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the resolution of the issues before the court, even if they fell under a hearsay exception; another exhibit contained an affidavit from an attorney in another case and contained the same information found in that case and had no bearing on the issues before the court. Southtex 66 Pipeline Co. v. Spoor, 238 S.W.3d 538, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8352, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 68 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

350. Defendant claimed that the trial court's evidentiary rulings effectively prevented her from presenting her defense to capital murder, that the child victim's parents were the perpetrators of the crime, and the court analyzed the evidence to determine if the trial court's evidentiary rulings were clearly erroneous; the court found that (1) absent evidence that the children became involved in the physical disputes the parents previously had, the court was unable to hold that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding this evidence, and in any event, defendant did not raise her due process argument in this regard to the trial court, such that two related subpoints were not properly before the court, (2) certain excluded evidence did not add much, if anything, to the defense and did not prevent defendant from putting on a defense, such that defendant's due process rights were not violated, and (3) another witness statement was hearsay and did not meet any exceptions, and the exclusion of the statement in question did not prevent defendant from putting on a defense, and no indicia of reliability existed concerning the witness's statement, and defendant did not call this witness to testify. Stevens v. State, 234 S.W.3d 748, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6845 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

351. Testimony was objected to as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and the trial court properly sustained the objection, and as such, it was not considered in the court's analysis; the statement was one made out of court and was inadmissible for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and no hearsay exception applied to render the statement admissible. Mark III Sys. v. Sysco Corp., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1339 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 22 2007).

352. Defendant's arguments under Tex. R. Evid. 803 were inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) and defendant waived appellate review of the issue. Dixon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7953 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 5 2006).

353. In a murder case, testimony regarding statements made by defendant's accomplice satisfied the statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because there was independent corroborative evidence, which included autopsy evidence, testimony from other witnesses, and defendant's own statements. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2005).

354. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in allowing the arresting officer to testify about statements made by an undercover officer; although defendant made a hearsay objection before the testimony was given, defendant did not renew his objection when the hearsay statement exceeded the present-sense-impression exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Johnson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4286 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 2 2005).

355. In a murder case, because the trial court did not rule on whether statements as to which a witness had asserted the self-incrimination privilege were incriminating, they were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) through an investigator's testimony as statements against interest. Boler v. State, 177 S.W.3d 366, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2719 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

356. In a murder case, the trial court did not err in ruling that an article taken from an Internet medical journal was a treatise and, under Tex. Evid. R. 803(18), was not admissible as an exhibit; because cross-examination as to the article was permitted, there was no violation of the constitutional right of confrontation. Sanchez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3783 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Ancient Documents

357. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which were 22 and 25 years old which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of those exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th Cir. Tex. 2007).

358. Appellees offered a certified copy of the deed recorded for over 60 years, the record supported appellees' ancient documents theory of admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 803(16), and the descendants pointed to nothing suspicious in the deed's appearance; the court noted that the justification for the exception was in part indicia of trustworthiness, and fair appearance and proper location were sufficient to justify admissibility of an ancient document, and the rules require no further showing of trustworthiness. Walton v. Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc'y of Pa., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 180 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2007).

359. Where petitioner death row inmate argued ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel, during the penalty phase, sought and obtained admission of a psychiatric report on the inmate prepared by a doctor years earlier when the inmate was 15 years old, and that the report suggested the inmate was a future danger, the report was not hearsay admitted in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment because the report was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), (16), and further, the inmate's statements in the report as to his criminal activity did not violate the Fifth Amendment because the psychiatric consultation was not a custodial interrogation; the ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed. Coble v. Dretke, 417 F.3d 508, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14438 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 444 F.3d 345, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 7171 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

360. In an electrical supplier's collection action against a contractor and others, arising from unpaid items, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding certain business invoices because there was wavering testimony and conflicting information, such that it deemed them untrustworthy. Border States Elec. Supply of Tex., Inc. v. Coast to Coast Elec., LLC, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5681, 2014 WL 3953961 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 29 2014).

361. Trustworthiness of the document is not a consideration when determining whether a document has been properly authenticated; instead, it is a consideration when trying to admit a business record under the business-records exception to the hearsay rule, and authenticity of a document and admissibility of that document under an exception to the hearsay rule are separate inquiries, and the companies in this case did not claim the documents were inadmissible hearsay. H2o Solutions, Ltd. v. Pm Realty Group, Lp, 438 S.W.3d 606, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1665, 2014 WL 576262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 13 2014).

362. Defendant's conviction for conspiracy to manufacture methamphetamine in a quantity between one and four grams was appropriate because there was no error in admitting the report of defendant's pseudoephedrine purchases. The affidavit said that such employee or representative had knowledge of the events, acts, conditions, or results depicted in the records and that the events chronicled in the records occurred at or near the time the records were made; The affidavit was therefore sufficient and was evidence of matters contained in the records. Burris v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513, 2014 WL 576209 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 12 2014).

363. Trial court did not err in admitting original loan documents as a mortgagee's records under the business record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), because the mortgagee presented evidence that satisfied the three-factor test for the admission of business records. Roper v. Citimortgage, Inc., 2013 Tex. App.

LEXIS 14518, 2013 WL 6465637 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 27 2013).

364. There was no abuse of discretion if the trial court found that an exhibit was not hearsay under the business record exception, as the data for the report was entered at or near the time each transaction occurred, the record was kept in the regular course of business, and the borrower, who relied on the exhibit as a record of his transactions, testified regarding the details of his business. Bank of Am., N.A. v. Barth, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12871, 2013 WL 5676024 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 17 2013).

365. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of her two-year-old daughter, the court did not err in admitting medical records relating to the victim's hospital visit for an examination because such records were admissible under the business record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Mitchell v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8806 (Tex. App. Dallas July 16 2013).

366. During petitioner's trial for forging the will of a deceased client, testimony by the client's sister was inadmissible hearsay by implication; by testifying that casino records, which were inadmissible without meeting the strictures of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), confirmed her recollection that she and her brother were gambling on a particular weekend, she implicitly testified to the contents of the records. Ex Parte Skelton, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8368, 2013 WL 3455583 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 10 2013).

367. Although the liaison officer did not have personal knowledge of all entries in appellant's community supervision file, she maintained custody of the file as a normal course of her business activities, and the entries were made by people with knowledge of the events described, at or near the time of the events, and thus the State laid the proper predicate for admission of the file as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Mena v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7634 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 25 2013).

368. In a prosecution of defendant for failure to comply with sex offender registration requirements, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's hearsay objection to the admission of a halfway house's logs and a letter a case-management supervisor sent to the police department informing it that defendant had left the halfway house. Both the logs and the letter were admissible under the business records exception. Ostrander v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7618 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

369. Competitor and employee did not explain how business records were based on illegal or improper accounting methods or why such would have rendered them inadmissible, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the objection. Hht Ltd. v. Nationwide Recovery Sys., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6717 (Tex. App. Dallas May 31 2013).

370. Exhibit should not have been excluded on the basis of the hearsay objection, because the business records affidavit made by the custodian of records precisely tracked the requirements in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

371. Trial court did not err in admitting breathalyzer maintenance records during defendant's trial for DWI because they were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as business records; they fell under the category of documents prepared in the regular course of equipment maintenance. Boutang v. State, 402 S.W.3d 782, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1851 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 27 2013).

372. Challenged portions of certain affidavits referred to the sale of the debtor's account to the company, which was a fact that was absent from the remaining unchallenged records; without that nexus, the statements were not admissible because they were independent evidence used to establish account ownership, which was a material fact to the issues being tried, and thus the court's holding that these affidavits did not fall under the business record exception was not inconsistent with the court's holding in other case law. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

373. Business record affidavit had 21 pages of documents attached, including certain affidavits, and although they were notarized and therefore self-authenticating, they could still be inadmissible if they were hearsay. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

374. Affidavit was offered as a business record, but it was prepared for the purpose of litigation, and the court adhered to the established rule and held that the document was not admissible under the business records exception. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

375. Circumstances indicated that either the date on an affidavit was wrong, or another affidavit concerned a different account than the debtor's, and whichever was true, the circumstances surrounding the latter affidavit did not indicate trustworthiness, and it did not fall within the business records exception. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

376. Without the challenged paragraphs, there would have been insufficient evidence to prove the assignment of the debtor's account to the company and therefore insufficient evidence upon which a judgment could have been rendered in the company's favor; the affidavits in question did not fall under the business records exception, and thus the judgment turned on improperly admitted evidence, to which a hearsay objection should have been sustained, and the court reversed. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

377. Dates of affidavits in this case were highly relevant and indicated untrusthworthiness, and thus the affidavits did not fall under the business records exception and the court's holding in another case was not inconsistent with this case. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

378. In case law, the court held that a doctor's letter submitted to an attorney during litigation was not a routine entry in the patient's medical history and was inadmissible under the business record exception, but this was not relevant to the issue in this case, where a witness who was at trial also submitted a document that detailed when she worked in corroboration of her testimony. Ryland Enter. v. Weatherspoon, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10794, 2012 WL 6754966 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

379. Even assuming witness testimony as to the radio's serial number was hearsay, the serial number was documented in other evidence that was admitted at trial, including business records containing the number, and although the witness did not personally obtain the number, his testimony connected the records to the radio through his personal knowledge of and involvement in the investigation; in the absence of a challenge to the sufficiency of the business records affidavit, the court could not find that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the business records that contained the serial number over appellant's hearsay objection. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

380. Although appellant objected that a witness lacked personal knowledge of the serial number of a radio, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) did not require that the one authenticating the record be the creator thereof or have personal knowledge, and the affiant swore to such knowledge and this was not contested. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

381. As the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting business records containing a radio's serial number, testimony as to that number was duplicative of evidence that was properly admitted, and even assuming the testimony was inadmissible hearsay, any error did not harm appellant; as there was no harm, the court could not reverse the judgment on this basis even if the testimony was inadmissible hearsay. Infante v. State, 404 S.W.3d 656, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10800, 2012 WL 6754834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

382. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting two exhibits containing reports of hair follicle drug tests of appellants under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, as there was insufficient indicia of trustworthiness or reliability, the error was harmless because other evidence that two children and the mother's boyfriend tested positive for cocaine was admitted without objection, and termination of the mother's parental rights did not turn on the admission of the second and third sets of positive drug test results. In the Interest of S.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9946, 2012 WL 5991391 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2012).

383. In defendant's theft case, a court properly admitted deposit slips from bank and credit card records under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the records were authenticated with an affidavit executed by the custodian of records for each institution and properly admitted; Rule 803(6) clearly permitted the testimony of the custodian of records to be offered by affidavit. Garza v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7430, 2012 WL 6042579 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2012).

384. In a bank's forcible-detainer case against a property occupant, the bank's claim to a superior right to possess the property was not based on a business-records affidavit containing inadmissible hearsay where the affiant averred that she was both an employee and a custodian of records of the bank's law firm and that she had actual or constructive care, custody, and control of the attached records relating to the bank's forcible-detainer proceeding against the occupant, and where she stated that the records were made in the regular course of the law firm's business by someone with personal knowledge and that it was the regular course of business to keep such records. Kaldis v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6609, 2012 WL 3229135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

385. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the letter from the physician was not admissible under the business records exception, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), as it contained opinions from her physician on whether the spinal conditions were compensable injuries. Hazelip v. Am. Cas. Co., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5142, 2012 WL 2453716 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 28 2012).

386. From the testimony of a community supervision officer, the chronology of events in the probation department records were proven up to be those of regularly conducted activity and thus fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), an exception to the hearsay rule. Bluntzer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455, 2012 WL 2005677 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 5 2012).

387. By probation department records admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the State offered evidence of appellant's failure to abide by various conditions of his community supervision; even if the trial court erred in admitting the chronology of events, the State proved certain condition violations via certain testimony and other records, and proof of only one violation was sufficient, such that the court affirmed the revocation of appellant's community supervision. Bluntzer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455, 2012 WL 2005677 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 5 2012).

388. In a breach of contract case, a trial court erred by refusing to admit a creditor's business records into evidence because a witness testified that she was personally acquainted with the facts in an affidavit, that she was the custodian of the records, and that she was familiar with how they were prepared and maintained; it did not matter that the creditor, as the purchaser of the account, was not the original author of the documents. The records were trustworthy because creator of the documents had to keep careful records of credit card accounts, otherwise it could have faced civil or criminal penalties, and the error probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment since the creditor was preventing from presenting its case against a debtor. Dodeka, L.C.C. v. Campos, 377 S.W.3d 726, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3435 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 2 2012).

389. Court addressed the admissibility of a business records affidavit first, instead of considering a standing issue the court would ordinarily consider first, given that the issues in the case turned on the admissibility of the affidavit because it established a debt-holder's assignee's standing and provided sufficient evidence to support the verdict in the assignee's favor. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

390. Debtor relied on case law for the claim that documents under the business records exception came in fully proven, but that case did not deal with credit card debt, and under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 26.02(a)(2)(A), a credit card agreement did not need to be in writing or signed; although the debtor denied applying for the account or making payments thereon, his credibility was an issue for the trier of fact. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

391. Debt holder's assignee provided a business records affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), which established that the assignee had standing to sue as the creditor assigned its ownership interest in the debt to the assignee; thus, the assignee was entitled to bring suit. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

392. Properly admitted business-records affidavit provided legally sufficient evidence that supported the verdict in the debt holder's assignee's favor in this credit card case, as the affidavit showed that the debtor incurred a credit card debt that he failed to pay and the debt was acquired by the assignee; the assignee's credibility was an issue of fact. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

393. Court had held that several exceptions could be relied upon to allow proof of the value of stolen property, including the business-records exception, the exception for records of documents affecting an interest in property, and the exception for market reports and such, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a witness's testimony in this regard over appellant's hearsay objection; in the alternative, any error was harmless because (1) appellant's community supervision was conditioned on him not committing any offense, (2) although it was alleged that appellant committed theft of property worth at least $ 1,500, proof of a lesser included offense would have sufficed to render judgment adjudicating his guilt, (3) theft of property valued at less than $ 50 was a lesser-included offense of theft of property of a higher amount, and (4) even if there was no properly admitted evidence of the value of the wheels and tires, the court could presume they had some value because the witness had not replaced them for months after the theft. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

394. Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the letter from one of the claimant's doctors was not admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), because the letter was drafted for the insurer in an attempt to influence its determination of whether the spinal conditions at issue were compensable injuries. Hazelip v. Am. Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2109, 2012 WL 952120 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 15 2012).

395. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

396. Appellant did not challenge the admission of medical records as business records, he did not obtain a ruling on his initial objection, and before a witness testified that he was the custodian, appellant objected, without getting a ruling, that it was not shown the witness was the custodian, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Bone v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1450, 2012 WL 592927 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 23 2012).

397. Appellant based her objection at trial upon an exhibit's alleged hearsay status because of the exhibit's purported failure to qualify as a business record, but she did not object on constitutional grounds, and an objection concerning hearsay rules did not preserve an argument concerning one's right of confrontation; because appellant failed to urge an objection regarding her right of confrontation under U.S. Const. amend. VI, XIV at trial, she forfeited her issue on appeal, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Buckner v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1258, 2012 WL 503522 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2012).

398. Appellant claimed that his medical records were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), but this was not presented at trial as a ground for overruling the State's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and although the records were included in the bill of exceptions, such was not made on the predicate for admission under either hearsay exception appellant raised for the first time on appeal; even if the court assumed that the trial court understood the bill of exceptions to be a proffer of admission, the records did not establish that appellant suffered from a medical condition that was relevant to his prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the patient history did not show that he had a condition that mimicked the symptoms of intoxication, and no other potential relevance for the records was shown, such that exclusion of the records did not affect a substantial right under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

399. Showing that a summary was shown to be a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) is not necessary under Tex. R. Evid. 1006; the rule merely requires the contents of voluminous writings to be otherwise admissible. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

400. Witness's testimony proved that the underlying documents were otherwise admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1006, and his testimony showed that the records were made when the fines in question were incurred; while the testimony did not specifically track the language of the statute, the overall context, that the records were generated at a regular intervals and at or near the time the fines were incurred, and that the witness was a co-custodian of the records and knew the summary to be a true representation of the records, was sufficient to establish the admissibility of the records. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

401. Trial court erred in sustaining an objection to business records, and thus the company was prevented from presenting its case against a debtor, which probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1). Dodeka v. Campos, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10003 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 21 2011).

402. Witness's affidavit showed that a company incorporated a business's records into the company's regular business use, and the company reasonably relied on the accuracy of the documents in order to determine the existence and value of the debt in question, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Dodeka v. Campos, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10003 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 21 2011).

403. Although a debtor claimed that business records were untrustworthy, the court noted that the creator of the documents, the creditor, could have faced penalties for inaccurate records, for purposes of Tex. Fin. Code Ann. §§ 392.304(a)(8), 392.402, and the court found those circumstances gave supported to the company's claim that the creditor's documents were trustworthy. Dodeka v. Campos, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10003 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 21 2011).

404. Summary judgment in favor of the customer was proper, because the bank failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a contract existed or whether the customer authorized the charges to the credit card account, when the bank's only summary judgment evidence was inadmissible; since the bank's affidavit neither named the affiant in the body of the affidavit or the jurat, and the affiant's signature was completely illegible, the bank's affidavit did not substantially comply with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) and was insufficient to establish the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Fia Card Services, N.A. v. Frausto, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9924, 2011 WL 6260653 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 15 2011).

405. In a drunk driving case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding a hospital's record of defendant's blood-alcohol test results to be sufficiently reliable to be admissible under the business-records exception to the hearsay rule. The hospital's records and accompanying affidavit complied with the relevant provisions of the business-record exception. Rodarte v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9096, 2011 WL 5569494 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 16 2011).

406. Record did not show any references to where the workers may have laid a proper predicate to show that the proffered document fit under a hearsay exception, such as a business record, Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Belmarez v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7945, 2011 WL 4696750 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2011).

407. Court properly admitted a lender's business records affidavit because the opening paragraph of the affidavit specifically stated that the affiant had "personal knowledge of the facts contained in this Affidavit and that they are true and correct"; as such, the affidavit demonstrated on its face that the affiant had the requisite knowledge. The attached records included copies of the notices, documentation that the notices were mailed, and documentation that they posted via certified mail. Puentes v. Fannie Mae, 350 S.W.3d 732, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7168 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

408. In a daughter's action claiming undue influence, nurse reports regarding the decedent's interaction with her husband were admissible because they were supported by an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); they were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid 803(4), (6) regarding the decedent's medical treatment. In the Estate of Ward, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811, 2011 WL 3720829 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 24 2011).

409. Parties claimed that documents became business records when they were sent to their attorney's office, making them an exception to the hearsay rule, but this appeared to be an unusually liberal interpretation of the evidence rules; if this interpretation was used, every otherwise inadmissible document would be deemed admissible based on the fact that it was received in an attorney's office and the attorney, as the custodian, provided an accompanying affidavit. Husain v. Petrucciani, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6180, 2011 WL 3449497 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2011).

410. Under the business record exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), appellant's probation record was properly admitted for the trial court's consideration because, at the hearing on the motion to revoke, appellant's probation officer testified that the "chronos" in appellant's file, which contained the chronology of events set out in the records from the probation department, were recorded at or near the time of the occurrence or event that gave rise to them by a person with personal knowledge of the "chronos" events, and that the files were kept in the ordinary course of the probation department. Norman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5391, 2011 WL 2732673

(Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2011).

411. Even if the "chronos" in appellant's file, which contained the chronology of events set out in the records from the probation department, were not admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the evidence of the six other violations of probation was sufficient to revoke appellant's probation. Norman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5391, 2011 WL 2732673 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2011).

412. Court erred during defendant's trial for theft in allowing documents from a federal administrative proceeding into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the testimony of a local witness from the United States Department of Agriculture did not establish that the particular records were made in the ordinary course of business, that they were made at or near the time of the event they recorded, and that they were made by a person with knowledge who was acting in the regular course of business. Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5430, 2011 WL 3328687 (Tex. App. Tyler July 13 2011).

413. Objections that an affidavit failed to comply with the business records exception to the hearsay rule likewise must be preserved in the trial court via an objection and a ruling on the objection by the trial court; thus, the only alleged defect in the magazine's president's affidavit that was preserved for the appellate court's review was whether the affidavit was conclusory. Law Office of David E. Williams, Ii, P.C. v. Fort Worth Tex. Magazine Venture, Lp, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5157, 2011 WL 2651865 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2011).

414. Because defendant filed a verified denial regarding an agreement and a credit application was for different work than was alleged to have been completed in the agreement, plaintiff did not establish that the circumstances indicated the trustworthiness of the documents; therefore, plaintiff did not demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to admit the agreement and credit application into evidence as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Old Republic Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4933, 2011 WL 2623994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 30 2011).

415. In a breach of contract action, a trial court did not err in considering an assignment by a predecessor to a leasing company and a business records affidavit by the predecessor's president; because the affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the assignment was admissible under the hearsay exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Game Sys. v. Forbes Hutton Leasing, Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4098, 2011 WL 2119672 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 26 2011).

416. Assuming business records objections were raised, the court found nothing indicating that appellant obtained a ruling on them; any complaints regarding the admission of summary judgment evidence would not be preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(2), but the court noted in any event that a witness could have personal knowledge to testify regarding the record keeping practices of a one other than his employer. Ekpe v. Cach, Llc, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2080, 2011 WL 1005379 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2011).

417. Senior toxicologist identified her initials on the samples of appellant's blood and testified that she received the blood in a sealed vial, performed tests on the blood, and generated a toxicology report; this testimony served as a predicate for admission of the toxicology report under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the report. Burchfield v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 122, 2011 WL 56049 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 6 2011).

418. In a creditor's suit to recover unpaid debt on a credit card account, the trial court erroneously excluded the billing statements and notices informing the debtor of changes in his credit card agreement where the creditor properly established the applicability of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6)'s business records hearsay exception because an employee of the company that provided administrative services for the creditor's credit card accounts testified that:

(1) she had worked for the company for nearly seven years; (2) the company provided support for the creditor's credit card accounts; (3) her job responsibilities gave her the right to access the kind of information included in the monthly billing statements for the debtor's account; (4) she was the custodian of those records; (5) the statements in the debtor's billing statements were made at or near the time of the information recorded therein by a person with knowledge; and (6) the debtor's billing statements and other billing statements like it were made and kept in the regular course of the company's business. Moreover, the billing records could qualify for the business records hearsay exception even if they were business records of a third party to the lawsuit because the employee testified that the records were kept in the course of the company's business, that the company issued billing statements and provided collections and litigation support, and that she had no indication of any lack of trustworthiness in the way the documents were handled, generated, or kept. Citibank (s.D.), N.A. v. Tate, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9959 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 16 2010).

419. Third-party records contained in a creditor's trial exhibit were admissible, even though they were not created by the creditor, given that (1) the affiant stated that the records were kept by the creditor in the regular course of business and that the affiant was the custodian and had personal knowledge of the records, such that the creditor incorporated the third-party documents, (2) the affiant relied on the accuracy of the documents to establish the existence and value of a debt, and (3) the trustworthiness of the documents was supported by the fact that the creditor's predecessors had to keep careful records or their business would suffer, plus inaccurate records could result in civil or criminal penalties. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

420. Because a creditor's trial exhibit satisfied the requirements for the admission of third-party business records and because the challenged affidavits satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling hearsay objections. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

421. Affidavits were not conclusory because they substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and as such could properly serve to authenticate business records. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

422. Affidavits were offered as predicates for the introduction of business records; they were not offered to prove the content of any writing or to contradict, vary, or add to the terms of any agreement, and the affidavits did not violate the parol evidence or best evidence rules, including under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

423. Records were never admitted into evidence, and therefore Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) was not applicable. In the Interest of S.R., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9681, 2010 WL 4983484 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2010).

424. Doctor provided testimony proving up the victim's medical records as business records in accord with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and to the extent that the issue of the medical records' admissibility had been preserved, the court found no error in their admission. Cozzens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9336, 2010 WL 4813686 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 24 2010).

425. Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude the bank witness's affidavit and attachments, because the witness's testimony adequately demonstrated the basis for her personal knowledge of the manner in which the bank kept its records and the other facts to which she testified; Texas Rules of Evidence did not require that the qualified witness who provided the predicate for the admission of business records be their creator or have personal knowledge of the contents of the record, when the witness was required only to have personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were kept. Damron v. Citibank (s.D.) N.A., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7054, 2010 WL

3377777 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2010).

426. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the affiant stated that the documents received from the original lender were kept by the creditor in the regular course of business and that the affiant reviewed the file, was the designated agent for the file, and had personal knowledge of the records concerning the debtor, and thus the affidavit sufficiently showed that the creditor incorporated the original lender's records. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

427. Because business records were properly admitted, the court overruled a debtor's challenge to certain conclusions of law made by the trial court. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

428. Because the business records affidavit was admissible, the court did not need to address a conditional challenge. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

429. Cases do not hold that verification of accuracy is the sole means of admitting third-party documents under the business records exception; case law requires reliance on the accuracy of the document, which is a slightly different standard than proof that someone actually verified the accuracy of document, and although the second business's confirmation of the accuracy of the first business's records is one way to determine the records are admissible, another way is to show that the second business reasonably relied on the accuracy of the first business's records as part of the three-step test articulated in case law. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

430. Affidavit failed to state that the affiant confirmed the accuracy of the records, but that is not required under case law; a creditor presented evidence that it reasonably relied on the accuracy of the debtor's account with the original lender. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

431. Given that the original lender had to keep careful records of the debtor's credit card debt, for purposes of Tex. Fin. Code Ann. §§ 392.304(a)(8), 392.405, and the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, this provided an indication, for business record purposes, of the trustworthiness of the lender's documents, which were given to the current creditor. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

432. Affidavit did not lack trustworthiness because it was made by the original lender; to the extent the affiant's credibility was attacked, the trier of fact was the judge of such credibility. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

433. Although a debtor claimed the affiant was not qualified to testify about the original lender's documents, personal knowledge of the record-keeping practices of the original lender was not required under case law. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

434. To the extent the opinions in Martinez v. Midland Credit Mgmt., Inc., 250 S.W.3d 481, 485 (Tex. App.--El Paso 2008, no pet.), and Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 765 (Tex. App.--Dallas 2004, no pet.), conflict with the prior opinions of the court and federal precedent concerning Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the court declines to follow them. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex.

App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

435. Unlike case law, the affidavit in this case included more than the basic predicate of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), as the affiant expressly referenced the documents attached to the affidavit, and included facts discussing the contents, such that the decision in case law was consistent with the court's holding here. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

436. Creditor presented evidence to the trial court that met the three factors of case law regarding third party documents, and the trial court properly admitted the original lender's records as the creditor's records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

437. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the affiant's deposition concerning a different case because that deposition did not pertain to the original lender, for relevance purposes, and the debtor never challenged the trustworthiness of the lender's documents. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

438. Trial court erred in awarding summary judgment to a creditor, as the assignee of accounts, in its breach of contract action against a debtor for allegedly failing to pay debt acquired with a credit card because an affidavit from an authorized agent of the creditor did not satisfy the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the trial court erred by admitting it; the agent did not state that the agent had personal knowledge of, or was qualified to testify, regarding the assignor's record keeping practices. Abrego v. Harvest Credit Mgmt. Vii, Llc, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3117, 2010 WL 1718953 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

439. Because debtors did not object to a custodian's affidavit, they could not challenge her personal knowledge on appeal as the issue was waived, plus the mere fact that the custodian was employed by another business did not preclude her testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Athey v. Mortg. Elec. Registration Sys., 314 S.W.3d 161, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2980 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 22 2010).

440. Records showing the hours when defendant was at work were admissible under the hearsay exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) for records of regularly conducted activity; although they contained some inaccuracies, the trial court as the finder of fact reasonably could have found them to be largely correct. Sanchez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9858, 2009 WL 5149961 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 29 2009).

441. Creditor's employee's affidavit followed the form the example affidavit provided by Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), which was sufficient to support the admission of the documents; the issuing lender's documents became the creditor's primary record of the transaction and the documents were properly admitted as business records of the creditor under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

442. Having held that the trial court's admission of the business records affidavit was proper, the court overruled a debtor's challenges to findings of fact that were expressly conditioned on the exclusion of the business records, as well as the related conclusions of law. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

443. Creditor employee was qualified to testify to the accuracy of the business record documents, given that he stated that he had personal knowledge of the record, which he said were originals or exact duplicates of the records for the debtor's account. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist.

Dec. 10 2009).

444. Creditor's employee stated that it was in the regular course of business of the creditor for an employee to make the record, which language mirrored precisely the language approved for submitting business records affidavits under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); because the affidavit accurately represented where the documents came from, it did not indicate a lack of trustworthiness, and the trial court did not err in admitting the business records affidavit or the documents verified by the affidavit. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

445. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the a creditor's employee's deposition concerning a different case because that deposition did not pertain to the lender and the debtor never challenged the trustworthiness of the lender's business record documents. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

446. Report from a crime laboratory was not admissible under either Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) or (8), but any error in the trial court's admission of the report was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the value of the report was cumulative; the same evidence found in the report, that the substance was cocaine, was also admitted through other testimony without objection. Miles v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9756, 2009 WL 4358959 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

447. Trial court erred in admitting the complained-of documents, because there was no indication that the business knew of the events recorded on the third-party documents, when the witness testified about the telemarketing application, he stated that the information was inputted by someone at the company, although he had no personal information about how the information was inputted or how the information was obtained, and the same observation could be made about the account statements and the cardholder agreement. Riddle v. Unifund Ccr Patrns, 298 S.W.3d 780, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7805 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 7 2009).

448. In an action seeking to recover on a credit card debt, a debtor failed to preserve an error relating to an alleged failure to satisfy the business records exception to the hearsay rule in summary judgment evidence because there was no ruling from the trial court on the objections, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(2). McGrew v. Citibank N.A., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4529, 2009 WL 1693473 (Tex. App. Waco June 17 2009).

449. In a personal injury case, the court properly excluded appellant's "business records" because they were repetitive and likely to confuse the jury, it was cumulative of other evidence, and appellant's handwritten notes and figures were abstract, indecipherable, were confusing, and were unlikely to help the jury with the calculation of appellant's lost earnings. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

450. Exhibits, which were summaries of business records compiled by a painter and his secretary two days after an airplane owner filed suit for breach of contract for failure to paint an airplane, were properly admitted as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) based on the painter's foundation testimony. Cano v. Nino's Paint & Body Shop, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2713, 2009 WL 1057622 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 16 2009).

451. Trial court properly admitted certain exhibits as self-authenticated business records, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the exhibits were trustworthy because the State established an adequate foundation and there was nothing that led the court to believe that the exhibits lacked authenticity or trustworthiness. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

452. Objections that an affidavit failed to meet the business records exception and did not satisfy Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) were objections to the form of the affidavit and had to be timely raised in the trial court to be raised on appeal. A.J. Morris, M.D., P.A. v. De Lage Landen Fin. Servs., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 457, 2009 WL 161065 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 22 2009).

453. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

454. In a debt collection case, a trial court did not err by striking an affidavit opposing summary judgment from a managing partner and in refusing to grant leave to amend the affidavit because there was no facts upon which the partner based his conclusion regarding the last payment made on a note, and there were no readily controvertible facts shown that were known to the partner; moreover, he did not identify the company where payments were made, how he knew that the records were kept in the ordinary course of business, or which company kept the records in the regular course of business. Because the conclusory nature of the affidavit constituted a defect in substance, no amendment was allowed. CA Partners v. Spears, 274 S.W.3d 51, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6789 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

455. Affidavit stated that the affiant was one of the custodians of the records presented and the affidavit was substantially in the form set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 902, and thus the court rejected the claim that the affidavit did not comply with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803. Wynne v. Citibank (South Dakota) N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3037 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 25 2008).

456. Because defendant did not assert in the trial court that certain records constituted inadmissible character evidence, defendant forfeited that complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33; furthermore, when making objections, defendant agreed that the records were business records, but appeared to argue that they contained double hearsay, but defendant failed to specify or identify the objectionable part of the exhibit, and thus the objections were insufficiently specific to have preserved the hearsay complaint defendant also made on appeal. Starn v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2402 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 3 2008).

457. Both the custodian of medical records and the witness who performed the test in question were qualified to testify to the authenticated records; because the test came into evidence through the witness's testimony without objection, any error in the admission of the exhibit was cured. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

458. Trial court erred in awarding summary judgment to a creditor in its action against a debtor to recover on a credit card debt where the creditor's affidavit was defective because it was not based on personal knowledge and because it failed to meet the requirements of the hearsay exception contained in Tex. R. Evid. 803. Martinez v. Midland Credit Mgmt., 250 S.W.3d 481, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1906 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

459. Although Tex. R. Evid. 803 does not require a predicate witness to be the record's creator or have personal knowledge of the content of the record, the witness must have personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared; documents received from another entity are not admissible if the witness is not qualified to testify about the entity's record keeping. Martinez v. Midland Credit Mgmt., 250 S.W.3d 481, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1906 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

460. In defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.05, a deputy testified that he recognized teletypes as confirmation that there was a valid warrant pending for the felon's arrest and the deputy testified that the teletypes were true and correct copies and were kept in the regular course of business as a law enforcement officer, and this testimony supplied the predicate for admission of the teletypes under Tex. R. Evid. 803. LeClear v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8198 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 16 2007).

461. Although a debtor argued that account statements were hearsay, the record custodian properly authenticated them under Tex. R. Evid. 902 as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and the debtor presented no supporting argument that the statements lacked trustworthiness. Sikander Ghia v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8194 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2007).

462. Company stipulated that a witness was qualified to establish that invoices were business records, and it was not necessary that the records' custodian possess actual knowledge of every entry on an invoice, and the only requirement was that the information used to create the invoice was transmitted by a person with knowledge, such that the trial court did not err in admitting a summary of the invoices under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Legacy Motors, LLC v. Bonham, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7530 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 13 2007).

463. Although, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 1006, exhibits did summarize account activity, they were in and of themselves business records and therefore admissible as such under Tex. R. Evid. 803; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by not ordering the State to produce the underlying documentation that would have been required if the records were summaries under Tex. R. Evid. 1006. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

464. Business record exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 is an exception to the general rule prohibiting hearsay and Tex. R. Evid. 1006 is more properly viewed as an exception to the best evidence rule. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

465. State properly authenticated exhibits and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the exhibits as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although the custodian of the records admitted that she did not personally review the underlying documents, her testimony was sufficient to authenticate the exhibits as business records, as she said they were kept in the ordinary course of business and the entries were made at or near the time of the transaction by bank tellers with personal knowledge. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

466. Without having to determine whether the business records exception to the hearsay rule predicate was even necessary, so long as the document itself was not offered into evidence, the court found that testimony served as a sufficient predicate for admission of the evidence regarding the chemist's test; while one chemist did test the cocaine in question, no report was offered into evidence and it was proper for him to base his opinion on another chemist's test results. Alexander v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6260 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 9 2007).

467. Certified copy of a judgment and sentence relating to defendant's first assault conviction was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 during defendant's trial for felony assault involving family violence because the evidence was an exception to the hearsay rule under either the business or public records exception. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2375 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 28 2007).

468. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803, a witness who creates a written statement or who provides the information to its creator is certainly qualified to testify to the nature of the document and the circumstances of its preparation. Dixon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2110 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 20 2007).

469. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of a police "money log" from defendant's arrest, as the form showed that the cataloging process described by a detective was what happened, and an unknown signature at the bottom of the form did not place the accuracy of the report by the seizing officers in question, nor did the signature affect the log's relevance, which tended to prove that defendant was involved in buying or selling amounts of contraband for purposes of defendant's trial for unlawful possession of cocaine with intent to distribute; Tex. R. Evid. 803 did not require a business record to be sponsored by its custodian, as defendant claimed. Dixon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2110 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 20 2007).

470. Probate court properly excluded the exhibits offered by a decedent's surviving spouse and administratrix of his estate at the special appearance hearing of the decedent's Florida business associate because the exhibits were business records of a group of Texas entities owned by the business associate, and they were not authenticated by the administratrix merely by virtue of her role as administratrix of the decedent's estate. Allen v. Havens, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2088 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

471. Particular exhibit was a series of purchase orders made by a construction company that documented its purchase of materials, and the fact that the documents were orders sent to a third party did not remove them from the scope of the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Royce Homes, L.P. v. Espinosa, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1029 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 8 2007).

472. Document was not rendered inadmissible per se as a business record solely because additional notations were later added to the document. Blackstock v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 72 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 9 2007).

473. In the slaughterhouses' appeal of the trial court's issuance of a permanent injunction and award of expenses to the State, pursuant to Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 433.099, the appellate court rejected the slaughterhouses' claim that the trial court erred by admitting the State's exhibits, which included handwritten compilation of expenses incurred by the State, because a Department of State Health Services representative testified that the exhibits were a record regularly kept in the course of business, that he was a custodian of the record, that it was the regular practice of the Department to keep such records, and that the records were made at or near the time of the occurrence by a person with knowledge or by a person furnished with such knowledge; therefore the State laid the necessary predicate for admission of the exhibits as properly authenticated business records. Qaddura v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9209 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 26 2006).

474. In a breach of contract action, the summary judgment evidence offered by a creditor was admissible; a record of the monthly payments qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as a business record, and the affidavit of the creditor's employee substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Capers v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9175 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

475. Admission of the State's exhibits, which included the traffic citation, the warrant of arrest signed by the judge of the municipal court and a deputy clerk's certificate of defendant's failure to appear at trial for his speeding citation, did not violate defendant's confrontation rights because the exhibits were forms used by the Houston courts that record the occurrence of an event, and defendant failed to offer and the appellate court could not find, any authority or reasoning to transform the documents into testimonial statements. Azeez v. State, 203 S.W.3d 456, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

476. In a child sexual assault case, hospital records of the child's exam were properly admitted as business records because a witness testified that she was the legal custodian of the records in question, that the records were kept in the regular course of business, and that an employee of the hospital recorded the information at the time of the sexual abuse exam. Dotie v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7200 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 16 2006).

477. In a murder case, an autopsy report was properly admitted as a public record and a business record because the report set forth matters observed pursuant to a duty imposed by law, including the location and the nature of the injuries; a doctor testified and was subject to cross-examination and he was also a signatory to the report. Terrazas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6696 (Tex. App. Austin July 28 2006).

478. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, the defendant's proffer of evidence about the victim's written medical report included no affidavit or live testimonial sponsorship from a records custodian; therefore, the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803 were not met to allow admission of the records under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 21 2006).

479. While the trial court erred in admitting defendant's cell phone bill because it was not authenticated, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because of the wealth of other evidence to convict defendant. Miller v. State, 208 S.W.3d 554, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2791 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

480. Trial court did not err by admitting an invoice of attorney fees, for purposes of an accountant's claim for fees under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 38.001, because it fell under the exception of business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803; there was testimony from the attorney that (1) the spreadsheet was a printout of records prepared in the ordinary course of business, (2) the records included data entries the attorney gave to the administrative assistant, who entered them, (3) the attorney personally approved the entries, and (4) the attorney had personal knowledge about the time and records listed because they were the attorney's descriptions. Cox v. Wilkins, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2598 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 31 2006).

481. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a hearsay objection to testimony about information in defendant's community supervision file; even if the business records predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not established, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have established it. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

482. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting the results of a drug test into evidence under the business records exception because the actual results of the test were not included in the admitted medical records; instead, a notation of the results was included on a summary page, which did not state what was tested, who took the sample, when the sample was taken, or what laboratory conducted the testing. In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

483. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the results were trustworthy because they showed the doctor who ordered the test, the time and date that the test was collected and received, and that the test was "presumptive positive" for amphetamine. In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

484. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

485. No business record affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) was necessary because the witness laid the proper foundation for admission of the report as a business record during testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Benavides v. Cushman, Inc., 189 S.W.3d 875, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 716 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

486. In a breach of contract and fraudulent inducement case, a trial court properly refused to admit an exhibit because it was irrelevant to either claim; moreover, it did not fit within the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Case Corp. v. Hi-Class Bus. Sys. of Am., Inc., 184 S.W.3d 760, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10549 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

487. Autopsy report set forth matters observed pursuant to a duty imposed by law, for purposes of the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803; a doctor testified to the cause of death based on the doctor's opinion on the autopsy report, and it was not a statement given in response to police interrogatories, and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803, it was considered a public record or business record, and business records were non-testimonial. Mitchell v. State, 191 S.W.3d 219, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10830 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

488. Trial court erred in admitting under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) an investigative report prepared by a third party on behalf of an employer in response to a former employee's complaint of sexual harassment filed with the Texas Commission of Human Rights where it was prepared in an adversarial setting and was not the regular practice of the employer to make such a report because the report was prepared by an industrial relations counselor specially employed to answer the Commission's request and, therefore, lacked the high probability of trustworthiness that attached to records that were regularly kept and routinely relied on; however, the jury's verdict did not turn on the erroneous admission of the report because most of what was contained in the report was also elicited in the testimony of witnesses. Mackey v. U.P. Enters., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6044 (Tex. App. Tyler July 29 2005).

489. Documents that a successor administrator of a decedent's estate used to establish the loss to the estate concerning the decedent's house, which occurred during the former administrator's administration, were not inadmissible hearsay in a breach of fiduciary duty action against the former administrator because the documents were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) that related to the mortgage on the house. A number of the documents concerning the house were duplicates of evidence duly admitted in related proceedings, and there was no evidence indicating that the documents were inadmissible hearsay in the related proceedings. Sierad v. Barnett, 164 S.W.3d 471, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

490. Testimony of a trucking company's safety administrative coordinator was properly admitted because her purpose was to explain how global positioning systems (GPS) data, which another witness's testimony showed was reliable, became a business record of the trucking company. Furthermore, her testimony established her understanding of the many systems the company used to track its drivers and showed that the system of transmitting and receiving the GPS data was automatic. Brown v. State, 163 S.W.3d 818, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3949 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

491. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel's failure to object to the admission of a forensic report was not ineffective assistance because an affidavit from the custodian of the hospital's records was sufficient for compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and a statement made by the victim to a nurse was admissible under Rule 803(4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3596 (Tex. App. Eastland May 12 2005).

492. In a domestic violence case, the trial court did not err by admitting a 911 tape of a call from the victim as a business record; a 911 tape is admissible as a business record if properly authenticated, and the custodian testified that the tape was made in the ordinary course of business at the time of the event recorded. Warfel v. State, 2005

Tex. App. LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

493. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding the record of the results of a test of defendant's blood-alcohol level sufficiently reliable to be admissible under the business-record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and not to have deprived him of his constitutional right to meaningful confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses against him, because the blood-alcohol test results were part of a group of records produced by the hospital pursuant to a subpoena, and the records were accompanied by the affidavit of the custodian of the hospital's records in which the custodian recited that he kept the records in the regular course of business and that the records were made in the regular course and scope of the hospital's business at or near the time of the event. Furthermore, the surgeon who treated defendant testified that, although he did not conduct or observe the blood draw, he and other doctors routinely relied on such procedures and records in treating patients, and there was no evidence that an unauthorized or unqualified person drew the blood or that the persons who drew or tested the blood did their jobs inappropriately. Blackwell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1816 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

494. In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, the trial court did not err in admitting the entire Department of Family & Protective Services (DFPS) case file over the father's hearsay objection. DFPS laid the proper predicate for admission of the file as a business or public record. Rogers v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 175 S.W.3d 370, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1327 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

495. Trial court did not err in admitting a physician's reports under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because it was not contended that any of the objectionable documents contained entries that were not made by the physician, nor was it suggested that the reports were written solely in response to a request by the insurance carrier or that the evaluation would not have been done otherwise. State Office of Risk Mgmt. v. Escalante, 162 S.W.3d 619, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1348 (Tex. App. El Paso 2005).

496. Trial court abused its discretion in admitting the medical records because they were inadmissible hearsay, when the State failed to show the two hospital documents were the business records of the medical facility, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), however, the improperly admitted records had no substantial effect or influence on the jury's verdict, thus the admission of the records was harmless error, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). The medical records at issue were either irrelevant or cumulative of other evidence admitted without objection. Carmouche v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11164 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 14 2004).

497. In a criminal prosecution, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a prior conviction for purposes of enhancing punishment; because it was admitted pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the business records exception to the hearsay rule, rather than Tex. R. Evid. 803(22), the public document exception. If the trial judge's decision is correct on any theory of law applicable to the case, it will be sustained. Macias v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10996 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 8 2004).

498. Defendant's general hearsay objection did not preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), on the alleged violation of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) as to the asserted failure to comply with the 14-day requirement; even assuming the objection was sufficient to preserve error, the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection because the clerk's record contained copies of the hospital records together with a business records affidavit conforming to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10)(a), and the records were file marked on one day and the trial was conducted 10 days later on defendant's charge of driving while intoxicated. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14 2004).

499. Defendant did not argue at trial or in the brief that a witness, though not a custodian of blood sample records, was not a qualified witness under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and thus, defendant did not show that the trial court erred in allowing the witness to authenticate the transmittal form under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) in connection with defendant's driving while intoxicated trial. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14 2004).

500. In a termination of parental rights case, the trial court must determine the admissibility of drug test results as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) by clear and convincing evidence under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 101.007. In re K.C.P., 142 S.W.3d 574, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7102 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

501. Trial court abused its discretion in admitting drug test results into evidence as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); admitting drug tests in a termination of parental rights case with no information as to the qualifications of the person or equipment used, the method of administering the test, and whether the test was a standard one for the particular substance indicates a lack of trustworthiness of the tests. The error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1), however, because the mother admitted extensive drug test and acknowledged her long-term difficulties in avoiding the use of drugs. In re K.C.P., 142 S.W.3d 574, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7102 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

502. In a personal injury case, letters written by a doctor to plaintiff's attorney were inadmissible because they admittedly were generated to facilitate settlement of a legal claim. The difficulty of lay persons reading and understanding medical records was inherent in the records themselves, especially when no explanatory expert testimony was presented, and for those reasons, the two excluded letters did not qualify under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Grove v. Overby, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6822 (Tex. App. Austin July 29 2004).

503. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper where he did not show that the trial court committed any error in allowing the senior chemist to authenticate the transmittal form from the lab indicating defendant's blood alcohol level, and as such, he did not show that the trial court committed any error in allowing the chemist to authenticate the transmittal form under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a), 803(6). Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6398 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14, 2004).

504. Business records used in one business, created by a third party at their behest, may be admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) if: (1) the incorporating business relied upon the information transmitted in the records in the normal course of its business and (2) the circumstances otherwise indicated the trustworthiness of the document; the business incorporated the two letters that the insurer created into its business records and relied upon them, and the circumstances indicated their trustworthiness, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the letters. Bell v. State, 176 S.W.3d 90, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5936 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

505. Trial court erred in overruling the couple's objections to the travel club's summary judgment evidence and in granting summary judgment, as the sworn affidavit by the club's customer service manager, and a series of documents attached to another affidavit, were not admissible because of his lack of personal knowledge and because the documents constituted hearsay, where the manager stated that he based his assertion of the fact that there had been a refund to the couple upon information that he obtained from a third party and the documents did not satisfy the business records' exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Thus, the club failed to establish that the couple were not entitled to damages as a matter of law. Powell v. Vavro, McDonald, & Assocs., L.L.C., 136 S.W.3d 762, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

506. In a criminal prosecution for endangering a child arising from the sexual assault of defendant's two children by her live-in boyfriend, two exhibits containing the medical records of the child-victims fell within the hearsay exception for records of regularly conducted activity set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); however, it was error to admit the exhibits because they contained a second layer of hearsay statements of abuse made by the children, and it was not clear that the children made these statements for the purpose of proper diagnosis within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

507. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

508. In a theft and arson prosecution, the arson report was properly admitted as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) where a State witness testified that (1) he was the custodian of the records; (2) the report was prepared by an arson investigator near the time of the investigation; (3) the investigator spoke to the witnesses, police, and defendant about the fire; (4) investigators routinely make reports following their investigations; and (5) the investigator's employer kept the reports in the course of its regular business. Mboob v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1714 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 23, 2004).

509. In revoking defendant's probation for violation of the condition of avoiding the use of narcotics or habit-forming drugs, the State established the predicate for admission of a urinalysis test as a business record exception, under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Adams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1222 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 9 2004).

510. Check paid to a moving company for moving a scanner for a business qualified as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Strahan v. Strahan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9844 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 20 2003).

511. Account statement attached to the affidavit of an employee of a promissory note assignee was improperly stricken by a trial court in a dispute over the note because the statement laid the proper foundation for each element of the business records exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Diversified Fin. Sys. v. Hill, O'Neal, Gilstrap & Goetz, P.C., 99 S.W.3d 349, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1647 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

512. Medical records that included a defendant's blood test results were properly admitted as a business record exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the exception was applicable to criminal proceedings so long as the reliability of the information were established. Serrano v. State, 936 S.W.2d 387, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 5029 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1996).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Absence of Records

513. In revocation of community supervision proceedings, while defendant conceded that his probation file was admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), defendant failed to object on the basis that the State never established the necessary predicate for admitting the negative evidence in the business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(7). The trial court, therefore, could properly admit the entire proffer under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Ferris v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1232, 2011 WL 664016 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

514. In defendant's trial for theft from a store, although defendant objected to the admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) of a receipt prepared by the store to show the value of the items, and the objection was overruled, a witness subsequently testified without objection as to the value of the stolen property, rendering any error harmless. Mays v.

State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7330, 2014 WL 3058462 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2014).

515. During the punishment phase of defendants murder trial, the trial court committed reversible error in admitting into evidence disciplinary records from the jail, probation department, and the Texas Youth Commission because the offense reports constituted hearsay and were not admissible under the business records exception. The admission of these records violated his right to confront the witnesses against him, because they contained several testimonial statements from witnesses who did not testify at trial. Smith v. State, 420 S.W.3d 207, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15280, 2013 WL 6699495 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

516. In a robbery case, trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance due to a failure to object to a property release form because this would have likely been admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Helmke v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12471, 2013 WL 5570474 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2013).

517. Even if the issue had been preserved, there was some evidence to support a conclusion that it was the regular course of business for the Midland Police Department to make the sex offender registration records and they were properly admitted. Morrison v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6527 (Tex. App. Eastland May 30 2013).

518. Trial court acted within its discretion during defendant's trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in admitting the victim's medical records without expert testimony because Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) plainly authorized the admission of the medical records without any witness, and while the State might have offered expert testimony to explain the medical records to the jury, Tex. R. Evid. 702 did not require such testimony. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

519. Trial court's admission of an aggravated assault victim's medical records, without an opportunity for defendant to first question the records' author on voir dire, did not violate defendant's rights under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because the language of Rule 705 contained no inference or even a suggestion that its provisions overrode the admissibility of a physician's observations, diagnoses, or opinions properly admitted as a business record. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

520. Even if the trial court erred by admitting a jail book in sheet as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the error was harmless because no party emphasized the unexplained divergence of dates between the date defendant was arrested and the date he bonded out. Crutchfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1942 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2013).

521. The State properly authenticated the booking sheet from a prior crime allegedly committed by defendant in the State of Washington as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and the records were not subject to exclusion because they contained hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Wood v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3254, 2012 WL 1448333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 25 2012).

522. In a proceeding to revoke defendant's community supervision for burglary of a habitation, the State offered an exhibit of defendant's community supervision records from Louisiana; the trial court overruled defendant's hearsay objection and admitted the exhibit as a business record and a government record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Clay v. State, 361 S.W.3d 762, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1255, 2012 WL 503513 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2012).

523. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting the ATM receipt as the State did not lay a business records exception predicate, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); however, the error was harmless, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, in light of the other abundant evidence of defendant's guilt. Gatewood v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9302, 2011 WL 5903656

(Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 23 2011).

524. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting autopsy photographs because the photographs were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as part of the business record of the autopsy report as the assistant medical examiner, who was the custodian of the office's records, testified that autopsy reports were made at or near the time that the autopsy was conducted by the medical examiner who conducted the autopsy; the records were kept in the regular course of the office's business; and he recognized the three photographs offered by the State as photographs from the murder victim's autopsy Delacerda v. State, 425 S.W.3d 367, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 21 2011).

525. Trial court's decision to admit the bank's business records did not fall outside the zone of reasonable disagreement where the custodian of records testified that the records were kept in the regular course of business at the bank; there was no requirement that the testifying witness had to have created the records, or even that she had personal familiarity of the mode of preparation in the records. Olejnik v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4747, 2011 WL 2475503 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 23 2011).

526. At defendant's trial for theft, the trial court admitted an exhibit containing photocopies of credit receipts and purchase orders as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); defendant objected under the best evidence rule. Because defendant did not challenge the admission of the exhibit on the grounds that the testifying witness did not have knowledge of how the record was prepared, the error was not preserved for review. Thompson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4019, 2011 WL 2112810 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 26 2011).

527. Where defendant was charged with several counts of indecency with a child by contact under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(a)(1), where he testified on direct examination that he had never improperly touched the alleged victims or any other child, where the prosecutor impeached defendant on cross-examination by introducing defendant's guilty plea to the offense of aggravated sexual assault of a child in which defendant admitted that he sexually penetrated a male child under the age of 14, and where defense counsel on redirect attempted to introduce the child's medical records to show that the child told health care providers that he had been assaulted by his father and not defendant, the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in excluding the records because defense counsel tried to admit the records through the testimony of a disability advocate with the hospital who claimed familiarity with the records but who did not testify that the victim's statements were kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity or that it was a regular practice to keep records of such statements. She was not the custodian of the records and did not make the records, and there was no evidence that the records at issue were business records. Salinas v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3644, 2011 WL 1938664 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 12 2011).

528. Blood test results were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in appellant's prosecution for intoxication assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.07 because the test was not done at law enforcement's request but as part of appellant's treatment at the hospital for a hip injury following an automobile collision. Desilets v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097, 2010 WL 3910588 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 6 2010).

529. At defendant's trial for theft of property, the trial court was permitted to admit a computer generated printout from a store register into evidence; because no person added anything to the record, there was no declarant and the computer printout was not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Therefore, the State was not required to lay a predicate to admit the document as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Haskins v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4769, 2010 WL 2524797 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2010).

530. In the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly admitted evidence of his prior sexual assault convictions because, although the records custodian admitted that she did not have personal knowledge of the contents of defendant's record, and did not personally pull and copy the files, such testimony was unnecessary. The witness's testimony sufficiently satisfied the necessary predicate by showing she had personal knowledge of the manner by which the records were prepared, and there was nothing in the record to suggest the judgments were so untrustworthy as to justify exclusion. Herrera v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9690, 2009 WL 4981327 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 23 2009).

531. In defendant's driving while intoxicated trial, hospital records met the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), given that (1) the record indicated that a nurse drew defendant's blood, (2) the record appeared to constitute the nurse's summary of all the procedures she performed, including the blood draw, and (3) the record contained the State's notice of intent to offer business records and an affidavit from the custodian of records, which was in substantially the same format as that listed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Patel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3575, 2009 WL 1425219 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 21 2009).

532. Because hospital records here were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, their admission did not violate defendant's confrontation rights. Patel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3575, 2009 WL 1425219 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 21 2009).

533. Trial court did not err in admitting jail disciplinary reports under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), with the exception of reports that contained inadmissible testimonial statements. However, admission of the testimonial statements was harmless because although the reports were read aloud to the jury, they were never emphasized again by the State in any way. Smith v. State, 297 S.W.3d 260, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 527 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

534. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting documents from defendant's sex offender records in Texas because the sheriff's deputy who laid the predicate for introduction of the documents as business records demonstrated she had personal knowledge of the mode of preparation of the documents, as: (1) the deputy testified that her agency confirmed that defendant was convicted of a sexual offense out of state by calling a probation officer who faxed the Ohio court papers to the sheriff's office; (2) sheriff's department personnel verified facts within the record with defendant, who signed many of the registration documents containing reference to the Ohio cause number; and (3) the deputy affirmed that this method was the usual practice of sheriff's department employees in confirming information of an offender and the records were kept in the regular course of business of her agency. Wagner v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2423 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 31 2009).

535. Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) does not require that the witness be the person who made the record; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting all the medical records contained in an exhibit pursuant to the business records exception. Hill v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1509, 2009 WL 578629 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 6 2009).

536. Defendant objected to an exhibit on hearsay grounds and claimed on appeal that the evidence was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), but the State established the admissibility of the documents as a record of regularly conducted activity under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and the fact that defendant might have been correct about the applicability of the medical diagnosis exception was not conclusive of the issue; the trial court was correct in admitting the evidence as a record of regularly conducted activity and there was no abuse of discretion. Matthews v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8544 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 13 2008).

537. In an assault case, defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because there was no reversible error relating to the exclusion of evidence, a victim's medical records could have been admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and through the testimony of another witness, and counsel was not given an opportunity to explain his strategy as it related to the timing of a mistrial motion. Because the claims of ineffectiveness were all alleged errors of omission beyond the record, counsel's performance was not found deficient since defendant failed to show the conduct was so outrageous that no competent attorney would have engaged in it. Fillmore v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6573 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 27, 2008).

538. In defendant's theft case, although the State failed to lay a proper predicate for admission of receipts under the business records exception because there was no evidence that the information contained in the exhibits came from a "person with knowledge" of that information, the error was harmless. The exhibits showed that a computer and a cash register, respectively, were charged to the theft victim, and that evidence was cumulative of other testimony. Underwood v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5936 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 7 2008).

539. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

540. There was no merit to defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, enhanced by three prior felony convictions, for failing to file a motion to suppress and/or objecting at trial to the admission of the business records of defendant's employer, along with an affidavit of the custodian of records of the employer that tracked verbatim Tex. R. Evid. 902, and even though the records were not physically attached to the affidavit in the clerk's record but were included in the record of exhibits, defendant was not harmed because his girlfriend testified before the jury that he was not at work on the date of the incident. Delgado v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

541. Nurse testified that a nurse's records were kept in the regular course of business at the medical center, and that she was familiar with the records because she, as a representative of the medical center, made them; furthermore, she created them near the time of the event and had actual knowledge of the event; although she did not specifically say she was the custodian of records, she established that she was qualified to testify, and her testimony laid the proper predicate for admission of the medical records under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Clark v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9452 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 4 2007).

542. In a theft case, the testimony of an authenticating witness established the proper predicate for admission of a purchase requisition form as a record of regularly conducted activity under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the witness had personal knowledge of how such records were created, although he did not know exactly when the form was created. Baker v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7970 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 5 2007).

543. At defendant's trial for theft of a plasma television, the State was permitted to admit a purchasing requisition form showing the cost of replacing the television under the business records exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803; the authenticating witness testified that he was the head of the security, he made the form in the regular course of business near the time of the events in question, such forms were created to inform the finance department of the price of a needed item, and he was authorized to keep and control such forms. Baker v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7886 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 4 2007).

544. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of those exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th

Cir. Tex. 2007).

545. Probation officers' reports were admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 without objection and the trial court could have properly considered the testimony and the reports when assessing a sentence, as well as considering live testimony, and thus the court rejected defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance when the testimony was admitted, which defendant claimed contained hearsay. Torres v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5641 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 19 2007).

546. Regarding defendant's federal Confrontation Clause argument, he failed, under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), to explain how probation reports were more testimonial in a constitutional sense than they were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803, and the court was unable to speculate on the matter and overruled defendant's ineffective assistance claim. Torres v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5641 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 19 2007).

547. 911 operator established the predicate for admission of an exhibit listing data entries made by the operator as a business record, and the victim's statements contained therein were admissible as excited utterances. Shepard v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3602 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

548. During defendant's murder trial, he was not permitted to introduce his jail records under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the height and weight identifiers on the jail records were provided by defendant at the time of booking; he had no business duty to report accurately. Benford v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2844 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

549. Trial court had not erroneously admitted the medical report prepared by the doctor who examined the child, a victim of sexual assault, because, as defendant argued, the State did not establish the proper predicate for the business records exception; defense counsel's objection "Just object to its entry, Your Honor. Don't feel like the proper foundation and predicate has been laid for its entry," did not inform the trial court of that deficiency. Weaver v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9996 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

550. Jail disciplinary records fell under the business record exception to the bar on hearsay statements under Rule 803(6) of the Texas Rules of Criminal Evidence. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 204 Fed. Appx. 489, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28253 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

551. Admission of an accomplice's statement and a prisoner's jail disciplinary records at trial did not violate the prisoner's Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights under Crawford because both pieces of evidence were admitted under the prevailing law at the time of the prisoner's trial. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

552. At defendant's probation revocation hearing, the contents of his probation file were admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although defendant's current probation officer did not have personal knowledge of all the entries in the probation file, he testified that defendant's former probation officer prepared the file and had personal knowledge of the facts recorded in the file. Canseco v. State, 199 S.W.3d 437, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4664 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

553. In a criminal trial for prostitution, a deputy was a "qualified witness" to testify as to defendant's sexually oriented business employee record under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the document was created for the vice department's database. Melendez v. State, 194 S.W.3d 641, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4250 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

554. On appeal of defendant's conviction for two counts of capital murder, he claimed that the trial court erred in allowing inadmissible hearsay accounts from his disciplinary records of uncharged prison misconduct; defendant contended the reports were inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), as matters observed by "other law enforcement personnel. Because his trial objections did not comport with the specific claim he raised on appeal, defendant failed to preserve the error for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Robles v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 26 2006).

555. Information contained on chain-of-evidence forms involved routine information that did not involve any subjective interpretation or analysis by the police personnel and were properly admitted on that basis. Ash v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1315 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 16 2006).

556. Where defendant was charged with murder, the trial court did not err by admitting defendant's cell phone records and testimony from the custodian of record under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. The phone records denoted defendant's whereabouts on the day of the murder. Wilson v. State, 195 S.W.3d 193, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 815 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

557. In a child sexual assault case, the admission of defendant's medical records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) was proper because the records were properly authenticated by their custodian in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) as having been made and kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity. Eslora v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005).

558. In a murder trial, the victim's autopsy report was admissible under the public records exception to the hearsay rule. The forensic pathologist was not "other law enforcement personnel" under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), in that the record did not support that the autopsy report was other than an objective, routine, scientific determination of an unambiguous factual nature. Denoso v. State, 156 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 878 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

559. Motel owner testified that (1) he owned the motel; (2) the registration cards were kept in the regular course of business; and (3) the forms were filled out in part by the motel guest and in part by an employee of the motel; thus, his testimony supported the trial court's determination that the hotel registration form met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and, therefore, were admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

560. At a probation revocation hearing, a witness who did not personally supervise defendant was properly allowed to testify from his probation file. A predicate was laid for the business records hearsay exception when the witness testified that probation officers kept notes when they met with probationers and entries were made in the probationer's record within 48 hours Jefferson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11796 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 29 2004).

561. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court did not err in admitting the record of defendant's truck registration because the registration was from a public agency charged with the duty of maintaining vehicle registration records. Pendley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10526 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 24 2004).

562. In the punishment phase of defendant's murder case, a court did not err by admitting medical records where a registered nurse testified that she treated defendant's boyfriend for a stab wound in 2000, she recognized the medical record, she was one of the registered nurses involved in the trauma, her handwriting was on the record, she had probably directed a co-worker to take notes, and she signed the bottom of the record. The nurse testified that the medical records were kept as part of the records of the hospital. Williams v. State, 176 S.W.3d 476, 2004

Tex. App. LEXIS 10561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

563. In an injury to a child case, while the trial court erred in admitting the gang intelligence form into evidence as it constituted matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel and was therefore not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule, the error was harmless as the same information was subsequently introduced, without objection, during an officer's testimony. Furthermore, any error was waived as no objection was made as to the officer testimony regarding defendant's involvement in a gunfight or an assault. Aranda v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10370 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2004).

564. Booking record from a prior felony conviction was properly admitted as a business record at the sentencing portion of a trial for aggravated robbery. The arresting officer was competent to sponsor the exhibit, even though he was not the records custodian, where he testified that he had been an officer for seven years and was familiar with the booking process. Martin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8903 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2004).

565. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence in defendant's trial for DWI medical records where defendant's objection was not specific enough to make the trial court aware; therefore, the error was not preserved. Jacobs v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4538 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 20 2004).

566. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence in defendant's trial for DWI medical records where defendant's objection was not specific enough to make the trial court aware; therefore, the error was not preserved. Jacobs v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4538 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 20 2004).

567. Examining credit union account records did not establish that the records were of a regularly conducted activity or that it was the regular practice of the credit union to make such records. There was no presumption that the account records had any more reliability than other business records, such that the account records were immune from the foundational requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). West v. State, 124 S.W.3d 732, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9451 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

568. Under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), evidence of a videotaped interview of a child witness was properly excluded at defendant's trial for knowingly or intentionally causing bodily injury to her 14 month old daughter because the videotape was hearsay and did not fall under the business records exception to the hearsay rule since the witness did not have a business duty to make the statements. Cheek v. State, 119 S.W.3d 475, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9301 (Tex. App. El Paso 2003).

569. Tex. R. Evid. 803 does not render inadmissible the certified copies of an accused's driving record complied by the Department of Public Safety as required by law. Ball v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6293 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 30 2002).

570. In a defendant's trial on charges of theft of property valued at more than $ 20,000 from his employer, the trial court erred in admitting a letter containing out-of-court statements of a company employee claiming the property belonged to his company because the document, created solely in anticipation of prosecuting criminal charges against defendant, was offered as proof of the matter asserted and did not fall within the category of a business record for hearsay purposes. Hardy v. State, 71 S.W.3d 535, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2149 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2002).

571. Assault victim's medical records were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the affidavit of the custodian of hospital records stated that the records were kept in the regular course of the hospital's business, that the hospital was the custodian's employer, that the victim's medical records were made by a hospital employee with knowledge of the events, and that the employee made the records at or near the time of the event. Thus, the affidavit satisfied both Rule 803(6) and Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), including the notice provision of Rule 902(10). Reyes v. State, 48 S.W.3d 917, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3983 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

572. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting business records over a debtor's "untrustworthiness" objection because the circumstances indicated the trustworthiness of the documents; although the last credit-card statement did contain conflicting information, it did not reflect a zero balance, and the prior statements in the business records were consistent and reflected the balance on the account at the end of each billing period Levy v. Cach, L.L.C., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14586, 2013 WL 6237273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 3 2013).

573. Even if the issue had been preserved, there was some evidence to support a conclusion that it was the regular course of business for the Midland Police Department to make the sex offender registration records and they were properly admitted. Morrison v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6527 (Tex. App. Eastland May 30 2013).

574. Appellant claimed that the credit card receipt should not have been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the State failed to establish the document's trustworthiness, but the store's sales associate testified that he was the one who conducted the transaction and he testified that the receipt was made and kept in the regular course of business, and the store's regular practice was to make a record of each transaction and generate a receipt on the computer, and that he had personal knowledge of the transaction and acting in the regular course of business in generating the receipt; thus, the trial court could have found that the receipt was sufficiently trustworthy to fall within the business records exception. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

575. Fact that the associate was not a store employee at the time of trial and that he was not the custodian of the records did not affect the admissibility of the credit card receipt, and he stated he would be able to determine if there had been changes made to the receipt, given that the company used a specific type of printer in order to print receipts; the trial court did not err in finding the receipt admissible. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

576. Probate court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the 1993 tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the affidavit and tax return were timely filed pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the affidavit, the accountant affirmed that he was the custodian of records, that the 12 pages consisted of the 1993 1040 U.S. Individual Income Tax Return and the decedent's W-2, that the 12 pages were kept by him in the regular course of business, and that the records were made at or near the time or reasonably soon thereafter, and that the records were the original or exact duplicates of the original. Valdez v. Hollenbeck, 410 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

577. Exhibit which consisted of numerous payout calculations, as business records, should not have been excluded as summaries of business records compiled for trial purposes, because these payout calculations set forth drilling and completion costs as well as operating revenues and expenses. Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

578. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the mortgage company's evidence where the agent's affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) by averring to facts that satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the agent averred that she was providing the records as the custodian, that she had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records, that the records were made in the regular course of business, and that it was the regular practice of the business to keep such records. Khalilnia v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS

579. Insurance company documents were presented as business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the cell phone documents were presented pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902 with the accompanying affidavit; because the documents were produced in the normal and regular course of business of the entity that kept the records, defendant was not denied his right of confrontation. Lozoya v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1973, 2013 WL 708489 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2013).

580. Affidavit was dated in 2010 and asserted that an account was sold to a company in 2009, but a record of a sale made more than a year after a sale takes place is clearly not at or near the time of the event that it purports to record; the circumstances suggested that the affidavit was created in anticipation of litigation instead of in the course of regular business activity, which cast doubt on its trustworthiness, and as the circumstances of the affidavit did not reflect the conditions of the justifications behind the business record exception, the affidavit did not fall within the business records exception. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

581. In a forcible detainer action, a business records affidavit that authenticated the notice to vacate was not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it substantially complied with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10), although it did not precisely track the language of Rule 902(10). Although the affidavit was prepared by a third party, the foreclosure purchaser's law firm, the trial court could have concluded that the purchaser reasonably relied on the accuracy of the records in the ordinary course of its business and that they were trustworthy. Baty v. Morequity, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9876 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2012).

582. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a conservatorship specialist's plan and progress report into evidence on the ground that it was inadmissible hearsay because the records were admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, as the specialist testified that the permanency plan was made and kept in the regular course of her business, that the records were made near the time of the events recorded, and that the records were compiled by a person with knowledge who was acting in the regular course of business. In re A.L.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 8 2012).

583. Business records of an attorney were admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) to support attorney's fees, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the brother's objection and admitting the trustee's Exhibit 1 into evidence. Lesikar v. Moon, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7311, 2012 WL 3776365 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

584. Business records affidavit met the criteria under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), given that (1) the affiant stated she was the records custodian for the debt-holder's assignee, it was the assignee's regular practice to rely on documents the original creditor prepared, and the records were maintained by those with the duty to keep the record accurately, (2) one of the documents attached to the affidavit was an affidavit of sale, which was notarized and self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(8), and the affidavit of sale stated that the creditor acquired the account and then sold it to the assignee, with a certain amount due, and (3) the creditor's failure to keep accurate records could result in penalties, for purposes of Tex. Fin. Code Ann. §§ 392.304(a)(8), 392.402, and the circumstances otherwise indicated the trustworthiness of the creditor's documents; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the records. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

585. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App.

LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

586. Testimony of a custodian of records as to their preparation established the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in a construction contract dispute, and his statement that the evidence accurately portrayed what the subcontractor claimed it portrayed met the authentication requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), regardless of whether he had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records. Concept Gen. Contr., Inc. v. Asbestos Maint. Servs., 346 S.W.3d 172, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5475 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 18 2011).

587. In an action to collect a credit card debt, although the debtor pointed to discrepancies between the creditor's business records affidavit and other documents, the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in determining that the circumstances did not indicate untrustworthiness and in admitting the records. Troung v. Dodeka, L.L.C., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5213, 2011 WL 2693504 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2011).

588. Where defendant was charged with several counts of indecency with a child by contact under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(a)(1), where he testified on direct examination that he had never improperly touched the alleged victims or any other child, where the prosecutor impeached defendant on cross-examination by introducing defendant's guilty plea to the offense of aggravated sexual assault of a child in which defendant admitted that he sexually penetrated a male child under the age of 14, and where defense counsel on redirect attempted to introduce the child's medical records to show that the child told health care providers that he had been assaulted by his father and not defendant, the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in excluding the records because defense counsel tried to admit the records through the testimony of a disability advocate with the hospital who claimed familiarity with the records but who did not testify that the victim's statements were kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity or that it was a regular practice to keep records of such statements. She was not the custodian of the records and did not make the records, and there was no evidence that the records at issue were business records. Salinas v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3644, 2011 WL 1938664 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 12 2011).

589. Trial court affirmatively stated that it had considered the factors set forth in Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 1.04(b), reprinted in Tex. Gov't Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G app. A-1 (Tex. State Bar R. art. X, sec. 9) in awarding attorney's fees, and absent objection, counsel's unsworn testimony sufficiently established the amount of fees incurred. Thus, although the supporting affidavits were hearsay because they did not comply with the requirements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 18.001 and the invoices were hearsay because they were not properly authenticated as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), their admission was harmless error. Good v. Baker, 339 S.W.3d 260, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2167 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 25 2011).

590. In a suit to recover a credit-card debt, the debtor failed to preserve for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(2) his objections to an affidavit because he did not obtain a ruling; and in any event, the affidavit was sufficiently authenticated as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10) by the affiant's testimony about her personal knowledge of account records. Singh v. Citibank (south Dakota), N.A., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2161, 2011 WL 1103788 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2011).

591. Probation officer's chronological record of attempts to contact defendant was properly admitted as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the officer testified that the record was a computer printout of notes that he entered into the computer in the ordinary course of his role as a probation officer. Ford v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2192, 2011 WL 1106731 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 24 2011).

592. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the production of a decedent's medical records during discovery might have authenticated them but did not render them admissible in a will contest. The medical records were hearsay and inadmissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 803(6) because no custodian established the requirements of the exception. In the Estate of Vackar, 345 S.W.3d 588, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1684 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 9 2011).

593. In a forcible detainer suit brought by a lender that purchased the property at a foreclosure sale, a paralegal employed by an affiliated service provider of the lender's counsel was a qualified witness with personal knowledge under Tex. R. Evid. 602, 803(6), 902(10) of business records regarding the foreclosure proceedings. Rodriguez v. Citimortgage, Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 171, 2011 WL 182122 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 6 2011).

594. Pharmacy dispensed medication to a mother pursuant to the physician's directions and kept records of the prescriptions in the course of its regular business, plus a witness, the owner of the pharmacy, was the custodian of the records, such that the trial court did not err in admitting the business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). In the Interest of S.R., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9681, 2010 WL 4983484 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2010).

595. Affidavit demonstrated that the agent was the custodian of records for the law firm that represented the mortgagor at trial, and it tracked the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the homeowner did not challenge the trustworthiness of the business records covered by the affidavit, and the affidavit contained information upon which the trial court could have reasonable concluded that the agent was qualified to testify about the matters contained in the business record. Fleming v. Fannie Mae, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9393, 2010 WL 4812983 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 24 2010).

596. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

597. In the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly admitted evidence of his prior sexual assault convictions because, although the records custodian admitted that she did not have personal knowledge of the contents of defendant's record, and did not personally pull and copy the files, such testimony was unnecessary. The witness's testimony sufficiently satisfied the necessary predicate by showing she had personal knowledge of the manner by which the records were prepared, and there was nothing in the record to suggest the judgments were so untrustworthy as to justify exclusion. Herrera v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9690, 2009 WL 4981327 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 23 2009).

598. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting documents from defendant's sex offender records in Texas because the sheriff's deputy who laid the predicate for introduction of the documents as business records demonstrated she had personal knowledge of the mode of preparation of the documents, as: (1) the deputy testified that her agency confirmed that defendant was convicted of a sexual offense out of state by calling a probation officer who faxed the Ohio court papers to the sheriff's office; (2) sheriff's department personnel verified facts within the record with defendant, who signed many of the registration documents containing reference to the Ohio cause number; and (3) the deputy affirmed that this method was the usual practice of sheriff's department employees in confirming information of an offender and the records were kept in the regular course of business of her agency. Wagner v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2423 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 31 2009).

599. In the State's action under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA) that alleged that appellants, a husband and wife who operated a business assisting Spanish speaking individuals with immigration matters, had counseled consumers without legal authorization or qualification, appellants raised no valid complaints regarding the admissibility of the evidence and the trial court's rulings thereon where an exhibit consisting of a summary of the more than 2,180 G-28 forms filed by the husband was itself a business record entitled to be treated as other business records, making Tex. R. Evid. 1006 inapplicable, and where the testimony of an intelligence research specialist with the Citizenship and Immigration Services Branch of the United States Department of Homeland Security established the necessary predicate required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the specialist testified that the exhibit was a business record made in the ordinary course of business at Citizenship and Immigration Services, made at or near the time his department received the G-28 forms, by a person with knowledge of the events being recorded; furthermore, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a previous client of appellants who was testifying for the State to answer when asked if she obtained her residency status because any testimony going to the gravity of the harm done by engaging in the prohibited act was irrelevant and inadmissible. Avila v. State, 252 S.W.3d 632, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

600. In a credit card company's action for breach of contract for a cardholder's failure to pay his credit card debt, a custodian of records for the company properly authenticated the documents referenced in her summary judgment affidavit as "business records" and the affidavit contained sufficient factual support and was not, therefore, conclusory; the cardholder did not present any evidence to raise a fact issue as to whether the documents were properly authenticated business records, and he also failed to identify any statements in the affidavit that he contended were opinions or legal conclusions. Duran v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2060 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2008).

601. In an intoxication manslaughter trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, medical records that contained the notes of a substance abuse counselor regarding defendant's 40-year history of drinking six to eight beers a day were properly admitted as business records. Sullivan v. State, 248 S.W.3d 746, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 670 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

602. Nurse testified that a nurse's records were kept in the regular course of business at the medical center, and that she was familiar with the records because she, as a representative of the medical center, made them; furthermore, she created them near the time of the event and had actual knowledge of the event; although she did not specifically say she was the custodian of records, she established that she was qualified to testify, and her testimony laid the proper predicate for admission of the medical records under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Clark v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9452 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 4 2007).

603. Jury's verdict finding that an individual was incapacitated was upheld because two physicians' reports were properly admitted under the business records exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 since it was the regular course of business to make the reports and there was no question about trustworthiness. In re Parker, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9428 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 29 2007).

604. During defendant's murder trial, he was not permitted to introduce his jail records under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the height and weight identifiers on the jail records were provided by defendant at the time of booking; he had no business duty to report accurately. Benford v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2844 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Family Records & Statements

605. Documents related to marriages, births, personal history, and relationships of church members and were regularly maintained by the church; the documents were excepted from the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(11) or Tex. R. Evid. 803(13) and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting these documents. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

606. Appellant claimed the purpose for which the State offered the evidence was not a purpose discussed in the rules; however, the exceptions to the hearsay rules are not dependent on the reason why a party wants to offer the hearsay, and the only relevant inquiry concerning the purpose of hearsay is whether the out-of-court statement is being offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Why the proponent wishes to admit the evidence, beyond offering it for the truth of the matter asserted, is immaterial, and how the hearsay evidence supports the proponent's trial theory or fits into the proponent's trial strategy does not affect its admissibility under an exception under the rules. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

607. Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a descendant of the dominant estate's original owner, including events pre-dating the descendant's birth and the use of the purported easement. Under case law, such testimony was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(19), (20), 804(b)(3). Perkins v. Krauter Family P'ship, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8399 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 22 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Judgments : Prior Felony Convictions

608. Even if the trial court erred by admitting the December 2010 judgment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(22), other evidence showed that the patient had been convicted of indecency with a child by contact; thus, the order of civil commitment was proper as the patient had been convicted of more than one qualifying sexually violent offense under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 841.002(8)(A), 841.003(b). In re Commitment of Hernandez, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806, 2011 WL 6229575 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 15 2011).

609. Given that Tex. R. Evid. 803 created an exception to the hearsay rule for public records and reports and judgments of previous convictions, to the extent that defendant's complaint was that pen packets were hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the hearsay objection. Smith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2849 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Learned Treatises : General Overview

610. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed expert testimony by a nurse concerning her finding no trauma to the child's genitals in her examination because she was qualified by her knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education as an expert witness in the field of child sexual abuse; she testified that she relied on a study in reaching her opinion, and therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the nurse to testify about the results of the study. Archer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6612 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 17 2007).

611. During defendant's trial for recklessly causing serious bodily injury to a child with the use of a deadly weapon, the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803 (18) in failing to admit a medical journal article that refuted the scientific theory upon which the State's medical experts relied, because defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the State's medical experts on Shaken Baby Syndrome and the minority viewpoint contained in the article suggesting that injuries such as those sustained by the child could result from causes other than Shaken Baby Syndrome. Hernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10659 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 22 2005).

612. In a murder case, the trial court did not err in ruling that an article taken from an Internet medical journal was a treatise and, under Tex. Evid. R. 803(18), was not admissible as an exhibit; because cross-examination as to the article was permitted, there was no violation of the constitutional right of confrontation. Sanchez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3783 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Market Reports & Commercial Publications : General Overview

613. Court had held that several exceptions could be relied upon to allow proof of the value of stolen property, including the business-records exception, the exception for records of documents affecting an interest in property, and the exception for market reports and such, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a witness's testimony in this regard over appellant's hearsay objection; in the alternative, any error was harmless because (1) appellant's community supervision was conditioned on him not committing any offense, (2) although it was alleged that appellant committed theft of property worth at least $ 1,500, proof of a lesser included offense would have sufficed to render judgment adjudicating his guilt, (3) theft of property valued at less than $ 50 was a lesser-included offense of theft of property of a higher amount, and (4) even if there was no properly admitted evidence of the value of the wheels and tires, the court could presume they had some value because the witness had not replaced them for months after the theft. Calixto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2643, 2012 WL 1138726 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 4 2012).

614. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

615. In a possession of pseudoephedrine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine case, the labeling on the cold medicine bottles constituted hearsay because it was an extrajudicial assertion offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted that the tablets contained pseudoephedrine; however, the labels were generally relied upon by the public, which suggested that the cold medication labels were accurate and trustworthy; thus, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, the labels were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Shaffer v. State, 184 S.W.3d 353, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 410 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

616. Given the record before the appellate court, and the general objection to all of the sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony, the appellate court could not say that there was no medical purpose to obtaining any of the history; because the investigative questions were intertwined with proper requests for medical history, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing her testimony. Berman v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5523 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 22 2014).

617. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the victim's counselor because the State met its burden to make the record reflect that truth-telling was a vital component of the victim's counseling and that he was aware that that was the case. In re H.L.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3081 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2014).

618. In a sexual assault trial, it did not violate the hearsay rule to admit the complainant's account of what happened, as told to a sexual assault nurse examiner, because the complainant's statements regarding the incident were necessary for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and thus came under the medical treatment exception. Williams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2618, 2014 WL 895506 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 6 2014).

619. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the inculpatory statements, because they fell squarely within the hearsay exception for medical diagnosis or treatment, when there was a family relationship between the accuser and defendant, and the identity of the assailant was reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment. Trevizo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 652, 2014 WL 260591 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 22 2014).

620. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the inculpatory statements, because they fell squarely within the hearsay exception for medical diagnosis or treatment, when there was a family relationship between the accuser and defendant, and the identity of the assailant was reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment. Trevizo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 652, 2014 WL 260591 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 22 2014).

621. On appeal, defendant appeared to concede that the statement was made for purposes of medical treatment, but opined that it was inadmissible before there was no assurance that the victim understood the need to speak truthfully, and the issue did not comport with the objection made by counsel; even if the court assumed the issue had been properly preserved, the decision to admit the testimony of the sexual assault nurse examiner was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement. Tuckness v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14333, 2013 WL 6255702 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 21 2013).

622. Defendant failed to show that the court erred in admitting the statements made to the nurse, because the qualifications of the person hearing the statements was not the important consideration, and the fact that the nurse could have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the conclusion that the statements were inadmissible. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13160, 2013 WL 5773573 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 23 2013).

623. Testimony by a sexual assault nurse examiner and a clinical psychologist regarding the victim's statements were made to those witnesses for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment, as they obtained a medical history and history of what happened from the victim in order to diagnose and treat the victim. Herrera v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11569 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 11 2013).

624. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the nurse who examined the victim after she made her outcry was permitted to testify about the victim's responses when asked why she was going to have the exam; it could be inferred that the victim knew it was important to tell the truth and that asking about the assaults was important to the child's medical diagnosis or treatment. Thomas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 23 2013).

625. Trial counsel's performance was not deficient in not objecting on hearsay grounds to the Sexual Abuse Nurse Examiner's report because this rule provided legal grounds for admission of the report. Moreno v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9446 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 31 2013).

626. Trial court did not allow a nurse to testify as an expert because she was not so designated, and this was irrelevant to an analysis under the rule, as the notion that a witness had to have medical qualifications had already been rejected; the fact that the nurse might have been gathering information for a criminal prosecution did not lead to the finding that the statements were not admissible, and appellant did not show error. Beck v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9536 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

627. Defendant's contention that the SANE nurse examiner reading from her medical report was inadmissible hearsay on the ground that the nurse had not advised the complainant of the importance of telling the truth was rejected because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in inferring that the complainant had an implicit awareness her examination was dependent on the veracity of her statements, as the nurse explained the entire process to her before obtaining the history of what happened. Duckworth v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9062 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 24 2013).

628. At defendant's trial for multiple counts of injury to a child and aggravated sexual assault of a child, the State was permitted to present the testimony of a professional counselor under this rule indicating that the victim made an outcry to his foster mother before he discussed it with the counselor. Stewart v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8614

(Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 11 2013).

629. Where defendant was convicted of multiples counts of aggravated sexual assault, attempted aggravated sexual assault, and indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of the two sexual assault nurse examiners (SANE) because their testimony fell under an exception to the hearsay rule. Neither SANE nurse gave any opinion about the truthfulness of the alleged victims, and bolstering was not a cognizable objection. Trevino v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8618 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 11 2013).

630. In a prosecution of defendant for sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a sexual assault nurse examiner, where a proper predicate was laid for the admission of the testimony. Lathan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4779 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 17 2013).

631. Defendant's conviction for an assault against his wife was appropriate, in part because a plausible inference could have been made that the medical records at issue were created simply for the purpose of medical diagnosis, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Perez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694, 2013 WL 655714 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 21 2013).

632. Defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child were proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection to the victim's statement since the trial court could have reasonably concluded in light of the testimony and the setting for the examination that the victim was aware that her statements were for the purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and was aware of the importance of being truthful, Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Sosa v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9807 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 28 2012).

633. In a will contest, the trial court erred by granting summary judgment on the issue of testamentary capacity because testimony from witnesses that decedent was not in a state of mind to conduct financial affairs when he signed his will was sufficient to show the existence of a material fact issue with respect to testamentary capacity. The appellate court did not consider the medical records attached to the motions for summary judgment, because they were not proven up with a medical record's affidavit in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). In re Estate of O'Neil, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7376, 2012 WL 3776490 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2012).

634. In defendant's domestic violence case, the victim's statements to a doctor were properly admitted because the victim was at the emergency room complaining of "physical abuse and assault," and the doctor testified that in order to treat victims of assault in cases in which the victim might return to her assailant, he needed to know who caused the assault and how the assault occurred. Additionally, the doctor testified that the victim complained of pain in specific areas of her body, and the district court could have reasonably inferred that in order for the doctor to determine how to treat the pain in those areas, he needed to know what, specifically, had caused the pain. Garcia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7543 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 29 2012).

635. Statements defendant's granddaughter made to a licensed professional counselor that defendant played an active role in the day-to-day care of her grandchildren and was the disciplinarian for the grandchildren were admissible under the hearsay exception for statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the counselor needed to establish the family structure to address the granddaughter's therapeutic needs. Tijerina v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6872, 2012 WL 3525632 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2012).

636. Victim's out-of-court statements made to a therapist concerning appellant's conduct as the perpetrator of the crime were not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) just because the therapist was not a psychiatrist or a member of the medical profession; the therapist had been seeing the victim in counseling for two years, and the therapist had a developed a working diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder to pursue the treatment course for the victim. Ortiz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603, 2012 WL 1137909 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2012).

637. Even if the court assumed that the trial court erred in admitting a therapist's testimony of certain incidents under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), there was no harm from the admission of the testimony, given that the victim had already testified tot the same incidents including other ones, and the court could not find that the error, if any, influenced the jury in appellant's attempted indecency with a child case. Ortiz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603, 2012 WL 1137909 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2012).

638. In defendant's sexual abuse case, the victim's hearsay statements to a doctor were properly admitted because the doctor testified that she had specialized training in treating conditions related to sexual abuse, and that she always asked her patients for a thorough medical history prior to making any diagnosis. The doctor found that the victim had a "notch" on her hymen, which was a "suspicious" finding consistent with what the victim had told her about the abuse she suffered. Whitman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 936, 2012 WL 361740 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

639. Appellant claimed that his medical records were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), but this was not presented at trial as a ground for overruling the State's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and although the records were included in the bill of exceptions, such was not made on the predicate for admission under either hearsay exception appellant raised for the first time on appeal; even if the court assumed that the trial court understood the bill of exceptions to be a proffer of admission, the records did not establish that appellant suffered from a medical condition that was relevant to his prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the patient history did not show that he had a condition that mimicked the symptoms of intoxication, and no other potential relevance for the records was shown, such that exclusion of the records did not affect a substantial right under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

640. During defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) in admitting a summary of the victim's interview by an examining physician because although no affirmative showing was required, the evidence supported an inference that the victim understood the need for veracity; the victim was 13 years old at the time of the examination. Alvarado v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10062, 2011 WL 6808378 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 22 2011).

641. Texas Court of Criminal Appeals does not require a proponent of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) statements to an examining physician to affirmatively demonstrate the declarant was aware of the need for veracity. Alvarado v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10062, 2011 WL 6808378 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 22 2011).

642. Trial court did not err in allowing an emergency medical technician who treated a murder victim at the scene to testify that when she asked the victim about one of his injuries, he replied, "he kicked me," because the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule found in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) applied to the victim's response to the question about how he became injured. Malone v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8602, 2011 WL 5118820 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 27 2011).

643. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's objection and admitting the challenged hearsay as the sexual assault nurse examiner testified she explained the purpose of the examination to the complainant and believed the complainant understood what she was asking of her. Barshaw v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7400 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 9 2011).

644. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the sexual assault nurse examiner regarding hearsay statements made by the victim under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because: (1) the 16-year-old victim was seen by the nurse in an emergency room setting less than 48 hours after the assaultive conduct ended; (2) there was nothing in the record to negate that the victim possessed the necessary awareness of the need to be truthful during the medical history portion of the exam; (3) the nurse specifically testified that obtaining the history from the victim was necessary for medical treatment; and (4) based on the victim's statements that she had been sexually abused over an extended period of time by more than one assailant and the abuse included penetration of the female sexual organ and anus, the nurse examined those areas of the victim's body. Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7151, 2011 WL 3848985 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

645. In a daughter's action claiming undue influence, nurse reports regarding the decedent's interaction with her husband were admissible because they were supported by an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); they were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid 803(4), (6) regarding the decedent's medical treatment. In the Estate of Ward, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811, 2011 WL 3720829 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 24 2011).

646. In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(1)(B)(i) and (a)(2)(B), even if the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statements under the hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), any such error was harmless because the victim herself testified without objection to the very statements contained in the objected-to medical record. Vanhoy v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6591, 2011 WL 3631316 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

647. Trial court did not err in admitting the transcription of the doctor's testimony into evidence as an expert witness may rely on records and information prepared by others in reaching his conclusions, Tex. R. Evid. 703, and medical and autopsy reports fell into an exception to the hearsay rule and were allowed into evidence without the preparing doctor appearing in court to explain them, Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (8). Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2011 WL 3435736 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2011).

648. In the penalty phase of a trial for intoxication manslaughter, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) in refusing to allow an expert witness to explain that a diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder was based, in part, on what defendant told him about his mental history, including what happened on the night of the accident. Bayas v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5306, 2011 WL 2714114 (Tex. App. El Paso July 13 2011).

649. During sentencing in defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting hearsay testimony from a sexual assault nurse examiner who indicated that defendant's daughter had sustained multiple penetrating injuries that were consistent with her account of abuse. Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis were excepted from hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Prieto v. State, 337 S.W.3d 918, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2606 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 7 2011).

650. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the doctor's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4); it was within the trial court's discretion to determine that the statements were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment and that proper treatment depended on the veracity of such statements. Vela v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2127, 2011 WL 1084795 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 24 2011).

651. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault, the testimony of a physician and a psychotherapist regarding the victim's statements to them was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) as an exception to the hearsay rule for statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8487, 2010 WL 4140317 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 20 2010).

652. Given that (1) the victim met with the sexual assault nurse alone, which isolated the victim from anyone who could influence her, and (2) the nurse testified that medical histories were relevant to medical diagnosis and treatment, the medical history was at a minimum reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment, and thus admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Satterlee v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6007, 2010 WL 2966967 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 29 2010).

653. Although no specific inquiry was made to determine whether the 12-year-old child victim appreciated the need to be truthful in her statements to a nurse, the record supported this, given that the nurse found the victim's conduct was consistent with descriptions provided by other similarly aged victims and the child's welfare was an incentive for her to be honest with the nurse; it was reasonable for the nurse to ask what happened to determine what tests she might have to run, it was relevant for the nurse to know who the perpetrator was to prevent the victim from returning to an abusive home, and the evidence supported a finding that the medical history taken by the nurse was given for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment and the testimony fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) and was properly admitted. Satterlee v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6007, 2010 WL 2966967 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 29 2010).

654. Nurse's testimony was properly admitted because it related to a statement made for medical diagnosis or treatment under Tex. R.e Evid. 803(4) and thus counsel's failure to pursue the objection did not fall below an objective standard of reasonableness. Satterlee v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6007, 2010 WL 2966967 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 29 2010).

655. Court did not err during defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of his stepdaughter in admitting the eight-year-old victim's hearsay statements to a pediatrician who examined her because the court could have found that the statements, including those identifying defendant, were reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558, 2010 WL 2788875 (Tex. App. Austin July 13 2010).

656. Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) is premised on a patient's selfish motive in receiving appropriate medical treatment. Thus, the patient must have a motive consistent with obtaining medical care, knowing that proper diagnosis or treatment depends upon the veracity of his or her statements to the physician. Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5558, 2010 WL 2788875 (Tex. App. Austin July 13 2010).

657. Testimony of emergency medical technician (EMT) regarding the statements made by defendant's wife indicating that defendant had assaulted her was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the statements were made for the purpose of receiving medical treatment. The purpose of asking defendant's wife what happened to her was pertinent to determining a present course of treatment, as different medical treatments are necessary in to treat different conditions; the questions asked and responses received were unrelated to the investigation of defendant's crimes, and there were no formalities typical of a criminal investigatory review. Martinez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4932, 2010 WL 2619647 (Tex. App. El Paso June 30 2010).

658. Defendant failed to carry his burden of establishing that a hearsay exception applied to make the clinical social worker's testimony admissible into evidence, because defendant did not establish that truth-telling was a vital component of the social worker's treatment of the niece or that the niece was aware that being truthful was essential to her therapy. Harrington v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2138, 2010 WL 1137046 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 25 2010).

659. There was no err in allowing the jury to hear the testimony of the pediatric nurse who examined one of the child complainants, because defendant had not demonstrated that the trial court's implied ruling, that the nurse's examination was for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment, was so clearly wrong as to lie outside the zone within which reasonable people might disagree; the nurse testified that she performed a medical examination on the complainant, the nurse explained that her standard examination consisted of a head-to-toe physical, with special attention on the genital and anal area and testing for sexually transmitted diseases, and the nurse testified that if she found any injury, then she would prescribe a course of treatment. Lucero v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9908 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 31, 2009).

660. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. A nurse's testimony about what the rape victim told her about the assault was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the victim made the statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

661. In a case involving sexual abuse of a child, a trial court did not admit inadmissible hearsay from a sexual assault nurse examiner because statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment constituted a hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and the child involved understood the need to be truthful. The child knew that she was reporting the crime, she made a decision to talk to her family, despite knowing that her father would have been angry, and she knew she was seeing the nurse for treatment. Little v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7091, 2009 WL 2882932 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

662. Trial court did not err in redacting portions of defendant's medical records for the treatment of his hand that referenced his statements that the injuries had been sustained in a fight because defendant did not explicate why it was important for his treatment that the medical professionals know that he was cut in a fight, and he presented no evidence or argument at trial establishing that such information was important to his treatment. Mbugua v. State, 312 S.W.3d 657, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6842 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 21 2009).

663. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in allowing a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony for the purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), given that (1) the nurse explained to the victim what the examination would entail and that she just wanted to make sure no one had hurt him, (2) the nurse explained that she gave that explanation to every child she examined, (3) the nurse elicited the information from the victim for treatment and diagnosis, and (4) in response to her question of knowing why he was there, he responded it was because defendant touched him inappropriately. Soliz v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6322, 2009 WL 2470500 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 13 2009).

664. Defendant's assertion that the trial court erred in admitting a sexual assault examination report into evidence because the report contained a narrative of the offense that constituted hearsay and did not fall under an exception to the hearsay rule was without merit. The report was created for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment and therefore, it was properly admitted into evidence under Rule 803(4). Fuller v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5406 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 15 2009).

665. Medical report of a sexual assault nurse examiner was properly admitted in defendant's criminal trial because such report was admissible as a statement made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) as the examiner testified that she initially took a history for diagnosis and treatment. Rivas v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5181, 2009 WL 1956383 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 8 2009).

666. In a case involving the sexual abuse of a child, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an exhibit offered by the State, which were records of the examinations performed by medical personnel following the child's outcry. The statements within the exhibit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the child told medical personnel that she was receiving treatment because defendant had forced her to perform oral sex, and she stated that defendant had told her not to tell about their sexual activities because he could have went to jail. Constance v.

State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3627, 2009 WL 1477791 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 27 2009).

667. Child abuse victim's statement to his doctor that he was being examined because his "dad did something bad" to him was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) as a statement made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment; treatment for sexual abuse included identifying and removing the abuser. Weeks v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3278, 2009 WL 1325461 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 14 2009).

668. Inasmuch as the substance of a pediatric nurse practitioner's testimony related to statements made to her for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history and inasmuch as such statements were not excluded by the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err or abuse its discretion by admitting those statements into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Reyes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2976 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 30 2009).

669. In defendant's sexual assault trial, a sexual assault nurse examiner performed a head-to-toe assessment of the victim and also measured blood pressure, pulse, and respirations and documented those findings and the results of her assessment in the medical records, and thus although the nurse was engaged in the dual role of collecting evidence and providing medical service, she performed sufficient functions to bring her within the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4); although Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 301.002(2) provided that one who practiced professional nursing could not offer a medical diagnosis or prescribe therapeutic measures, Texas appellate courts had consistently affirmed that a nurse's testimony could satisfy the Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) exception. Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

670. In defendant's sexual assault trial, the same information on which defendant claimed error, a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony regarding the victim's description of the assault, was admitted without objection on at least two other occasions and because the complained-of evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection, the court found no reversible error in the admission of the nurse's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

671. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony from a clinical social worker about the complainant's statements was not admissible under the medical-diagnosis-and-treatment exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the record did not show that the child-complainant understood that the statements identifying defendant as the perpetrator were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Nasrollah Hanjani Alizadeh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

672. In a sexual assault of a child case, a therapist's testimony was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the child knew she was being treated for depression and that statements made to the therapist during her therapy--including the identity of her abuser--were made in furtherance of that treatment. The identity of her father as her abuser was of critical importance in preventing further harm or abuse by preventing the child's return to her father's home or any visitation with him. Munoz v. State, 288 S.W.3d 55, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1047 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

673. In a case involving aggravated sexual abuse of a child, a nurse was properly allowed to testify regarding a victim's statements, which were contained in a medical report; under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) it was necessary to take a history of the abuse in order to properly diagnose and treat the victim for infections or sexually transmitted diseases. The trial court did not admit the evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. § 38.072, § 2(a). Uribes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 885, 2009 WL 330972 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 11 2009).

674. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) applied to the victim's statements to a sexual assault nurse examiner, given that (1) although no witness specifically testified that the victim understood the need to be truthful, the trial court could reasonably have concluded this, as the victim was responding to questions from the nurse, a health-care provider, about her condition and the incident, (2) there was no indication those statements were made in the presence of family members or law enforcement officers, (3) the victim's statements to the nurse were made while receiving medical care and were consistent with the physical evidence, (4) the statements guided the medical examination and assisted the nurse in knowing what to look for and what tests to conduct, and (5) the fact that the victim initially went to another hospital and received triage medical care before going for more thorough treatment tailored to the needs of sexual assault victims and provided within hours of the attack did not undermine the reliability of the victim's report or render the nurse's testimony inadmissible. West v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8599 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 14 2008).

675. Defendant objected to an exhibit on hearsay grounds and claimed on appeal that the evidence was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), but the State established the admissibility of the documents as a record of regularly conducted activity under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and the fact that defendant might have been correct about the applicability of the medical diagnosis exception was not conclusive of the issue; the trial court was correct in admitting the evidence as a record of regularly conducted activity and there was no abuse of discretion. Matthews v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8544 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 13 2008).

676. In a child sexual abuse case, trial court properly admitted a nurse's report under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Although defendant argued that, because of the nature of the complaints, it was apparent that the victim would be transferred to another facility and that the hospital to which the victim initially visited would have provided no medical care or diagnosis, the victim was not aware of a possible transfer at the time she made her statements to the nurse. Prater v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7099 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 15, 2008).

677. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

678. In a sexual assault of a child case, a nurse's testimony was properly admitted because the object of the sexual assault exam was to ascertain whether the child had been sexually abused and to determine if further medical attention was needed, and statements describing acts of sexual abuse were pertinent to the victim's medical diagnosis and treatment. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3713 (Tex. App. El Paso May 22 2008).

679. In a child sexual assault case, the trial court properly permitted the child's therapist to testify as to hearsay statements the child made during therapy because the therapist was a licensed marriage and family therapist, and the child's statements regarding the sexual acts and defendant's identity were for the purpose of and pertinent to the therapist's treatment and diagnosis of the child's post-traumatic stress disorder. Bargas v. State, 252 S.W.3d 876, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3443 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2008).

680. Child sexual abuse victim's statements to her school counselor were admissible under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803, because the counselor had been working with the victim for over a year, sometimes using play therapy, to explore her apparent lifelessness after visiting defendant, her grandfather. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

681. Defendant was required under Tex. R. App. P. 33 to make an objection with sufficient specificity that the trial court could be aware of what defendant was complaining about, and because the initial hearsay objection was to the entirety of medical records, the objection was too general and insufficient and the court was unable to say that the inadmissible material that formed the basis of the objection was apparent from the context, and thus error was not preserved; even assuming that the hearsay objection was sufficient to preserve error, the statements in question were made by medical personnel for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803, although defendant complained of certain injuries, his actions were inconsistent with any desire for treatment, and that defendant was escorted to a police car following his return to the emergency room was consistent with admission of the evidence for diagnosis and treatment and defendant did not show that the probative value of the evidence was outweighed by its prejudicial nature. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

682. Defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault of a child under 14 years of age were appropriate because his claim that a nurse's testimony did not fit under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was without merit since defendant failed to object to the relevant portions of the victim's testimony and the victim's testimony was substantially the same as what defendant currently complained about on appeal regarding the nurse's testimony; thus, defendant forfeited any error regarding the nurse's testimony. Pierson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1934 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 13 2008).

683. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, a physician's testimony about hearsay statements made by the victim during a sexual assault examination that identified defendant as the offender and described the assault was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim's statements were pertinent to medical diagnosis or treatment. Guzman v. State, 253 S.W.3d 306, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1066 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

684. Even if out-of-court statements made by a child sexual abuse victim at a clinic were hearsay, they fell under the exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803 for symptoms or the inception or general character of the cause that related to treatment because the victim was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder and depression while at the clinic. Gibson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9396 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 29 2007).

685. Statements the victim made to a nurse examiner were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803; in giving a history to the nurse, the victim responded to questions and provided information such that the nurse was able to ensure that the victim received the proper care, and thus the victim's statements fell within the Rule and trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the statements. Ezell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7712 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 26 2007).

686. Court found no evidence that the victim went to the counselor or made statements to her seeking medical diagnosis or treatment, and the counselor testified that the victim was not a patient; thus, the prosecutor's attempt to bring the statements within Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) by asking the counselor if she had a recommendation for treatment failed because the counselor's positive response did not show that the victim made the statements for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment, and the trial court erred by admitting the hearsay testimony of the counselor. Rodriguez v. State, 280 S.W.3d 288, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7135 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2007).

687. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803, the record was devoid of any evidence that defendant's young daughter understood why she was in therapy or that she needed to be truthful in her statements that her mother stomped on the child victim's stomach, and thus the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the daughter's hearsay statement as within the medical diagnosis exception; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the daughter herself testified to seeing defendant step on the child's stomach, and thus fair assurance existed that the less powerful, cumulative testimony of the other witness concerning this fact did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect. Stevens v. State, 234 S.W.3d 748, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6845 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

688. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which were between 19 and 25 years old which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of the exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied the exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th Cir. Tex. 2007).

689. Trial court properly admitted the testimony of a licensed professional counselor in defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault and sexual assault, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4); the counselor testified (1) to being licensed and having a master's degree in community counseling, and (2) that she had counseled the victim for four months regarding defendant's sexual abuse and that the victim understood the purpose of the counseling, despite her mental disability. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6251 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 8 2007).

690. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the hearsay testimony of the victim's counselor under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim specifically testified that she was receiving therapy for post-traumatic stress disorder and the record supported the inference that the victim understood that she needed to be truthful with the counselor to receive proper treatment and that the facts surrounding the victim's encounter with defendant were reasonably pertinent to the counselor's treatment of the victim for her issues concerning the resolution of the sexual assault. Taylor v. State, 263 S.W.3d 304, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6198 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

691. Trial court properly allowed a sexual assault nurse examiner to testify concerning statements the son made to her during her interview with him under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because her testimony pertained to statements taken during a medical examination as part of diagnosis and treatment; the nurse made the appropriate physical examinations based on her diagnosis and the son's allegations. Vesely v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5611 (Tex. App. Tyler July 18 2007).

692. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, defendant's objection to the testimony of the sexual assault nurse examiner was properly overruled since the medical records had previously been admitted into evidence as a hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Castillo v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4745 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 20 2007).

693. Under Tex. R. Evid. 803, there is no authority for the proposition that specific testimony regarding the need to be truthful is necessary; therefore, notes regarding a child's statements to a social worker and a nurse implicating her father in a sexual assault several days after a surgery to repair a life-threatening vaginal tear were properly admitted because the statements were in response to questions, they were not made around family members, and they were consistent with the physical evidence. Delapaz v. State, 229 S.W.3d 795, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4614 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

694. In defendant's sexual assault trial, although defendant claimed that a witness's testimony about what the child victim said was inadmissible because the witness was not designated as an outcry witness, there were multiple grounds used to justify the admission of the evidence, including under Tex. R. Evid. 803; defendant did not deny that the rule encompassed statements, as in this case, by suspected victims of child abuse regarding the source of their injuries, defendant did not question that trial court's authority to use the Rule, and because defendant did not show why the Rule did not apply, defendant failed to show any abuse of discretion. Francis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3938 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 22 2007).

695. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's objection to the admission of a nurse's testimony regarding statements the child victim made to her because the nurse provided a detailed explanation of her sexual assault questioning procedures, and explained why it was medically necessary to ask the victim questions about his sexual history to diagnose him for medical treatment; such questions from a medical examiner and answers from a sexual assault victim were hearsay statements that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Mead v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3833 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 17 2007).

696. Interview summary was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) given that nothing suggested the speaker made the statement in question for the purpose of diagnosing or treating defendant's mental condition. Austin v. State, 222 S.W.3d 801, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2739 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

697. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault on a child case, the trial court properly found that a nurse's testimony was admissible because the purpose of the nurse's examination of the victim was to ascertain whether the victim had been sexually assaulted and whether he needed medical treatment; therefore, his statement describing the act of sexual assault was pertinent to his diagnosis and treatment. Morrison v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1529 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 1 2007).

698. Although the court questioned whether defendant's complaint on appeal comported with the objection lodged in the trial court, the court found that even if testimony was inadmissible and error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) as defendant claimed, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); although the testimony indicated that the child victim was referred to the witness for sexual abuse, nothing in the testimony suggested that the witness was able to confirm that, and the limited testimony did not have a significant impact in light of the other evidence offered in defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child. Alberty v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 989 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 9 2007).

699. Where defendant was convicted of the aggravated sexual assault of his thirteen-year-old niece, the trial court erred by admitting the therapist's testimony that the child told her that family members were pressuring her and her mother to drop the charges; the State offered the therapist's statements to show how the child reacted to perceived pressures; the same testimony was admitted through other witnesses without objection. Arguelles v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2007).

700. Although defendant claimed error in trial counsel's failure during defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial to object to the testimony of a registered nurse and sexual assault nursing examiner relating to the content of her interview with the child complainant, because statements of a child relating to the offense which were made in the course of seeking medical diagnosis or treatment were exempted from the rule precluding hearsay statements, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803, counsel's failure to object to admissible evidence did not constitute ineffective representation under the Sixth Amendment. Todd v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 389 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2007).

701. Court did not need to consider whether the trial court erred in admitting, under Tex. R. Evid. 803, statements defendant's son made to a sexual assault nurse examiner (SANE) because even assuming there was error, the court was unable to conclude that it was harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2; the son's testimony established the same facts that were in the SANE report, the jury had the opportunity to gauge the veracity of defendant's denial of event, the son's testimony was sufficient to obtain a conviction, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.07(a), and the court noted that the State did not emphasize the statements of which defendant complained. Bersosa v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 370 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 22 2007).

702. Trial court did not err by allowing an expert witness to testify to statements the victim made to him regarding the allegations against defendant because they were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, as the victim made the statements to the expert for the purpose of the victim's medical diagnosis or treatment; defendant failed to point to hearsay statements that were allegedly made by other witnesses. Bailey v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 208 (Tex.

App. Fort Worth Jan. 11 2007).

703. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting statements that he made to his therapist because such statements were not made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment as contemplated by Tex. R. Evid. 803, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the statements, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the child sexual assault complainant provided explicit detailed testimony about the sexual assaults; further, there was properly admitted evidence that the complainant told his school counselor about the assaults. Romero v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9835 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 14 2006).

704. Medical records stated that the 10-year-old complainant was the victim of serial penetrative sexual acts by defendant (her father), and they had been occurring since she was a young girl; the medical records also included a progress report detailing the mother's version of the events leading up to defendant's arrest; because all the statements involved the causation and source of the complainant's injuries or statements by a parent for purposes of diagnosing or treating the complainant, they were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803; thus, the trial court properly admitted the medical records into evidence over defendant's hearsay objection. Davidson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

705. Even if the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the medical records of the sexual assault of the 10-year-old complainant under Tex. R. Evid. 803, any error would be harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the medical records established the same facts that the jury had already heard during complainant's testimony and a videotape of her interview with a detective. Davidson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9178 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

706. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting the child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule, before permitting the counselor to testify, the trial court had held a hearing under rule of Tex. R. Evid. 104 at which the State elicited testimony concerning the counselor's treatment of the complainant; the counselor testified that his eliciting of facts concerning the complainant's sexual abuse was an important part of her diagnosis and treatment, he provided a treatment-related reason for the timing of her statements, and he also testified that an important part of his work was ensuring that the complainant made truthful statements, and similar testimony had been held in other cases to support admission of child sexual abuse victim statements. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

707. Appellate court did not need to address whether a trial court abused its discretion in admitting a child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule when, even if it did, any error was harmless because: (1) the complainant testified to the same facts that were the subject of her hearsay statements to the counselor; (2) there were eight witnesses other than the counselor who testified to some extent about the complainant's allegations; (3) the counselor was the second-to-last witness to testify for the State, and the hearsay statements that the counselor testified to were merely cumulative of the testimony that the jury had already heard; (4) the vast majority of the counselor's testimony was not hearsay; and (5) the State did not mention the counselor in its opening statement and only briefly mentioned the counselor's testimony in its closing argument, which suggested that his testimony was not an integral part of the State's case. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

708. Trial court did not err in allowing a nurse to testify under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule about statements made to him by a two-year-old child during an examination for possible sexual assault where the nurse was performing sufficient functions to bring him within the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 803; the nurse testified that he was a sexual assault nurse examiner and that, prior to evaluating the child, he had performed over 500 sexual assault exams; he explained that the oral history taken during his exam was used for medical diagnosis and treatment as well as a guide for much of the physical examination that was performed, specifically testifying about bruises on the child, one on her right back side and two on her right hip and thigh; and he testified that the child's vaginal area was very red and excoriated, which he attributed to poor hygiene and not sexual assault. McDonald v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7416 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 23 2006).

709. As long as the other requirements were satisfied, the fact that the nurse was not a licensed physician had no bearing on his ability to testify in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803. McDonald v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7416 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 23 2006).

710. Nurse's testimony regarding statements made to him by a two-year-old child during an examination for possible sexual assault complied with Tex. R. Evid. 803 and was not excluded by the hearsay rule because the nurse testified that he believed that the child was articulate when responding to questions, and because he further testified about the procedure used during the examinations and interview. McDonald v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7416 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 23 2006).

711. In a child sexual assault case, although the State offered the child victim's medical records as evidence of the results of the sexual abuse exam, the victim's description of the abuse contained within the records fell under the exception to the hearsay rule that provided an exception for statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history. Dotie v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7200 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 16 2006).

712. In a prosecution of defendant juvenile for indecency with a child, the trial court properly allowed a sexual assault nurse examiner to testify regarding statements made by the victim during an examination of the victim. In re M.M.L., 241 S.W.3d 546, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6783 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

713. Because the victim was unconscious, the paramedic elicited information from the bystander, who witnessed the beating, in order to be able to treat the victim; thus, the court was unable to find that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the paramedic to testify regarding the bystander's response, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803. Richardson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5098 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 15 2006).

714. Defendant failed to preserve error regarding an expert's testimony pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33, given that (1) defendant's objection to any of the expert's testimony was overly broad and untimely, and (2) defendant's objection on appeal differed substantially from that raised at trial, and thus any error was waived; even if the error was properly preserved, the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and defendant did not object or identify any out-of-court statement that was made for purposes other than medical diagnosis and treatment, and thus the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Estes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5028 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 13 2006).

715. In a child sexual abuse case, statements to a physician regarding alleged sexual acts between defendant and a minor victim were admissible because they were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment under Tex. R. Evid. 803. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4973 (Tex. App. Austin June 9 2006).

716. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and therefore defendant did not overcome the presumption that counsel's not objecting to the examiner's testimony was sound strategy. Perez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1763 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 8 2006).

717. Court did not need to address whether a witness's testimony qualified as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because, even assuming it did and the trial court erred in overruling defendant's objection, the record did not show that the error required reversal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2; there was other evidence presented at trial that was substantially similar to the witness's testimony, and the court noted that the improper exclusion of evidence was rendered harmless when other properly admitted evidence proved the same fact. Cardenas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1372 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 21 2006).

718. Trial court did not err in ruling that statements by the child victim to a doctor were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and although nothing suggested that the examination was conducted to remove the child from an abusive setting, the court found no distinction in the cases that would remove statements by a child from the effect of the rule; whether the statements were reasonably pertinent to the diagnosis or treatment of the victim was a question for the trial court prior to admitting the evidence, and the court found no abuse of discretion. Manzano v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1285 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 15 2006).

719. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child, his counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the attending nurse's testimony and report, because the hearsay exception set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) applied. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

720. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; counsel's failure to raise a Confrontation Clause objection was not outside the range of reasonable assistance because the victim's hearsay statements were non-testimonial in nature, given that they were made during an informal setting to emergency personnel, and the statements fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), (4), and thus bore particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. Ramos v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6466 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 11 2005).

721. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the child's therapist's testimony about what the child told her and the child's behavior and demeanor as this evidence fell within the Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) exception to the prohibition against hearsay. De La Cruz v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5850 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2005).

722. Where petitioner death row inmate argued ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel, during the penalty phase, sought and obtained admission of a psychiatric report on the inmate prepared by a doctor years earlier when the inmate was 15 years old, and that the report suggested the inmate was a future danger, the report was not hearsay admitted in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment because the report was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), (16), and further, the inmate's statements in the report as to his criminal activity did not violate the Fifth Amendment because the psychiatric consultation was not a custodial interrogation; the ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed. Coble v. Dretke, 417 F.3d 508, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14438 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 444 F.3d 345, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 7171 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

723. Physician's testimony about what a child victim said fell within the exception for medical diagnoses under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Patterson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5260 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2005).

724. In a child sexual abuse case, a court properly admitted the hearsay of a nurse where the nurse asked the child victim if she understood why she was at the hospital, the child related that it was because defendant had touched her, and without any prompting by the nurse or leading questions, the child went on to provide details regarding the sexual abuse. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4203 (Tex. App. El Paso May 31 2005).

725. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, counsel's failure to object to the admission of a forensic report was not ineffective assistance because an affidavit from the custodian of the hospital's records was sufficient for compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and a statement made by the victim to a nurse was admissible under Rule

803(4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3596 (Tex. App. Eastland May 12 2005).

726. Defendant's daughter was referred to a physician by Child Protective Services, and she was brought to her appointment by her maternal grandmother; defendant argued that because alleged abuse took place five years earlier, and the child had been removed from defendant's custody, there was no justification for the examination. Nevertheless, while the physician was clearly gathering evidence, there was a need for a medical examination, and the evidence supported a conclusion that the daughter understood the need to be truthful; therefore, there was no abuse of discretion in admitting the hearsay testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Barnes v. State, 165 S.W.3d 75, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

727. In an indecency with a child by sexual contact case, without anything to indicate that the victim understood the purpose of the forensic interview, and that the importance of being truthful was so the counselor could effectively assess or diagnose her, it was error for the trial court to admit the videotaped statements of the victim's interview under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Wright v. State, 154 S.W.3d 235, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 56 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

728. Because the State did not prove the source of defendant's name in the medical report, the trial court erred in admitting the doctor's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), that the report named defendant as the perpetrator, however, the erroneous admission of the doctor's testimony was harmless, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), because ample evidence existed that proved the same facts as the doctor's testimony. The victim testified that defendant sexually abused her from June of 1999 until September of 2002, the officer testified that defendant admitted to having sex with the victim when she went to his house to ask him questions about the sexual abuse allegations, and the jury had access to a signed confession defendant made after his arrest. Crody v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10559 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 24 2004).

729. In a sexual assault of a child case, a court properly allowed a sexual assault examiner to testify about statements made by the victim during a physical exam where the statements were statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment. Barrera v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9621 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

730. Although the exception created by Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) is not limited to statements by patients, the person making the statement must have an interest in proper diagnosis or treatment. Parents normally possess this interest in the well-being of their children; however, courts are not willing to extend this "interest" to the statement of a child. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

731. In a criminal prosecution for endangering a child arising from the sexual assault of defendant's two children by her live-in boyfriend, two exhibits containing the medical records of the child-victims fell within the hearsay exception for records of regularly conducted activity set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); however, it was error to admit the exhibits because they contained a second layer of hearsay statements of abuse made by the children, and it was not clear that the children made these statements for the purpose of proper diagnosis within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

732. For purposes of the hearsay exception set forth at Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), the person making the statement must have an interest in proper diagnosis or treatment, but there may be circumstances, especially in child sex abuse cases, in which the statement is motivated by improper reasons such as wanting to shift the blame or a personal dislike of the accused. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

733. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

734. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of defendant's medical records on the ground that the State failed to lay a proper foundation under Tex. R. Evid. 803 where he failed to show that the State would have been unable to establish the elements if counsel had objected. Further, other evidence established that defendant had been infected with herpes prior to the sexual assault. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

735. In sexual assault case, complainant's hearsay statement to a hospital social worker was properly admitted and documented in the complainant's medical record where: (1) The complainant was aware that his mother had taken him to the hospital for a sexual assault examination; (2) for the purposes of a sexual assault examination, it was standard hospital procedure for a social worker to receive a history specifically regarding the abuse allegations; (3) the doctor expressly testified that the history obtained by the social worker was necessary for the diagnosis and treatment of the child; and (4) thus, the record demonstrated that the hospital social worker, participating as part of a team of medical personnel, obtained a history of the sexual abuse allegations in a critical early step necessary for the purposes of the diagnosis and treatment of a child admitted to undergo a sexual assault examination. French v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2924 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

736. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of the complainant in violation of his rights of confrontation and cross-examination where the medical record evidence, including statements given by the complainant to her examining physician and documented in the medical record, was admissible under the exception for statements made for the purposes of diagnosis or treatment; the complainant knew that she was at the office for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment, and the record showed that the examination results were used to diagnose and treat the complainant for a sexually transmitted disease. Joseph v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

737. In a criminal appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the appellate court would not consider defendant's argument that the trial court erred by allowing into evidence a medical report and testimony of a pediatrician who examined the victim. Defendant's argument that the evidence was not made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment did not comport with his objection at trial; therefore, it was not preserved for review. Frueboes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 31 2004).

738. Court abused its discretion in admitting a therapist's testimony in trial for sexual abuse of a child because there was nothing about the context of the victim's statement that suggested that it possessed the guarantees of trustworthiness on which the medical diagnosis or treatment exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) was founded. However, because the substance of the therapist's inadmissible testimony was admitted without objection through other witnesses, the error did not harm defendant's substantial rights. Naranjo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2189 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 9 2004).

739. Sexual assault victim, who was 14 at the time, understood that he was seeing the county youth services director to get help for committing sexual assault and that his statements to the director were made for the purpose of medical treatment; thus, hearsay evidence of defendant's extraneous sexual assault offenses against the victim was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) and defendant's conviction for sexual assault of a child was affirmed. Cannon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1105 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 4 2004).

740. Child's statements to a nurse and a therapist regarding sexual abuse were properly admitted as statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Wimer v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10262 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 10 2003).

741. Psychologist's testimony in child sexual abuse case that complainant's father had sexually assaulted her was admissible where the child's statement was made to the psychologist for the purpose of a medical diagnosis and fell under the exception contained in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Burns v. State, 122 S.W.3d 434, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10193 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003).

742. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

743. Medical records containing alleged hearsay statements were from a nurse's examination of the victim and fell within the exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because the object of the exam was to ascertain whether the child had been sexually abused and to determine whether further medical attention was needed. Ponce v. State, 89 S.W.3d 110, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002).

744. Trial court did not err in admitting statements made by the victim's grandmother to the treating physician because the statements were necessary for a proper diagnosis; the statements fell within the hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Ware v. State, 62 S.W.3d 344, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8094 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

745. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), statements given to a nurse by a child victim of indecent assault as part of the general medical history did not constitute hearsay because such statements were reasonably pertinent to medical diagnosis or treatment. Gregory v. State, 56 S.W.3d 164, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 4519 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2001), writ of certiorari denied by 538 U.S. 978, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 667, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 2967, 71 U.S.L.W. 3666 (2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : General Overview

746. Statements by two witnesses to a third witness that defendant was outside yelling something about killing a dog were not inadmissible hearsay because the witnesses were describing what they were seeing at the time, and therefore they fell within the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule. Alcala v. State, 476 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13924, 2013 WL 6053837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 14 2013).

747. At defendant's trial for aggravated robbery and injury to the elderly with the intent to cause serious bodily injury, his trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the recording of the victim's 911 call as it fell within three separate hearsay exceptions. The 911 call was admissible as an excited utterance, a present sense impression, and as a statement regarding the victim's physical condition. Rincon v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11309 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 4 2013).

748. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

749. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the audio portions of the tape that recorded the arresting officer's statements about defendant's conditions and his narrative about what he found in defendant's vehicle, as they were spoken offense reports that were inadmissible hearsay and did not qualify as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), the error was harmless because both officers testified at trial as to everything the arresting officer mentioned in the audio tape. The arresting officer testified about defendant's agitated attitude and appearance, stating that he smelled like alcohol and his face was red; the officer also testified that he asked defendant to perform field sobriety tests at least twice and he found multiple empty beer and wine bottles in the vehicle. Eggert v. State, 395 S.W.3d 240, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2012 WL 5416202 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 7 2012).

750. Appellant did not present to the trial court his argument regarding the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule, and thus the court could not reverse on this theory. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 100, 2012 WL 29326 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 5 2012).

751. Court disagreed that statements were present sense impressions, given the time that elapsed between the events and the time when appellant made the statements. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

752. Statements by a 911 caller reporting a drunk driver were not shown to be present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) because the observations were made with an eye toward future litigation or evidentiary use. Godinez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5176, 2011 WL 2652129 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 7 2011).

753. Officer's comments were made directly to appellant, in the officer's attempt to determine if appellant was going to be able to complete a field sobriety test; these were unreflective statements, which the present sense impression exception allowed. Calderon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3352, 2011 WL 1734068 (Tex. App. El Paso May 4 2011).

754. Defendant's argument on appeal did not comport with his objection at trial, such that the claimed error based on the trial court's failure to issue a limiting instruction was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); in any event, the complaint provided no basis for reversal because statements admitted as present sense impressions or excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) were admissible for all purposes and were not subject to a limiting instruction. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300, 2009 WL 4575146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 8 2009).

755. Officer's statements were not admissible as present sense impressions under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) and thus the trial court erred in admitting portions of recordings with the officer's statements; however, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that (1) the officer testified to the substance of the inadmissible portion of the tapes prior to the admission of the tapes, without objection, (2) the informant testified as to the substance of that portion of the tapes also, and the testimony was subject to cross-examination and was admissible, and (3) the inadmissible portions of the tapes did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury's verdict. Rios v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8737, 2009 WL 3766341 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2009), mem. op.

756. Statement conveyed events as the witness perceived them, and thus the statement fell under the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); the witness testified that the woman in question made the statement in response to the argument she was observing between defendant, another, and the victim, plus testimony tending to show that defendant was a suspect and explained the circumstances leading up to a murder was admissible, and thus the trial court did not err in admitting this statement over defendant's hearsay objection in his murder trial. Brown v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9063 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 4 2008).

757. Statement met none of the exceptions in Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2), (3), and while (1) an objection made mid-sentence also applied to the rest of the statement that was admitted after the objection, and (2) defendant also timely objected the second time the statement was made, because defendant did not object to the third mention of the statement, defendant did not preserve error. Dodson v. State, 268 S.W.3d 674, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6442 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

758. Given that defendant argued that a witness's inconsistent statements to police were admissible to show state of mind, the court found that defendant preserved the argument that the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Mooring v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3601 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

759. Given defendant's reason to admit the evidence, a videotaped statement of the child victim, to show demeanor and character, the trial court would have been within its discretion to exclude the evidence because the videotape would have been cumulative of the victim's trial testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, and because the court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence on non-hearsay grounds, the court did not need to analyze whether the evidence fell within an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 47.1; the court noted that had the tape been offered to show the truth of the matters asserted, it would have been hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Shanta v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2887 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

760. Counsel was not ineffective for not lodging certain hearsay objections; counsel could have concluded that a statement would have been admitted as an excited utterance or a present sense impression, and counsel could have found that the State could have obtained the same testimony by recalling a witness to clarify the statements, and furthermore, counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to another question, given that the State meant to ask the witness if, at the time of defendant's arrest, the witness identified defendant as the person the witness, not another, saw lighting the fire in question. Ortiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3893 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 4 2006).

761. In a medical malpractice case, the trial court did not err in excluding, as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), a statement by a witness who would have testified that the doctor was afraid that he had done something wrong; the statement was offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and the present sense impression rule of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) did not apply because there was no evidence of contemporaneity. Daniels v. Yancey, 175 S.W.3d 889, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8789 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

762. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in allowing the arresting officer to testify about statements made by an undercover officer; although defendant made a hearsay objection before the testimony was given, defendant did not renew his objection when the hearsay statement exceeded the present-sense-impression exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Johnson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4286 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 2 2005).

763. In a domestic violence case, defendant's objection to the State's trial assertion that a 911 tape was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), on the ground that a sufficient predicate had not been made to show a present sense impression, without stating in what regard the predicate was deficient, was too general to preserve the issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Warfel v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

764. In a capital murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a report of the murder on a 9-1-1 tape under the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule, because the tape was made immediately after the witness perceived the event. After the witness saw defendant throw the body into the victim's truck and peel out of the parking lot, he called 9-1-1. Pack v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11129 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 9 2004).

765. In a criminal trial for aggravated assault, the investigating officer's testimony concerning the victim's statements at the scene identifying defendant as the man who attacked him the night before fell squarely into the present sense impression exception to the rule excluding hearsay. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2004).

766. Murder victim's statements while crying that she had seen guns in a car outside was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid 803(1), and her statement that she was going to be killed by the people outside and her writing of those peoples' names on paper were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Cantu v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6049 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 8 2004).

767. In defendant's theft case, a court's error in excluding evidence that the declarant told defendant to move a trailer was harmless where defendant's sister testified that the employer told her defendant moved a trailer for a the declarant, and through the testimony of the two witnesses, the jury heard essentially the same evidence the trial court initially excluded: that the declarant hired defendant to move a trailer. Gibson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 7 2004).

768. Statement not connected to a contemporaneous observation is not a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

769. Out-of-court identification of appellant was not admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); however, the trial court's erroneous admission of the identification was harmless error because it did not affect appellant's substantial rights or the jury's verdict under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

770. While a written statement made by a murder victim four months before her death that described a physical altercation with defendant qualified for admission under the code of criminal procedure, it was not admissible as a present sense impression because the statements it contained were recitations of events that occurred before the making of the statement and indicated the victim's fear of defendant only through inference. Barrett v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2251, 2014 WL 792123 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : Contemporaneous Statements

771. In a burglary case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to admit the videotape of defendant's interview with police because he failed to establish that a hearsay exception applied under Tex. R. Evid. 803; due to the time that elapsed between the alleged chase and the interview, the video was not an excited utterance and the unreflective nature required of a present sense impression was destroyed. The business record exception did not apply, because the source of the information indicated an absence of trustworthiness. Walker v.

State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9928 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 30 2012).

772. In a domestic violence case, a 911 recording was properly admitted as present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803, even though the caller, defendant's son, stated that his father had beaten his mother and thus appeared to be describing a past event, because at least some statements in the recording appeared to be a contemporaneous statement about an event the caller was witnessing. The 911 recording included statements by the caller that his mother was "limping" and that she "needs" an ambulance. Reyes v. State, 314 S.W.3d 74, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 17 2010).

773. Witness made statements the following morning in response to questioning, and this did not satisfy Tex. R. Evid. 803(1)'s requirement that the statement have been made at the time the declarant was perceiving the event or immediately thereafter. Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

774. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking a portion of the horse owner's affidavit and deposition where it contained hearsay statements allegedly made by an acquaintance to the police and those statements did not constitute a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because as there was no evidence indicating that the acquaintance's statement was contemporaneous with his alleged observation of the utility truck turning around in the horse owner's pasture. Thomas v. Centerpoint Energy, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 7 2008).

775. Murder victim's statement to a witness over the telephone that "This guy just left" could be inferred to be contemporaneous with the event it described and therefore could be admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

776. Witness's statement, "that's defendant," was made while the witness watched the shooting and it described what the witness had just seen, such that it constituted a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and the trial court did not err in admitting it. Freeman v. State, 230 S.W.3d 392, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3965 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

777. More than four hours elapsed between the time of the robbery and the time a witness was interviewed by a detective, and thus the trial court would not have abused its discretion in finding that the witness's statements were not sufficiently contemporaneous to have been admissible under the present-sense-impression exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1). Mooring v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3601 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

778. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, there was no error in the admission as a present-sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803 of a statement that defendant had been drinking all day; the contemporaneous event was an argument between defendant and the declarant that concluded moments before the declarant, seeking to explain defendant's behavior, made the statement; further, any error in the admission was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because there was other evidence in the record to establish defendant's intoxication. Brdecka v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2072 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 13 2007).

779. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court erred by admitting witnesses' hearsay statements under the present sense impression exception because the evidence did not establish how much time elapsed between when one witness observed the incident and when she prepared her statement, and the other witness's written statement, made five days after the incident, clearly fell outside any reasonable argument that she made it immediately after the incident; however, the error was harmless; both witnesses testified at trial that they saw defendant weaving across the roadway prior to her leaving the highway, and a videotape of field sobriety tests supported that defendant did not have the normal use of her mental or physical faculties. Dalton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9189 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 25 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : Description of Events

780. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting testimony from the victim's widow as a present sense impression because the victim's statement during his telephone conversation with his wife were nonreflective and described the event he was perceiving. Dean v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11011 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 29 2013).

781. During defendant's trial for intoxication manslaughter, a witness was permitted to testify that he heard other truckers on his CB radio talking about how they had seen a person driving rapidly down the wrong side of the highway on the night in question; these were present sense impressions. Hackler v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4995 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records

782. A certified tax statement is a public record, even if it was prepared solely for the purpose of litigation. F-Star Socorro, L.P. v. City of El Paso, 281 S.W.3d 103, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5008 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

783. Even if the buyers had timely asserted that the second print-out of the county appraisal district's website was a public record, the excluded information was not trustworthy, and therefore did not qualify for admission under the public records exception to hearsay. Zhu v. Lam, 426 S.W.3d 333, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973, 2014 WL 1028485 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 18 2014).

784. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding expert-opinion evidence based on its finding that the evidence was not subject to the public record exception of the hearsay rule, because it had limited knowledge of the qualifications of the authors of the opinion testimony, and had limited knowledge of the reliability of such testimony. Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc. v. Tex. Disposal Sys. Landfill, Inc., 434 S.W.3d 142, 2014 Tex. LEXIS 381, 57 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 531, 43 Media L. Rep. (BNA) 1086 (Tex. May 9 2014).

785. Naming of the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services as permanent managing conservator of the father's child was proper under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 264.754 and 162.102, art. III, § d because, although he argued that the trial court erred by admitting a copy of a home study request and result on his home in Michigan, but the appellate court stated that it was admissible under the public records exception contained in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). In the Interest of S.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363, 2012 WL 3115749 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 2 2012).

786. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) did not apply and excluding four documents from the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission regarding appellee's solid waste permit because at the time the documents were presented, the trial court had little or no information regarding the authors' qualifications to give the expert opinions set forth in the documents or regarding the reliability of the opinions. Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc. v. Texas Disposal Systems Landfill, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4005, 2012 WL 1810215 (Tex. App. Austin May 18 2012).

787. Court had previously held that a certified copy of a driving record was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), 902(4), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting appellant's certified driving record. Mclamore v.

State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2909 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 12 2012).

788. Even assuming that the hearsay exception for public records in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) did not apply and a trial court erred in admitting a toxicology report or a toxicologist's testimony over defendant's hearsay objection, any error was harmless because the State proved the impairment definition in Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.01(2). Derichsweiler v. State, 359 S.W.3d 342, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 465 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2012).

789. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault, aggravated kidnapping, and unlawful possession of a firearm, the court did not err in admitting a docket sheet from one of defendant's prior convictions; while the docket sheet was hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), it was admissible under the public records exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Brown v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7319, 2011 WL 3915663 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2011).

790. Trial court did not err in admitting the transcription of the doctor's testimony into evidence as an expert witness may rely on records and information prepared by others in reaching his conclusions, Tex. R. Evid. 703, and medical and autopsy reports fell into an exception to the hearsay rule and were allowed into evidence without the preparing doctor appearing in court to explain them, Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (8). Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2011 WL 3435736 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2011).

791. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an exhibit, a pen packet, over appellant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the pen packet relating to appellant's prior felony conviction fell within the exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), (22), and nothing indicated that the documents lacked trustworthiness. Price v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2020, 2011 WL 946978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 17 2011).

792. Report from a crime laboratory was not admissible under either Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) or (8), but any error in the trial court's admission of the report was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the value of the report was cumulative; the same evidence found in the report, that the substance was cocaine, was also admitted through other testimony without objection. Miles v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9756, 2009 WL 4358959 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

793. In this termination case, a mother complained evidence that counsel did not object to harmed her, but the court disagreed because there was sufficient other evidence of cases concerning the mother's other children before the court under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) and the effect of testimony the mother complained of was minimal. In the Interest of R.S., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7632, 2009 WL 3191515 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 1 2009).

794. In a murder case, a trial court did not err by admitting testimony regarding defendant's behavior at a Texas Youth Commission residential treatment facility because such evidence fell under the public records exception for hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(A); the State introduced the testimony from defendant's counselor regarding defendant's violent physical acts, gang activity, and intimidation. The objected-to portions of the testimony were merely sterile recitations of defendant's offenses of the type that had been held admissible at the punishment phase of trial. Bautista v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6806, 2009 WL 2622405 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 27 2009).

795. Because defendant failed to respond to the State's relevance objection and because there was nothing in the record to show that a witness actually made any prior inconsistent statements, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A), to which Scott's hearsay exceptions under Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 803(8) would apply, the court could not say that the trial court abused its discretion by not allowing defendant to impeach the witness. Scott v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 131, 2009 WL 51035 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

796. Defendant's conviction for arson of a habitation was appropriate because, in light of an investigator's status as a law enforcement official, the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and 803(8)(B), and defendant's failure to provide any argument on appeal refuting the trial court's classification of the statements offered from the DA packet as inadmissible hearsay under the rules, the appellate court was unable to say that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding those portions of the DA packet in which another individual was designated as a co-defendant. Charles v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

797. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

798. Given that Tex. R. Evid. 803 created an exception to the hearsay rule for public records and reports and judgments of previous convictions, to the extent that defendant's complaint was that pen packets were hearsay, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the hearsay objection. Smith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2849 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

799. As a certified copy of a public record, the State's exhibit of defendant's driving record was well within Tex. R. Evid. 803 and its admission did not constitute inadmissible hearsay. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

800. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel related to counsel's failure to object to testimony offered during the punishment phase, given that (1) the challenged evidence, including defendant's juvenile and adult criminal records, were admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3 and were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as public records, (2) defendant's reliance on certain case law regarding his confrontation argument was distinguishable, as that case dealt with incident and disciplinary reports, and defendant's case dealt with certified court documents of the criminal records, and (3) even if the court found that the exhibits violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 or were hearsay, counsel's reasons for his actions did not appear in the record, and because his conduct could have been part of a reasonable trial strategy, without more, the court had to defer to counsel's decisions not to object to the evidence and deny relief. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6301 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2007).

801. In the State's suit to recover costs incurred under Tex. Nat. Res. Code Ann. § 91.113(f) in cleaning up a company's abandoned salt water disposal facility, the trial court did not err by admitting the State's documentary evidence showing the amounts spent by the Railroad Commission to clean up the site as the documents were not summaries prepared for trial, but documents prepared by and filed with the Commission reporting and compiling the amounts paid. Martin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6167 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 3 2007).

802. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining a father's objections to admission of an "updated" record, as the objection from the father's attorney prevented the attorney general from authenticating the "updated" record without testifying under oath; when the trial judge sustained the father's objection to the "updated" record, the attorney general had to prove the authenticity of the document by some other means; however, the attorney general made no attempt to call any witnesses to testify at the hearing and the document was not self-authenticating because it was not under seal, a certified copy of a public record, or supported by a business records affidavit. In re K.R., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5756 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2007).

803. Certified copy of a judgment and sentence relating to defendant's first assault conviction was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803 during defendant's trial for felony assault involving family violence because the evidence was an exception to the hearsay rule under either the business or public records exception. Williams v.

State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2375 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 28 2007).

804. To the extent that both Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) and case law mentioned that governmental records were subject to be excluded from the hearsay rule, the companies did not explain why or whether the exhibit in question, purportedly created by the government, met the rule requirements; there was no evidence authenticating the exhibit and relieving the companies of having to prove that it satisfied the rule. Stringer v. Red River Commodities, Inc., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10617 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 13 2006).

805. In a murder case, an autopsy report was properly admitted as a public record and a business record because the report set forth matters observed pursuant to a duty imposed by law, including the location and the nature of the injuries; a doctor testified and was subject to cross-examination and he was also a signatory to the report. Terrazas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6696 (Tex. App. Austin July 28 2006).

806. In defendant's murder case, the court erred during the punishment phase by admitting evidence of defendant's jail record because it was a report of crimes and acts of misconduct reported to or observed by law enforcement personnel, and reflected law enforcement personnel's rulings regarding culpability and the punishment imposed by law enforcement personnel. Kennedy v. State, 193 S.W.3d 645, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2517 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

807. It was not error to admit child service plan reviews generated by the state child protective services department, as mandated by law under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 263.105, which the mother challenged as lacking in trustworthiness; the plan reviews were reviewed by the trial court and were testified to by a caseworker; in the event there was error, it was not harmful and did not lead to the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). In re P.D.A., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2179 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 23 2006).

808. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

809. Trial court did not err in admitting a letter from the Housing and Urban Development Department under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) because (1) the letter was a report setting forth activities of the agency, and (2) the circumstances did not indicate a lack of trustworthiness, given that it was not shown that the letter was created for purposes of the litigation. 1001 McKinney Ltd. v. Credit Suisse First Boston Mortg. Capital, 192 S.W.3d 20, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9742 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

810. Inmate was not entitled to 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 relief on his claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the prosecution's evidence regarding the inmate's expulsion from middle school, because trial counsel reasonably believed that at least some evidence showing that the inmate had been expelled and possibly the reasons therefore was going to be admitted at trial, and counsel's decision to challenge that evidence on cross-examination was objectively reasonable. Gutierrez v. Dretke, 392 F. Supp. 2d 802, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32496 (W.D. Tex. 2005).

811. Although an officer's supplemental written refusal report was not filed within five days after the motorist's arrest, the officer's failure to comply with Tex. Transp. Code Ann. §724.032(c)'s time requirement did not render the supplemental report inadmissible, as such reports were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), and the administrative law judge's admission of the supplemental written refusal report was not an abuse of discretion. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Perkins, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10833 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 2 2004).

812. Trial court did not err in admitting police reports in a parental termination proceeding because the reports were admissible as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) and the parents failed to meet their burden to show untrustworthiness. The parents failed to show resulting harm because the police reports were merely cumulative of the evidence already in the record as the result of the mother's admissions regarding her previous arrests and drug use during pregnancy. Corrales v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 155 S.W.3d 478, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10384 (Tex. App. El Paso 2004).

813. In a car owner's suit against another driver arising out of a car accident, the trial court did not err in admitting the police accident report as it was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) as an exception to the hearsay rule, even though the trial court stated it was admitting the report under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Madrigal v. Soliz, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7990 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2004).

814. Trial court improperly admitted a manufacturer's database of consumer complaints; even if a government agency report was admitted first under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), it did not hold the door open for the database. While the report listed the numbers of reported acceleration incidents as background to indicate what and why it was investigating; the consumer offered the database to show that the cars were defective. Nissan Motor Co. v. Armstrong, 145 S.W.3d 131, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 737, 47 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 955, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17123 (Tex. 2004).

815. Court refused to consider a police report attached to defendant's brief in connection with defendant's appeal from a conviction under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 481.102(6) and 481.115(a) because the report was not part of the appellate record, and it constituted inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B). Cowan v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6968 (Tex. App. Tyler July 30 2004).

816. Trial court properly excluded an explanatory letter, which purported to provide the same explanation offered by a witness as to why the date listed in the records was not necessarily the date appellant's disability began where the letter did not fall within the specific categories of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Moore v. Mem'l Hermann Hosp. Sys., 140 S.W.3d 870, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6067 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

817. In airport facility lessees' challenge to the city appraisal district's tax assessment on improvements the lessees constructed under their leases and subleases with the city, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting certificates of occupancy stating that the city had accepted the facilities as the certificates and an affidavit referencing them as they were not hearsay, and even if they were, the certificates were admissible public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in that they memorialized the city's issuance of certificates of occupancy to the lessees of the facilities. Travis Cent. Appraisal Dist. v. Signature Flight Support Corp., 140 S.W.3d 833, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5783 (Tex. App. Austin 2004).

818. In a defamation action, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not specify that the certification on the employee and the employer's exhibits contain an accurate date, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that the incorrect date stamp was the result of a fraudulent act; thus, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to admit the exhibits under the public documents exception to the hearsay rule. Adi v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 565, 163 L. Ed. 2d 475, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7988, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

819. Although there was a hearsay exception for public records, this exception did not apply to matters observed by police officers and contained in their offense reports, Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B); even if the complainant's drug addiction and acts of prostitution were relevant to defendant's defense, he was not entitled to prove these facts by introducing the contents of the officer's offense report. Ex parte Irving, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2033 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 4 2004).

820. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court erred in admitting the arresting officer's commentary from the audio portion of a videotape taken from his patrol car while following defendant as the commentary was hearsay; the observations were not made by the officer while testifying at trial, as they were offered to prove that the officer had probable cause to stop defendant, and where the officer's comments were matters observed by a police officer in a criminal case, they were excluded from the public records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) for admission at trial. Thompson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10088 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2003).

821. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court erred in admitting the arresting officer's commentary from the audio portion of a videotape taken from his patrol car while following defendant as the commentary was hearsay; the observations were not made by the officer while testifying at trial, as they were offered to prove that the officer had probable cause to stop defendant, and where the officer's comments were matters observed by a police officer in a criminal case, they were excluded from the public records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) for admission at trial. Thompson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10088 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2003).

822. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court erred in admitting the arresting officer's commentary from the audio portion of a videotape taken from his patrol car while following defendant as the commentary was hearsay; the observations were not made by the officer while testifying at trial, as they were offered to prove that the officer had probable cause to stop defendant, and where the officer's comments were matters observed by a police officer in a criminal case, they were excluded from the public records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) for admission at trial. Thompson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10088 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2003).

823. In juvenile defendant's probation revocation hearing, although the State did not lay the proper predicate for admitting defendant's school disciplinary reports pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the records were admissible under the public records exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) as they set forth matters observed pursuant to the teachers' duty imposed by Tex. Educ. Code Ann. § 37.001(b). In re B. J., 100 S.W.3d 448, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 237 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

824. Affidavit of an arresting officer on form DIC-23, that contained observations and factual findings resulting from his investigation, was properly admitted under the public records exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in an administrative hearing on the suspension of a driver's license; after a person has been arrested and has refused to submit to a breath test, a peace officer is required to submit a written report to the Director of the Texas Department of Public Safety pursuant to Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.032, and the report is admissible unless the officer fails to appear at a scheduled hearing after receipt of a timely subpoena. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Struve, 79 S.W.3d 796, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002).

825. Peace officer's sworn report, which the officer signed under oath before a notary, properly admitted at an administrative driver's license revocation hearing under the public record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Texas Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Cortinas, 996 S.W.2d 885, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7791 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1998).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Absence of Records

826. In an action by a second wife to establish her right to share in a decedent's estate, the trial court did not err in admitting certificates, signed and certified by the clerk or a deputy clerk of three counties, that no divorce had been entered between the decedent and his first wife, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(10). In the Estate of Rice, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7215 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 13 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Investigative Reports

827. In determining that a proposed acquisition of a utility was in the public interest, the Texas Public Utility Commission properly struck as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) portions of proposed testimony that discussed withdrawn testimony, including statements by an expert witness who was hired by the Commission's staff. The withdrawn testimony did not constitute admissions by party-opponents under Rule 801(e)(2) because it did not come from opposing parties, nor was it admissible under the public-record exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) because it was not admitted into the record or prepared under the supervision of a public official. Nucor Steel -- Tex. v. PUC, 363 S.W.3d 871, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2108, 2012 WL 895994 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 15 2012).

828. Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) dictates that matters observed by police officers or other law enforcement personnel are subject to the hearsay rule. Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

829. Letter under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 493.009 was a statement notifying the trial court that appellant failed the program and asked for a bench warrant, and the rest of the report was a summary of specified disruptive behavior; the first prong of the test fell in favor of finding that the letter was admissible, but less so as to attachments to the letter. Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

830. Coordinator's letter was administrative and ministerial in nature, created by the coordinator under a duty imposed by law under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 493.009, and although the detailed attachments that explained the specific conduct of appellant were not necessarily created for facilitating a prosecution, those parts of the documents fell on the inadmissible side of the spectrum, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

831. Letter was prepared by an employee of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice, who worked as a release coordinator in a substance abuse program, and he had a duty to make the report to the judge who had placed appellant on community supervision if the facility found appellant was not complying with the rules, for purposes of Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 493.009; the court concludes that a release coordinator for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice reporting a defendant's noncompliance with the facility's rules to a sentencing court for its further action is acting as "law enforcement personnel" as contemplated by the rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

832. Under the unique circumstances and given the conflicting evidence presented concerning the existence or nonexistence of a written report and the opinions allegedly contained therein, which formed the basis for a motion to dismiss the indictment, the trial court's finding that the motion was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) fell within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d 790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

833. Even if the trial court erred in excluding any evidence that it ruled was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) because the excluded investigative reports, which did not show any illegal activity more recent than that shown in admitted evidence, were cumulative. State v. Elite Med, L.L.C., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502, 2011 WL 3610414 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 17 2011).

834. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the contact log narrative of the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services' investigator as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C) because it appeared to track the investigator's observations that were made during the investigation. In the Interest of B.G.M., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6040 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 4 2011).

835. In defendant's assault case, the court did not err in excluding the officer's entire report during the cross-examination of the officer because the report did not consist of "factual findings resulting from an investigation," or the officer's opinions or conclusions based on such findings. To the contrary, the report was a recitation of statements made by the victim in reporting the offense. Weiss v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9453, 2009 WL 4757379 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 10 2009).

836. A certified tax statement is a public record, even if it was prepared solely for the purpose of litigation. F-Star Socorro, L.P. v. City of El Paso, 281 S.W.3d 103, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5008 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

837. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit a police report into evidence because the portions defendant attempted to offer, transcribed statements made by a prospective informant, were not factual findings and therefore were outside the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 803; the statements were not shown to be otherwise exempt from the hearsay rule. Ramirez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5825 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2007).

838. Portions of an offense report contained factual findings resulting from an officer's investigation of one of the State's witnesses, and the factual findings were admissible even though the report in its entirety was not admissible; under Tex. R. Evid. 803, defendant could have properly offered those factual findings into evidence to show bias or motive, but defendant offered the entire report, including the part that was inadmissible, and because defendant did not limit the offer to the admissible portions of the report, the trial court did not err in excluding the entire report. August v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3829 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 4 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Law Enforcement Reports

839. State conceded that the trial court violated Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) in admitting the officer's police report, but defendant was not harmed under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that the report revealed nothing other than defendant refused to give a breath sample, and this same evidence was elicited from the officer without objection. Eckiss v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7371 (Tex. App. Dallas June 11 2013).

840. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a California police report of domestic violence made by the mother against the father because it was admissible as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). L.M. & Y.Y. v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5683, 2012 WL 2923132 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2012).

841. Under former 1 Tex. Admin. Code §/Aa159.23(c)(7), an officer's failure to swear an arrest report did not deprive it of the assurance of veracity or render it inadmissible; supported by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), arrest reports were admissible without being sworn and the ALJ properly concluded that the report should be admitted. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Caruana, 363 S.W.3d 558, 2012 Tex. LEXIS 265, 55 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 479 (Tex. 2012).

842. Appellant objected to the entire letter under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 493.009, including attachments, but because the letter was partly admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the letter as evidence, which showed he did not meet the conditions imposed by the court for his community supervision. Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

843. Court's finding that the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in admitting an entire letter under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 493.009 negated appellant's claim that there was no support for the adjudication; the letter and attachments provided sufficient evidence that appellant violated his community supervision terms, plus there was testimony that appellant did not complete a treatment program, and the trial court did not err in revoking his community supervision. Brewer v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519, 2012 WL 626275 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 28 2012).

844. Defendant failed to show he received ineffective assistance of counsel, because the record was silent as to why defense counsel might have declined to object to admission of the offense report during the punishment hearing, and the failure to object to the offense report was not so outrageous that no competent attorney would have acceded to the trial court's ruling; it was possible that defense counsel knew or surmised that if he kept out the report, which included the victim's version of events, that the elderly victim herself would have been called to testify and given a potentially more impactful live version of events than the one contained in the report. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8569, 2011 WL 5119007 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 27 2011).

845. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the officer's expert testimony that there was nothing the employee could have done to avoid colliding with the daughter's car after the daughter's car struck the third-party's tractor-trailer, because there was no analytical gap between the data the officer collected and relied on in his investigation and his opinion as to causation; police reports could be admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8). Schultz v. Lester, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2011 WL 3211271 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2011).

846. Suspension of a driver's license for refusal to submit to a breath test under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.035 was supported by substantial evidence because even if the officer's sworn report was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) based on a lack of a signature, the admissible evidence demonstrated the four elements required to uphold the suspension; that evidence included the DIC-24 form, under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.032, which indicated refusal to submit to the breath test and was signed by the driver. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Guajardo, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6000, 2010 WL 2967224 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 29 2010).

847. Trial court did not err by excluding from evidence written witness statements attached to an officer's accident report because the statements were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and they did not fall under the public records exception, as witness statements in an officer's file did not qualify. Sherbin v. Dean Word Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5362, 2010 WL 2698761 (Tex. App. Austin July 9 2010).

848. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), a presentence investigation report showed that defendant owed a certain amount due to his failure to pay child support, but the report failed to show the amount of child support owed before his indictment and instead showed an amount that was less than what the trial court ordered, such that the amount ordered was without adequate evidentiary support in relation to matters for which defendant had been adjudged criminally responsible, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 23(a); deducting the payments defendant made during his community supervision did not cure the insufficiency of the evidence. Jester v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 341, 2010 WL 177792 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 20 2010).

849. In a subrogation action, a trial court did not err by admitting a police report into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) because there was nothing to indicate that the report lacked trustworthiness. Moreover, because a large part of the report was admissible non-opinion evidence and a driver did not specifically object to the opinion statements, the trial court properly overruled an alleged driver's objection regarding expert opinion. Lawrence v. Geico Gen. Ins. Co., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5082, 2009 WL 1886177 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 2 2009).

850. In a personal injury case, the court did not err by admitting a redacted accident report because the investigator stated an opinion that appellee "failed to yield the right of way," and the trial court chose to exclude the investigator's narrative. Additionally, the record showed that appellee conceded at trial that she caused the collision. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

851. Peace officer's sworn DIC-23 report stating that a driver refused an alcohol concentration test was admissible in license suspension proceedings as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803, and the failure to fill in a blank for the number of pages did not overcome the presumption of admissibility. Hooker v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 329 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 17 2008).

852. Court did not err by admitting a drug analyst-supervisor to testify in the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated robbery case that the substances removed from the car that defendant was driving were marijuana and cocaine because the trial court implicitly found that the supervisor qualified as an expert, and therefore, the State had no burden to invoke an exception to the hearsay rule; the trial court properly admitted the expert testimony that the substances were cocaine and marijuana because it was not hearsay and was not required to be based on her personal knowledge. Moore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6844 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 24 2007).

853. In a wrongful death and survival action stemming from a collision of a sport utility vehicle and a gravel truck, because the factual findings in a Department of Public Safety (DPS) accident report, as well as the opinions set forth in it, were all admitted into evidence via testimony and exhibits other than the accident report, any trial court error in excluding the opinion testimony of a DPS officer or the accident report pursuant to the hearsay exception set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) did not cause the rendition of an improper judgment and therefore did not constitute reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1). TXI Transp. Co. v. Hughes, 224 S.W.3d 870, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4124 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

854. In defendant's burglary case, a court erred by allowing one officer to testify that a finger print, in his opinion, belonged to defendant because the testimony necessarily revealed the substance of the third officer's conclusion, namely that in his opinion, the print belonged to defendant; under Tex. R. Evid. 803, that was hearsay; however, the error was harmless because the testimony was cumulative of other testimony regarding the conclusion. Smith v. State, 236 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2206 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

855. In a prosecution under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.04, a law enforcement officer's observations of defendant, dictated on videotape, were not admissible because they were the functional equivalent of a police or offense report under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B). The contemporaneous recording did not render the observations admissible as present sense impression under R. 803(1). Fischer v. State, 207 S.W.3d 846, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

856. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

857. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, there was no error under the Confrontation Clause in permitting an officer to testify about the vehicle registration; the computer entry showing vehicle registration was akin to a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and was thus non-testimonial under a Crawford analysis. Nieschwietz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5255 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 21 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : General Overview

858. At defendant's murder trial, the court did not abuse its discretion in publishing to the jury a witness' previous statement as a recorded recollection as his testimony indicated that he was not able to remember all of the details of the incident. Smith v. State, 420 S.W.3d 207, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15280, 2013 WL 6699495 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

859. Nothing showed that the original statement was introduced into evidence, but the victim testified that the statement was the one she was asked to fill out and contained some of her handwriting, and it was dated a day after the incident, such that the trial court had the discretion to find that the statement was the original and that it was made at or near the time of the event. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

860. State did not meet the predicate for admissibility as a recorded recollection because the victim did not vouch for the statement's accuracy and did not remember much of what was in the statement, plus parts were not in her handwriting, and thus a limiting instruction, advising the jury to consider the statement for testing the victim's credibility only for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), should have been granted. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

861. State had the burden to show that the statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5). Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

862. Appellant did not contest the third case law requirement for admissibility for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) because the victim testified that her memory as set forth in the statement was not clear. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

863. Second prong of the test for admissibility requires that the statement be an original memorandum made at or near the time of the event while the witness was able to clearly and accurately recall the event. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Criminal Trials

864. Witness eventually regained her memory and testified as to her present recollection of the events, and thus the court found her prior statement was not admissible as a prior recorded recollection; testimony recollecting her conversation with defendant was substantive evidence of his guilt. Sashington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2861, 2014 WL 1018005 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 14 2014).

865. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that defendant failed to lay sufficient predicate to show that the victim's previous statement was admissible as a past recollection record because there was nothing in the record to indicate that she knew she was being recorded at the time she made the statement or that she subsequently verified the accuracy of her statement while she could still recall the relevant events. Mury v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12662, 2013 WL 5856337 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 11 2013).

866. Prior written statement of a witness with memory loss was properly admitted as recorded recollection under Tex. R. Evid. Rule 803(5) because the witness sufficiently vouched for the accuracy of the statement through unobjected-to hearsay testimony that the witness told an officer that the statement was true at the time she wrote it. In re J.W., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9830, 2009 WL 5155784 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 30 2009).

867. Trial court overruled defendant's objection that the trial court erred in allowing an officer to read a police report to the jury on the ground that the report was hearsay, and the trial court granted a running objection;

however, defendant's complaint on appeal, that there was no proper predicate for the report, did not comport with the objections made at trial, and thus nothing was preserved for the court's review; the court noted that, under Tex. R. Evid. 803, if a witness's memory was not refreshed, a trustworthy document could be read to the jury under certain circumstances. Wilson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 22 2006).

868. In an aggravated robbery case, although a foundation was lacking for admission of an accomplice's statement as a prior inconsistent statement under Tex. R. Evid. 613 or as an exception to the hearsay rule under this rule, its admission into evidence at trial did not constitute reversible error because a detective had already testified in detail regarding the contents of the statement. Romero v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2999 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 1 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Recollection Refreshed

869. At defendant's murder trial, the court did not abuse its discretion in publishing to the jury a witness' previous statement as a recorded recollection as his testimony indicated that he was not able to remember all of the details of the incident. Smith v. State, 420 S.W.3d 207, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15280, 2013 WL 6699495 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Requirements

870. Trial court did not err by allowing a witness's prior statement to be read in the record as a recorded recollection because the witness testified that she could not recall significant details of what occurred due to the passage of time. Sanchez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10155 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 15 2013).

871. Defendant's aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon conviction was appropriate, in part because, even if it were to be assumed that the trial court erroneously admitted a statement since the State failed to lay a proper predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5), there was no showing that the alleged erroneous evidentiary ruling rose to the level of denying fundamental constitutional rights. Hernandez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9499, 2012 WL 5520422 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 15 2012).

872. At defendant's trial for engaging in organized criminal activity, the trial court erred by admitting an out-of-court statement made by an accomplice witness to police after he was arrested; although the statement included direct statements against interest and blame-sharing statements that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), it also included numerous blame-shifting statements that were not admissible. The statement was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) as recorded recollection, because the witness did not testify that he had firsthand knowledge of the events contained in his statement; nor did he vouch at trial for the accuracy of his statement. Batts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163, 2012 WL 2469546 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

873. Assuming that the fourth requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) had to be restrictively construed, it was error under Rule 803(5) to admit a witness's statement to police that he saw defendant pull a gun and that defendant had said he was going to kill the victim because the witness testified to the contrary at trial. However, the statement was useful for impeachment and partially admissible as a statement against interest. Spearman v. State, 307 S.W.3d 463, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1026 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 10 2010).

874. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not err in allowing a witness's recorded statement to be read to the jury because she stated that it was "hard for her to remember now" what happened in 1998 that caused her to be a witness in the case, the witness gave a statement to the police on the day the events occurred, the witness signed the statement, and she would not have signed it if it had not been true and correct. Therefore, the State proved the necessary predicate to satisfy the recorded recollection exception. Wilson v. State, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 2954 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 30 2009).

875. Although defendant argued that a written statement and grand jury testimony were admissible only under Tex. R. Evid. 613 and not under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5), the court disagreed; the witness had firsthand knowledge of the event, his statement was dated two weeks after the event, and the record supported a finding that the witness lacked a present recollection of the event at trial and his grand jury testimony was made close in time to the event, such that the trial court did not err in permitting the statement and grand jury testimony to be read into evidence under Rule 803(5), and because the statements were not offered for purposes of impeachment, the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury to consider the statements as such. Brown v. State, 333 S.W.3d 606, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2936 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 30 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Records of Documents Affecting Property Interests

876. In a suit for forcible detainer filed by a mortgage company, the trial court abused its discretion by sustaining the occupant's hearsay within hearsay objection to the recitals in the trustee's deed, because the recitals were relevant to the purpose of the document and not excluded by the hearsay rule. Citimortgage, Inc. v. Sczepanik, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14177 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 19 2013).

877. In an action for unlawful detainer following a foreclosure sale, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the trustee's deed into evidence. The hearsay recitals in the deed set forth the facts upon which the foreclosure sale was based and were germane to the deed's purpose; therefore, they were admissible under this rule. Mason v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13682, 2013 WL 5948077 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 5 2013).

878. In defendant's burglary case, the court properly admitted records from a pawn shop because an officer testified that the exhibit was an electronic copy of the pawn ticket containing the information recorded by the pawn shop when the stolen equalizer was pawned. The record showed that the item was pawned by defendant. Gomez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9526, 2009 WL 4831117 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 16 2009).

879. It was in connection with the correction of the acknowledgment in previous deeds, to reflect that the decedent had conveyed her entire interest in the property, that the deed made the statements of which descendants complained; they did not contend, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(15), that the dealings with the property since the deed was made had been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the deed and the court did not see any such dealings in the record. Walton v. Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc'y of Pa., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 180 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2007).

880. Tenant should have timely sent a written notice of a lease extension by certified mail to the new landlord consistent with the literal terms of the lease amendment and the trial court did not err in not admitting two exhibits under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(15) hearsay exception because the new landlord had not treated the tenant's interpretation of its property interest consistently with the former landlord's interpretation in those exhibits. Tri-Steel Structures, Inc. v. Baptist Found., 166 S.W.3d 443, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4115 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Religious Records

881. Documents admitted during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(11) because they related to marriages, births, family relationships, personal history, and family history of Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (FLDS) members; the documents were regularly maintained by the FLDS as part of the religious organization of the church. Jessop v. State, 368 S.W.3d 653, 2012

Tex. App. LEXIS 3176, 2012 WL 1402117 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2012).

882. Appellant characterized his fundamental church as an extreme sect, whose documents should not be included in the hearsay exemption under Tex. R. Evid. 803(11), but Rule 803(11) does not depend on the popularity or acceptance of the religious organization; hearsay evidence need only be consistent with the provisions of the exception to be admissible. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

883. Documents related to marriages, births, personal history, and relationships of church members and were regularly maintained by the church; the documents were excepted from the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(11) or Tex. R. Evid. 803(13) and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting these documents. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

884. Appellant claimed the purpose for which the State offered the evidence was not a purpose discussed in the rules; however, the exceptions to the hearsay rules are not dependent on the reason why a party wants to offer the hearsay, and the only relevant inquiry concerning the purpose of hearsay is whether the out-of-court statement is being offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Why the proponent wishes to admit the evidence, beyond offering it for the truth of the matter asserted, is immaterial, and how the hearsay evidence supports the proponent's trial theory or fits into the proponent's trial strategy does not affect its admissibility under an exception under the rules. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Reputation : General Overview

885. Trial court improperly excluded a defense witness's testimony regarding the complainant's poor reputation for truthfulness, where the testimony was clearly admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(21). Siverand v. State, 89 S.W.3d 216, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7258 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Reputation : Boundaries

886. Testimony regarding the venue of the offense was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(20). Mccuin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5031, 2011 WL 2611234 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 30 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Reputation : Character

887. Officer's opinion, based on the officer's conversations with other officers, that defendant did not have a reputation for being peaceful and law abiding, was admissible under the exception for general reputation in the community, and defendant opened the door to questions about his criminal record; although it was error for the officer to testify about specific prior bad acts that the officer had no knowledge of, the error was harmless. Panchol v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9192 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 25 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : General Overview

888. Considering the lack of trustworthiness in the testimony of two individual's called by defendant concerning an individual they claimed had murdered the victim, defendant's signed confession, and the testimony's contradictions with the substantial amount of evidence showing defendant's guilt, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing the jury to hear the two witness' testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Hall v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5730 (Tex. App. Dallas July 22 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : Confrontation Clause Requirements

889. Where petitioner state death row inmate argued trial counsel was ineffective for admitting into evidence at the penalty phase psychiatric reports which were between 19 and 25 years old which suggested the inmate was a future danger, each of the exhibits that trial counsel introduced satisfied the exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and thus met the requirements of the Confrontation Clause. Coble v. Quarterman, 496 F.3d 430, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 19327 (5th Cir. Tex. 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : General Overview

890. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the victim told a witness that defendant told her to open her mouth and that was going to stick his penis in her mouth. Although a quarter of an hour passed, the victim was shaking and crying. Ervin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8213 (Tex. App. Dallas July 3 2013).

891. Because there was no dispute concerning the inapplicability of the present sense impression exception, the court's inquiry was whether the excited utterance exception applied. Carrillo v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3968 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 27 2013).

892. Although the victim's statements were in response to officer questioning, there was sufficient evidence that the victim's statements were made while still dominated by the fear and pain of the event, given that only a short amount of time passed between the event and the arrival of officers, when one officer observed the victim visibly upset and showing signs of injury, and thus the statements fell within the excited utterance exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and the trial court did not err in admitting the statements. Carrillo v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3968 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 27 2013).

893. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

894. In defendant's domestic violence case, the victim's statements to an officer were properly admitted as excited utterances because, when the officer started to ask the victim what had happened to her, "she began to cry" "to the point where she had tears running down her face and she was not able to speak." The victim "was having difficulty controlling her emotions about the event" and "was still under the stress of the incident when she was talking" to the officer. Garcia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7543 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 29 2012).

895. In defendant's aggravated assault case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing an officer to testify because according to the officer, the declarant was exhausted, scared, and visibly upset when she told the officer that, "defendant came in and the door was unlocked, and defendant and a friend came in and beat this guy up." Jarnagin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10158, 2010 WL 5186782 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2010).

896. During defendant's trial for injury to an elderly individual, defendant's grandfather, the trial court did not err in admitting an officer's recitation of statements made by the victim and a witness just minutes after the assault occurred; the statements were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were related to a startling event. Castro-valenzuela v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5942, 2010 WL 2949963 (Tex. App. El Paso July 28 2010).

897. In a sexual assault of a child case, the victim's mother's testimony regarding what the victim told her was admissible as an excited utterance because the time between when the grandmother witnessed the encounter and the victim made the declaration that defendant "put his private in her mouth" was 10 minutes and, throughout that period, the victim cried. Although the mother asked the victim what was wrong, the declaration was not the result of questioning and was a spontaneous declaration regarding the occurrence that caused the emotional state the victim was in at a time that the victim was still in that emotional state. In re A. W. B., 419 S.W.3d 351, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 747 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 2 2010).

898. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial, irrespective of whether the victim's disclosure to her stepmother constituted an excited utterance or whether the stepmother was an outcry witness, the victim's mother also testified that the victim disclosed how defendant repeatedly raped her, plus a sexual assault nurse testified to what the victim told her about being assaulted; because other evidence involving the sexual assaults was admitted at trial, the stepmother's testimony was cumulative and thus error, if any, was harmless. Rosales v. State, 303 S.W.3d 917, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 313 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 15 2010).

899. Defendant's argument on appeal did not comport with his objection at trial, such that the claimed error based on the trial court's failure to issue a limiting instruction was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); in any event, the complaint provided no basis for reversal because statements admitted as present sense impressions or excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) were admissible for all purposes and were not subject to a limiting instruction. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300, 2009 WL 4575146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 8 2009).

900. In defendant's murder case, the court properly admitted the deaf victim's written statements under the excited utterance exception because the statements related to a startling event: she wrote that she was raped, hit, and threatened with a knife that evening, the deputy testified that the statements were made while the victim was scared and angry, and thus, it was reasonable for the trial court to infer that the victim was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9779 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

901. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer testimony regarding the victim's statements because, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, an shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident when she spoke to the officer. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9054, 2009 WL 4051980 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 24 2009).

902. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the court properly admitted a co-conspirator's statement because the officer's testimony about the statement "waste him, dog, waste him" and "shoot him, and get out of here," because the startling event was the suspect's sudden confrontation with the police officer and his detention at gunpoint. The suspect was clearly under the stress of excitement caused by the startling circumstances. Clifton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6533, 2009 WL 2567946 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 20 2009).

903. In a murder case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the witnesses' testimony indicated that the victim was bloody, in severe pain, and pleading for help when he made the statements to them; although the victim made the statements in response to general questions about what had happened, there was nothing to indicate that the witnesses asked the questions for any reason other than personal concern. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

904. Statement met none of the exceptions in Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2), (3), and while (1) an objection made mid-sentence also applied to the rest of the statement that was admitted after the objection, and (2) defendant also timely objected the second time the statement was made, because defendant did not object to the third mention of the statement, defendant did not preserve error. Dodson v. State, 268 S.W.3d 674, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6442 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

905. Under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the event about which an excited utterance is made does not have to be the same event that caused a declarant's excitement. McCarty v. State, 257 S.W.3d 238, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 759 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

906. One may continue to rely on Tezeno v. State, 484 S.W.2d 374 (Tex. Crim. App. 1972), Sellers v. State, 588 S.W.2d 915 (Tex. Crim. App. 1979), Hunt v. State, 904 S.W.2d 813 (Tex. App.-- Fort Worth 1995, pet. ref'd), and Bondurant v. State, 956 S.W.2d 762 (Tex. App.-- Fort Worth 1997, pet. ref'd), concerning the treatment of the present excited-utterance exception. McCarty v. State, 257 S.W.3d 238, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 759 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

907. In defendant's murder case, the court properly excluded testimony of a witness regarding what the victim told the witness about altercations between the victim and defendant because the testimony concerning what the victim said to the witness at least two days after the event in question was not a present sense impression, there was no evidence in the record that the victim was "in the instant grip of violent emotion, excitement or pain" immediately before or during his recounting of the events, and the victim's statements were not self-inculpatory. Eisenman v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2008).

908. In a failure to stop case, the court properly excluded testimony that defendant's husband told her that he had been involved in an accident because the traffic accident was not such a startling event that the husband was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event or condition when the statement was made; the accident was not of a serious nature, the vehicle was still operable, the injuries were relatively minor, and the statements were made in response to a question and were untrue since the driver of the other car had not left the scene. Martinez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 927 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 8 2007).

909. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

910. Counsel was not ineffective for not lodging certain hearsay objections; counsel could have concluded that a statement would have been admitted as an excited utterance or a present sense impression, and counsel could have found that the State could have obtained the same testimony by recalling a witness to clarify the statements, and furthermore, counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to another question, given that the State meant to ask the witness if, at the time of defendant's arrest, the witness identified defendant as the person the witness, not another, saw lighting the fire in question. Ortiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3893 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 4 2006).

911. In a case of interference with an emergency telephone call, the statements made during the call, which were made for the purpose of reporting a crime in progress and were made while the declarant was still dominated by the emotions and fear of the event, qualified as an excited utterance. Neal v. State, 186 S.W.3d 690, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1945 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

912. Statements by the child victim's younger sister were admissible as exceptions to the hearsay rule because they were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), given that (1) the sister was emotionally distraught when she made the statements and she reacted spontaneously and immediately upon being told that the victim was at defendant's house and that the sister was to join them shortly, and (2) this was not an event she was likely to have told her mother about initially, having witnessed the sexual assault on the victim by defendant, and this was not an incident she could have fabricated on her own; even had the statements not been allowed, there was no harm for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the substance of the sister's testimony as to what happened to the victim was presented to the jury through the victim and through pictures found at defendant's house. Lane v. State, 174 S.W.3d 376, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7616 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

913. Court properly admitted a child's statements as excited utterances where the police officer testified that the child had appeared to be upset not only when he entered the room, but for some time afterward, as she continued to express fear and distress regarding the disappearance and, she believed, death of her mother. Lagunas v. State, 187 S.W.3d 503, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6957 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

914. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; counsel's failure to raise a Confrontation Clause objection was not outside the range of reasonable assistance because the victim's hearsay statements were non-testimonial in nature, given that they were made during an informal setting to emergency personnel, and the statements fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), (4), and thus bore particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. Ramos v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6466 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 11 2005).

915. During defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in admitting under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the complainant's out-of-court statement to the first officer on the scene that defendant tried to take his money where the complainant expressly testified that he was in a fair amount of pain at the time he made the statement to the officer, and paramedics were assessing his condition after he had been shot and hit on the head with a gun, which clearly established that he was still dominated by the pain of the shooting when he made the statement. In addition, the statement occurred only a short time after the shooting. Moore v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 4 2005).

916. Trial court acted within its discretion in admitting the wife's statement under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the officer noticed that the wife was visibly upset, shaking, trembling and, crying and that her cheek was red, and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the wife was still under the emotion, excitement, fear, or pain of the alleged assault when she told the officer that defendant slapped her. Solorzano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5694 (Tex. App. Austin July 21 2005).

917. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to testimony of a witness who said what an injured officer said on hearsay grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 801, nor did the trial court err in admitting the statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the statement was in response to a general question of what happened and the statement was made immediately after the officer was shot, and thus the officer was still dominated by the emotions of the event, for purposes of Rule 803(2), and furthermore, the officer's statement was consistent with defendant's plea of guilty to the charge that defendant shot the officer, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02(a), (b)(2). Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5093 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2005).

918. Trial court did not err in allowing an officer to testify regarding a witness's out-of-court statements where the statements qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were made in relation to startling events while the witness was still dominated by the emotion caused by those events. Furthermore, even assuming that Crawford barred the admission of the statements, defendant was not harmed by the error because the statements were not important to the State's case for aggravated assault, as the lawfully admitted evidence presented by the State overwhelmingly established defendant's guilt. Arias v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4341 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 8 2005).

919. Trial court did not err during the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial in finding that the statements of two of his alleged prior victims were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), considering the apparent emotional state of the women when police officers encountered them. One officer testified that the first victim was upset and very emotional when he saw her and that she was still crying while she answered his questions, and the other officer described the second victim as being very upset, very emotionally distraught, and almost hysterical. Marc v. State, 166 S.W.3d 767, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4228 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

920. Although a domestic violence complainant's statements to a police officer near the scene of the offense were admissible under the excited utterances exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), because she was crying, sobbing, and appeared hysterical at the time that she identified defendant and then, in a series of accusations against him, detailed blow by blow the assault made upon her, that did not mean that the statements were ipso facto nontestimonial hearsay outside the scope of the Confrontation Clause and admissible into evidence. Each case must be examined on its facts to determine if the evidence is testimonial and controlled by Crawford. Davis v. State, 169 S.W.3d 660, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3773 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

921. Victim's statements, made within 30 minutes of the incident, were clearly made while the victim was under the stress of the excitement of the victim's encounter with defendant, and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the victim's statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Smock v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3612 (Tex. App. Eastland May 12 2005).

922. Trial court did not err in excluding testimony as to defendant's deceased husband's statements to two witnesses that he was the one that should have been arrested for obtaining drugs by a forged prescription rather than defendant, who did not know the prescription was forged, because defendant failed to show that his statements fell within the excited-utterance hearsay exception provided in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The husband made the statement to one witness weeks after defendant was arrested, therefore such a large amount of time had passed that the trial court did not err in implicitly finding that the statements resulted from reason or reflection and were made while the husband was no longer dominated by the emotions or excitement of learning about defendant's arrest. Ex Parte Buffington-Bennett, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3158 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 28 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1656, 164 L. Ed. 2d 400, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2752, 74 U.S.L.W. 3560 (U.S. 2006).

923. The Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourteenth District, Houston declines to join those courts that have established a bright-line rule that excited utterances can never be testimonial because the fact that a statement is an excited utterance as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is only one factor that can be considered when determining whether the statement is testimonial for purposes of analyzing a Confrontation Clause claim. Texas courts have held that a declarant's state of excitement can last long after the initial crime and that excited utterances can be made both spontaneously and in response to questioning, therefore each situation should be analyzed individually. Spencer v. State, 162 S.W.3d 877, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3162 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

924. When trial court admitted defendant's daughter's statements to a police officer about defendant's alleged sexual assault, the statements were admitted in error under the excited utterance rule. Although the daughter was visibly upset, the incident had allegedly taken place 5 years earlier; nevertheless, the error was harmless. Barnes v. State, 165 S.W.3d 75, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

925. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence testimony from a robbery victim's supervisor with respect to a statement the victim made to her after the robbery because the statement was an excited utterance and, therefore, was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The supervisor said that on the day of the robbery, she received a phone call from the victim, that he appeared to be kind of nervous, and that he had told her that he had been threatened because defendant told him that if he called the police, defendant would kill him. Hayden v. State, 155 S.W.3d 640, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 243 (Tex. App. Eastland 2005).

926. In a products liability action arising from an auto accident, an unidentified witness' account of the accident, calmly given to a reporter after an opportunity for deliberation, was not an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Ramirez, 159 S.W.3d 897, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1429, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 256, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17242 (Tex. 2004).

927. Trial court did not err in permitting a police officer to testify over a hearsay objection regarding one victim's statements about the incident because the State established that the statements were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The victim was involved in the gunfight, wherein the other victim was shot in the head, and the victim gave the officer the statement within minutes of the event when the victim was hysterical, but even if the trial court erred in admitting the testimony, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because both the victim and the officer testified to the same matter, and therefore defendant's substantial rights were not affected. Rivera v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11726 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2004).

928. Where defendant was charged with assaulting the victim in violation of a protective order, the trial court properly admitted the victim's hearsay statements to the arresting officer that she had had problems with defendant in the past. The testimony was admissible as a spontaneous statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Polley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11317 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 16 2004).

929. One victim's statements to police concerning who committed the offense, the shooter's physical characteristics, and the shooter's place of residence, qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The victims had been shot a short time before police arrived, and at the time the victim made the statements implicating defendant, the victim was visibly shaken by what had occurred, and it was reasonable to infer that a startling event had occurred and that the victim was still under the stress caused by the event when the victim made the statements, and the fact that some of the statements were in form of responses to questions did not make them inadmissible. Gonzalez v. State, 155 S.W.3d 603, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11198 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004), affirmed by 195 S.W.3d 114, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

930. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), an officer's testimony concerning what the victim told the officer, in connection with defendant's trial for and conviction of burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault. The court did not consider certain facts that were not in evidence at the time the officer testified, and given that the officer testified that the victim had physical injuries, was still in the ransacked apartment where the assault took place, and was somewhat stressed, upset, and had watery eyes, the trial court properly found the statements to be excited utterances. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10, 2005).

931. Trial court did not err in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), a victim's aunt's testimony about what the victim told her, in connection with defendant's trial for and conviction of burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault. Although the victim's statements were made one to two hours after the assault, the victim was crying, looked scared, and it appeared that the victim was suffering under the stress caused by the event, and although the court did not consider facts that were not in evidence at the time the aunt testified, there was already evidence presented that the victim had visible injuries and the apartment where the assault took place was ransacked. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10, 2005).

932. Defendant maintained the trial court erred in his trial for murder in excluding statements; defendant claimed that the statements were admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Nevertheless, when the witness's statement was taken at the police department an hour after the incident, the witness was no longer excited. Palacios v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9912 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 10 2004).

933. Trial court properly admitted statements made by defendant's girlfriend under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because a reasonable person could have concluded that the girlfriend made the statements while under stress, fear, or excitement from seeing her car wrecked, abandoned, and surrounded by police officers, knowing that she had lent the car to her boyfriend. Wilson v. State, 151 S.W.3d 694, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9874 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

934. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a domestic violence victim's statements to police officers into evidence as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) after finding that the victim was still in the grip of emotion, excitement, fear, or pain caused by the assault. An officer testified that he arrived at the scene approximately two or three minutes after the dispatch and that the victim was extremely upset and was still crying. Carter v. State, 150 S.W.3d 230, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9461 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

935. In connection with defendant's trial for robbery and aggravated robbery, defendant did not challenge the trial court's ruling that testimony was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1); the testimony was from a police officer, who spoke to the victims who explained that defendant carjacked them, and the officer stated that the officer first had to calm one of the victims down before the victim gave the officer any details, but that the victim was "stunned" at the time, and defendant did not demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the testimony under Rule 803(1). Hovey v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9014 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 13 2004).

936. In connection with defendant's murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the victim's statement, that defendant said defendant felt like killing someone, was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); at the time the statement was made, the victim was still dominated by the emotions of the event involving defendant, and the victim repeated the threat to a police officer shortly after it was made, at a time when she was still scared. Peyravi v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7365 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 17 2004).

937. In a criminal prosecution for sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve his claim that his confrontation rights were violated by a police officer's testimony concerning statements made to him by the complainant where defendant did not make a timely and specific objection in the trial court once the State established that the statements fell within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Crawford v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6472 (Tex. App. Dallas July 21 2004).

938. Record supported the trial court's finding that an officer's testimony of hearing that defendant had attempted escape before was admissible in defendant's trial for escape under the excited utterance exception to the rule against hearsay where the officer was at the jail when other officers arrived with defendant an hour after the officer first saw defendant, and even though an hour had passed, nothing indicated any intervening events, and the officers' statements about the attempted escape were not made in response to any question. Gorman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5494 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 23 2004).

939. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that the victim's statements to an officer that defendant threatened her with a pocketknife and forced her to perform oral sex on him were excited utterances, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the officer testified that when she arrived at the scene, she observed that the victim was very emotional and was visibly shaken, and in her opinion, the victim seemed to be under the stress of excitement caused by the sexual assault. Dudley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2696 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 25 2004).

940. Defendant's argument that the statement made by his roommate to the responding officer was hearsay, was overruled because the roommate's statement that defendant was going to kill the victim, his ex-lover's current boyfriend, qualified as an excited utterance, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), when the roommate was excited and the officer had to calm him down in order to understand him, and the roommate was clearly in the throes of what he perceived as an on-going murder. Delgado v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1899 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 25 2004).

941. Trial court did not err by allowing the state to present hearsay evidence in defendant's indecency with a child trial, consisting of a mother's testimony concerning what her daughter told her about an extraneous offense allegedly committed by defendant against her, where the evidence was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the daughter told her mother about the incident immediately after a church member stood up in church and made statements about the allegations of child sexual abuse against defendant, the pastor, the daughter became very upset after hearing the statements in church, and remained upset and was crying as she told her mother what defendant had done to her, and the daughter's statements were made before there was time to contrive and misrepresent. Powell v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10851 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 31 2003).

942. Excited utterance exception has three requirements: (1) an exciting event must have occurred; (2) the statement must have been a spontaneous reaction to the event; and (3) the statement must relate to the event. The purpose of the relationship requirement is to ensure that the statement is truly spontaneous and not the result of reflection, which could inject such factors as self-interest, anger, or vindictiveness into the utterance; that purpose is not fulfilled if the statement is not related to the startling event. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

943. Single most critical factor in evaluating an excited utterance as an exception to hearsay is whether the declarant made the statement while dominated by the emotion of the startling event or condition. While the time lapse between the startling event and the statement is not dispositive, it is the lack of opportunity to reflect or fabricate details that gives the exception its reliability; thus, the declarant's excitement must be continuous between the event itself and the making of the statement. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

944. In evaluating an excited utterance as an exception to hearsay, while the declarant's excitement is ordinarily continuous between the event itself and the making of the statement, it is too strong to say that the excitement must always be continuous. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

945. Statement of robbery victim, made four days after he was stabbed and robbed, was admissible as an excited utterance because the victim was in surgery, unconscious, heavily medicated, or incoherent for the intervening four days and made his excited utterance the very day that he awoke; the victim did not have the opportunity to fabricate his statement. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

946. Question of whether or not utterances factually meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is within the discretion of the trial court. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

947. The critical factor in determining when a statement is an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is whether the declarant was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

948. Pursuant to the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the spontaneity of the statements cannot be measured by the expectations of the listener, as only the speaker's perspective is important in determining spontaneity. Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

949. In a sexual assault of a child case, the 14-year-old victim's statements to the victim's mother comprised a reflective, narrative account of past events and were made in response to direct, specific questions that were calculated to elicit the type of responses given, even though the contents of the responses were unanticipated, and thus, although the victim might have been upset when the victim made the statements, the statements did not fall within the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), since the appellate court could not say that the statements were spontaneous and unreflecting, or made without the opportunity to contrive or misrepresent. Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

950. Trial court did not err when it admitted the testimony of a codefendant's girlfriend, who related the codefendant's statements that defendant shot a victim because the codefendant made his statements while dominated by the emotion, fear, and pain that was a result of the shooting, and the girlfriend's testimony was admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Ricketts v. State, 89 S.W.3d 312, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7838 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

951. Codefendant's spontaneous statements to his girlfriend that were made shortly after a shooting and that inculpated both the codefendant and defendant possessed an indicia of reliability and were properly admitted by the trial court as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Ricketts v. State, 89 S.W.3d 312, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7838 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

952. Undercover officer's testimony that after he purchased cocaine from defendant's partner and the arrest team entered the house and defendant's partner yelled "flush the dope" as she was running towards the back of the apartment, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance because the statement was made as defendant's partner ran towards the back of the house in an attempt to destroy evidence before the arrest team could seize it, while she was under the stress and excitement caused by the approaching arrest team. Wilkerson v. State, 933 S.W.2d 276, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 4504 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 1996).

953. Passengers' statements were properly admitted because they were spontaneously uttered just after defendant had almost knocked the officer over with the vehicle; the passengers were still dominated by their emotions or fear when they apologized to the officer, and seeing a police officer get hit by a car mirror during a traffic stop could qualify as a startling event. Ford v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2379, 2014 WL 823409 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 28 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Criminal Trials

954. State used an investigator to sponsor statements and drawings made by the child to prove that defendant stomped on the child's brother, and these statements and drawings were unquestionably hearsay, but fell under the excited utterance exception because the statements and drawings were made by the child immediately or shortly after being told his brother was dead and thus made out of impulse rather than through reason. Almaguer v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3842, 2014 WL 1415182 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 10 2014).

955. Assuming arguendo that the excited utterance exception did not apply and statements and drawings were testimonial hearsay, any Confrontation Clause error was harmless, given defendant's admission to hitting the child and the doctor's testimony that the child died as a result of blunt force abdominal trauma, plus defendant's flight to Mexico could be taken as consciousness of guilt. Almaguer v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3842, 2014 WL 1415182 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 10 2014).

956. At defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not commit reversible error by overruling his hearsay objection to testimony from an outcry witness who said that the victim told her defendant had raped her several years earlier. Even if the trial court erred in admitting the testimony as an excited utterance because it was made years after the first assault, the same facts were received elsewhere without objection. Washington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 933 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2014).

957. At defendant's trial for stalking, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a recording of the 9-1-1 call made by the complainant because it satisfied the requirements of an excited utterance. The complainant tried to call 9-1-1 while defendant was in her home arguing with her and refusing to leave; she testified that she made the call under the excitement of the event that had just happened. Mcgee v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 825, 2014 WL 261060 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

958. At defendant's trial for stalking, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a recording of the 9-1-1 call made by the complainant because it satisfied the requirements of an excited utterance. The complainant tried to call 9-1-1 while defendant was in her home arguing with her and refusing to leave; she testified that she made the call under the excitement of the event that had just happened. Mcgee v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 825, 2014 WL 261060 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

959. Police officer's testimony regarding the complainant's statements made shortly after the alleged assault occurred was properly admitted because the following circumstances supported application of the excited utterance hearsay exception: (1) the officer testified he arrived on the scene within six minutes of the 911 call; (2) the trial court reasonably could have concluded that no significant amount of time elapsed between the officer's arrival and his conversation with the complainant; (3) the officer described the complainant as being visibly shocked, dazed, and very upset and sad; and (4) the officer also observed that the complainant was bleeding from lacerations on his arm. Salinas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14761, 2013 WL 6328863 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 5 2013).

960. In a robbery case, trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance due to a failure to object to the testimony of officers about a victim's statement, which was made while he was still bleeding and was frantic, yelling, and frightened, because this would likely have been admitted as an excited utterance. Moreover, there was no prejudice where the officers' testimony added no new details to the victim's testimony at trial. Helmke v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12471, 2013 WL 5570474 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2013).

961. Victim's disclosure of the sexual assault to her cousin did not qualify as an excited utterance because the record did not support that the victim was still, three or four months later, dominated by the excited state produced by the attack. Nor did the record reflect that the mention of defendant's name was the type of startling or shocking event contemplated by the rule. Sandoval v. State, 409 S.W.3d 259, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11657 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 13 2013).

962. At defendant's trial for aggravated robbery and injury to the elderly with the intent to cause serious bodily injury, his trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the recording of the victim's 911 call as it fell within three separate hearsay exceptions. The 911 call was admissible as an excited utterance, a present sense impression, and as a statement regarding the victim's physical condition. Rincon v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11309 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 4 2013).

963. In a prosecution for aggravated kidnapping, an officer's testimony that the victim said she felt terrorized and feared she was going to be raped was admissible as an excited utterance, as it was made a few minutes after the incident and the officer testified that the victim was distraught and hysterical. Mason v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10853 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 28 2013).

964. In a trial for assault involving family violence, the victim's nonverbal out-of-court statement (blinking to indicate "yes" in response to the question of whether defendant choked her) was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the officer observed that she was extremely frightened and she did not have sufficient time or composure to fabricate an answer. Miller v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

965. In a case involving indecency with a child, it was not necessary to determine if a trial court erred by allowing a victim's brother to testify about the event surrounding the victim's revelation where the State argued that Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) applied because the same evidence was admitted through the victim's testimony and her mother's testimony. The admission of inadmissible evidence was harmless error if other evidence that proved the same fact was properly admitted elsewhere. In re C. D., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7591, 2013 WL 3203220 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 20 2013).

966. Victim's statements to her mother that she and defendant had engaged in sexual intercourse and oral sex on multiple occasions were not excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because they were not made suddenly or immediately after the victim heard defendant refer to her as a liar and a whore, but rather were made after she spoke to her boyfriend who encouraged her to talk to her mother. Even though the trial court erred by admitting the statements as excited utterances, the error was harmless because the State introduced evidence from a nurse who examined the victim after she made the allegations and defendant did not object when the nurse testified about the history of the sexual relationship between the victim and defendant. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

967. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding the victim's statements were excited utterances, and the officer's testimony regarding those statements was admissible; given the victim's age, the event, and the short passage of time, it was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the trial court to conclude that the victim's statements were based on impulse as opposed to reason and reflection. In re H.T.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10772 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 31 2012).

968. In a burglary case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to admit the videotape of defendant's interview with police because he failed to establish that a hearsay exception applied under Tex. R. Evid. 803; due to the time that elapsed between the alleged chase and the interview, the video was not an excited utterance and the unreflective nature required of a present sense impression was destroyed. The business record exception did not apply, because the source of the information indicated an absence of trustworthiness. Walker v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9928 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 30 2012).

969. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a statement defendant made to his mother that he stabbed a guy who came after him with a stick because it was not an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), as at least 15 to 20 minutes passed between the stabbing and the statement while defendant presumably walked back to his mother's house, sufficient time in which he could have formulated a story about why he stabbed the victim. Blue v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7895, 2012 WL 4095988 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 19 2012).

970. Although defendant argued that his statement, "You bit me on my lip!" was an excited utterance that constituted some evidence of his claim that he acted in self-defense, the utterance did not constitute evidence that defendant's assault of the complainant was immediately necessary to protect defendant against the complainant's alleged use of force. Johnson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6914, 2012 WL 3553502 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 20 2012).

971. Trial court did not err by admitting an officer's testimony about the complainant's out-of-court statements under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because shortly before the complainant made the statement he had been the victim of an armed robbery at gunpoint and, according to the testimony of two witnesses, this experience caused the complainant to be very excited; the statement was related to the circumstances of the occurrence preceding it as in the statement the complainant identified defendant as one of the robbers. Even if the trial court had erred by admitting the testimony the error would have been harmless because similar statements were also testified to by two other witnesses. Amador v. State, 376 S.W.3d 339, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 16 2012).

972. Trial court did not err by admitting the video recording of the police officer's interview with the victim at the scene of the investigation under the excited utterance exception to hearsay because when the victim was speaking to the officer, she had to be calmed several times and the officer testified she was very upset and crying. Alanis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5232, 2012 WL 2501026 (Tex. App. Tyler June 29 2012).

973. Because the victim made the statement to the witness that she was trying to be forced to do something that she did not want to do after exerting considerable energy to free herself from defendant's trunk, running towards lights, and banging on the doors of three houses with her hands still tied, the witness's testimony was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Mcwilliams v. State, 367 S.W.3d 817, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3153, 2012 WL 1406463 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 24 2012).

974. Statements that a child sexual assault victim made to her grandmother qualified as an excited utterance because: (1) the child made the statements only a few seconds after she awoke from a nightmare; (2) she was two years old at the time; (3) her statements were not in response to a question, nor were they self-serving; and (4) she was not of sufficient age to consider whether her statements would later be used against defendant. Bellanger v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3109, 2012 WL 1379662 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 18 2012).

975. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a statement made by defendant to an officer at the time of his arrest following the foot chase, that he ran because he thought he had outstanding warrants or tickets, because given the circumstances under which the statement was made, the trial court reasonably could have found the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) to be inapplicable. The trial court could have concluded that defendant knew he was being chased under the suspicion of exposing himself to young girls on a playground, giving him enough time to think about his story. Ingram v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 260 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 12 2012).

976. Officer's testimony about what the complainants told him immediately after he arrived at the apartment was admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the officer testified that the complainants were very scared, excited, anxious, and crying. Oliva v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 5428965 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2011).

977. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the uncle's testimony under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because, even though a day had elapsed between the assault and the victim's meeting her uncle, the uncle testified that in her initial telephone the victim was very upset, sobbing, and hysterical, and that when they met she was still upset and crying before telling him that defendant had inflicted her injuries. Walls v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7109, 2011 WL 3840992 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

978. Trial court did not err by admitting the victim's hearsay statement to a police officer as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because a reasonable person could have concluded that she made her statement while still dominated by the emotion, fear, and pain of the startling event as only a short amount of time had elapsed between the event and the officer's arrival, where he found the victim visibly upset and that her body bore signs of injury. Stoltz v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5738, 2011 WL 3199337 (Tex. App. El Paso July 27 2011).

979. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an animal control officer's testimony concerning what the baby's father said to her after he was told that the baby had been bitten by a dog because it was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The officer testified that the father was screaming and crying and had collapsed on the floor shortly before making the statement. Nadal v. State, 348 S.W.3d 304, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 7 2011).

980. In a criminal trial for indecency with a child, the interviewing officer's testimony as to the victim's hearsay statements was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear or pain of the event when she spoke with police just minutes after her 911 call. Vasquez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2875, 2011 WL 1458165 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 15 2011).

981. Based on the officer's account of the circumstances surrounding the victim's statement, a reasonable person could have concluded that she made the statement while still dominated by the emotion, fear, and pain of the startling event; the trial court did not abuse its discretion permitting the police officer to testify about the victim's statement under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Zuniga v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2266, 2011 WL 1157555 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 30 2011).

982. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a detective's testimony about the victim's statement because it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though one hour had passed between the crime and the statement, as the detective described the victim as very visibly shaken, very upset, scared, excited, and crying. Dixon v. State, 358 S.W.3d 250, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1745 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

983. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the victim's second 911 call as an excited utterance because the victim's voice was quivering and she sounded very upset, scared, and excited. Dixon v. State, 358 S.W.3d 250, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1745 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

984. When police officers responded to a domestic disturbance call at the residence of defendant and his wife, she told the officers that defendant had repeatedly struck her with a cane and held a gun to her head during an argument. At defendant's trial for assault, he did not question the admissibility of his wife's statements to an officer on the night of the incident, which appear to have been excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) and nontestimonial under Crawford. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 859, 2011 WL 350434 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 2 2011).

985. Where defendant had come through a now deceased individual's house, with a gun, looking for the victim, her hearsay statements were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because she was upset and scared, her voice was high-pitched, she was crying, and she was still under the influence of the resulting emotions when she called the victim. Dohnal v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 600, 2011 WL 319950 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

986. Victim was under the stress of excitement caused by the events, having been severely beaten and exposed to the environment; thus, his statement met the requirements of the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Dollery v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 352, 2011 WL 193493 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 19 2011).

987. Witness's statements qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the evidence supported an inference that the officer quickly responded to an emergency; when the officer first met with the witness, she was crying, shaking, nervous, and too scared to speak with the officer; after the officer hugged the witness and brought her outside, she finally confided that there was a man in her house that she wanted out as he was scaring her and selling drugs out of her house; when the officer and the witness approached her house, she was scared and agreed to allow the officer to help her only after coaxing; and she kept repeating defendant's name. Cadoree v. State, 331 S.W.3d 514, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2011).

988. During defendant's trial for sexual assault, the trial court admitted hearsay testimony from the complainant's friend as to details of her telephone conversation with the complainant as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); because defendant also explored the conversation and the complainant's emotional state during it on cross examination, defendant failed to preserve his hearsay objection for appellate review. Jennings v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10241, 2010 WL 5392684 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 29 2010).

989. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence statements the victim made to a police dispatcher as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because a prior threat to kill, combined with the knowledge that the threatening party had been recently released from custody, constituted an exciting event. Smith v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9419, 2010 WL 4878847 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 30 2010).

990. In an assault causing bodily injury to a family member case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01 and Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 71.005, the complainant's statements to two police officers were properly admitted as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because her statements were related to the startling event as she stated that defendant was upset because he could not find his keys and struck her in the face and choked her around the neck; only a short amount of time elapsed between the assault and when the statements were made to the officers; and the complainant was still under the stress of excitement caused by the assault and dominated by the emotions, fear, and pain of the event as the first officer testified that when the complainant stepped out of the bathroom and made her statements she was clearly upset, shaken, and crying and the second officer testified that after the complainant came out of the bathroom, she appeared very upset, she was crying, her shirt was stretched out a little bit, and she had a swollen bottom lip... Shannon v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9011, 2010 WL 4523766 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 10 2010).

991. Although defendant complained that the admission of a complainant's statement to a witness was an improper admission of hearsay evidence, in light of the evidence regarding the condition of the complainant at the time (weak, scared, bleeding, seriously injured from two gunshots to the abdomen, being driven away against her will by her assailant who had abused and abducted her on other occasions and threatened to kill her), the complained-of evidence was admissible under the excited utterance exception to hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Douglas v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8659, 2010 WL 4264541 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2010).

992. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the witness's sister's out-of-court statement was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the witness testified that: (1) she heard his sister banging on the kitchen window; (2) she saw her sister run through her bedroom and out the door; and (3) she saw defendant driving off just before her sister returned to tell her that defendant was peeping in her bedroom window. Coble v. State, 330 S.W.3d 253, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1297 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

993. In a murder trial, there was no error in admitting, as excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), testimony from a deceased witness's wife about his statements. It could not reasonably be disputed that the decedent's statement shortly after the murder related to a startling event, and the wife testified that the decedent was completely out of it, rambling, and really nervous and scared. Wells v. State, 319 S.W.3d 82, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2595 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 14 2010).

994. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court's decision to exclude evidence as hearsay was proper because the out of court statement made by defendant in the presence of the officers that the victim had lost her clothing in a game of cards did not possess the requisite level of reliability so as to remove it from the realm of contrivance and fabrication. The trial court could have reasonably concluded that, because the applicability of the excited utterance exception required it to first accept defendant's version of events as true, the statement was not sufficiently reliable to qualify as a hearsay exception. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

995. In a domestic assault case, the court properly admitted the victim's statement as an excited utterance because the victim's answer to a standard form provided by the officer said she would feel danger after the officer left. Based on those facts, which indicated that the victim might still then have been dominated by emotions when making her statements, the trial judge's discretionary decision was not so clearly wrong as to lie outside that zone within which reasonable persons might disagree. James v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8494, 2009 WL 3643554 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 5 2009).

996. State inmate convicted of raping a woman at knifepoint was not entitled to habeas relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254. A police officer's testimony about what the victim told him the day after the rape was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the victim was still very upset, crying, and traumatized at the time. Martin v. Thaler, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103733 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 5 2009).

997. During defendant's criminal trial for multiple counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child by contact, the trial court erred by admitting out of court statements that the complainant made to her physical education teacher; the statements were made a week after the police had received a referral from the complainant's school and after the complainant had discussed the events with her teacher, her counselor, representatives of child protective services, and medical personnel. The statements to the teacher were made about an upsetting series of events, but did not qualify as excited utterances as contemplated by Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Madden v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7084, 2009 WL 2857269 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 3 2009).

998. Because a witness's statements that three men had attacked her son and then ran toward a house were nontestimonial in nature, the trial court did not err in admitting that evidence as an excited utterance. Rios v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3444, 2009 WL 1406249 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 20 2009).

999. In a murder case, the court properly allowed testimony under the excited utterance exception because the witnesses' testimony indicated that the victim was bloody, in severe pain, and pleading for help when he made the statements to them; although the victim made the statements in response to general questions about what had happened, there was nothing to indicate that the witnesses asked the questions for any reason other than personal concern. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

1000. Trial court did not err by admitting the statement of the victim's injured girlfriend made to a police officer as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because she made the statement "he shot me" while she was bleeding from gunshot wounds at the crime scene. The shooting was a startling event or condition and the girlfriend was under the stress of excitement caused by the shooting. Clark v. State, 282 S.W.3d 924, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS

2431 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

1001. Trial court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony from a police officer during defendant's aggravated assault trial where the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2)'s excited-utterance hearsay exception because the evidence showed that the complainant (1) was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event or condition when he made the objected-to statements to the police officer, and (2) the statements resulted from impulse rather than reason and reflection. The fact that the complainant's statements were in the form of responses to questions did not make them inadmissible to the hearsay exception. Ramirez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 368, 2009 WL 1567340 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 22 2009).

1002. Trial court did not err by admitting a statement that defendant's mother gave to police over 3 hours after defendant shot and killed the mother's husband; this was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803, even though the statement was given over 3 hours after the incident, since the mother was dominated by fear and other emotions at the time. Jeffery v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5406 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2008).

1003. Child sexual abuse victim's statements to her cousin after watching a television program involving a man being aggressive with a woman were admissible under the excited utterances exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803, because the victim was bawling and trembling after the show and, at age 7, did not have time or resources to fabricate her comments. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

1004. Trial court's decision during defendant's trial for indecency with a child by exposure to admit the testimony of the initial responding police officer did not fall outside the zone of reasonable disagreement or constitute an abuse of discretion where the statement came under the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803; just prior to the subject testimony, the officer said that the complainant,aa 10-year-old girl, was very upset and crying at the time that he interviewed her. Mathre v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1123 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 14 2008).

1005. Trial court's decision during defendant's trial for indecency with a child by exposure to admit the testimony of the 10-year-old complainant's father did not fall outside the zone of reasonable disagreement or constitute an abuse of discretion where the statement came under the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803; according to the father, the complainant shook, her voice trembled, her face was red, she had an altered breathing pattern, she was crying, and she appeared generally traumatized when he spoke with her when he arrived at the place where the incident occurred after the incident. Mathre v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1123 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 14 2008).

1006. Law enforcement officer's factual observations of a DWI suspect, contemporaneously dictated on his patrol-car videotape, are not admissible as a present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. E. Evid. 803; an officer may testify in the courtroom to what he saw, did, heard, smelled, and felt at the scene, but he cannot substitute or augment his in-court testimony with an out-of-court oral narrative. Fischer v. State, 252 S.W.3d 375, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 5 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

1007. Appellate court's decision that the trooper's taped observations were not admissible as a present sense impression hearsay exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was affirmed because the evidence showed that the trooper calmly walked back and forth from his patrol car to defendant several times, and that he carefully and deliberately narrated the results of his DWI field tests and investigation; the trooper's statements were testimonial and reflective in nature, and they were the type of statements that were made for evidentiary use in a future criminal proceeding; therefore, they were not the sort of spontaneous, unreflective, contemporaneous present sense impression statements that qualified for admission. Fischer v. State, 252 S.W.3d 375, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 5 (Tex.

Crim. App. 2008).

1008. In a murder trial, there was no error in admitting, as excited utterances, out-of-court statements regarding defendant's alleged threats against the victim; the declarant was present when defendant shot the victim, was screaming hysterically when the testifying officer arrived, sobbed and cried while trying to tell the officer what had happened, and never completely calmed down during questioning at the scene. Kearse v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9828 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 19 2007).

1009. Defendant's conviction for unlawful restraint was appropriate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim made the out-of-court statement to the police officer when she was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the attack; thus, the officer's testimony regarding what the victim said was admissible as an excited utterance. Cooper v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9536 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 6 2007).

1010. In a murder trial, there was no hearsay error in admitting the victim's statement to a friend that the defendant was chasing the victim because the statement was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the testimony showed that the victim was still dominated by the emotions of being chased and bumped by defendant when the victim arrived at the friend's home at 4 a.m., acting scared, weird, and paranoid. Mims v. State, 238 S.W.3d 867, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8534 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

1011. Witness's testimony of a conversation she had with the victim, defendant's wife, before the crime, when the victim was highly upset and crying, was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803, plus defendant admitted that the statements were cumulative, and thus any error was harmless; because the statements related to the nature of the relationship between defendant and his wife, the statements were relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and as they were not merely an attack on defendant's character, the trial court therefore did not err in overruling defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection. Garcia v. State, 246 S.W.3d 121, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8051 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 949, 129 S. Ct. 404, 172 L. Ed. 2d 295, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7457 (2008).

1012. In a murder case, testimony concerning defendant's statement that someone had tried to assault him was not admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the witness testified that defendant did not appear to be scared, nervous, or excited. Hager v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8120 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 10 2007).

1013. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, there was no error in admitting the statement of a 911 caller whom officers called back because the statement was properly found to be an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; at the time of the statement, defendant had not been apprehended, and an officer testified that the caller sounded upset. Jarrell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6357 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

1014. During defendant's trial for aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 803 in admitting a witness's statement regarding excited utterances made by the victim; the victim was described by the witness as crying hysterically, absolutely terrified, unable to breathe, and shaking hysterically immediately after the occurrence. Minos v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6394 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2007).

1015. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 801, in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to the police as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the officer stated that the complainant was very excited, very nervous, almost to the point where the complainant's nervousness made the officer nervous; further, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the sexual assault occurred within the past few hours, supporting the admission. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

1016. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error in admitting the complainant's out-of-court statement to a relative as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although the relative described the complainant's demeanor as absolutely flat and without emotion, the relative further explained that the complainant was beyond upset, just absolutely flat and in shock about what had just happened. Farmer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 31 2007).

1017. Where the police officer responded to a call about a disturbance, he spoke to the assault victim and noticed that she was very upset; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting her statements to the officer under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803; the victim was still dominated by the excitement of the event when she spoke with police. Victoria v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5853 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 25 2007).

1018. Trial court would not have committed error in overruling, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, an objection to the victim's statement to an officer on the basis of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the trial court could have found that the victim was dominated by the emotions and fear of the event at the time she gave the statement and thus it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Austin July 18 2007).

1019. In a murder case, defendant's confrontation rights under the Sixth Amendment were not violated by the introduction of a friend's testimony that the victim came to his house in the middle of the night stating that defendant was chasing him and bumping his car; the statements were not hearsay either since an exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803 applied due to the fact that the victim was still dominated by the fear of the event at the time the statements were made. Mims v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

1020. Child's identification of defendant as the perpetrator of a rape was properly admitted into evidence as an excited utterance because the startling event was not the rape, which had occurred the day before the statement, but the fact that the victim's mother attacked defendant when he returned to the house the next day. Sanchez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5277 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 6 2007).

1021. Where defendant was tried for two counts of indecency with a child and two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child by penetration, the trial court did not err by admitting testimony from the complainant's grandmother relating a statement the complainant made about defendant "tickling" her and pulling up her blouse; the complainant's statement met all the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803, as it was made while the complainant was in the grip of fear and without time for reflection; because the statement was not testimonial, the admission of the complainant's statement did not violate the Confrontation Clause even though defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine her. McCarty v. State, 227 S.W.3d 415, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4604 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

1022. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 applicable to a statement made by the victim to the investigating officer approximately 20 to 30 minutes after the incident, while the victim was visibly shaking, pacing, and obviously upset. Ollie v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2767 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2007).

1023. In an aggravated assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to proffer a hearsay objection to the victim's written statement and testimony by a nurse regarding the victim's description of the assault because the record showed that counsel did in fact object to hearsay; moreover, the statement reasonably could be viewed as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because of the victim's emotional state, and because it was cumulative of the nurse's testimony, any error in failing to request a limiting instruction as to the nurse's testimony was harmless. Green v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2381 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 28 2007).

1024. Domestic violence victim's statements to her mother, made when the victim was frightened and crying, were properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Ashford v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 946 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 8 2007).

1025. In a sexual abuse case, testimony from a victim's friend regarding the victim's act of telling her about the abuse was admissible as an excited utterance, even though the abuse had been going on for several years; the evidence showed that the victim made the statement to the friend one day after her brother thought he saw defendant watching the victim shower; the victim then felt as if she could tell someone about the abuse. Luna v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 617 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 30 2007).

1026. Trial court did not err by admitting a detective's testimony recounting statements the victim made to him shortly after the robbery under the excited utterance hearsay exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because an officer who spoke to the victim prior to the interview, stated that she was a little bit distraught and visibly shaken but had begun to calm down. The detective testified that he spoke with the victim 45 to 50 minutes after the robbery and she was still visibly shaken and upset, and looked like she had been crying. Young v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11371 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 21 2006).

1027. In a murder trial, the trial court allowed a detective to testify that the victim's mother stated the defendant's name when she learned that her daughter had died from a stab wound; the statement was admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, because the victim's mother was in the midst of a very violent outburst and did not appreciate the fact that the officers were collecting evidence for a criminal prosecution. Cantu v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8738 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 11 2006).

1028. In federal habeas proceedings, a state prisoner did not make a substantial showing of the denial of his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation by the district court's admission of an accomplice's statement implicating the prisoner as the perpetrator of a murder as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the remarks were blurted out after the accomplice fled a routine traffic stop, was chased by police officers, and was apprehended while officers were inventorying weapons found in his vehicle. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 23173 (5th Cir. Tex. Sept. 11 2006).

1029. Because defendant's wife testified, admitting making certain statements, and was given the opportunity to explain them, the admission of her out-of-court statements under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) did not implicate defendant's right of confrontation under U.S. Const. amend. VI. Mitchell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7584 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 25 2006).

1030. In a case in which a police officer and a victim services counselor for the police department testified, over defendant's hearsay objection, that the complainant said in Spanish that she had been assaulted by defendant, who she described as her boyfriend, in the apartment they shared, the trial court could reasonably find, pursuant to the excited utterance exception, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), that the complainant's statements related to a startling event, namely an assault against her by defendant, and that she made her statements to the police while under the physical and emotional stress of excitement caused by the assault where the counselor testified that, in her opinion, the complainant's demeanor was "appropriate" for a woman who had been assaulted, and where defendant cited no evidence that the complainant had any selfish reason to accuse him of assaulting her, and the appellate court would not assume such a motivation on a silent record. Vargas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7078 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 11 2006).

1031. In a prosecution for assault on a household member and interfering with an emergency telephone call, the complainant's statements to an officer who was responding to a 911 were properly admitted as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant was described as visibly shaken, excited, scared, recently injured, and bloody; only 10 to 15 minutes had elapsed from the time of the initial 911 call. Vinson v. State, 221 S.W.3d 256, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7036 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

1032. Murder victim's statement identifying defendant as her attacker qualified as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the victim, who made the statement only moments after she was taken away from the scene of the attack, was still dominated by the emotion, excitement, horror, and pain of the event when she made the statement. Nethery v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6761 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2006).

1033. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, the trial court properly admitted a tape of the 911 call made by a witness; there was no error in the ruling that the statements were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because a custodian of 911 records for the sheriff's department testified that the witness sounded agitated during the call, and a deputy who saw the witness a few minutes later testified that the witness was very upset and spoke fast. Cook v. State, 199 S.W.3d 495, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6431 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

1034. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

1035. In a murder trial, it was proper to exclude a statement by a deceased witness to police that the victim had a knife in his hand when defendant shot him. There was no evidence that if such a statement was made, it was made while the witness was under the stress of excitement caused by the event, as required for admission under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

1036. In a murder trial, there was no violation of the confrontation clause when the trial court admitted, as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), evidence of a statement by the victim to his mother that defendant had just threatened to kill him. The statement was not testimonial. Hartless v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5066 (Tex. App. Tyler June 14 2006).

1037. Testimony in an aggravated assault trial that the victim stated that defendant had beaten her was properly admitted because the witness found the victim bloodied and upset; thus, the statement related to the startling event under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Fertic v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4685 (Tex. App. El Paso June 1 2006).

1038. In a juvenile delinquency proceeding, the mother's testimony recounting the nine-year-old victim's outcry to her about the assault was admissible under the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule; the State was not required to comply with Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 54.031. In re M.A.M., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3826 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 5 2006).

1039. Statements from the daughter of a murder victim made to her father just shortly after witnessing a murder were admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Wilson v. State, 195 S.W.3d 193, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 815 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

1040. Confrontation Clause was violated by the admission of an assault victim's out-of court statements made during a hospital interview by a deputy because a reasonable person in the victim's shoes would have had the capacity to make a testimonial statement and would have been aware that he was being interviewed as part of a criminal investigation; the statement's qualification as an excited utterance did not alter its testimonial nature. Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1041. Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas rejects any per se or categorical approach in determining whether excited utterances may or may not be classified as testimonial hearsay; the excited utterance inquiry focuses on whether the declarant was under the stress of a startling event, while the testimonial hearsay inquiry focuses on whether a reasonable declarant, similarly situated (that is, excited by the stress of a startling event), would have had the capacity to appreciate the legal ramifications of her statement. Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1042. In defendant's robbery case, a court properly admitted the complainant's hearsay testimony as an excited utterance where a neighbor testified that when the complainant came to his apartment, she was crying and still partially bound by the wire used by her attacker, and seemed "pretty upset." Considering the complainant's shaken and excited demeanor when she spoke with the neighbor, reasonable people could conclude that the complainant was dominated by the emotions of the event when speaking with him although 30 minutes had passed since the crime. Campos v. State, 186 S.W.3d 93, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9814 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

1043. In a trial for family assault, testimony concerning the complainant's statements was properly admitted as excited utterance; the complainant was visibly shaken and highly upset and her intoxication did not negate her state of excitement. Hudson v. State, 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1044. In defendant's assault case, a court properly admitted the victim's hearsay testimony as an excited utterance where the witness testified that the victim was extremely agitated when officers arrived at the scene and she was so upset that officers initially could not understand her. The State's attorney repeatedly asked whether the alleged assault caused the victim's excited state and whether she was still under the stress of that exciting event when she was describing what occurred; only after the officer affirmatively answered those questions did the trial court allow the officer to testify about what the victim actually said. Bufkin v. State, 179 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1045. In a trial for assault on a family member, the complainant's statement to officers and an emergency medical technician was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. The complainant's intoxication did not call into question whether her mind was dominated by a state of excitement; the three witnesses testified that she was visibly shaken and highly upset when they arrived within five minutes of receiving the assault call. Hudson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 8 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 731, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9577 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1046. During defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in admitting under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the complainant's out-of-court statement to the first officer on the scene that defendant tried to take his money where the complainant expressly testified that he was in a fair amount of pain at the time he made the statement to the officer, and paramedics were assessing his condition after he had been shot and hit on the head with a gun, which clearly established that he was still dominated by the pain of the shooting when he made the statement. In addition, the statement occurred only a short time after the shooting. Moore v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 4 2005).

1047. Outcry statement by a child sexual assault victim did not quality as an excited utterance because the statement was made almost two years after the first assault. The court rejected the argument that the "startling event" was a revelation made to the victim just prior to the outcry by her father's girlfriend because the testimony indicated that the victim considered how and what to reveal about the assault several months before she made her outcry to her father's girlfriend. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 25 2005).

1048. In a trial for unlawfully carrying a handgun, the trial court properly admitted an officer's testimony about a witness's statement that defendant approached the car she was occupying, demanded that it be moved, and partially removed a gun from his pocket. The statement was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though the record did not reflect how much time passed after the confrontation, because the officer testified that the witness was very upset and was crying. Spielman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3854 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 19 2005).

1049. In a proceeding relating to defendant's threats to kill his ex-wife, the ex-wife's statement to police was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Defendant's loading a shotgun and issuing threats was startling enough to produce a state of nervous excitement, and only 10 to 20 minutes elapsed between the threats and the ex-wife's first statement, at which time she was scared, had been crying, and was shaking all over. Champion v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3733 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2005).

1050. The Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourteenth District, Houston declines to join those courts that have established a bright-line rule that excited utterances can never be testimonial because the fact that a statement is an excited utterance as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is only one factor that can be considered when determining whether the statement is testimonial for purposes of analyzing a Confrontation Clause claim. Texas courts have held that a declarant's state of excitement can last long after the initial crime and that excited utterances can be made both spontaneously and in response to questioning, therefore each situation should be analyzed individually. Spencer v. State, 162 S.W.3d 877, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3162 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1051. In an assault trial, the victim's statement to police, which she made when they responded to a 911 call from a third person, was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802. The victim was extremely agitated when officers arrived at the scene and was so upset that officers initially could not understand her. Bufkin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 179 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1052. When trial court admitted defendant's daughter's statements to a police officer about defendant's alleged sexual assault, the statements were admitted in error under the excited utterance rule. Although the daughter was visibly upset, the incident had allegedly taken place 5 years earlier; nevertheless, the error was harmless. Barnes v. State, 165 S.W.3d 75, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

1053. Although a court erred by admitting an officer's statement as an excited utterance because the victim's statements were not spontaneous, the error was harmless because the officer's testimony was cumulative of eyewitness testimony that implicated defendant in the assault. Oveal v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 164 S.W.3d 735, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3517 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1054. In an assault case, a court did not err by admitting the victim's statements to her aunt as excited utterances where the victim was lying on the couch crying, she looked scared, and she "seemed kind of out of it." The aunt further testified that the victim appeared to be suffering under the stress or excitement caused by the event, she had visible injuries, and the apartment was ransacked. Oveal v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 164 S.W.3d 735, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3517 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

1055. Trial court's admission of the testimony by a rape counselor about a prior victim of sexual assault was admissible as the prior victim was still extremely upset when she made the statements to the counselor. Reyna v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1663 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 2 2005).

1056. In a sexual assault trial, the complainant's statement to police was properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). The complainant had run into a store crying, shaking, and screaming that she had just been raped at gunpoint by two men in a van and needed help; the police were called within three to four minutes and arrived approximately five minutes later, when she was still under the influence of the trauma she just experienced and appeared to be in shock. Ascencio v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1449 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

1057. Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to ask the trial court for a limiting instruction regarding the admission of an alleged assault victim's statements to officers because they were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) where the victim called 911 and the victim was distraught when they arrived. Alli v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 24 2005).

1058. Each case that involves a period of unconsciousness between the time of a startling event and a statement must be reviewed in light of the facts and circumstances of the case to determine whether the statement is admissible as an excited utterance. The declarant need not necessarily have been unconscious for the entire period between the startling event and the statement, so long as the record supports the reasonable conclusion that the declarant did not have a meaningful opportunity to reflect. Apolinar v. State, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1059. In a trial for aggravated robbery, a statement made by the victim four days after the attack was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the victim was unconscious for part of the four days and, based on the circumstances, it was reasonable to conclude that he had no meaningful opportunity to reflect. The record supported findings that between the stabbing and his surgery, the victim was still in shock, that he was then unconscious until the time that he made the statement, and that at the time of the statement he was animated, angry, and excited. Apolinar v. State, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1060. In an assault case, statements made by defendant's girlfriend to a police officer at the scene and on videotape about an hour after an alleged assault were admissible as excited utterances because they met the element of spontaneity. Mumphrey v. State, 155 S.W.3d 651, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 370 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1061. In a murder trial, the trial court properly admitted, under the excited utterance exception, a hearsay statement that the declarant could not believe defendant had shot someone, even though the State did not establish the exact amount of time that elapsed between the shooting and the statement, because the approximate length of time was only a few hours. The statement itself supported a conclusion that the declarant witnessed the shooting. The startling occurrence could have been acquiring knowledge that defendant killed someone. Ross v. State, 154 S.W.3d 804, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11407 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

1062. Trial court did not err in admitting an officer's statement that the victim had told him that defendant had helped others kidnap him. At the time the victim made the statement he had not yet received treatment for his three gunshot wounds and the officer believed the victim was going to die, and the statement was admissible as a statement relating to startling event made immediately thereafter. Jarrett v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10397 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 18 2004).

1063. Defendant maintained the trial court erred in his trial for murder in excluding statements; defendant claimed that the statements were admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Nevertheless, when the witness's statement was taken at the police department an hour after the incident, the witness was no longer excited. Palacios v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9912 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 10 2004).

1064. Statements did not fall within the excited utterance hearsay exception because the speaker, although angry, was not dominated by emotions, and he made his statements in response to an officer's questions, not spontaneously. The admission did not affect defendant's substantial rights, however, because the evidence was cumulative and other evidence overwhelmingly supported the conviction for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Reyes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9717 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 3 2004).

1065. In a criminal prosecution for two counts of burglary of a habitation, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit an out-of-court statement of the complainant's wife as an excited utterance; there was no showing by defendant that the declarant's statement, if made, was made while she was excited or in the grip of a shocking event. Kesaria v. State, 148 S.W.3d 634, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9396 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004), affirmed by 189 S.W.3d 279, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 680 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1066. Even if testimony from the mother of a child victim was not within the outcry hearsay exception, it was admissible as excited utterance. McDonald v. State, 148 S.W.3d 598, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004), aff'd, 179 S.W.3d 571, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2010 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005). no pet.

1067. Sixth Amendment was violated by the admission of a victim's statement, which was taken by police at the hospital, as excited utterance because the statement was "testimonial" as a matter of law; the error, however, was harmless. Because defendant did not brief his claims separately, the court assumed that defendant claimed no greater protection under the state constitution than that provided by the federal constitution. Wall v. State, 143 S.W.3d 846, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7467 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004), affirmed by 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1068. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court properly admitted the complainant's "excited utterances" to her aunt and the investigating officer where both the officer and the aunt spoke to the complainant shortly after the assault, she had visible injuries, and she was scared. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

1069. Court should consider whether a statement is in response to a question when determining whether a hearsay statement qualifies as an excited utterance, but this factor is not dispositive as it is only one factor to be considered. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

1070. Murder victim's statements while crying that she had seen guns in a car outside was admissible as a present sense impression under Tex. R. Evid 803(1), and her statement that she was going to be killed by the people outside and her writing of those peoples' names on paper were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Cantu v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6049 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 8 2004).

1071. Defendant argued that the trial court erred in excluding an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) where, during the direct examination of a witness's uncle, the uncle testified that when the witness returned to the party after the shooting, he was crying and hysterical, and stated that he had been robbed; even if a statement might qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule, the burden was on the proponent of the evidence to invoke the exception and satisfy its requirements, and defendant failed to proffer the out-of-court statement as an exception to the hearsay rule and therefore did not meet his burden to establish the admissibility of the statement. Borner v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5220 (Tex. App. Dallas June 15 2004).

1072. Where arresting officer testified, over a hearsay objection, that the complainant told him that defendant entered her residence through a sliding glass door, the evidence was properly admitted as an excited utterance. The officer testified that the complainant, was "very, very nervous" and "very much shook up by the ordeal that went on that night," she was "crying profusely and trying to tell the officer what happened in between sobs"; she was very upset and very excited. Gamble v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

1073. Excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule justified the admission of testimony that the declarant, a murder victim, had told the witness that he was afraid of the defendant; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the victim was under the influence of a startling event. Headley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

1074. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a police officer to testify to remarks made by the complainant in a domestic assault case where the trial court admitted the testimony under the excited utterance exception; trial court could have reasonably determined the complainant was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the altercation when making the statements of which the officer testified. Eck v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4735 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 27 2004).

1075. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting an officer to testify about a witness's statements because the record supported a finding that the witness, who was a friend of the victim, was still dominated by the emotions and fear of the event as the officer, who arrived only six to eleven minutes after being dispatched to the scene, testified that the victim was upset, excited, and nervous and was running around yelling that his friend had just been shot. Reyes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4776 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 27 2004).

1076. Trial court properly convicted defendant of aggravated assault where the trial court correctly treated the interpreter as a language conduit who did not add an additional level of hearsay, and the victim's statements were excited utterances pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Cassidy v. State, 149 S.W.3d 712, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4519 (Tex. App. Austin 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 925, 125 S. Ct. 1648, 161 L. Ed. 2d 486, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2531, 73 U.S.L.W. 3555 (2005), criticized by Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006), criticized by Wall v. State, 143 S.W.3d 846, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7467 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

1077. Trial court properly convicted defendant of aggravated assault where the trial court correctly treated the interpreter as a language conduit who did not add an additional level of hearsay, and the victim's statements were excited utterances pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Cassidy v. State, 149 S.W.3d 712, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4519 (Tex. App. Austin 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 925, 125 S. Ct. 1648, 161 L. Ed. 2d 486, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2531, 73 U.S.L.W. 3555 (2005), criticized by Wall v. State, 184 S.W.3d 730, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 16 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006), criticized by Wall v. State, 143 S.W.3d 846, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7467 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

1078. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding a telephone call where the statements made by the victim to her mother met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, being assaulted, the victim was still crying and visibly upset when officers arrived, and all of her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. In addition, the statements made by the victim's mother to the victim's father also met the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because they were the result of a startling occurrence, receiving a telephone call from her daughter that she was being assaulted, the evidence indicated that the mother was was crying, and upset as a result of receiving the telephone call, and her statements were related to the circumstances of the occurrence. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

1079. In the sentencing phase of a sexual assault trial, witness's testimony about a friend's statement that defendant had put his hand in her pants, was admissible as an excited utterance where the touching occurred the prior evening, the actions startled the declarant, and she was still dominated by the emotions. Mass v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2551 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 24 2004).

1080. In the sentencing phase of a sexual assault trial, witness's testimony about a friend's statement that defendant had put his hand in her pants, was admissible as an excited utterance where the touching occurred the prior evening, the actions startled the declarant, and she was still dominated by the emotions. Mass v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2551 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 24 2004).

1081. In a domestic abuse case, a wife's oral statement to police and a 911 call for help were properly admitted into evidence as excited utterances because the wife was upset, crying, and in pain when the statements were made, and a trial court was not required to make an independent finding of reliability before admitting the statements under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Dettmer v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 389 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 15 2004).

1082. In a case where defendant was convicted of forgery of one of the victim's stolen checks, although 1 1/2 hours to 2 1/2 hours had passed since the intruders left and the victim's daughter spoke with the victim, the victim was upset, weeping, and traumatized by the events and was worried that the intruders would wipe out her account; thus, the daughter's testimony regarding the mother's statements that her checks were stolen were an excited utterance pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the hearsay statements under the excited utterance exception. Kendig v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10803 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 30 2003).

1083. Counsel was not required to object to a hearsay statement of the complainant admitted through the testimony of a police officer during a criminal trial for aggravated assault; the statement was more than likely an excited utterance admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Mathis v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9987 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 24 2003).

1084. Where the victim did not disclose until she was 18 years of age that defendant fathered her son when she was 12 years of age, the victim's belated outcry statement did not qualify as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); while the original assault was undoubtedly shocking, the record did not reflect that defendant was still, six years later, dominated by the excited state produced by the attack. Harvey v. State, 123 S.W.3d 623, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9837 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

1085. Defendant's claim that the trial court committed reversible error by admitting into evidence the complainant's hearsay statements through an outcry witness was upheld as the statements in question were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) as an excited utterance where the interviews were conducted over a four to six hour period, some of the statements were in response to questions, the narration was inherently reflective, and it was impossible to conclude that the statements were made without opportunity for reflection or deliberation. Hughes v. State, 128 S.W.3d 247, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Tyler 2003).

1086. Where a trial court erroneously admitted statements that were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) as spontaneous statements, the State filed to comply with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, which would have prevented introduction of statements of outcry witnesses; the admission of the hearsay evidence probably had an injurious influence on the jury's deliberation and therefore affected a substantial right of defendant, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, such that reversal and remand for a new trial was warranted. Hughes v. State, 128 S.W.3d 247, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Tyler 2003).

1087. Excited utterance exception has three requirements: (1) an exciting event must have occurred; (2) the statement must have been a spontaneous reaction to the event; and (3) the statement must relate to the event. The purpose of the relationship requirement is to ensure that the statement is truly spontaneous and not the result of reflection, which could inject such factors as self-interest, anger, or vindictiveness into the utterance; that purpose is not fulfilled if the statement is not related to the startling event. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1088. Single most critical factor in evaluating an excited utterance as an exception to hearsay is whether the declarant made the statement while dominated by the emotion of the startling event or condition. While the time lapse between the startling event and the statement is not dispositive, it is the lack of opportunity to reflect or fabricate details that gives the exception its reliability; thus, the declarant's excitement must be continuous between the event itself and the making of the statement. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1089. In evaluating an excited utterance as an exception to hearsay, while the declarant's excitement is ordinarily continuous between the event itself and the making of the statement, it is too strong to say that the excitement must always be continuous. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1090. Statement of robbery victim, made four days after he was stabbed and robbed, was admissible as an excited utterance because the victim was in surgery, unconscious, heavily medicated, or incoherent for the intervening four days and made his excited utterance the very day that he awoke; the victim did not have the opportunity to fabricate his statement. Apolinar v. State, 106 S.W.3d 407, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 4370 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2003), aff'd, 155 S.W.3d 184, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 145 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

1091. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a family member to testify regarding a sister's statement that defendant assaulted her, despite the fact that the statement was made more than 20 hours after the event took place where the statement was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the sister was still under stress and had not been previously separated from defendant when the statement was made. Zuliani v. State, 97 S.W.3d 589, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 26 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), criticized by Zuniga v. State, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2014 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 21, 2004), criticized by Denman v. State, 193 S.W.3d 129, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2003 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

1092. Question of whether or not utterances factually meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is within the discretion of the trial court. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

1093. The critical factor in determining when a statement is an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is whether the declarant was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

1094. Pursuant to the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the spontaneity of the statements cannot be measured by the expectations of the listener, as only the speaker's perspective is important in determining spontaneity. Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

1095. In a sexual assault of a child case, the 14-year-old victim's statements to the victim's mother comprised a reflective, narrative account of past events and were made in response to direct, specific questions that were calculated to elicit the type of responses given, even though the contents of the responses were unanticipated, and thus, although the victim might have been upset when the victim made the statements, the statements did not fall within the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), since the appellate court could not say that the statements were spontaneous and unreflecting, or made without the opportunity to contrive or misrepresent. Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

1096. Where an assault victim, defendant's common law wife, was still in the emotional grip of the assault when she made her statements to the responding officer, so that her out-of-court statements, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), fell under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, but she did not testify, and there was no showing the victim was not available to testify, admission of her statements violated appellant's constitutional right of confrontation. Johnson v. State, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 6689 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 4 2000), criticized by Hudson v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8270 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13, 2001).

1097. Husband's statement made 30 minutes after the assault occurred while he was under the stress or excitement of some startling event or condition was properly admitted as an excited utterance pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) where the police officer testified that the husband was very upset and under the stress or excitement of the assault. Woods v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5196 (Tex. App. Dallas June 14 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Elements

1098. Defendant lost any constitutional right to confront his mother in court when he killed her; the admission of the evidence that defendant argued should have been excluded did not contribute to his conviction or sentence and was otherwise harmless as the unchallenged evidence supporting the elements of the offense of capital murder was overwhelming. Samuelson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9222, 2014 WL 4179440 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 21 2014).

1099. Prior to calling a detective, a witness heard defendant say that he had strangled a woman, after which he demonstrated how, and thus the record reasonably showed that the witness was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement of the event when she spoke to the detective, for excited utterance purposes, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Owens v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6214, 2014 WL 2568483 (Tex. App. Dallas June 9 2014).

1100. Victim's disclosure of the sexual assault to her cousin did not qualify as an excited utterance because the record did not support that the victim was still, three or four months later, dominated by the excited state produced by the attack. Nor did the record reflect that the mention of defendant's name was the type of startling or shocking event contemplated by the rule. Sandoval v. State, 409 S.W.3d 259, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11657 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 13 2013).

1101. In a prosecution for aggravated kidnapping, an officer's testimony that the victim said she felt terrorized and feared she was going to be raped was admissible as an excited utterance, as it was made a few minutes after the incident and the officer testified that the victim was distraught and hysterical. Mason v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10853 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 28 2013).

1102. Victim's statement that he just got stabbed was shortly after the attack, while he was still in the store's parking lot, and although it was a response to a witness's question, nothing suggested that it was a calculated response; the audio recording of the victim's 911 call corroborated his testimony that he was still dominated by the emotions of the stabbing when he made the statement, which qualified as an excited utterance. Law v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8753 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 16 2013).

1103. Statement was not testimonial and instead it appeared to have been an excited utterance made to a co-worker; the statement explained why a witness seemed startled by whatever she had heard and why she appeared nervous and paced the room, and the trial court did not err in admitting the statement as an excited utterance. Skief v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6274 (Tex. App. Dallas May 21 2013).

1104. For excited utterance purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), although it was not clear how much time had elapsed, the statement took place while a search was in progress and while the witness was angry, yelling, and agitated, and thus the decision to admit the statement was not unreasonable. Edmondson v. State, 399 S.W.3d 607, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3156, 2013 WL 1154210 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 21 2013).

1105. Object of a search was drugs, a witness was arrested for drug possession, and appellant had brought crack and Xanax to the witness's home the night before, such that it was reasonable for the trial court to find that the witness's statement related to either the search or the events of the previous night, for excited utterance purposes. Edmondson v. State, 399 S.W.3d 607, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3156, 2013 WL 1154210 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 21 2013).

1106. Trial court could consider a detective's testimony that a witness was crying and hysterical, had a high-pitched voice, and was mumbling about appellant letting her take the fall, and this, combined with the witness's statement, supported a finding that a search at the witness's house for drugs and her arrest and transport in a raid van were events that were startling, and the court could not say that the trial court's decision to admit the statements as an excited utterance constituted an abuse of discretion. Edmondson v. State, 399 S.W.3d 607, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3156, 2013 WL 1154210 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 21 2013).

1107. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), the record reasonably showed that the statement was made by the complainant shortly after she had been sexually assaulted and she was still dominated by the fear, emotions, and/or pain of the incident when she spoke, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling appellant's hearsay objection. Herrera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8411, 2012 WL 4748203 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 5 2012).

1108. Because the victim made the statement to the witness that she was trying to be forced to do something that she did not want to do after exerting considerable energy to free herself from defendant's trunk, running towards lights, and banging on the doors of three houses with her hands still tied, the witness's testimony was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Mcwilliams v. State, 367 S.W.3d 817, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3153, 2012 WL 1406463 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 24 2012).

1109. Appellant sought admission of a videotape, claiming his statements to a deputy were excited utterances for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), but it was hard for the court to tell whether what was on the videotape was just appellant's normal speaking pattern or whether he was angry or excited, and evidence of an excited emotional state alone did not qualify a statement as an excited utterance. Dyke v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2181, 2012 WL 954625 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 21 2012).

1110. Trial court did not err in excluding a videotape of appellant's statements as excited utterances; the court found that about less than 30 minutes elapsed between the shooting and the statements, appellant volunteered many of his statements before he was questioned, and appellant's statements were self-serving, as the trial court could have found the statements as appellant's attempt to present officers with a self-defense argument. Dyke v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2181, 2012 WL 954625 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 21 2012).

1111. Officer's testimony about what the complainants told him immediately after he arrived at the apartment was admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule in Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the officer testified that the complainants were very scared, excited, anxious, and crying. Oliva v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 5428965 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2011).

1112. Witness's challenged testimony fell under the excited utterance exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), given that (1) the victim called the witness immediately after the altercation with appellant, (2) the victim was still dominated by the fear and pain of the fight, as shown by her being upset and asking the witness to come get her, and (3) the record did not show decedent's statements were self-serving. Sanders v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3673, 2011 WL 1843508 (Tex. App. Dallas May 16 2011).

1113. Where defendant had come through a now deceased individual's house, with a gun, looking for the victim, her hearsay statements were admissible as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because she was upset and scared, her voice was high-pitched, she was crying, and she was still under the influence of the resulting emotions when she called the victim. Dohnal v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 600, 2011 WL 319950 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

1114. Witness's statements qualified as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the evidence supported an inference that the officer quickly responded to an emergency; when the officer first met with the witness, she was crying, shaking, nervous, and too scared to speak with the officer; after the officer hugged the witness and brought her outside, she finally confided that there was a man in her house that she wanted out as he was scaring her and selling drugs out of her house; when the officer and the witness approached her house, she was scared and agreed to allow the officer to help her only after coaxing; and she kept repeating defendant's name. Cadoree v. State, 331 S.W.3d 514, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2011).

1115. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the witness's sister's out-of-court statement was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because the witness testified that: (1) she heard his sister banging on the kitchen window; (2) she saw her sister run through her bedroom and out the door; and (3) she saw defendant driving off just before her sister returned to tell her that defendant was peeping in her bedroom window. Coble v. State, 330 S.W.3d 253, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1297 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1116. Trial court did not err by excluding from evidence written witness statements attached to an officer's accident report because the construction workers' statements were hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) and they did not fall under the excited utterance exception, as the record did not indicate how much time elapsed between the accident and the statements or demonstrate the demeanor of the workers at the time of the statements. Sherbin v. Dean Word Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5362, 2010 WL 2698761 (Tex. App. Austin July 9 2010).

1117. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that the victim's statement that she was scared, uttered to another while the victim was crying and defendant was mad and throwing a fit, was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because defendant was acting angry and violent at the time of the declaration; the trial court could have also reasonably found that the victim's other statements showed that her state of mind was fearful of defendant, for purposes of Rule 803(3), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting these statements. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1118. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), an officer's response to an emergency call could be assumed to have been short, plus the victim was still bleeding from her injuries when she spoke to the officer, and this suggested that the victim's statement was still dominated by the excitement and emotions of the event despite the time lapse between the statement and the event. Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8787, 2009 WL 3805850 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

1119. At no point was the victim separated from defendant and an officer stated that the victim was crying and scared when she said defendant had assaulted her, such that the victim's demeanor was consistent with a person still under the stress of excitement of the event. Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8787, 2009 WL 3805850 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

1120. There was no indication that an officer was attempting to direct the victim's statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), which supported the admission of the statement as an excited utterance. Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8787, 2009 WL 3805850 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

1121. Victim's statement was not self-serving, given that she was in fear and not motivated by revenge, and given this and the other factors, the court could have found that the out of court statement was an excited utterance and unlikely fabricated. Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8787, 2009 WL 3805850 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

1122. In a burglary trial, a statement by a five year old declarant was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), despite a lapse of several days between the burglary and the statement, because the declarant was very upset after seeing an officer investigating a property, asked if a five-year-old child could go to jail, and confessed to being present at on the property when defendant entered into and damaged the property. In re D.A.A., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6126, 2009 WL 2397333 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 6 2009).

1123. Trial court did not err in admitting a witness's statements under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), given that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that the witness's wife was still dominated by the excitement and fear caused by her abduction; the time lapse of 30 minutes between the abduction and the witness's conversation with his wife was not lengthy, and the witness did not indicate that he questioned his wife during their conversation, nor was there anything self-serving about her description of the crime. Newton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5686, 2009 WL 2196118 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2009).

1124. Evidence showed that a frail, 80-year-old woman, who was recovering from heart surgery and needed help at all times, learned that someone had taken money out of her account and that her caretaker, defendant, could be the responsible party, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a bank employee's testimony about the woman's statements under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); even if the trial court erred in overruling the hearsay objection, any such error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the statements were corroborated and also cumulative and the case against defendant for theft of an elderly individual and debit card abuse was very strong. Arriaga v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5408, 2009 WL 2045220 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 15 2009).

1125. Trial court heard testimony indicating that the victim was afraid of defendant and that he had threatened her and that she knew he would eventually kill her, and each time when the victim talked about the threats by defendant, she appeared upset, visible shaken, crying, and distressed, such that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event of being threatened and the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); even if the trial court erred in admitting the evidence, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as there was testimony that the victim was fearful of defendant and a psychologist testified that the threats by defendant against the victim were part of their relationship. Akeredolu v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4112, 2009 WL 1609372 (Tex. App. El Paso June 10 2009).

1126. Trial court did not act outside the zone of reasonable disagreement by overruling defendant's hearsay objection to an officer recitation of the victim's hearsay statement that defendant had gotten angry and pushed her into a wall and by admitting it as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); when the officer responded to the victim's 911 case, he found her clearly upset and it was a reasonable inference that 911 response time was fairly quick. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

1127. Although the trial court did not explicitly find that the statement was an excited utterance, as the trial court gave no basis for its overruling of defendant's objection, the court nevertheless upheld the trial court's ruling on an evidentiary matter if it was correct on any theory of law applicable to the case. Davis v. State, 268 S.W.3d 683, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6566 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

1128. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking a portion of the horse owner's affidavit and deposition where it contained hearsay statements allegedly made by an acquaintance to the police and those statements did not constitute an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the acquaintance was not a witness to the car accident that led to the negligence claim, and nothing in the record indicated that he was under stress or spoke with excitement when he made the statements. Thomas v. Centerpoint Energy, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 7 2008).

1129. Defendant's conviction for unlawful restraint was appropriate under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the victim made the out-of-court statement to the police officer when she was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the attack; thus, the officer's testimony regarding what the victim said was admissible as an excited utterance. Cooper v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9536 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 6 2007).

1130. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a 9-1-1 tape in which a declarant was seeking police help after her boyfriend allegedly assaulted her because the declarant's statements constituted an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the statements were related to a startling event and were made at a point in time when the declarant was in an extremely excited emotional state as a direct result of the event. Dixon v. State, 244 S.W.3d 472, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9292 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

1131. Within minutes of yelling for help, the victim, who was still shaken up, recounted to a witness and company that defendant had hit him in the face when he became angry at the victim for not wanting to spend any more money on beer at a bar; a reasonable person could conclude that the victim made the statements about the bar attack while still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the startling event that provoked the victim to flee his home only moments before; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the victim's statements into evidence under the excited utterance exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803. Bermudez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7629 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 20 2007).

1132. Trial court acted within its discretion in admitting the victim's statements to officers as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), as the victim was frantic, scared, and recently injured and bleeding at the time of the statement, and although the record did not show the exact length of time that elapsed between the incident and the statements made, the statements were made before the victim was taken by ambulance to the hospital and while he was still at the scene. Tyler v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7348 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2007).

1133. Operator for 911 testified that she received a call at about 1:30 in the morning from the victim's mother and there was a lot of yelling, some type of disturbance; the operator finally got the victim's mother to talk to her on the phone and she told the operator that the victim, her 15-year-old daughter, had accused defendant, her step-father, of touching her, that the victim was upset and ran out of the house, and then the victim's mother got off the phone to go find the victim outside; the operator's description of the 911 call showed that the victim's mother was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event where defendant "groped" her daughter when she made the telephone call; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the testimony into evidence as an excited utterance. Mestas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6947 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2007).

1134. When defendant touched the 15-year-old victim for the second time, she screamed and went into her mother's bedroom; after the victim told her mother what had happened, her mother went into the living room screaming and yelling at defendant; thus, the mother's statements were made immediately after learning defendant had "groped" her 15-year-old daughter; because the mother was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of the event when she made the statements, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the complained-of testimony into evidence as an excited utterance. Mestas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6947 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2007).

1135. Trial court would not have committed error in overruling, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, an objection to the victim's statement to an officer on the basis of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d); the trial court could have found that the victim was dominated by the emotions and fear of the event at the time she gave the statement and thus it was admissible as an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Austin July 18 2007).

1136. When an officer responded to the victim's second call against defendant, the father of her child, she was upset, crying, appeared frightened, and said defendant had been knocking on her door and threatened to kill her, and this type of evidence was routinely held admissible as an excited utterance, and the trial court's decision to admit this testimony did not present an issue of arguable merit. Shepard v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3602 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

1137. 911 operator established the predicate for admission of an exhibit listing data entries made by the operator as a business record, and the victim's statements contained therein were admissible as excited utterances. Shepard v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3602 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

1138. Given the evidence of defendant's wife's changing emotional condition and the lack of evidence showing that she was still dominated by the emotions or excitement of the criminal offense when she made the statements, the trial court's exclusion of the statements was proper and the court rejected defendant's claim that the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Aleman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 365 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 19 2007).

1139. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; the court assumed a strategic motive of counsel given the silent record, defendant failed to show that counsel's alleged failures to object were unreasonable and (1) it was reasonable for counsel to have found that certain evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), given that defendant's wife was extremely upset and nervous when talking to an officer about the incident, (2) counsel could have found that protective orders and testimony concerning defendant's wife's applying for the orders were not proof of extraneous offenses under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), given that they were issued in response to the same conduct that defendant was on trial for, (3) counsel could have found that defendant's wife's father's testimony opened the door to cross-examination regarding defendant's character by referencing specific examples of defendant's conduct for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 405, and (4) counsel might have believed that the wife's inconsistent statements were admissible to impeach her testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 613. Romero v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10723 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 15 2006).

1140. Trial court properly admitted a statement by a witness to police that defendant had shot a motorist; the statement was an exited utterance under Rule 803(2) of the Texas Rules of Criminal Evidence, and counsel was not ineffective under the Sixth Amendment for not opposing its admission. Rodriguez v. Quarterman, 204 Fed. Appx. 489, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28253 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006).

1141. Statements defendant's wife made to a 911 operator and an officer on the scene were properly admitted as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2); the wife's identification of defendant as the shooter was made immediately after the shooting at close range, and between the event and the statements, there was no time for reason or reflection. Mitchell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7584 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 25 2006).

1142. Statements defendant's wife made to an investigator two hours after the shooting were admitted by the trial court under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and the court found no abuse of discretion; during the interview, the wife was still crying and it was not unreasonable to believe that she was still dominated by the emotions caused by the attack. Mitchell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7584 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 25 2006).

1143. Statements made to a 911 operator by a burglary complainant were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because she was clearly dominated by the event as defendant was yelling threats at her and banging on the door; furthermore, the statements did not violate confrontation clause under Crawford because they were not testimonial and the complainant (declarant) was unavailable. Dunn v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7425 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 17 2006).

1144. Defendant's wife's statements were made when she was still dominated by her emotions and fear, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the statements as excited utterances and the State's purpose in calling the witness was not solely to introduce into evidence otherwise inadmissible hearsay, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 607; the statements had been previously admitted. White v. State, 201 S.W.3d 233, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7057 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1145. Statements made by the victim, a 14-year-old girl, to her mother were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the statements were made approximately two and one-half hours after the alleged incident and in response to questioning, but given that she was crying hysterically when she spoke to her mother, the court found that the victim was still under the emotional and physical stress of the incident. Rodarte v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6938 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2006).

1146. Concerning statements a victim made to a priest, they fell under the excited utterances exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although the statements were made six hours after the alleged incident, the victim had to be helped into the priest's house by her mother, the victim had a runny nose due to crying, the priest testified that the victim was distraught, and the court found no abuse of discretion. Rodarte v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6938 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2006).

1147. Regarding an officer's testimony concerning what the victim said during their conversations, the statements were excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the victim appeared to be disturbed and distraught and the victim's actions indicated that he was quite upset; even if the trial court erred, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the same evidence came in through the victim's testimony without objection. Alexander v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6950 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

1148. Trial court would have been justified in finding that a deputy's testimony regarding what the victim told the officer was not inadmissible hearsay because it fell under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as an excited utterance, given that at the time the victim gave the statement, the victim was upset and trembling. Rodriguez v. State, 2006 Tex. App.

LEXIS 6416 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 20 2006).

1149. In defendant's trial for unlawfully restraining his girlfriend in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 20.02, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the girlfriend was still dominated by the emotions and fear of being held by defendant when she spoke to an officer, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803, given that the officer described the girlfriend as upset, shaking, and crying when she recounted her story; while three hours had passed from the startling event and the statement, the court noted that time was not dispositive. Mazumder v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5235 (Tex. App. Dallas June 20 2006).

1150. In defendant's trial for unlawfully restraining his girlfriend in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 20.02, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the girlfriend's statement to her daughter was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803, given that (1) defendant held the girlfriend in her house for almost nine hours, (2) she then immediately went to her daughter's place of work, and (3) the daughter described her as upset and scared and when confronted, she told her daughter what had happened; clearly a startling event had occurred, the time frame between the release and the statement was less than one hour, and after only being asked two questions, the girlfriend recounted her experience, such that the record supported a finding that she was still dominated by the startling event when she recounted it to her daughter. Mazumder v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5235 (Tex. App. Dallas June 20 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : General Overview

1151. During defendant's trial for aggravated assault with family violence, the court did not err in allowing an investigator to testify about a telephone conversation he had with the complainant while she was in the hospital because the complainant's statements that she was afraid of defendant were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3). Adams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6515 (Tex. App. Dallas June 16 2014).

1152. In an aggravated assault case, defendant should have been allowed to testify that the victim threatened to file a "false" assault charge against her because the statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; instead, it was offered to show that the victim had an intent to lie. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

1153. Daughter's statements in her affidavit signed two days after the night her mother came to pick her up were not statements of her then existing state of mind or spontaneous remarks made while a sensation was being experienced such that they were admissible; the affidavit containing the daughter's statements in a conservatorship proceeding nearly two years prior to her death were not relevant to the damages suffered by the father due to the loss of his daughter's companionship and society. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

1154. Trial court erred in an indecency with a child trial in admitting purported "outcry" testimony from the victim's mother because the victim's statement that she felt uncomfortable when she could feel defendant in the pool described an emotion, but it was not admissible as a then-existing state of mind under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) because the victim did not make the statement while she was feeling uncomfortable. Linney v. State, 401 S.W.3d 764, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5560 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 7 2013).

1155. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because statements were admissible as non-hearsay, Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). The victim's indication that she was okay was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was a statement of her then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition; the sheriff's indication that everything was okay constituted a present sense impression and was admissible under Rule 803(1); the victim's statement that "he is trying to get in the bathroom" could have been admitted either as a present sense impression under Rule 803(1) or an excited utterance under Rule 803(2); the trial court did not abuse it discretion in allowing the officer to testify that he heard a male voice saying, "Open the door" because that statement could have been admitted either as an admission by a party opponent or as a statement merely showing what was said rather than proving the truth of the matter asserted, Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

1156. Utterance could have been seen as indicative of the mother's state of mind in response to her frustration that arose from being told that police were interested in talking to appellant, her son; construing the declaration this way would have fallen within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and no limiting instruction was sought by appellant, such that the jury was free to use the evidence as it cared to. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 695 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 24 2013).

1157. Even had appellant limited his request to the parts of his statements he claimed the trial court should have admitted, self-serving declarations were generally considered to be inadmissible hearsay when offered into evidence by a defendant, and parts of the recorded statements appellant argued the trial court did not admit were properly excluded as hearsay, as each part appellant claimed was improperly excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) was a statement of memory or belief offered to prove the fact remembered or believed. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

1158. Complainant's diary excerpt was admitted during the punishment phase of the trial, when it was no longer in dispute that defendant had sexually abused the complainant; the statement was admissible under the "state of mind" exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as it was not offered to prove the fact remembered or believed, but as punishment evidence to show the complainant's state of mind while recovering from the abuse, and evidence of the physical pain and emotional turmoil defendant inflicted on the complainant. Spurgeon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4843, 2011 WL 2520280 (Tex. App. Dallas June 27 2011).

1159. In defendant's capital murder trial for the killing of his wife and son, his wife's statement that defendant did not want her to have contact with her parents and that she wished to divorce appellation were expressions of her state of mind at the time they were made and were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Payne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3270, 2011 WL 1662856 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 29 2011).

1160. In defendant's capital murder trial for the killing of his wife and son, his wife's statement begging her sister-in-law to avenge her death was not a statement of mind but a supposition that her husband would be responsible if she were killed. That kind of statement did not fit into the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Payne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3270, 2011 WL 1662856 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 29 2011).

1161. Trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) in permitting a mother to offer testimony concerning one child's opinion of the father, the child's viewpoint of the father's parenting skills, and the child's viewpoint of the father as a role model; the testimony was offered to show the child's state of mind while the father was caring for the child. Koenig v. Koenig, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7423, 2010 WL 3518232 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

1162. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that the victim's statement that she was scared, uttered to another while the victim was crying and defendant was mad and throwing a fit, was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) because defendant was acting angry and violent at the time of the declaration; the trial court could have also reasonably found that the victim's other statements showed that her state of mind was fearful of defendant, for purposes of Rule 803(3), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting these statements. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1163. Trial court's instruction was technically in error because it varied from the statutory language and expanded the scope of the language of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.36 to include the complainant's state of mind, but defendant's proposed instruction would not have cured the error; because Article 38.36 allows evidence as to the previous relationship between appellant and the complainant and Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) allows evidence of the complainant's state of mind, there could be no harm to defendant's rights from the erroneous jury instruction. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1164. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed testimony regarding the victim's statement to the witness because it was not testimonial but, rather, a casual remark expressing her intent to go show her truck. The statement about being nervous was an indication of her state of mind, and was not admissible for the truth of the matter asserted but rather to show her intent. Fain v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6592, 2009 WL 2579580 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

1165. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, the trial court properly admitted the recording of a telephone conversation between a confidential informant (CI) and the individual who purchased methamphetamine from defendant; the recording was properly admitted as to the purchaser-coconspirator under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) and was properly admitted as to the CI under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of the CI's then existing plan to provide the purchaser with transportation to a meeting place with defendant. Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

1166. In a murder case, although the trial court erred in admitting the victim's hearsay statement regarding her plans to withhold all financial support from defendant, the error was harmless. The State provided evidence of the stolen rifle as the murder weapon, the victim's negative feelings toward defendant, defendant's inconsistent alibi, and the perpetrator's knowledge of where valuables were located in the victim's home. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

1167. In a murder case, because the victim's statement that defendant "gave her the creeps" was permissible hearsay, and went to the nature of the relationship between the victim and defendant, the court did not err in admitting the statement. Fischer v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4092 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

1168. As to a hearsay objection in a sexual assault case, defendant only specifically stated his intended testimony for the first time on appeal; defendant apparently sought to introduce testimony to show a victim's state of mind as it related to consent. Therefore, there was no error in sustaining a hearsay objection raised by the State; even if the trial court and the State had understood the specifics of the testimony that defendant intended to elicit, there was no harm shown because substantially similar testimony was later received into evidence. Zuniga v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6905 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 10 2008).

1169. In defendant's indecency with a child case, the court properly admitted testimony of a counselor regarding the victim's fears because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the victim's statements to the counselor about her perceived fears were statements of her then existing emotional or mental state and were admissible as an exception to hearsay under rule. Fugate v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6266 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 18, 2008).

1170. In a will contest case, even though the decedent's siblings, who opposed admitting a photocopy of the decedent's will to probate, argued that the decedent's daughter's testimony regarding what the decedent told her was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), the trial court did not err in finding the state of mind exception inapplicable. Although the excluded testimony may have been considered relevant to establish that the decedent had executed a new will naming his daughter as his sole beneficiary, because the siblings' position was that the decedent had died intestate, its exclusion was not harmful to them. In re Estate of Turner, 265 S.W.3d 709, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Eastland 2008).

1171. Victim's statement, what appeared to be goodbye messages to her loved ones and signed with her name and a blank for the year she died, was admissible under the state of mind exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 in defendant's murder trial; it was undisputed that defendant killed the victim, his estranged wife, and the statement was not offered to prove the fact remembered or believed, but as punishment evidence to show the emotional pain and turmoil defendant inflicted on the victim over the course of her life. Edwards v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5403 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2008).

1172. Although defendant tried to introduce testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803, defendant provided no substantive legal analysis, argument, or authority to support his contention, and thus the point was inadequately briefed and presented nothing for review. Guerrero v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 13 2008).

1173. Defendant did not explain how letters fell within the state of mind exception, and because he failed to offer analysis or argument in support of his contention, the matter was inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38. Guerrero v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 13 2008).

1174. In defendant's murder case, a court properly admitted evidence of the victim's handwritten letters because it was admissible as relating to the victim's state of mind, and the State authenticated the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on the letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

1175. Statements made by the victim, defendant's wife, were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because they went to her state of mind, and although defendant claimed that statements that she was afraid of him were not relevant, it had previously been determined that the circumstances surrounding their relationship were relevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.36(a), and thus the court held that the statements were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401; given that the jury had been told of the "dicey" relationship between defendant and his wife, the trial court did not believe there was going to be any confusion of the issues, and the court agreed and held that the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403. Garcia v. State, 246 S.W.3d 121, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8051 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 949, 129 S. Ct. 404, 172 L. Ed. 2d 295, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7457 (2008).

1176. In the trial of an officer for lying in a warrant affidavit about the reliability of an informant, the trial court properly allowed testimony that the alleged informant was reluctant to deal with the subject of the warrant, while prohibiting more specific testimony that the informant was afraid because of the informant's belief that the subject had killed a man. The latter statement was properly excluded as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 802 and did not fall within the exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it was a statement of memory or belief offered to prove that the subject had killed a man. Delapaz v. State, 228 S.W.3d 183, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2377 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

1177. In defendant's capital murder trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.03, a witness testified to overhearing a conversation that one victim did not want defendant coming back to her and her husband's house, and in response to defendant's hearsay objection, the trial court allowed the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 as a statement of the victim's then-existing mental or emotional state, which was proper; even if the trial court erred, the alleged error in admitting the testimony, if any, was nonconstitutional and subject to harmless error analysis under Tex. R. App. P. 44 and the error was harmless, given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Bryant v. State, 2007 Tex.

App. LEXIS 945 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 8 2007).

1178. Trial court properly excluded a deposition because it had been taken in another lawsuit and, although appellant's opinion at the time would have been within the exception to the hearsay rule provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), the deposition's contents were inadmissible hearsay because the statements contained within it pertained to the other party's statements and state of mind rather than to appellant's. Trantham v. Isaacks, 218 S.W.3d 750, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 501 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 892, 128 S. Ct. 340, 169 L. Ed. 2d 155, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10018 (2007).

1179. Court properly denied the admission of defendant's statements, which he claimed were exculpatory, because, whether the statement was reflective of defendant's then existing mental state showing that he did not know that the true owners of the car were dead was an area where reasonable minds could differ; in such a situation, the trial court's determination of admissibility must prevail. Kirk v. State, 199 S.W.3d 467, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6060 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1180. In a husband's trial for the murder of his wife, the trial court properly admitted a tape-recorded phone message from the victim to her lawyer, in which she described defendant's threats, because the first two paragraphs described both the victim's state of mind and defendant's state of mind. Rogers v. State, 183 S.W.3d 853, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10705 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

1181. In a murder trial, the court improperly admitted draft affidavits relaying a history of domestic violence that were never signed, notarized, or introduced in any prior court proceeding; all of the statements were either of memory or belief by the victim and thus did not fall within the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid 803(3). Rogers v. State, 183 S.W.3d 853, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10705 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

1182. In a husband's trial for the murder of his wife, the trial court properly admitted a tape recorded phone message from the victim to the administrator of a retirement plan, in which the victim pleaded with the administrator to call defendant and explain to him that she would eventually become entitled to the money in her retirement plan; this statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it showed both the victim's state of mind and defendant's state of mind, indicating that he was suspicious of the victim's motives regarding a divorce proceeding. Rogers v. State, 183 S.W.3d 853, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10705 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

1183. Witness's testimony that the victim was scared was a statement of the victim's then-existing state of mind and was thus subject to the exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(3). Martinez v. State, 186 S.W.3d 59, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8678 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

1184. Complained-of hearsay statements to which the complainant's sister testified indicated the victim's state of mind at the time they were made and were, therefore, admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3). Haley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9569 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2004).

1185. In a murder trial, it was proper to exclude testimony by a defense witness that, in case anything happened to him, the victim had pointed out a couple of guys that had beat him up two weeks prior where the statement fell into the realm of the victim's belief and therefore was not within the state-of-mind exception to the hearsay rule as the victim's state of mind was not at issue. Braziel v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6101 (Tex. App. El Paso July 8 2004).

1186. In a murder case, witnesses' testimony regarding statements the victim made that she thought defendant was going to hurt her were admissible hearsay as the statements showed the victim's fear and state of mind.

Gutierrez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5555 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 23 2004).

1187. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to hearsay evidence regarding the victim's fear that defendant would retaliate against her or her family where the statement was offered to show that the victim was afraid, not that defendant would retaliate against her or her family; therefore, it was admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

1188. Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) states that a statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, or bodily health, but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will. Salazar v. State, 127 S.W.3d 355, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1045 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

1189. Because, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(3), hearsay testimony regarding the declarant's emotion or mental feeling was admissible so long as it did not include a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed, each of the statements at issue concerned the declarant's then existing emotional condition or mental feeling. Thus, the hearsay testimony was admissible under Rule 803(3). Salazar v. State, 127 S.W.3d 355, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1045 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

1190. Letter from one witness in a murder trial to another witness was properly excluded where it did not show the recipient's state of mind, and thus her incentive to lie; although it arguably demonstrated the writer's feelings for the witness, it contained no evidence of what the witness felt for or thought of the writer. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 706 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 26 2004).

1191. In a murder trial, an out-of-court statement made by the victim that her relationship with the defendant, her ex-boyfriend, was over, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement showing future intent, and also her state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

1192. Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) excepts from the hearsay rule a statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition, such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, or bodily health, but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will; however, the statement of the victim of a crime, related by another person, and expressing fear of the defendant, is admissible under Rule 803(3) as a statement of existing state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

1193. When related by another person, an out-of-court statement by the victim of a crime is admissible under Rule 803(3) as a statement of existing state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

1194. Under Rule 803(3) of the Rules of Evidence, statements of the intent of the declarant with regard to relationships are admissible as showing future intent, and also admissible to demonstrate state of mind. Thrailkille v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

1195. In a murder trial, an out-of-court statement made by the victim, that she was afraid of the defendant taking her home, was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of her existing state of mind. Thrailkille v.

State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8972 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 18 2002).

1196. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803(3), the statements made by a witness, that the victim told the witness that the defendant had been partying, tearing things up, and smoking pot in the victim's residence, amounted to the admission of inadmissible hearsay, and the trial court erred by admitting testimony regarding the events or existing conditions that were the cause of the victim's mental and emotional state. Skeen v. State, 96 S.W.3d 567, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8181 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

1197. In a sexual assault of a child case, the mother's testimony, relating statements made by the 14-year-old victim and seeking to establish the truth of facts remembered regarding past events, was inadmissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(3). Glover v. State, 102 S.W.3d 754, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7797 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

1198. Officer's testimony that a codefendant would have cooperated but feared for his life was hearsay because the codefendant's mental state was evidenced by inference and therefore did not qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3); but, because the statement was irrelevant to prove any fact or element of the charge against defendant, a trial court's admission of the hearsay testimony was harmless error pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Barnes v. State, 56 S.W.3d 221, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 4834 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

1199. Written statement by a homicide victim was not admissible evidence in defendant's murder trial as an exception to hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) because the first two sentences of the statement, which disclosed the victim's fear that defendant, her husband, would murder her for insurance money, were simply out-of-court statements of events that had occurred, and the next sentence was an out-of-court exposition of the victim's belief. The statement demonstrated the victim's fear or state of mind, other than her recited "belief," only by inference. Barnum v. State, 7 S.W.3d 782, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 8907 (Tex. App. Amarillo 1999).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Earlier Acts

1200. During defendant's trial for capital murder, even if the court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) in admitting testimony about a specific incident when defendant shoved defendant's mother, the victim, against a wall, the testimony was clearly insufficient to establish a claim of cumulative error that would justify reversal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Logan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3847, 2010 WL 2010921 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 20 2010).

1201. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

1202. In a murder case, testimony concerning defendant's statement that someone had tried to assault him was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803 state of mind exception to the hearsay rule because defense counsel's arguments indicated that he sought to introduce the evidence to prove that an unknown assailant could have killed the victim. Hager v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8120 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 10 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Later Acts

1203. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court erred by sustaining the hearsay objection to the victim's statement that "she was gonna call the law" because it evinced a state of mind concerning her future conduct and was admissible. Corbin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15300, 2013 WL 7083195 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 19 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

1204. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted jailhouse recording into evidence, because defendant's own statements implicated his guilt, and the redacted statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but offered for the purpose of placing in evidence defendant's own statements against interest. Howard v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208, 2014 WL 4100690 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 20 2014).

1205. Court did not err by admitting the witness's testimony over the hearsay objection, because the statement to the witness that the declarant had just hit someone tended to subject the speaker to civil and criminal liability or to make the declarant an object of hatred, ridicule or disgrace, and the essential statement-that the declarant had hit someone-was corroborated by evidence that the witness was near the accident site. Roberts v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4927 (Tex. App. Austin May 8 2014).

1206. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

1207. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

1208. Although defendant claimed that her post-arrest statement was admissible as a statement against interest, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit it. Defendant's post-arrest statement sought to downplay her involvement in the solicitation of her husband's murder and to absolve her of criminal responsibility. Gelber v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 257, 2014 WL 98802 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 9 2014).

1209. Facts indicated that a witness's statement to his sister was trustworthy and therefore admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony. Whitney v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15059, 2013 WL 6570059 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 12 2013).

1210. Where defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit his co-conspirator's out-of-court statement in which he said that he was involved in the crime but that a third co-conspirator fired the shot that struck the victim; because the statement minimized his culpability in the seriousness of the offense and shifted the major blame to his co-conspirator, it was more of a blame-shifting statement than a blame-sharing statement. Perkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14372, 2013 WL 6459390 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 26 2013).

1211. Co-arrestee's statements to his girlfriend, later his common-law wife, regarding a large amount of methamphetamine that went undiscovered by officers during a traffic stop were non-testimonial for purposes of the Confrontation Clause and were statements against penal interest and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24).

Walker v. State, 406 S.W.3d 590, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3046, 2013 WL 1154209 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 21 2013).

1212. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the trial court erred by refusing to admit testimony that the victim had recanted her claims. The appellate court held that the testimony was admissible as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); it was by definition not excluded by the hearsay rule. Korp v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9832, 2012 WL 5961662 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 28 2012).

1213. At defendant's trial for engaging in organized criminal activity, the trial court erred by admitting an out-of-court statement made by an accomplice witness to police after he was arrested; although the statement included direct statements against interest and blame-sharing statements that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), it also included numerous blame-shifting statements that were not admissible. The statement was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) as recorded recollection, because the witness did not testify that he had firsthand knowledge of the events contained in his statement; nor did he vouch at trial for the accuracy of his statement. Batts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163, 2012 WL 2469546 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

1214. While selling marihuana was certainly a criminal offense, it would not be outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the district court to conclude that the inculpatory significance of admitting to a drug offense was minor in comparison to its significance as a means of absolving defendant of the burglary offense for which he was charged; the district court did not abuse its discretion in finding defendant's statements to be more self-serving than inculpatory and thus inadmissible. Valadez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8653, 2011 WL 5138641 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 26 2011).

1215. Declarant's statements were properly admitted as statements against interest because there were sufficient corroborating circumstances that clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the statements. The declarant made the statements in response to questions from his common law wife about his involvement in the robbery, the declarant's guilt was not inconsistent with defendants, and the testimony bore significant probative force and was valuable in proving the State's case in chief. Gonzalez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7084, 2011 WL 3849393 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2011).

1216. Defendant's statements to the police were not admissible as statements against interest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because they were not truly inculpatory statements; at the time defendant admitted acting alone, defendant was attempting to downplay any notion that defendant intentionally caused the victim's death, an element of capital murder. Estrada v. State, 352 S.W.3d 762, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6739 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 24 2011).

1217. Appellant claimed that the victim's testimony about what appellant had told her concerning a prior offense was inadmissible, but regardless of whether the victim's testimony qualified as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the trial court would not have abused its discretion in admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) as an admission by a party opponent. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4811, 2011 WL 2507002 (Tex. App. Austin June 24 2011).

1218. Co-conspirator's statement to a witness that he and appellant beat the victim equally exposed both to criminal responsibility, and the trustworthiness of the statement was corroborated by other testimony, such that the statement was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) as a statement against interest. Orona v. State, 341 S.W.3d 452, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 24 2011).

1219. Where witnesses testified that a pit bull attacked defendant at the scene of an aggravated robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding hearsay testimony that an unidentified third party admitted that he shot a pit bull that day; the testimony did not qualify as a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). The purported admission was not trustworthy, and it did not exculpate defendant. Ramos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 247, 2011 WL 166926 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2011).

1220. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit the victim's statement to her employer three days before the accident because her statement of "whatever" in response to termination for failing a drug test was not an admission of drug use and therefore the statement was not admissible as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Somers v. State, 333 S.W.3d 747, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9384 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 24 2010).

1221. In an evading arrest or detention conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.04, a person other than defendant admitted to driving a car that first pulled over in response to an officer's overhead lights, then drove off, committed several traffic violations, and subsequently stopped a second time when the road was blocked by a second officer's cruiser; although his hearsay statement to defendant's great-grandmother sufficiently exposed him to criminal liability, his statement was not admissible as a statement against his penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because he had no relationship, familial or otherwise, with defendant's great-grandmother, his statement lacked spontaneity where it was purportedly made in response to a query from defendant's great-grandmother regarding his reluctance to testify at defendant's upcoming trial, and the trustworthiness of his statement was directly attacked or controverted by the two officers' testimonies. Rodriguez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9105, 2010 WL 4628580 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 16 2010).

1222. Witness's statement that "I just did something good" was vague in that it could not have exposed the witness to criminal liability for the victim's death or any criminal act, and that the handgun in question had been burned tended to indicate that the witness used it for the commission of some crime, but appellant did not get an adverse ruling on the issue of whether the gun had been burned, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); the exclusion of the witness's statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), did not preclude appellant from presenting his defense that it was the witness who shot the victim. Ramirez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4365 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2010).

1223. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, the court properly excluded defendant's hearsay statements because defendant's statements were less an attempt to inculpate himself than an attempt to shift the blame to the victim for agreeing to gamble her clothes and sexual favors for money. The inculpatory significance of the statements was minor in comparison to its significance as means of absolving defendant of the crime for which he was accused; accordingly, defendant's statements did not fall under the admission against interest exception to the hearsay rule. Langford v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 567, 2010 WL 323081 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2010).

1224. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly admitted a witness's testimony that defendant told her he had killed someone "in front of the bar" because the statement was an admission by a party; therefore, it was not hearsay. Additionally, defendant admitted to the trial court that the statement was a statement that exposed him to criminal liability and was probably a statement against interest. Walton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8046, 2009 WL 3326759 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 15 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 512, 178 L. Ed. 2d 379, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 8559 (U.S. 2010).

1225. Detective testified that a juvenile eventually admitted to acting as a lookout for defendant during a burglary, the juvenile's statement was supported by corroborating circumstances, including witnesses who saw defendant and the juvenile walk toward the victim's house and go behind the house, plus the victim testified that a flat screen television was taken from his house and someone saw defendant in possession of such a television shortly after the burglary; given this and the fact that the juvenile was present, available to testify, granted immunity, and represented by counsel, Crawford v. Washington was not applicable and the detective's testimony was not admitted in violation of Crawford and was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Carroll v. State, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 7995, 2009 WL 3319894 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 14 2009).

1226. There were no hearsay issues presented by this case that met Tex. R. Evid. 803(24)'s corroboration requirements. Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7755, 2009 WL 3153276 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

1227. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that defendant's girlfriend's hearsay testimony inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), given that (1) defendant did not demonstrate that the declarant's guilt was inconsistent with his guilt, (2) it was unclear from the declarant's statement to the girlfriend whether he was admitting to being the shooter, (3) although there was some evidence that supported a finding that the declarant's guilt was inconsistent with defendant's, there was evidence that the declarant subsequently recanted his admission and witnesses placed the declarant elsewhere at the time of the shooting, (4) the trial court could have questioned the declaration's spontaneity, (5) the relationship between the declarant and the girlfriend allowed conflicting inferences as to the trustworthiness of the statement, (6) the trial court was entitled to rely on the possibility that the declarant had a motive to lie in finding his statement untrustworthy, and (7) a witness's identification of defendant undermined the statement's reliability. Harrell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7052, 2009 WL 5818564 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 1 2009).

1228. Defendant waived an argument regarding his right to present a defense because he had not first presented it to the trial court, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), but in any event the argument was without merit because neither Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) nor a case law standard used to determine the admissibility of statements offered under the rule fell into the category of rules proscribed in other case law. Harrell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7052, 2009 WL 5818564 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 1 2009).

1229. Even if the court assumed the trial court erred in excluding defendant's girlfriend's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the error was harmless; despite the exclusion of the testimony, the defense was left with substantial corroborating evidence lending credibility to defendant's theory that the declarant was the shooter, plus the murder verdict was supported by evidence that defendant coerced the declarant into making his affidavit, defendant left his motel room shortly before the murder and returned shortly afterwards, his gun fired the bullet that killed the victim, and a witness identified defendant as the man leaving his yard just after the murder. Harrell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7052, 2009 WL 5818564 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 1 2009).

1230. Error in excluding defendant's girlfriend's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) would be non-constitutional in nature as it involved neither a state evidentiary rule that categorically and arbitrarily prohibiting defendant from offering relevant evidence vital to his defense nor the erroneous exclusion of vital, relevant evidence that effectively precluded defendant from presenting a defense. Harrell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7052, 2009 WL 5818564 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 1 2009).

1231. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the bulk of one witness's testimony was admissible as it recounted co-defendant's statements against his own penal interest; the inadmissible portions of the testimony concerned certain blame-shifting statements, those in which co-defendant attempted to portray defendant as the more culpable party. Walter v. State, 293 S.W.3d 886, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6218 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 11 2009).

1232. Inadmissible evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), that of three victims unsuccessfully begging for their lives, was not an easy one to forget and could suggest harm, but there was also a wealth of other emotionally charged evidence, including the tearful testimony of one widow and photographs depicting one young, pregnant victim cowering near a wall trying to seek refuge behind a desk, the probable impact of which the court could consider in determining whether the admission of the inadmissible testimony was harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); the emotional impact of the improperly admitted testimony was diminished to a degree when placed in the context of a trial filled with other highly emotionally charged evidence, and the harm from the probative value was diminished by the probative value of the other, properly admitted, evidence of guilt. Walter v. State, 293 S.W.3d 886, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6218 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 11 2009).

1233. Although the State specifically referenced the three victims pleading for their lives, which was the subject of inadmissible testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), which would itself lend to a finding of harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), it was important to place the erroneously admitted evidence in the context of other evidence presented at trial; the record provided the court with evidence that corroborated the testimony and defendant's role as the shooter and provided evidence that defendant participated in the robbery during which three victims were killed, and the law of parties under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(b) would apply to make defendant liable for capital murder, no matter his specific role in the act; given that the record revealed much other evidence to support defendant's role as the shooter, including his own inculpatory statements, the court found that the error in admitting the inadmissible testimony did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Walter v. State, 293 S.W.3d 886, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6218 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 11 2009).

1234. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

1235. In an off-duty police officer's deadly conduct case the court did not err in excluding testimony about statements the complainant made on the night of the incident because the statements were not statements against the complainant's interest. There was no evidence that the complainant was himself evading a police officer, because it was another person who was driving at the time. Kacz v. State, 287 S.W.3d 497, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4966 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 23 2009).

1236. Burden to produce evidence that clearly indicated trustworthiness, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), was on the State, who sought to admit the statement. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

1237. Declarant's statements to a witness tended to expose the declarant to criminal liability because he solicited the witness to commit a crime, for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 15.03(a), and the trustworthiness of the statements was corroborated by other testimony; because the statements were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the trial court did not err in admitting the witness's testimony. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

1238. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), the court did not apply the first two factors because the statement was not one by which defendant sought to escape culpability, but one on which the State relied. Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

1239. Declarant spontaneously made statements to his wife on the day of the murder and the timing, spontaneity, and relationship between the declarant and the party to whom the statement was made tended to establish the reliability of the statements, plus the State presented evidence of independent corroborative facts verifying the reliability of the declarant's statements, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the wife's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Chaney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2799 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

1240. Defendant lodged a proper and timely hearsay objection to a witness's testimony concerning a person's statement to him, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and an analysis of the witness's testimony revealed that it contained two levels of hearsay, for analysis purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 805, with the first layer of hearsay concerning what defendant told the person about his involvement in the crime, which constituted a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); because the second layer of hearsay, the person's statement that defendant admitted involvement in the crimes, would not subject the person to prosecution and did not satisfy Rule 803(24), the admission of the double hearsay was an abuse of discretion. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

1241. Secret Service agent's testimony concerned what defendant told investigators was said by defendant, and this testimony was clearly hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805, and the second layer of hearsay was not excluded from the hearsay rule by any exception, such as Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), because any statement by the witness about defendant's involvement in the crimes would not implicate the witness; defendant did not renew the hearsay objection he previously raised to another witness's substantially similar testimony, and because the substantively equivalent testimony to which he earlier objected was later admitted without objection, defendant did not preserve this issue for appellate review. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

1242. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly excluded evidence that defendant's accomplice stated that the shooting was an accident because a witness testified that the accomplice boasted to him that he "shot that fool" and that the victim got what he deserved. That testimony directly contradicted the theory that the shooting was an accident; the timing of the statement combined with contradictory testimony was not sufficiently convincing to clearly indicate its trustworthiness. Gonzalez v. State, 296 S.W.3d 620, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1144 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 19 2009).

1243. Court properly admitted evidence as a statement against interest because defendant's question to the witness -- "how she would feel towards him if the police said that he had killed the two ladies" -- was self-inculpatory, and the circumstances of the relationship between defendant and the witness tended to corroborate the trustworthiness of the statement. Juarez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 77, 2009 WL 41648 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2009).

1244. Defendant's conviction for arson of a habitation was appropriate because, applying the Woods factors to the victims' daughter's former boyfriend's unsworn statements in the presence of the prosecutor and investigator, defendant failed to show the boyfriend's statements were trustworthy, Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Additionally, another of the boyfriend's former girlfriend's sworn statement to the investigator noted that the boyfriend bragged to her about how he and defendant set fire to the home. Charles v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

1245. Accomplice's statement was properly admitted because the reliability of the statements to the officer was established through confirmation that the accomplice's backpack was in the trunk of defendant's car and that another participant was nearby in a stolen truck similar to the one the accomplice was driving. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9455 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 17 2008).

1246. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

1247. In reviewing the trustworthiness of a statement against interest to determine its admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), court should consider a number of factors, including: (1) whether the guilt of the declarant is inconsistent with the guilt of the defendant, (2) whether the declarant was so situated that he or she might have committed the crime, (3) the timing of the declaration, (4) the spontaneity of the declaration, (5) the relationship between the declarant and the party to whom the statement was made, and (6) the existence of independent corroborating facts. Tong v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5025 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 3 2008).

1248. The first inquiry in determining admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) is whether the statement tended to expose the declarant to criminal liability; the second inquiry is whether or not corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the statement. Tong v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5025 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 3 2008).

1249. Juror's testimony was admissible under the statement against interest hearsay exception, under Tex. R. Evid. 803, because (1) during voir dire, the challenged juror indicated that he knew both parties and their children and that the father had been his high school basketball coach, but, the juror denied that this would give him a bias in the case or that he would show favoritism toward the father; (2) the representations during voir dire were fundamentally inconsistent with the juror's alleged posttrial admission that he had decided how to vote before the start of trial and his alleged statement that he did not want to let his coach down; and (3) the discrepancies would have potentially subjected the juror to a perjury charge. Clark v. Clark, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3198 (Tex. App. Eastland May 1 2008).

1250. Finding against the appellant property owner in an action concerning access to land was appropriate, in part, because a statement that appellant referred to the disputed road as "your road" was admissible as a declaration against pecuniary interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803; not being offered to prove the truth of the matter stated, but simply that the statement was made, the appellee property owner's testimony was not hearsay. Allen v. Allen, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2687 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 15 2008).

1251. Witness's availability should not have been considered as a material factor in determining the admissibility of the witness's recorded statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803. Watkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 9 2008).

1252. Witness acknowledged in a recorded statement that he committed the theft, that he did not have the owner's authority to use the vehicle, and that he misled defendant in that regard, and thus the witness's statement exposed him to criminal liability, for analysis purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the trial court could properly consider the witness's changing versions in finding whether his version of events in the recorded statement was credible, but the court ultimately found the evidence credible, given that (1) the witness was in a position to commit the crimes with which defendant had been tried, including theft and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, (2) the witness's admissions were made at a time when they were relevant to then-existing charges, and (3) independent corroborative facts supported the credibility of the account, such that defendant met the burden of corroborating the witness's statement against interest and the corroborating circumstances indicated the trustworthiness of the statement. Watkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 9 2008).

1253. Exclusion of a witness's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803 was not harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because, for purposes of the offense of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.07, the witness's statement was relevant to the issue of defendant's state of mind and it was an issue on which the State had the burden of proof; because the witness's statement would have given credibility to defendant's otherwise self-serving testimony that he was misled by the witness about the source of the witness's permission to use the truck, the trial court's exclusion of the witness's statement was prejudicial, which necessitated reversal of defendant's conviction. Watkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 9 2008).

1254. Challenged juror's proffered testimony fell within the statement against interest hearsay exception, under Tex. R. Evid. 803, because (1) during voir dire, the juror indicated that he knew both parties and their children and that the father had been his high school basketball coach, but he denied that this would give him a bias in the case or that he would show favoritism toward the father; (2) these representations were fundamentally inconsistent with the juror's alleged posttrial admission that he had decided how to vote before the start of trial and his alleged statement that he did not want to let his coach down; and (3) these discrepancies would have potentially subjected the juror to a perjury charge, under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.02. Clark v. Clark, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2010 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 20 2008).

1255. Defendant failed to argue to the trial court on which of the categories of Tex. R. Evid. 803 that he relied on, plus he failed to argue any corroborating circumstances to the trial court; the mere declaration that testimony was a statement against interest did not satisfy the requirement that corroborating circumstances had to show trustworthiness and the court did not find any abuse of discretion in the trial court's exclusion of the evidence. Guerrero v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 13 2008).

1256. In defendant's murder case, the court properly excluded testimony of a witness regarding what the victim told the witness about altercations between the victim and defendant because the testimony concerning what the victim said to the witness at least two days after the event in question was not a present sense impression, there was no evidence in the record that the victim was "in the instant grip of violent emotion, excitement or pain" immediately before or during his recounting of the events, and the victim's statements were not self-inculpatory. Eisenman v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2008).

1257. Defendant's murder conviction was proper pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803 because his own recorded statements against interest offered in a criminal case were not hearsay. Capps v. State, 244 S.W.3d 520, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

1258. In a trial for defendant's murder of his stepson, a statement by the mother that she hated kids was not a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because at the time she was nine months pregnant and could have claimed to hate children out of frustration and not because she actually harbored hate. Lewis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9519 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 5 2007).

1259. At an aggravated robbery trial, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding defendant's statements to a police officer because the statements, although admitting that defendant was trying to steal a van, sought to shift blame for a shooting to an accomplice and thus were not statements against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Lynn v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9095 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 15 2007).

1260. In a murder trial, there was no error in allowing into evidence recorded admissions that defendant made in phone calls from jail; a defendant's recorded statements against interest offered in a criminal case were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Capps v. State, 244 S.W.3d 520, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007), (Tex. App. -- Fort Worth, pet. ref'd).

1261. In a drug case, a conversation between a constable and a caller on defendant's phone was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); the conversation concerning drugs exposed the declarant to criminal liability because it showed that she was either a buyer or seller of drugs. Also, the required corroboration came from expert testimony that the amount of cocaine found on defendant was indicative of a seller, rather than a buyer. Allen v. State, 236 S.W.3d 818, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6749 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

1262. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant waited until after the jury had decided guilt and punishment before making a bill of exception regarding the exclusion of evidence that defendant claimed on appeal was admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803; defendant never argued this claim to the trial court and thus defendant failed to preserve this issue for review. Chapman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS

3184 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 25 2007).

1263. Sufficient corroborating circumstances allowed the trial court to reasonably determine that a declarant's statements, that both he and defendant participated in a shooting, were trustworthy and therefore admissible as statements against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803; those circumstances included that the declarant made the statements a day or two after the offense and before police had developed any leads and that he made the statements spontaneously in the course of simple conversation while he and the testifying witness "hung out" at defendant's apartment. Gongora v. State, 214 S.W.3d 58, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9789 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

1264. In defendant's criminal street gang case, evidence of an interview with the gang's leader was properly admitted because, even if the interview's importance lay in the truth of the matters asserted therein, the hearsay rule excepted statements against interest, and the interview contained "socially unacceptable language throughout." Chaddock v. State, 203 S.W.3d 916, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8861 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

1265. There was no error in the exclusion of a murder defendant's statement to a witness in which he conceded concealing the body but denied committing the murder; the statement did not qualify as a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it absolved him of the greater offense of murder. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5214 (Tex. App. Dallas June 19 2006).

1266. Murder defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 803 regarding the exclusion of evidence that a third party had a murder plan because defendant failed to sponsor the evidence on that ground. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5214 (Tex. App. Dallas June 19 2006).

1267. In a capital murder trial, there was no error in the admission of a witness's testimony that an accomplice confessed to her; the statement was a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803and did not violate the Confrontation Clause because it was a casual remark to an acquaintance. Springsteen v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2340 (Tex. Crim. App. May 24 2006).

1268. Where defendant and his codefendant illegally entered a home and shot and killed two victims, defendant was charged with capital murder; at trial, a witness was permitted to give hearsay testimony about statements in which the co-defendant implicated himself and defendant in the murders. The testimony was admitted as statements against penal interest Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); the co-defendant's statements about the crime suggested trustworthiness, because the details could not have been learned from a newspaper or other outside source. Robles v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 26 2006).

1269. In a trial for evading arrest with a vehicle, a hearsay statement by the car's owner, identifying defendant as the driver, was properly admitted as a declaration against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 because it was related to a statement that she had lied to police about the issue and thus inculpated her for making a false report to police under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 42.06(a)(1). Clay v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1808 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 8 2006).

1270. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a videotape in a capital murder trial because the understandable portions contained only statements not falling under any recognized exception to the hearsay rule; admitting presence at the scene was not necessarily against an accomplice's penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), as mere presence at the scene of the offense, by itself, is insufficient to support criminal responsibility as a party. Frank v. State, 183 S.W.3d 63, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10647 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

1271. Trial court did not err in excluding testimony of a witness that the victim encouraged friends to "get their stories straight"; the court found that the statement did not subject the victim to criminal liability for perjury under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.02(a)(1), given that the statement was not made under oath, and thus Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) was not applicable. Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1272. Court found no authority that would permit consideration of previously excluded testimony as qualifying corroborating circumstances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1273. Although the court acknowledged that it was to liberally construe an appellant's point of error to cover subsidiary questions that were fairly included, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(e), the court noted that the only reference in defendant's brief to any other aspects of Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) appeared in defendant's quote of the rule in its entirety, and defendant failed to cite any authority analyzing other aspects of the rule, such that the court limited its holding to the portion of the rule addressing the testimony in question as a statement against penal interest. Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1274. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant's girlfriend to testify that another person had stated that the contraband belonged to him; the proffered evidence was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 402, to whether defendant possessed a controlled substance with intent to deliver it, in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(a), and defendant offered no independent facts corroborating the hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Menton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7799 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 22 2005).

1275. In an individual's written statement, he stated that one of the reasons he gave the gun to defendant's wife was that he could not legally own a gun at the time; however, there was nothing in the record to suggest that the individual actually subjected himself to any criminal liability by making the statement or that he believed he would subject himself to criminal liability. Thus, the individual's hearsay statement was not admissible under the statement against penal interest exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Holland v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7230 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

1276. In a drug case, a court did not err by excluding an audiotape statement of a witness purportedly showing that he confessed to having exclusive possession of the cocaine because the witness's guilt was not inconsistent with defendant's because possession was not mutually exclusive, and the statement was given after being arrested and in the context of interrogation, at a time when motivation to curry favor with law enforcement existed. Minor v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5470 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 14 2005).

1278. Testimony was properly admitted as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) where the witness testified that one of the persons involved in a capital murder case told him that he got guns by "pulling a lick" and they "went inside, took care of business" giving the witness the impression that the declarant had stolen the guns because the declarant was exposed to potention criminal liability and the witness's guilt for his role in storing the stolen property was not inconsistent with the declarant's role in the robbery and murder. Pena v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5110 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 30 2005).

1279. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, a witness was properly allowed to testify regarding a conversation that she had with a gang member about defendant's order to shoot an ex-member. The statement of the planned shooter was a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because, although reluctant, he was taking steps to carry out his orders; therefore, his statement tended to expose him to criminal charges for conspiracy to commit murder at a minimum. Maynard v. State, 166 S.W.3d 403, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4003 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

1280. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant failed to preserve his Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) complaint for review where he objected to a witness's testimony regarding statements made by defendant's alleged accomplice on relevance grounds but did not object on hearsay grounds. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

1281. In a murder case, because the trial court did not rule on whether statements as to which a witness had asserted the self-incrimination privilege were incriminating, they were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) through an investigator's testimony as statements against interest. Boler v. State, 177 S.W.3d 366, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2719 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

1282. Court erred in excluding inculpatory hearsay statements made by a possible perpetrator of a murder for which defendant was convicted where the corroborating evidence, even in light of evidence tending to undermine the trustworthiness of the possible perpetrator's statements, was sufficiently convincing to indicate trustworthiness. The statements, if believed, could have created a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt. Eby v. State, 165 S.W.3d 723, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2580 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

1283. Court did not err by excluding the testimony of a witness concerning statements made to her by another person concerning the disappearance of the victim where the witness could not say whether the statements were made before the victim's body was found. If the statements were made after the body was found, then the declarant could have gotten his information from the media coverage of the event and that was not indicative of the statement being against his penal interest. Bednarek v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2221 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 24 2005).

1284. Testimony of two witnesses about two other persons' statements was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because (1) the persons could have been liable for a crime, and (2) the persons' statements were corroborated by evidence admitted at trial. Lafitte v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1790 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

1286. Admission of a co-offender's out-of-court statements at defendant's capital murder trial, which were allowed on the ground that they were against the co-offender's penal interest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), did not violate the Sixth Amendment because the co-offender's statements describing his involvement in the murder were not made at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, at a former trial, or as the product of police interrogation, but, instead, were made to friends and fellow gang members at an informal gathering. Thus, the statements were not the product of an ex parte examination or testimonial hearsay. Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

1287. Defense counsel's failure to lodge a Confrontation Clause objection to a co-offender's out-of-court statements at the time defendant was tried was not outside the broad range of reasonable professional assistance because, at the time defendant was tried, the admission of hearsay did not violate the Confrontation Clause if the statement fell within a firmly rooted hearsay objection or if the statement contained such particularized guarantees of trustworthiness that adversarial testing would be expected to add little to its reliability. Defense counsel's hearsay objection had been overruled on the ground that the co-offender's statements were against his penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

1288. Capital murder conviction and death penalty were affirmed where trial court: improperly limited defendant's voir dire of a witness when he was seeking to discover her views on whether she could fairly consider the mitigation special issue, but it did not have a substantial or injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict, as defense counsel was able to ask the same question; did not abuse its discretion in preventing defendant from cross-examining a State's witness about his prison sentence and prospects for parole, as defendant's offer of proof did not establish a nexus between the witness's testimony and prison sentence; did not err in admitting the testimony of two witnesses about statements made to them by a co-defendant, under the "statement against interest" exception to the hearsay rule (Tex. R. Evid. 803(24)), as there were sufficient corroborating circumstances to indicate the trustworthiness of the co-defendant's statements; did not abuse its discretion by including paragraph 3 of the Geesa instruction in the jury charge at the guilt or innocence phase of the trial; and the Texas death-penalty statute was not unconstitutional. Woods v. State, 152 S.W.3d 105, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2146 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 1050, 125 S. Ct. 2295, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1092, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 4223, 73 U.S.L.W. 3685 (2005).

1289. In a murder trial, testimony was properly admitted by two witnesses regarding hearsay statements by friends of defendant concerning their plans to commit a robbery with him. The hearsay statements were against penal interest, even if they would not, at the time they were made, have subjected the declarants to liability for capital murder, because the declarants could have been liable for criminal conspiracy. Lafitte v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10247 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 18 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1790 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10, 2005).

1290. Trial court properly excluded defendant's brother's testimony regarding the accomplice's admission to having killed the employees during the robbery because although it was admissible as a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), defendant failed to offer any corroborating circumstances as required under Rule 803(24). Cooper v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2004).

1291. Defendant's incriminating statements before and after a murder could have been admissible as statements against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); therefore, defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the evidence, and his murder and aggravated assault convictions were upheld. Mendez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7998 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2004).

1292. In a motor vehicle theft case, a court properly admitted an accomplice's statement as a statement against interest where he was an employee of the car rental agency, he admitted that he knew defendant and had made arrangements with him to exchange the vehicles, and the accomplice's position as an employee of the car rental agency put him in a position to commit the crime and conceal it. The evidence presented sufficient corroborating circumstances to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. Roy v. State, 161 S.W.3d 30, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6712 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

1293. In a criminal trial, where defendant claimed that the trial court erred in excluding a handwritten note allegedly written by an assistant district attorney, defendant failed to preserve his argument that the note was admissible as a statement against interest where defendant did not offer the note as evidence at trial. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

1294. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence since defendant claimed the document was admissible because it contained statements against interest; however, he did not make this complaint at trial, so the appellate court would not consider it on review. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

1295. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, a witness's statement was properly admitted where it was sufficiently self-inculpatory to be reliable, and the statement was trustworthy because the declarant's guilt was not inconsistent with defendant's guilt. The evidence at trial indicated that two men committed the robbery, one who was the driver of a pick-up truck matching the description of defendant's truck, and defendant admitted being at the scene of the second robbery when he said in his statement that he stopped and the declarant got out of the truck with what appeared to be a shotgun. Davila v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4781 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2004).

1296. Defendant's mother's statement did not satisfy the Bingham test for a statement against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), as the redacted statement ultimately used by the trial court did not expose her to any liability for the crime in question; the statement was not sufficiently against the mother's own penal interests so as to overcome Confrontation Clause concerns about the reliability of hearsay statements. In re U. G., 128 S.W.3d 797, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1854 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

1297. In a case where defendant's cousin assisted him in the crime of aggravated robbery, the hearsay statement of the cousin confessing to the crime was admissible at defendant's trial as a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Lopez v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 6 2003).

1298. Where defendant was a passenger in a vehicle she had rented when it was pulled over by a sheriff's deputy, a consensual search led to the seizure of illegal drugs and the arrest of defendant and the driver, defendant was charged with unlawful possession, which required proof of intentional or knowing possession of the drugs, defendant consistently denied knowledge of the drugs, and the State relied upon circumstantial evidence to establish knowledge where the driver's statement to law enforcement, in which she claimed responsibility for the situation and asserted that she "used" defendant to obtain the rental vehicle and that defendant knew nothing about the drugs, was a statement against penal interest supported by corroborating evidence indicating its trustworthiness, and should have been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). James v. State, 102 S.W.3d 162, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 181 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

1299. Witness told the jury that a man told the witness that appellant was trying to get the man to say that he committed the crime, and this was clearly hearsay; the witness did not relay that part of the man's admission that was inculpatory of the man, that he killed one victim, and thus the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the statement pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

1300. In considering a Confrontation Clause analysis, error in admitting a hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a); the witness did not say that a man claimed that appellant killed two victims, the witness's testimony about the man's statement was not emphasized, and in light of other testimony and evidence of appellant's guilt of capital murder, the error was harmless. Boyd v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8661 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2001).

1301. In defendant's trial for murder, the testimony of two witnesses about the statements defendant's accomplice made to the witnesses were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), where the accomplice told the witnesses that the accomplice helped plan and carry out a kidnapping and murder, where the statements were made before either the accomplice or defendant were even suspected of the murder, and where the statements were trustworthy and reliable because they tended to subject the accomplice to criminal liability. Graham v. State, 3 S.W.3d 272, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7796 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1999).

1302. The record revealed that the trial court admitted a brother's statements to three different acquaintances about the crime evidence as declarations against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 (24), not as co-conspirator statements; the State was careful to elicit accounts only of statements made by the brother referring to "we," which included both him and defendant; the State developed independent corroborative facts, which verified the statements made by the brother; and there was evidence, which demonstrated that the statements were trustworthy under Rule 803(24). Dewberry v. State, 4 S.W.3d 735, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 115 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1131, 120 S. Ct. 2008, 146 L. Ed. 2d 958, 2000 U.S. LEXIS 3459 (2000).

1303. Testimony of a witness who would have testified that while he was in prison with defendant and another individual, the other individual admitted to stealing the vehicle that defendant was charged with driving was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) as an exception to the hearsay rule because defendant presented no corroborating evidence of the statement's trustworthiness; thus, the testimony did not fall within the Rule 803(24) exception. O'Brien v. State, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 5471 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 12 1996).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

1304. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the nurse who examined the victim after she made her outcry was permitted to testify about the victim's responses when asked why she was going to have the exam; it could be inferred that the victim knew it was important to tell the truth and that asking about the assaults was important to the child's medical diagnosis or treatment. Thomas v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 23 2013).

1305. At defendant's trial for multiple counts of injury to a child and aggravated sexual assault of a child, the State was permitted to present the testimony of a professional counselor under this rule indicating that the victim made an outcry to his foster mother before he discussed it with the counselor. Stewart v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8614 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 11 2013).

1306. Child abuse victim's statement to his doctor that he was being examined because his "dad did something bad" to him was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) as a statement made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment; treatment for sexual abuse included identifying and removing the abuser. Weeks v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3278, 2009 WL 1325461 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 14 2009).

1307. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a nurse's interpretation of the child victim's gesture as a statement of the child under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) because in her testimony, the nurse explained that the challenged remark in the forensic report simply meant that she confirmed with the victim that she did not state to defendant that she was "wondering" what he was going to do. Emry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2633, 2009 WL 1025725 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 16 2009).

1308. In a criminal prosecution for the sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in allowing the introduction of hearsay statements through the testimony of a nurse who examined the child during her initial hospital visit. Prater v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7096 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 15 2008).

1309. In a criminal prosecution for the sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in allowing the introduction of hearsay statements through the testimony of a nurse who examined the child during her initial hospital visit. Prater v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7100 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 15 2008).

1310. In a criminal prosecution for the sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in allowing the introduction of hearsay statements through the testimony of a nurse who examined the child during her initial hospital visit. Prater v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7103 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 15 2008).

1311. Child sexual abuse victim's statements to her school counselor were admissible under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803, because the counselor had been working with the victim for over a year, sometimes using play therapy, to explore her apparent lifelessness after visiting defendant, her grandfather. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

1312. Child sexual abuse victim's statements to her cousin after watching a television program involving a man being aggressive with a woman were admissible under the excited utterances exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803, because the victim was bawling and trembling after the show and, at age 7, did not have time or resources to fabricate her comments. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

1313. Defendant in a child sexual abuse case waived his objection to testimony by the child's school counselor on the grounds that she was not a licensed professional counselor as required by Tex. R. Evid. 803, because he did not raise his objection at trial. Madden v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2637 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 11 2008).

1314. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, there was no error in admitting the victim's statements, through the testimony and report of a sexual assault nurse examiner, even though no witnesses specifically testified that the victim understood the need to be truthful; the victim was responding to questions from a health-care provider while receiving medical care at the hospital and the statements were made at a time when the nurse had little or no information about what had happened and were consistent with the physical evidence. Escobedo v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1427 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 28 2008).

1315. In a criminal prosecution for indecency with a child, the trial court did not err by allowing a sexual assault nurse examiner to testify about statements made by the victim during the sexual assault examination; the child's statements were excepted from the hearsay rule per Tex. R. Evid. 803(4). Sharp v. State, 210 S.W.3d 835, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11033 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

1316. Statements about sexual abuse by a complainant to a school counselor were improperly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made three years after the abuse by a 14-year-old complainant, after she had told her mother about the abuse. Neill v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8684 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

1317. In a juvenile delinquency proceeding, the mother's testimony recounting the nine-year-old victim's outcry to her about the assault was admissible under the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule; the State was not required to comply with Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 54.031. In re M.A.M., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3826 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 5 2006).

1318. Outcry statement by a child sexual assault victim did not quality as an excited utterance because the statement was made almost two years after the first assault. The court rejected the argument that the "startling event" was a revelation made to the victim just prior to the outcry by her father's girlfriend because the testimony indicated that the victim considered how and what to reveal about the assault several months before she made her outcry to her father's girlfriend. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 25 2005).

1319. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his minor daughters, outcry testimony was properly admitted from two witnesses because the testimony contained information regarding specific instances of sexual contact and did not entirely overlap. In addition, testimony from a school nurse could also have been admissible for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment. Everett v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 795 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 2 2005).

1320. Although the exception created by Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) is not limited to statements by patients, the person making the statement must have an interest in proper diagnosis or treatment. Parents normally possess this interest in the well-being of their children; however, courts are not willing to extend this "interest" to the statement of a child. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

1321. For purposes of the hearsay exception set forth at Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), the person making the statement must have an interest in proper diagnosis or treatment, but there may be circumstances, especially in child sex abuse cases, in which the statement is motivated by improper reasons such as wanting to shift the blame or a personal dislike of the accused. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

1322. Any error in the admission of a social worker's testimony that a child to whom the social worker provided therapy stated that defendant had touched her inappropriately was cumulative of the social worker's properly admitted testimony on the same issue and thus did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Dunbar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4139 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 6 2004).

1323. In sexual assault case, complainant's hearsay statement to a hospital social worker was properly admitted and documented in the complainant's medical record where: (1) The complainant was aware that his mother had taken him to the hospital for a sexual assault examination; (2) for the purposes of a sexual assault examination, it was standard hospital procedure for a social worker to receive a history specifically regarding the abuse allegations; (3) the doctor expressly testified that the history obtained by the social worker was necessary for the diagnosis and treatment of the child; and (4) thus, the record demonstrated that the hospital social worker, participating as part of a team of medical personnel, obtained a history of the sexual abuse allegations in a critical early step necessary for the purposes of the diagnosis and treatment of a child admitted to undergo a sexual assault examination. French v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2924 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 1, 2004).

1324. Where a trial court erroneously admitted statements that were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) as spontaneous statements, the State filed to comply with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, which would have prevented introduction of statements of outcry witnesses; the admission of the hearsay evidence probably had an injurious influence on the jury's deliberation and therefore affected a substantial right of defendant, Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, such that reversal and remand for a new trial was warranted. Hughes v. State, 128 S.W.3d 247, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Tyler 2003).

1325. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : General Overview

1326. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the judgment for defendant's conviction of boating while intoxicated because the supervisor's testimony that the judgment bore a seal purporting to be that of the county district clerk would have satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In addition, as evidence of a finalized judgment of conviction, counsel could not have brought forth a sustainable objection based on hearsay. Reese v. State, 273 S.W.3d 344, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8518 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Confessions : General Overview

1327. In a murder trial, the trial court properly excluded, under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), portions of an accomplice's written statement that were uncorroborated. Gonzales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4532 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

1328. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an audio recording of the motorist's 911 call. It was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the district court to conclude that the relevant statements on the call were not inadmissible as hearsay, either because the statements on the call were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, or because the statements fell under one of the recognized exceptions to the hearsay rule. Condarco v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10741 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : General Overview

1329. Where defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit his co-conspirator's out-of-court statement in which he said that he was involved in the crime but that a third co-conspirator fired the shot that struck the victim; because the statement minimized his culpability in the seriousness of the offense and shifted the major blame to his co-conspirator, it was more of a blame-shifting statement than a blame-sharing statement. Perkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14372, 2013 WL 6459390 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 26 2013).

1330. In defendant's trial for possession of four grams or more but less than 200 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.115, the trial court properly admitted the recording of a telephone conversation between a confidential informant (CI) and the individual who purchased methamphetamine from defendant; the recording was properly admitted as to the purchaser-coconspirator under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(E) and was properly admitted as to the CI under Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) as a statement of the CI's then existing plan to provide the purchaser with transportation to a meeting place with defendant. Camacho v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5975, 2009 WL 2356885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

1331. Statements made by defendant's co-conspirators to a police officer were not so much against their own penal interests to reach the level of reliability as required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Barnes v. State, 56 S.W.3d 221, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 4834 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

1332. In defendant's trial for murder, the testimony of two witnesses about the statements defendant's accomplice made to the witnesses were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), where the accomplice told the witnesses that the accomplice helped plan and carry out a kidnapping and murder, where the statements were made before either the accomplice or defendant were even suspected of the murder, and where the statements were trustworthy and reliable because they tended to subject the accomplice to criminal liability. Graham v. State, 3 S.W.3d 272, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 7796 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1999).

1333. The record revealed that the trial court admitted a brother's statements to three different acquaintances about the crime evidence as declarations against interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803 (24), not as co-conspirator statements; the State was careful to elicit accounts only of statements made by the brother referring to "we," which included both him and defendant; the State developed independent corroborative facts, which verified the statements made by the brother; and there was evidence, which demonstrated that the statements were trustworthy under Rule 803(24). Dewberry v. State, 4 S.W.3d 735, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 115 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1131, 120 S. Ct. 2008, 146 L. Ed. 2d 958, 2000 U.S. LEXIS 3459 (2000).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : Statements During Conspiracy

1334. In defendant's robbery case, the court properly allowed testimony because the statement "It just didn't go as planned," inferentially tended to show that the coconspirator committed or attempted to commit the offense that was the subject of the conspiracy, i.e., to obtain some money, in Pampa, by some method. Davey Enriquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5183 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 7 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

1335. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly admitted a witness's testimony that defendant told her he had killed someone "in front of the bar" because the statement was an admission by a party; therefore, it was not hearsay. Additionally, defendant admitted to the trial court that the statement was a statement that exposed him to criminal liability and was probably a statement against interest. Walton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8046, 2009 WL 3326759 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 15 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 512, 178 L. Ed. 2d 379, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 8559 (U.S. 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Extrajudicial Statements

1336. In a trial for possession of marihuana, the court should have admitted a codefendant's statement taking responsibility for some of the drug under Tex. R. Evid 803; however, the error in excluding the statement was nonconstitutional and harmless because defendant was able to present a defense and to argue effectively that the drugs belonged to the codefendant and because the State consistently argued that both parties were guilty of the offense. Bradley v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4425 (Tex. App. Tyler May 24 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

1337. In defendant's capital murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion by excluding double hearsay testimony that an unknown person, maybe fitting a different person's description, used the murder weapon about two weeks before the offense. The witness never actually spoke to any of the declarants of the statements related to the shooting; he merely read the statements as reflected in a police report written by another officer. Marshall v. State, 210 S.W.3d 618, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2444 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

1338. Texas Department of Public Safety trooper's report of his arrest of defendant on suspicion of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated was admissible in an action to revoke defendant's driver's license for failure to submit to a breath test under an exception to the hearsay rule found at Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) & (C); the exception applied because Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.032(a)(4) imposed a duty on the trooper to submit a report detailing defendant's refusal to submit a breath specimen. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Pruitt, 75 S.W.3d 634, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2697 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

1339. In defendant's appeal from his conviction of capital murder, hearsay statement concerning the purchase of the murder weapon, which inculpated not only the declarant but defendant as well, was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of statement in that the statements were self-inculpatory, did not include non-self-inculpatory statements, and did not attempt to shift or spread blame, curry favor, avenge the declarant, or divert attention to another. Dewberry v. State, 979 S.W.2d 871, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7622 (Tex. App. Beaumont 1998), aff'd, 4 S.W.3d 735, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 115 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

1340. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

1341. Trial court did not abused its discretion by permitting the hearsay statements of defendant's brother through the testimony of other witnesses as a statement against interest exception to hearsay because the brother's statements to his girlfriend and his friend's mother subjected him to criminal liability for the murder of his stepfather, implicated both himself and defendant equally in the murder, and the corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the brother's statements. Coleman v. State, 428 S.W.3d 151, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 760, 2014 WL 257879 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

1342. Exhibit should not have been excluded on the basis of the hearsay objection, because the business records affidavit made by the custodian of records precisely tracked the requirements in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

1343. Defendant's conviction for assault causing bodily injury to a family member was appropriate because a reasonable person could have concluded that the victim made the statement at issue to the officer upon his arrival at the scene while under the excitement, fear, or pain of the event at the time she made the statement. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5173 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 15 2006).

1344. In a medical malpractice case, the trial court did not err in excluding, as hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), a statement by a witness who would have testified that the doctor was afraid that he had done something wrong; the statement was offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and the present sense impression rule of Tex. R. Evid. 803(1) did not apply because there was no evidence of contemporaneity. Daniels v. Yancey, 175 S.W.3d 889, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8789 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1345. Documents that a successor administrator of a decedent's estate used to establish the loss to the estate concerning the decedent's house, which occurred during the former administrator's administration, were not inadmissible hearsay in a breach of fiduciary duty action against the former administrator because the documents were business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) that related to the mortgage on the house. A number of the documents concerning the house were duplicates of evidence duly admitted in related proceedings, and there was no evidence indicating that the documents were inadmissible hearsay in the related proceedings. Sierad v. Barnett, 164 S.W.3d 471, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

witness' statement was videotaped immediately after the crash while emergency personnel were still trying to extricate the only live victim from a vehicle, and it was an exited utterance. Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Ramirez, 79 S.W.3d 113, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3358 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002), rev'd on other grounds, 159 S.W.3d 897, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 1429 (Tex. 2004).

1347. In defendant's appeal from his conviction of capital murder, hearsay statement concerning the purchase of the murder weapon, which inculpated not only the declarant but defendant as well, was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of statement in that the statements were self-inculpatory, did not include non-self-inculpatory statements, and did not attempt to shift or spread blame, curry favor, avenge the declarant, or divert attention to another. Dewberry v. State, 979 S.W.2d 871, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7622 (Tex. App. Beaumont 1998), aff'd, 4 S.W.3d 735, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 115 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Declarants

1348. At defendant's trial for theft of property, the trial court was permitted to admit a computer generated printout from a store register into evidence; because no person added anything to the record, there was no declarant and the computer printout was not hearsay for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Therefore, the State was not required to lay a predicate to admit the document as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Haskins v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4769, 2010 WL 2524797 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Nonverbal Conduct

1349. Where defendant was convicted of the aggravated sexual assault of his thirteen-year-old niece, the trial court erred by admitting the therapist's testimony that the child told her that family members were pressuring her and her mother to drop the charges; the State offered the therapist's statements to show how the child reacted to perceived pressures; the same testimony was admitted through other witnesses without objection. Arguelles v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 602 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Statements

1350. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant stipulated to eight prior convictions, which included a felony conviction for endangering a child, and the State did not err in calling a police officer to testify regarding the circumstances of that offense, which initially was investigated and charged as an aggravated sexual assault of a child, where the officer's statement was not hearsay because he identified the charge that he personally filed and the persons that he arranged for the prior child victim to meet; although the officer's testimony about the prior child victim's precise age was based on hearsay and thus erroneously admitted, there was a fair assurance that the admission of the single piece of hearsay testimony was not harmful error because defendant stipulated to his conviction for endangering a child, and evidence of that prior conviction was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, and as an exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 to the hearsay rule, and because the record as a whole included: (1) defendant's guilty plea to endangering a child; (2) the detailed evidence of the complainant's sexual abuse itself; (3) child pornography found on defendant's family computer; (4) the fact that the State did not emphasize the erroneously admitted evidence and concentrated on the "heinousness" of the offense; (5) defendant's cunning and violent character; (6) the effect of the abuse on the complainant for the rest of her life; and (7) defendant's eight prior convictions and numerous disciplinary infractions. Hunt v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 1 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Truth of Matter Asserted

1351. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an audio recording of the motorist's 911 call. It was not outside the zone of reasonable disagreement for the district court to conclude that the relevant statements on the call were not inadmissible as hearsay, either because the statements on the call were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, or because the statements fell under one of the recognized exceptions to the hearsay rule. Condarco v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10741 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2013).

1352. Court properly allowed a police officer to testify because the testimony explained how defendant became a suspect in the case and the status of the investigation; therefore, the officer's testimony was not inadmissible hearsay. Moreover, given that the officer responded to the victim's emergency call within fifteen minutes of the incident and that he observed the victim to be "very upset, nervous, and shaking," it was clear that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, fear, and excitement attendant to the incident. Nolen v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Unavailability : General Overview

1353. Admission of a co-offender's out-of-court statements at defendant's capital murder trial, which were allowed on the ground that they were against the co-offender's penal interest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), did not violate the Sixth Amendment because the co-offender's statements describing his involvement in the murder were not made at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, at a former trial, or as the product of police interrogation, but, instead, were made to friends and fellow gang members at an informal gathering. Thus, the statements were not the product of an ex parte examination or testimonial hearsay. Beltran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 555 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 27 2005).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Inferences

1354. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : General Overview

1355. In revocation of community supervision proceedings, while defendant conceded that his probation file was admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), defendant failed to object on the basis that the State never established the necessary predicate for admitting the negative evidence in the business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(7). The trial court, therefore, could properly admit the entire proffer under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Ferris v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1232, 2011 WL 664016 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

1356. In a criminal trial for theft of property where defendant was charged with financial exploitation based on undue influence, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of the Kelly bluebook value of a Ford Explorer that the victims purchased and signed over to defendant; the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803, the hearsay exception for published compilations. Jacks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2006).

1357. Inmate was not entitled to 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 relief on his claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the prosecution's evidence regarding the inmate's expulsion from middle school, because trial counsel reasonably believed that at least some evidence showing that the inmate had been expelled and possibly the reasons therefore was going to be admitted at trial, and counsel's decision to challenge that evidence on cross-examination was objectively reasonable. Gutierrez v. Dretke, 392 F. Supp. 2d 802, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32496 (W.D. Tex. 2005).

1358. In a trial for unlawfully carrying a handgun, the trial court properly admitted an officer's testimony about a witness's statement that defendant approached the car she was occupying, demanded that it be moved, and partially removed a gun from his pocket. The statement was an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), even though the record did not reflect how much time passed after the confrontation, because the officer testified that the witness was very upset and was crying. Spielman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3854 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 19 2005).

1359. Where defendant was charged with assaulting the victim in violation of a protective order, the trial court properly admitted the victim's hearsay statements to the arresting officer that she had had problems with defendant in the past. The testimony was admissible as a spontaneous statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Polley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11317 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 16 2004).

1360. In a criminal trial for aggravated assault, the investigating officer's testimony concerning the victim's statements at the scene identifying defendant as the man who attacked him the night before fell squarely into the present sense impression exception to the rule excluding hearsay. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2004).

1361. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court properly admitted the complainant's "excited utterances" to her aunt and the investigating officer where both the officer and the aunt spoke to the complainant shortly after the assault, she had visible injuries, and she was scared. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

1362. Defendant argued that the trial court erred in excluding an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) where, during the direct examination of a witness's uncle, the uncle testified that when the witness returned to the party after the shooting, he was crying and hysterical, and stated that he had been robbed; even if a statement might qualify as an exception to the hearsay rule, the burden was on the proponent of the evidence to invoke the exception and satisfy its requirements, and defendant failed to proffer the out-of-court statement as an exception to the hearsay rule and therefore did not meet his burden to establish the admissibility of the statement. Borner v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5220 (Tex. App. Dallas June 15 2004).

1363. Sexual assault victim, who was 14 at the time, understood that he was seeing the county youth services director to get help for committing sexual assault and that his statements to the director were made for the purpose of medical treatment; thus, hearsay evidence of defendant's extraneous sexual assault offenses against the victim was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) and defendant's conviction for sexual assault of a child was affirmed. Cannon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1105 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 4 2004).

1364. Where defendant was a passenger in a vehicle she had rented when it was pulled over by a sheriff's deputy, a consensual search led to the seizure of illegal drugs and the arrest of defendant and the driver, defendant was charged with unlawful possession, which required proof of intentional or knowing possession of the drugs, defendant consistently denied knowledge of the drugs, and the State relied upon circumstantial evidence to establish knowledge where the driver's statement to law enforcement, in which she claimed responsibility for the situation and asserted that she "used" defendant to obtain the rental vehicle and that defendant knew nothing about the drugs, was a statement against penal interest supported by corroborating evidence indicating its trustworthiness, and should have been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). James v. State, 102 S.W.3d 162, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 181 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

1365. Question of whether or not utterances factually meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(2) is within the discretion of the trial court. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

1366. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801 and 803(3), the statements made by a witness, that the victim told the witness that the defendant had been partying, tearing things up, and smoking pot in the victim's residence, amounted to the admission of inadmissible hearsay, and the trial court erred by admitting testimony regarding the events or existing conditions that were the cause of the victim's mental and emotional state. Skeen v. State, 96 S.W.3d 567, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8181 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

1367. Where an assault victim, defendant's common law wife, was still in the emotional grip of the assault when she made her statements to the responding officer, so that her out-of-court statements, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), fell under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, but she did not testify, and there was no showing the victim was not available to testify, admission of her statements violated appellant's constitutional right of confrontation. Johnson v. State, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 6689 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 4 2000), criticized by Hudson v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8270 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13, 2001).

1368. In defendant's appeal from his conviction of capital murder, hearsay statement concerning the purchase of the murder weapon, which inculpated not only the declarant but defendant as well, was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) because corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of statement in that the statements were self-inculpatory, did not include non-self-inculpatory statements, and did not attempt to shift or spread blame, curry favor, avenge the declarant, or divert attention to another. Dewberry v. State, 979 S.W.2d 871, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7622 (Tex. App. Beaumont 1998), aff'd, 4 S.W.3d 735, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 115 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

1369. Medical records that included a defendant's blood test results were properly admitted as a business record exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the exception was applicable to criminal proceedings so long as the reliability of the information were established. Serrano v. State, 936 S.W.2d 387, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 5029 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1996).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

1370. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child, his counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the attending nurse's testimony and report, because the hearsay exception set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) applied. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

1371. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant failed to preserve his Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) complaint for review where he objected to a witness's testimony regarding statements made by defendant's alleged accomplice on relevance grounds but did not object on hearsay grounds. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

1372. Admission of defendant's jail records in defendant's murder trial was proper under the business records exception to the hearsay rule because the records were not prepared for purposes of litigation and conviction, but they were instead part of a record routine for objective observation purposes. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

1373. Counsel was not required to object to a hearsay statement of the complainant admitted through the testimony of a police officer during a criminal trial for aggravated assault; the statement was more than likely an excited utterance admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2). Mathis v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9987 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 24 2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

1374. In a subrogation action, a trial court did not err by admitting a police report into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) because there was nothing to indicate that the report lacked trustworthiness. Moreover, because a large part of the report was admissible non-opinion evidence and a driver did not specifically object to the opinion statements, the trial court properly overruled an alleged driver's objection regarding expert opinion. Lawrence v. Geico Gen. Ins. Co., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5082, 2009 WL 1886177 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 2 2009).

1375. Defendant failed to overcome a presumption of reasonable professional assistance of counsel, even if there was a failure to preserve error since defense counsel did not continue to object each time the State asked questions that related to out-of-court statements by a sexual assault victim. Counsel was not questioned about his conduct, and it was possible that a new trial strategy had been formed based on the trial evidence; the victim's testimony had been impeached, her prior statements had been admitted into evidence over hearsay objections, and the jury had heard that defendant had threatened the victim. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1000, 2008 WL 5622655 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 11 2009).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

1376. Court properly relied upon an officer's unsworn hearsay document at defendant's suppression hearing because, although it was better practice to produce the witness or attach the documentary evidence to an affidavit, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 28.01, § 1(6) did not create a "best evidence" rule that mandated such a procedure in a motion to suppress hearing. The offense report included defendant's name, correct offense date, and specific information that coincided with the same basic information to which defendant testified at the hearing, and defendant did not argue that the offense report was, in any way, unauthentic, inaccurate, unreliable, or lacking in credibility. Ford v. State, 305 S.W.3d 530, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1440 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

1377. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting the child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule, before permitting the counselor to testify, the trial court had held a hearing under rule of Tex. R. Evid. 104 at which the State elicited testimony concerning the counselor's treatment of the complainant; the counselor testified that his eliciting of facts concerning the complainant's sexual abuse was an important part of her diagnosis and treatment, he provided a treatment-related reason for the timing of her statements, and he also testified that an important part of his work was ensuring that the complainant made truthful statements, and similar testimony had been held in other cases to support admission of child sexual abuse victim statements. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

1378. Even assuming that a trial court abused its discretion by admitting alleged hearsay statements regarding defendant's prior relationship with the murder victim, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights because: (1) the jury heard defendant testify to some of the same facts as the other witnesses, specifically that he and the victim fought, they argued over drugs, the victim filed charges against him, the victim sought a protective order against him, and he threw a rock at the victim; (2) defendant did not dispute that he had threatened the victim or been physically abusive in the past; (3) during closing argument, the State did not emphasize the prior instances of abuse, but focused on the events surrounding the victim's death; and (4) the record contained other evidence from which the jury could conclude that defendant committed the offense of murder. Sanders v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2535, 2011 WL 1304882 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 6 2011).

1379. Exhibits, which were summaries of business records compiled by a painter and his secretary two days after an airplane owner filed suit for breach of contract for failure to paint an airplane, were properly admitted as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) based on the painter's foundation testimony. Cano v. Nino's Paint & Body Shop, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2713, 2009 WL 1057622 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 16 2009).

1380. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a 9-1-1 tape in which a declarant was seeking police help after her boyfriend allegedly assaulted her because the declarant's statements constituted an excited utterance under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the statements were related to a startling event and were made at a point in time when the declarant was in an extremely excited emotional state as a direct result of the event. Dixon v. State, 244 S.W.3d 472, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9292 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

1381. Tenant should have timely sent a written notice of a lease extension by certified mail to the new landlord consistent with the literal terms of the lease amendment and the trial court did not err in not admitting two exhibits under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(15) hearsay exception because the new landlord had not treated the tenant's interpretation of its property interest consistently with the former landlord's interpretation in those exhibits. Tri-Steel Structures, Inc. v. Baptist Found., 166 S.W.3d 443, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4115 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

1382. In a criminal prosecution, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a prior conviction for purposes of enhancing punishment; because it was admitted pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), the business records exception to the hearsay rule, rather than Tex. R. Evid. 803(22), the public document exception. If the trial judge's decision is correct on any theory of law applicable to the case, it will be sustained. Macias v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10996 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 8 2004).

1383. Any error in the admission of a social worker's testimony that a child to whom the social worker provided therapy stated that defendant had touched her inappropriately was cumulative of the social worker's properly admitted testimony on the same issue and thus did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Dunbar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4139 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 6 2004).

1384. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

1385. Account statement attached to the affidavit of an employee of a promissory note assignee was improperly stricken by a trial court in a dispute over the note because the statement laid the proper foundation for each element of the business records exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Diversified Fin. Sys. v. Hill, O'Neal, Gilstrap & Goetz, P.C., 99 S.W.3d 349, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1647 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

1386. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude a videotape of the scene where victim died while certain portions of the videotape contained testimony falling within the hearsay exception for excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(2), and other portions contained hearsay falling within no recognized exception. Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

1387. Evidence was sufficient to show that defendant committed the offense of aggravated assault by intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causing either bodily injury or serious bodily injury to his wife by choking or strangling her with his hand, and that he used his hand as a deadly weapon during the commission of the offense; physician, in a prior trial, had testified as to the extent of the wife's injuries; the wife's statements to a paramedic at the time of the incident were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), and the wife was still suffering from the residual effects of the injuries, which included a stroke. Wesber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3376 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

1388. Declarant's statements were properly admitted as statements against interest because there were sufficient corroborating circumstances that clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the statements. The declarant made the statements in response to questions from his common law wife about his involvement in the robbery, the declarant's guilt was not inconsistent with defendants, and the testimony bore significant probative force and was valuable in proving the State's case in chief. Gonzalez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7084, 2011 WL 3849393 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2011).

1389. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the autopsy photographs because the complained-of exhibits were offered during the testimony of the medical examiner, the photographs did not reveal any damage caused by the autopsy and were used by the medical examiner during her testimony to explain the nature of the victim's wounds, the photographic exhibits illustrated and clarified the medical examiner's description of the injuries, including the force with which the injuries were inflicted, an issue addressing appellant's contention of self-defense, and although the photographs were in color and depicted pictures of the twenty-six sharp force injuries and stab wounds the victim suffered, they depicted nothing more than the reality of the brutal crime committed. Tran v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2942 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 18 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

1390. The State properly authenticated the booking sheet from a prior crime allegedly committed by defendant in the State of Washington as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and the records were not subject to exclusion because they contained hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Wood v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3254, 2012 WL 1448333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 25 2012).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

1391. Business records concerning a decedent and his health were admissible in a declaratory judgment action because evidence of the decedent's irrationality and dementia in the months preceding and following the signing of certain contracts naming his friend as the payable on death beneficiary was probative of the decedent's capacity to contract on the date at issue. In the Estate of Minton, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1061, 2014 WL 354527 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 30 2014).

1392. Daughter's statements in her affidavit signed two days after the night her mother came to pick her up were not statements of her then existing state of mind or spontaneous remarks made while a sensation was being experienced such that they were admissible; the affidavit containing the daughter's statements in a conservatorship proceeding nearly two years prior to her death were not relevant to the damages suffered by the father due to the loss of his daughter's companionship and society. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

1393. In the State's action under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA) that alleged that appellants, a husband and wife who operated a business assisting Spanish speaking individuals with immigration matters, had counseled consumers without legal authorization or qualification, appellants raised no valid complaints regarding the admissibility of the evidence and the trial court's rulings thereon where an exhibit consisting of a summary of the more than 2,180 G-28 forms filed by the husband was itself a business record entitled to be treated as other business records, making Tex. R. Evid. 1006 inapplicable, and where the testimony of an intelligence research specialist with the Citizenship and Immigration Services Branch of the United States Department of Homeland Security established the necessary predicate required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the specialist testified that the exhibit was a business record made in the ordinary course of business at Citizenship and Immigration Services, made at or near the time his department received the G-28 forms, by a person with knowledge of the events being recorded; furthermore, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a previous client of appellants who was testifying for the State to answer when asked if she obtained her residency status because any testimony going to the gravity of the harm done by engaging in the prohibited act was irrelevant and inadmissible. Avila v. State, 252 S.W.3d 632, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

1394. In a drug case, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant's girlfriend to testify that another person had stated that the contraband belonged to him; the proffered evidence was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 402, to whether defendant possessed a controlled substance with intent to deliver it, in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(a), and defendant offered no independent facts corroborating the hearsay statement under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24). Menton v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7799 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 22 2005).

1395. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court erred in admitting the arresting officer's commentary from the audio portion of a videotape taken from his patrol car while following defendant as the commentary was hearsay; the observations were not made by the officer while testifying at trial, as they were offered to prove that the officer had probable cause to stop defendant, and where the officer's comments were matters observed by a police officer in a criminal case, they were excluded from the public records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) for admission at trial. Thompson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10088 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2003).

1396. In a driving while intoxicated case, the trial court erred in admitting the arresting officer's commentary from the audio portion of a videotape taken from his patrol car while following defendant as the commentary was hearsay; the observations were not made by the officer while testifying at trial, as they were offered to prove that the officer had probable cause to stop defendant, and where the officer's comments were matters observed by a police officer in a criminal case, they were excluded from the public records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) for admission at trial. Thompson v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10088 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2003).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : General Overview

1397. In a child sexual assault case, the State was properly permitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) to elicit testimony from the sexual assault nurse examiner about the complainant's report of sexual abuse for the purpose of a rape examination. The record showed that the complainant knew she was being seen by the nurse not only so she could be treated but also so her family could determine if she was lying about her allegations of sexual abuse, and she knew it was important for her to tell the truth. Bahle v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3141, 2012 WL 1382568 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 23 2012).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Autopsies

1398. In a murder trial, the victim's autopsy report was admissible under the public records exception to the hearsay rule. The forensic pathologist was not "other law enforcement personnel" under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), in that the record did not support that the autopsy report was other than an objective, routine, scientific determination of an unambiguous factual nature. Denoso v. State, 156 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 878 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood Alcohol

1399. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding the record of the results of a test of defendant's blood-alcohol level sufficiently reliable to be admissible under the business-record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and not to have deprived him of his constitutional right to meaningful confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses against him, because the blood-alcohol test results were part of a group of records produced by the hospital pursuant to a subpoena, and the records were accompanied by the affidavit of the custodian of the hospital's records in which the custodian recited that he kept the records in the regular course of business and that the records were made in the regular course and scope of the hospital's business at or near the time of the event. Furthermore, the surgeon who treated defendant testified that, although he did not conduct or observe the blood draw, he and other doctors routinely relied on such procedures and records in treating patients, and there was no evidence that an unauthorized or unqualified person drew the blood or that the persons who drew or tested the blood did their jobs inappropriately. Blackwell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1816 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

1400. In a criminal trial for the offense of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court was permitted to exclude evidence of a blood test suggesting the victim was intoxicated, and proof of fundamental trustworthiness, or indicia of reliability of the blood test result was missing under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Blaylock v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 140 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 8 2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Daubert Standard

1401. Testimony of a trucking company's safety administrative coordinator was properly admitted because her purpose was to explain how global positioning systems (GPS) data, which another witness's testimony showed was reliable, became a business record of the trucking company. Furthermore, her testimony established her understanding of the many systems the company used to track its drivers and showed that the system of transmitting and receiving the GPS data was automatic. Brown v. State, 163 S.W.3d 818, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3949 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : DNA

1402. Under Tex. R. Evid. 803(18), defense counsel could have cross-examined a DNA analyst with relevant scientific literature regarding the desirability of retaining a portion of the DNA evidence for additional testing. The failure to do so was relevant to the analysis of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Ex Parte Napper, 322 S.W.3d 202, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1209 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Sobriety Tests

1403. In a criminal trial arising from a collision, the other driver's out-of-court statements were admissible as excited utterance because they were made shortly after the collision while the driver was still in her wrecked vehicle and were made to her daughter, not to law enforcement officers. Pointe v. State, 371 S.W.3d 527, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4295, 2012 WL 1948880 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 30 2012).

1404. Affidavit of an arresting officer on form DIC-23, that contained observations and factual findings resulting from his investigation, was properly admitted under the public records exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in an administrative hearing on the suspension of a driver's license; after a person has been arrested and has refused to submit to a breath test, a peace officer is required to submit a written report to the Director of the Texas Department of Public Safety pursuant to Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.032, and the report is admissible unless the officer fails to appear at a scheduled hearing after receipt of a timely subpoena. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Struve, 79 S.W.3d 796, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2002).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Toxicology

1405. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting the results of a drug test into evidence under the business records exception because the actual results of the test were not included in the admitted medical records; instead, a notation of the results was included on a summary page, which did not state what was tested, who took the sample, when the sample was taken, or what laboratory conducted the testing. In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

1406. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the results were trustworthy because they showed the doctor who ordered the test, the time and date that the test was collected and received, and that the test was "presumptive positive" for amphetamine. In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

1407. In a personal injury case, the court did not err by admitting a redacted accident report because the investigator stated an opinion that appellee "failed to yield the right of way," and the trial court chose to exclude the investigator's narrative. Additionally, the record showed that appellee conceded at trial that she caused the collision. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

1408. Because the rules of evidence allowed an expert to draw inferences from the underlying facts or data, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 74.351 did not prohibit experts from making inferences based on medical history, and the absence of an entry in the records of a regularly conducted activity was admissible to show the nonoccurence of the matter, the nurse's inferences, and the fact that she drew some of them from what was not in the patient's medical records, did not render her expert report defective. Azle Manor, Inc. v. Vaden, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8414 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

1409. Testimony of a trucking company's safety administrative coordinator was properly admitted because her purpose was to explain how global positioning systems (GPS) data, which another witness's testimony showed was reliable, became a business record of the trucking company. Furthermore, her testimony established her understanding of the many systems the company used to track its drivers and showed that the system of transmitting and receiving the GPS data was automatic. Brown v. State, 163 S.W.3d 818, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3949 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

1410. Court did not err by admitting a drug analyst-supervisor to testify in the punishment phase of defendant's aggravated robbery case that the substances removed from the car that defendant was driving were marijuana and cocaine because the trial court implicitly found that the supervisor qualified as an expert, and therefore, the State had no burden to invoke an exception to the hearsay rule; the trial court properly admitted the expert testimony that the substances were cocaine and marijuana because it was not hearsay and was not required to be based on her personal knowledge. Moore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6844 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 24 2007).

1411. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly allowed expert testimony by a nurse concerning her finding no trauma to the child's genitals in her examination because she was qualified by her knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education as an expert witness in the field of child sexual abuse; she testified that she relied on a study in reaching her opinion, and therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the nurse to testify about the results of the study. Archer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6612 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 17 2007).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

1412. Trial court acted within its discretion during defendant's trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in admitting the victim's medical records without expert testimony because Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) plainly authorized the admission of the medical records without any witness, and while the State might have offered expert testimony to explain the medical records to the jury, Tex. R. Evid. 702 did not require such testimony. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

1413. Trial court's admission of an aggravated assault victim's medical records, without an opportunity for defendant to first question the records' author on voir dire, did not violate defendant's rights under Tex. R. Evid. 705(b) because the language of Rule 705 contained no inference or even a suggestion that its provisions overrode the admissibility of a physician's observations, diagnoses, or opinions properly admitted as a business record. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

1414. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an expert's reliance on a medical report in forming his conclusion that the non-specific red bumps he found in the victim's genital area were caused by the Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV) where, regardless of whether the report was properly admitted as part of the State's exhibit, the expert could have properly testified to the basis for his diagnosis even though part of the data he relied on was hearsay; the report was also cumulative of all the other evidence at trial showing that the victim had been infected with HSV. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

1415. In a sexual assault on a child case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of defendant's medical records on the ground that the State failed to lay a proper foundation under Tex. R. Evid. 803 where he failed to show that the State would have been unable to establish the elements if counsel had objected. Further, other evidence established that defendant had been infected with herpes prior to the sexual assault. Coker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799 (Tex. App. El Paso May 27 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Lay Witnesses : Personal Knowledge

1416. At defendant's probation revocation hearing, the contents of his probation file were admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803; although defendant's current probation officer did not have personal knowledge of all the entries in the probation file, he testified that defendant's former probation officer prepared the file and had personal knowledge of the facts recorded in the file. Canseco v. State, 199 S.W.3d 437, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4664 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Family Law : Child Custody : Awards : General Overview

1417. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the results were trustworthy because they showed the doctor who ordered the test, the time and date that the test was collected and received, and that the test was "presumptive positive" for amphetamine. In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

Family Law : Family Protection & Welfare : Cohabitants & Spouses : Abuse, Endangerment & Neglect

1418. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his wife, who recanted in her trial testimony, the trial court properly admitted statements that the victim made shortly after the assault as excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid 803; it was reasonable to find that the victim was still dominated by the emotions, excitement, fear, or pain of being sexually assaulted, hit, and threatened with death, over the course of several hours. Davis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 352 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 18 2007).

Family Law : Guardians : Appointment

1419. Jury's verdict finding that an individual was incapacitated was upheld because two physicians' reports were properly admitted under the business records exception of Tex. R. Evid. 803 since it was the regular course of business to make the reports and there was no question about trustworthiness. In re Parker, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9428 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 29 2007).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

1420. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, it was reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 801 to admit hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father of a different child, including written statements by two adults relating to the child's reports of sexual abuse, a child abuse protocol from a physical examination, and an arrest warrant with an affidavit containing reports of the purported assault. Those documents were not admissible under either the business records or public records exceptions of Tex. R. Evid. 803 because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

1421. In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, the trial court did not err in admitting the entire Department of Family & Protective Services (DFPS) case file over the father's hearsay objection. DFPS laid the proper predicate for admission of the file as a business or public record. Rogers v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 175 S.W.3d 370, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1327 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

1422. In a termination of parental rights case, medical records relevant to the child's fall from stairs were generally admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6). In re K.L., 442 S.W.3d 396, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4294 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 31 2012).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Procedure

1423. In a termination of parental rights case, a family service plan that had been filed with the court as required by Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 263.101, was properly admitted as a public record. In the Interest of R.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8394, 2011 WL 5026229 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

1424. In a termination of parental rights case, medical records were properly admitted as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 802, 803(6) because the custodian affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the Interest of R.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8394, 2011 WL 5026229 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

Labor & Employment Law : Disability & Unemployment Insurance : Unemployment Compensation : Review

1425. On a trial de novo following a denial of unemployment benefits, there was no competent evidence on which to base a summary judgment upholding the decision that the employee was discharged for misconduct because the Texas Workforce Commission attached the entire record of its hearing to the motion. The record contained items that were irrelevant to de novo review, such as the Commission's findings, and an affidavit from the custodian of records did not satisfy the requirement that admissible parts of the record be introduced independently. Gardini v. Tex. Workforce Comm'n & Dell Prods., L.P., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10029 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 12 2004).

Labor & Employment Law : Discrimination : Gender & Sex Discrimination : Proof : General Overview

1426. In a suit for gender-based employment discrimination, it was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(c) to admit a determination letter from the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which concluded that a violation of Title VII occurred. Tex. Hhs Comm'n v. Wolfe, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5566, 2010 WL 2789777 (Tex. App. Austin July 14 2010).

Military & Veterans Law : Military Justice : Evidence : Writings & Real Evidence

1427. Probate court properly excluded the exhibits offered by a decedent's surviving spouse and administratrix of his estate at the special appearance hearing of the decedent's Florida business associate because the exhibits were business records of a group of Texas entities owned by the business associate, and they were not authenticated by the administratrix merely by virtue of her role as administratrix of the decedent's estate. Allen v. Havens, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2088 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

Real Property Law : Landlord & Tenant : Lease Agreements : Residential Leases

1428. In an appeal from default judgment entered against a tenant in an eviction proceeding, a notice from an electric and gas company about leaking gas pipes, was, at best, mere hearsay, given the tenant's failure to properly authenticate the filing. Therefore, the reviewing court declined to consider the document as evidence that the home was not suitable for habitation. Raines v. Gomez, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6924 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 30 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 143 S.W.3d 867, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7605 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Operator Licenses : General Overview

1429. Peace officer's sworn DIC-23 report stating that a driver refused an alcohol concentration test was admissible in license suspension proceedings as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 803, and the failure to fill in a blank for the number of pages did not overcome the presumption of admissibility. Hooker v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 329 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 17 2008).

1430. Texas Department of Public Safety trooper's report of his arrest of defendant on suspicion of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated was admissible in an action to revoke defendant's driver's license for failure to submit to a breath test under an exception to the hearsay rule found at Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B) & (C); the exception applied because Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.032(a)(4) imposed a duty on the trooper to submit a report detailing defendant's refusal to submit a breath specimen. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Pruitt, 75 S.W.3d 634, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2697 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

1431. Peace officer's sworn report, which the officer signed under oath before a notary, properly admitted at an administrative driver's license revocation hearing under the public record exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R.

Evid. 803(8). Texas Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Cortinas, 996 S.W.2d 885, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7791 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1998).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Operator Licenses : Revocation & Suspension

1432. Where the Texas Department of Public Safety appealed a trial court's judgment reversing an administrative law judge's (ALJ) decision to suspend a driver's license pursuant to Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.035, a peace officer's report was admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(C), even if the report was unsworn. The ALJ acted within his discretion in admitting the report and the administrative decision was supported by substantial evidence. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Todd, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6455, 2014 WL 2628139 (Tex. App. Dallas June 12 2014).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Vehicle Registration : General Overview

1433. In a driving while intoxicated trial, an officer was properly allowed to testify regarding defendant's vehicle registration because vehicle registration records were from a public agency charged with the duty of maintaining said records and thus were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803. Blair v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 25 2008).

Tex. Evid. R. 804

THIS DOCUMENT IS CURRENT THROUGH August 16, 2020

Rule 804 Exceptions to the Rule Against Hearsay -- When the Declarant is Unavailable as a Witness

(a) Criteria for Being Unavailable.--A declarant is considered to be unavailable as a witness if the declarant:

(1)is exempted from testifying about the subject matter of the declarant's statement because the court rules that a privilege applies;

(3)testifies to not remembering the subject matter;

(4)cannot be present or testify at the trial or hearing because of death or a thenexisting infirmity, physical illness, or mental illness; or

(5)is absent from the trial or hearing and the statement's proponent has not been able, by process or other reasonable means, to procure the declarant's attendance or testimony.

But this subdivision (a) does not apply if the statement's proponent procured or wrongfully caused the declarant's unavailability as a witness in order to prevent the declarant from attending or testifying.

(b) The Exceptions.--The following are not excluded by the rule against hearsay if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(1) Former Testimony.--Testimony that:

(A)when offered in a civil case:

(i)was given as a witness at a trial or hearing of the current or a different proceeding or in a deposition in a different proceeding; and

(ii)is now offered against a party and the party - or a person with similar interest - had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross-, or redirect examination.

(B)when offered in a criminal case:

(i)was given as a witness at a trial or hearing of the current or a different proceeding; and

(ii)is now offered against a party who had an opportunity and similar motive to develop it by direct, cross-, or redirect examination; or

(iii)was taken in a deposition under - and is now offered in accordance with - chapter 39 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(2) Statement Under the Belief of Imminent Death.--A statement that the declarant, while believing the declarant's death to be imminent, made about its cause or circumstances.

(3) Statement of Personal or Family History.--A statement about:

(A)the declarant's own birth, adoption, legitimacy, ancestry, marriage, divorce, relationship by blood, adoption or marriage, or similar facts of personal or family history, even though the declarant had no way of acquiring personal knowledge about that fact; or

(B)another person concerning any of these facts, as well as death, if the declarant was related to the person by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the person's family that the declarant's information is likely to be accurate.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Oral Depositions

1. In a capital murder case, because defendant's civil deposition was not hearsay when offered against her, Tex. R. Evid. 804 was inapplicable and any noncompliance with the rule was irrelevant. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Briefs

2. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

3. Witness testimony from a first murder trial was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1) and did not violate U.S. Const. amend. VI because the State made a good-faith effort to obtain a witness for a second trial; an investigator had exhausted his contacts with the friends and family of the witness, and any further efforts could have reasonably been deemed futile by the trial court. Because the investigator was unable to determine where the witness was located, a writ of attachment would have been futile as well. Reed v. State, 312 S.W.3d 682, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7472 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 24 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

4. Defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02(b) for murdering his roommate, on the theory that he participated as a party to murder pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(a)(2), was supported by sufficient factual evidence because: (1) the victim's statement after he was shot in the neck, which qualified as a dying declaration under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(2), identifying a second man as the shooter and placing defendant in the victim's bedroom when the shooting occurred was corroborated by three detached witnesses; (2) the jury could have reasonably inferred from the evidence that defendant aided the second man in the commission of the offense by providing him the only available access to the victim at that time of the night; (3) the victim, who was afraid of defendant, had requested that defendant vacate the apartment within a week; and (4) according to the victim's dying declaration, the second man said that the shooting was payback because he was arrested at the crack house, and the crack house was closed down as a result. The jury was free to disbelieve defendant's statement to police and testimony that denied his involvement, to reconcile any discrepancies in the testimony before it, and to judge the credibility of the witnesses. Moya v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4577 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

5. In a prosecution for indecency with a child by contact and aggravated sexual assault, the trial court did not err by admitting a social worker's testimony concerning the mother's and child's statements during an interview at the hospital under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) exception to the rule against hearsay as the social worker's role was similar to that of an intake nurse in assisting a doctor in conducting a medical examination. Sledge v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2247 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 11 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Accessories : Aiding & Abetting

6. Defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02(b) for murdering his roommate, on the theory that he participated as a party to murder pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(a)(2), was supported by sufficient factual evidence because: (1) the victim's statement after he was shot in the neck, which qualified as a dying declaration under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(2), identifying a second man as the shooter and placing defendant in the victim's bedroom when the shooting occurred was corroborated by three detached witnesses; (2) the jury could have reasonably inferred from the evidence that defendant aided the second man in the commission of the offense by providing him the only available access to the victim at that time of the night; (3) the victim, who was afraid of defendant, had requested that defendant vacate the apartment within a week; and (4) according to the victim's dying declaration, the second man said that the shooting was payback because he was arrested at the crack house, and the crack house was closed down as a result. The jury was free to disbelieve defendant's statement to police and testimony that denied his involvement, to reconcile any discrepancies in the testimony before it, and to judge the credibility of the witnesses. Moya v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4577 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

7. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

8. In a murder case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's statement regarding who shot him because the victim expressed that he was scared of dying, a statement that clearly demonstrated that he thought his death was imminent, and was thus admissible as a dying declaration. Gomez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4787 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 21 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

9. In a capital murder case, appellant's confrontation rights were not violated by the admission of statements from his wife regarding injuries allegedly inflicted by appellant because they were admissible as dying declarations under

Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(2); testimony about the severity of the wife's injuries was circumstantial evidence showing that she believed that her death was imminent, and her statements were directed at revealing the cause and circumstances of her impending death. Although she was mistaken about the age of her children, she was clear with regard to the circumstances causing her injuries, and she accurately provided her home address and that of her friend. Denson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5971, 2012 WL 3025845 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 25 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

10. In a case involving sentencing for a theft offense, because appellant did not object to a witness taking the stand where there was inadequate notice, the complaint was waived. Moreover, the witness was only called to read a victim's prior testimony, which was admissible due to his death under Tex. R. Evid. 804(a)(4). Kennedy v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6506, 2012 WL 3201924 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 8 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : General Overview

11. Determining whether evidence comes in under Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 804(b)(1), which admits testimony based on the unavailability of the declarant, is a question for the trial court to resolve, reviewable on appeal only under an abuse of discretion standard. Caldwell v. State, 916 S.W.2d 674, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Texarkana 1996).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

12. In defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in excluding the former testimony of a witness from a co-defendant's trial because the requested excerpt of testimony contained both admissible and inadmissible evidence, and it was defendant's burden to segregate and specifically offer the portions that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1); further, any error was harmless because substantially similar testimony was admitted into evidence. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10655 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

13. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

14. In a case in which defendant was convicted of murder, defendant did not prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his trial counsel's representation was deficient where, although he claimed that trial counsel did not call witnesses who would have supported his contention that his cousin killed the victim, it could not be said that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to introduce evidence that was inadmissible because: (1) neither the witnesses nor the proffered testimony attacked the cousin's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, nor did their testimony establish he had been convicted of a crime within the parameters of Tex. R. Evid. 609; and (2) as to testimony by defendant's grandmother and uncle about what the cousin's father told them, that evidence was clearly hearsay, and defendant did not demonstrate on the record any exception that would have permitted the admission of those statements. Moreover, defendant did not establish that, but for his counsel's failure to call the witnesses, there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different because there were three eyewitnesses to the murder, one of whom had no relationship to anyone other than the victim, and therefore no motive to lie, and his testimony was corroborated by the other two eyewitnesses. Aquino v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7391, 2009 WL 3030749 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 23 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

15. In a case involving a repossession of a vehicle by a creditor, a debtor's claim that a trial court erred by failing to admit exhibits on hearsay grounds was inadequately briefed where the debtor did not explain whether the exhibits were not hearsay or whether they were hearsay, but nevertheless should have been admitted under some exception to the hearsay rule. Flores v. James Wood Fin. Llc, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 20 2013).

16. Statements of the victim's friend were not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804, because none of the exceptions in Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1)--(3) applied, and Tex. R. Evid. 804(a) was not a hearsay exception and only provided guidance as to who was an unavailable witness. Kresse v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3031, 2010 WL 1633383 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 22 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Dying Declarations : General Overview

17. In defendant's capital murder case, the contents of the 911 call the victim made after she was shot was properly admitted as a dying declaration because, when police and paramedics arrived at the location that the caller had given them, they found the victim in her bed, bleeding profusely from a gunshot wound to her head. Gardner v. State, 306 S.W.3d 274, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1441 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

18. In defendant's murder case, a witness was properly allowed to testify to the victim's statements made at the hospital because it was undisputed that his injuries were severe and his prognosis was grim. Given the extent of the victim's injuries, the witness's impression that the victim knew there was a possibility he would die after being removed from the ventilator, and the giving of last rites, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony under the dying declarations exception to the hearsay rule. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

19. In a murder case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's statement regarding who shot him because the victim expressed that he was scared of dying, a statement that clearly demonstrated that he thought his death was imminent, and was thus admissible as a dying declaration. Gomez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4787 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 21 2007).

20. Admission of the stepfather's dying declaration that defendant stabbed him did not contribute to his conviction or punishment and was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, because the identity of the person who stabbed the stepfather was never an issue at trial. Carrillo v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1374 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 23 2007).

21. In a juvenile defendant's murder case, the court erred in admitting a statement of the victim, a taxicab driver, under a hearsay exception because, although the victim was clearly unavailable at the time of trial, his statement to the dispatcher identifying the pick-up and drop-off locations did not fall within any of the exceptions listed in Tex. R. Evid. 804(b). In re E.C.D., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1270 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 21 2007).

22. Defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02(b) for murdering his roommate, on the theory that he participated as a party to murder pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(a)(2), was supported by sufficient factual evidence because: (1) the victim's statement after he was shot in the neck, which qualified as a dying declaration under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(2), identifying a second man as the shooter and placing defendant in the victim's bedroom when the shooting occurred was corroborated by three detached witnesses; (2) the jury could have reasonably inferred from the evidence that defendant aided the second man in the commission of the offense by providing him the only available access to the victim at that time of the night; (3) the victim, who was afraid of defendant, had requested that defendant vacate the apartment within a week; and (4) according to the victim's dying declaration, the second man said that the shooting was payback because he was arrested at the crack house, and the crack house was closed down as a result. The jury was free to disbelieve defendant's statement to police and testimony that denied his involvement, to reconcile any discrepancies in the testimony before it, and to judge the credibility of the witnesses. Moya v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4577 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Dying Declarations : Belief of Imminent Death

23. In a murder trial, it was proper to admit an officer's testimony about the victim's statement to him because it was a dying declaration. A finding that the statement concerned the cause and circumstances of what the victim believed to be impending death was supported by evidence that she was bleeding profusely from stab wounds and said she was dying and that she had gone voluntarily with defendant but when she wanted to leave he refused to let her go and became angry and began to stab her. Valdez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8686, 2012 WL 4928905 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 17 2012).

24. In a capital murder case, appellant's confrontation rights were not violated by the admission of statements from his wife regarding injuries allegedly inflicted by appellant because they were admissible as dying declarations under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(2); testimony about the severity of the wife's injuries was circumstantial evidence showing that she believed that her death was imminent, and her statements were directed at revealing the cause and circumstances of her impending death. Although she was mistaken about the age of her children, she was clear with regard to the circumstances causing her injuries, and she accurately provided her home address and that of her friend. Denson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5971, 2012 WL 3025845 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 25 2012).

25. In defendant's murder case, a witness was properly allowed to testify to the victim's statements made at the hospital because it was undisputed that his injuries were severe and his prognosis was grim. Given the extent of the victim's injuries, the witness's impression that the victim knew there was a possibility he would die after being removed from the ventilator, and the giving of last rites, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony under the dying declarations exception to the hearsay rule. Sadler v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2962, 2009 WL 1163407 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Family Records & Statements

26. Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a descendant of the dominant estate's original owner, including events pre-dating the descendant's birth and the use of the purported easement. Under case law, such testimony was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(19), (20), 804(b)(3). Perkins v. Krauter Family P'ship, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8399 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 22 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Former Testimony of Unavailable Declarants

27. Trial court's exclusion of the witness's testimony was not an abuse of its discretion because his unsworn statement was not testimony. The statement was neither notarized nor sworn to as part of a judicial proceeding and there was no examination to develop the assertions contained in the statement by direct, cross, or redirect examination. Lee v. State, 442 S.W.3d 569, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8192 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 30 2014).

28. In defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in excluding the former testimony of a witness from a co-defendant's trial because the requested excerpt of testimony contained both admissible and inadmissible evidence, and it was defendant's burden to segregate and specifically offer the portions that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1); further, any error was harmless because substantially similar testimony was admitted into evidence. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10655 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

29. At defendant's trial for murder, the trial court did not err by admitting the prior testimony from an accomplice witness; he was unavailable under the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 804 because he invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Lockridge v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6147 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 17 2013).

30. Trial court did not err in excluding the son's expert's prior testimony because he did not prove she was unavailable, Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1). Massey v. Allen Nat'l Prop., L.L.C., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 441, 2013 WL 173737 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

31. Admission of testimony from a prior hearing pertained to the introduction of the transcript from a prior hearing in which two witnesses testified who were not available to testify at trial; no authority would support reversal on this basis. In the Interest of H.L., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5964, 2012 WL 3025912 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 25 2012).

32. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request to present the prior sworn testimony of a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 804; without any evidence that defendant made any effort to locate the witness from August 2005 until November 2005, the date of trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that defendant failed to show a goof faith effort to obtain the witness's presence at trial and that the witness was unavailable to testify at trial. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3444 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 3 2007).

33. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony; the testimony was admissible because the complainant was not unavailable. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

34. Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's deposition testimony taken in a civil suit; because the deposition was not hearsay, no hearsay exception was needed, making Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1) and its reference to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. ch. 39 irrelevant. Ortega v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1941 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 16 2005).

35. Borrower's former trial testimony was not hearsay, but was an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2); as such, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not require the trial court to have found the borrower unavailable under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1) as a preliminary condition to admitting his testimony. Oyster Creek Fin. Corp. v. Richwood Invs. II, Inc., 176 S.W.3d 307, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7269 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

36. Reasonable minds could disagree as to whether defendant's trial counsel demonstrated a good-faith effort to secure a witness's attendance at his second trial by only contacting family members; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's request to declare the witness unavailable under Tex. R. Evid. 804(a)(5) for purposes of using the witness's prior testimony. Robinson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1969, 2014 WL 700760 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 20 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

37. In a prosecution for indecency with a child by contact and aggravated sexual assault, the trial court did not err by admitting a social worker's testimony concerning the mother's and child's statements during an interview at the hospital under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) exception to the rule against hearsay as the social worker's role was similar to that of an intake nurse in assisting a doctor in conducting a medical examination. Sledge v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2247 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 11 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Present Sense Impression : General Overview

38. Written statement made by a murder victim four months before her death that described a physical altercation with defendant was not admissible as a statement of personal or family history because although the State pointed to the victim's statement describing her confrontation with defendant about his infidelities with another woman and claimed that amounted to a statement about the victim's marriage to defendant, there was no mention of the marital relationship in the victim's statement; moreover, parties did not need to be married in order to "cheat" on one another. Barrett v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2251, 2014 WL 792123 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 27 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : Confrontation Clause Requirements

39. In an assault case, the Confrontation Clause was not implicated, despite the testimonial nature of a witness's written statement. Although the witness appeared in court, she did not remember anything that happened on the day of the assault, nor could the witness remember what she told a school security officer about the assault. In re M.H.V.-p., 341 S.W.3d 553, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3348 (Tex. App. El Paso May 4 2011).

40. Although defendant, who was convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child, asserted his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated when the trial court allowed the State to read into evidence the testimony a witness gave at a pretrial hearing during which the witness testified about an outcry statement made to her, defendant's motive to cross-examine the witness at the pretrial hearing was similar to his stated motive for cross-examining her at trial. Therefore, defendant was not denied his constitutional right to confront a witness at trial. Sanchez v. State, 335 S.W.3d 256, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8765 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 3 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

41. Witness's comment about looking for defendant to retrieve a portion of the stolen money could have been deemed as against the witness's interests and not one that the declarant would have wanted others to hear; it was not said under oath or at any trial, but was volunteered to defendant's girlfriend, and nothing suggested that the information was part of a conversation involving an attempt to obtain evidence for use in a later prosecution, and thus the court did not find error in the decision to find the comment as non-testimonial for Confrontation Clause purposes. Boyd v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2787 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 11 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

42. In defendant's sexual assault case, the trial court did not err in permitting the prosecutor to elicit testimony from a witness regarding prior consistent statements the victim made because defendant's wife testified that she believed the victim fabricated the sexual assault. The trial court could reasonably have concluded that the defense charged recent fabrication or improper motive, and that the prior statements were closer in time to the incident and made under circumstances and at a time where there was no "supposed motive to falsify." Weatherly v. State, 283 S.W.3d 481, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2435 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

43. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's testimony regarding her examination under oath conducted to settle a civil claim for insurance proceeds in her criminal trial for arson, because the statements under oath were admissions by defendant; since defendant's examination under oath was not hearsay when offered against her, no hearsay exception was needed to admit the statements. Montgomery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7223, 2009 WL 2933749 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 15 2009).

44. In a capital murder case, because defendant's civil deposition was not hearsay when offered against her, Tex. R. Evid. 804 was inapplicable and any noncompliance with the rule was irrelevant. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Unavailability : General Overview

45. In a juvenile defendant's murder case, the court erred in admitting a statement of the victim, a taxicab driver, under a hearsay exception because, although the victim was clearly unavailable at the time of trial, his statement to the dispatcher identifying the pick-up and drop-off locations did not fall within any of the exceptions listed in Tex. R. Evid. 804(b). In re E.C.D., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1270 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 21 2007).

46. Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a descendant of the dominant estate's original owner, including events pre-dating the descendant's birth and the use of the purported easement. Under case law, such testimony was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(19), (20), 804(b)(3). Perkins v. Krauter Family P'ship, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8399 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 22 2004).

47. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it did not admit a written statement from the daughter because the husband had not shown that he had made a good faith effort to procure the daughter's attendance at the hearing or to otherwise procure her sworn testimony. In re Marriage of Moon, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3805 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 29 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Unavailability : Absence of Declarants

48. Based on the testimony, the trial court could have found that the State made a good faith effort to locate and present a witness, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the witness was unavailable. Wise v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8446 (Tex. App. Eastland July 11 2013).

49. Witness testimony from a first murder trial was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1) and did not violate U.S. Const. amend. VI because the State made a good-faith effort to obtain a witness for a second trial; an investigator had exhausted his contacts with the friends and family of the witness, and any further efforts could have reasonably been deemed futile by the trial court. Because the investigator was unable to determine where the witness was located, a writ of attachment would have been futile as well. Reed v. State, 312 S.W.3d 682, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7472 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 24 2009).

50. Since the objection for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 804 was made outside the presence of the jury, a running objection was not necessary to preserve error, but it never hurts to secure a running objection. Loun v. State, 273 S.W.3d 406, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

51. Record did not contain any evidence that attempting compulsory process in this case under the Uniform Act to Secure the Attendance of Witnesses from Without the State in Criminal Proceedings under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 24.28 would have been futile; because there is no evidence of any good-faith efforts, the State failed to show it made good-faith efforts to secure a witness's presence and the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the prior recorded testimony. Loun v. State, 273 S.W.3d 406, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

52. Error raised, a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 804, was not constitutional and the violation, if any, of the Sixth Amendment was not raised as a separate issue; under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1, the court overruled this issue as multifarious or inadequately briefed. Loun v. State, 273 S.W.3d 406, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

53. Because a witness was the most favorable eyewitness for the State and the testimony that was improperly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 804 formed an important part of the State's case, the court could not determined, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), that the inadmissible evidence did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury, and thus the error resulted in some harm. Loun v. State, 273 S.W.3d 406, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

54. In civil trial for conversion of a decedent's funds, the trial court properly excluded testimony of a financial advisor of the decedent pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 804 because the husband and wife, charged with conversion, failed to show that they had been unable to procure the testimony by process or other reasonable means in that they had not attempted to locate the advisor and merely asserted that the witness was beyond the court's subpoena power; this was insufficient to qualify the witness as unavailable. Estate of Glenn, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10242 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 30 2006).

55. Texas R. Crim. Evid. 804, detailing the situations in which certain hearsay evidence may be admitted based on a witness's unavailability, mirrors the federal rule. Federal case law requires the government to demonstrate the unavailability of the witness. Caldwell v. State, 916 S.W.2d 674, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Texarkana 1996).

56. Determining whether evidence comes in under Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 804(b)(1), which admits testimony based on the unavailability of the declarant, is a question for the trial court to resolve, reviewable on appeal only under an abuse of discretion standard. Caldwell v. State, 916 S.W.2d 674, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Texarkana 1996).

57. Pursuant to Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 804(b)(1), testimony that a witness was elderly and recovering from surgery was sufficient to support a finding that the witness was unavailable to appear at appellant's trial; thus, the witness's former testimony was admissible at trial. Caldwell v. State, 916 S.W.2d 674, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Texarkana 1996).

58. Reasonable minds could disagree as to whether defendant's trial counsel demonstrated a good-faith effort to secure a witness's attendance at his second trial by only contacting family members; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's request to declare the witness unavailable under Tex. R. Evid. 804(a)(5) for purposes of using the witness's prior testimony. Robinson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1969, 2014 WL 700760 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 20 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Unavailability : Inability to Testify : Death

59. In a case involving sentencing for a theft offense, because appellant did not object to a witness taking the stand where there was inadequate notice, the complaint was waived. Moreover, the witness was only called to read a victim's prior testimony, which was admissible due to his death under Tex. R. Evid. 804(a)(4). Kennedy v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6506, 2012 WL 3201924 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 8 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

60. Determining whether evidence comes in under Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 804(b)(1), which admits testimony based on the unavailability of the declarant, is a question for the trial court to resolve, reviewable on appeal only under an abuse of discretion standard. Caldwell v. State, 916 S.W.2d 674, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 561 (Tex. App. Texarkana 1996).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : General Overview

61. In a second trial for child sexual assault, there was no error in admitting defendant's prior felony conviction for possession of marihuana because defendant invoked the right not to testify in the second trial, thus becoming unavailable under Tex. R. Evid. 804 and making testimony from the first trial admissible; in the former testimony, the trial court allowed the State to establish the prior conviction. Sirois v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3053 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 24 2008).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Inconsistent Statements

62. Prior inconsistent statement for the purpose of impeaching the witness's previous testimony was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9190, 2009 WL 4377196 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 2 2009).

Governments : Legislation : Statutes of Limitations : Time Limitations

63. Statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule should have applied to appellant's testimony about decedent's intent to give her a parcel of land because the evidence showed that decedent still owned the 1100 acres at the time appellant claimed the statement was made to her (and the evidence also showed that appellant had continuously possessed, occupied, and cultivated the plot and adjacent 10 acres), and although appellant's testimony of decedent's statement of a parol gift appeared self-serving as to appellant, it was also adverse to appellant because once appellant made her claim as a parol gift, as opposed to by adverse possession, the limitations period for anyone claiming adversely to her was extended. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

Real Property Law : Adverse Possession : General Overview

64. Statement against interest exception to the hearsay rule should have applied to appellant's testimony about decedent's intent to give her a parcel of land because the evidence showed that decedent still owned the 1100 acres at the time appellant claimed the statement was made to her (and the evidence also showed that appellant had continuously possessed, occupied, and cultivated the plot and adjacent 10 acres), and although appellant's testimony of decedent's statement of a parol gift appeared self-serving as to appellant, it was also adverse to appellant because once appellant made her claim as a parol gift, as opposed to by adverse possession, the limitations period for anyone claiming adversely to her was extended. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

Torts : Intentional Torts : Conversion : General Overview

65. In civil trial for conversion of a decedent's funds, the trial court properly excluded testimony of a financial advisor of the decedent pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 804 because the husband and wife, charged with conversion, failed to show that they had been unable to procure the testimony by process or other reasonable means in that they had not attempted to locate the advisor and merely asserted that the witness was beyond the court's subpoena power; this was insufficient to qualify the witness as unavailable. Estate of Glenn, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10242 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 30 2006).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Perpetuation of Testimony

1. Mandamus relief was conditionally granted where a former employee sought to take a presuit deposition under Tex. R. Civ. P. 202 because the record contained no evidence; neither the employee's verified pleadings nor a letter from his counsel was admitted. Even if they had been, pleadings were not competent evidence, and letter contained hearsay within hearsay. In re Contractor's Supplies, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6396, 2009 WL 2488374 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

3. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Endangerment : General Overview

4. In a criminal prosecution for endangering a child arising from the sexual assault of defendant's two children by her live-in boyfriend, the trial court committed harmless error by admitting two exhibits containing the medical records of the child-victims as the statements of abuse contained within the exhibits were double hearsay not within any exception. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

5. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object on the ground of hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805 when a witness testified concerning reports made by another community supervision officer; there was not much hearsay within hearsay evidence, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have gotten this evidence in, and counsel effectively countered the evidence on cross-examination. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

7. Admission of defendant's jail records in defendant's murder trial was proper under the business records exception to the hearsay rule because the records were not prepared for purposes of litigation and conviction, but were instead part of a record routine kept for objective observation purposes. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

8. Defendant's hearsay objections to the admission of Child Protective Services records as whole were properly overruled because portions of the exhibits were admissible and defendant failed to request specific deletions of specific items in the exhibits. 9. 10. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

11. If a document contains both inadmissible and admissible hearsay testimony, an appellant must specify in the trial court which portion of the document is admissible, and if he fails to do so, a trial court may properly exclude the entire document. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

12. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document was double hearsay not within any exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

13. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, hearsay statements of two adults, repeating a child's accusation of sexual abuse by the father, could not be admitted as public or business records. Because the reviewing court found that the statements of the adults were inadmissible hearsay, it did not separately discuss the admissibility of the underlying statements of the child; the documents were inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 805 if either level was not admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

14. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

15. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, hearsay statements of two adults, repeating a child's accusation of sexual abuse by the father, could not be admitted as public or business records. Because the reviewing court found that the statements of the adults were inadmissible hearsay, it did not separately discuss the admissibility of the underlying statements of the child; the documents were inadmissible under Tex. Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Recorded Recollection : Criminal Trials

16. In an aggravated assault case, a trial court erred by allowing the admission of a statement because the State merely wanted to impeach a witness with otherwise inadmissible hearsay since it was shown that the State had learned that the witness did not remember making the statement, and the witness was not going to give favorable testimony for the State; moreover, the statement was not admissible as a past recorded recollection under Tex. R. Evid. 803(5) because the witness did not vouch for the accuracy of the statement. However, the error was harmless because evidence that defendant shot a victim was admitted through other sources. Aguilar v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8921 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 2 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : Criminal Trials

17. In a murder trial, the trial court properly admitted, under the excited utterance exception, a hearsay statement that the declarant could not believe defendant had shot someone. Even if the declarant's knowledge came from a third person, the only out-of-court statement offered into evidence was the declarant's. The State did not have to show that the third party's statement fell within a hearsay exception. Ross v. State, 154 S.W.3d 804, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11407 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

18. Defendant's hearsay objections to the admission of Child Protective Services records as whole were properly overruled because portions of the exhibits were admissible and defendant failed to request specific deletions of specific items in the exhibits. Moore v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11349 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 5 2013).

19. Allowing the prosecutor to testify about an email regarding another out-of-court statement allegedly made by a detective would have involved violations of the hearsay rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 801, 805, and appellant did not identify any exception, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802; appellant did not show that the trial court erred in refusing to allow the prosecutor to testify about the email. Zavala v. State, 401 S.W.3d 171, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8671, 2011 WL 5156843 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 1 2011).

20. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

21. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 805, without knowing the identity of the declarant, the court could not say that the first part of a statement qualified as any exception to the hearsay rule; because not all levels of hearsay contained within the statement satisfied an exception to the hearsay rule, the trial court did not err in sustaining a hearsay objection to this statement. Montalvo v. County of Refugio, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3120, 2010 WL 1731651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

22. First level of hearsay in a statement identified declarants as "other individuals," but no hearsay exception was offered that was applicable to them, such that the trial court did not err in sustaining a hearsay objection to this statement. Montalvo v. County of Refugio, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3120, 2010 WL 1731651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2010).

23. Defendant lodged a proper and timely hearsay objection to a witness's testimony concerning a person's statement to him, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 802, and an analysis of the witness's testimony revealed that it contained two levels of hearsay, for analysis purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 805, with the first layer of hearsay concerning what defendant told the person about his involvement in the crime, which constituted a statement against penal interest under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24); because the second layer of hearsay, the person's statement that defendant admitted involvement in the crimes, would not subject the person to prosecution and did not satisfy Rule 803(24), the admission of the double hearsay was an abuse of discretion. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

24. Secret Service agent's testimony concerned what defendant told investigators was said by defendant, and this testimony was clearly hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805, and the second layer of hearsay was not excluded from the hearsay rule by any exception, such as Tex. R. Evid. 803(24), because any statement by the witness about defendant's involvement in the crimes would not implicate the witness; defendant did not renew the hearsay objection he previously raised to another witness's substantially similar testimony, and because the substantively equivalent testimony to which he earlier objected was later admitted without objection, defendant did not preserve this issue for appellate review. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

25. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

26. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant could not question the investigating officer about prior inconsistent statements that the victim allegedly had made to the officer who initially took her statement and to a caseworker; this multiple hearsay was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because even if the victim's statements had been admissible under the prior inconsistent statement rule, which would have passed the first level of hearsay, defendant offered no explanation of how the contents of a report by the officer who initially took the victim's statement or the investigating officer's testimony based on that report fell within any hearsay exception. Segura v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1303 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 21 2008).

27. Defendant initially objected to a witness's statement as containing hearsay and as having been disavowed by the witness, and defendant then objected because the statement denied his constitutional rights, but neither objection preserved a double hearsay issue. Freeman v. State, 230 S.W.3d 392, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3965 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

28. In an injury to a child case, the court erred by allowing testimony by the child's mother that her parents needed to tell her something important that the police said regarding defendant's involvement in the crime because it constituted double hearsay; however, the error was harmless because defendant was indicted for the crime, and the police themselves testified during trial that they believed defendant committed the crime and why. Lopez v. State, 200 S.W.3d 246, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9199 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

29. In community supervision revocation proceedings, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object on the ground of hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805 when a witness testified concerning reports made by another community supervision officer; there was not much hearsay within hearsay evidence, the record did not affirmatively demonstrate that the State could not have gotten this evidence in, and counsel effectively countered the evidence on cross-examination. Kennemur v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2226 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 22 2006).

30. Because an investigator's notes were not helpful in determining the truth or falsity of any fact relevant to the lawsuit for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, they were not relevant and not admissible; furthermore, the notes were inadmissible because they memorialized out-of-court observations of a third party's interview of the victim and were hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805. Khoshayand v. State, 179 S.W.3d 779, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10404 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

31. Oil well blowout report contained hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because the author of the report did not contribute any information to the report, which was based on other records; the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the hearsay within hearsay found in the report because the company did not prove an exception that would have rendered the hearsay admissible. Rebel Drilling Co., L.P. v. Nabors Drilling USA, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8320 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 16 2004).

32. If a document contains both inadmissible and admissible hearsay testimony, an appellant must specify in the trial court which portion of the document is admissible, and if he fails to do so, a trial court may properly exclude the entire document. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

33. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document was double hearsay not within any exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

35. Trial court properly sustained the State's objection to a defendant's attempt to cross-examine a police officer regarding a victim's statements that she dug her fingernails into her assailant as inadmissible hearsay where the statement was recorded in a medical record and constituted hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because the officer had no first-hand knowledge of the victim's statements as recorded in the medical record. Rodgers v. State, 111 S.W.3d 236, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 5321 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

36. In a murder trial, the trial court properly admitted, under the excited utterance exception, a hearsay statement that the declarant could not believe defendant had shot someone. Even if the declarant's knowledge came from a third person, the only out-of-court statement offered into evidence was the declarant's. 37. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, even if the victim's alleged statement itself was admissible, it was shrouded by additional layers of hearsay not falling under any exception. The tape consisted of an out-of-court statement by an anonymous caller reporting her daughter's out-of-court statement that the victim told her, in an out-of-court statement, that her father sexually assaulted her (rather than defendant). Because the tape contained layers of inadmissible hearsay, the trial court properly excluded it. Holmes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

38. Admission of defendant's jail records in defendant's murder trial was proper under the business records exception to the hearsay rule because the records were not prepared for purposes of litigation and conviction, but were instead part of a record routine kept for objective observation purposes. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

39. Trial court properly sustained the State's objection to a defendant's attempt to cross-examine a police officer regarding a victim's statements that she dug her fingernails into her assailant as inadmissible hearsay where the statement was recorded in a medical record and constituted hearsay within hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 805 because the officer had no first-hand knowledge of the victim's statements as recorded in the medical record. Rodgers v. State, 111 S.W.3d 236, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 5321 (Tex. Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Inconsistent Statements

40. Rule 806 Attacking and Supporting the Declarant's Credibility

When a hearsay statement - or a statement described in Rule 801(e)(2)(C), (D), or (E), or, in a civil case, a statement described in Rule 801(e)(3) - has been admitted in evidence, the declarant's credibility may be attacked, and then supported, by any evidence that would be admissible for those purposes if the declarant had testified as a witness. The court may admit evidence of the declarant's statement or conduct, offered to impeach the declarant, regardless of when it occurred or whether the declarant had an opportunity to explain or deny it. If the party against whom the statement was admitted calls the declarant as a witness, the party may examine the declarant on the statement as if on cross-examination.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

1. In a murder trial, there was no violation of the Confrontation Clause when the State introduced an accomplice's out-of-court statement incriminating defendant because it was offered to impeach other out-of-court statements by the accomplice, introduced in the defense's case in chief, which tended to exonerate defendant; the introduction of the exonerating statements triggered Tex. R. Evid. 806; the State was then allowed to use Tex. R. Evid. 806, together with Tex. R. Evid. 613, to impeach the accomplice. Hernandez v. State, 219 S.W.3d 6, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11300 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault

2. In a domestic violence case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01, defendant should have been permitted to introduce testimony from a witness that the complainant said that the assault was an accident, in order to impeach the complainant's out-of-court accusations; however, the error in excluding that evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the excluded testimony was repetitious of the version of the incident testified to by defendant and defendant's parent, and it was inconsistent with the physical evidence. Sohail v. State, 264 S.W.3d 251, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

3. In a sexual assault case, a court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior convictions to impeach his out-of-court statement that he was not responsible for the crime where, during the recross-examination of an officer, defense counsel elicited, without objection, defendant's out-of-court statement that he was not responsible for what he was being accused. By eliciting the statement during his cross-examination of a State's witness, defendant opened the door to the issue of his credibility. Flores v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7207 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 12 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

4. Counsel was not ineffective for asking a detective questions on cross-examination about what defendant told him about the ownership of the guns in defendant's house, which allowed the State to introduce defendant's prior murder conviction for impeachment as if defendant had been a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 806, because the presence of guns in the house was undeniable and never a contested issue; the only reasonable defense strategy and the one counsel pursued was to acknowledge the presence of the firearms in the house but to demonstrate the paucity of evidence that defendant owned or possessed them. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6023 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Impeachment

5. In a sexual assault case, a court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior convictions to impeach his out-of-court statement that he was not responsible for the crime where, during the recross-examination of an officer, defense counsel elicited, without objection, defendant's out-of-court statement that he was not responsible for what he was being accused. By eliciting the statement during his cross-examination of a State's witness, defendant opened the door to the issue of his credibility. Flores v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7207 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 12 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

6. Although defendant argued the trial court abused its discretion by excluding evidence of prior convictions offered to impeach the statements of identification by a non-witness, defendant's complaint on appeal was waived. Defendant did not give the trial court an opportunity to consider admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 806 by pointing out that rule. Hackett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13576, 2013 WL 5889446 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 31 2013).

7. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by prohibiting him from offering evidence of the complainant's criminal history to impeach her because defendant did not argue to the trial court that it was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 806 or any other rule of evidence and never gave the trial court an opportunity to consider its admissibility. Hill v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2225, 2012 WL 983338 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 22 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Admission of Evidence

8. During defendant's criminal trial for burglary of a building, he challenged the trial court's admission of hearsay impeachment evidence of his twenty prior convictions; the trial court determined the evidence was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 806. Because defendant failed to object when the same evidence was admitted through the testimony of a police officer, the issue was waived for appellate review in accordance with Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Greenlee v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9438 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 19 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

9. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the State to introduce testimony about defendant's criminal record during the guilt-innocence phase of his trial because the State was authorized under Tex. R. Evid. 806 to impeach defendant's hearsay testimony; the two witnesses' testimony was hearsay, as they were statements of defendant made out of court to prove that defendant had purchased the laptop from a friend. The Theus factors also weighed in favor of admission, as all of defendant's prior convictions but one involved crimes of moral turpitude or theft, defendant's otherwise remote convictions were followed by additional convictions, and had the jury believed the witnesses' hearsay statements it likely would have acquitted defendant. Schmidt v. State, 373 S.W.3d 856, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5657, 2012 WL 2888213 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

10. In a theft prosecution, the allegedly improper admission of a store invoice for a Rolex watch that had later-made notations on it regarding defendant's check being returned for insufficient funds was harmless. The State relied on bank records that showed that defendant's account had insufficient funds at the time he wrote the check and thereafter and did not rely on the invoice at all. Rodgers v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1741, 2013 WL 1614109 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 21 2013).

11. In defendant's drug case, assuming the trial court abused its discretion by allowing the State to ask a witness questions concerning whether defendant paid for the motel room and questions about defendant's prior convictions, any harm arising from the error was cured when defendant later testified that he paid for the motel room--the very same conclusion implicit in the witness's testimony--and when evidence of defendant's convictions was admitted without objection during his testimony. Davis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 450 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 26 2010).

12. In a domestic violence case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01, defendant should have been permitted to introduce testimony from a witness that the complainant said that the assault was an accident, in order to impeach the complainant's out-of-court accusations; however, the error in excluding that evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the excluded testimony was repetitious of the version of the incident testified to by defendant and defendant's parent, and it was inconsistent with the physical evidence. Sohail v. State, 264 S.W.3d 251, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : General Overview

13. In a murder case, defendant was not entitled to impeach the victim's credibility regarding a statement allegedly made by the victim while arguing with defendant because the victim's purported statement was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. McGowan v. State, 188 S.W.3d 239, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 878 (Tex. App. Waco 2006).

14. Trial court erred by refusing to allow defendant to attack his girlfriend's credibility under Tex. R. Evid. 806 after her out-of-court statements were admitted into evidence; however the error was harmless because defendant's offer of proof showed that his girlfriend later denied he pointed a knife at her; but it did not show she recanted her previous statement that defendant pointed the knife at her daughter, who was the complainant. Godfrey v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 26 2005).

15. Because the victim was the declarant of hearing statements admitted through a family member and a police officer, defendant was entitled to impeach the victim's credibility as if the victim had given live testimony. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10, 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : Impeachment Evidence

16. State's ability to object to the admissibility of the victim's statement did not make the trial unfair, and even if the State had introduced the victim's statement, defendant would have been entitled to impeach the evidence, and thus he was not deprived of a fair trial because of the State's hearsay objection. Mares v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11983, 2013 WL 5433321 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 25 2013).

17. Even assuming that a witness's statements were hearsay, a trial court did not err in excluding another witness's immunity agreement to impeach the hearsay statements; the statements did not reach the "formal" level that would raise them to the level of "testimonial" statements, such that they would implicate the Confrontation Clause of the U.S. Constitution. Marmolejo v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2013).

18. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by prohibiting him from offering evidence of the complainant's criminal history to impeach her because defendant did not argue to the trial court that it was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 806 or any other rule of evidence and never gave the trial court an opportunity to consider its admissibility. Hill v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2225, 2012 WL 983338 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 22 2012).

19. Appellant's attempt to impeach a doctor's credibility was not covered under Tex. R. Evid. 806, and when applicable, the rule allowed the declarant's credibility to be challenged; the declarant's credibility was not an issue at trial, and a witness's testimony regarding information he received from the declarant was relevant only if the jury found the declarant's statement was accurate and truthful, and because the declarant's statement was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was inadmissible and the trial court properly excluded it. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d 790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

20. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that defendant had previously been convicted of failure to register as a sex offender under Tex. R. Evid. 609 and 806 during his trial on charges of sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault because: (1) the prior crime involved deception since defendant, by failing to register, concealed the address at which he resided; (2) one of the charged offenses occurred only five years after the past crime; (3) the admission of the prior conviction informed the jury that defendant had been determined to be a sex offender so there was some potential for the jury to perceive a pattern of past conduct; and (4) defendant's testimony and credibility were critical to his defense because no other witnesses could dispute the detective's account of his interview of defendant and the meaning of a drawing admitted into evidence. Theragood v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7141, 2011 WL 3848840 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

21. During defendant's criminal trial for burglary of a building, he challenged the trial court's admission of hearsay impeachment evidence of his twenty prior convictions; the trial court determined the evidence was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 806. Because defendant failed to object when the same evidence was admitted through the testimony of a police officer, the issue was waived for appellate review in accordance with Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Greenlee v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9438 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 19 2008).

22. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

23. In defendant's drug case, the court properly refused to allow him to impeach the informant with her prior criminal record because the only document defendant had was a printout that the officers had obtained when they ran a "background check" on the informant, and there was no evidence linking the first name in the printout to the informant whose statements were admitted at trial. Kuecker v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2778 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 17 2008).

24. Other than two short paragraphs complaining of counsel's actions in asking a question that permitted the State, under Tex. R. Evid. 806, to introduce defendant's prior convictions, defendant provided no legal argument or case law supporting his position, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), and thus the issue of ineffective assistance in this regard was waived; even if not waived, defendant's argument would have failed because it was sound trial strategy and defendant did not meet his burden of showing that counsel's actions deviated from prevailing norms. Wilborn v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6700 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 22 2007).

25. Because a witness's alleged hearsay statements were not admitted through another's testimony, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's request to introduce evidence to impeach the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 806. Francis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

26. In a theft prosecution, the allegedly improper admission of a store invoice for a Rolex watch that had later-made notations on it regarding defendant's check being returned for insufficient funds was harmless. The State relied on bank records that showed that defendant's account had insufficient funds at the time he wrote the check and thereafter and did not rely on the invoice at all. Rodgers v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1741, 2013 WL 1614109 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 21 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

27. In defendant's motion for a new trial, the court properly excluded four letters written by a witness who testified at trial because the letters did not tend to expose the witness to criminal liability, and even if they did, there was no corroborating evidence to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. In both letters, the witness expresses his anger at defendant, but the witness did not say, however, that he lied when he testified for the State. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

28. In defendant's sexual assault case, the trial court did not err in permitting the prosecutor to elicit testimony from a witness regarding prior consistent statements the victim made because defendant's wife testified that she believed the victim fabricated the sexual assault. The trial court could reasonably have concluded that the defense charged recent fabrication or improper motive, and that the prior statements were closer in time to the incident and made under circumstances and at a time where there was no "supposed motive to falsify." Weatherly v. State, 283 S.W.3d 481, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2435 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

29. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document was double hearsay not within any exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 9, 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components

30. Where defendant was convicted of intoxication manslaughter and intoxication assault, the trial court abused its discretion by allowing defendant's prior felony convictions to be introduced to impeach his credibility, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 609, where the convictions were improperly admitted as hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 806, when they were not in fact hearsay as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Enriquez v. State, 56 S.W.3d 596, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 5450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2001).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

31. In a criminal prosecution for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit the complainant's handwritten statement as impeachment evidence where the document was double hearsay not within any exception. Oveal v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : Admissibility

33. 34. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that defendant had previously been convicted of failure to register as a sex offender under Tex. R. Evid. 609 and 806 during his trial on charges of sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault because: (1) the prior crime involved deception since defendant, by failing to register, concealed the address at which he resided; (2) one of the charged offenses occurred only five years after the past crime; (3) the admission of the prior conviction informed the jury that defendant had been determined to be a sex offender so there was some potential for the jury to perceive a pattern of past conduct; and (4) defendant's testimony and credibility were critical to his defense because no other witnesses could dispute the detective's account of his interview of defendant and the meaning of a drawing admitted into evidence. 35. Counsel was not ineffective for asking a detective questions on cross-examination about what defendant told him about the ownership of the guns in defendant's house, which allowed the State to introduce defendant's prior murder conviction for impeachment as if defendant had been a witness under Tex. R. 36. Where defendant was convicted of intoxication manslaughter and intoxication assault, the trial court abused its discretion by allowing defendant's prior felony convictions to be introduced to impeach his credibility, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 609, where the convictions were improperly admitted as hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 806, when they were not in fact hearsay as defined by Tex. R. Evid. 801(d). Enriquez v. LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Admissions : General Overview

1. In an action alleging that the individual was the alter ego of three corporate entities, defendant was deemed to have admitted that he signed the letters and the asset purchase agreement that were attached to the request for admissions, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the deemed admissions sufficiently authenticated the letters and the asset purchase agreement. Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

2. In an action alleging that the individual was the alter ego of three corporate entities, defendant was deemed to have admitted that he signed the letters and the asset purchase agreement that were attached to the request for admissions, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the deemed admissions sufficiently authenticated the letters and the asset purchase agreement. . Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

3. In a dispute over an oil and gas lease where a lessee was liable under the terms of the contract for compensatory royalties, a lessor did not produce sufficient evidence relating to damages because neither purported Texas Railroad Commission records nor a demand letter were authenticated; therefore, they were not summary judgment evidence. H&S Prod. v. Dorchester Minerals, LP, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6386, 2009 WL 2478089 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 14 2009).

4. In a negligence case where a customer contended that he contracted food poisoning after eating undercooked chicken at a restaurant, medical records and a receipt were not considered summary judgment evidence because they were not properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). The trial court was then required to grant a restaurant owner's motion for no-evidence summary judgment because the customer offered no evidence to support his position, and the record showed that the customer failed to respond to the motion after receiving proper service. Moody v. James, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 337, 2009 WL 127866 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 21 2009).

5. In a spousal support enforcement case, a former husband was unable to raise the issues of hearsay and authentication to challenge summary judgment evidence because these complaints were not presented to the trial court, and no ruling was obtained. Eberstein v. Hunter, 260 S.W.3d 626, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

6. Attaching the assignments to the summary judgment affidavits and describing the assignments therein was sufficient authentication or identification to show the documents were what the beneficial owners of the stock claimed they were as a condition precedent to admissibility; therefore, the trial court erred in holding that the beneficial owners' assignment and assumption agreements lacked authentication and it should have considered the assignment and assumption agreements as part of the summary judgment record. Caso-Bercht v. Striker Indus., 147 S.W.3d 460, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4324 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

7. Where the client sued the law firm and its attorneys for legal malpractice alleging breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and gross negligence arising out of the sale of real estate and a foreclosure action, summary judgment was affirmed because: (1) the client's motion for continuance was properly denied because she was given sufficient notice of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment under the provisions of Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c), 4 and the certificate of service was prima facie evidence of service under Tex. R. Civ. P. 21, (2) the client's summary judgment evidence was properly excluded because even though the documents were authenticated, they could have been objected to on other grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) and the client failed to properly brief the issue on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), (3) the exclusion of the client's expert testimony was proper because it was not an affidavit in that it contained no jurat under the provisions of Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 312.011, and the expert was not licensed to practice law in Texas, and (4) the no evidence summary judgment was affirmed because without expert testimony, the client was unable to show a breach of duty which was an essential element of her cause of action. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

8. Where there is proper identification of a document under Tex. R. Evid. 901, that does not cure the defect of it being an unsworn statement under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(f) or hearsay per the hearsay rule. Koehler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3701 (Tex. App. Dallas June 6 2001).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

9. Photographs were properly admitted during the termination of parental rights trial, and therefore the trial court did not err by denying the grandmother's motion for a mistrial, because the photographs showed nothing more than what was established by the testimony of the father and the grandmother, namely them leaving an apartment building with the child. In re A.L.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 8 2012).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Motions for New Trials

10. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : Attorney Expenses & Fees : Reasonable Fees

11. In awarding attorney's fees, the trial court, in its discretion, could conclude that the attorney's testimony was sufficient to prove the bills were genuine under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(1). Good v. Baker, 339 S.W.3d 260, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2167 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 25 2011).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Writs : Common Law Writs : Mandamus

12. Mandamus relief was not granted in a case where an amended motion to compel arbitration was denied because there was no competent evidence of an agreement to arbitrate a debt dispute. In re Universal Fins. Consulting Group, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3723 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 20 2008).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

13. In a products liability case, a retailer's argument that documents were not competent summary judgment evidence due to the fact that they were not properly authenticated was rejected because the retailer received notice of self-authentication under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.7; moreover, a specificity argument was rejected because the retailer failed to raise such the issue until a response was made to a reply brief. Merrell v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 276 S.W.3d 117, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2009).

14. In a spousal support enforcement case, a former husband was unable to raise the issues of hearsay and authentication to challenge summary judgment evidence because these complaints were not presented to the trial court, and no ruling was obtained. Eberstein v. Hunter, 260 S.W.3d 626, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

15. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding several off-color cartoons and printouts of e-mail jokes that the employee claimed were put on her office desk to show the existence of a hostile work environment because she failed to authenticate the proffered exhibits as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901, as she did not identify whom the cartoons and e-mails were from but merely stated that her supervisors was the only other person who had access to her office. Martinez v. Aa Foundries, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 789 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 30 2013).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

16. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

17. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

Computer & Internet Law : General Overview

18. Trial court did not err by admitting a chain of social network messages allegedly exchanged between defendant and complainant because in light of the witness testimony and circumstantial evidence, the State proffered sufficient evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to authentic the messages. Two of the messages in the chain identified defendant as the sender, they were sent on the day of the assault, the sender expressed remorse, and the messages were printed from defendant's social network account. Laurentz v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12603, 2013 WL 5604740 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 10 2013).

19. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

Computer & Internet Law : Criminal Offenses : General Overview

20. In a murder trial, social networking pages were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) because the holder of the account was identified with both defendant's name and a pseudonym, there were photographs of defendant on the pages, and there were references to the murder and defendant's arrest and electronic monitoring. Tienda v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10031 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 17 2010).

Computer & Internet Law : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes

21. In a case where defendant was convicted under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 33.021(b), there was no ineffective assistance of counsel because a trial court would not have erred by admitting an exhibit showing pictures of scantily clad children that defendant was purportedly viewing at a library over a proper specific objection made by defense counsel; defense counsel had merely objected based on an improper predicate. It was evident from a librarian's testimony that the photographs were the product of a reliable system, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(9), and the proof was sufficient to demonstrate that the challenged exhibit was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Brier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3749, 2009 WL 998638 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : General Overview

22. Chain of custody was adequately established under Tex. R. Evid. 901 for drug evidence because officers testified that items were seized from defendant's bedroom and bathroom, placed in sealed bags at the scene, mailed to a lab for testing, and returned. Evidence of a punctured baggie went to weight and did not prohibit admission of the evidence. Brown v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5432, 2010 WL 2772488 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 14 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Simple Possession : General Overview

23. In a juvenile defendant's challenge to his adjudication as a delinquent upon a finding that he violated his community supervision conditions by possessing marijuana, the trial court did not err in admitting a State exhibit containing a tin canister and cigar with marijuana as the testimony of the officer regarding the marked bag in which he placed the evidence, and the testimony of the lab technician regarding his analysis of the contents of the marked bag and the sealing procedure, clearly showed the beginning and end of the chain of custody. In re J.M.A.B., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10341 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 30 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Simple Possession : Elements

24. Court denied defendant's point of error that the State failed to establish the proper chain of custody for the drugs involved; an investigator testified that after a witness purchased the cocaine, she delivered it to him and he marked the envelope and mailed it to the laboratory, but he made a mistake in his labeling, the laboratory received the envelope and marked it with a unique identifier, and the identifying marks stayed with it during the laboratory processing and it was returned by the chemist to the investigator in open court. Alexander v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6260 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 9 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

25. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : General Overview

26. In a criminal trial for aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.03(a), the court did not err by overruling defendant's objection to the admission of a video recording of the robbery; the victim, an eyewitness, testified that the recording accurately represented the robbery; it was sufficiently authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Hawkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1104 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 8 2006).

27. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's aggravated robbery conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02(a) and 29.03(a) where three witnesses unequivocally identified defendant as the masked and armed man in surveillance videotapes based on his actions and voice under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(5). Although defendant's alleged accomplice testified that defendant did not participate in the robbery, the State presented evidence that the accomplice told others that he and defendant had committed the robbery. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Criminal Abortion : General Overview

28. In the trial of a water supervisor for tampering with a governmental record, an employee's testimony was sufficient under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to authenticate a to-do list that defendant left for the employee, instructing the employee to deliver water samples and stating that the paper work was already filled out; the employee testified to thinking that the exhibit was a copy of the to-do list that defendant prepared and left. Daugherty v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 726 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 31 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

29. In a murder trial, it was proper to admit shoes that the victim's daughter gave to defendant, which had a tread pattern like a partial print at the scene, because a finding that the shoes were defendant's was supported by testimony that he had put his shoes in the trunk of a car the day after the murder, that the daughter found them there and stored them in a plastic back until the police picked them up, and that the bag in which they were presented at trial was the same bag. Dominguez v. State, 441 S.W.3d 652, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6190, 2014 WL 2582975 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary

30. In a burglary of a habitation case, defendant complained that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to photographs of the crime scene; however, the victim testified that each of the three photographs in question accurately represented the scene it was intended to portray; thus, defendant's complaint that the photographs were not authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was entirely without merit. Tarango v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2247 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 22 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Obscenity : General Overview

31. In an obscenity trial arising from an undercover investigation, defendant's email to an officer and an attached video were authenticated under the reply letter doctrine because the officer testified at trial that the e-mail and attached video were received from defendant in direct response to an e-mail sent by the officer to defendant inquiring whether defendant would send the officer the "horse movie" file; the e-mail was also authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because defendant was in the unique position of knowing that the officer's inquiry about the

"horse movie" concerned a bestiality video seen when the officers were at defendant's home. Varkonyi v. State, 276 S.W.3d 27, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3353 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

32. In a case where defendant was found guilty of driving while intoxicated, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence, over defendant's objection, the videotaped recording of his traffic stop because, although the officer inadvertently taped over a portion of defendant's stop, and the recording did not show all of the sobriety testing or the actual arrest, the officer, a witness with knowledge, testified that the parts of the traffic stop that were on the video were fairly and accurately depicted, which was sufficient testimony to authenticate the recording. Peratta v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8788, 2014 WL 4180807 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 11 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

33. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant's blood test results were properly admitted because both the blood vial and the blood box delivered to the State lab contained information identifying the blood as defendant's. That identifying information indicated that the blood sample that the technician thought was defendant was the sample marked by the officer as belonging to defendant. Meier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2051, 2009 WL 765490 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 25 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Vehicular Homicide : Elements

34. In a trial for intoxication manslaughter under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, any error resulting from the admission of an analysis request form for blood testing was harmless in light of other evidence proving the chain of custody: the officer's testimony that he witnessed the nurse follow each of the statutory requirements for the blood draw. Mitchell v. State, 419 S.W.3d 655, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14606, 2013 WL 6244137 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Weapons : Possession : General Overview

35. Chain of custody was not required for the admission of a handgun because initials engraved on the side of the gun made it easily identifiable, and the gun and the initials were resistant to change. Bailey v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : Records

36. Judgments from defendant's earlier juvenile cases were properly admitted at a punishment hearing, even though they did not contain seals, as discussed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(1), (2), and (4), because they contained a certification showing that they were from the clerk's office in the county of the juvenile court and thus were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7). Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Electronic Eavesdropping : Warrantless Eavesdropping

37. Because an accomplice witness stated that he had previously listened to the recording of a phone call he made to his cousin, who then called defendant, and that he could identify all of the voices on the recording as himself, his cousin, and defendant, admission of a recording of the accomplice's call was proper. Phillips v. State, 436 S.W.3d 333, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. Waco May 15 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Notice & Warning

38. Video recording of defendant's post-arrest statements regarding his use and purchase of methamphetamine was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 and Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the officer was able to identify the voices and recount what was said, and the warning given to defendant and his statements were clearly audible. Parker v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6409, 2013 WL 2248254 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 23 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Discovery & Inspection : Brady Materials : Brady Claims

39. Defendant's challenge to the admission of recordings and transcripts of her statements on the ground that the tapes were never disclosed and contained discrepancies was rejected because: (1) even if the recordings were not disclosed, Brady did not apply because defendant knew she had made the statements; and (2) the record contained authenticating testimony that the recordings were what they were claimed to be. Mayfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6037 (Tex. App. Waco July 28 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Appeals

40. Even if an inmate's appellate counsel used an incorrect standard of review regarding the admission of a surveillance tape by citing a case that had been superseded by the adoption of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the inmate failed to show that he was prejudiced because there was no indication that he would have prevailed had the appellate counsel used the correct standard. Brown v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88445 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 30 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

41. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

42. In a child pornography case, habeas relief was denied to an accused on the basis of ineffectiveness of trial counsel relating to a failure to object on the basis of chain of custody because problems in the chain of custody did not affect admissibility of evidence but, instead, affected the weight the fact-finder should give the evidence. This could have been pointed out and argued by the parties. Ex Parte Yusafi, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6715, 2008 WL 6740798 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

43. In a case where defendant was convicted under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 33.021(b), there was no ineffective assistance of counsel because a trial court would not have erred by admitting an exhibit showing pictures of scantily clad children that defendant was purportedly viewing at a library over a proper specific objection made by defense counsel; defense counsel had merely objected based on an improper predicate. It was evident from a librarian's testimony that the photographs were the product of a reliable system, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(9), and the proof was sufficient to demonstrate that the challenged exhibit was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Brier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3749, 2009 WL 998638 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

44. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, it was not ineffective assistance when counsel failed to object to the lack of proper predicate for admission of the audio portion of a videotape because the trial court would not have abused its discretion by overruling an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 901, given that an officer testified that the exhibit was a copy of in-car videotape, that it was made on the day of a collision, and that it was accurate. Carey v. State, 2007

Tex. App. LEXIS 9052 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 16 2007).

45. Defendant's trial counsel could not be found ineffective on the ground that the trial court did not admit into evidence photographs showing injuries to defendant's face and head because counsel laid a proper foundation and offered them into evidence. Defendant testified that the photographs were taken two days after he shot the victim in self-defense and that the photographs accurately depicted his appearance at that time. Romero v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10563 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 24 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Province of Court & Jury : Weight of the Evidence

46. In a murder trial, defendant's chain-of-evidence objections under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to the admission of DNA-sample buccal swabs from other potential suspects related to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility; defendant argued that the State failed to prove the people from whom the analysts obtained the swabs were who they claimed to be, that those people might have lied about their identities, and that the tested DNA may have come from persons unrelated to the investigation. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Revocation : Proceedings

47. Trial court properly revoked defendant's community supervision following a hearing on the State's amended motion to revoke, which alleged that defendant violated his supervisory conditions by, among other things, committing the offense of harassment, because even though defendant contended that an exhibit, which was a copy of an on-line classified advertisement, was erroneously admitted at the hearing because it was not properly authenticated, defendant's identity as the person who placed the ad did not go to the authenticity of the exhibit. It was undisputed below that the exhibit was an authentic copy of an actual on-line classified advertisement, and whether defendant placed the ad did not go to the authenticity of the exhibit, but to his guilt of the harassment offense alleged in the motion to revoke. Musgrove v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8964, 2009 WL 3926289 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 20 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Revocation : Standards

48. Trial court properly revoked defendant's community supervision following a hearing on the State's amended motion to revoke, which alleged that defendant violated his supervisory conditions by, among other things, committing the offense of harassment, because even though defendant contended that an exhibit, which was a copy of an on-line classified advertisement, was erroneously admitted at the hearing because it was not properly authenticated, defendant's identity as the person who placed the ad did not go to the authenticity of the exhibit. It was undisputed below that the exhibit was an authentic copy of an actual on-line classified advertisement, and whether defendant placed the ad did not go to the authenticity of the exhibit, but to his guilt of the harassment offense alleged in the motion to revoke. Musgrove v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8964, 2009 WL 3926289 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 20 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History

49. Texas Department of Criminal Justice Institutional Division record chairman's certification of the pen packet constituted sufficient extrinsic evidence that the copies were authentic. B Reyes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14267, 2013 WL 6178500 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 21 2013).

50. Where defendant was indicted as a habitual felony offender for the unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, the indictment contained enhancement paragraphs alleging that defendant had prior felony convictions. The State proved his prior convictions by introducing as exhibits two pen packets that were certified by the custodian of records from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice; the pen packets were self-authenticating for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902. Harden v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1578, 2009 WL 539379 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 4 2009).

51. At a punishment trial, sufficient evidence of identity established that defendant was the same person identified in a prior conviction alleged in the enhancement paragraphs; the proof included a pen packet from the prior offense, which was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and containing defendant's name, height, weight, hair and eye color, complexion, and location of scars. Tomlinson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5182 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

52. Court did not err in overruling defendant objections to the State's admission of two pen packets to prove prior convictions during the punishment phase of trial because the pen packets were accompanied by signed affidavits with the State of Texas seal, certifying that the attached information related to defendant, the records were true and correct copies, and the documents were self-authenticating. Billington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1845, 2014 WL 669555 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 19 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History : Prior Felonies

53. In an aggravated robbery case, the certifications for two penitentiary packets were adequate for admission into evidence, although the name of the judge of the convicting court was omitted. Douglas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6063 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 3 2005).

54. Two prior juvenile adjudications were sufficiently linked to defendant and showed that he was the same person convicted; therefore, the trial court did not err by admitting certified copies of those adjudications at his sentencing hearing. Mackey v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1002 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 9 2005).

55. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

56. Two pen packets were properly authenticated and were not hearsay because they were accompanied by affidavits carrying the state seal and certifying that they were true and correct copies of original records maintained in the regular course of business; in addition, the packets contained defendant's fingerprint cards and other identifying information. Carr v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13396, 2013 WL 5873299 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 30 2013).

57. At a community supervision revocation hearing, the trial court did not err in admitting a letter found tacked to defendant's next door neighbor's front door that warned defendant to stay away from her children; the letter was not barred by the Confrontation Clause because it was not testimonial, and the letter was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) by a police officer's testimony that he had recovered it from the house next door. Harber v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9548 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

58. At a punishment trial, sufficient evidence of identity established that defendant was the same person identified in a prior conviction alleged in the enhancement paragraphs; the proof included a pen packet from the prior offense, which was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and containing defendant's name, height, weight, hair and eye color, complexion, and location of scars. Tomlinson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5182 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 15 2006).

59. In an aggravated robbery case, the certifications for two penitentiary packets were adequate for admission into evidence, although the name of the judge of the convicting court was omitted. Douglas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6063 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 3 2005).

60. There was no evidence supporting an enhanced punishment for driving while intoxicated under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 49.04, 49.09 where nothing in the record supported the state's contention that a computer-generated case synopsis represented a judgment of conviction to prove a prior conviction. Blank v. State, 172 S.W.3d 673, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10714 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

61. Two prior juvenile adjudications were sufficiently linked to defendant and showed that he was the same person convicted; therefore, the trial court did not err by admitting certified copies of those adjudications at his sentencing hearing. Mackey v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1002 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 9 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

62. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant failed to preserve for review his argument that a videotape was admitted without the proper predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 901. His objection, that the State failed to lay the proper predicate "per Lucas," did not preserve error on a Rule 901 claim. Garcia v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6691 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 18 2005).

63. Defendant failed to properly reserve his argument that admission of tape recordings of a controlled substance buy was improper because defendant's objection at trial was a mere predicate objection. Young v. State, 183 S.W.3d 699, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6299 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

64. Defendant failed to preserve an authentication argument under Tex. R. Evid. 901 as to the admission of e-mails because defendant did not object to the e-mails on the authentication ground, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33. Ussery v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 741 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

65. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a bag containing a green leafy substance found in defendant's pocket at the hospital as marijuana, even though there was no evidence that it was in fact marijuana, because the State did not charge defendant with possession of marijuana and therefore did not have to prove that the substance was marijuana. Three witnesses referred without objection to the substance as marijuana, and defendant's complaint on appeal was not the same as his objection at trial. Blanchard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5140 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Admission of Evidence

66. On appeal of defendant's conviction for murder, he challenged whether the evidence regarding the DNA sample test results was insufficient; however, defendant failed to object at trial to the admissibility of the DNA test results, and therefore, he waived any error with respect to that evidence. Lane v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8912 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 17 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Waiver Triggers Generally

67. In a case involving aggravated assault on a public servant, defendant waived the right to challenge the introduction of a homemade weapon into evidence because his counsel stated that there was "no objection" the second time that the State offered it into evidence; moreover, a chain of custody showing under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was not required because the weapon was unique, easily identifiable, and remained substantially unchanged since it was discovered in the area where the assaults took place. Even if such a showing was required under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), testimony that identified the item and established the beginning and the end of the chain of custody was sufficient. Wingfield v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3744, 2009 WL 998679 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

68. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter the State contended defendant wrote while in jail because the record revealed sufficient facts to support a determination that the letter was written by defendant, as defendant was in the jail in which the letter was found, the writer identified himself as defendant, the letter indicated defendant's jail cell as the return address, and the letter bore defendant's unique number assigned to identify him within the jail. Boldon v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12777, 2013 WL 5637031 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2013).

69. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the drugs alleged seized from defendant's vehicle because the State presented sufficient evidence to support a finding that the first step in the chain of custody had been established as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). The evidence established that the detective controlled the drugs until he placed them in the vault, and although during voir dire the detective acknowledged that he could not tell if the initials on the inside bag were his, the court could not conclude that that fact rendered the bag of drugs inadmissible absent a showing of tampering or alteration. Cedeno v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2716 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 5 2012).

70. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the methamphetamine into evidence, even though there were some potential problems with the chain of custody, including the receiving officer's failure to place identifying marks on the evidence and the fact that the officer who transported the evidence to the crime lab did not testify, because testimony of the receiving officer, a sergeant, and a crime lab chemist supported the district court's finding that the suspected methamphetamine was what the State claimed it to be. In addition, there was no evidence of tampering or other fraud. Frasier v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6365 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 5 2010).

71. In a possession of a controlled substance case, as the testimony of an informant who was on the recording established that the recording was what it claimed to be, resulting in a proper authentication, defendant failed to establish that the presence of a 10 to 15 minute gap in the recording, standing alone, destroyed authentication or precluded admission of the tape into evidence. As such, the trial court did not erroneously admit the tape recording into evidence. Malone v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

72. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a State's exhibit, which was a list of stolen property and its value, where the property's owner had personal knowledge of the items listed on the document because he made a list and his wife copied the list. Furthermore, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the exhibit, the error, if any, was harmless because it could not be concluded that it contributed to defendant's conviction or punishment or affected his substantial rights. Hernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5219 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

73. Although in a theft case a trial court erred in admitting spreadsheets prepared by an absent accountant through a witness who was not familiar with them, contrary to Tex. R. Evid. 901, the error was harmless because the bank records underlying the spreadsheets were admitted without objection. Canion v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7284 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 3 2014).

74. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

75. Even if it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to admit photographs of a child victim through the testimony of a physician who did not have personal knowledge of the truth of what was portrayed, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because other properly authenticated photographs were admitted containing similar depictions of the child when he was brought into the hospital; further, an investigator with Child Protective Services testified that she had seen the child on the night he was taken to the hospital and verified that at least seven of the photographs in question accurately portrayed the child that night based on her personal knowledge. Nash v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1916 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 17 2010).

76. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated kidnapping, even assuming that defendant was correct in asserting that documents purporting to be his Indian passport and an identification card issued by the Indian Aviation Authority were not properly authenticated and that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting them, defendant did not show, nor could a reviewing court find, any harm caused by their admission because it was uncontested that defendant was a citizen of India and that he worked at the international airport in Bombay. Therefore, the authenticity of the passport and identification card could not have substantially or injuriously impacted the jury when the uncontroverted testimony of the victim sought to prove the same fact. Shamsher Medih Chisti v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8941, 2009 WL 3931105 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 19 2009).

77. Surveillance video was properly authenticated because a witness testified, out of the jury's presence, that the video depicted "exactly" what he saw on the surveillance system on the night of the robbery. Additionally, any error was harmless because there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Swinnie v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5352, 2009 WL 1981849 (Tex. App. Dallas July 10 2009).

78. In an aggravated assault case, any error in the authentication of the bullet was harmless because, although the records concerning the victim's treatment reflected a diagnosis of "GSW to head -- no injury," that entry did reflect that the victim sustained a gunshot wound, but it caused no significant injuries; moreover, records from the doctor who later removed the bullet were admitted at trial and confirmed that the removal procedure occurred. Jones v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 877 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 7 2008).

79. Narcotics task force officer was not present during the drug deals contained on the tape, he did not testify as to any of the distinctive characteristics contained on the tape, and he did not identify any of the voices contained on the tape; he only testified that he placed a tape in a device capable of recording conversations, made a copy of the tape after the transaction was completed, made a copy of the tape noting defendant's name and the case number on it, and that the tape had not been changed or edited in any way; simply placing a tape in a tape recorder and later retrieving it was not enough to satisfy the requirements for authentication; thus, it was error for the trial court to admit the tape, but the error was harmless because substantively the same evidence was properly admitted via an undercover officer's testimony who was present during the events. Roberson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 18 2006).

80. Although the tape was not properly authenticated, the evidence of an extraneous offense under Tex. R. Evid. 404 could not be said to have infringed on defendant's substantial rights because the evidence was before the jury via an undercover officer's unobjected-to testimony; therefore, admission of the extraneous offense evidence was harmless. Roberson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 18 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : General Overview

81. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's aggravated robbery conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02(a) and 29.03(a) where three witnesses unequivocally identified defendant as the masked and armed man in surveillance videotapes based on his actions and voice under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(5). Although defendant's alleged accomplice testified that defendant did not participate in the robbery, the State presented evidence that the accomplice told others that he and defendant had committed the robbery. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

82. Heirship was not established in a trespass to try title action because a page of a document purporting to be a deed lacked the clerk's seal and signature, which meant the document was not properly certified and thus could not be self-authenticated, nor was there other evidence that could authenticate the document as what it purported to be. Heirs of Garcia v. Parr, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8819 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 13 2014).

83. In a case where defendant was found guilty of driving while intoxicated, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence, over defendant's objection, the videotaped recording of his traffic stop because, although the officer inadvertently taped over a portion of defendant's stop, and the recording did not show all of the sobriety testing or the actual arrest, the officer, a witness with knowledge, testified that the parts of the traffic stop that were on the video were fairly and accurately depicted, which was sufficient testimony to authenticate the recording. Peratta v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8788, 2014 WL 4180807 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 11 2014).

84. Appellee's testimony that he printed off a page at a time when he had access to appellant's Facebook page was sufficient to satisfy the authentication requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 901, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that this testimony was sufficient to satisfy the authentication requirement. Walls v. Klein, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7334 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 9 2014).

85. Telephone conversation was properly authenticated because the account was consistent with defendant's statements about his fabricated story, and the speaker had personal knowledge of the victim's family situation. Mendoza v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7198, 2014 WL 3045194 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 3 2014).

86. Although in a theft case a trial court erred in admitting spreadsheets prepared by an absent accountant through a witness who was not familiar with them, contrary to Tex. R. Evid. 901, the error was harmless because the bank records underlying the spreadsheets were admitted without objection. Canion v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7284 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 3 2014).

87. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of his daughter, the court did not err in finding a condom and DNA analysis of it sufficiently authenticated and identified to satisfy the rule; there was no evidence of deliberate tampering with the evidence before, during, or after its collection, only speculation that defendant's DNA might have made its way onto or into the condom by some means of contamination. James v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS

6994 (Tex. App. Austin June 27 2014).

88. Surveillance video was properly authenticated because the store owner testified that he had multiple cameras monitoring his store, after the robbery, he watched the recording, and the owner said a copy of the video produced at trial showed the same events as the original. Ruff v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6839, 2014 WL 2917843 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 25 2014).

89. Victim's testimony sufficiently linked the messages in State's exhibit to defendant so as to justify submission to the jury for its ultimate determination of authenticity, because while the screen names alone would likely be insufficient to authenticate the instant messages in the State's exhibit, the victim's testimony was additional evidence that she both participated in the electronic conversation and prepared the compilation of messages that made up the exhibit. Adams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6619, 2014 WL 2807978 (Tex. App. Dallas June 18 2014).

90. An officer's testimony that a videotape recording of a search of defendant's apartment reflected the scene the day of a search was sufficient to authenticate it, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) although the officer was not the recorder. Alvarado v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6102 (Tex. App. Dallas June 4 2014).

91. Because an accomplice witness stated that he had previously listened to the recording of a phone call he made to his cousin, who then called defendant, and that he could identify all of the voices on the recording as himself, his cousin, and defendant, admission of a recording of the accomplice's call was proper. Phillips v. State, 436 S.W.3d 333, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5316 (Tex. App. Waco May 15 2014).

92. Defendant had not established that copies of two different checks that were allegedly forged and presented by him at two different banks were inadmissible as duplicates because there was no evidence that would raise a question about whether the checks were what the State claimed them to be, and reasonable jurors thus could not disagree about whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant, as the State alleged. Moreover, the potentially unique probative value of the original checks went to the issues of whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant and whether the checks were forgeries, and defendant had admitted both of those facts. Duncan v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4678, 2014 WL 1788173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2014).

93. During defendant's trial for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, the court did not err in admitting the metal propane tank brought to trial by the victim because her testimony properly authenticated and identified the tank/torch assembly as the weapon defendant used; her testimony was sufficient under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) to authenticate the exhibit. Barber v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4409, 2014 WL 1663322 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 24 2014).

94. Surveillance video was properly authenticated under this rule where a detective testified that she viewed the surveillance tape at the store, downloaded the video to a thumb driver, and copied it to the DVD that was introduced into evidence. Mbata v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3241, 2014 WL 1285756 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2014).

95. Security footage was properly authenticated because a company manager testified that the bus's security cameras recorded footage from the bus as it occurred, the videos were transferred to her hard drive, and the hard drive was kept in a secure location. Furthermore, the witness stated that she reviewed the footage and verified that it "depicts what was going on on the bus during that person's shift during that period of time." Walls v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3159, 2014 WL 1208017 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 20 2014).

96. In a forgery case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted a photograph of defendant into evidence. The store employee who took the photograph testified that the picture was an accurate depiction of defendant when he returned to the store, and the fact that she did not witness defendant's commission of the offense did not affect her ability to authenticate the photograph. Resendez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2587, 2014 WL 972297 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 6 2014).

97. Affidavit testimony was evidence that the exhibits were what the companies claimed them to be. H2o Solutions, Ltd. v. Pm Realty Group, Lp, 438 S.W.3d 606, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1665, 2014 WL 576262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 13 2014).

98. Trustworthiness of the document is not a consideration when determining whether a document has been properly authenticated; instead, it is a consideration when trying to admit a business record under the business-records exception to the hearsay rule, and authenticity of a document and admissibility of that document under an exception to the hearsay rule are separate inquiries, and the companies in this case did not claim the documents were inadmissible hearsay. H2o Solutions, Ltd. v. Pm Realty Group, Lp, 438 S.W.3d 606, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1665, 2014 WL 576262 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 13 2014).

99. At defendant's trial for stalking, the trial court did not err in admitting the text messages that did not contain the sender's name even though the phone company records showed the cell phone was listed in another person's name. Because the complainant testified that it was the same number defendant used to contact her and it was the number she programmed into her phone as his contact number, the State satisfied its burden to authenticate the calls and text messages. Mcgee v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 825, 2014 WL 261060 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

100. At defendant's trial for stalking, the trial court did not err in admitting the text messages that did not contain the sender's name even though the phone company records showed the cell phone was listed in another person's name. Because the complainant testified that it was the same number defendant used to contact her and it was the number she programmed into her phone as his contact number, the State satisfied its burden to authenticate the calls and text messages. Mcgee v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 825, 2014 WL 261060 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

101. Because the only link between the email and the victim's mother was the email purporting on its face to have been sent from her email address, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the email from evidence. Chin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15441, 2013 WL 6869905 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 31 2013).

102. Silent videotape of an informant's cocaine buy from defendant was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), although the informant did not testify, because the officers had personal knowledge of the video's contents and could corroborate it; Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.141, requiring corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, did not apply because the video was muted. Watson v. State, 421 S.W.3d 186, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14603, 2013 WL 6244135 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

103. Texas Department of Criminal Justice Institutional Division record chairman's certification of the pen packet constituted sufficient extrinsic evidence that the copies were authentic. B Reyes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14267, 2013 WL 6178500 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 21 2013).

104. Combination of unique identifiers and the contents in line with defendant's comments to police was sufficient to support a finding that the jailhouse letter was what the proponent claimed, especially as defendant did not present evidence suggesting falsification or tampering. Barfield v. State, 416 S.W.3d 743, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS

105. Admission of a surveillance video recording depicting the capital murder of a cab company employee was proper because the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to determine that the testimony concerning the recording was sufficient for a reasonable jury to determine that the recording was in fact an accurate video recording of the events that occurred that morning at the cab company; two witnesses familiar with the video surveillance system testified regarding the video evidence, and the cab driver who discovered the victim also testified about the recording. Turnbull v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13167 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 24 2013).

106. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter the State contended defendant wrote while in jail because the record revealed sufficient facts to support a determination that the letter was written by defendant, as defendant was in the jail in which the letter was found, the writer identified himself as defendant, the letter indicated defendant's jail cell as the return address, and the letter bore defendant's unique number assigned to identify him within the jail. Boldon v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12777, 2013 WL 5637031 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2013).

107. Trial court did not err by admitting a chain of social network messages allegedly exchanged between defendant and complainant because in light of the witness testimony and circumstantial evidence, the State proffered sufficient evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to authentic the messages. Two of the messages in the chain identified defendant as the sender, they were sent on the day of the assault, the sender expressed remorse, and the messages were printed from defendant's social network account. Laurentz v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12603, 2013 WL 5604740 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 10 2013).

108. Admission of computer-enhanced photographs depicting the offense contained in a PowerPoint presentation introduced by the State was not error because the photographs were properly authenticated; a district attorney's office employee testified that he created the presentation using still frames taken from the police officer's dash-cam video, which was admitted without objection, and the officer testified that the photographs contained in the presentation accurately represented what he personally viewed the night of the incident. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

109. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting recordings of telephone calls made from jail; the State properly authenticated that the telephone calls were made by defendant because during the calls, the person who made the calls referred several times to the complaining witness in defendant's case, the mother of defendant's children, child support defendant owed, and defendant's lawyer. Raper v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12332, 2013 WL 5459911 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 30 2013).

110. At a community supervision revocation hearing, the trial court did not err in admitting a letter found tacked to defendant's next door neighbor's front door that warned defendant to stay away from her children; the letter was not barred by the Confrontation Clause because it was not testimonial, and the letter was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) by a police officer's testimony that he had recovered it from the house next door. Harber v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9548 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2013).

111. Given the testimony that a witness reviewed surveillance videos and produced a true copy of the video she viewed and it had not been tampered with or altered, the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to have found that the State presented facts sufficient to support a finding that the evidence was authentic. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9376 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2013).

112. Documents provided to insurers regarding asbestos claims were properly authenticated by the testimony of the insured's corporate counsel, who testified that he was responsible for informing the insurers and described how the documents had been created. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Chi. Bridge & Iron Co., 406 S.W.3d 326, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7856, 2013 WL 3270615 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2013).

113. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a handgun into evidence because even if the trial court erred by admitting the handgun before the State laid a sufficient foundation to show that it was the one removed from defendant, the subsequent testimony of the jail pat-down officer that the handgun looked like the one he took from defendant provided an adequate foundation for the decision to admit the handgun. The testimony of the arresting officer and another officer, relating how each had gained possession of the handgun, were additional circumstances that, in light of the pat-down officer's testimony, allowed the jury to decide whether the handgun admitted into evidence was the handgun defendant had at the jail. Joseph v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7133 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

114. Pen packet had the appropriate certificate from the records manager and thus met the evidence rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), 902(4), for authentication and certification, and appellant did not dispute that the documents were true and correct copies, such that the trial court was within its discretion in admitting the pen packet into evidence. Smith v. State, 401 S.W.3d 915, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6416 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 24 2013).

115. There was no abuse of discretion in admitting into evidence a photograph depicting a screen-shot of the text message received by the accomplice witness, because the similarity of defendant's verbal messages to the text message provided a sufficient link to support a reasonable determination that the evidence was authentic. Joseph v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6115 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 16 2013).

116. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a bag containing a green leafy substance found in defendant's pocket at the hospital as marijuana, even though there was no evidence that it was in fact marijuana, because the State did not charge defendant with possession of marijuana and therefore did not have to prove that the substance was marijuana. Three witnesses referred without objection to the substance as marijuana, and defendant's complaint on appeal was not the same as his objection at trial. Blanchard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5140 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

117. Trial court did not abuse it discretion when it authenticated and admitted the e-mails under Tex. R. Evid. 104 and 901 because the alleged victim's mother testified that about personally knowing defendant's e-mail address and the content of the e-mails referred to matters that only defendant and the alleged victim would know. Sennett v. State, 406 S.W.3d 661, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 25 2013).

118. Evidence supported a finding that a prison letter was what it was claimed to be, as the letter had certain distinctive characteristics that linked it to appellant, such that it was within the zone of reasonable disagreement for the trial court to find that a juror could have found the letter was properly authenticated. Bundick v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4350 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 4 2013).

119. Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper because the trial court did not err in admitting the audiotaped recordings of jail phone conversations between defendant and other parties under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). The record showed that the victim's mother identified each exhibit as well as the voices on each exhibit and she explained how she knew each individual and how often she spoke with each one; her testimony was sufficient to support admission of the exhibits under Rule 901(b)(5). Duncan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3169, 2013 WL 1258449 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2013).

120. Governing rule for the authentication of evidence is now stated under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Goodwin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2430, 2013 WL 980173 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2013).

121. Clerk provided a sufficient foundation for admission of exhibits of surveillance, given that (1) the clerk testified that she had a chance to review the exhibits before trial, and (2) as an eyewitness to the crime, she recognized everything on the video, which was a fair and accurate description of events; although she could not testify about the capabilities of the recording device, her testimony supported a finding that the exhibits were what she claimed they were, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1), and the trial court did not err in admitting them into evidence. Goodwin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2430, 2013 WL 980173 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2013).

122. At the hearing on the motion to revoke defendant's community supervision, the trial court did not err in admitting two audio recordings of jail telephone calls into evidence because the jail phone technician confirmed that he downloaded the recordings of calls that were made by an inmate with defendant's name. The calls were authenticated by distinctive characteristics of the caller and the contents of the conversations under Tex. R. Evid. 901(h)(4). Malone v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2013 WL 427354 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 5 2013).

123. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding several off-color cartoons and printouts of e-mail jokes that the employee claimed were put on her office desk to show the existence of a hostile work environment because she failed to authenticate the proffered exhibits as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901, as she did not identify whom the cartoons and e-mails were from but merely stated that her supervisors was the only other person who had access to her office. Martinez v. Aa Foundries, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 789 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 30 2013).

124. Trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) in admitting a grocery store's surveillance video over defendant's objections during defendant's theft trial; a store manager agreed the recording was made simultaneously with the actions recorded on the video, the manager reviewed the contents of the copy prior to testifying, and it had not been tampered with. Randell v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 742, 2013 WL 309001 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 25 2013).

125. Fact that the reinsurer did not take advantage of the procedure in Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not determinative of whether the judgments were properly authenticated because the reinsurer could have properly authenticated the judgments in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 901. N.H. Ins. Co. v. Magellan Reinsurance Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 194, 2013 WL 105654 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 10 2013).

126. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized crime was proper because the nonaccomplice evidence placed defendant at or near the scene of the crime at or about the time of its commission under suspicious circumstances and because, although the forensic examiner testified that he did not know who actually sent or received the text messages, the circumstances were sufficient to allow a jury reasonably to find that defendant sent and received the messages, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Because intent to commit forgery could not be inferred, the prior conviction showing strikingly similar facts made the existence of a material fact, that was, whether defendant possessed forged checks with the intent to defraud or harm another, more probable. Franklin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8513 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 10 2012).

127. In defendant's community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in admitting an exhibit containing his letters that were intercepted by the mail clerk of the correctional facility. The letters were sufficiently authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(4), because the contents and substance of the letters established the correspondence was between defendant, his wife and minor children. Rivera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8306, 2012 WL 4712902 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 3 2012).

128. Record did not affirmatively show that potential objections to evidence would have been successful, or if so, would have resulted in the exclusion of the evidence; nothing indicated that the proper foundation could not have been provided if objected to, and nothing indicated that the trial court would have excluded the evidence as unduly prejudicial, and thus the father failed to show that had counsel objected, the evidence would have been excluded, and the court did not find counsel was deficient for failing to objection. Medellin v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8225, 2012 WL 4466511 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26 2012).

129. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the content of Facebook messages purported to be messages that were sent from an account with appellant's name to an account with the victim's name, and although this alone was insufficient to authenticate that appellant was the author of the messages, when combined with other evidence that was circumstantial, the record might support a finding that appellant authored and sent the messages, and thus the court examined whether the other evidence supported the ruling that admitted the Facebook messages. Campbell v. State, 382 S.W.3d 545, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7684 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2012).

130. Facebook messages contained characteristics that tended to connect appellant as the author, given that (1) the speech pattern was consistent with appellant's speech as a native of Jamaica, (2) the messages referenced the potential charges, and at the time the messages were sent, few people would have known about this, (3) the messages referenced the incident and were sent only a few days after, and (4) circumstantial evidence tended to connect appellant to the messages, given that (a) appellant had a Facebook account and only he and the victim had access to his account, (b) the victim received messages that bore appellant's name, which suggested that only appellant or the victim could have authored the messages in question, plus (c) the victim said she could not access appellant's account and did not send the messages to herself, and while this did not conclusively establish that appellant was the author, the State was not required to rule out all possibilities; there was prima facie evidence such that a jury could have found that appellant authored the messages, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence. Campbell v. State, 382 S.W.3d 545, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7684 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2012).

131. Because error in admitting evidence was nonconstitutional, in the case of admitting Facebook messages over an authentication objection, appellant had to show that the error affected his substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Campbell v. State, 382 S.W.3d 545, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7684 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2012).

132. Even if the trial court erred in admitting Facebook messages over appellant's authentication objection, the error was harmless because the case against appellant for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02 was substantial; the testimony about the message was not elicited from an expert, aside from impeaching appellant, the State did not emphasize the messages, and they were also cumulative of other evidence, as appellant testified that he struck the victim, which was consistent with the Facebook messages that he should not have put his hands on the victim. Campbell v. State, 382 S.W.3d 545, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7684 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2012).

133. In an aggravated robbery case, the trial court did not err by admitting a convenience store security videotape. The evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the videotape was what the State claimed it to be, and therefore the videotape was properly authenticated. Razo v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6625 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2012).

134. Letters that defendant purportedly wrote to a district attorney and an assistant district attorney were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). A detective who interviewed defendant testified that the detective watched him initial and sign the warning form; the detective testified that the two letters appeared to be in the same handwriting as on the warning form. Woodall v. State, 376 S.W.3d 122, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6245 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 31 2012).

135. Court properly found a recording authenticated because the officer watched and listened to the recording, he recognized the voices on the video, the video had not been altered, and the officer had heard defendant speak on numerous occasions and recognized defendant's voice on the recording, and he recognized his own voice. Johnson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4400, 2012 WL 1992888 (Tex. App. Waco May 30 2012).

136. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence letters purportedly written by defendant to the victim while he was in jail awaiting trial because the victim's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the letters under Tex. R. Evid. 901. The victim testified that she recognized defendant's handwriting on the letters, with the exception of one all of the letters began by referencing her name, some but not all were signed by defendant, and because defendant did not know her current address, he sent them to a mutual friend with instructions to give them to the victim. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

137. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the victim's statement was authenticated; the victim testified that she recognized the statement and that some parts were in her handwriting, plus the context and substance of the statement, along with the circumstances related to the relationship between appellant and the victim, were enough to authenticate the statement. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

138. Officer testified to each requirement for admission of the CD of a motor vehicle recording, including that the copy accurately depicted the original recording contents, the voices were identifiable, and the conversation on the record was accurate; thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the exhibit. Parr v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3144, 2012 WL 1392614 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 23 2012).

139. During defendant's trial for stalking, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) in admitting a text message from the victim's phone. Because the victim's son was better with technology, he saved the text on the phone; he testified the text was threatening, produced the victim's phone, and produced the text message for the attorneys to review. Montoya v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2568, 2012 WL 1059699 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 30 2012).

140. Given the substance and appearance of the documents and where they were located, in locked vaults at a temple and temple annex, and the testimony concerning the importance of the keeping these records, the trial court could have found that the State met its burden and a jury could have found that the documents were church and family records related to church members, such that there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the documents, for authentication purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

141. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a DVD of images taken from a security camera showing defendant on the stairwell of the apartment complex carrying the victim's backpacks into evidence because the maintenance supervisor's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the DVD under Tex. R. Evid. 901. The supervisor's testimony explained how the security cameras worked and that: (1) he removed the SD card from the camera, reviewed its contents with the victim, and copied four images onto a DVD, which he gave to the victim; (2) the victim gave the DVD to the police; (3) the supervisor testified that the camera was capable of making true and accurate recordings and that the DVD contained a true and accurate depiction of images taken by the camera; (4) he did not alter or change the images as he initially saw them from the SD card; and (5) he reviewed the DVD before trial and determined that it was a true and accurate depiction and recording of the four images he took from the SD card. The State's failure to establish the chain of custody did not render the DVD inadmissible as there was no evidence of tampering or fraud. Warren v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1544, 2012 WL 651642 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 29 2012).

142. Record had nothing to suggest that a predicate could not have been laid for a video by witness testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1), plus the State presented testimony from a person who operating the surveillance system and compiled the video; appellant failed to show that the failure to object to the video amounted to deficient performance, plus counsel had a reasonable strategy to allow admission of the video. Darnell v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1512, 2012 WL 626318 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2012).

143. Because appellant did not raise the authentication argument in the trial court, he did not preserve it for review. Kresse v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1419, 2012 WL 579446 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 23 2012).

144. Motorist did not properly authenticate a document, and thus the trial court did not err in denying the document into evidence. Carter v. Johnson, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1239, 2012 WL 566089 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 15 2012).

145. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

146. While defense counsel did not object to 84 crime scene and other photographs, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to admissible evidence; police officers' testimony as to all of the photographs was sufficient to authenticate them and establish the predicate for their admission into evidence. Gomez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1013, 2012 WL 390970 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 8 2012).

147. In defendant's criminal prosecution for bribery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter into evidence because it contained sufficient distinctive characteristics to support a finding that defendant was the intended recipient. The authentication requirement was met because the evidence supported a finding that the letter was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), 901(a). Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

148. As appellant did not object to a document's authentication or secure a ruling on any such objection, appellant waived any complaints in this regard. Segal v. Bock, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9868, 2011 WL 6306623 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

149. Court did not err during defendant's murder trial in admitting photographs of the area roadways, a bar, and the residence where the victim's body was found because although a testifying police officer did not take the photographs, the officer stated that they were fair and accurate representations of the scenes they depicted. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9460, 2011 WL 6004333 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 30 2011).

150. During defendant's trial for third-degree felony theft, the court did not err in admitting security videos of the theft into evidence because from the testimony of the store's loss prevention manager there was sufficient evidence from which the court could have found that the video had been authenticated. Harrison v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9133, 2011 WL 5589532 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 17 2011).

151. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the video taken from an officer's patrol car was properly authenticated by another officer, who was at the scene and who viewed the entire video, and stated that there were no additions, deletions, or changes to the video. Delgado v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7682, 2011 WL 4389956 (Tex. App. Waco Sept.

21 2011).

152. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping, the court did not err in admitting a photograph showing the victim's face because the victim's testimony that it was a photograph of her face taken two or three days after the assault and that it was an accurate depiction of her face was sufficient to authenticate the photograph. Brown v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7319, 2011 WL 3915663 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2011).

153. Appellant's brother acknowledged that the handwriting on a letter looked like appellant's and it contained appellant's signature; the brother's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the letter under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(2) Vallair v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7055, 2011 WL 3847418 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 31 2011).

154. In defendant's stalking case, a reasonable fact finder could have found that the telephone number the victim attributed to defendant was his telephone number, and that defendant sent the electronic communications attributed to him by the State and depicted in the challenged exhibits. Accordingly, the challenged exhibits were relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them. Manuel v. State, 357 S.W.3d 66, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7152 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

155. There was no abuse of discretion in admitting the CDs into evidence which contained excerpts from defendant's phone calls made from county jail, because inasmuch as the evidence was sufficient to show that the recordings were what the State represented them to be, there was no requirement for testimony from a representative of the company that operated the system for the county involved, and the court did not find any requirement that a particular witness know the name of the company that operated the system when the recordings were made. Chatman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7217, 2011 WL 3860437 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 31 2011).

156. Regarding appellant's conviction of theft of property over $ 1,500 but less than $ 20,000 under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03(e)(4)(A) and his sentence under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 12.42(a)(2), the State introduced two penitentiary packets concerning prior offenses that contained an affidavit certifying that the attached information related to appellant and the enclosed documents were self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902, plus a fingerprint expert testified that appellant's fingerprints matched those in the packets; in light of case law holding that the criminal justice department's record clerk's certification of the packet constituted proper authentication, the court overruled appellant's issue. Brunner v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6781, 2011 WL 3717002 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 24 2011).

157. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a letter as properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(2), given that (1) the letter contained sufficient characteristics to support a finding that appellant wrote the letter, (2) while appellant's wife and daughter did not testify that they were familiar with appellant's handwriting, appellant and his wife were together for approximately 13 years, and (3) the letter included intimate details of appellant's childhood and relationship with his wife, as well as appellant's state of mind on the day of the crime. Delagarza v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6209, 2011 WL 3484797 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2011).

158. Testimony of a custodian of records as to their preparation established the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) in a construction contract dispute, and his statement that the evidence accurately portrayed what the subcontractor claimed it portrayed met the authentication requirement of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), regardless of whether he had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records. Concept Gen. Contr., Inc. v. Asbestos Maint. Servs., 346 S.W.3d 172, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5475 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 18 2011).

159. Knife was properly authenticated and the trial court did not err by admitting it into evidence because the officer testified as to how he remembered finding the knife and testified to the characteristics of the knife that ensured him he was looking at the same knife that he discovered in the parking lot of the club, including the distinct logo written on the side of the knife. Madrigal v. State, 347 S.W.3d 809, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5144 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 7 2011).

160. Court did not err in finding that a tape recorder accurately recorded the investigator's conversation with defendant because, although a "popping noise" would occur, the court found that the tape recorder was capable of making an accurate recording, that the investigator was competent in making that recording, and that the recording was accurate and did not appear to have been altered. Martines v. State, 371 S.W.3d 232, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4773, 2011 WL 2502839 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

161. Although defendant, who was convicted of delivery of a controlled substance in a drug free zone, argued that the trial court erred in admitting a map because the map had not been properly authenticated under under Tex. R. Evid. 901, any error in admitting the map was harmless. Evidence that the drug transaction took place within 1,000 feet of an elementary school was admitted without objection on at least four other occasions. Carter v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4319, 2011 WL 2306113 (Tex. App. Tyler June 8 2011).

162. Reasonable juror would have found that a phone call recording was authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, given that the conversation was authenticated by several witnesses, including the administrator of the inmate phone system and a detective who identified the voices, and the phone call was made to a number with a certain area code, which region included where both appellant and his wife originally lived; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3799, 2011 WL 1888258 (Tex. App. Dallas May 19 2011).

163. Trial court did not err during defendant's sentencing hearing in admitting into evidence a compact disc (CD) purportedly containing audio recordings of some telephone conversations defendant participated in while in jail because defendant's voice was adequately authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b); when played on a computer, the CD showed defendant's name and identification number. Lawrence v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2971, 2011 WL 1494035 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 20 2011).

164. Given that (1) a Texas Ranger identified a computer disc and stated that it contained the recording of a voicemail from appellant to the victim, (2) records from appellant cellular-phone provider tied the voicemail as originating from a call made from appellant's home phone, and (3) the message included a request that the recipient call appellant's home number, there was evidence authenticating the message for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the voicemail message. Goodrich v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745, 2011 WL 1417026 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 13 2011).

165. Each of the affidavits submitted by the county and the city showed that they were not conclusory but supported the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations, and each affidavit was based on the personal knowledge of the affiant, and those affidavits submitting records substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b) and properly authenticated the relevant business records, Tex. R. Evid. 901(10)(b). Rameses Sch., Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2552, 2011 WL 1312279 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 7 2011).

166. In awarding attorney's fees, the trial court, in its discretion, could conclude that the attorney's testimony was sufficient to prove the bills were genuine under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(1). Good v. Baker, 339 S.W.3d 260, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2167 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 25 2011).

167. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the production of a decedent's medical records during discovery might have authenticated them but did not render them admissible in a will contest. The medical records were hearsay and inadmissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), 803(6) because no custodian established the requirements of the exception. In the Estate of Vackar, 345 S.W.3d 588, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1684 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 9 2011).

168. State introduced photographs through a detective, who testified that the photographs accurately showed how the rooms and evidence looked to him when he entered the scene; although appellant objected because the detective who actually took the pictures did not testify, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the photographs under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1). Griffin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1594, 2011 WL 754349 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 3 2011).

169. Record had evidence supporting an implied finding by the trial court that the photographs at issue were of the mother's minor children and that they were properly authenticated, Tex. R. Evid. 901. In the Interest of P.G.F., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1136, 2011 WL 950171 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

170. Trial court had sufficient evidence upon which to conclude that the mother was the subject in the photographs posted on the Internet and therefore, did not abuse its discretion by admitting them, because the mother could not complain on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion by not granting an objection it was not presented with or by not requiring additional authentication evidence to answer a challenge she did not raise. In re J.A.S., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 345 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 13 2011).

171. Any error in admitting evidence of a video of the collision between the train and vehicle was harmless, because even assuming the software overlay was not properly authenticated, there was evidence concerning the time, date, speed and location of the train that was admitted into evidence without objection. Henry v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Corp., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7557, 2010 WL 3582636 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 15 2010).

172. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a child protective service's investigator's testimony about a telephone call she heard on a speakerphone because it was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, as the investigator testified that the person on the phone identified herself as defendant's sister and continued to disclose information that was very specific to circumstances previously described by defendant and her sister. Mosley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7344 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 31 2010).

173. Trial court did not err by admitting inculpatory statements made during a telephone conversation between an officer and a man purporting to be defendant because there was sufficient evidence supporting the finding that the person speaking to the officer was defendant, as: (1) the officer testified that the person identified himself as defendant; (2) the caller advised the officer that he still had the stolen property and that he would have his mother return it to the police department; (3) the next day defendant's mother met with the officer at the police department and returned some of the stolen property, along with a handwritten note purportedly signed by defendant in which he admitted to and apologized for stealing the property; (4) defendant's girlfriend met with the officer and provided information the further led the officer to believe that he had been speaking to defendant; and (5) there was no contrary evidence presented that the caller was anyone other than defendant. Castle v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7039, 2010 WL 3370057 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2010).

174. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a photograph because it was not supported by the testimony of any witness explaining who took it, when it was taken, and what the subject of the photograph was, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Goad v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6349 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2010).

175. Defendant's challenge to the admission of recordings and transcripts of her statements on the ground that the tapes were never disclosed and contained discrepancies was rejected because: (1) even if the recordings were not disclosed, Brady did not apply because defendant knew she had made the statements; and (2) the record contained authenticating testimony that the recordings were what they were claimed to be. Mayfield v. State, 2010

Tex. App. LEXIS 6037 (Tex. App. Waco July 28 2010).

176. Letters purportedly written by defendant to another inmate in the jail were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Defendant was in position to have the letters delivered by a trustee to the other inmate and the letters were signed with a name that multiple witnesses identified as defendant's street name, were written to a witness to the charged offense, referred to another witness in the case and said the second witness was not going to testify, indicated a knowledge of the facts of the case, mentioned defendant's cell location, and referred to defendant's next court date. Green v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5828, 2010 WL 2874146 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 22 2010).

177. Defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact was proper because, given the lack of evidence that a tape was in fact what defendant claimed it to have been, the trial court acted within its discretion in determining that the recording's authenticity had not been sufficiently established to allow its admission into evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Sosa v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4428, 2010 WL 2330304 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2010).

178. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), the trial court's ruling, admitting into evidence the gun stolen during the crime, was not clearly wrong, given that (1) the victim testified that she was absolutely positive that the exhibit was the gun in question, (2) another victim testified that he recognized the exhibit as the gun in question and he identified it by the broken hammer on the back, as did the first victim, and (3) two police officers testified that, based on their training and experience, the broken hammer on the exhibit was a unique identifying characteristic on the gun. Traylor v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3611 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 12 2010).

179. Defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting into evidence the gun stolen during the robbery, as there were no identifiable markings in the photograph of the gun, which was substituted in the trial record in place of the gun, or ownership papers indicating the gun admitted was the gun stolen during the robbery; an employee working on the night of the robbery testified that he recognized the exhibit as the revolver he always put in a money bag at night, and although he did not know the serial number of the gun, he recognized it because of the gun's broken hammer, and another employee testified that she recognized the revolver as the one she placed in the money bag on the night of the robbery and because of its broken hammer, and thus, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), the trial court's admissibility ruling was not clearly wrong. Traylor v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3655, 2010 WL 1930283 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 12 2010).

180. Although defendant questioned the complainant about how she was able to recognize his handwriting, he made no objection to the admission of the birthday card, and thus defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 regarding his claim that the card was not properly authenticated. Sosa v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3328, 2010 WL 1790811 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 6 2010).

181. Because defendant's former girlfriend had personal knowledge of the things depicted in the video, she could authenticate them, and she was not required to have been present when the video was made to be able to authenticate it, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), 902(b)(1), (5), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the video was authenticated by the girlfriend. George v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2425, 2010 WL 1269676 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 31 2010).

182. Argument about linking defendant to a prior conviction did not comport with the argument at trial, which concerned lack of authentication, such that defendant was procedurally barred from raising this issue for the first time on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Andrus v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1665, 2010 WL 797196 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 10 2010).

183. Court questioned whether defendant's complaint on appeal related to the authenticity of his handwriting on a letter comported with his objection at trial that another person was to authenticate the letter, but assuming error was preserved, there was no abuse of discretion in the admission of the letter; under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.27, the authenticity of the letter could have been established by the jury's comparison of the signature on the letter with other unobjected-to exhibits containing defendant's signature. Dacus v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1072, 2010 WL 546691 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 17 2010).

184. Prior to defendant's objection, the prosecutor authenticated a letter through a detective's testimony, and when defendant objected and the trial court examined the signature on the letter with other documents, the trial court was merely concerned with properly applying the rules of evidence in regard to the admission of the letter under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.27; even if the trial court's comment could be interpreted to show bias, because the comment was made outside the presence of the jury, there was no harmful error. Dacus v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1072, 2010 WL 546691 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 17 2010).

185. In defendant's online solicitation case, the trial court did not err by admitting the chat logs between defendant and the officer posing as a teenager because the officer testified that the chats he conducted while posing as the teenager appeared on his computer terminal during the chat and the chat logs contained the content of those chats. The investigation traced the IP address used by defendant to defendant's apartment. Bailey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9440, 2009 WL 4725348 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 475, 178 L. Ed. 2d 301, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 7971 (U.S. 2010).

186. In a fraud suit involving an alleged misrepresentation regarding the zoning of property, the buyer's summary judgment affidavit authenticated an attached document under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1). Doye Baker, L.P. v. City of Robinson, 305 S.W.3d 783, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9250 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 2 2009).

187. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated kidnapping, even assuming that defendant was correct in asserting that documents purporting to be his Indian passport and an identification card issued by the Indian Aviation Authority were not properly authenticated and that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting them, defendant did not show, nor could a reviewing court find, any harm caused by their admission because it was uncontested that defendant was a citizen of India and that he worked at the international airport in Bombay. Therefore, the authenticity of the passport and identification card could not have substantially or injuriously impacted the jury when the uncontroverted testimony of the victim sought to prove the same fact. Shamsher Medih Chisti v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8941, 2009 WL 3931105 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 19 2009).

188. Court did not believe that corroboration was required to establish authenticity of the tape pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.141; defendant cited no authority for the proposition that for purposes of determining the authenticity of a recording for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, corroboration of an informant was required, and defendant did not argue that the recording was not of his voice or that it was altered in any manner, such that the trial court did not err in admitting the audio recordings. Rios v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8737, 2009 WL 3766341 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2009), mem. op.

189. In defendant's capital murder case, the robe the victim was wearing was properly admitted at trial because a witness testified that the victim was wearing a red robe when the paramedics arrived, she had to cut it off to complete her original assessment, and she recognized the exhibit as being the "exact" same red robe because of: (1) the distinctive jagged marks she made around the front zipper with her trauma shears; and (2) the blood stains near the neck area. Gardner v. State, 306 S.W.3d 274, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1441 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

190. Admission of surveillance video was proper because the officer outfitted the informant with a recording device and transmitter, the officer monitored an audio feed, and the officer later watched the video and interviewed the informant; that evidence was sufficient to conclude that the video was what the State claimed it was. Sanford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7592, 2009 WL 3161505 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 30 2009).

191. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

192. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter from a witness because, at the conclusion of the witness's testimony, he was excused without any request that he be subject to recall, the witness could not be located when defendant offered the letter into evidence, and thus, the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination. Furthermore, the letter was not authenticated and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6577, 2009 WL 2581286 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 20 2009).

193. In a dispute over an oil and gas lease where a lessee was liable under the terms of the contract for compensatory royalties, a lessor did not produce sufficient evidence relating to damages because neither purported Texas Railroad Commission records nor a demand letter were authenticated; therefore, they were not summary judgment evidence. H&S Prod. v. Dorchester Minerals, LP, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6386, 2009 WL 2478089 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 14 2009).

194. Victim testified that photographs fairly and accurately reflected the injuries she sustained, and thus the photographs were properly authenticated. Wallace v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5794, 2009 WL 2265023 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 29 2009).

195. Surveillance video was properly authenticated because a witness testified, out of the jury's presence, that the video depicted "exactly" what he saw on the surveillance system on the night of the robbery. Additionally, any error was harmless because there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Swinnie v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5352, 2009 WL 1981849 (Tex. App. Dallas July 10 2009).

196. Defendant objected to the admission of recordings only on the ground that the recordings were not accurate and complete, and in his motion for new trial, he contended that this trial objection was based on the doctrine of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, but that was not a rule of exclusion; his objection at trial was too general to alert the trial court that he was actually objecting on the grounds that the recording equipment malfunctioned or that the recordings were manipulated and he did not argue in his new trial motion that he had a legitimate reason for not asserting these objections when the recordings were offered, such that the objections made for the first time in the new trial motion were not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Even if the matter was preserved, a witness's testimony was sufficient to meet the requirement that the evidence be authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, plus defendant's complaint that the recordings were not accurate went to the weight of the evidence only and not to its admissibility. Manis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4909 (Tex. App. Dallas June 26 2009).

197. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter by a defense witness, given that (1) the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), as he had been excused without any request that he be subject to recall and he could not be located when the letter was offered, plus (2) the letter was not authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4166, 2009

WL 1653056 (Tex. App. Eastland June 11 2009).

198. In order for a love poem to have been admissible, it had to be authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), but it was not, and failure to authenticate a document rendered it inadmissible even if otherwise relevant and admissible; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the love poem because it was not relevant to punishment, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a), and the poem's impact on the jury could have been to imply that the victim deserved her fate. Akeredolu v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4112, 2009 WL 1609372 (Tex. App. El Paso June 10 2009).

199. Because a resident and his wife did not authenticate 911 reports, the trial court properly excluded the reports as incompetent summary-judgment evidence. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

200. In an aggregate theft over $ 200.000 or more case, while no handwriting expert verified the handwriting on the deposit slips, the handwriting on those slips was properly authenticated as defendant's long-time supervisor confirmed that the handwriting on the deposit slips belonged to defendant, and multiple witnesses testified that only defendant had access to the bank deposits. Keck v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2402, 2009 WL 3003257 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 2 2009).

201. Videotape was properly authenticated because a loss prevention officer described the intricacies of the store's recording system, he detailed how he was able to link the encoding on the receipts to the time and date, and he had personally copied the relevant recordings from the multiplex to the videotape. Thierry v. State, 288 S.W.3d 80, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1043 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

202. In a negligence case where a customer contended that he contracted food poisoning after eating undercooked chicken at a restaurant, medical records and a receipt were not considered summary judgment evidence because they were not properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). The trial court was then required to grant a restaurant owner's motion for no-evidence summary judgment because the customer offered no evidence to support his position, and the record showed that the customer failed to respond to the motion after receiving proper service. Moody v. James, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 337, 2009 WL 127866 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 21 2009).

203. In a negligence suit filed against a fitness center when a member died after a workout, the trial did not err by allowing the fitness center to introduce a copy of decedent's membership contract that was retained by the gym in microfiche storage; testimony from a corporate representative and counsels' representations there would be no contest to the signature on the document were sufficient circumstances to establish the document's genuineness under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Sinegaure v. Bally Total Fitness Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9435 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

204. Witness need not have taken the photographs in question or observed them being taken in order to testify about them; the witness testified that the pictures accurately depicted the child's condition on the date that she saw him and this testimony met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the trial court did not err in admitting the photographs in the father's termination of rights proceeding. In re M.M.F., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9486 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 18 2008).

205. Even if a variance existed between the cause number alleged in the enhancement count and that on the judgment, reversal would be required only if defendant could show prejudicial surprise, and there was no variance between the enhancement allegation and the copy of the judgment of conviction in one cause number, the proper judgment of the prior conviction on defendant was contained in the pen packet that was certified, and the court did not believe it was incumbent on counsel to object to a matter that clearly appeared to be no more than a typographical error; even if defendant had objected to the typographical error and even if the trial court had sustained the objection, the State likely could have been granted an opportunity to obtain a correction of this clerical error and thus the court was unable to say that counsel's failure to object specifically to the authentication of the pen packet constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. Fox v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8527 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 13 2008).

206. When the State sought to admit a pen packet, defense counsel objected to it as hearsay, but did not object to authentication; this was not an improper objection because if the record was actually not authenticated, then it would have been subject to a hearsay objection, but the court agreed that counsel should make a more specific objection to preserve the issue of authentication. Fox v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8527 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 13 2008).

207. Letter written by defendant was properly authenticated by an officer because the officer identified the letter as having been written by defendant based on his familiarity with defendant's handwriting from other letters he had reviewed as part of his jailhouse duties and from defendant's name and unique "SO" number on the return address. Galbraith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8433 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

208. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

209. State did not produce any witness testimony identifying defendant as the person who presented the checks in question to a store, but the trial court could have compared the photograph and signature in the driver license pack to defendant and the signatures on the checks and reasonably concluded that defendant was the person who presented the checks, given that the trial court, as the trier of fact, was authorized to compare the signatures, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.27 and Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(3); given that the trial court could have found that the same person who signed the checks signed the driver's license, and in the absence of any contrary evidence that defendant's checks were stolen or someone else presented the checks, it was a reasonable inference that defendant presented the checks, for purposes of defendant's conviction of theft of $ 500 or more but less than $ 1,500, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03(a), (e)(3). Perez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6092 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2008).

210. Mandamus relief was not granted in a case where an amended motion to compel arbitration was denied because there was no competent evidence of an agreement to arbitrate a debt dispute. In re Universal Fins. Consulting Group, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3723 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 20 2008).

211. Defendant did not show that objectionable material remained due to counsel's lack of objection and the record showed that the proper predicate was laid for the authentication of cocaine in defendant's trial for delivery of a controlled substance in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112, such that had an objection been made, there was nothing to show that it would have been error to overrule it; furthermore, an isolated failure to object to improper evidence did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Rodgers v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3182 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2008).

212. To the extent that defendant argued that pen packets were not properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the court noted that the rule does not require a raised or colored seal, and it had been long rejected that a facsimile signature stamp on a pen packet rendered the attestation defective and the pen packet inadmissible.

Smith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2849 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

213. Because defendant did not present a claim of improper authentication to the trial court in his motion to suppress, the court was unable to conclude that the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion on this basis because he failed to preserve error on this issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Green v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1193 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 20 2008).

214. Defendant did object to the admission of audiotapes on the basis of authentication and while defendant did not directly state so in his brief, under Tex. R. App. P. 38, the court interpreted the arguments over lack of authenticity to contest the trial court's decision to admit the audiotapes, and because defendant's wife testified that the audiotapes contained recordings of her telephone conversations and identified the voices on the audiotapes, the trial court did not err in admitting the tapes. Green v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1193 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 20 2008).

215. In defendant's murder case, a court properly admitted evidence of the victim's handwritten letters because it was admissible as relating to the victim's state of mind, and the State authenticated the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on the letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

216. In an aggravated assault case, any error in the authentication of the bullet was harmless because, although the records concerning the victim's treatment reflected a diagnosis of "GSW to head -- no injury," that entry did reflect that the victim sustained a gunshot wound, but it caused no significant injuries; moreover, records from the doctor who later removed the bullet were admitted at trial and confirmed that the removal procedure occurred. Jones v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 877 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 7 2008).

217. Photographs were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 and deemed admissible evidence because it was not necessary that an authenticating witness have taken the photographs- -all that was required was testimony from a witness with personal knowledge that the photographs accurately depicted what they claimed to be. Kirwan v. City of Waco, 249 S.W.3d 544, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 152 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

218. Defendant's murder conviction was proper pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 because a ranger was permitted to testify as to the authenticity of the tape recordings at issue; iIn addition to the information provided by the recordings, the ranger testified that the exhibits were of defendant's recorded jailhouse conversations, and that he had obtained the exhibits from jail personnel and had reviewed them at that jail; he also identified most of the voices and testified that he had interviewed defendant before his confinement. Capps v. State, 244 S.W.3d 520, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

219. Even if an inmate's appellate counsel used an incorrect standard of review regarding the admission of a surveillance tape by citing a case that had been superseded by the adoption of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the inmate failed to show that he was prejudiced because there was no indication that he would have prevailed had the appellate counsel used the correct standard. Brown v. Quarterman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88445 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 30 2007).

220. In a case of fraudulent use of identifying information with intent to harm and defraud another, an affidavit of a bank's custodian of records, who stated that he was responsible for the documents produced and that they were records kept in the regular course of business activity, was sufficient authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 901, in the absence of a specific objection, to support a finding that a credit application was a record kept by the bank. Rezaie v. State, 259 S.W.3d 811, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9368 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

221. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a knife as the offense weapon in a robbery because: (1) direct testimony established that defendant returned to the robbery scene with the knife found in his possession; (2) at the scene, the robbery victim positively identified the knife as the weapon with which defendant threatened him; and (3) a police officer maintained custody of the knife until he tagged it and booked it into the evidence room, where it remained in an envelope until the morning of trial. Maranda v. State, 253 S.W.3d 762, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9285 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2007).

222. Court was left to infer that a recording was made by jail personnel, and the court noted that authentication of an audio recording did not require proof of who made the recording or the details of how it was made. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 24 2007).

223. Victim acknowledged that the recording in question sounded like her voice and she acknowledged being a party to the conversation, and the trial court heard the testimony and the recording and could properly consider similarities or differences between the victim's voice and those on the recording in making the trial court's ruling, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901; the contents of the recording concerned defendant's prosecution and matters to which the victim testified, serving to further authenticate the recording, and the trial court could have found that the voices were the victim and defendant, and that the victim was uncertain as to one segment did not suggest an abuse of discretion on the trial court's part. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 24 2007).

224. Trial court did not error when it admitted into evidence the audiotape of the undercover drug transaction recorded by the police, because the officer's testimony explaining how the audiotape was made and confirming that it was an audiotape of what occurred during the undercover sting operation satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Fresch v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6353 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2007).

225. Because defendant did not properly authenticate, under Tex. R. Evid. 901, certain grievance records, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the records. Holbert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5803 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 25 2007).

226. In a medical disciplinary matter, the physician complained that the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners failed to introduce evidence meeting a seven-part predicate for the admission of recordings; however, an officer's testimony was susceptible to the interpretation that transcriptions of tapes were an accurate reflection of conversation that took place with the physician about killing one of the physician's former patients. Sanchez v. Tex. State Bd. of Med. Examiners, 229 S.W.3d 498, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5077 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

227. Upon summary judgment in a suit for wrongful termination, the trial court could not consider the employee's notarized responses to the employer's summary judgment motion and a transcript of a conversation with a supervisor; the transcript was not competent summary judgment proof, because it was never produced in discovery and never authenticated, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901. Kosa v. Dallas Lite & Barricade, Inc., 228 S.W.3d 428, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4561 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

228. In a case involving aggravated assault on a public servant and possession of a weapon in a penal institution, a videotape of an altercation between defendant and correctional officers was properly authenticated by the testimony of an officer who had taken the tape; the officer testified that he had viewed the tape, it was prepared on a recording device capable of making an accurate recording, he was trained to operate the recording device, the tape was an accurate copy of the recording that he took, it had not been altered, and the recording accurately and correctly depicted the scene that he recorded. Wilson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4332 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 31 2007).

229. Recordings of telephone calls defendant made while in jail were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because an officer identified State's exhibit 12 as the disc containing digital recordings of telephone calls defendant made, another witness demonstrated how the recording system authenticated the accuracy of a digitally recorded inmate telephone call, and the victim identified defendant's voice as one of the voices on the recordings; it was not necessary for the victim to identify both voices to establish that the digital recording was what the State claimed it to be. Banargent v. State, 228 S.W.3d 393, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4365 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

230. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting two pen packets during defendant's trial for armed robbery where an affidavit sufficiently authenticated the pen packets under Tex. R. Evid. 902. Eason v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2007).

231. In a burglary of a habitation case, defendant complained that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to photographs of the crime scene; however, the victim testified that each of the three photographs in question accurately represented the scene it was intended to portray; thus, defendant's complaint that the photographs were not authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was entirely without merit. Tarango v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2247 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 22 2007).

232. In defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.041(c), the trial court did not err in admitting a videotape into evidence for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 1001(b), given that (1) testimony showed that a witness removed the videotape from a locked box and placed it in his desk, reviewed the videotape the day after the incident and before testifying, and the videotape was the same or similar to what was seen on the day after the incident, (2) the testimony described where the camera lens and locked box were located in the school bus and how they were activated, (3) other testimony established the chain of custody, (4) the videotape display indicated it was a videotape of the bus on a certain date and time, and (5) events the children described appeared on the videotape. Teeter v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1248 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 20 2007).

233. Employer was properly denied a new trial on its claim that the trial court erred by excluding a graph summarizing the amount of time the former employee and the allegedly harassing coworker worked together because the employer's sponsoring witness did not create the graph herself, did not know who did, and was not sure whether it was created before or after the trial began. Waffle House, Inc. v. Williams, 314 S.W.3d 1, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 843, 100 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 451 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

234. On appeal from a drug conviction, defendant suggested no way in which the proof was inadequate to support a finding under Tex. R. Evid. 901 that the contraband was what its proponent claimed because his entire argument focused on the lack of a "chain of custody" affidavit; the affidavit was not required. Ingram v. State, 213 S.W.3d 515, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 86 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

235. Testifying as a witness with knowledge that a matter was what it was claimed to be, defendant sufficiently authenticated a letter pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901. Horton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10521 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 7 2006).

236. Trial court's decision to admit an exhibit over a lack of authentication objection was not an abuse of discretion; the trial court found that defendant's testimony of not writing the letters in question went to the weight of the evidence, not admissibility. Horton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10521 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 7 2006).

237. In the slaughterhouses' appeal of the trial court's issuance of a permanent injunction and award of expenses to the State, pursuant to Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 433.099, the appellate court rejected the slaughterhouses' claim that the trial court erred by admitting the State's exhibits, which included handwritten compilation of expenses incurred by the State, because a Department of State Health Services representative testified that the exhibits were a record regularly kept in the course of business, that he was a custodian of the record, that it was the regular practice of the Department to keep such records, and that the records were made at or near the time of the occurrence by a person with knowledge or by a person furnished with such knowledge; therefore the State laid the necessary predicate for admission of the exhibits as properly authenticated business records. Qaddura v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9209 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 26 2006).

238. Complainant testified that she recognized the handwriting in the letter as that of defendant; she explained that she recognized defendant's handwriting because he wrote her a lot of letters; also, during the punishment phase, defendant admitted that he wrote the letters; accordingly, the trial court did not err in admitting one of the letters into evidence because it was properly authenticated. Parker v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8834 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 12 2006).

239. In a case charging burglary of a habitation, the State properly authenticated a crowbar, which was easily identifiable and resistant to change, by presenting testimony that the item was what the State said it was. Chavez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7878 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2006).

240. Admission of the State's exhibits, which included the traffic citation, the warrant of arrest signed by the judge of the municipal court and a deputy clerk's certificate of defendant's failure to appear at trial for his speeding citation, did not violate defendant's confrontation rights because the exhibits were forms used by the Houston courts that record the occurrence of an event, and defendant failed to offer and the appellate court could not find, any authority or reasoning to transform the documents into testimonial statements. Azeez v. State, 203 S.W.3d 456, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

241. Trial court did not err in admitting the State's exhibits that consisted of a cardboard box spattered with defendant's DNA and pictures of that box into evidence over defendant's objection that the State could not prove a proper chain of custody of the exhibits where, although there were no photographs of the box at the scene of the crime and, at trial, the State conceded that it could not prove who removed the box from the scene of the crime, identification of the box by a police officer who saw it at the scene of the crime was sufficient authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the box had an unusual characteristic--a marking that appeared to be blood spatter. Hartsfield v. State, 200 S.W.3d 813, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7432 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

242. Although defendant objected to the admission of sheets on the ground that the chain of custody had not been properly proven, the court found nothing showing that defendant raised the issue of tampering, and because defendant's objection did not challenge the admissibility of the evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the error was overruled. Alexander v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6950 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

243. In the ex-husband's action against his brother-in law for conversion of gold coins, the trial court did not err in quashing the ex-husband's discovery attempts and granting protection for the brother-in-law's financial records based on the brother-in-law's submission of the two file stamped copies of orders from a prior divorce proceeding that were unauthenticated and not served on the ex-husband in the conversion action because the orders were stamped and certified and thus admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7); also a copy of a court order is not an affidavit and the service requirement of Tex. R. Civ. P. 193 does not apply. Calhoun v. Ying, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6636 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 27 2006).

244. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling an insurer's lack-of-authentication objections to a workers' compensation benefits claimant's exhibits; the trial court could conclude that the distinctive characteristics and contents of the documents, taken in conjunction with the circumstances, were sufficient to prove the documents were genuine. Am. Cas. Co. v. Hill, 194 S.W.3d 162, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5009 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

245. Because there was no an objection to the general authenticity of an audio tape under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the complaint was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Lingo-Perkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4877 (Tex. App. Tyler June 7 2006).

246. In defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence an audio tape of defendant demanding money from the victim's father for the victim's safe return; for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(5), it was reasonable for the trial court to find that it was defendant's voice on the tape, given the witnesses who recognized defendant's voice, and defendant had admitted to being the caller, which was at least circumstantial evidence that it was defendant's voice on the tape. Lingo-Perkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4877 (Tex. App. Tyler June 7 2006).

247. Narcotics task force officer was not present during the drug deals contained on the tape, he did not testify as to any of the distinctive characteristics contained on the tape, and he did not identify any of the voices contained on the tape; he only testified that he placed a tape in a device capable of recording conversations, made a copy of the tape after the transaction was completed, made a copy of the tape noting defendant's name and the case number on it, and that the tape had not been changed or edited in any way; simply placing a tape in a tape recorder and later retrieving it was not enough to satisfy the requirements for authentication; thus, it was error for the trial court to admit the tape, but the error was harmless because substantively the same evidence was properly admitted via an undercover officer's testimony who was present during the events. Roberson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 18 2006).

248. Although the tape was not properly authenticated, the evidence of an extraneous offense under Tex. R. Evid. 404 could not be said to have infringed on defendant's substantial rights because the evidence was before the jury via an undercover officer's unobjected-to testimony; therefore, admission of the extraneous offense evidence was harmless. Roberson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 18 2006).

249. Trial court did not err in admitting 2 counterfeit $ 100 bills in defendant's trial on a charge of unlawfully passing a forged $ 100 bill because they were properly authenticated as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901, where the police officer at the scene had recorded the serial numbers of the 2 bills separately from other bills found on defendant or passed at the race track on the same day, and defendant made an indirect admission that the bill passed to the clerk was his; proof of the chain of custody was unnecessary where there was direct evidence at the trial that the same item was taken from the scene of the crime, and defendant failed to raise the issue of tampering at trial. Haddad v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4414 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2006).

250. Tape recording made from a murder victim's voice mail was admissible because the deletions of the messages of the victim's best friend did not affect the reliability of the remaining messages on the tape; the best friend explained that she erased her own messages because she knew that the voice-mail would only hold 20 messages and she wanted to preserve space in the voice mail box. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 23 2006).

251. In defendant's capital murder case, a court properly admitted an anonymous letter regarding defendant, addressed to a reporter, where in addition to being found on defendant's computer, the letter contained numerous intimate details of defendant's life, confirmed by other evidence, that collectively supported an inference that she was the author; given those circumstances, it was a reasonable exercise of the trial court's discretion to conclude that the letter was written by defendant, and because the letter was shown to be written by defendant, it was not hearsay when offered against her. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App.

Austin 2006).

252. In defendant's theft case, documents were properly authenticated where several of the documents contained defendant's handwriting, with which a witness testified he was familiar, and another was a forged statement from a bank purporting to show payments on a mortgage and the victim's attorney testified that he was present when it was found in the victim's office and that the exhibit had a transaction from a previous bank statement that had been cut and taped onto the present statement. Reuter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1314 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

253. In a criminal trial for aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.03(a), the court did not err by overruling defendant's objection to the admission of a video recording of the robbery; the victim, an eyewitness, testified that the recording accurately represented the robbery; it was sufficiently authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Hawkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1104 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 8 2006).

254. Although the officer who originally found or seized the cocaine at issue did not testify or otherwise authenticate the substance prior to its admission into evidence, the officer who bought the cocaine from defendant testified that he recognized the cocaine and that he forwarded the exhibits to the laboratory for analysis, and because no one objected to his testimony, it was admissible for all purposes. Cyphers v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10699 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 30 2005).

255. X-ray evidence, which was printed from a computer program, was admissible in a termination of parental rights case because the evidence was sufficiently authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) by the testimony of a radiologist who testified that the computer program could not significantly alter an image. In re J.P.B., 180 S.W.3d 570, 2005 Tex. LEXIS 912, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 208 (Tex. 2005).

256. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the DNA evidence obtained from the victim's fingernail scrapings, and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1), the testimony the State elicited was sufficient for the trial court to have found that the evidence was derived from the material recovered from the victim's fingernails and was what the State purported it to be; although there was no direct testimony from the doctor who performed the autopsy or the person who transmitted the evidence within the police department, other witnesses established the chain of custody of the scrapings from the scene, to the medical examiner's office, to the police department crime laboratory, and there was no evidence of tampering or that the scrapings were not properly collected. Martinez v. State, 186 S.W.3d 59, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8678 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

257. Evidence supported the conclusion that the drugs in question were what they were claimed to be because (1) the officer who found the drugs explained how they were found, as well as how the officer packaged them in an envelope, dated it, and turned it in at the station, (2) the custodian of the evidence testified about drug task force policies on maintaining evidence in a locker, and (3) a representative of the crime laboratory testified to opening, examining, and repackaging the evidence and retaining it in the laboratory vault until the representative brought it to court; for chain of custody and authentication purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), there was no evidence of tampering. Meitler v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7519 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 13 2005).

258. Chain of custody was properly established by testimony from a police officer and a criminalist, and the evidence established, for purposes of admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), that the items found to contain methamphetamine were the items seized from defendants' residence. Stark v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6872 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 24 2005).

259. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence related to seized narcotics because a sufficient chain of custody was established, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), and although the better practice would have been for the officer who found the narcotics or the deputy who deposited the narcotics in the evidence locker to testify as to the identifying marks placed on the evidence, a reasonable juror could have found that the evidence was sufficiently authenticated by the officer's testimony, particularly given the positive field test of the evidence; furthermore, there was no affirmative proof of tampering or alteration, and barring such a showing, the chain of custody was sufficiently proven. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

260. Case law provides a way for the State to prove conclusively the chain of custody; however, case law does not require the State to prove the chain in only one manner. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

261. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant failed to preserve for review his argument that a videotape was admitted without the proper predicate under Tex. R. Evid. 901. His objection, that the State failed to lay the proper predicate "per Lucas," did not preserve error on a Rule 901 claim. Garcia v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6691 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 18 2005).

262. Judgments from defendant's earlier juvenile cases were properly admitted at a punishment hearing, even though they did not contain seals, as discussed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(1), (2), and (4), because they contained a certification showing that they were from the clerk's office in the county of the juvenile court and thus were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7). Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

263. Defendant failed to properly reserve his argument that admission of tape recordings of a controlled substance buy was improper because defendant's objection at trial was a mere predicate objection. Young v. State, 183 S.W.3d 699, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6299 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

264. In an aggravated robbery case, the certifications for two penitentiary packets were adequate for admission into evidence, although the name of the judge of the convicting court was omitted. Douglas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6063 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 3 2005).

265. Court did not err in admitting a handwritten letter and poem that were allegedly written by defendant and mailed from his jail cell to the detective because it was not only the letter's and poem's contents that suggest defendant was the author; the document was also signed by defendant and the envelope listed his specific, personal identification information, such as his birth date and inmate number. Fields v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5494 (Tex. App. Austin July 14 2005).

266. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a State's exhibit, which was a list of stolen property and its value, where the property's owner had personal knowledge of the items listed on the document because he made a list and his wife copied the list. Furthermore, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the exhibit, the error, if any, was harmless because it could not be concluded that it contributed to defendant's conviction or punishment or affected his substantial rights. Hernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5219 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 7 2005).

267. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

268. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting mortgage-related documents that were challenged by a surety on the ground that they were never authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the circumstances concerning the origin and admission of each of the documents led to the conclusion that they were genuine. The surety's principal had testified that it was her signature on some of the documents and did not deny their accuracy. Sierad v. Barnett, 164 S.W.3d 471, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4161 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

269. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault, the court rejected defendant's claim that semen evidence was improperly admitted without the establishment of a proper chain of custody because he failed to present evidence of tampering or commingling. Tex. R. Evid. 901 only requires a showing that satisfies the trial judge that the item in question is what the State claims, and most questions concerning custody go to the weight rather than the admissibility of evidence. Ford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3151 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 27 2005).

270. Complainant properly authenticated defendant's e-mail communications under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) and (b)(4) where she testified that she was familiar with defendant's e-mail address and that the content of the e-mails was similar to conversations she had had with defendant over the telephone. Shea v. State, 167 S.W.3d 98, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3091 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

271. Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's aggravated robbery conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 29.02(a) and 29.03(a) where three witnesses unequivocally identified defendant as the masked and armed man in surveillance videotapes based on his actions and voice under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(5). Although defendant's alleged accomplice testified that defendant did not participate in the robbery, the State presented evidence that the accomplice told others that he and defendant had committed the robbery. Coleman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

272. In a domestic violence case, the trial court did not err by admitting a 911 tape of a call from the victim as a business record; a 911 tape is admissible as a business record if properly authenticated, and the custodian testified that the tape was made in the ordinary course of business at the time of the event recorded. Warfel v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

273. Given that (1) a computer-generated case synopsis did not indicate whether defendant was actually convicted of a prior driving while intoxicated offense, (2) the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7), 902(4) were not met, given that it was not shown that the synopsis was a writing authorized by law to be filed or was a copy of an official record, and (3) the State introduced no other evidence of the prior conviction, the evidence was insufficient to support defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.09(a) of driving while intoxicated, second offense. Blank v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2566 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 172 S.W.3d 673, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10714 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

274. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that photographs were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 where the arresting officer testified that the vehicles in the photographs were similar to the patrol unit he was driving on the date of defendant's offense, felony evading arrest with a motor vehicle. The officer's testimony provided sufficient evidence to support a finding that the photographs were what the State claimed they were. Ball v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2575 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 30 2005).

275. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a videotape was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 where the arresting officer testified that he had reviewed the videotape and that the tape was a true and accurate copy of the recording he had made at the time of defendant's offense, felony evading arrest with a motor vehicle. The officer had activated the patrol vehicle's on-board vehicle camera when he decided to effectuate the traffic stop. Ball v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2575 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 30 2005).

276. Trial court erred by admitting certain photographs in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), 403, and 901 because although the photographs that were found in defendant's kitchen the day after the alleged sexual assault that showed the victim naked and unconscious were properly admitted as they were essential to understanding the circumstances of the assault and tended to confirm her testimony; other photographs that showed unidentified men sexually assaulting another woman, and that showed defendant's house mate having sexual intercourse, and defendant urinating against the wall giving a gang sign were improperly admitted. There was no evidence that defendant took the other photographs or knew of their existence and they suggested an improper basis upon which to convict defendant. Casey v. State, 160 S.W.3d 218, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1807 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

277. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

278. Testimony of an employee who viewed a security videotape immediately after a theft was sufficient authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) of photographs made from the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 463 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 21 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3, 2005).

279. Defendant's taped statements were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the detective participating in the taped conversation testified he was the operator of the recording equipment, it was functioning properly, and that the recording accurately reflected the conversation; additionally, the tape statements were relevant because they contained defendant's version of the events. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements at his trial. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

280. Absent evidence of tampering or commingling, theoretical breaches in the chain of custody did not affect the admissibility of evidence; defendant made no offer of evidence of tampering or commingling where he merely objected that the officer did not properly retrieve the evidence from the evidence locker and the State later entered into evidence the officer's property room receipt for the evidence. Prescott v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11787 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 29 2004).

281. Defendant argued that a tape recording made of him by the complainant's mother was inadmissible because the testimony in support of its admission did not meet a seven-prong test; however, Tex. R. Evid. 901 provided that the requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility was satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question was what its proponent claimed, and the complainant's mother that the tape was a tape of a telephone conversation she had with defendant. Justice v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11616 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 22 2004).

282. Defendant's objection went to the weight of the evidence rather than to its admissibility where defendant neither suggested tampering or alteration nor questioned that a Texas Ranger delivered and returned the boxes of evidence; the defendant's objection was that the chain of custody failed because the Ranger was unable to identify the items contained in the boxes he transported. Millican v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11617 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 22 2004).

283. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel in connection with defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault because (1) the court would not second-guess counsel's reasoning and trial strategy regarding testimony concerning other assaults, (2) counsel might have known that once an initial showing under Tex. R. Evid. 901 was made, any problems with the chain of custody of certain evidence would not have barred the admission of the evidence, and thus counsel's decision not to object to the evidence might have been valid trial strategy, (3) regarding sentencing, counsel might have been agreeing that imposition of a life sentence was mandatory, which was a correct statement of the law under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 12.42(c)(2), and (4) as for the contention that counsel failed to put on mitigating evidence, the record did not show and defendant did not explain such evidence that counsel might have presented. Acuna v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10768 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 2 2004).

284. To be considered as evidence of a final conviction, a penitentiary packet had to contain a judgment and sentence, properly certified, and, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901, the evidence offered by the State lacked certification and a seal, Tex. R. Evid. 902, and was not self-authenticating. The State's admissible evidence linked defendant to the purported conviction, but failed to prove the conviction was valid and final. Banks v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10630 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 30 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 158 S.W.3d 649, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1838 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

285. Defendant's trial counsel could not be found ineffective on the ground that the trial court did not admit into evidence photographs showing injuries to defendant's face and head because counsel laid a proper foundation and offered them into evidence. Defendant testified that the photographs were taken two days after he shot the victim in self-defense and that the photographs accurately depicted his appearance at that time. Romero v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10563 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 24 2004).

286. Defendant did not claim tampering or commingling of evidence, and given that blood samples were sealed and marked, locked at police headquarters, taken to the crime laboratory, then taken to the medical examiner's office, and finally picked up by an officer just prior to trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the results of the blood test into evidence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 in connection with defendant's driving while intoxicated trial. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14 2004).

287. Evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction of the offense of possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance, namely cocaine in an amount over four grams and less than two hundred grams under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(d) because the State established the chain of custody of the cocaine as required under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Police officers testified that the substance seized from defendant by police officers was the same substance that the crime lab chemist tested and identified as cocaine and that the crime lab kept secured in a vault when they were not testing it. Roberson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8781 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 30 2004).

288. Officer offered articulable facts and circumstances that justified a continued detention and broader investigation of defendant's vehicle, and the collective and undisputed testimony of the police officers and technicians established the proper chain of custody of the narcotics from its seizure at the crime scene to its appearance in the courtroom on the day of trial. Beach v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7243 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 12 2004).

289. There is a paucity of case law applying Tex. R. Evid. 901 to e-mails, but one federal court, applying identical Fed. R. Evid. 901(a) and (b)(4), found that a district court had not abused its discretion in admitting e-mail evidence by applying Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(4), utilizing characteristic evidence such as: (1) consistency with the e-mail address on another e-mail sent by the defendant; (2) the author's awareness through the e-mail of the details of defendant's conduct; (3) the e-mail's inclusion of similar requests that the defendant had made by phone during the time period; and (4) the e-mail's reference to the author by the defendant's nickname. Distinctive internal characteristics have also served to authenticate documents in other contexts. Massimo v. State, 144 S.W.3d 210, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7069 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

290. Trial court had sufficient evidence before it to determine that defendant wrote a letter that was introduced into evidence at sentencing to show a prior criminal record under Tex. Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) where the letter contained the same identification number as defendant's penitentiary packet, referenced the same cause number, referenced the same date as the judgment against defendant, and stated that he had been convicted under this style and cause number. Patton v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7092 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 4 2004).

291. Copy of the email correspondence appellant claimed was from appellees to the trial court that appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims was not accompanied by an affidavit, nor was it authenticated; appellees did not concede that the copy of the email was accurate, nor did they concede that it was ever sent, nor did the copy appear to fall within the category of facts that may be judicially noticed, such that the appellate court could not consider it for purposes of determining whether appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims. Lindsey v. Kline, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6941 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 29 2004).

292. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper where defendant did not claim that there was any tampering or commingling of the evidence, and given the testimony that the blood samples were sealed and marked, locked up at police headquarters, taken to the crime lab, then taken to the medical examiner's office, and finally picked up by prior to trial, the court could not say that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the results of the blood test into evidence. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6398 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14, 2004).

293. Error based on improper authentication of exhibits during a summary judgment hearing was not preserved for appellate review because an attorney had "no objection" when the evidence was admitted at a prior hearing. Kent v. Holmes, 139 S.W.3d 120, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

294. Where the evidence showed that an incriminating conversation took place on a jail telephone with defendant's girlfriend, the events described could have only been known by the perpetrator of a crime, as the caller described being shot by police, and since defendant was the only suspect shot by police during the relevant time period, the phone call was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Patton v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5531 (Tex. App. Austin June 24 2004).

295. Trial court did not err in admitting drug evidence where even though the deputy did not place an identifying mark on the plastic bag itself, he did put identification upon the envelope in which the plastic bag was placed after field testing the substance, and that was sufficient to identify the evidence. Reber v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4808 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 26 2004).

296. Attaching the assignments to the summary judgment affidavits and describing the assignments therein was sufficient authentication or identification to show the documents were what the beneficial owners of the stock claimed they were as a condition precedent to admissibility; therefore, the trial court erred in holding that the beneficial owners' assignment and assumption agreements lacked authentication and it should have considered the assignment and assumption agreements as part of the summary judgment record. Caso-Bercht v. Striker Indus., 147 S.W.3d 460, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4324 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

297. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

298. Where a list which did not contain appellee's name and phone number as an emergency contact was admitted into evidence by the trial court, although it did not meet the authentication requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901 because there was no evidence as to who prepared the list, the purpose for which it was prepared, or when it was prepared, it was erroneously admitted; the admission was harmful and probably caused an improper judgment pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because appellee's objection to appellant's application to be appointed guardian of the parties' incapacitated father was based on her claim that appellant excluded her, and the list was supportive of that claim. In re Henderson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3244 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 7 2004).

299. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, the parties' arguments concerned the contents and effect of the community property agreement, not whether it was in fact a writing signed by both the testator and his wife, and the issue of authentication was uncontested; thus, the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

300. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

301. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

302. In a child sexual assault case involving abduction in a car, a videotape from a gas station was sufficiently authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(1) by the testimony of a victim and an investigating officer that the videotape accurately depicted events at the gas station. Gilkey v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9964 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 21 2003).

303. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, a trial court erred in admitting into evidence two uncertified copies of judgments of conviction against defendant because a parole officer was unable to authenticate the judgments, as the parole officer was not custodian of the records. Carlock v. State, 99 S.W.3d 288, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1063 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

304. Where the client sued the law firm and its attorneys for legal malpractice alleging breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and gross negligence arising out of the sale of real estate and a foreclosure action, summary judgment was affirmed because: (1) the client's motion for continuance was properly denied because she was given sufficient notice of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment under the provisions of Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c), 4 and the certificate of service was prima facie evidence of service under Tex. R. Civ. P. 21, (2) the client's summary judgment evidence was properly excluded because even though the documents were authenticated, they could have been objected to on other grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) and the client failed to properly brief the issue on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), (3) the exclusion of the client's expert testimony was proper because it was not an affidavit in that it contained no jurat under the provisions of Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 312.011, and the expert was not licensed to practice law in Texas, and (4) the no evidence summary judgment was affirmed because without expert testimony, the client was unable to show a breach of duty which was an essential element of her cause of action. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

305. Defendant argued that the trial court should not have admitted the marijuana seized from his trunk into evidence, where the evidence weighed less when it was returned to, and where the box containing the marijuana was sealed with tape that could not be identified; the defendant asserted that these two facts indicated that the evidence had been tampered with or altered, however, absent affirmative evidence of tampering, theoretical breaches do not affect admissibility. Chambers v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8466 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 27 2002).

306. Tape recording of a drug transaction which implicated defendant was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Crim. Evid. 901(a) through the testimony of the officer who wore the microphone and conducted the transaction with defendant. Brooks v. State, 921 S.W.2d 875, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 1656 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1996), aff'd, 957 S.W.2d 30, 1997 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 94, 97:38 Tex. Crim. App. Op. Serv. 5 (Tex. Crim. App. 1997, no writ).

307. Trial court did not err in ruling that recordings of telephone calls made by defendant from jail were properly authenticated because a technical administrator with the contracting company that operated the inmate phone system testified that the recordings were linked to defendant's identification number; the detective who defendant called identified defendant's voice as one of the two voices on the calls. Escalona v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2008 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 20 2014).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

308. Given the detail of the speaker's account of the events and the consistency of that account with defendant's fabricated story, the speaker's personal knowledge of the victim's family situation, and the speaker's self-identification as defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the telephone conversation as properly authenticated evidence. Mendoza v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2817, 2014 WL 1004403 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 13 2014).

309. Translator who signed and certified a translated transcript of defendant's statement was not required to testify to the accuracy of the translation to authenticate the transcript under Tex. R. Evid. 901, because the exhibit contained a certificate of acknowledgment by a notary public, making it self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(8). Zambrano v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1606, 2014 WL 1022386 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 12 2014).

310. Fact that the reinsurer did not take advantage of the procedure in Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not determinative of whether the judgments were properly authenticated because the reinsurer could have properly authenticated the judgments in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 901. N.H. Ins. Co. v. Magellan Reinsurance Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 194, 2013 WL 105654 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 10 2013).

311. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the governor's warrant and the documents attached thereto into evidence, because the governor's warrant constituted a domestic public document under seal, and the State was not required to present extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility. Ex Parte Garcia,

2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7908 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 29 2011).

312. Each of the affidavits submitted by the county and the city showed that they were not conclusory but supported the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations, and each affidavit was based on the personal knowledge of the affiant, and those affidavits submitting records substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b) and properly authenticated the relevant business records, Tex. R. Evid. 901(10)(b). Rameses Sch., Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2552, 2011 WL 1312279 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 7 2011).

313. Despite defendant's assertions that a thumbprint was not taken, penitentiary packets were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of an aggravated sexual assault trial; those packets were self-authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901 and Tex. R. Evid. 902, and the State called a crime scene technician, who had reviewed the packets and taken fingerprints from defendant. Therefore, the State established beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the same person that had been previously convicted of other crimes. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6716, 2009 WL 2617647 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

314. Where defendant was indicted as a habitual felony offender for the unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, the indictment contained enhancement paragraphs alleging that defendant had prior felony convictions. The State proved his prior convictions by introducing as exhibits two pen packets that were certified by the custodian of records from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice; the pen packets were self-authenticating for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902. Harden v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1578, 2009 WL 539379 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 4 2009).

315. In a products liability case, a retailer's argument that documents were not competent summary judgment evidence due to the fact that they were not properly authenticated was rejected because the retailer received notice of self-authentication under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.7; moreover, a specificity argument was rejected because the retailer failed to raise such the issue until a response was made to a reply brief. Merrell v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 276 S.W.3d 117, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 23 2009).

316. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

317. Court did not err in overruling defendant objections to the State's admission of two pen packets to prove prior convictions during the punishment phase of trial because the pen packets were accompanied by signed affidavits with the State of Texas seal, certifying that the attached information related to defendant, the records were true and correct copies, and the documents were self-authenticating. Billington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1845, 2014 WL 669555 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 19 2014).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

318. Testimony of officers established the beginning of the chain of custody, and the transfer of defendant's blood sample from the lab directly to court and then the State's prosecutor established the end of the chain of custody; additionally, a lab employee testified the blood sample arrived at the lab sealed with tape and showed no indications that the condition of the sample was poor or that the sample had been tampered with prior to its arrival at the lab. Islas v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5171 (Tex. App. El Paso May 14 2014).

319. Court properly admitted defendant's sandals into evidence because the chain of custody was satisfied as the detective who retrieved the sandals from the jail explained that based on his knowledge of the jail's intake procedure, the sandals were taken from defendant by someone with the sheriff's office when he was booked. The sandals were also marked with a tag indicating that they belonged to defendant. Walls v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3159, 2014 WL 1208017 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 20 2014).

320. In a trial for intoxication manslaughter under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08, any error resulting from the admission of an analysis request form for blood testing was harmless in light of other evidence proving the chain of custody: the officer's testimony that he witnessed the nurse follow each of the statutory requirements for the blood draw. Mitchell v. State, 419 S.W.3d 655, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14606, 2013 WL 6244137 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

321. By proving the beginning and end of the chain of custody through the testimony of a crime lab employee and a nurse, the State established the proper predicate for the DNA evidence, and thus the evidence was admissible. Haynes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12243, 2013 WL 5503728 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 1 2013).

322. Trial court had the discretion to determine the sufficiency of the evidentiary predicate for the physical evidence submission form because the offense report served only to buttress the chain of custody of items of physical evidence used to establish the identity of the victims. Defendant did not contend the evidence was tampered with and the identity of one of the victims was corroborated by other evidence. Colvin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7128 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 12 2013).

323. To the extent appellant claimed the State did not establish a chain of custody for a credit card receipt, the court had previously held that articles that were easily identifiable and substantially unchanged did not require the introduction of a chain of custody. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

324. To the extent appellant claimed the trial court erred in admitting photo-arrays because they were inadmissible hearsay, were impermissibly suggestive, and did not contain a fair and accurate representation of appellant, he did not preserve these complaints for review because he failed to object in the trial court on these grounds. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

325. Appellant did not cite authority for the claim that only the officer who either prepared the photo array or showed it to witnesses could properly authenticate it, and appellant also did not cite authority for the claim that testimony concerning how the array was generated was necessary to authenticate it; the State only needed to present evidence sufficient to support a finding that the arrays were what the State claimed them to be, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), and this could be accomplished by the testimony of witnesses who had knowledge that the exhibits were what the State claimed them to be. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

326. Witnesses identified exhibits as the photo arrays showed to them, plus they identified their signatures next to the picture they picked, and this testimony was sufficient to satisfy the trial court that the exhibits were what the State claimed them to be. Haq v. State, 445 S.W.3d 330, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5565 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2013).

327. Regarding appellant's conviction of possession of cocaine with intent to deliver, the evidence was sufficient to establish a proper chain of custody, given that (1) an officer identified an exhibit as a drug evidence bag, marked with his name and when the drugs were found, (2) the officer explained that he did not mark the bags of drugs, but recognized them as the bags he collected on the night in question, (3) a second officer said the first officer gave him the drugs at the scene, and the second officer took the drugs to the jail and put the bags in the drug bag, sealed it, and put his initials and badge number on the bag, (4) another officer testified he helped the second officer heat seal the drugs into the drug bag, which also contained this officer's name and badge number, plus appellant's name, (5) there was testimony from a chemist the exhibit had a bar code label placed on it by the laboratory, which was the same number on the report, and the bags contained cocaine, and (6) another officer picked up the drugs and brought them to court. Simmons v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1799, 2013 WL 1614114 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 20 2013).

328. Notations and references to receipt of the blood, as well as the source of the sample, established the chain of custody for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Grimaldo v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9647, 2012 WL 5869603 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 21 2012).

329. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's capital murder trial in admitting a condom found at an extraneous murder and the DNA evidence obtained from that condom where the trial court could have reasonably believed that a reasonable jury could find that the condom had been authenticated and identified. Defendant made no allegations of alteration, tampering, or fraud, and the State presented sufficient evidence for the trial court to conclude that the matter in question was what the State claimed that it was. Mcgregor v. State, 394 S.W.3d 90, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6552, 2012 WL 3244196 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

330. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, a police investigator's testimony properly established the beginning and the end of the chain of custody under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) with respect to defendant's blood sample. Hendershot v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6632 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2012).

331. Nothing supported any claim that evidence had been tampered with, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the exhibits consisting of cocaine; the State established a chain of custody, as the record showed which officer seized the evidence and that each officer identified the evidence by use of a case number, plus the record showed who retrieved the evidence and took it for examination and the results of the examination, which was sufficient to identify the exhibits. Parr v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3144, 2012 WL 1392614 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 23 2012).

332. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the drugs alleged seized from defendant's vehicle because the State presented sufficient evidence to support a finding that the first step in the chain of custody had been established as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). The evidence established that the detective controlled the drugs until he placed them in the vault, and although during voir dire the detective acknowledged that he could not tell if the initials on the inside bag were his, the court could not conclude that that fact rendered the bag of drugs inadmissible absent a showing of tampering or alteration. Cedeno v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2716 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 5 2012).

333. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting blood evidence because the State, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), presented sufficient evidence to support an authentication finding, given that (1) a laboratory manager testified to the protocols in place for chain of custody for a blood sample, (2) the manager testified that a registered nurse drew the blood and a trained technologist tested the blood, and (3) the record contained no evidence of tampering. Bone v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1450, 2012 WL 592927 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 23 2012).

334. Court did not err in admitting testimony on the results of DNA testing under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) because a doctor testified that he collected samples from the victim, he submitted each sample in a standardized kit, and he identified the exhibits at trial; a biologist testified that each piece of evidence was labeled and sealed after testing. The biologist identified the sexual assault kit and the samples contained in the kit at trial and testified that the evidence had not been tampered with in any way. Sharp v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7208, 2011 WL 3850038

(Tex. App. Waco Aug. 31 2011).

335. Trial court acted within its discretion in determining that the IT workers did not tamper or change the contents of defendant's work hard drive in such a manner that the State failed to properly authenticate the images as coming from defendant's computer; the State presented sufficient evidence to support a finding that the matter in question was what its proponent claimed. Creech v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3340, 2011 WL 1663040 (Tex. App. Dallas May 4 2011).

336. Court did not improperly admit a pistol into evidence during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery because a detective established a predicate sufficient for it to be admitted at trial under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1); the chain of custody began when the detective retrieved the pistol from the ground from where it had been lying, and not when an unknown trusty had spotted it. Pierson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2356, 2011 WL 1204718 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2011).

337. Detective testified as to the beginning and ending of the chain of custody of scales and the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence; even if the trial court abused its discretion, there was no harm because the scales were pertinent to the possession with intent to deliver offense, and the jury convicted appellant solely of the possession offense. Griffin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1594, 2011 WL 754349 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 3 2011).

338. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the methamphetamine into evidence, even though there were some potential problems with the chain of custody, including the receiving officer's failure to place identifying marks on the evidence and the fact that the officer who transported the evidence to the crime lab did not testify, because testimony of the receiving officer, a sergeant, and a crime lab chemist supported the district court's finding that the suspected methamphetamine was what the State claimed it to be. In addition, there was no evidence of tampering or other fraud. Frasier v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6365 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 5 2010).

339. Trial court did not err in admitting videotaped evidence of the robbery on the ground that the State failed to establish a proper predicate for its admission under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the store's loss prevention investigator testified that: (1) he was the custodian of the surveillance tapes that were generated in the stores he supervised; (2) he arrived at the store approximately 20 minutes after the robbery; (3) he personally made several copies of the recording of the robbery; (4) he gave one copy to an unidentified police officer; and (5) the compact disk admitted into evidence was one of the discs he burned for the police on the day of the robbery. There was no evidence of tampering and alteration, and therefore the investigator was a witness with personal knowledge that the disk was what the State claimed it to be. Smith v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5388, 2010 WL 2723164 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 8 2010).

340. Trial court could have rationally found the essential elements of possession of a controlled substance in an amount of at least four grams but less than 200 grams beyond a reasonable doubt, because no evidence was submitted suggesting that anything inappropriate or out of the ordinary happened to the evidence during the time gap in the chain of custody. Shinette v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9013, 2009 WL 3817878 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 17 2009).

341. In defendant's drug case, the evidence was sufficient to establish chain of custody because, although the officer did not mark the capsules at the time they were discovered, a proper chain of custody was established. Both officers identified the capsules as the same ones that were discovered during defendant's property inventory, the lab confirmed that the capsules were the same ones turned over to the officer, and defendant offered no evidence of tampering at trial. Mason v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705, 2009 WL 2623363 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 26 2009).

342. In a child pornography case, habeas relief was denied to an accused on the basis of ineffectiveness of trial counsel relating to a failure to object on the basis of chain of custody because problems in the chain of custody did not affect admissibility of evidence but, instead, affected the weight the fact-finder should give the evidence. This could have been pointed out and argued by the parties. Ex Parte Yusafi, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6715, 2008 WL 6740798 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

343. Drugs' chain of custody was properly authenticated because at trial, the arresting officer identified the bags of marihuana visually and by means of his notations on the evidence tag as being the marihuana that he seized on the night in question and placed in the evidence locker. In the same manner, a witness identified the exhibits as the marihuana she transported to the lab for testing, and the technician identified the exhibits as the marihuana he tested at the lab. Dabbs v. State., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3866, 2009 WL 1563563 (Tex. App. Austin June 2 2009).

344. In a case involving aggravated assault on a public servant, defendant waived the right to challenge the introduction of a homemade weapon into evidence because his counsel stated that there was "no objection" the second time that the State offered it into evidence; moreover, a chain of custody showing under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was not required because the weapon was unique, easily identifiable, and remained substantially unchanged since it was discovered in the area where the assaults took place. Even if such a showing was required under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), testimony that identified the item and established the beginning and the end of the chain of custody was sufficient. Wingfield v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3744, 2009 WL 998679 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

345. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant's blood test results were properly admitted because both the blood vial and the blood box delivered to the State lab contained information identifying the blood as defendant's. That identifying information indicated that the blood sample that the technician thought was defendant was the sample marked by the officer as belonging to defendant. Meier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2051, 2009 WL 765490 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 25 2009).

346. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, the admission of defendant's medical blood draw was not improper, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901, because the record contained no evidence suggesting that the blood drawn was tampered, confused, or comingled with that of another patient. Lindsey v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9797 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 10 2008).

347. Although defendant claimed that the trial court committed error in overruling his objections to the admissibility of certain evidence, which objections were directed at the chain of custody, the court found no evidence to suggest that anyone had tampered with the evidence; defendant's claims went to the weight of the testimony and not to the admissibility and the court overruled this issue. Gallow v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6695 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 4, 2008).

348. In a felony driving while intoxicated case, a chain of custody argument under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was rejected because there was no evidence of tampering with a blood specimen; an officer observed a nurse draw the blood, and the nurse's signature on a form indicated that he did draw the blood. Also, the nurse's signature was on blood vials. Gasca v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

349. There was sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the methamphetamine tested by the laboratory was the same substance seized by the police and admitted into evidence because: (1) an officer stated that the substances seized from the house were placed into evidence bag, which were heat sealed and labeled; (2) the laboratory analysts' supervisor testified about the standard procedure in the laboratory; and (3) each evidence bag admitted into evidence had a lab number that corresponded to a lab report that was also admitted into evidence. Elizalde v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6588 (Tex. App. Dallas July 21, 2008).

350. In defendant's attempted arson case, a court erred in admitting a witness's testimony regarding tests she performed on liquid samples because no proof of chain of custody was offered; the liquid in the bottles was fungible and not capable of being identified through distinctive markings and no evidence or testimony was introduced connecting the samples the witness analyzed to the scene of the crime. Clemens v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3571 (Tex. App. Austin May 15 2008).

351. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the court did not err in admitting a suitcase into evidence because a witness testified that although he did not know who put the items in the suitcase, he did know it was originally in the motel room where defendant temporarily lived. Marquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3467 (Tex. App. Dallas May 14 2008).

352. Where defendant was convicted of possession of methamphetamine seized from his personal effects during an inventory search at the jail, the State proved chain of custody based on the testimony of the arresting officer, the booking officer, and the officer who mailed the evidence to the crime lab and the chemist; the evidence substantiated the trial court's admission under Tex. R. Evid. 901; defendant made no showing of a possibility of commingling or tampering of the evidence. Martinez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9830 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 19 2007).

353. Chain of custody evidence as to defendant's possession of marijuana in jail was sufficient; jail employees testified about finding it, a sheriff's deputy testified that he received it, a property custodian testified that she took it out of the deputy's bag and sent it to the lab, and a forensic scientist testified that she analyzed and returned it. Hofman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7283 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2007).

354. Trial court did not err in overruling an offender's objection that a proper predicate was not laid for the admission of the crack cocaine from the sale alleged in count two of the indictment (delivery of a controlled substance in an amount of one gram or more but less than four grams), since the evidence had markings of corresponding laboratory identification numbers, and each bore the technician's initials and date, which indicated a proper chain of custody. Alexander v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5715 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 19 2007).

355. In a juvenile defendant's challenge to his adjudication as a delinquent upon a finding that he violated his community supervision conditions by possessing marijuana, the trial court did not err in admitting a State exhibit containing a tin canister and cigar with marijuana as the testimony of the officer regarding the marked bag in which he placed the evidence, and the testimony of the lab technician regarding his analysis of the contents of the marked bag and the sealing procedure, clearly showed the beginning and end of the chain of custody. In re J.M.A.B., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10341 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 30 2006).

356. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the chain of custody was sufficient and by admitting the bullet into evidence where defendant's argument that because the bullet was in such good condition, someone must have replaced it was not supported by the record, and the trial court could have decided that a reasonable juror could find that the bullet was authenticated. Thomas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5823 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 6 2006).

357. Court properly admitted a State exhibit -- a bag containing thirteen bullets -- because there was no evidence of tampering, and thus defendant's complaint went to the weight, and not the admissibility of the evidence; an officer testified that he recognized the exhibit to be the live rounds in the exact same bag that he found when he searched the vehicle. Renfro v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4553 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 25 2006).

358. Trial court did not err in admitting 2 counterfeit $ 100 bills in defendant's trial on a charge of unlawfully passing a forged $ 100 bill because they were properly authenticated as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901, where the police officer at the scene had recorded the serial numbers of the 2 bills separately from other bills found on defendant or passed at the race track on the same day, and defendant made an indirect admission that the bill passed to the clerk was his; proof of the chain of custody was unnecessary where there was direct evidence at the trial that the same item was taken from the scene of the crime, and defendant failed to raise the issue of tampering at trial. Haddad v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4414 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2006).

359. In a capital murder trial, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of DNA results from a specimen taken from defendant's truck; testimony from a detective, a lab technician, and a DNA analyst established the chain of custody. Thomas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1986 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 15 2006).

360. Chain of custody was not required for the admission of a handgun because initials engraved on the side of the gun made it easily identifiable, and the gun and the initials were resistant to change. Bailey v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

361. Chain of custody was properly established by testimony from a police officer and a criminalist, and the evidence established, for purposes of admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), that the items found to contain methamphetamine were the items seized from defendants' residence. Stark v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6872 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 24 2005).

362. In a prisoner's capital murder trial, the State made out a prima facie case of authenticity under Fed. R. Evid. 901 and Tex. R. Evid. 901 for a hammer and knives where the record evidence established that the hammer was the one found at the scene and the victim's husband testified that the one knife missing from the set found in his home fit the description of the weapon that caused the stab wounds to the victim's body. Consequently, any possible break in the chain of custody went only to the weight the jury accorded the hammer and the knives. Shields v. Dretke, 122 Fed. Appx. 133, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 2910 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 28, 162 L. Ed. 2d 928, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 5374, 74 U.S.L.W. 3129 (U.S. 2005).

363. Evidence was legally sufficient to support defendant's conviction of the offense of possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance, namely cocaine in an amount over four grams and less than two hundred grams under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(d) because the State established the chain of custody of the cocaine as required under Tex. R. Evid. 901. Police officers testified that the substance seized from defendant by police officers was the same substance that the crime lab chemist tested and identified as cocaine and that the crime lab kept secured in a vault when they were not testing it. Roberson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8781 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 30 2004).

364. Officer offered articulable facts and circumstances that justified a continued detention and broader investigation of defendant's vehicle, and the collective and undisputed testimony of the police officers and technicians established the proper chain of custody of the narcotics from its seizure at the crime scene to its appearance in the courtroom on the day of trial. Beach v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7243 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 12 2004).

365. In a criminal prosecution for murder, the trial court did not err by admitting a bandana into evidence that was found at the crime scene where the State called three police officer's to testify as to the bandana's chain of custody. Sandoval v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5722 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

366. State conclusively establishes the chain of custody if an officer testifies that he seized the item of physical evidence, tagged it, placed an identifying mark on it, placed it in evidence storage, and retrieved the item for trial. Sandoval v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5722 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

367. When the State sends the evidence to a laboratory for analysis, it must introduce testimony showing the laboratory handled the evidence the same way in order to conclusively establish the chain of custody. Sandoval v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5722 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

368. Once the State completes the chain of custody from the initial collection of the evidence to inside the laboratory, most questions concerning care and custody, including gaps and minor theoretical breaches, go to the weight of the evidence, not to its admissibility. Sandoval v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5722 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

369. Chain of custody for a bottle of methamphetamine was established because an officer testified that after securing the evidence, he transported it to the sheriff's office, where it was put in the evidence vault, and a forensic scientist testified that it was consistent for a lab technician to put certain types of substances into laboratory containers instead of the container in which it arrived. Kinder v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2352, 2014 WL 887357 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 28 2014).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence

370. In a criminal trial for aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.03(a), the court did not err by overruling defendant's objection to the admission of a video recording of the robbery; the victim, an eyewitness, testified that the recording accurately represented the robbery; it was sufficiently authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Hawkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1104 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 8 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

371. Admission of the 911 tape where defendant called to say that the child he was babysitting was not breathing was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(4) because the State introduced a copy of the recording made through the testimony of the services supervisor who was in charge of the 911 records. She identified the dispatcher who received the 911 call as and the other voice on the tape identified by defendant's name and stated that he was watching the injured child, and gave the address of the apartment where the incident occurred. Batteas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1333 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

372. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

373. In a forgery case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted a photograph of defendant into evidence. The store employee who took the photograph testified that the picture was an accurate depiction of defendant when he returned to the store, and the fact that she did not witness defendant's commission of the offense did not affect her ability to authenticate the photograph. Resendez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2587, 2014 WL 972297 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 6 2014).

374. Admission of computer-enhanced photographs depicting the offense contained in a PowerPoint presentation introduced by the State was not error because the photographs were properly authenticated; a district attorney's office employee testified that he created the presentation using still frames taken from the police officer's dash-cam video, which was admitted without objection, and the officer testified that the photographs contained in the presentation accurately represented what he personally viewed the night of the incident. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

375. Photographs were properly admitted during the termination of parental rights trial, and therefore the trial court did not err by denying the grandmother's motion for a mistrial, because the photographs showed nothing more than what was established by the testimony of the father and the grandmother, namely them leaving an apartment building with the child. In re A.L.W., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 8 2012).

376. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping, the court did not err in admitting a photograph showing the victim's face because the victim's testimony that it was a photograph of her face taken two or three days after the assault and that it was an accurate depiction of her face was sufficient to authenticate the photograph. Brown v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7319, 2011 WL 3915663 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2011).

377. Photograph was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) because a witness testified on direct examination that the photographs accurately depicted the witness's grill with a hat and a shirt that he found on it on the night in question. Moore v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9234, 2010 WL 4677272 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 18 2010).

378. There was no error when a medical examiner who was not present at an autopsy testified about photographs taken during the autopsy because the photographs were not an out-of-court statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and there was no question under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) that they accurately depicted the appearance of the victim's body. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

379. Photographs were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 and deemed admissible evidence because it was not necessary that an authenticating witness have taken the photographs- -all that was required was testimony from a witness with personal knowledge that the photographs accurately depicted what they claimed to be. Kirwan v. City of Waco, 249 S.W.3d 544, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 152 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

380. Court properly admitted photographs and documentary evidence found in the search of an alleged member of the Mexican Mafia because they were properly authenticated where the circumstances under which the evidence was obtained support a finding that they are authentic; they were found at the home of a gang member linked to defendant during a search conducted by the police pursuant to a warrant a week before the murder, the State presented evidence to show the circumstances under which the exhibits were obtained, that they had not been tampered with, and that they were connected to defendant. Hernandez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 722 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 26 2006).

381. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that photographs were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 where the arresting officer testified that the vehicles in the photographs were similar to the patrol unit he was driving on the date of defendant's offense, felony evading arrest with a motor vehicle. The officer's testimony provided sufficient evidence to support a finding that the photographs were what the State claimed they were. Ball

v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2575 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 30 2005).

382. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a videotape was properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 where the arresting officer testified that he had reviewed the videotape and that the tape was a true and accurate copy of the recording he had made at the time of defendant's offense, felony evading arrest with a motor vehicle. The officer had activated the patrol vehicle's on-board vehicle camera when he decided to effectuate the traffic stop. Ball v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2575 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 30 2005).

383. Trial court erred by admitting certain photographs in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), 403, and 901 because although the photographs that were found in defendant's kitchen the day after the alleged sexual assault that showed the victim naked and unconscious were properly admitted as they were essential to understanding the circumstances of the assault and tended to confirm her testimony; other photographs that showed unidentified men sexually assaulting another woman, and that showed defendant's house mate having sexual intercourse, and defendant urinating against the wall giving a gang sign were improperly admitted. There was no evidence that defendant took the other photographs or knew of their existence and they suggested an improper basis upon which to convict defendant. Casey v. State, 160 S.W.3d 218, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1807 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

384. Where defendant challenged the admission of a videotape taken from a camera mounted in the arresting officer's patrol car of the events constituting the offense, the state offered the videotape during the arresting officer's testimony and, contrary to defendant's assertion, the officer testified he reviewed the tape and it showed exactly what happened on the day of the arrest; therefore it was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) where it accurately represented the scene or event it purported to portray. Cooks v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 228 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 9 2004).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

385. Video recording of defendant's post-arrest statements regarding his use and purchase of methamphetamine was properly admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 and Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the officer was able to identify the voices and recount what was said, and the warning given to defendant and his statements were clearly audible. Parker v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6409, 2013 WL 2248254 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 23 2013).

386. At the hearing on the motion to revoke defendant's community supervision, the trial court did not err in admitting two audio recordings of jail telephone calls into evidence because the jail phone technician confirmed that he downloaded the recordings of calls that were made by an inmate with defendant's name. The calls were authenticated by distinctive characteristics of the caller and the contents of the conversations under Tex. R. Evid. 901(h)(4). Malone v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2013 WL 427354 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 5 2013).

387. Court properly found a recording authenticated because the officer watched and listened to the recording, he recognized the voices on the video, the video had not been altered, and the officer had heard defendant speak on numerous occasions and recognized defendant's voice on the recording, and he recognized his own voice. Johnson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4400, 2012 WL 1992888 (Tex. App. Waco May 30 2012).

388. Court did not err in finding that a tape recorder accurately recorded the investigator's conversation with defendant because, although a "popping noise" would occur, the court found that the tape recorder was capable of making an accurate recording, that the investigator was competent in making that recording, and that the recording was accurate and did not appear to have been altered. Martines v. State, 371 S.W.3d 232, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4773, 2011 WL 2502839 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

389. Defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact was proper because, given the lack of evidence that a tape was in fact what defendant claimed it to have been, the trial court acted within its discretion in determining that the recording's authenticity had not been sufficiently established to allow its admission into evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Sosa v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4428, 2010 WL 2330304 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2010).

390. Recordings of defendant's telephone calls from jail were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, even though the sponsoring witness had no knowledge of defendant's voice, because the calls were subject to and passed voice-print recognition. White v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2723 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 1 2010).

391. In a possession of a controlled substance case, as the testimony of an informant who was on the recording established that the recording was what it claimed to be, resulting in a proper authentication, defendant failed to establish that the presence of a 10 to 15 minute gap in the recording, standing alone, destroyed authentication or precluded admission of the tape into evidence. As such, the trial court did not erroneously admit the tape recording into evidence. Malone v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

392. In a murder trial, 911 recordings were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the 911 dispatcher testified that, although the dispatcher neither made the recordings nor retained custody of the recordings, the two recordings were true and accurate representations of the calls the dispatcher received on the evening of the incident. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10011 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 28 2007).

393. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, there was no error in the admission of compilation exhibits in which the audio recording of defendant's conversation with a 911 operator was paired and played with videotapes of a pursuit taken from patrol cars; the exhibits were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the lead investigator assigned to the case testified to reviewing all the audiotapes and videotapes and to how the compilations were made. Jarrell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6357 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

394. Recordings of telephone calls defendant made while in jail were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because an officer identified State's exhibit 12 as the disc containing digital recordings of telephone calls defendant made, another witness demonstrated how the recording system authenticated the accuracy of a digitally recorded inmate telephone call, and the victim identified defendant's voice as one of the voices on the recordings; it was not necessary for the victim to identify both voices to establish that the digital recording was what the State claimed it to be. Banargent v. State, 228 S.W.3d 393, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4365 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

395. Witness had sufficient knowledge to authenticate a video recording from a jail surveillance camera, even though he did see the event depicted of defendant's contact with an assault victim, because he personally witnessed the events depicted only seconds later and then appeared on the video himself. Standmire v. State, 475 S.W.3d 336, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8672 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 7 2014).

396. An officer's testimony that a videotape recording of a search of defendant's apartment reflected the scene the day of a search was sufficient to authenticate it, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) although the officer was not the recorder. Alvarado v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6102 (Tex. App. Dallas June 4 2014).

397. Security footage was properly authenticated because a company manager testified that the bus's security cameras recorded footage from the bus as it occurred, the videos were transferred to her hard drive, and the hard drive was kept in a secure location. Furthermore, the witness stated that she reviewed the footage and verified that it "depicts what was going on on the bus during that person's shift during that period of time." Walls v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3159, 2014 WL 1208017 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 20 2014).

398. Silent videotape of an informant's cocaine buy from defendant was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), although the informant did not testify, because the officers had personal knowledge of the video's contents and could corroborate it; Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.141, requiring corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, did not apply because the video was muted. Watson v. State, 421 S.W.3d 186, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14603, 2013 WL 6244135 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

399. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a DVD of images taken from a security camera showing defendant on the stairwell of the apartment complex carrying the victim's backpacks into evidence because the maintenance supervisor's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the DVD under Tex. R. Evid. 901. The supervisor's testimony explained how the security cameras worked and that: (1) he removed the SD card from the camera, reviewed its contents with the victim, and copied four images onto a DVD, which he gave to the victim; (2) the victim gave the DVD to the police; (3) the supervisor testified that the camera was capable of making true and accurate recordings and that the DVD contained a true and accurate depiction of images taken by the camera; (4) he did not alter or change the images as he initially saw them from the SD card; and (5) he reviewed the DVD before trial and determined that it was a true and accurate depiction and recording of the four images he took from the SD card. The State's failure to establish the chain of custody did not render the DVD inadmissible as there was no evidence of tampering or fraud. Warren v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1544, 2012 WL 651642 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 29 2012).

400. Under Tex. R. Evid. 901, the video taken from an officer's patrol car was properly authenticated by another officer, who was at the scene and who viewed the entire video, and stated that there were no additions, deletions, or changes to the video. Delgado v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7682, 2011 WL 4389956 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2011).

401. Admission of surveillance video was proper because the officer outfitted the informant with a recording device and transmitter, the officer monitored an audio feed, and the officer later watched the video and interviewed the informant; that evidence was sufficient to conclude that the video was what the State claimed it was. Sanford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7592, 2009 WL 3161505 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 30 2009).

402. Authentication of video excerpts from a seized camera satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 901(a)(1), (5), (9) because a witness testified to the process of transferring the video files from the camera to a disc, that the disc accurately represented what was viewed on the camera when it was seized, and that the video had not been tampered with in any way. Also, the jury could have recognized defendant in the video. Mincey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2825, 2009 WL 1058734 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 21 2009).

403. Videotape was properly authenticated because a loss prevention officer described the intricacies of the store's recording system, he detailed how he was able to link the encoding on the receipts to the time and date, and he had personally copied the relevant recordings from the multiplex to the videotape. Thierry v. State, 288 S.W.3d 80, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1043 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

404. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a videotape into evidence because a witness showed his knowledge of the operation of the apartment complex's cameras and his knowledge of what was recorded on the videotape; he was sufficiently able to show that the videotape offered into evidence was what the prosecution claimed it to be. Garcia v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5064 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2008).

405. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, there was no error in the admission of compilation exhibits in which the audio recording of defendant's conversation with a 911 operator was paired and played with videotapes of a pursuit taken from patrol cars; the exhibits were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the lead investigator assigned to the case testified to reviewing all the audiotapes and videotapes and to how the compilations were made. Jarrell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6357 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : General Overview

406. In a child sexual assault case involving abduction in a car, a videotape from a gas station was sufficiently authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(1) by the testimony of a victim and an investigating officer that the videotape accurately depicted events at the gas station. Gilkey v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9964 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 21 2003).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

407. Defendant had not established that copies of two different checks that were allegedly forged and presented by him at two different banks were inadmissible as duplicates because there was no evidence that would raise a question about whether the checks were what the State claimed them to be, and reasonable jurors thus could not disagree about whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant, as the State alleged. Moreover, the potentially unique probative value of the original checks went to the issues of whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant and whether the checks were forgeries, and defendant had admitted both of those facts. Duncan v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4678, 2014 WL 1788173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2014).

408. Where defendant challenged the admission of a videotape taken from a camera mounted in the arresting officer's patrol car of the events constituting the offense, the state offered the videotape during the arresting officer's testimony and, contrary to defendant's assertion, the officer testified he reviewed the tape and it showed exactly what happened on the day of the arrest; therefore it was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) where it accurately represented the scene or event it purported to portray. Cooks v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 228 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 9 2004).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

409. Trial court did not abuse it discretion when it authenticated and admitted the e-mails under Tex. R. Evid. 104 and 901 because the alleged victim's mother testified that about personally knowing defendant's e-mail address and the content of the e-mails referred to matters that only defendant and the alleged victim would know. Sennett v. State, 406 S.W.3d 661, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 25 2013).

410. In defendant's community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in admitting an exhibit containing his letters that were intercepted by the mail clerk of the correctional facility. The letters were sufficiently authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(4), because the contents and substance of the letters established the correspondence was between defendant, his wife and minor children. Rivera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8306, 2012 WL 4712902 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 3 2012).

411. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence letters purportedly written by defendant to the victim while he was in jail awaiting trial because the victim's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the letters under Tex. R. Evid. 901. The victim testified that she recognized defendant's handwriting on the letters, with the exception of one all of the letters began by referencing her name, some but not all were signed by defendant, and because defendant did not know her current address, he sent them to a mutual friend with instructions to give them to the victim. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Transcripts & Translations : General Overview

412. Upon summary judgment in a suit for wrongful termination, the trial court could not consider the employee's notarized responses to the employer's summary judgment motion and a transcript of a conversation with a supervisor; the transcript was not competent summary judgment proof, because it was never produced in discovery and never authenticated, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 901. Kosa v. Dallas Lite & Barricade, Inc., 228 S.W.3d 428, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4561 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Transcripts & Translations : Translations

413. Translator who signed and certified a translated transcript of defendant's statement was not required to testify to the accuracy of the translation to authenticate the transcript under Tex. R. Evid. 901, because the exhibit contained a certificate of acknowledgment by a notary public, making it self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(8). Zambrano v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1606, 2014 WL 1022386 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 12 2014).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

414. In a domestic violence case, the trial court did not err by admitting a 911 tape of a call from the victim as a business record; a 911 tape is admissible as a business record if properly authenticated, and the custodian testified that the tape was made in the ordinary course of business at the time of the event recorded. Warfel v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2922 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

415. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Judgments

416. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

417. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

418. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

419. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Law Enforcement Reports

420. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : General Overview

421. In defendant's murder case, a court properly admitted evidence of the victim's handwritten letters because it was admissible as relating to the victim's state of mind, and the State authenticated the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on the letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

422. In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a letter from a witness because, at the conclusion of the witness's testimony, he was excused without any request that he be subject to recall, the witness could not be located when defendant offered the letter into evidence, and thus, the witness was no longer subject to cross-examination. Furthermore, the letter was not authenticated and there was no indication showing that the letter was written prior to the alleged improper influence by defendant's family and friends. Long v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6577, 2009 WL 2581286 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 20 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

423. In defendant's capital murder case, a court properly admitted an anonymous letter regarding defendant, addressed to a reporter, where in addition to being found on defendant's computer, the letter contained numerous intimate details of defendant's life, confirmed by other evidence, that collectively supported an inference that she was the author; given those circumstances, it was a reasonable exercise of the trial court's discretion to conclude that the letter was written by defendant, and because the letter was shown to be written by defendant, it was not hearsay when offered against her. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

424. Because appellant did not obtain a ruling on hearsay, authentication, and Tex. R. Civ. P. 194 objections, which were objections to the form of evidence, they could not be considered on appeal. Petro-Hunt, L.L.C. v. Wapiti Energy, L.L.C., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1860, 2012 WL 761144 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 8 2012).

425. Where there is proper identification of a document under Tex. R. Evid. 901, that does not cure the defect of it being an unsworn statement under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(f) or hearsay per the hearsay rule. Koehler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3701 (Tex. App. Dallas June 6 2001).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

426. Defendant failed to properly reserve his argument that admission of tape recordings of a controlled substance buy was improper because defendant's objection at trial was a mere predicate objection. Young v. State, 183 S.W.3d 699, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6299 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

427. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a State's exhibit, which was a list of stolen property and its value, where the property's owner had personal knowledge of the items listed on the document because he made a list and his wife copied the list. Furthermore, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the exhibit, the error, if any, was harmless because it could not be concluded that it contributed to defendant's conviction or punishment or affected his substantial rights. Hernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5219 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 7 2005).

428. Testimony of an employee who viewed a security videotape immediately after a theft was sufficient authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) of photographs made from the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 463 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 21 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3, 2005).

429. Defendant's taped statements were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the detective participating in the taped conversation testified he was the operator of the recording equipment, it was functioning properly, and that the recording accurately reflected the conversation; additionally, the tape statements were relevant because they contained defendant's version of the events. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements at his trial. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

430. Error based on improper authentication of exhibits during a summary judgment hearing was not preserved for appellate review because an attorney had "no objection" when the evidence was admitted at a prior hearing. Kent v. Holmes, 139 S.W.3d 120, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

431. In defendant's criminal prosecution for bribery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter into evidence because it contained sufficient distinctive characteristics to support a finding that defendant was the intended recipient. The authentication requirement was met because the evidence supported a finding that the letter was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), 901(a). Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

432. In defendant's trial for capital murder, a trial court did not err in admitting evidence; there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding that defendant wrote a letter and an envelope that was sent from the jail and returned to defendant for insufficient postage; the documents had sufficient internal characteristics to authenticate the evidence. Druery v. State, 225 S.W.3d 491, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 392 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1550, 182 L. Ed. 2d 180, 2012 U.S. LEXIS 1267 (U.S. 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

433. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's capital murder trial in admitting a condom found at an extraneous murder and the DNA evidence obtained from that condom where the trial court could have reasonably believed that a reasonable jury could find that the condom had been authenticated and identified. Defendant made no allegations of alteration, tampering, or fraud, and the State presented sufficient evidence for the trial court to conclude that the matter in question was what the State claimed that it was. Mcgregor v. State, 394 S.W.3d 90, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6552, 2012 WL 3244196 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

434. Where a list which did not contain appellee's name and phone number as an emergency contact was admitted into evidence by the trial court, although it did not meet the authentication requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901 because there was no evidence as to who prepared the list, the purpose for which it was prepared, or when it was prepared, it was erroneously admitted; the admission was harmful and probably caused an improper judgment pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because appellee's objection to appellant's application to be appointed guardian of the parties' incapacitated father was based on her claim that appellant excluded her, and the list was supportive of that claim. In re Henderson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3244 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 7 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

435. Admission of a surveillance video recording depicting the capital murder of a cab company employee was proper because the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to determine that the testimony concerning the recording was sufficient for a reasonable jury to determine that the recording was in fact an accurate video recording of the events that occurred that morning at the cab company; two witnesses familiar with the video surveillance system testified regarding the video evidence, and the cab driver who discovered the victim also testified about the recording. Turnbull v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13167 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 24 2013).

436. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized crime was proper because the nonaccomplice evidence placed defendant at or near the scene of the crime at or about the time of its commission under suspicious circumstances and because, although the forensic examiner testified that he did not know who actually sent or received the text messages, the circumstances were sufficient to allow a jury reasonably to find that defendant sent and received the messages, Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Because intent to commit forgery could not be inferred, the prior conviction showing strikingly similar facts made the existence of a material fact, that was, whether defendant possessed forged checks with the intent to defraud or harm another, more probable. Franklin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8513 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 10 2012).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

437. Defendant's motion to suppress the DNA evidence was properly denied because there was sufficient authentication evidence through the victim's sexual assault kit's markings and witness testimony showing that the kit was what it purported to be, and there was no affirmative evidence that the victim's samples were commingled, altered, or tampered with prior to their submission for DNA testing in April 2003. Dossett v. State, 216 S.W.3d 7, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7428 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

438. Although the tape was not properly authenticated, the evidence of an extraneous offense under Tex. R. Evid. 404 could not be said to have infringed on defendant's substantial rights because the evidence was before the jury via an undercover officer's unobjected-to testimony; therefore, admission of the extraneous offense evidence was harmless. Roberson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 18 2006).

439. Trial court erred by admitting certain photographs in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), 403, and 901 because although the photographs that were found in defendant's kitchen the day after the alleged sexual assault that showed the victim naked and unconscious were properly admitted as they were essential to understanding the circumstances of the assault and tended to confirm her testimony; other photographs that showed unidentified men sexually assaulting another woman, and that showed defendant's house mate having sexual intercourse, and defendant urinating against the wall giving a gang sign were improperly admitted. There was no evidence that defendant took the other photographs or knew of their existence and they suggested an improper basis upon which to convict defendant. Casey v. State, 160 S.W.3d 218, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1807 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

440. In defendant's stalking case, a reasonable fact finder could have found that the telephone number the victim attributed to defendant was his telephone number, and that defendant sent the electronic communications attributed to him by the State and depicted in the challenged exhibits. Accordingly, the challenged exhibits were relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them. Manuel v. State, 357 S.W.3d 66, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7152 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

441. Defendant's taped statements were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the detective participating in the taped conversation testified he was the operator of the recording equipment, it was functioning properly, and that the recording accurately reflected the conversation; additionally, the tape statements were relevant because they contained defendant's version of the events. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements at his trial. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

442. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

443. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, having determined that the second exhibit was sufficiently authenticated pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901 and the first exhibit was relevant to the determination of the declaratory judgment action pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court ruled the exhibits were inadmissible was error; the excluded exhibits were controlling to a material issue in the case regarding whether the community property agreement between the wife and the testator was valid and enforceable, and the exclusion of the exhibits was harmful error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

444. Where the client sued the law firm and its attorneys for legal malpractice alleging breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and gross negligence arising out of the sale of real estate and a foreclosure action, summary judgment was affirmed because: (1) the client's motion for continuance was properly denied because she was given sufficient notice of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment under the provisions of Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c), 4 and the certificate of service was prima facie evidence of service under Tex. R. Civ. P. 21, (2) the client's summary judgment evidence was properly excluded because even though the documents were authenticated, they could have been objected to on other grounds under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) and the client failed to properly brief the issue on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), (3) the exclusion of the client's expert testimony was proper because it was not an affidavit in that it contained no jurat under the provisions of Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 312.011, and the expert was not licensed to practice law in Texas, and (4) the no evidence summary judgment was affirmed because without expert testimony, the client was unable to show a breach of duty which was an essential element of her cause of action. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Autopsies

445. There was no error when a medical examiner who was not present at an autopsy testified about photographs taken during the autopsy because the photographs were not an out-of-court statement under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and there was no question under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) that they accurately depicted the appearance of the victim's body. Wood v. State, 299 S.W.3d 200, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7882 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2009).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood Alcohol

446. Testimony of officers established the beginning of the chain of custody, and the transfer of defendant's blood sample from the lab directly to court and then the State's prosecutor established the end of the chain of custody; additionally, a lab employee testified the blood sample arrived at the lab sealed with tape and showed no indications that the condition of the sample was poor or that the sample had been tampered with prior to its arrival at the lab. Islas v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5171 (Tex. App. El Paso May 14 2014).

447. In a felony driving while intoxicated case, a chain of custody argument under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) was rejected because there was no evidence of tampering with a blood specimen; an officer observed a nurse draw the blood, and the nurse's signature on a form indicated that he did draw the blood. Also, the nurse's signature was on blood vials. Gasca v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : DNA

448. Court did not err in admitting testimony on the results of DNA testing under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a) because a doctor testified that he collected samples from the victim, he submitted each sample in a standardized kit, and he identified the exhibits at trial; a biologist testified that each piece of evidence was labeled and sealed after testing. The biologist identified the sexual assault kit and the samples contained in the kit at trial and testified that the evidence had not been tampered with in any way. Sharp v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7208, 2011 WL 3850038 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 31 2011).

449. In a trial for child sexual assault, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that a reasonable juror could find that swabs used for DNA testing were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because there was no affirmative evidence to substantiate a claim for tampering or commingling of the swabs, and the State substantiated the beginning and the end of the chain of custody for the swabs. Williams v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3095 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

450. In a murder trial, defendant's chain-of-evidence objections under Tex. R. Evid. 901 to the admission of DNA-sample buccal swabs from other potential suspects related to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility; defendant argued that the State failed to prove the people from whom the analysts obtained the swabs were who they claimed to be, that those people might have lied about their identities, and that the tested DNA may have come from persons unrelated to the investigation. Russell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1723 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 6 2008).

451. On appeal of defendant's conviction for murder, he challenged whether the evidence regarding the DNA sample test results was insufficient; however, defendant failed to object at trial to the admissibility of the DNA test results, and therefore, he waived any error with respect to that evidence. Lane v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8912 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 17 2006).

452. Defendant's motion to suppress the DNA evidence was properly denied because there was sufficient authentication evidence through the victim's sexual assault kit's markings and witness testimony showing that the kit was what it purported to be, and there was no affirmative evidence that the victim's samples were commingled, altered, or tampered with prior to their submission for DNA testing in April 2003. Dossett v. State, 216 S.W.3d 7, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7428 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

453. In a capital murder trial, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of DNA results from a specimen taken from defendant's truck; testimony from a detective, a lab technician, and a DNA analyst established the chain of custody. Thomas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1986 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 15 2006).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Fingerprints & Footprints

454. Despite defendant's assertions that a thumbprint was not taken, penitentiary packets were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of an aggravated sexual assault trial; those packets were self-authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901 and Tex. R. Evid. 902, and the State called a crime scene technician, who had reviewed the packets and taken fingerprints from defendant. Therefore, the State established beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the same person that had been previously convicted of other crimes. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6716, 2009 WL 2617647 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Handwriting

455. In an aggregate theft over $ 200.000 or more case, while no handwriting expert verified the handwriting on the deposit slips, the handwriting on those slips was properly authenticated as defendant's long-time supervisor confirmed that the handwriting on the deposit slips belonged to defendant, and multiple witnesses testified that only defendant had access to the bank deposits. Keck v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2402, 2009 WL 3003257 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 2 2009).

456. Letter written by defendant was properly authenticated by an officer because the officer identified the letter as having been written by defendant based on his familiarity with defendant's handwriting from other letters he had reviewed as part of his jailhouse duties and from defendant's name and unique "SO" number on the return address. Galbraith v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8433 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Voice Identification

457. Evidence was sufficient to authenticate a telephone call under Tex. R. Evid. 901 as coming from defendant's sister because the witness testified that the person on the phone identified herself with the sister's name and disclosed information that was very specific to circumstances described by the sister and defendant. Mosley v. State, 355 S.W.3d 59, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10278 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 30 2010).

Family Law : Guardians : General Overview

458. Where a list which did not contain appellee's name and phone number as an emergency contact was admitted into evidence by the trial court, although it did not meet the authentication requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901 because there was no evidence as to who prepared the list, the purpose for which it was prepared, or when it was prepared, it was erroneously admitted; the admission was harmful and probably caused an improper judgment pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because appellee's objection to appellant's application to be appointed guardian of the parties' incapacitated father was based on her claim that appellant excluded her, and the list was supportive of that claim. In re Henderson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3244 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 7 2004).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : General Overview

459. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling an insurer's lack-of-authentication objections to a workers' compensation benefits claimant's exhibits; the trial court could conclude that the distinctive characteristics and contents of the documents, taken in conjunction with the circumstances, were sufficient to prove the documents were genuine. Am. Cas. Co. v. Hill, 194 S.W.3d 162, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5009 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

Tex. Evid. R. 902

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Administrative Law : Agency Adjudication : Hearings : Evidence : General Overview

1. In a case in which a trial court found in favor of a county that sought to recover from a vehicle owner unpaid tolls due to the county toll road authority, there was no merit in the owner's claim that the judgment entered by the trial court was not supported by the evidence because the county offered, and the trial court properly admitted into evidence, a certified copy of the county's administrative order finding the owner liable, a certified copy of the affidavit and certificate of service, and the toll road authority's records detailing the owner's toll violations and the fee associated with the violations. The county also presented evidence indicating that the owner had been properly served notice of the administrative hearing. Edmiston v. Harris County, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7045, 2012 WL 3612436 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 23 2012).

Banking Law : Consumer Protection : Credit Card Agreements : General Overview

2. In a collections case brought by the purchaser of credit card debt, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), 803(6) in admitting business records of the original lender, based on affidavits stating that the affiants were the record custodian and media manager for the purchaser, that the records custodian was personally familiar with how the purchaser prepared and maintained its records, that both affiants had personal knowledge of the business record practices of an intermediate purchaser, and that both vouched for the accuracy of the records that were initially created by the lender. Nice v. Dodeka, L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8922, 2010 WL 4514174 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 10 2010).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Evidence

3. In an action seeking to recover unpaid credit card debt, a debtor's argument that an affidavit submitted by a creditor from a litigation analyst was conclusory was rejected because the affidavit was based on her personal knowledge in her role as a records custodian for the creditor, and the affidavit substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Therefore, the affidavit was proper summary judgment evidence. McFarland v. Citibank, N.A., 293 S.W.3d 759, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4530 (Tex. App. Waco June 17 2009).

4. In a credit card company's action for breach of contract for a cardholder's failure to pay his credit card debt, a custodian of records for the company properly authenticated the documents referenced in her summary judgment affidavit as "business records" and the affidavit contained sufficient factual support and was not, therefore, conclusory; the cardholder did not present any evidence to raise a fact issue as to whether the documents were properly authenticated business records, and he also failed to identify any statements in the affidavit that he contended were opinions or legal conclusions. Duran v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2060 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2008).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

5. In a fraud and negligence action, a client was not permitted to raise the issues of authenticity and hearsay on appeal from the grant of summary judgment based on the admission of an employment contract because the client did not obtain a ruling on the objections from the trial court. Yazdchi v. Am. Arbitration Ass'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS

1320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2005).

6. Accompanied by an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. R. 902(10), the appellant subpoenaed records from the police department and business records of regularly conducted activity that were not excluded by the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); thus, the trial court abused its discretion in excluding such records from the summary judgment evidence. Spradlin v. State, 100 S.W.3d 372, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8874 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

7. Accompanied by an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. R. 902(10), the appellant subpoenaed records from the police department and business records of regularly conducted activity that were not excluded by the hearsay rule, Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); thus, the trial court abused its discretion in excluding such records from the summary judgment evidence. Spradlin v. State, 100 S.W.3d 372, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8874 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : Affidavits

8. In an action seeking to recover unpaid credit card debt, a debtor's argument that an affidavit submitted by a creditor from a litigation analyst was conclusory was rejected because the affidavit was based on her personal knowledge in her role as a records custodian for the creditor, and the affidavit substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Therefore, the affidavit was proper summary judgment evidence. McFarland v. Citibank, N.A., 293 S.W.3d 759, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4530 (Tex. App. Waco June 17 2009).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Motions for New Trials

9. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Writs : Common Law Writs : Mandamus

10. Mandamus relief was denied to a common law husband who was found in contempt for failing to pay temporary support under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 6.502(a)(2) because there was no deprivation of due process based on an alleged failure to allow the husband to present evidence of his inability to pay; the husband was allowed to testify as to the effects of a bankruptcy order, even though the trial court erroneously excluded such under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Moreover, his son was permitted to testify, there was no showing that the husband had ever requested a modification of a joint receivership or a bankruptcy court's order in order to allow for the payment of the temporary support, and property held by the husband's claimed "current" wife could have been used to pay the temporary support. In re Small, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Records on Appeal

11. In a divorce proceeding, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the withdrawal from the record of one of the children's passports seven days before the judgment became final; the husband did not inform the appellate court whether there was a proper motion to substitute a duplicate original, either orally or in writing, or whether the action was sua sponte by the trial court. Thomas v. Robert, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1149 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 15 2007).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

12. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining a father's objections to admission of an "updated" record, as the objection from the father's attorney prevented the attorney general from authenticating the "updated" record without testifying under oath; when the trial judge sustained the father's objection to the "updated" record, the attorney general had to prove the authenticity of the document by some other means; however, the attorney general made no attempt to call any witnesses to testify at the hearing and the document was not self-authenticating because it was not under seal, a certified copy of a public record, or supported by a business records affidavit. In re K.R., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5756 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2007).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

13. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting two exhibits containing reports of hair follicle drug tests of appellants under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, as there was insufficient indicia of trustworthiness or reliability, the error was harmless because other evidence that two children and the mother's boyfriend tested positive for cocaine was admitted without objection, and termination of the mother's parental rights did not turn on the admission of the second and third sets of positive drug test results. In the Interest of S.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9946, 2012 WL 5991391 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2012).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Specific Performance

14. In a collection suit by a creditor that purchased the debt from a credit card company, it was proper to admit, as business records, monthly statements from the credit card company, in part because the documents were shown to be incorporated by the creditor; an employee of the creditor provided an affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), stating the documents received from the credit card company were kept by the creditor in the regular course of its business as permanent records of the company. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Partners, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2687, 2010 WL 1492267 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 15 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

15. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault : Elements

16. In a family violence assault case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01(b)(2)(A), the evidence was legally insufficient to support a jury's finding that defendant previously was convicted of an assault involving family violence, although there were some discrepancies in the documents. Burks v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6340 (Tex. App. Tyler May 22 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

17. Trial court properly admitted defendant's blood test results included in his hospital records following the crash; the State established the beginning and end of a proper chain of custody because a nurse testified that she drew defendant's blood that day pursuant to the treating physician's orders and a custodian of records established under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) that the records were made at the time of the event, by a person with knowledge, and that they were kept in the regular course of business by the hospital. Gallagher v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5125, 2013 WL 1800198 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 25 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : Elements

18. In a driving while intoxicated case, there was no error in refusing, under Tex. R. Evid. 902, to admit the records of a speech therapist and a medical doctor because the business records did not contain a certificate of service and the clerk's record did not contain any other document showing service of the documents on the State, which the prosecutor stated she had not seen. Wasserloos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3144, 2010 WL 1711753 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 28 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : Records

19. Judgments from defendant's earlier juvenile cases were properly admitted at a punishment hearing, even though they did not contain seals, as discussed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(1), (2), and (4), because they contained a certification showing that they were from the clerk's office in the county of the juvenile court and thus were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7). Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

20. Juvenile court order granting probation was properly self-authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 902(1) and could be admitted at the punishment hearing for a subsequent crime because the order contained the seal of the county court and the signature of the juvenile court clerk. Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Search Warrants : General Overview

21. Defendant's challenge to the denial of her motion to suppress was rejected because the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a certified copy of the search warrant and affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Mayfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6037 (Tex. App. Waco July 28 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Forfeitures

22. In a forfeiture hearing, because the certified copy of the bail bond was a self-authenticated public record, no further authentication was required; additionally, the surety's hearsay objection failed because a public record fell under the hearsay exception. Thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the bail bond into evidence as a public record. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

23. Trial court did not err in admitting a certified copy of a bail bond into evidence as a public record. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1005, a copy of a public record, such as a bail bond, was admissible in place of an original where the copy is certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6377 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

24. Defendant's challenge to the denial of her motion to suppress was rejected because the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a certified copy of the search warrant and affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Mayfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6037 (Tex. App. Waco July 28 2010).

25. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the State was permitted to offer into evidence unsworn police reports detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

26. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

27. Trial counsel was not ineffective as the record was silent as to why trial counsel did not file any pretrial motions and the State was entitled to allege all of defendant's prior convictions; any failure to object to documents admitted as evidence of defendant's prior convictions was not ineffective assistance because the documents at issue were either properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or clearly harmless. Bartee v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2843 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 14 2011).

28. There was no merit to defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, enhanced by three prior felony convictions, for failing to file a motion to suppress and/or objecting at trial to the admission of the business records of defendant's employer, along with an affidavit of the custodian of records of the employer that tracked verbatim Tex. R. Evid. 902, and even though the records were not physically attached to the affidavit in the clerk's record but were included in the record of exhibits, defendant was not harmed because his girlfriend testified before the jury that he was not at work on the date of the incident. Delgado v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : General Overview

29. Where the state offered proof as to a defendant's prior convictions alleged by certified copies of the judgment and sentence in each case under Tex. R. Evid. 902, and offered the testimony of a fingerprint expert who testified that the defendant's known fingerprints were identical to the fingerprints on the certified copies of the judgment and sentences, the prior convictions alleged for enhancement of punishment purposes were properly proved. Ball v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6293 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 30 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History

30. Court properly admitted records from the Williamson County Clerk's Office with regard to defendant's prior convictions for assault, theft, and unlawful use of a criminal instrument because they were certified court records. Hooper v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880, 2009 WL 3230842 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 9 2009).

31. Where defendant was indicted as a habitual felony offender for the unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, the indictment contained enhancement paragraphs alleging that defendant had prior felony convictions. The State proved his prior convictions by introducing as exhibits two pen packets that were certified by the custodian of records from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice; the pen packets were self-authenticating for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902. Harden v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1578, 2009 WL 539379 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 4 2009).

32. Although a North Carolina penitentiary packet lacked certified documentation from the sentencing court, it was properly authenticated and contained sufficient evidence of a final conviction of the enhancement offense; hence, it was admissible as the functional equivalent of a properly certified judgment and sentence. Martin v. State, 227 S.W.3d 335, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3445 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

33. Where defendant was convicted for indecency with a child, the State was permitted to admit his pen packet into evidence during the punishment phase of trial; the pen packet was self-authenticated via certification as to its accuracy by the custodian; Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) has no notice requirement. Sharp v. State, 210 S.W.3d 835, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11033 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History

34. True and correct extract copy of Louisiana court minutes regarding defendant's Louisiana conviction was attested to by the deputy clerk of court in Iberia Parish and included details regarding the court, parish, case number, date, defendant's name, defendant's birth date, defendant's plea of guilty to sexual battery, and defendant's sentence to five years at hard labor. Such extract clearly was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902 to prove the prior conviction. Castle v. State, 402 S.W.3d 895, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6883 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 6 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History : Prior Felonies

35. Court properly admitted defendant's out of state pen packet as proof of defendant's prior felony where the court minutes, the statement of suspensive appeal, and the warrant of commitment appeared to have originally been executed under official seal, and the attestations in the documents that defendant had been found guilty of a felony offense, he had been sentenced to twenty-one years, and he had not appealed the judgment and sentence, were sufficient to establish his prior felony conviction. White v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7226 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

36. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

37. Where the state offered proof as to a defendant's prior convictions alleged by certified copies of the judgment and sentence in each case under Tex. R. Evid. 902, and offered the testimony of a fingerprint expert who testified that the defendant's known fingerprints were identical to the fingerprints on the certified copies of the judgment and sentences, the prior convictions alleged for enhancement of punishment purposes were properly proved. Ball v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6293 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 30 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History

38. Packet of papers relating to defendant's prior conviction was properly certified pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) where each page had a stamp purporting to be the seal of the county clerk and attesting the page to be a true and correct copy of the original filed in the clerk's office and one page of the packet bore an attestation signed and dated by a deputy clerk from that office. McCray v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1166 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 4 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

39. Trial court did not err in admitting certain juvenile court judgments where the judgments were generally admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) because they consisted of certified copies of public records, certified as correct by their custodian, and, therefore, self-authenticating, and where there was ample evidence that defendant was the person named in the judgments because the prior convictions were linked to defendant via (1) his name, (2) his birth date, (3) his mother's name, and (4) his signature, which appeared on his two written statements, the authenticity of which had not been contested. While the jury was not specifically requested to compare the signatures on the written statements with those appearing on the prior convictions, the jury was free to do so in order to assist in the determination of whether or not defendant was indeed the same individual listed in the prior convictions. Benton v. State, 336 S.W.3d 355, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 845 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 4 2011).

40. Affidavits attached to two exhibits (including a pen pack and defendant's jail records) included a certification by their custodian that the documents were true and correct copies of the original records on file in the office and maintained in the regular course of business within the Bureau of Classification and Records of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice -- Correctional Institutions Division and the Tarrant County Sheriff's Department; thus, the affidavits sufficiently authenticated those exhibits under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Because Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) did not contain a notice requirement, the exhibits were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of the trial even though defendant had no notice of the exhibits. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

41. Where defendant was charged with driving while intoxicated, during the punishment phase the State was permitted to offer a computer-generated printout of his prior conviction record from Dallas County, Texas; the county record was self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902. Flowers v. State, 220 S.W.3d 919, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 428 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

42. Court properly admitted defendant's out of state pen packet as proof of defendant's prior felony where the court minutes, the statement of suspensive appeal, and the warrant of commitment appeared to have originally been executed under official seal, and the attestations in the documents that defendant had been found guilty of a felony offense, he had been sentenced to twenty-one years, and he had not appealed the judgment and sentence, were sufficient to establish his prior felony conviction. White v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7226 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

43. There was no evidence supporting an enhanced punishment for driving while intoxicated under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 49.04, 49.09 where nothing in the record supported a contention that a computer-generated case synopsis represented a judgment of conviction to prove a prior conviction. Blank v. State, 172 S.W.3d 673, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10714 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

44. In the punishment phase of defendant's murder case, a court did not err by in admitting medical records where a registered nurse testified that she treated defendant's boyfriend for a stab wound in 2000, she recognized the medical record, she was one of the registered nurses involved in the trauma, her handwriting was on the record, she had probably directed a co-worker to take notes, and she signed the bottom of the record. The nurse testified that the medical records were kept as part of the records of the hospital. Williams v. State, 176 S.W.3d 476, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : General Overview

45. Defendant was improperly convicted of failing to register as a sex offender under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 62.10 because the State did not authenticate an Illinois penitentiary packet, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 902, and thus did not prove that defendant had been convicted of an offense that required him to register as a sex offender. The improper admission affected defendant's substantial rights and required reversal because proof of a prior conviction for a reportable offense was an essential element of failing to register, and the penitentiary packet was the only evidence the State relied upon to prove that element. Banks v. State, 158 S.W.3d 649, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1838 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

46. By not objecting, defendant failed to preserve error regarding his complaint that the prosecutor engaged in misconduct when he represented to the trial court that a business record affidavit serving as the predicate for admission of a 911 call tape had been on file with the court for 14 days. Bailey v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Waiver Triggers Generally

47. Even though a pen packet from New Mexico was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 902 because no seal was required, defendant waived any objection relating to admissibility when he took the stand and testified about his own convictions; an exception did not apply because defendant was not trying to deny or rebut the evidence. Williams v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2241 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 28 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

48. district court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the victim's medical records Even though Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not complied with because: (1) although the clerk's office refused to keep the records, the State attempted to file the records well before the rule's deadline; (2) the State informed defendant that the documents were in the district attorney's office and defense counsel reviewed the documents there before trial; (3) when the district court was informed, it gave defendant permission to take the documents home to review before they were admitted into evidence; and (4) defendant made no allegation that the documents had been altered. Even if the district court erred by admitting the records, it was harmless because the same information contained in the medical records was related to the jury without objection through other exhibits and witnesses' testimony. Davis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7074, 2012 WL 3601168 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

49. In an aggravated sexual assault case, an error in admitting improperly authenticated evidence of defendant's juvenile criminal history was harmless because the grandmother found the child on the bed, bleeding and unconscious, with defendant asleep on the floor with his belt unbuckled, zipper down, and the front of his pants wet. Blood on defendant's pants belonged to the child, and DNA on a diaper discovered the next day in the same bedroom belonged to both the child and defendant. Rangel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1555, 2009 WL 540780 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 4 2009).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

50. Exhibit should not have been excluded on the basis of the hearsay objection, because the business records affidavit made by the custodian of records precisely tracked the requirements in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

51. Because appellant did not show that records were or could have been properly authenticated, the trial court did not err in excluding them. Mathis v. State, 397 S.W.3d 332, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4110, 2013 WL 1313775 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 28 2013).

52. Fact that the reinsurer did not take advantage of the procedure in Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not determinative of whether the judgments were properly authenticated because the reinsurer could have properly authenticated the judgments in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 901. N.H. Ins. Co. v. Magellan Reinsurance Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 194, 2013 WL 105654 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 10 2013).

53. In a forcible detainer action, a business records affidavit that authenticated the notice to vacate was not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it substantially complied with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10), although it did not precisely track the language of Rule 902(10). Although the affidavit was prepared by a third party, the foreclosure purchaser's law firm, the trial court could have concluded that the purchaser reasonably relied on the accuracy of the records in the ordinary course of its business and that they were trustworthy. Baty v. Morequity, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9876 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2012).

54. Relator failed to provide a record sufficient to establish his right to mandamus relief under Tex. R. App. P. 52.7(a) to obtain additional jail-time credit, because a computer printout suggested a detainer was placed on relator by the sheriff's office for the charged offense; however, the length of time the detainer was placed on relator was not clear. The copy of the computer printout included in the record did not appear to be a certified copy as required by Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). In re Garza, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1307 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 15 2012).

55. Summary judgment in favor of the customer was proper, because the bank failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a contract existed or whether the customer authorized the charges to the credit card account, when the bank's only summary judgment evidence was inadmissible; since the bank's affidavit neither named the affiant in the body of the affidavit or the jurat, and the affiant's signature was completely illegible, the bank's affidavit did not substantially comply with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) and was insufficient to establish the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Fia Card Services, N.A. v. Frausto, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9924, 2011 WL 6260653 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 15 2011).

56. Defendant's objection to a certified copy of a prior federal judgment convicting him of two felonies as unauthenticated had no merit because the Texas Rules of Evidence allowed the trial court to admit a certified copy of a public record as properly authenticated.. Rowell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6596, 2011 WL 3612297 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 18 2011).

57. Admission of inadequately authenticated cell phone records under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) was error, but the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); although the State's case might have been less persuasive without the records, other properly admitted evidence linking appellant to the cell phone numbers tended to negate the likelihood that the jury's guilty verdict relied in any significant way on the records. Bible v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3737, 2011 WL 1902021 (Tex. App. Waco May 11 2011).

58. Each of the affidavits submitted by the county and the city showed that they were not conclusory but supported the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations, and each affidavit was based on the personal knowledge of the affiant, and those affidavits submitting records substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b) and properly authenticated the relevant business records, Tex. R. Evid. 901(10)(b). Rameses Sch., Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2552, 2011 WL 1312279 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 7 2011).

59. In a suit to recover a credit-card debt, the debtor failed to preserve for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(2) his objections to an affidavit because he did not obtain a ruling; and in any event, the affidavit was sufficiently authenticated as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10) by the affiant's testimony about her personal knowledge of account records. Singh v. Citibank (south Dakota), N.A., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2161, 2011 WL 1103788 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2011).

60. Affidavits substantially comported with the form provided by Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), and both were accompanied by business records; because the affidavits complied with Rule 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

61. Because a creditor's trial exhibit satisfied the requirements for the admission of third-party business records and because the challenged affidavits satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling hearsay objections. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

62. Affidavits were not conclusory because they substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and as such could properly serve to authenticate business records. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

63. Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude the bank witness's affidavit and attachments, because the witness's testimony adequately demonstrated the basis for her personal knowledge of the manner in which the bank kept its records and the other facts to which she testified; Texas Rules of Evidence did not require that the qualified witness who provided the predicate for the admission of business records be their creator or have personal knowledge of the contents of the record, when the witness was required only to have personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were kept. Damron v. Citibank (s.D.) N.A., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7054, 2010 WL 3377777 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2010).

64. Because defendant's former girlfriend had personal knowledge of the things depicted in the video, she could authenticate them, and she was not required to have been present when the video was made to be able to authenticate it, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), 902(b)(1), (5), and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the video was authenticated by the girlfriend. George v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2425, 2010 WL 1269676 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 31 2010).

65. Court properly admitted records from the Williamson County Clerk's Office with regard to defendant's prior convictions for assault, theft, and unlawful use of a criminal instrument because they were certified court records. Hooper v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880, 2009 WL 3230842 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 9 2009).

66. Trial court erred in admitting the complained-of documents, because there was no indication that the business knew of the events recorded on the third-party documents, when the witness testified about the telemarketing application, he stated that the information was inputted by someone at the company, although he had no personal information about how the information was inputted or how the information was obtained, and the same observation could be made about the account statements and the cardholder agreement. Riddle v. Unifund Ccr Patrns, 298 S.W.3d 780, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7805 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 7 2009).

67. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

68. In defendant's driving while intoxicated trial, hospital records met the business records exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), given that (1) the record indicated that a nurse drew defendant's blood, (2) the record appeared to constitute the nurse's summary of all the procedures she performed, including the blood draw, and (3) the record contained the State's notice of intent to offer business records and an affidavit from the custodian of records, which was in substantially the same format as that listed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Patel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3575, 2009 WL 1425219 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 21 2009).

69. In an aggravated sexual assault case, an error in admitting improperly authenticated evidence of defendant's juvenile criminal history was harmless because the grandmother found the child on the bed, bleeding and unconscious, with defendant asleep on the floor with his belt unbuckled, zipper down, and the front of his pants wet. Blood on defendant's pants belonged to the child, and DNA on a diaper discovered the next day in the same bedroom belonged to both the child and defendant. Rangel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1555, 2009 WL 540780 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 4 2009).

70. Objections that an affidavit failed to meet the business records exception and did not satisfy Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) were objections to the form of the affidavit and had to be timely raised in the trial court to be raised on appeal. A.J. Morris, M.D., P.A. v. De Lage Landen Fin. Servs., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 457, 2009 WL 161065 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 22 2009).

71. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

72. Regarding an exhibit that contained a judicial record log and drop cards, a sheriff's office records and identification section employee testified that he knew what the exhibit was, that he was the custodian of the records of the drop cards, and that the fingerprints thereon matched defendant; the employee's testimony, along with the trial court's examination of the contents of the exhibit and the implicit determination that the document was what the State claimed it to be, satisfied the authentication requirement for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901. Martinez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3115 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2008).

73. Both the custodian of medical records and the witness who performed the test in question were qualified to testify to the authenticated records; because the test came into evidence through the witness's testimony without objection, any error in the admission of the exhibit was cured. Cline v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2242 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2008).

74. In a credit card company's action for breach of contract for a cardholder's failure to pay his credit card debt, a custodian of records for the company properly authenticated the documents referenced in her summary judgment affidavit as "business records" and the affidavit contained sufficient factual support and was not, therefore, conclusory; the cardholder did not present any evidence to raise a fact issue as to whether the documents were properly authenticated business records, and he also failed to identify any statements in the affidavit that he contended were opinions or legal conclusions. Duran v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2060 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 20 2008).

75. Creditor's record custodian authenticated certain documents as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 902, and thus the court rejected the challenge to the custodian's affidavit for summary judgment purposes. Sikander Ghia v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8194 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2007).

76. Although a debtor argued that account statements were hearsay, the record custodian properly authenticated them under Tex. R. Evid. 902 as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803 and the debtor presented no supporting argument that the statements lacked trustworthiness. Sikander Ghia v. Am. Express Travel Related Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8194 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2007).

77. Order awarding summary judgment to a mortgagee in its action against mortgagors to foreclose a lien on property was upheld where an affidavit from the mortgagee's custodian of records about the default was sufficient summary judgment evidence; the custodian, in the affidavit, was not required to recite the exact words that appeared in Tex. R. Evid. 902. Kyle v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 232 S.W.3d 355, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6667 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

78. Judgments from defendant's earlier juvenile cases were properly admitted at a punishment hearing, even though they did not contain seals, as discussed in Tex. R. Evid. 902(1), (2), and (4), because they contained a certification showing that they were from the clerk's office in the county of the juvenile court and thus were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7). Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

79. Juvenile court order granting probation was properly self-authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 902(1) and could be admitted at the punishment hearing for a subsequent crime because the order contained the seal of the county court and the signature of the juvenile court clerk. Hull v. State, 172 S.W.3d 186, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6502 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

80. Trial court did not err in admitting a certified copy of a bail bond into evidence as a public record. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1005, a copy of a public record, such as a bail bond, was admissible in place of an original where the copy is certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6377 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

81. In a child sexual assault case, the admission of defendant's medical records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) was proper because the records were properly authenticated by their custodian in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) as having been made and kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity. Eslora v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005).

82. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the State was permitted to offer into evidence unsworn police reports detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

83. Defendant was improperly convicted of failing to register as a sex offender under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 62.10 because the State did not authenticate an Illinois penitentiary packet, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 902, and thus did not prove that defendant had been convicted of an offense that required him to register as a sex offender. The improper admission affected defendant's substantial rights and required reversal because proof of a prior conviction for a reportable offense was an essential element of failing to register, and the penitentiary packet was the only evidence the State relied upon to prove that element. Banks v. State, 158 S.W.3d 649, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1838 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

84. In a fraud and negligence action, a client was not permitted to raise the issues of authenticity and hearsay on appeal from the grant of summary judgment based on the admission of an employment contract because the client did not obtain a ruling on the objections from the trial court. Yazdchi v. Am. Arbitration Ass'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2005).

85. In a domestic assault case in which defendant was found to be a habitual offender, the judgment and docket sheets from a prior assault offense were properly admitted because they contained the proper embossed seal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(1). Stanley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10917 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 2 2004).

86. In the punishment phase of defendant's murder case, a court did not err by in admitting medical records where a registered nurse testified that she treated defendant's boyfriend for a stab wound in 2000, she recognized the medical record, she was one of the registered nurses involved in the trauma, her handwriting was on the record, she had probably directed a co-worker to take notes, and she signed the bottom of the record. The nurse testified that the medical records were kept as part of the records of the hospital. Williams v. State, 176 S.W.3d 476, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

87. At defendant's trial on unlawful possession of a firearm, enhanced by a conviction of assault against a family member, certified copies of the judgment and sentence of the convicting judge were self-authenticating and admissible as proof of his prior conviction; the defendant's confirmation through testimony that he was the person convicted further established the orders' authenticity. Worley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3271 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2004).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

88. True and correct extract copy of Louisiana court minutes regarding defendant's Louisiana conviction was attested to by the deputy clerk of court in Iberia Parish and included details regarding the court, parish, case number, date, defendant's name, defendant's birth date, defendant's plea of guilty to sexual battery, and defendant's sentence to five years at hard labor. Such extract clearly was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902 to prove the prior conviction. Castle v. State, 402 S.W.3d 895, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6883 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 6 2013).

89. Pen packet had the appropriate certificate from the records manager and thus met the evidence rules, including Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), 902(4), for authentication and certification, and appellant did not dispute that the documents were true and correct copies, such that the trial court was within its discretion in admitting the pen packet into evidence. Smith v. State, 401 S.W.3d 915, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6416 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 24 2013).

90. Revocation of community supervision was proper, because the copy of the Oklahoma charging document was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4), when the copy bore facsimile information, as well as a seal and certification as a true copy of a record maintained by the clerk; the Oklahoma pen packet contained a photograph, permitting the trial court to compare the visage depicted with the petitioner's in open court. Ford v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 15 2013).

91. Probate court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the 1993 tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the affidavit and tax return were timely filed pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the affidavit, the accountant affirmed that he was the custodian of records, that the 12 pages consisted of the 1993 1040 U.S. Individual Income Tax Return and the decedent's W-2, that the 12 pages were kept by him in the regular course of business, and that the records were made at or near the time or reasonably soon thereafter, and that the records were the original or exact duplicates of the original. App. LEXIS 4438 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 5 2013).

93. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the mortgage company's evidence where the agent's affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) by averring to facts that satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the agent averred that she was providing the records as the custodian, that she had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records, that the records were made in the regular course of business, and that it was the regular practice of the business to keep such records. Khalilnia v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2991, 2013 WL 1183311 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 21 2013).

94. Insurance company documents were presented as business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the cell phone documents were presented pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902 with the accompanying affidavit; because the documents were produced in the normal and regular course of business of the entity that kept the records, defendant was not denied his right of confrontation. Lozoya v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1973, 2013 WL 708489 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2013).

95. Business record affidavit had 21 pages of documents attached, including certain affidavits, and although they were notarized and therefore self-authenticating, they could still be inadmissible if they were hearsay. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

96. Authenticity of a copy of a bail bond admitted into evidence was shown both because it was a certified copy of an official record and because the deputy district clerk compared it to the bond contained within the clerk's file while testifying. The copy of the bond was therefore admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) and Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Guiles v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 675, 2013 WL 257368 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 24 2013).

97. Fact that the reinsurer did not take advantage of the procedure in Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not determinative of whether the judgments were properly authenticated because the reinsurer could have properly authenticated the judgments in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 901. N.H. Ins. Co. v. Magellan Reinsurance Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 194, 2013 WL 105654 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 10 2013).

App. Dallas Dec. 5 2012).

99. district court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence the victim's medical records Even though Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not complied with because: (1) although the clerk's office refused to keep the records, the State attempted to file the records well before the rule's deadline; (2) the State informed defendant that the documents were in the district attorney's office and defense counsel reviewed the documents there before trial; (3) when the district court was informed, it gave defendant permission to take the documents home to review before they were admitted into evidence; and (4) defendant made no allegation that the documents had been altered. Even if the district court erred by admitting the records, it was harmless because the same information contained in the medical records was related to the jury without objection through other exhibits and witnesses' testimony. Davis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7074, 2012 WL 3601168 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 16 2012).

100. In a bank's forcible-detainer case against a property occupant, the bank's claim to a superior right to possess the property was not based on a business-records affidavit containing inadmissible hearsay where the affiant averred that she was both an employee and a custodian of records of the bank's law firm and that she had actual or constructive care, custody, and control of the attached records relating to the bank's forcible-detainer proceeding against the occupant, and where she stated that the records were made in the regular course of the law firm's business by someone with personal knowledge and that it was the regular course of business to keep such records. Kaldis v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6609, 2012 WL 3229135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

Evid. 902, given that (1) he did not argue that the Pennsylvania criminal records could not be self-authenticated, (2) he did not claim that he was not the person named in those records, and (3) the documents were grouped via cause numbers, and the beginning page for the cases admitted under each cause number was stamped certified, although each page of the exhibits was not stamped certified; the court found no abuse of discretion. Peluso v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5122, 2012 WL 2450818 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2012).

103. Under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 3.103, 3.104, a check was a negotiable instrument and was self-authenticating; it was not material that the check was a copy and that did not affect its admissibility because the original was not available. Ethridge v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3110, 2012 WL 1379648 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 18 2012).

104. Court had previously held that a certified copy of a driving record was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8)(B), 902(4), and thus the trial court did not err in admitting appellant's certified driving record. Mclamore v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2909 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 12 2012).

105. Business records affidavit met the criteria under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), given that (1) the affiant stated she was the records custodian for the debt-holder's assignee, it was the assignee's regular practice to rely on documents the original creditor prepared, and the records were maintained by those with the duty to keep the record accurately, (2) one of the documents attached to the affidavit was an affidavit of sale, which was notarized and self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(8), and the affidavit of sale stated that the creditor acquired the account and then sold it to the assignee, with a certain amount due, and (3) the creditor's failure to keep accurate records could result in penalties, for purposes of Tex. Fin. Code Ann. §§ 392.304(a)(8), 392.402, and the circumstances otherwise indicated the trustworthiness of the creditor's documents; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the records. App. Dallas Nov. 17 2011).

107. Nothing in the worker's Social Security disability finding document indicated that the worker was cross-examined at his disability hearing as required by Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); it was not clear whether the disability finding was the worker's "statement" as it was a document issued by a federal agency and not the worker himself, and because the document was not certified, its authenticity was at issue, Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Belmarez v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7945, 2011 WL 4696750 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2011).

108. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the governor's warrant and the documents attached thereto into evidence, because the governor's warrant constituted a domestic public document under seal, and the State was not required to present extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility. Ex Parte Garcia,

2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7908 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 29 2011).

109. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault, aggravated kidnapping, and unlawful possession of a firearm, the court did not err in admitting a docket sheet from one of defendant's prior convictions; the docket sheet was certified by a seal under Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902, plus a fingerprint expert testified that appellant's fingerprints matched those in the packets; in light of case law holding that the criminal justice department's record clerk's certification of the packet constituted proper authentication, the court overruled appellant's issue. Brunner v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6781, 2011 WL 3717002 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 24 2011).

111. In a daughter's action claiming undue influence, nurse reports regarding the decedent's interaction with her husband were admissible because they were supported by an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); they were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid 803(4), (6) regarding the decedent's medical treatment. In the Estate of Ward, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811, 2011 WL 3720829 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 24 2011).

112. Documents were not properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4), (10) because the documents were not certified copies or accompanied by an affidavit made by the records' custodian. R. Evid. 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow plaintiff to introduce the business records affidavit and attached records. Old Republic Ins. Co. v. 114. In a breach of contract action, a trial court did not err in considering an assignment by a predecessor to a leasing company and a business records affidavit by the predecessor's president; because the affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the assignment was admissible under the hearsay exception in Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Game Sys. v. Forbes Hutton Leasing, Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4098, 2011 WL 2119672 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 26 2011).

115. Trial counsel was not ineffective as the record was silent as to why trial counsel did not file any pretrial motions and the State was entitled to allege all of defendant's prior convictions; any failure to object to documents admitted as evidence of defendant's prior convictions was not ineffective assistance because the documents at issue were either properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or clearly harmless. Bartee v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2843 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 14 2011).

R. Evid. 902(10)(b) and properly authenticated the relevant business records, Tex. R. Evid. 901(10)(b). Rameses Sch., Inc.

v. City of San Antonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2552, 2011 WL 1312279 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 7 2011).

117. State's exhibit, a pen packet relating to appellant's prior felony conviction, contained an affidavit of the custodian of the records, such that the exhibit was self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(1), (4). Price v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2020, 2011 WL 946978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 17 2011).

118. Security instrument contained a stamp demonstrating it was filed in county property records, and thus, it was self-authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Meachum v. Jp Morgan Chase Bank, N.A., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1016, 2011 WL 477885 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 11 2011).

119. Trial court did not err in admitting certain juvenile court judgments where the judgments were generally admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) because they consisted of certified copies of public records, certified as correct by their custodian, and, therefore, self-authenticating, and where there was ample evidence that defendant was the person named in the judgments because the prior convictions were linked to defendant via (1) his name, (2) his birth date, (3) his mother's name, and (4) his signature, which appeared on his two written statements, the authenticity of which had not been contested. While the jury was not specifically requested to compare the signatures on the written statements with those appearing on the prior convictions, the jury was free to do so in order to assist in the determination of whether or not defendant was indeed the same individual listed in the prior convictions. Benton v. State, 336 S.W.3d 355, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 845 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 4 2011).

120. In a forcible detainer suit brought by a lender that purchased the property at a foreclosure sale, a paralegal employed by an affiliated service provider of the lender's counsel was a qualified witness with personal knowledge under Tex. R. Evid. 602, 803(6), 902(10) of business records regarding the foreclosure proceedings. Rodriguez v. Citimortgage, Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 171, 2011 WL 182122 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 6 2011).

121. In a breach of contract action against appellants by the assignee of a construction loan, the construction loan, mortgage note, and guaranty agreement were admissible because they were notarized and, therefore, self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902(8). Rockwall Commons Assocs. v. Mrc Mortg. Grantor Trust I, 331 S.W.3d 500, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10234 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 29 2010).

122. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the affiant stated that the documents received from the original lender were kept by the creditor in the regular course of business and that the affiant reviewed the file, was the designated agent for the file, and had personal knowledge of the records concerning the debtor, and thus the affidavit sufficiently showed that the creditor incorporated the original lender's records. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

123. Affidavit failed to state that the affiant confirmed the accuracy of the records, but that is not required under case law; a creditor presented evidence that it reasonably relied on the accuracy of the debtor's account with the original lender. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

124. Affidavit did not lack trustworthiness because it was made by the original lender; to the extent the affiant's credibility was attacked, the trier of fact was the judge of such credibility. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

125. Unlike case law, the affidavit in this case included more than the basic predicate of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), as the affiant expressly referenced the documents attached to the affidavit, and included facts discussing the contents, such that the decision in case law was consistent with the court's holding here. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321

S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

126. Having held that the trial court's admission of the business records affidavit was proper, the court overruled a debtor's challenges to findings of fact that were expressly conditioned on the exclusion of the business records, as well as the related conclusions of law. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

127. Because a business records affidavit was admissible, the court did not need to address a conditional challenge. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

128. Creditor's employee's affidavit followed the form the example affidavit provided by Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), which was sufficient to support the admission of the documents; the issuing lender's documents became the creditor's primary record of the transaction and the documents were properly admitted as business records of the creditor under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

129. Creditor's employee stated that it was in the regular course of business of the creditor for an employee to make the record, which language mirrored precisely the language approved for submitting business records affidavits under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); because the affidavit accurately represented where the documents came from, it did not indicate a lack of trustworthiness, and the trial court did not err in admitting the business records affidavit or the documents verified by the affidavit. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

130. Despite defendant's assertions that a thumbprint was not taken, penitentiary packets were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of an aggravated sexual assault trial; those packets were self-authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901 and Tex. R. Evid. 902, and the State called a crime scene technician, who had reviewed the packets and taken fingerprints from defendant. Therefore, the State established beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the same person that had been previously convicted of other crimes. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6716, 2009 WL 2617647 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

131. In a personal injury case, the court properly excluded appellant's "business records" because they were repetitive and likely to confuse the jury, it was cumulative of other evidence, and appellant's handwritten notes and figures were abstract, indecipherable, were confusing, and were unlikely to help the jury with the calculation of appellant's lost earnings. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

132. Resident and his wife contended that 911 records were competent summary judgment proof under case law and Tex. R. Evid. 902, but they did not state that the records obtained were true and correct copies of original documents; furthermore, the Texas Rules of Evidence and summary-judgment practice treat public records differently from private records and though Tex. R. Evid. 1003 and 1004(d) recognize that a "duplicate" of the original is admissible to the same extent as the original when the original of a document is not available, Tex. R. Evid. 1003 does not apply when, as here, its authenticity is questioned. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

133. Resident and his wife offered nothing in support of the 911 records to satisfy the requirements of self-authentication established by Tex. R. Evid. 902; without the required certification by a records custodian or other person authorized to certify them, the 911 records had no probative value and were incompetent summary-judgment evidence properly excluded as hearsay. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

134. Where defendant was indicted as a habitual felony offender for the unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, the indictment contained enhancement paragraphs alleging that defendant had prior felony convictions. The State proved his prior convictions by introducing as exhibits two pen packets that were certified by the custodian of records from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice; the pen packets were self-authenticating for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 902. Harden v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1578, 2009 WL 539379 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 4 2009).

135. There is no requirement in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) that the affidavit must be dated the same as the letter accompanying the corresponding business records. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

136. Trial court properly admitted certain exhibits as self-authenticated business records, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the exhibits were trustworthy because the State established an adequate foundation and there was nothing that led the court to believe that the exhibits lacked authenticity or trustworthiness. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

137. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the judgment for defendant's conviction of boating while intoxicated because the supervisor's testimony that the judgment bore a seal purporting to be that of the county district clerk would have satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In addition, as evidence of a finalized judgment of conviction, counsel could not have brought forth a sustainable objection based on hearsay. Reese v. State, 273 S.W.3d 344, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8518 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

138. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

139. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

140. One exhibit was offered to prove a second driving while intoxicated conviction necessary for enhancement and the State called a sheriff's office records and identification section employee to identify the judgment, who stated that the copy was stamped and certified by the county clerk's office; the court requested the original exhibits to be sent to the court and because the court found that the document did contain a certification from the county clerk's office on the back of each page, the document was self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902 and the exhibit was properly admitted into evidence. Martinez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3115 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 30 2008).

141. Affidavit stated that the affiant was one of the custodians of the records presented and the affidavit was substantially in the form set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 902, and thus the court rejected the claim that the affidavit did not comply with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803. Wynne v. Citibank (South Dakota) N.A., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS

3037 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 25 2008).

142. There was no merit to defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, enhanced by three prior felony convictions, for failing to file a motion to suppress and/or objecting at trial to the admission of the business records of defendant's employer, along with an affidavit of the custodian of records of the employer that tracked verbatim Tex. R. Evid. 902, and even though the records were not physically attached to the affidavit in the clerk's record but were included in the record of exhibits, defendant was not harmed because his girlfriend testified before the jury that he was not at work on the date of the incident. Delgado v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 3 2008).

143. Even though a pen packet from New Mexico was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 902 because no seal was required, defendant waived any objection relating to admissibility when he took the stand and testified about his own convictions; an exception did not apply because defendant was not trying to deny or rebut the evidence. Williams v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2241 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 28 2008).

144. Documents certified by the Texas Department of Public Safety complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902 and therefore, under Tex. R. Evid. 902, required no extrinsic evidence of authenticity in license suspension proceedings. Hooker v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 329 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 17 2008).

145. Affidavits attached to two exhibits (including a pen pack and defendant's jail records) included a certification by their custodian that the documents were true and correct copies of the original records on file in the office and maintained in the regular course of business within the Bureau of Classification and Records of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice -- Correctional Institutions Division and the Tarrant County Sheriff's Department; thus, the affidavits sufficiently authenticated those exhibits under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Because Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) did not contain a notice requirement, the exhibits were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of the trial even though defendant had no notice of the exhibits. Garza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7194 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2007).

146. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining a father's objections to admission of an "updated" record, as the objection from the father's attorney prevented the attorney general from authenticating the "updated" record without testifying under oath; when the trial judge sustained the father's objection to the "updated" record, the attorney general had to prove the authenticity of the document by some other means; however, the attorney general made no attempt to call any witnesses to testify at the hearing and the document was not self-authenticating because it was not under seal, a certified copy of a public record, or supported by a business records affidavit. In re K.R., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5756 (Tex. App. Dallas July 23 2007).

147. Although a North Carolina penitentiary packet lacked certified documentation from the sentencing court, it was properly authenticated and contained sufficient evidence of a final conviction of the enhancement offense; hence, it was admissible as the functional equivalent of a properly certified judgment and sentence. Martin v. State, 227 S.W.3d 335, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3445 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

148. Where defendant was charged with driving while intoxicated, during the punishment phase the State was permitted to offer a computer-generated printout of his prior conviction record from Dallas County, Texas; the county record was self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902. Flowers v. State, 220 S.W.3d 919, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 428 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

149. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting two pen packets during defendant's trial for armed robbery where an affidavit sufficiently authenticated the pen packets under Tex. R. Evid. 902. Eason v. State, 2007 Tex.

App. LEXIS 2973 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2007).

150. Pen packets may be authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 902 via a certification by their custodian that the contents are correct copies of the originals. Eason v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2007).

151. In a divorce proceeding, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the withdrawal from the record of one of the children's passports seven days before the judgment became final; the husband did not inform the appellate court whether there was a proper motion to substitute a duplicate original, either orally or in writing, or whether the action was sua sponte by the trial court. Thomas v. Robert, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1149 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 15 2007).

152. Where defendant was convicted for indecency with a child, the State was permitted to admit his pen packet into evidence during the punishment phase of trial; the pen packet was self-authenticated via certification as to its accuracy by the custodian; Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) has no notice requirement. Sharp v. State, 210 S.W.3d 835, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11033 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

153. Admission of a Mississippi "pen packet" at the punishment stage of appellant's trial was not in error, where a raised--uncolored--seal was on the original exhibit, and the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) were adequately met. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9782 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 10 2006).

154. In a breach of contract action, the summary judgment evidence offered by a creditor was admissible; a record of the monthly payments qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as a business record, and the affidavit of the creditor's employee substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Capers v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9175 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

155. Admission of the State's exhibits, which included the traffic citation, the warrant of arrest signed by the judge of the municipal court and a deputy clerk's certificate of defendant's failure to appear at trial for his speeding citation, did not violate defendant's confrontation rights because the exhibits were forms used by the Houston courts that record the occurrence of an event, and defendant failed to offer and the appellate court could not find, any authority or reasoning to transform the documents into testimonial statements. Azeez v. State, 203 S.W.3d 456, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

156. Computer printout showing a prior driving while intoxicated (DWI) conviction contained sufficient information and indicia of reliability to have constituted the functional equivalent of a judgment and sentence, and the trial court did not err in admitting the printout, which was properly authenticated by the clerk pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902, into evidence in defendant's trial for DWI, enhanced by the prior conviction; the printout stated defendant's name, the offense charged, the date of commission, the verdict of guilty and the sentence given, and the specifics of the amount of time served, and the trial court could have concluded from the "comments" section of the printout that defendant received a time credit on the sentence for pre-sentence confinement, pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.03, § 2(a). Flowers v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4352 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 18 2006).

157. Although defendants argued that a power of attorney was forged, it was acknowledged by a notary public, and defendants did not submit evidence to rebut the recitations in the certificates, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902(8), and because a fact issue as to the validity of the power of attorney was not raised, the trial court's sole duty was to construe a deed and determine if it conveyed a wife's interest, which it did, and the trial court could have granted summary judgment in this regard, for purposes of plaintiffs' declaratory judgment action under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 37.004(a). Ruiz v. Stewart Mineral Corp., 202 S.W.3d 242, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3547,

168 Oil & Gas Rep. 224 (Tex. App. Tyler 2006).

158. No business record affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) was necessary because the witness laid the proper foundation for admission of the report as a business record during testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Benavides v. Cushman, Inc., 189 S.W.3d 875, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 716 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

159. Court properly admitted defendant's out of state pen packet as proof of defendant's prior felony where the court minutes, the statement of suspensive appeal, and the warrant of commitment appeared to have originally been executed under official seal, and the attestations in the documents that defendant had been found guilty of a felony offense, he had been sentenced to twenty-one years, and he had not appealed the judgment and sentence, were sufficient to establish his prior felony conviction. White v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7226 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

160. In a forfeiture hearing, because the certified copy of the bail bond was a self-authenticated public record, no further authentication was required; additionally, the surety's hearsay objection failed because a public record fell under the hearsay exception. Thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the bail bond into evidence as a public record. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

161. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

162. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

163. Where each of defendant's penitentiary packets contained an affidavit by the Chairman of Classification and Records for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice-Operational Division in which he certified under the seal of the department that the information contained in the packets included true and correct copies of the original records on file in his office and maintained in the regular course of business; therefore, the packets were sufficiently authenticated in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902. Aurich v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 9 2005).

164. Borrower, who brought suit against a lender to prevent foreclosure, argued that documents lender introduced into evidence were not properly authenticated; however, Tex. R. Evid. 902 allowed for self-authentication of the substitute trustee's deed, affidavit of mortgage, and deed of trust. Murphy v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 199 S.W.3d 441, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4958 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

165. Given that (1) a computer-generated case synopsis did not indicate whether defendant was actually convicted of a prior driving while intoxicated offense, (2) the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7), 902(4) were not met, given that it was not shown that the synopsis was a writing authorized by law to be filed or was a copy of an official record, and (3) the State introduced no other evidence of the prior conviction, the evidence was insufficient to support defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.09(a) of driving while intoxicated, second offense. Blank v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2566 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 172 S.W.3d 673, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10714 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

166. In an action brought to recover delinquent real property taxes, the trial court erred in admitting tax statements into evidence; because the tax statements did not bear a seal or contain a certification under seal from a public officer, the tax statements were not self-authenticating as certified public records under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Al-Nayem Int'l Trading, Inc. v. Irving Indep. Sch. Dist., 159 S.W.3d 762, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1919 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

167. Because there was no affidavit that documents were true and correct copies of the originals, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902, the documents were not proper summary judgment evidence under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a. Gillespie v. Wells Fargo Bank Minn., N.A., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11719 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2004).

168. To be considered as evidence of a final conviction, a penitentiary packet had to contain a judgment and sentence, properly certified, and, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901, the evidence offered by the State lacked certification and a seal, Tex. R. Evid. 902, and was not self-authenticating. The State's admissible evidence linked defendant to the purported conviction, but failed to prove the conviction was valid and final. Banks v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10630 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 30 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 158 S.W.3d 649, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1838 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

169. Court declined to find that the method for computing time in a criminal case should have been that under Tex. R. Civ. P. 4. Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) makes no reference to Tex. R. Civ. P. 4 and because the Texas Rules of Evidence are not statutes, Rule 4, by its express terms, has no applicability to them. Landrum v. State, 153 S.W.3d 635, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9711 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

170. Because Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) did not require defendant to do anything in response to the State's filing of certain records, Tex. R. Civ. P. 4 had no application to the question of whether the State met its burden of proof for the admission of the records. The records were filed for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) when they and their affidavits were presented on April 7, 2004, and day 14 was April 20, 2004, and thus the records were filed at least 14 days prior to the commencement of defendant's trial for theft on April 21, 2004 as required. Landrum v. State, 153 S.W.3d 635, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9711 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

171. School district's tax statements were not self-authenticating as certified public records under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) because the tax statements did not bear a seal or contain a certification under seal from a public officer. Al-Nayem Int'l Trading, Inc. v. Irving Indep. Sch. Dist., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9676 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2004), superseded by, opinion withdrawn by 159 S.W.3d 762, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1919 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

172. City's tax statements were not under seal and did not contain a certification under seal, as required for self-authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Because the trial court sustained the taxpayer's objection that he was not given timely notice of the statements and the accompanying business records affidavit as required by Rule 902(10), the trial court erred in admitting the statements into evidence. Al-Nayem Int'l Trading, Inc. v. Irving Indep. Sch. Dist., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9676 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2004), superseded by, opinion withdrawn by 159 S.W.3d 762, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1919 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

173. Defendant did not argue at trial or in the brief that a witness, though not a custodian of blood sample records, was not a qualified witness under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), and thus, defendant did not show that the trial court erred in allowing the witness to authenticate the transmittal form under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) in connection with defendant's driving while intoxicated trial. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct.

14 2004).

174. Defendant's general hearsay objection did not preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), on the alleged violation of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a) as to the asserted failure to comply with the 14-day requirement; even assuming the objection was sufficient to preserve error, the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection because the clerk's record contained copies of the hospital records together with a business records affidavit conforming to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10)(a), and the records were file marked on one day and the trial was conducted 10 days later on defendant's charge of driving while intoxicated. Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14 2004).

175. Copy of the email correspondence appellant claimed was from appellees to the trial court that appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims was not accompanied by an affidavit, nor was it authenticated; appellees did not concede that the copy of the email was accurate, nor did they concede that it was ever sent, nor did the copy appear to fall within the category of facts that may be judicially noticed, such that the appellate court could not consider it for purposes of determining whether appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims. Lindsey v. Kline, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6941 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 29 2004).

176. Where a bail bond was certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902, the bond was self-authenticating and the trial court did not err in admitting it into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6619 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 22 2004).

177. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper where he did not show that the trial court committed any error in allowing the senior chemist to authenticate the transmittal form from the lab indicating defendant's blood alcohol level, and as such, he did not show that the trial court committed any error in allowing the chemist to authenticate the transmittal form under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a), 803(6). Astalas v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6398 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 14, 2004).

178. In a defamation action, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not specify that the certification on the employee and the employer's exhibits contain an accurate date, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that the incorrect date stamp was the result of a fraudulent act; thus, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to admit the exhibits under the public documents exception to the hearsay rule. Adi v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 565, 163 L. Ed. 2d 475, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7988, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

179. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

180. Assault victim's medical records were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the affidavit of the custodian of hospital records stated that the records were kept in the regular course of the hospital's business, that the hospital was the custodian's employer, that the victim's medical records were made by a hospital employee with knowledge of the events, and that the employee made the records at or near the time of the event. Thus, the affidavit satisfied both Rule 803(6) and Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), including the notice provision of Rule 902(10). Reyes v. State, 48 S.W.3d 917, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3983 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

181. Trial court properly admitted defendant's blood test results included in his hospital records following the crash; the State established the beginning and end of a proper chain of custody because a nurse testified that she drew defendant's blood that day pursuant to the treating physician's orders and a custodian of records established under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) that the records were made at the time of the event, by a person with knowledge, and that they were kept in the regular course of business by the hospital. Gallagher v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5125, 2013 WL 1800198 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 25 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Affidavits

182. In a forcible detainer action, a business records affidavit that authenticated the notice to vacate was not inadmissible hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because it substantially complied with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), 902(10), although it did not precisely track the language of Rule 902(10). Although the affidavit was prepared by a third party, the foreclosure purchaser's law firm, the trial court could have concluded that the purchaser reasonably relied on the accuracy of the records in the ordinary course of its business and that they were trustworthy. Baty v. Morequity, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9876 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 29 2012).

183. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

184. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

185. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

186. Authenticity of a copy of a bail bond admitted into evidence was shown both because it was a certified copy of an official record and because the deputy district clerk compared it to the bond contained within the clerk's file while testifying. The copy of the bond was therefore admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) and Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Guiles v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 675, 2013 WL 257368 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 24 2013).

187. Granting a lessor leave to file an untimely business records affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) did not prejudice the lessee; Tex. R. Civ. P. 5 generally gives trial courts discretion to enlarge time periods, and any error in admitting the version of the lease agreement introduced by the lessor was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) because the trial court was well situated to resolve evidentiary conflicts. Kahn v. Imperial Airport, L.P., 308 S.W.3d 432, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1830 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

188. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting two exhibits containing reports of hair follicle drug tests of appellants under the business records exception to the hearsay rule, as there was insufficient indicia of trustworthiness or reliability, the error was harmless because other evidence that two children and the mother's boyfriend tested positive for cocaine was admitted without objection, and termination of the mother's parental rights did not turn on the admission of the second and third sets of positive drug test results. In the Interest of S.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9946, 2012 WL 5991391 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2012).

189. In a bank's forcible-detainer case against a property occupant, the bank's claim to a superior right to possess the property was not based on a business-records affidavit containing inadmissible hearsay where the affiant averred that she was both an employee and a custodian of records of the bank's law firm and that she had actual or constructive care, custody, and control of the attached records relating to the bank's forcible-detainer proceeding against the occupant, and where she stated that the records were made in the regular course of the law firm's business by someone with personal knowledge and that it was the regular course of business to keep such records. Kaldis v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6609, 2012 WL 3229135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2012).

190. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

191. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against appellant account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent showed that the agent had personal knowledge of appellant's file, that she was appellee's designated agent for those records, and that appellant's account remained unpaid in the amount stated in the affidavit. Thus, the evidence demonstrated that appellee reasonably relied upon the accuracy of the contents of the documents that it received from the credit card company. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

192. Summary judgment in favor of the customer was proper, because the bank failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether a contract existed or whether the customer authorized the charges to the credit card account, when the bank's only summary judgment evidence was inadmissible; since the bank's affidavit neither named the affiant in the body of the affidavit or the jurat, and the affiant's signature was completely illegible, the bank's affidavit did not substantially comply with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) and was insufficient to establish the business records exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Fia Card Services, N.A. v. Frausto, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9924, 2011 WL 6260653 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 15 2011).

193. Given that plaintiff filed a business record affidavit in the incorrect case, and the affidavit and attached documents were not made a part of the record in the underlying case until after the final judgment was signed, and given that plaintiff did not dispute defense counsel's representation to the court that defendant had not otherwise been provided several of the attached documents in discovery, under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow plaintiff to introduce the business records affidavit and attached records. Old Republic Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4933, 2011 WL 2623994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 30 2011).

194. Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude the bank witness's affidavit and attachments, because the witness's testimony adequately demonstrated the basis for her personal knowledge of the manner in which the bank kept its records and the other facts to which she testified; Texas Rules of Evidence did not require that the qualified witness who provided the predicate for the admission of business records be their creator or have personal knowledge of the contents of the record, when the witness was required only to have personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were kept. Damron v. Citibank (s.D.) N.A., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7054, 2010 WL 3377777 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2010).

195. In a personal injury case, the court properly excluded appellant's "business records" because they were repetitive and likely to confuse the jury, it was cumulative of other evidence, and appellant's handwritten notes and figures were abstract, indecipherable, were confusing, and were unlikely to help the jury with the calculation of appellant's lost earnings. Griffin v. Carson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3843, 2009 WL 1493467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 28 2009).

196. Trial court's exclusion of an affidavit as inadmissible hearsay was proper where it could not serve as an authentication to business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) because it had not been on file for the requisite fourteen days before the subsequent trial; the affidavit had been signed only five days prior to the subsequent trial. Benchmark Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2947, 2009 WL 1153385 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 30 2009).

197. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

198. Order awarding summary judgment to a mortgagee in its action against mortgagors to foreclose a lien on property was upheld where an affidavit from the mortgagee's custodian of records about the default was sufficient summary judgment evidence; the custodian, in the affidavit, was not required to recite the exact words that appeared in Tex. R. Evid. 902. Kyle v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 232 S.W.3d 355, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6667 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

199. Probate court properly excluded the exhibits offered by a decedent's surviving spouse and administratrix of his estate at the special appearance hearing of the decedent's Florida business associate because the exhibits were business records of a group of Texas entities owned by the business associate, and they were not authenticated by the administratrix merely by virtue of her role as administratrix of the decedent's estate. Allen v. Havens, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2088 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

200. In a breach of contract action, the summary judgment evidence offered by a creditor was admissible; a record of the monthly payments qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) as a business record, and the affidavit of the creditor's employee substantially complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). Capers v. Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., 2006 Tex.

App. LEXIS 9175 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2006).

201. While the trial court erred in admitting defendant's cell phone bill because it was not authenticated, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because of the wealth of other evidence to convict defendant. Miller v. State, 208 S.W.3d 554, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2791 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

202. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as a child's managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the affidavit of the custodian of records was substantially the same as the sample form provided in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

203. In a dispute over a home equity loan, business records relating to the payment history of a borrower were admissible into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b) because there was no requirement that the witness have personal knowledge of the facts contained therein. Greene v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4130 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 26 2005).

204. Court declined to find that the method for computing time in a criminal case should have been that under Tex. R. Civ. P. 4. Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) makes no reference to Tex. R. Civ. P. 4 and because the Texas Rules of Evidence are not statutes, Rule 4, by its express terms, has no applicability to them. Landrum v. State, 153 S.W.3d 635, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9711 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

205. Because Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) did not require defendant to do anything in response to the State's filing of certain records, Tex. R. Civ. P. 4 had no application to the question of whether the State met its burden of proof for the admission of the records. The records were filed for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) when they and their affidavits were presented on April 7, 2004, and day 14 was April 20, 2004, and thus the records were filed at least 14 days prior to the commencement of defendant's trial for theft on April 21, 2004 as required. Landrum v. State, 153 S.W.3d 635, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9711 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

206. School district's tax statements were properly authenticated as a business record under affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Although there was nothing in the record to indicate the tax statements and record were filed with the court clerk 14 days before trial or that the taxpayer received prompt notice of the filing, the taxpayer did not complain about these matters on appeal. Al-Nayem Int'l Trading, Inc. v. Irving Indep. Sch. Dist., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9676 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2004), superseded by, opinion withdrawn by 159 S.W.3d 762, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1919 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

207. City's tax statements were not under seal and did not contain a certification under seal, as required for self-authentication under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Because the trial court sustained the taxpayer's objection that he was not given timely notice of the statements and the accompanying business records affidavit as required by Rule 902(10), the trial court erred in admitting the statements into evidence. Al-Nayem Int'l Trading, Inc. v. Irving Indep. Sch. Dist., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9676 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2004), superseded by, opinion withdrawn by 159 S.W.3d 762, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1919 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

208. Debtor's argument that the trial court erred in failing to sustain his objections to the business records affidavit attached to the motion for summary judgment was overruled because once the bank purchased the predecessor bank's accounts, it took possession of the former's business records and it was not necessary that loan account records be verified by the custodian of the original holder's records, and in all other respects, the business records affidavit substantially comported with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). Block v. Providian Nat'l Bank, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6141 (Tex. App. Dallas July 12 2004).

209. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

210. Court rejected appellants' contention that statements in affidavits, which were submitted in support of summary judgment motions under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a, constituted improper legal conclusions; case law did not stand for the proposition the statements that affiants had personal knowledge of the facts were improper, and the state supreme court had recommended, under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), that certain affidavits commence with the language appellants challenged. Choctaw Props., L.L.C. v. Aledo I.S.D., 127 S.W.3d 235, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10659 (Tex. App. Waco 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

211. The State properly authenticated the booking sheet from a prior crime allegedly committed by defendant in the State of Washington as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and the records were not subject to exclusion because they contained hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Wood v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3254, 2012 WL 1448333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 25 2012).

212. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

213. In a child sexual assault case, the admission of defendant's medical records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) was proper because the records were properly authenticated by their custodian in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) as having been made and kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity. Eslora v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2564 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 6 2005).

214. Assault victim's medical records were admissible as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the affidavit of the custodian of hospital records stated that the records were kept in the regular course of the hospital's business, that the hospital was the custodian's employer, that the victim's medical records were made by a hospital employee with knowledge of the events, and that the employee made the records at or near the time of the event. Thus, the affidavit satisfied both Rule 803(6) and Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b), including the notice provision of Rule 902(10). Reyes v. State, 48 S.W.3d 917, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3983 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2001).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

215. Probate court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the 1993 tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit met the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the affidavit and tax return were timely filed pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the affidavit, the accountant affirmed that he was the custodian of records, that the 12 pages consisted of the 1993 1040 U.S. Individual Income Tax Return and the decedent's W-2, that the 12 pages were kept by him in the regular course of business, and that the records were made at or near the time or reasonably soon thereafter, and that the records were the original or exact duplicates of the original. Valdez

v. Hollenbeck, 410 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

216. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the mortgage company's evidence where the agent's affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) by averring to facts that satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 803(6); the agent averred that she was providing the records as the custodian, that she had personal knowledge of the information contained in the records, that the records were made in the regular course of business, and that it was the regular practice of the business to keep such records. Khalilnia v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2991, 2013 WL 1183311 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 21 2013).

217. Insurance company documents were presented as business records pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) and the cell phone documents were presented pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902 with the accompanying affidavit; because the documents were produced in the normal and regular course of business of the entity that kept the records, defendant was not denied his right of confrontation. Lozoya v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1973, 2013 WL 708489 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2013).

218. In a breach of contract action brought by appellee, the assignee of a credit card company, against an account holder, the trial court did not err in admitting appellee's business records affidavit and business records where the affidavit of appellee's designated agent sufficiently showed that appellee incorporated the credit card company's records and kept them in the regular course of its business. Smith v. Federated Fin. Corp. of Am., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1593, 2012 WL 682258 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Judgments

219. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

220. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the juvenile court properly admitted a statement about the victim being "struck with a rock" that was contained in the medical records because the medical records satisfied the business records exception, the document was signed by the treating physician, and the medical records included an affidavit by the custodian of records for the hospital, who averred that she had personal knowledge of the manner in which the records were prepared. In re B. P. S., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6028 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2008).

221. Defendant's medical records, with which he intended to expalin his poor performance on field sobriety tests, were properly excluded because he did not provide the State with the medical records 14 days prior to trial, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(a). Werdlow v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6788 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

222. Documents could not be admitted as public records under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) in a receivership proceeding without certification pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) or extrinsic evidence of authenticity under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), (b)(7). Benefield v. State ex rel. Alvin Cmty. Health Endeavor, Inc., 266 S.W.3d 25, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6152

(Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

223. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father could not be admitted as public records because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. None of the documents at issue was under seal or certified for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

224. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of arrest records and certified copies of judgments and sentences because the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Also defendant failed to preserve his claim of error because he did not object to the admission of these evidentiary items on that basis as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4625 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

225. Trial court did not err in admitting State's exhibits during the penalty phase that consisted of certified records of defendant's prior felony convictions which the State alleged for enhancement purposes because the trial could admit evidence of prior criminal convictions during the punishment phase of a trial pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and the certified copies of a judgment and sentence were admissible without additional testimony as self-authenticated public records under Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) and 902(1) and (4). Lopez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4610 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

226. In a defamation action, the Texas Rules of Evidence did not specify that the certification on the employee and the employer's exhibits contain an accurate date, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that the incorrect date stamp was the result of a fraudulent act; thus, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to admit the exhibits under the public documents exception to the hearsay rule. Adi v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5937 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 565, 163 L. Ed. 2d 475, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 7988, 74 U.S.L.W. 3273 (U.S. 2005).

227. Where a statutory warning was properly certified as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) by the custodian of records for the Texas Department of Public Safety, it was properly admitted at an administrative driver's license revocation hearing over the driver's authentication objection. Texas Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Cortinas, 996 S.W.2d 885, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7791 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1998).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Absence of Records

228. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 803(10), 902 in excluding a letter from the United States Department of Transportation showing that defendant had never held an airplane pilot's certificate because the document was a copy of a letter that, though written on letterhead, was not under seal or certified. Teczar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2919, 2011 WL 1743756 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Law Enforcement Reports

229. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to the admission of a penitentiary packet because penitentiary packets were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if they were properly authenticated as public records, as provided by Tex. R. Evid. 803(8), 901(b)(7), 902(4). Henderson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : General Overview

230. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the judgment for defendant's conviction of boating while intoxicated because the supervisor's testimony that the judgment bore a seal purporting to be that of the county district clerk would have satisfied the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In addition, as evidence of a finalized judgment of conviction, counsel could not have brought forth a sustainable objection based on hearsay. Reese v. State, 273 S.W.3d 344, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8518 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : Consistent Statements

231. Nothing in the worker's Social Security disability finding document indicated that the worker was cross-examined at his disability hearing as required by Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B); it was not clear whether the disability finding was the worker's "statement" as it was a document issued by a federal agency and not the worker himself, and because the document was not certified, its authenticity was at issue, Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Belmarez v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7945, 2011 WL 4696750 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 30 2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

232. Where a statutory warning was properly certified as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) by the custodian of records for the Texas Department of Public Safety, it was properly admitted at an administrative driver's license revocation hearing over the driver's authentication objection. Texas Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Cortinas, 996 S.W.2d 885, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7791 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1998).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

233. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the State was permitted to offer into evidence unsworn police reports detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

234. Granting a lessor leave to file an untimely business records affidavit under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10) did not prejudice the lessee; Tex. R. Civ. P. 5 generally gives trial courts discretion to enlarge time periods, and any error in admitting the version of the lease agreement introduced by the lessor was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) because the trial court was well situated to resolve evidentiary conflicts. Kahn v. Imperial Airport, L.P., 308 S.W.3d 432, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1830 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2010).

235. Where a drilling company sued an operating company to collect for services in attempting re-entry of an abandoned oil and gas well, as the custodian of records and the president of the drilling company, the president was qualified to testify regarding the invoice and the daily time sheets without an affidavit complying with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); moreover, those exhibits were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), the business records exception, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the invoice or the daily time sheets into evidence. Integras Operating, L.L.C. v. Re-Entry People, Inc., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2461 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 18 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

236. In a family violence assault case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.01(b)(2)(A), the evidence was legally insufficient to support a jury's finding that defendant previously was convicted of an assault involving family violence, although there were some discrepancies in the documents. Burks v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6340

(Tex. App. Tyler May 22 2013).

237. The State properly authenticated the booking sheet from a prior crime allegedly committed by defendant in the State of Washington as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10), and the records were not subject to exclusion because they contained hearsay, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 803(6). Wood v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3254, 2012 WL 1448333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 25 2012).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood Alcohol

238. In a personal injury suit stemming from a collision between a motorist and a bicyclist, evidence of the bicyclist's intoxication was rebuttably presumed to be admissible because the bicyclist's vigilance, judgment, and reactions were at issue; no expert evidence was required as to causation; assessing the reliability of scientific methods was not a precondition to the admission of factual evidence of alcohol consumption, business records showing blood-alcohol levels, or non-expert opinions regarding intoxication. Ticknor v. Doolan, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6717 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 27 2006).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Fingerprints & Footprints

239. Despite defendant's assertions that a thumbprint was not taken, penitentiary packets were properly admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of an aggravated sexual assault trial; those packets were self-authenticated for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901 and Tex. R. Evid. 902, and the State called a crime scene technician, who had reviewed the packets and taken fingerprints from defendant. Therefore, the State established beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the same person that had been previously convicted of other crimes. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6716, 2009 WL 2617647 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Toxicology

240. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as a child's managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the affidavit of the custodian of records was substantially the same as the sample form provided in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

Family Law : Child Custody : Awards : General Overview

241. In affirming the appointment of grandparents as a child's managing conservators, the court found that the results of a drug test on the 11-month-old child were properly admitted under the business records exception to the hearsay rule; the affidavit of the custodian of records was substantially the same as the sample form provided in Tex. R. Evid. 902(10)(b). In re A.T., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1882 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

Family Law : Marital Termination & Spousal Support : Spousal Support : Obligations : Temporary Support

242. Mandamus relief was denied to a common law husband who was found in contempt for failing to pay temporary support under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 6.502(a)(2) because there was no deprivation of due process based on an alleged failure to allow the husband to present evidence of his inability to pay; the husband was allowed to testify as to the effects of a bankruptcy order, even though the trial court erroneously excluded such under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). Moreover, his son was permitted to testify, there was no showing that the husband had ever requested a modification of a joint receivership or a bankruptcy court's order in order to allow for the payment of the temporary support, and property held by the husband's claimed "current" wife could have been used to pay the temporary support. In re Small, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 26 2009).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

243. In a proceeding to terminate a father's parental rights, hearsay statements relating to purported sexual abuse by the father could not be admitted as public records because the Department of Family and Protective Services failed to lay a proper predicate. None of the documents at issue was under seal or certified for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 902. In re E.A.K., 192 S.W.3d 133, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1562 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Procedure

244. In a termination of parental rights case, medical records were properly admitted as business records under Tex. R. Evid. 802, 803(6) because the custodian affidavit complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902(10). In the Interest of R.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8394, 2011 WL 5026229 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

Governments : Courts : Court Records

245. Relator failed to provide a record sufficient to establish his right to mandamus relief under Tex. R. App. P. 52.7(a) to obtain additional jail-time credit, because a computer printout suggested a detainer was placed on relator by the sheriff's office for the charged offense; however, the length of time the detainer was placed on relator was not clear. The copy of the computer printout included in the record did not appear to be a certified copy as required by Tex. R. Evid. 902(4). In re Garza, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1307 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 15 2012).

Military & Veterans Law : Military Justice : Evidence : Writings & Real Evidence

246. Probate court properly excluded the exhibits offered by a decedent's surviving spouse and administratrix of his estate at the special appearance hearing of the decedent's Florida business associate because the exhibits were business records of a group of Texas entities owned by the business associate, and they were not authenticated by the administratrix merely by virtue of her role as administratrix of the decedent's estate. Allen v. Havens, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2088 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2007).

Real Property Law : Financing : Mortgages & Other Security Instruments : Foreclosures

247. Borrower's assertion that the Notice of Substitute Trustee Sale was not self-authenticating under Tex. R. Evid. 902 was not preserved for review because the borrower did not object in the trial court. Givens v. Midland Mortg. Co., 393 S.W.3d 876, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10096, 2012 WL 6042534 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 5 2012).

Transportation Law : Bridges & Roads : Turnpikes

248. In a case in which a trial court found in favor of a county that sought to recover from a vehicle owner unpaid tolls due to the county toll road authority, there was no merit in the owner's claim that the judgment entered by the trial court was not supported by the evidence because the county offered, and the trial court properly admitted into evidence, a certified copy of the county's administrative order finding the owner liable, a certified copy of the affidavit and certificate of service, and the toll road authority's records detailing the owner's toll violations and the fee associated with the violations. The county also presented evidence indicating that the owner had been properly served notice of the administrative hearing. Edmiston v. Harris County, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7045, 2012 WL 3612436 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 23 2012).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Operator Licenses : General Overview

249. Documents certified by the Texas Department of Public Safety complied with Tex. R. Evid. 902 and therefore, under Tex. R. Evid. 902, required no extrinsic evidence of authenticity in license suspension proceedings. Hooker v.

Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 329 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 17 2008).

250. Court would not invalidate a police officer's sworn and notarized report solely based on a partially illegible notary stamp where there was no evidence negating the intent of the officer in making the affidavit. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Rajachar, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1582 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 1 2006).

251. Where a statutory warning was properly certified as a public record under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) by the custodian of records for the Texas Department of Public Safety, it was properly admitted at an administrative driver's license revocation hearing over the driver's authentication objection. Texas Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Cortinas, 996 S.W.2d 885, 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 7791 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 1998).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Criminal Law & Procedure : Arrests : Probable Cause

1. Videotape of a driver's performance on field sobriety tests can be sufficient evidence to support probable cause to proceed with an arrest for driving while intoxicated. The reviewing court assumed that such a video, which was published in the trial court as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 401, 1001, supported a probable cause finding where defendant failed to include the video in the record and the trial court did not file findings of fact. Amador v. State, 187 S.W.3d 543, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

2. Objection that evidence was "unsubstantiated" was insufficient to preserve a complaint that copies of an e-mail and allegedly obscene video were inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1001. Varkonyi v. State, 276 S.W.3d 27, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3353 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

3. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

4. Trial court did not err in failing to exclude a videotape of defendant's arrest because it was not overly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the videotape, which was treated as a photograph for evidentiary purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 1001(2), was helpful to the jury, and the court noted that the officer testified without objection to a similar course of events contained in the videotape. Hartis v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7079 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 30 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 183 S.W.3d 793, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10330 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

5. Admission of a videotape depicting the outside of a murder victim's business, the disarray in the reception area, the blood on the walls, and the placement of the victim lying face-down on the floor was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 1001(a); the video merely presented a three-dimensional perspective of the evidence that was already before the jury. Williams v. State, 82 S.W.3d 557, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3413 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

6. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

7. Admission of a videotape depicting the outside of a murder victim's business, the disarray in the reception area, the blood on the walls, and the placement of the victim lying face-down on the floor was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 1001(a); the video merely presented a three-dimensional perspective of the evidence that was already before the jury. Williams v. State, 82 S.W.3d 557, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3413 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

8. Although defendant argued that a portion of a videotape was not relevant, defendant's brief, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), did not frame the contention as an issue nor did it present supported record citations and authorities, and thus the question was not properly before the court; even if the issue was raised, the evidence of defendant's demeanor and speech in defendant's case for driving while intoxicated would have been relevant, as in a trial for driving while intoxicated, evidence could include relevant photographs or videotapes. Lovington v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7816 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 28 2007).

9. Videotape of a driver's performance on field sobriety tests can be sufficient evidence to support probable cause to proceed with an arrest for driving while intoxicated. The reviewing court assumed that such a video, which was published in the trial court as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 401, 1001, supported a probable cause finding where defendant failed to include the video in the record and the trial court did not file findings of fact. Amador v. State, 187 S.W.3d 543, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

10. Although defendant argued that a portion of a videotape was not relevant, defendant's brief, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), did not frame the contention as an issue nor did it present supported record citations and authorities, and thus the question was not properly before the court; even if the issue was raised, the evidence of defendant's demeanor and speech in defendant's case for driving while intoxicated would have been relevant, as in a trial for driving while intoxicated, evidence could include relevant photographs or videotapes. Lovington v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7816 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 28 2007).

11. In defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.041(c), the trial court did not err in admitting a videotape into evidence for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, 1001(b), given that (1) testimony showed that a witness removed the videotape from a locked box and placed it in his desk, reviewed the videotape the day after the incident and before testifying, and the videotape was the same or similar to what was seen on the day after the incident, (2) the testimony described where the camera lens and locked box were located in the school bus and how they were activated, (3) other testimony established the chain of custody, (4) the videotape display indicated it was a videotape of the bus on a certain date and time, and (5) events the children described appeared on the videotape. Teeter v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1248 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 20 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

12. Defendant's conviction for recklessly causing serious bodily injury to a child was appropriate because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence a video recording of the infant while he was in the hospital. The video had probative value because it demonstrated the seriousness of the infant's brain injury and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the video aided the jury's understanding of the mother's testimony regarding the long-term effects of the injury as it showed the infant's diminished ability to see or speak; further, the recording depicted nothing more emotional or graphic than the photographs. Holte v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12207, 2013 WL 5498134 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 1 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

13. Debtor argued that a copy of a contract was not admissible because it was not a duplicate as required by Tex. R. Evid. 1003, but Tex. R. Evid. 1001(d) defined duplicate as a counterpart produced by means that accurately reproduced the original; even though the copy was partially cut off, most of the contract were readily discernible and the copy accurately reproduced enough of the original contract that one could not reasonably doubt it was a true copy of the original. Wyatt v. Capital One Auto Fin., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 563, 71 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (CBC) 8 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 29 2010).

14. In a theft case, the admission into evidence of photographs made from a security videotape was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1001, 1002, 1003. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 463 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 21 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3, 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

15. Defendant's conviction for recklessly causing serious bodily injury to a child was appropriate because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence a video recording of the infant while he was in the hospital. The video had probative value because it demonstrated the seriousness of the infant's brain injury and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the video aided the jury's understanding of the mother's testimony regarding the long-term effects of the injury as it showed the infant's diminished ability to see or speak; further, the recording depicted nothing more emotional or graphic than the photographs. Holte v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12207, 2013 WL 5498134 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 1 2013).

16. In a trial for aggravated assault, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 403, 1001(a) in admitting a crime scene videotape that showed the bodies of two murdered individuals who were not the victims of the charged offense. The video gave the jury a three dimensional perspective in understanding the chaotic sequence of events on the night in question. Dotson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5255, 2011 WL 2714058 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 13 2011).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : Affidavits

1. In borrowers' suit to contest a bank's right to foreclose on their home, the borrowers' motion to strike the bank's summary judgment evidence was properly denied because the best evidence rule did not apply to the transfer of assets from a predecessor to the loan servicer, because the bank was not attempting to prove the contents of a document; in light of the inferences that could be drawn from the conflicting testimony regarding whether a notice letter was sent, it was not an abuse of discretion to determine that the exhibit was admissible. Trimm v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 17 2014).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Briefs

2. While the record on appeal contained a release from one oil and gas company in which that company surrenders all interest in one tract of land, but neither plaintiff mineral interest owners nor defendant well operator directed the court to where the record contained evidence of how the oil and gas company obtained its interest under the lease, to the extent the best evidence rule would require the introduction of the writing proving that interest, the operator waived any error by failing to object in the trial court under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Moore v. Jet Stream Invs., Ltd., 261 S.W.3d 412, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 661 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Contracts Law : Defenses : Public Policy Violations

3. In an action in which a homebuilder sued a real estate developer for breach of contract, there was no merit to the homebuilder's claim that a provision that terminated the contract if the homebuilder recorded the contract of public record was void as a matter of public policy on the ground that the homebuilder would not have an adequate remedy under Texas law if it were contractually prevented from filing a lawsuit, and recording the contract in relation to that lawsuit, in order to enforce its right of specific performance; nothing in the Texas Rules of Evidence, specifically Tex. R. Evid. 1002, required the public recording of documents like the homebuilder had done when it filed the contract in the county deed records without the developer's permission in violation of the contractual provision, and, furthermore, the homebuilder could have maintained the confidentiality of the contract without publicly filing the contract and still sought remedy in court by either seeking an in camera inspection of the contract or having the trial court place the contract under seal. Classic Century, Inc. v. Deer Creek Estates, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6248 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 14 2008).

Contracts Law : Formation : Capacity of Parties : Mental Capacity

4. Reference by beneficiaries' attorney to a decedent's medical records while questioning the decedent's friend that certain records indicated the decedent was mentally incompetent did not violate the best evidence rule because the attorney referenced the materials to impeach the friend on his testimony that the decedent was mentally competent, not to provide further evidence of the records' content; the decedent had named the friend as the "payable on death" beneficiary under certain contracts. In the Estate of Minton, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1061, 2014 WL 354527 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 30 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

5. Because defendant did not object to the admission of letters he wrote to the victim while in jail on the basis of the best evidence rule when the letters were admitted at trial, he failed to preserve the issue for review. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

6. Objection that evidence was "unsubstantiated" was insufficient to preserve a complaint that copies of an e-mail and allegedly obscene video were inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Varkonyi v. State, 276 S.W.3d 27, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3353 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

7. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

8. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

9. Best evidence rule did not apply where the complained-of photographs were not tendered for admission into evidence in lieu of a police officer's dash-cam video; the photographs merely supplemented, but did not alter, the substance of the dash-cam video. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : General Overview

10. In a harassment case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1003, a copy of a document over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 1002 objection because defendant did not raise a question of authenticity. Chehade v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2005).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

11. In borrowers' suit to contest a bank's right to foreclose on their home, the borrowers' motion to strike the bank's summary judgment evidence was properly denied because the best evidence rule did not apply to the transfer of assets from a predecessor to the loan servicer, because the bank was not attempting to prove the contents of a document; in light of the inferences that could be drawn from the conflicting testimony regarding whether a notice letter was sent, it was not an abuse of discretion to determine that the exhibit was admissible. Trimm v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 17 2014).

12. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the photographs, because the duplicate was a photograph, and nothing suggested that the photograph was an inaccurate duplicate of the original. Trotty v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6159 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 5 2014).

13. Evidence in the form of an affidavit and verified petition to the effect that a written notice to vacate and demand for possession was delivered by the lender to the borrowers on a certain date by U.S. mail was not within the best evidence rule and could be given without producing the document because the evidence was not used to prove the contents of the writing. Cantu v. Zar-Mat Props., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4928, 2014 WL 1879276 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 8 2014).

14. Reference by beneficiaries' attorney to a decedent's medical records while questioning the decedent's friend that certain records indicated the decedent was mentally incompetent did not violate the best evidence rule because the attorney referenced the materials to impeach the friend on his testimony that the decedent was mentally competent, not to provide further evidence of the records' content; the decedent had named the friend as the "payable on death" beneficiary under certain contracts. In the Estate of Minton, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1061, 2014 WL 354527 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 30 2014).

15. Best evidence rule did not apply where the complained-of photographs were not tendered for admission into evidence in lieu of a police officer's dash-cam video; the photographs merely supplemented, but did not alter, the substance of the dash-cam video. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

16. Appellant did not complain about the authenticity of the original recording, he complained that the evidence was nothing more than an altered copy of the original, but he did not allege the parts that were not accurate, and the trial court admitted a copy on hard drive of the backup files, and the admission of the video was not error. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9376 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2013).

17. In a divorce, it was not error to allow a wife to read a text message the wife received from the husband into the record because (1) the wife argued that no document of the message was obtainable, and the husband's response was not substantiated, and (2) the text message was not closely related to a controlling issue, so the message was exempt from the best evidence rule. Howell v. Howell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1991, 2013 WL 784542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 28 2013).

18. Witness's testimony concerning what he observed of the events as they took place, as shown on a closed-circuit television, was not testimony the depended upon or was regarding a videotape recording; therefore, the court was not persuaded by the claim that the trial court should have granted a motion to suppress pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Cox v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5380, 2012 WL 2692189 (Tex. App. Dallas July 9 2012).

19. Because defendant did not object to the admission of letters he wrote to the victim while in jail on the basis of the best evidence rule when the letters were admitted at trial, he failed to preserve the issue for review. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

20. There was no an objection on the grounds of best evidence, nor an objection that such testimony violated the parol evidence rule, and thus waiver occurred. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

21. Duplicate copy of a child victim's letter to Santa could properly have been admitted to the same extent as an original under Tex. R. Evid. 1002, 1003, because the authenticity of the original was not questioned. Cantu v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6658, 2011 WL 3667450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2011).

22. In a real estate commission dispute, the trial court did not err in overruling a Tex. R. Evid. 1002 best evidence objection and finding a copy admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1003 because authenticity was not disputed; rather, the clients contended that the document was not the parties' final agreement. Moreover, the copy was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1004 either as a replacement for a lost document or as a document in the possession of the objecting party. PMS Hospitality, Inc. v. OM Realty Fin. Co., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 630, 2011 WL 258694 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2011).

23. Affidavits were offered as predicates for the introduction of business records; they were not offered to prove the content of any writing or to contradict, vary, or add to the terms of any agreement, and the affidavits did not violate the parol evidence or best evidence rules, including under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Wood v. Pharia L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9819, 2010 WL 5060621 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

24. Trial court did not enter contradictory ruling by sustaining the objections to the affidavits on grounds that they were conclusory and certified or sworn copies of documents to which the affidavits refer were not attached to the affidavits, because whether affidavits attempted to establish the contents of a document and whether they contained conclusory statements were distinct issues. Hill v. Crowson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8924, 2009 WL 3858065 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 18 2009).

25. In a dissolution of marriage case, the trial court properly admitted evidence to establish the contents of a premarital agreement because, in its findings of fact and conclusion of law, the court found that the original was lost and the loss was not the result of any action by the wife, the proponent of the agreement. Jurek v. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

26. State Bar investigator's testimony that the original tape recording of an attorney's disciplinary hearing had been purged reflected that the original recordings were lost or destroyed within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 1004, and there was no evidence that the original recording was lost or destroyed in bad faith. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the written transcripts of the hearings despite the attorney's best evidence objection under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

27. In a disciplinary matter, a trial court did not err by admitting a written transcript of a state bar hearing, rather than admitting an audio recording, because the original recording was lost or destroyed under Tex. R. Evid. 1004. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

28. In an action in which a homebuilder sued a real estate developer for breach of contract, there was no merit to the homebuilder's claim that a provision that terminated the contract if the homebuilder recorded the contract of public record was void as a matter of public policy on the ground that the homebuilder would not have an adequate remedy under Texas law if it were contractually prevented from filing a lawsuit, and recording the contract in relation to that lawsuit, in order to enforce its right of specific performance; nothing in the Texas Rules of Evidence, specifically Tex. R. Evid. 1002, required the public recording of documents like the homebuilder had done when it filed the contract in the county deed records without the developer's permission in violation of the contractual provision, and, furthermore, the homebuilder could have maintained the confidentiality of the contract without publicly filing the contract and still sought remedy in court by either seeking an in camera inspection of the contract or having the trial court place the contract under seal. Classic Century, Inc. v. Deer Creek Estates, Inc., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6248 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 14 2008).

29. While the record on appeal contained a release from one oil and gas company in which that company surrenders all interest in one tract of land, but neither plaintiff mineral interest owners nor defendant well operator directed the court to where the record contained evidence of how the oil and gas company obtained its interest under the lease, to the extent the best evidence rule would require the introduction of the writing proving that interest, the operator waived any error by failing to object in the trial court under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Moore v. Jet Stream Invs., Ltd., 261 S.W.3d 412, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 168 Oil & Gas Rep. 661 (Tex.

App. Texarkana 2008).

30. Trial court acted within its discretion in finding that the original weapons were unavailable because they had corroded and degraded and replicas were thus necessary to show the jury the state of the guns at the time of the offense; the original weapons were admissible and relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to a material issue because the jury was charged with finding whether defendant committed aggravated assault using or exhibiting a deadly weapon, and by admitting the gun as demonstrative evidence, the trial court allowed the jury to see examples of the weapons used during the offenses; the demonstrative weapons were the same models as the original ones, had no inflammatory attributes, and the trial court properly advised the jury on this issue, and defendant's reliance on the Best Evidence Rule was misguided because it applies only to writings or documents and the rule did not apply to weapons. Bang v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7680 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 25 2007).

31. Business record exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 is an exception to the general rule prohibiting hearsay and Tex. R. Evid. 1006 is more properly viewed as an exception to the best evidence rule. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

32. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling objections to evidence submitted by a developer where the best evidence rule had been satisfied because the plats for the overall property in question were already in evidence; thus, the complained of statements were not hearsay because they were based on information already in evidence. DeSoto Wildwood Dev., Inc. v. City of Lewisville, 184 S.W.3d 814, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

33. In a dispute regarding impact fees, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling an evidentiary objection to affidavit testimony; because neither party was attempting to prove the contents of a deed or deeds, the best evidence rule did not apply. Desoto Wildwood Dev., Inc. v. City of Lewisville, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8913 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 27 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 184 S.W.3d 814, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

34. In a harassment case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1003, a copy of a document over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 1002 objection because defendant did not raise a question of authenticity. Chehade v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2005).

35. In a theft case, the admission into evidence of photographs made from a security videotape was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1001, 1002, 1003. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 463 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 21 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3, 2005).

36. In a theft case where defendant attempted to switch price tags with a different item, photographs of the stolen item were properly admitted as they were not admitted to prove the contents of a writing; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the best evidence rule did not apply. Martin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9095 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 13 2004).

37. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1002 and 1004(a), because some certificates of deposit were unavailable since the bank had destroyed them after they had been cashed, an "exemplar" CD was admitted. A bank employee testified and authenticated that document. Phillips v. Ivy, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7539 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 18 2004).

38. Handwritten annotations on a promissory note, which indicated the dates on which additional loans were made and was admitted into evidence, did not add to the terms of the note because, under the note, 20 percent interest was being charged and the ex-boyfriend testified that he loaned the additional amounts interest-free to the ex-girlfriend. Pena v. Hilliard, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7186 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2002).

39. Even if a trial court erred in admitting a promissory note that had handwritten annotations on it that indicated the dates on which additional loans were made, any error was harmless as the ex-girlfriend testified that she signed the promissory note and was indebted to the ex-boyfriend for the amount evidenced by the note. Pena v. Hilliard, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7186 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 9 2002).

Family Law : Marital Duties & Rights : Property Rights : Premarital Agreements : General Overview

40. In a dissolution of marriage case, the trial court properly admitted evidence to establish the contents of a premarital agreement because, in its findings of fact and conclusion of law, the court found that the original was lost and the loss was not the result of any action by the wife, the proponent of the agreement. Jurek v. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

Legal Ethics : Sanctions : Disciplinary Proceedings : Hearings

41. State Bar investigator's testimony that the original tape recording of an attorney's disciplinary hearing had been purged reflected that the original recordings were lost or destroyed within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 1004, and there was no evidence that the original recording was lost or destroyed in bad faith. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the written transcripts of the hearings despite the attorney's best evidence objection under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

42. In a disciplinary matter, a trial court did not err by admitting a written transcript of a state bar hearing, rather than admitting an audio recording, because the original recording was lost or destroyed under Tex. R. Evid. 1004. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Banking Law : Consumer Protection : Credit Card Agreements : General Overview

1. In a collections case brought by the purchaser of credit card debt, it was proper under Tex. R. Evid. 1003 to admit copies of the documents used to accomplish the sale of the debtor's account from the lender to an intermediary purchaser, and then to plaintiff purchaser. The debtor did not question the authenticity of the documents reflecting the sale of his account. Nice v. Dodeka, L.L.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8922, 2010 WL 4514174 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 10 2010).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : Affidavits

2. In borrowers' suit to contest a bank's right to foreclose on their home, the borrowers' motion to strike the bank's summary judgment evidence was properly denied because the best evidence rule did not apply to the transfer of assets from a predecessor to the loan servicer, because the bank was not attempting to prove the contents of a document; in light of the inferences that could be drawn from the conflicting testimony regarding whether a notice letter was sent, it was not an abuse of discretion to determine that the exhibit was admissible. Trimm v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 17 2014).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Records on Appeal

3. In a divorce proceeding, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the withdrawal from the record of one of the children's passports seven days before the judgment became final; the husband did not inform the appellate court whether there was a proper motion to substitute a duplicate original, either orally or in writing, or whether the action was sua sponte by the trial court. Thomas v. Robert, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1149 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 15 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

4. Because defendant did not object to the admission of letters he wrote to the victim while in jail on the basis of the best evidence rule when the letters were admitted at trial, he failed to preserve the issue for review. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

5. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence a duplicate recording of the meeting rather than the original because the captain testified that the CD was an exact duplicate of the minicassette, defendant never questioned the authenticity of the original recording at trial, and defense counsel conceded that she never compared the original to the CD even though the original was made available to her. Milton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7592, 2011 WL 4361482 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2011).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

6. Defendant had not established that copies of two different checks that were allegedly forged and presented by him at two different banks were inadmissible as duplicates because there was no evidence that would raise a question about whether the checks were what the State claimed them to be, and reasonable jurors thus could not disagree about whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant, as the State alleged. Moreover, the potentially unique probative value of the original checks went to the issues of whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant and whether the checks were forgeries, and defendant had admitted both of those facts. Duncan v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4678, 2014 WL 1788173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2014).

7. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

8. In a theft case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs from a surveillance camera's videotape as they were sufficiently authenticated as to be reliable evidence: defendant did not attack the authenticity of the original videotape and raised no substantive concerns as to the authenticity of the photos, defendant did not assert that the photos had been tampered with or reflected anything other than what the original videotape showed, and an employee testified that he viewed the surveillance tape almost immediately after the burglary was discovered and that the photos were fair and accurate representations of what he saw on the videotape. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3 2005).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

9. Best evidence rule did not apply where the complained-of photographs were not tendered for admission into evidence in lieu of a police officer's dash-cam video; the photographs merely supplemented, but did not alter, the substance of the dash-cam video. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

10. In a theft trial, there was no error in admitting a videotape put together by a store's loss prevention officer from numerous surveillance cameras. Tex. R. Evid. 1003 did not apply to the argument that the video was edited. Massey v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5284, 2011 WL 2698608 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2011).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : General Overview

11. In a harassment case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1003, a copy of a document over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 1002 objection because defendant did not raise a question of authenticity. Chehade v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2005).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

12. In borrowers' suit to contest a bank's right to foreclose on their home, the borrowers' motion to strike the bank's summary judgment evidence was properly denied because the best evidence rule did not apply to the transfer of assets from a predecessor to the loan servicer, because the bank was not attempting to prove the contents of a document; in light of the inferences that could be drawn from the conflicting testimony regarding whether a notice letter was sent, it was not an abuse of discretion to determine that the exhibit was admissible. Trimm v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 17 2014).

13. Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the photographs, because the duplicate was a photograph, and nothing suggested that the photograph was an inaccurate duplicate of the original. Trotty v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6159 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 5 2014).

14. Defendant had not established that copies of two different checks that were allegedly forged and presented by him at two different banks were inadmissible as duplicates because there was no evidence that would raise a question about whether the checks were what the State claimed them to be, and reasonable jurors thus could not disagree about whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant, as the State alleged. Moreover, the potentially unique probative value of the original checks went to the issues of whether the checks were the actual checks presented by defendant and whether the checks were forgeries, and defendant had admitted both of those facts. Duncan v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4678, 2014 WL 1788173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2014).

15. Best evidence rule did not apply where the complained-of photographs were not tendered for admission into evidence in lieu of a police officer's dash-cam video; the photographs merely supplemented, but did not alter, the substance of the dash-cam video. Hurst v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12376, 2013 WL 5526226 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 3 2013).

16. Appellant did not complain about the authenticity of the original recording, he complained that the evidence was nothing more than an altered copy of the original, but he did not allege the parts that were not accurate, and the trial court admitted a copy on hard drive of the backup files, and the admission of the video was not error. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9376 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2013).

17. Because defendant did not object to the admission of letters he wrote to the victim while in jail on the basis of the best evidence rule when the letters were admitted at trial, he failed to preserve the issue for review. Piasecki v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3927, 2012 WL 1795136 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 16 2012).

18. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence a duplicate recording of the meeting rather than the original because the captain testified that the CD was an exact duplicate of the minicassette, defendant never questioned the authenticity of the original recording at trial, and defense counsel conceded that she never compared the original to the CD even though the original was made available to her. Milton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7592, 2011 WL 4361482 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2011).

19. Lender's tax liens were enforceable because verified copies were recorded in lieu of originals. Genesis Tax Loan Servs. v. Kothmann, 339 S.W.3d 104, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 359, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 988 (Tex. 2011).

20. In a real estate commission dispute, the trial court did not err in overruling a Tex. R. Evid. 1002 best evidence objection and finding a copy admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1003 because authenticity was not disputed; rather, the clients contended that the document was not the parties' final agreement. Moreover, the copy was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1004 either as a replacement for a lost document or as a document in the possession of the objecting party. PMS Hospitality, Inc. v. OM Realty Fin. Co., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 630, 2011 WL 258694 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2011).

21. Debtor argued that a copy of a contract was not admissible because it was not a duplicate as required by Tex. R. Evid. 1003, but Tex. R. Evid. 1001(d) defined duplicate as a counterpart produced by means that accurately reproduced the original; even though the copy was partially cut off, most of the contract was readily discernible and the copy accurately reproduced enough of the original contract that one could not reasonably doubt it was a true copy of the original. Wyatt v. Capital One Auto Fin., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 563, 71 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (CBC) 8 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 29 2010).

22. Because defendant did not question the authenticity of the original currency, the duplicate copies of the currency offered in evidence were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1003. Rios v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8737, 2009 WL 3766341 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2009), mem. op.

23. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting video recordings as duplicates of the original, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 1003. Henley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3653, 2009 WL 1464247 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2009).

24. Resident and his wife contended that 911 records were competent summary judgment proof under case law and Tex. R. Evid. 902, but they did not state that the records obtained were true and correct copies of original documents; furthermore, the Texas Rules of Evidence and summary-judgment practice treat public records differently from private records and though Tex. R. Evid. 1003 and 1004(d) recognize that a "duplicate" of the original is admissible to the same extent as the original when the original of a document is not available, Tex. R. Evid. 1003 does not apply when, as here, its authenticity is questioned. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

25. Owner contended that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the owner's version of the contract that was properly authenticated and admsisible under Tex. R. Evid. 1003, 1004, however, the contractor objected and the parties agreed that the contract contained the terms relevant to the challenged rulings on appeal; even if the trial court erred in excluding the owner's version of the contract, the owner failed to show that the exclusion probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Stonehill-PRM WC I, L.P. v. Chasco Constructors, Ltd., L.L.P., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1019, 2009 WL 349136 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 11 2009).

26. Appellate court overruled the owner's assertion that the trial court erred in admitting the lease because it failed to comply with the statute of frauds, because the owner did not raise any question on the authenticity of the duplicate of the original lease or why admission of a duplicate would be unfair, and the description of the leased premises was sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. Woodmark Austin Ltd. P'ship v. Coinamatic, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9672 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 11 2007).

27. Trial court acted within its discretion in finding that the original weapons were unavailable because they had corroded and degraded and replicas were thus necessary to show the jury the state of the guns at the time of the offense; the original weapons were admissible and relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to a material issue because the jury was charged with finding whether defendant committed aggravated assault using or exhibiting a deadly weapon, and by admitting the gun as demonstrative evidence, the trial court allowed the jury to see examples of the weapons used during the offenses; the demonstrative weapons were the same models as the original ones, had no inflammatory attributes, and the trial court properly advised the jury on this issue, and defendant's reliance on the Best Evidence Rule was misguided because it applies only to writings or documents and the rule did not apply to weapons. Bang v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7680 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 25 2007).

28. In a divorce proceeding, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the withdrawal from the record of one of the children's passports seven days before the judgment became final; the husband did not inform the appellate court whether there was a proper motion to substitute a duplicate original, either orally or in writing, or whether the action was sua sponte by the trial court. Thomas v. Robert, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1149 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 15 2007).

29. In a harassment case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1003, a copy of a document over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 1002 objection because defendant did not raise a question of authenticity. Chehade v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1962 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 16 2005).

30. In a theft case, the admission into evidence of photographs made from a security videotape was permissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1001, 1002, 1003. Benford v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 463 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 21

2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 840 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 3, 2005).

31. Lender's evidence was sufficient to support summary judgment as the loan documents attached were true and correct copies of the records pertaining to the debtor's accounts. Dennis v. Scil Tex., Inc., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1948, 2014 WL 700783 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 20 2014).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : Collection : Tax Liens

32. Lender's tax liens were enforceable because verified copies were recorded in lieu of originals. Genesis Tax Loan Servs. v. Kothmann, 339 S.W.3d 104, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 359, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 988 (Tex. 2011).

2. In a dissolution of marriage case, the husband did not preserve his objection to the admission of a premarital agreement because, at trial, the husband specifically referred the court to Tex. R. Evid.1004(e), not Rule 1004(a). The trial objections based on relevance, "controlling matters," and on Rule 1004(e) were different from the argument raised on appeal, and therefore, the issue was waived. Jurek v. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Search Warrants : Probable Cause : General Overview

3. Based upon the four-corners test, probable cause existed for the issuance of a search warrant for defendant's residence where, based upon a narcotics officer's affidavit, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that methamphetamine and other items used in its manufacture would be found at the suspected place; the officer's testimony that he had sworn to the affidavit before a magistrate and that he and the magistrate had signed it, and that, other than his missing signatures, the affidavit introduced into evidence was identical to the original, supported the admission of the documents into evidence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid.1004, and evidence obtained in good faith pursuant to a search warrant was admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23(b) even if the officer had failed to sign the affidavit. McCormick v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1619 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 1 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

4. 6. In borrowers' suit to contest a bank's right to foreclose on their home, the borrowers' motion to strike the bank's summary judgment evidence was properly denied because the best evidence rule did not apply to the transfer of assets from a predecessor to the loan servicer, because the bank was not attempting to prove the contents of a document; in light of the inferences that could be drawn from the conflicting testimony regarding whether a notice letter was sent, it was not an abuse of discretion to determine that the exhibit was admissible. Trimm v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 17 2014).

7. Copies of two different checks that were allegedly forged and presented by defendant at two different banks were admissible because the State established that the original checks had been lost or destroyed, and defendant never asserted or attempted to prove that the State, as the proponent of the evidence, lost or destroyed the original checks in bad faith; therefore, defendant had not established that the copies were inadmissible as "other evidence" of the original checks. Duncan v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4678, 2014 WL 1788173 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 1 2014).

8. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the decedent's 1993 income tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit affirmed that the copy of the tax return was an exact duplicate of the original return which had been submitted to the Internal Revenue Service. Valdez v. Hollenbeck, 410 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

9. Defendant's convictions for aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a child were proper because the admission of an edited interview was appropriate. Nothing in the appellate record in indicated that the original recording was destroyed by the State, that it was destroyed in bad faith, or that its contents would have been favorable to defendant. Billings v. State, 399 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1423, 2013 WL 607699 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 14 2013).

10. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

13. In a dissolution of marriage case, the trial court properly admitted evidence to establish the contents of a premarital agreement because, in its findings of fact and conclusion of law, the court found that the original was lost and the loss was not the result of any action by the wife, the proponent of the agreement. Jurek v. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

15. No sponsoring witness vouched for the authenticity of records, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Xiao Yu Zhong v. Sunblossom Gardens, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3010, 2009 WL 1162213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 30 2009).

16. State Bar investigator's testimony that the original tape recording of an attorney's disciplinary hearing had been purged reflected that the original recordings were lost or destroyed within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 1004, and there was no evidence that the original recording was lost or destroyed in bad faith. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the written transcripts of the hearings despite the attorney's best evidence objection under Tex. R. Evid. 1002. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

17. Owner contended that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the owner's version of the contract that was properly authenticated and admsisible under Tex. R. 18. In a disciplinary matter, a trial court did not err by admitting a written transcript of a state bar hearing, rather than admitting an audio recording, because the original recording was lost or destroyed under Tex. R. Evid. 1004. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

19. Where the heirs claimed title to a portion of Padre Island alleging that a deed conveying the property was fraudulent, the trustee defending the suit provided a copy of a translated deed showing that the conveyance was valid; the statements in the translated deed were competent to prove the facts stated therein. The heirs did not challenge the authenticity of the copy from the county deed records, and the best evidence rule did not apply to originals located outside Texas under Tex. R. Evid. 1004(c). Kerlin v. Arias, 274 S.W.3d 666, 2008 Tex. LEXIS 992, 52 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 103 (Tex. 2008).

20. Based upon the four-corners test, probable cause existed for the issuance of a search warrant for defendant's residence where, based upon a narcotics officer's affidavit, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that methamphetamine and other items used in its manufacture would be found at the suspected place; the officer's testimony that he had sworn to the affidavit before a magistrate and that he and the magistrate had signed it, and that, other than his missing signatures, the affidavit introduced into evidence was identical to the original, supported the admission of the documents into evidence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid.1004, and evidence obtained in good faith pursuant to a search warrant was admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23(b) even if the officer had failed to sign the affidavit. McCormick v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1619 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 1 2006).

21. No evidence summary judgment rendered in favor of the estate administrator was reversed and remanded because the claimant's affidavit provided more than a scintilla of evidence that the trust agreement was lost, thus "other evidence" was admissible to prove the contents of the trust agreement, and the evidence raised a genuine issue of material fact on the question of whether the claimant was the beneficiary of the purported trust agreement, and whether the object of the purported trust was to provide for the claimant's welfare; a few days after the decedent's death, the claimant observed the trust document on the kitchen counter in the decedent's home, and the claimant stated in her affidavit that the trust document indicated that certain real property and personal property, described in schedules A and B, were held in trust for the claimant's benefit. In re Estate of Berger, 174 S.W.3d 845, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6987 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

22. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1002 and 1004(a), because some certificates of deposit were unavailable since the bank had destroyed them after they had been cashed, an "exemplar" CD was admitted. A bank employee testified and authenticated that document. Phillips v. Ivy, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7539 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 18 2004).

Family Law : Marital Duties & Rights : Property Rights : Premarital Agreements : General Overview

23. In a dissolution of marriage case, the trial court properly admitted evidence to establish the contents of a premarital agreement because, in its findings of fact and conclusion of law, the court found that the original was lost and the loss was not the result of any action by the wife, the proponent of the agreement. Jurek v. Couch-Jurek, 296 S.W.3d 864, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 23 2009).

Rule 1005 Copies of Public Records to Prove Content

The proponent may use a copy to prove the content of an official record - or of a document that was recorded or filed in a public office as authorized by law - if these conditions are met: the record or document is otherwise admissible; and the copy is certified as correct in accordance with Rule 902(4) or is testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. If no such copy can be obtained by reasonable diligence, then the proponent may use other evidence to prove the content.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Standards : General Overview

1. Because the trespass-to-try-title rules did not require the joinder of every person claiming ownership in the property; there was no error in the trial court's entering a final summary judgment for the 1/6 interest in the property in the absence of other co-tenants. The motion for summary judgments was properly based on certified public records on file at the time of the hearing.. Beeler v. Fuqua, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7747 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Forfeitures

2. In a forfeiture hearing, because the certified copy of the bail bond was a self-authenticated public record, no further authentication was required; additionally, the surety's hearsay objection failed because a public record fell under the hearsay exception. Thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the bail bond into evidence as a public record. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

3. Trial court did not err in admitting a certified copy of a bail bond into evidence as a public record. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1005, a copy of a public record, such as a bail bond, was admissible in place of an original where the copy is certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6377 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

4. Trial court properly refused to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201 of public record documents that were not certified and were for informational purposes only, given that Tex. R. Evid. 1005 provided that the contents of official public records could be proven by a certified copy. Verizon California, Inc. v. Douglas, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1622 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 2, 2006).

5. Trial court did not err in admitting a certified copy of a bail bond into evidence as a public record. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1005, a copy of a public record, such as a bail bond, was admissible in place of an original where the copy is certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6377 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

6. Authenticity of a copy of a bail bond admitted into evidence was shown both because it was a certified copy of an official record and because the deputy district clerk compared it to the bond contained within the clerk's file while testifying. The copy of the bond was therefore admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) and Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Guiles v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 675, 2013 WL 257368 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 24 2013).

7. In a case in which defendant was convicted of burglary of a building under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 30.02(a)(1), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting four exhibits, pen packets, because the exhibits were certified as required by Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.09, § 8(b) and were therefore self-authenticated. Further, Tex. R. Evid. 1005 allowed the contents of public records to be proved by certified copies. Lambert v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1785, 2010 WL 851416 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 11 2010).

8. In a forfeiture hearing, because the certified copy of the bail bond was a self-authenticated public record, no further authentication was required; additionally, the surety's hearsay objection failed because a public record fell under the hearsay exception. Thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the bail bond into evidence as a public record. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 11 2005).

9. Where a bail bond was certified in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 902, the bond was self-authenticating and the trial court did not err in admitting it into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6619 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 22 2004).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

10. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the decedent's 1993 income tax return into evidence because the certified public accountant's affidavit affirmed that the copy of the tax return was an exact duplicate of the original return which had been submitted to the Internal Revenue Service. Valdez v. Hollenbeck, 410 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

11. Authenticity of a copy of a bail bond admitted into evidence was shown both because it was a certified copy of an official record and because the deputy district clerk compared it to the bond contained within the clerk's file while testifying. The copy of the bond was therefore admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 902(4) and Tex. R. Evid. 1005. Guiles v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 675, 2013 WL 257368 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 24 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : General Overview

12. Because the trespass-to-try-title rules did not require the joinder of every person claiming ownership in the property; there was no error in the trial court's entering a final summary judgment for the 1/6 interest in the property in the absence of other co-tenants. Rule 1006 Summaries to Prove Content

The proponent may use a summary, chart, or calculation to prove the content of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs that cannot be conveniently examined in court. The proponent must make the originals or duplicates available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place. And the court may order the proponent to produce them in court.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

1. Duplicate copy of a child victim's letter to Santa could properly have been admitted to the same extent as an original under Tex. R. Evid. 1002, 1003, because the authenticity of the original was not questioned. Cantu v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6658, 2011 WL 3667450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2011).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Summaries

2. Defendant's conviction for continuous sexual assault of a child under the age of 14 was appropriate even though the trial court erred in admitting a chart stating a timeline of the sexual assault incidents testified to by the complainant because the error was harmless. The jury heard testimony from the complainant regarding the incidents of abuse summarized on the chart and defendant did not argue that the chart was inaccurate or misleading. Castillo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 200, 2014 WL 61035 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 8 2014).

3. In an action involving a dispute over a fee-splitting agreement between two lawyers, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the Summary of Damages into evidence. The appellee attorney did not complain that the underlying data was not admissible or had not been produced in discovery and he even examined the appellant attorney about it and read a portion of the Summary of Damages in trial before appellant offered it as evidence. Shaw v. Lemon, 427 S.W.3d 536, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3585, 2014 WL 1407727 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 2 2014).

4. Exhibit which consisted of numerous payout calculations, as business records, should not have been excluded as summaries of business records compiled for trial purposes, because these payout calculations set forth drilling and completion costs as well as operating revenues and expenses. Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. v. Healey, L.P., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3934 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 28 2013).

5. Showing that a summary was shown to be a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) is not necessary under Tex. R. Evid. 1006; the rule merely requires the contents of voluminous writings to be otherwise admissible. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

6. Witness's testimony proved that the underlying documents were otherwise admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1006, and his testimony showed that the records were made when the fines in question were incurred; while the testimony did not specifically track the language of the statute, the overall context, that the records were generated at a regular intervals and at or near the time the fines were incurred, and that the witness was a co-custodian of the records and knew the summary to be a true representation of the records, was sufficient to establish the admissibility of the records. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

7. Because a witness served as trustee before the damage summary was created, he was familiar with the amounts, and he testified that he reviewed the summary and it was an accurate representation, and if believed, this was sufficient to establish the accuracy of the summary. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

8. Even though the trial court did not order the documents to be produced, a witness testified that all of the minutes of the meetings were there, and there was nothing to contradict this statement; because all aspects for admission of the summary were complied with under Tex. R. Evid. 1006, the trial court did not err in admitting the exhibit. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

9. Although the rule does not require that the person who prepared a written summary, chart, or other exhibit must testify, in most cases it would be difficult to authenticate such a summary without calling as a witness the person responsible for its preparation. Leander v. Fin & Feather Club, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 178, 2012 WL 75815 (Tex.

App. Texarkana Jan. 11 2012).

10. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting Petitioner's Exhibit 1 as the record included actual bills and payments in addition to the summaries and the weight and credibility to give evidence was at the discretion of the trial court. Montes v. Filley, 359 S.W.3d 260, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7142 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 31 2011).

11. During defendant's trial for capital murder, the court erred in admitting a chart prepared by the prosecutors into evidence because no witness testified before the jury that the exhibit accurately reflected the times indicated on the various video recordings that were in evidence. Estrada v. State, 352 S.W.3d 762, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6739 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 24 2011).

12. In light of case law, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 1006 in the admission of the chart of defendant's prior convictions was harmless, given that the chart identified the offense, date, date of conviction, and sentence, defendant admitted committing the offenses listed on the chart, and documents were introduced that allowed the jury to evaluate the accuracy of the chart; defendant was not harmed. Melvin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973, 2010 WL 1611072 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 21 2010).

13. Although, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 1006, exhibits did summarize account activity, they were in and of themselves business records and therefore admissible as such under Tex. R. Evid. 803; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by not ordering the State to produce the underlying documentation that would have been required if the records were summaries under Tex. R. Evid. 1006. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

14. Business record exception under Tex. R. Evid. 803 is an exception to the general rule prohibiting hearsay and Tex. R. Evid. 1006 is more properly viewed as an exception to the best evidence rule. Forkert v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 13 2007).

15. In defendant's capital murder case, the billing records for eleven cell phone numbers were properly admitted where the identification of the various telephone numbers with a particular person in the spreadsheets was not merely the State's interpretation of the billing records; instead, there was evidence linking each telephone number to the person identified, and although the supporting evidence was outside the summarized telephone records, that did not render the spreadsheets inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 1006. Johnson v. State, 208 S.W.3d 478, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2254 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

16. Exhibit showing the costs of improvement to divorcing parties' house over a six-year-period, which included payments for the garage construction for which receipts were kept, was not wrongly admitted based on the ex-husband's claim that it did not comply with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 1006 because Rule 1006 did not require that the underlying documents be admitted, only that they be admissible. The ex-husband did not argue to the trial court that the invoices for the garage were not admissible. Moroch v. Collins, 174 S.W.3d 849, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7359 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

17. In a child support modification case, the trial court did not err in admitting a summary of a father's bank deposits for his concessions business account and a table of child support calculations based on the family code's child support guidelines because the contents of voluminous, admissible writings could be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006. In re A.J.J., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3058 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 21 2005).

18. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006, as it was shown that the records were voluminous, were made available to the customers for inspection, and the underlying records were admissible as non-hearsay admissions of a party-opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2). C.M. Asfahl Agency v. Tensor, Inc., 135 S.W.3d 768, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 808 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

19. Tex. R. Evid. 1006 imposes three requirements for the admissibility of summaries of records that cannot conveniently be examined in court, as follows: the underlying records are (1) voluminous; (2) have been made available to the opponent for inspection; and (3) the underlying records are admissible. C.M. Asfahl Agency v. Tensor, Inc., 135 S.W.3d 768, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 808 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

20. In the State's action under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA) that alleged that appellants, a husband and wife who operated a business assisting Spanish speaking individuals with immigration matters, had counseled consumers without legal authorization or qualification, appellants raised no valid complaints regarding the admissibility of the evidence and the trial court's rulings thereon where an exhibit consisting of a summary of the more than 2,180 G-28 forms filed by the husband was itself a business record entitled to be treated as other business records, making Tex. R. Evid. 1006 inapplicable, and where the testimony of an intelligence research specialist with the Citizenship and Immigration Services Branch of the United States Department of Homeland Security established the necessary predicate required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the specialist testified that the exhibit was a business record made in the ordinary course of business at Citizenship and Immigration Services, made at or near the time his department received the G-28 forms, by a person with knowledge of the events being recorded; furthermore, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a previous client of appellants who was testifying for the State to answer when asked if she obtained her residency status because any testimony going to the gravity of the harm done by engaging in the prohibited act was irrelevant and inadmissible. Avila v. State, 252 S.W.3d 632, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

21. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 1006, as it was shown that the records were voluminous, were made available to the customers for inspection, and the underlying records were admissible as non-hearsay admissions of a party-opponent under Tex. Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

22. Where summaries of records were admitted of sales records in an action by an agency seeking recovery for commissions, and where the personal knowledge of those documents was established, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in admitting the summary exhibit pursuant to Tex. 23. In the State's action under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA) that alleged that appellants, a husband and wife who operated a business assisting Spanish speaking individuals with immigration matters, had counseled consumers without legal authorization or qualification, appellants raised no valid complaints regarding the admissibility of the evidence and the trial court's rulings thereon where an exhibit consisting of a summary of the more than 2,180 G-28 forms filed by the husband was itself a business record entitled to be treated as other business records, making Tex. 24. In a child-support determination, the mother failed to object, and thus waived appellate argument under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, with regard to the admissibility under Tex. R. Rule 1008 Functions of the Court and Jury

Ordinarily, the court determines whether the proponent has fulfilled the factual conditions for admitting other evidence of the content of a writing, recording, or photograph under Rule 1004 or 1005. But in a jury trial, the jury determines - in accordance with Rule 104(b) - any issue about whether:

(a) an asserted writing, recording, or photograph ever existed;

(b) another one produced at the trial or hearing is the original; or

(c) other evidence of content accurately reflects the content.

Rule 1009 Translating a Foreign Language Document

(a) Submitting a Translation.--A translation of a foreign language document is admissible if, at least 45 days before trial, the proponent serves on all parties:

(1)the translation and the underlying foreign language document; and

(2)a qualified translator's affidavit or unsworn declaration that sets forth the translator's qualifications and certifies that the translation is accurate.

(b) Objection.--When objecting to a translation's accuracy, a party should specifically indicate its inaccuracies and offer an accurate translation. A party must serve the objection on all parties at least 15 days before trial.

(c) Effect of Failing to Object or Submit a Conflicting Translation.--If the underlying foreign language document is otherwise admissible, the court must admit - and may not allow a party to attack the accuracy of - a translation submitted under subdivision (a) unless the party has:

(1)submitted a conflicting translation under subdivision (a); or

(2)objected to the translation under subdivision (b).

(d) Effect of Objecting or Submitting a Conflicting Translation.--If conflicting translations are submitted under subdivision (a) or an objection is made under subdivision (b), the court must determine whether there is a genuine issue about the accuracy of a material part of the translation. If so, the trier of fact must resolve the issue.

(e) Qualified Translator May Testify.--Except for subdivision (c), this rule does not preclude a party from offering the testimony of a qualified translator to translate a foreign language document.

(f) Time Limits.--On a party's motion and for good cause, the court may alter this rule's time limits.

(g) Court-Appointed Translator.--If necessary, the court may appoint a qualified translator. The reasonable value of the translator's services must be taxed as court costs.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

1. In a disciplinary matter, an alleged error under Tex. R. Evid. 1009 was not preserved for appellate review because a trial court sustained an objection to an English translation of a Spanish complaint filed by a client, but a lawyer failed to make an objection to the original document. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

2. Invited error doctrine estopped defendant from complaining on appeal about any perceived error concerning the admission of an audio recording of a Spanish translation of his statement, specifically, that it was not translated by a certified interpreter and that the record contained no affidavit setting out the qualifications of the interpreter and certifying that the translation was fair and accurate. Mijares v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7122 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 11 2013).

Evidence : Competency : Interpreters

3. Because the trial court reasonably could have determined that the officer had sufficient skill in translating Spanish and possessed adequate interpreting skills for the particular situation such that she could render an accurate English translation of the recording of her conversation with defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in implicitly determining that the officer was qualified to translate the recording and in admitting the recording. Castrejon v. State, 428 S.W.3d 179, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 772, 2014 WL 258757 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

4. Because the trial court reasonably could have determined that the officer had sufficient skill in translating Spanish and possessed adequate interpreting skills for the particular situation such that she could render an accurate English translation of the recording of her conversation with defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in implicitly determining that the officer was qualified to translate the recording and in admitting the recording. Castrejon v. State, 428 S.W.3d 179, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 772, 2014 WL 258757 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

5. Defendant's videotaped confession conducted in Spanish, and a transcribed English translation, were properly admitted because the requirements of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.30 and Tex. R. Evid. 1009 were met: there was an identified, official translator with qualifications listed in a sworn affidavit; there was nothing in the record to indicate that she was not available to testify; defendant did not object to her qualifications; and an oath was administered. Peralta v. State, 338 S.W.3d 598, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9436 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 30 2010).

6. Proponent of a recording in Spanish may rely on Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.30 and require that the interpreter be sworn, testify to his or her credentials, and certify that the translation is fair and accurate; alternatively, the proponent may comply with Tex. R. Evid. 1009(a). In that event, the proponent establishes admissibility if no objection is timely filed; in the event of conflicting translations served under Rule 1009(a) or if objections to another party's translation are served under Rule 1009(b), the trial court shall determine whether there is a genuine issue as to the accuracy of a material part of the translation to be resolved by the trial court; although not required by subsection (a), better practices dictate that the supporting affidavit should (1) establish the translator's identity; (2) itemize his or her credentials in sufficient detail; (3) identify the document or recording being translated; (4) demonstrate that the translator has been administered an oath; and (5) certify that the translation is fair and accurate; the court also recommended a limiting instruction. Peralta v. State, 338 S.W.3d 598, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9436 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 30 2010).

7. Fact that the State did not submit a written translation and affidavit of a qualified translator to defendant 45 days before trial did not preclude admission of a recording between defendant and the undercover officer posing as a prostitute because this rule did not require the contemporaneous admission of a written transcript of the exhibit being translated through live testimony of the officer. Castrejon v. State, 428 S.W.3d 179, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 772, 2014 WL 258757 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

8. Because no written English transcription of the audio recording was offered translating the Spanish on the recording between defendant and the officer into English, no affidavit from a qualified translator as to the authenticity of the translation was required. Castrejon v. State, 428 S.W.3d 179, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 772, 2014 WL 258757 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 23 2014).

10. 13. Fact that the State did not submit a written translation and affidavit of a qualified translator to defendant 45 days before trial did not preclude admission of a recording between defendant and the undercover officer posing as a prostitute because this rule did not require the contemporaneous admission of a written transcript of the exhibit being translated through live testimony of the officer. 17. In a divorce, an argument that it was error to admit a translation of a 911 call without providing the translation to opposing counsel 45 days before trial was waived because (1) counsel did not object at trial, and (2) nothing showed this violated the opposing party's fundamental rights. Howell v. Howell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1991, 2013 WL 784542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 28 2013).

18. Former president claimed that a translation of a letter was not admissible because the member did not comply with Tex. R. Evid. 1009, but there was no objection to the evidence nor was there a ruling by the trial court in excluding the evidence; any defects in the form of translation were waived. Hung Tan Phan v. An Dinh Le, 426 S.W.3d 786, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7693 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

19. Tex. R. Evid. 1009 concerns when a translated document must be admitted into trial and whether the accuracy of the translation can be submitted to the factfinder; it is not, then, a rule concerning the substance of the translated document. Hung Tan Phan v. An Dinh Le, 426 S.W.3d 786, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7693 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

20. Termination of the father's parental rights was proper because his argument that the initial return violated Tex. R. Evid. 1009(a) was without merit. Rule 1009 was a rule of evidence and he cited no cases in which R. 1009 required the translation of foreign returns of service into English, or that such a translation could not be done in an amended return while the trial court still had plenary power. In re Dc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1638, 2012 WL 682289

(Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

21. Where an interpreter translated a letter's contents to English and no translation was admitted into evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 1009(a) did not apply. Cantu v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6658, 2011 WL 3667450 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2011).

22. Trial court properly admitted a Spanish-speaking client's complaint filed with the State Bar in Spanish and excluded an English translation of the document based on the attorney's objection. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2009).

23. In a disciplinary matter, an alleged error under Tex. R. Evid. 1009 was not preserved for appellate review because a trial court sustained an objection to an English translation of a Spanish complaint filed by a client, but a lawyer failed to make an objection to the original document. Onwuteaka v. Comm'n for Lawyer Discipline, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).
