Tex. Evid. R. Order 15-001

Tex. Evid. R. Order 15-001

IN THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS

Misc. Docket No. 15-001

IN THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS

ORDERED that

1.By order dated November 19, 2014, in Misc. Docket No. 14-9232, the Supreme Court of Texas approved amendments to the Texas Rules of Evidence and invited public comment. After receiving public comments, the Supreme Court made revisions to the rules. This order incorporates those revisions and contains the final version of the rules. The amendments are effective April 1, 2015.

2.Except for the amendments to Rules 511 and 613, which include substantive amendments, these amendments comprise a general restyling of the Texas Rules of Evidence. They seek to make the rules more easily understood and to make style and terminology consistent throughout. The restyling changes are intended to be stylistic only.

The Restyling Project

Following a lengthy restyling process, the Federal Rules of Evidence were amended effective December 1, 2011. The Texas Rules of Evidence restyling project was initiated with the aim of keeping the Texas Rules as consistent as possible with Federal Rules, but without effecting any substantive change in Texas evidence law.

General Guidelines

Following the lead of the drafters of the restyled Federal Rules, the drafters of the restyled Texas Rules were guided in their drafting, usage, and style by Bryan Garner, Guidelines for Drafting and Editing Court Rules, Administrative Office of the United States Courts (1996) and Bryan Garner, Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage (2d ed. 1995).

Formatting Changes

Many of the changes in the restyled rules result from using format to achieve clearer presentations. The rules are broken down into constituent parts, using progressively indented subparagraphs with headings and substituting vertical for horizontal lists.

"Hanging indents" are used throughout. These formatting changes make the structure of the rules graphic and make the restyled rules easier to read and understand even when the words are not changed. Rules 103, 404(b), 606(b), and 612 illustrate the benefits of formatting changes.

Changes to Reduce Inconsistent, Ambiguous, Redundant, Repetitive, or Archaic Words

The restyled rules reduce the use of inconsistent terms that say the same thing in different ways. Because different words are presumed to have different meanings, inconsistent usage can result in confusion. The restyled rules reduce inconsistencies by using the same words to express the same meaning. For example, consistent expression is achieved by not switching between "accused" and "defendant" or between "party opponent" and "opposing party" or between the various formulations of civil and criminal action/case/proceeding.

The restyled rules minimize the use of inherently ambiguous words. For example, the word "shall" can mean "must," "may," or something else, depending on context. The restyled rules replace "shall" with "must," "may," or "should," depending on which one the context and established interpretation make correct in each rule.

The restyled rules minimize the use of redundant "intensifiers." These are expressions that attempt to add emphasis, but instead state the obvious and create negative implications for other rules. The absence of intensifiers in the restyled rules does not change their substantive meaning. See, e.g., Rule 602 (omitting "but need not").

The restyled rules also remove words and concepts that are outdated or redundant.

Rule Numbers

The restyled rules keep the same numbers to minimize the effect on research. Subdivisions have been rearranged within some rules to achieve greater clarity and simplicity.

3.The amendments to Rule 511 align Texas law on waiver of privilege by voluntary disclosure with Federal Rule of Evidence 502.

4.In response to public comments, the Court made the following changes to the version of the restyled rules proposed by Misc. Docket No. 14-9232.

a.The comment to Rule 509 has been revised to add the following sentence to the end of the comment: "Finally, reconciling the provisions of Rule 509 with the parts of Tex. Occ. Code ch. 159 that address a physician-patient privilege applicable to court proceedings is beyond the scope of the restyling project."

b.The comment to Rule 510 has been revised to add the following paragraph: "Tex. Health & Safety Code ch. 611 addresses confidentiality rules for communications between a patient and a mental-health professional and for the professional's treatment records. Many of these provisions apply in contexts other than court proceedings. Reconciling the provisions of Rule 510 with the parts of chapter 611 that address a mental-health-information privilege applicable to court proceedings is beyond the scope of the restyling project."

c.The comment to Rule 613 has been revised. The comment now reads: "The amended rule retains the requirement that a witness be given an opportunity to explain or deny (a) a prior inconsistent statement or (b) the circumstances or a statement showing the witness's bias or interest, but this requirement is not imposed on the examining attorney. A witness may have to wait until redirect examination to explain a prior inconsistent statement or the circumstances or a statement that shows bias. But the impeaching attorney still is not permitted to introduce extrinsic evidence of the witness's prior inconsistent statement or bias unless the witness has first been examined about the statement or bias and has failed to unequivocally admit it. All other changes to the rule are intended to be stylistic only."

d.The Court revised Rule 804(b)(1)(A)(i) to remove redundant language. The change is stylistic only.

e.The Court revised Rule 902(10)(B) to add the following sentence to the text of the rule: "The proponent may use an unsworn declaration made under penalty of perjury in place of an affidavit."

5.The Clerk is directed to:

a.file a copy of this order with the Secretary of State;

b.cause a copy of this order to be mailed to each registered member of the State Bar of Texas by publication in the Texas Bar Journal.

c.send a copy of this order to each elected member of the Legislature; and d.submit a copy of the order for publication in the Texas Register.

History

EDITOR'S NOTE. --

The Federal Rules of Evidence were amended effective December 1, 2011. In response to these amendments, the Texas Rules of Evidence restyling project was initiated with the aim of keeping the Texas Rules as consistent as possible with Federal Rules, but without effecting any substantive change in Texas evidence law. The Texas restyling project was designed to achieve clearer presentations, and reduce inconsistent, ambiguous, redundant, repetitive, or archaic words. By order dated November 19, 2014, in Misc. Docket No. 14-9232, the Supreme Court of Texas approved amendments to the Texas Rules of Evidence and invited public comment. On March 12, 2015, the Supreme Court issued an order in Misc. Docket No. 15-9048, with the final version of the restyled rules, effective April 1, 2015.

Comment to 2015 Restyling: The reference to "hierarchical governance" in former Rule 101(c) has been deleted as unnecessary. The textual limitation of former Rule 101(c) to criminal cases has been eliminated. Courts in civil cases must also admit or exclude evidence when required to do so by constitutional or statutory provisions or other rules that take precedence over these rules. Likewise, the title to former Rule 101(d) has been changed to more accurately indicate the purpose and scope of the subdivision.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : General Overview

1. At defendant's trial for the aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court erred because it refused to allow defendant to cross-examine the State's witnesses in violation of the Sixth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment regarding the complainant's sexual assault of his younger sister. The Texas Rules of Evidence and the Texas Family Code did not prevent impeachment by a juvenile adjudication, because Tex. R. Evid. 101(c) established that the Constitution of the United States controlled over a conflicting evidentiary rule or civil statute. Johnson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1515, 2013 WL 531079 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 14 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Forfeitures

2. In proceedings to finalize a forfeiture of two bail bonds, judicial notice could be taken, under the common law, of both the judgments nisi and the bonds; because Tex. R. Evid. 101 indicates that proceedings regarding bail are not covered by the rules of evidence, judicial notice in such cases does not have to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 201, although Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 22.10 provides that civil rules govern all proceedings in the trial court in a bond-forfeiture case following a judgment nisi. Kubosh v. State, 241 S.W.3d 60, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1563 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Hearings

3. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

4. In a driving while intoxicated case, because Tex. R. Evid. 702 did not apply to suppression hearings, a trial judge, in ruling on the admissibility of Light Detection and Ranging technology, was not required to hold a Rule 702 Kelly gatekeeping hearing to determine the reliability of that technology. Hall v. State, 297 S.W.3d 294, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1205 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

5. Rules of evidence did not apply in suppression hearings, Tex. R. Evid. 101(d)(1)(A); therefore, the failure to object to statements introduced at a suppression hearing did not operate to bar the issue from being argued on appeal. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6127 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 3 2005).

6. Assistance of counsel was not rendered ineffective by a failure to object to hearsay and leading questions at a suppression hearing. The Texas Rules of Evidence, with the exception of privileges, did not apply to suppression hearings. Piper v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7601 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 25 2004).

7. At the hearing on a motion to suppress, there was no error in admitting a police report that was unsigned and had no reliable indicia of authenticity or accuracy, into evidence where the rules of evidence, except as to privileges, did not apply. Mullins v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6970 (Tex. App. Tyler July 30 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Presentence Reports

8. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure's express statutory provision for presentence investigation reports in Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 9 governs over the Texas Rules of Evidence, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 101(c). Pierce v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4683 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 27 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : De Novo Review : Motions to Suppress

9. In a hearing on a motion to suppress, an officer's purported lack of independent knowledge of events surrounding an investigative stop did not make the officer incompetent as a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 601 in part because the rules of evidence (except for those rules concerning privileges) did not apply to suppression hearings. Belcher v. State, 244 S.W.3d 531, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9883 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

10. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure has no provision for a clergyman privilege; thus, Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 261.202 takes precedence over Tex. R. Evid. 505 in criminal prosecutions concerning child abuse. Almendarez v. State, 153 S.W.3d 727, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 449 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Evidence : Judicial Notice

11. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : General Overview

12. In proceedings to finalize a forfeiture of two bail bonds, judicial notice could be taken, under the common law, of both the judgments nisi and the bonds; because Tex. R. Evidence : Privileges : Clergy Communications

13. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure has no provision for a clergyman privilege; thus, Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 261.202 takes precedence over Tex. R. Evid. 505 in criminal prosecutions concerning child abuse. Almendarez v. State, 153 S.W.3d 727, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 449 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

14. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure's express statutory provision for presentence investigation reports in Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 9 governs over the Texas Rules of Evidence, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 101(c). Pierce v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4683 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 27 2002).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : Witness Qualifications

15. In a hearing on a motion to suppress, an officer's purported lack of independent knowledge of events surrounding an investigative stop did not make the officer incompetent as a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 601 in part because the rules of evidence (except for those rules concerning privileges) did not apply to suppression hearings. Belcher v. State, 244 S.W.3d 531, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9883 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

16. Error in excluding a prior inconsistent statement lacked the magnitude necessary to arise to constitutional error. The Texas Rules of Evidence did not categorically and arbitrarily prohibit defendant from offering otherwise relevant, reliable evidence necessary for his defense; the evidence did not form a vital core of defendant's defensive theory. Flowers v. State, 438 S.W.3d 96, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5899, 2014 WL 3953988 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 3 2014).

17. Texas Rules of Evidence did not compel the exclusion of the audio recording even if it was obtained in violation of attorney disciplinary rules. Tierone Converged Networks, Inc. v. Parman, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8380 (Tex. App. Dallas July 9 2013).

18. At defendant's trial for the aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court erred because it refused to allow defendant to cross-examine the State's witnesses in violation of the Sixth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment regarding the complainant's sexual assault of his younger sister. 19. Rules of evidence did not apply in suppression hearings, Tex. R. Evid. 101(d)(1)(A); therefore, the failure to object to statements introduced at a suppression hearing did not operate to bar the issue from being argued on appeal. Gonzalez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6127 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 3 2005).

20. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

21. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure has no provision for a clergyman privilege; thus, Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 261.202 takes precedence over Tex. R. Evid. 505 in criminal prosecutions concerning child abuse. Almendarez v. State, 153 S.W.3d 727, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 449 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

22. There was no abuse of discretion in excluding evidence that the victim threatened to falsely accuse her uncle because, given the corroborating evidence, the instant case did not involve a "heightened need" to impeach the victim's credibility with her threat to falsely accuse the uncle, and it was not entirely clear from the uncle's testimony that the victim threatened to accuse him of sexual assault as opposed to some other allegation; even if the trial court erred by not admitting the evidence, any error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because the uncle's testimony would have been cumulative of the evidence rejected by the jury, as its exclusion did not move the jury from a state of non-persuasion to one of persuasion on the issue of the victim's credibility. Hamrick v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4418 (Tex. App. El Paso May 13 2004).

23. Texas Code of Criminal Procedure's express statutory provision for presentence investigation reports in Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 9 governs over the Texas Rules of Evidence, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 101(c). Pierce v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4683 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 27 2002).

Rule 103 Rulings on Evidence

(a) Preserving a Claim of Error.--A party may claim error in a ruling to admit or exclude evidence only if the error affects a substantial right of the party and:

(1)if the ruling admits evidence, a party, on the record:

(A)timely objects or moves to strike; and

(B)states the specific ground, unless it was apparent from the context; or

(2)if the ruling excludes evidence, a party informs the court of its substance by an offer of proof, unless the substance was apparent from the context.

(b) Not Needing to Renew an Objection.--When the court hears a party's objections outside the presence of the jury and rules that evidence is admissible, a party need not renew an objection to preserve a claim of error for appeal.

(c) Court's Statement About the Ruling; Directing an Offer of Proof.--The court may make any statement about the character or form of the evidence, the objection made, and the ruling. The court must allow a party to make an offer of proof as soon as practicable. In a jury trial, the court must allow a party to make the offer outside the jury's presence and before the court reads its charge to the jury. At a party's request, the court must direct that an offer of proof be made in question-and-answer form. Or the court may do so on its own.

(d) Preventing the Jury from Hearing Inadmissible Evidence.--To the extent practicable, the court must conduct a jury trial so that inadmissible evidence is not suggested to the jury by any means.

(e) Taking Notice of Fundamental Error in Criminal Cases.--In criminal cases, a court may take notice of a fundamental error affecting a substantial right, even if the claim of error was not properly preserved.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Justiciability : Standing : General Overview

1. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease did not preserve by a proper objection any error regarding the lessee's alleged lack of standing to bring the suit; thus, any error as to lack of standing was waived. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

Civil Procedure : Pleading & Practice : Service of Process : Methods : General Overview

2. Bill of review was denied in a paternity case because a purported father waived his argument regarding substituted service under Tex. R. Civ. P. 106 based on statements that his attorney made to the trial court; further, due to the waiver, the issue relating to substituted service was not preserved for appellate review. Moreover, since actual notice was not required for substituted service to be effective, evidence regarding actual notice was not heard as it was not relevant and did not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Thomas v. Wheeler, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5617 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 29 2008).

Civil Procedure : Judicial Officers : Judges : Discretion

3. Where appellants urged that the district court violated their procedural and substantive due process rights by limiting them to one hour to present their case, where, at no point in the trial did appellants make an offer of proof concerning evidence excluded because of time constraints, the appellate court had nothing to review. Health Enrichment & Longevity Inst., Inc. v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5094 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6246 (Tex. App. Austin July 15, 2004).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Disclosures : Mandatory Disclosures

4. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of one expert because the subject matter of the testimony was not revealed under Tex. R. Civ. P. 194; the fact that the expert would have been offered for rebuttal was irrelevant, and there was no showing that the testimony of a State's witness was unanticipated; moreover, the patient did not raise the issue of good cause or seek a finding that there was no unfair surprise until a motion for a new trial, so it was untimely. In re Commitment of Marks, 230 S.W.3d 241, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5424 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Motions to Compel

5. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease failed to make an objection in the trial court as to the alleged date defect and discovery rule violation that one of lessee's exhibits was not created more than 30 days prior to trial as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 215.5 and waived error, and even if the lessor had made the proper objection, the trial court could have properly overruled it, because no discovery request was made for the exhibit as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 93. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

6. In a tenant's case alleging that her landlord refused to return her personal property, the landlord's objections to the tenant's summary judgment affidavit were sufficiently specific. The objections identified each sentence that was being objected to, stated the nature of the objection, and included citations to rules of civil procedure and evidence and to case law. Koch v. Griffith-Stroud Constr. & Leasing Co., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2549 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 23 2004).

Civil Procedure : Pretrial Matters : Motions in Limine : Appeals

7. Attorney's motion in limine was heard on the record and reargued when the successor-in-interest actually offered the exhibits for admission into evidence, which occurred after jury selection but before opening statements;

when the successor offered the exhibits and the trial judge asked for objections, at that point, the hearing became a hearing on the admissibility of the exhibits, and the attorney's objections to the exhibits were preserved. Thus, the attorney's complaints were not unreviewable. Houston v. Ludwick, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8415, 2010 WL 4132215 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 21 2010).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jurors : Selection : Voir Dire

8. During voir dire in a termination of parental rights case, a trial court's alleged limitation on questioning was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103 because an attorney did not give an explanation after the State's objection, but reworded the question and proceeded without further objection. In re C.S., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5481 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 12 2007).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : Requests for Instructions

9. Employer's contention that the trial court erred by failing to instruct the jury that damages in a negligence action could not arise from conduct that amounted to statutory sexual harassment was waived for appellate review because during the charge conference, the employer did not plainly make the trial court aware of its complaint. Waffle House, Inc. v. Williams, 314 S.W.3d 1, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 843, 100 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 451 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : General Overview

10. In a tax lien foreclosure suit, the tax lien holder was not estopped from recovering attorney fees at the rate of 15 percent under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 33.48; although the tax lien holder requested attorney fees as authorized by Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.06 et seq., that citation reasonably included Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.065(c), which provided that an assignee of a taxing authority was subrogated to all rights of the taxing authority, and the issue was not properly preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because an estoppel argument was not made to the trial court. JB Joyce, Ltd. v. Regions Fin. Corp., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7246 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 1 2005).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Damages : Punitive Damages

11. Where the reviewing court could not determine whether the objection made to the trial court was the same objection as on appeal, a civil defendant failed under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), to preserve a claim as to the trial court's definition of "malice," in a case involving punitive damages. Morrison v. Standerfer, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2152 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 25 2010).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Remands

12. Although a mother in a parental rights proceeding failed to preserve error on her objections to the reliability of the expert testimony presented during the proceeding because she did not file a written objection to the expert's testimony or object or ask any questions of the expert during the pretrial hearing, an appellate court held that it had broad discretion to remand in the interest of justice because the trial court had erred in overruling the father's objection to the expert opinion and that error was harmful, which made a new trial necessary. In re S.E.W., 168 S.W.3d 875, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3809 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

13. Issues were waived on review, because the dentist failed to appear and raise objection to the testimony of the board's expert witness, and the error concerning the dentist's employer could easily have been corrected had the dentist brought it to the board's attention but his motion for rehearing of the board's order raised no issue regarding the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the finding. Mcintosh v. Tex. State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2751, 2014 WL 931260 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 10 2014).

14. Patient's counsel made an offer of proof covering other areas of the doctor's testimony, but did not ask questions regarding the doctor's rate of error, and because the patient failed to include questions and elicit answers regarding the doctor's rates of error during his offers of proof, it could not be determined whether the exclusion of the evidence was harmful, and the patient's claim was not preserved. In re Commitment Lovings, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12927, 2013 WL 5658426 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

15. Husband did not assert that his constitutional complaint could be raised for the first time on appeal and he waived the issue for review and he failed to preserve the issue that he was not permitted to present specific evidence and ask specific questions of witnesses with an offer of proof or formal bill of exception, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); if the parties or the trial court did not agree with the contents of the bill, the rules provided a procedure for presenting the bill, Tex. R. Civ. P. 33.2(c)(2)(A)-(C). Lancaster v. Lancaster, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7708 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 25 2013).

16. Mother failed to preserve for review her contention that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding a psychologist's report from evidence because she never offered the report into evidence and there was nothing in the record showing that she made an offer of proof or a bill of exception. In the Interest of L.D.W., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6195 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 21 2013).

17. Objection on relevance grounds did not preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) as to an asserted Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) error. Helping Hands Home Care, Inc. v. Home Health of Tarrant County, Inc., 393 S.W.3d 492, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 820, 2013 WL 326319 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2013).

18. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review her claims that the trial court improperly admitted evidence, including expert testimony, because she failed to object to the evidence when it was presented during the trial as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. In re A.B.G., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 601, 2013 WL 257311 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

19. Mother waived on appeal her claim that the expert's testimony was not relevant, because she made no such objection at trial, nor did she move to strike any of the testimony. Mueller v. Bran, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 176, 2013 WL 123693 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 10 2013).

20. In a partition action, the appellant property owner's complain of the relevancy of the evidence was not preserved for review because the exhibit had already been admitted when the appellee property owner testified and appellant did not object to appellee's expert's testimony; the same or similar evidence that appellant complained of on appeal was admitted elsewhere in the trial without a relevance objection, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Williams v. Mai, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10513, 2012 WL 6644704 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2012).

21. Hearsay objection was not preserved for review, because appellants' counsel made only a general hearsay objection to the admission of the witness's testimony and did not object with specificity, despite the trial court's invitation to him to do so; nor did he obtain a definitive adverse ruling while the trial court was in a proper position to change its conditional ruling of admissibility and the claimant was in a position to offer other testimony or to subpoena the witness to testify. Tryco Enters. v. Robinson, 390 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7810, 2012 WL 4021126 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 13 2012).

22. In a case involving a forum selection clause, although two guarantors made a number of objections to an affidavit in an appellate brief, none of the objections were made at a hearing. Therefore, the issues were overruled. Chaseekhalili v. Cinemacar Leasing, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6617 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2012).

23. At the hearing on a motion for closure of the estate and approval of the inventory, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to hear testimony from appellee estate administrator and his counsel. Because appellant estate beneficiary did not make an offer of proof of the substance of the evidence he hoped to elicit, he did not preserve the error for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), (b). In re Estate of Denton, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6212, 2012 WL 3063845 (Tex. App. Eastland July 26 2012).

25. Daughter did not claim that she intended to demonstrate that the signature on the deed was not her mother's, and there was no dispute that the signature on the notarized deed belonged to the decedent; instead, the only issue at trial was whether the decedent had the mental capacity to sign the deed. In re Estate of Johnson, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6243, 2011 WL 3503188 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 11 2011).

26. Error was preserved for review, because objections to evidence offered out of the jury's presence would be deemed to apply to such evidence when admitted without the necessity of repeating the objection. Schultz v. Lester, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2011 WL 3211271 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2011).

27. Trial court's explanation did not indicate approval of the State's argument, indicate disbelief in the defense's position, or diminish the credibility of the defense's approach; because the inmate did not object to the trial court's explanation, he waived his complaint. In re Frazier, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4896 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 30 2011).

28. Husband's complaint was not preserved for review where although he contended the trial court prevented him from presenting evidence of the wife's alleged adultery, the husband did not identify what additional evidence he was prevented from presenting, and he made no offer of proof or bill of exception for the appellate court to review. Ismik v. Ibrahimbas, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4540 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 16 2011).

29. Insurer failed to preserve error with regard to its appellate issues, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), as it made its arguments against setting a hearing on attorney's fees, not against actually awarding the employee attorney's fees; the insurer did not inform the court that it had additional evidence to put on and objections to make. Am. Cas. Co. v. Neuwirth, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4069, 2011 WL 2139121 (Tex. App. Austin May 26 2011).

30. Because appellant did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), obtain an adverse ruling on the admissibility of evidence, or otherwise make a record of the proposed evidence by a bill of exception, he failed to preserve his complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 that the trial court erred in excluding his testimony concerning a request to change his child's surname. In re Interest of R.F., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2373 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 31 2011).

31. In a commercial dispute, the seller waived his challenge to the trial court's ruling on deposition testimony in which he asserted his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination by withdrawing the proffered testimony. The issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A); Tex.R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Ferro v.

Dinicolantonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 955, 2011 WL 494741 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

32. In a dispute between a condominium association and a unit owner, because the owner failed to object or make an offer of proof, evidentiary issues were waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Bosch v. Cedar Vill. Townhomes Homeowners Ass'n, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 804, 2011 WL 346317 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 3 2011).

33. In the insureds' appeal of a judgment entered in favor of the insurer, the court held that: (1) the insurer's expert did not admit that his testimony was speculative; (2) to the extent that the insureds challenged the expert's qualifications to testify regarding roof damage or that his opinion was not reliable, the complaint was waived because there was no timely objection to his qualifications or the reliability of his testimony; and (3) the expert's testimony was based on his training and 28 years of experience. Patel v. Nautilus Ins. Co., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2011 WL 345967 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 28 2011).

34. Claimant failed to show that the trial court erred by admitting irrelevant evidence, because the issue was not preserved for review, when the claimant did not object at trial to the dealership's first exhibit, the claimant objected to the dealership's second exhibit, but the objection was based on hearsay rather than relevance, and the claimant did not identify on appeal any other specific evidence that should not have been admitted. Opuiyo v. Houston Auto M. Imps., Ltd., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 58, 2011 WL 61853 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 6 2011).

35. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

36. In a child custody case, because a father failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) concerning the proposed testimony from his daughter, an issue relating to the exclusion of her testimony was not properly preserved for appellate review. Further, the father's comment to the trial court was not a sufficient burden of proof. Conn v. Rhodes, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6587, 2009 WL 2579577 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

37. In a civil commitment case involving a sexually violent predator, an alleged error relating to a decision to allow experts to testify regarding a patient's truthfulness was not preserved for appellate review because it did not appear that he made an objection at trial. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

38. In a trust dispute, a grandson did not preserve his complaint regarding the exclusion of the testimony of a witness because he did not file an offer of proof or follow the procedures relating to a formal bill of exceptions. Cooper v. Cochran, 288 S.W.3d 522, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2522 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 9 2009).

39. In a divorce case, a former husband failed to preserve an alleged error relating to child support because he did not bring to a trial court's attention a discrepancy between the oral pronouncement of child support and the amount that he was ordered to pay in both the original and corrected decrees. Further, he did not challenge the finding that his net monthly income was $ 6,000, and the $ 1,500 child support amount awarded in the original and corrected decrees was consistent with the guidelines for that income amount. Beckner v. Beckner, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 759, 2009 WL 279485 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

40. Trial judges are not required to adopt the methods of Sherlock Holmes and divine without written or oral guidance as to where, when, why, and how an expert's report is conclusory. Therefore, in a health care liability case, an alleged error was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because a doctor's objection before a trial court was that an expert report was factually inaccurate; however, on appeal, he acknowledged that he was not raising a factual inaccuracy argument. Plemons v. Harris, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 145, 2009 WL 51290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

41. In a negligence suit, the intervenors second objection to a doctor's expert testimony referred to the general violation of a motion in limine and was non-specific as to the basis of their objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Because intervenors did not identify the basis of their objection and there was no record of the trial court's placing any limitations on the expert's testimony, the intervenor's objection was insufficient and waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Sinegaure v. Bally Total Fitness Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9435 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

42. In a trust dispute, a grandson did not preserve his complaint regarding the exclusion of the testimony of a witness because he did not file an offer of proof or follow the procedures relating to a formal bill of exceptions.

43. In a termination of parental rights case, the father failed to preserve for appellate review his arguments that the continuation of the trial in his absence infringed upon his constitutional rights because the record did not demonstrate that the father lodged his own objection based on constitutional grounds challenging the trial court's decision to proceed with the trial. Although the mother's counsel stated that "we" believe that the father had a constitutional right to be at trial, the mother's counsel did not represent the father at trial, nor did the father's counsel join in the objection. In re T.H., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

44. Bill of review was denied in a paternity case because a purported father waived his argument regarding substituted service under Tex. R. Civ. P. 106 based on statements that his attorney made to the trial court; further, due to the waiver, the issue relating to substituted service was not preserved for appellate review. Moreover, since actual notice was not required for substituted service to be effective, evidence regarding actual notice was not heard as it was not relevant and did not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Thomas v. Wheeler, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5617 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 29 2008).

45. Where an ex-wife failed to make an offer of proof or file a formal bill of exceptions at the trial stage, she had failed to preserve for appeal her claim that the trial court erred in failing to admit her documents into evidence because although she stated in her brief that copies of the documents were in the appellate record, she did not state where in the record the documents could be found, and the appellate court was unable to locate them in its review of the record; in any event, simply filing the excluded evidence was not sufficient to make a proper bill of exceptions. Darby v. Darby, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3452 (Tex. App. Tyler May 14 2008).

46. Because the record did show any objections to the evidence, the court rejected the parents' claim that hearsay evidence constituted the majority of the evidence presented in a proceeding concerning the conservatorship of their daughter, and therefore no error was shown by the district court's consideration of unobjected-to evidence. Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3387 (Tex. App. Austin May 8 2008).

47. In a personal injury suit, appellants properly preserved the error, if any, regarding excluded evidence of appellee's consumption of alcohol because, although single offers of proof from a witness might have elicited testimony concerning multiple classifications of excluded evidence, i.e., evidence concerning both the consumption of alcohol and speeding, the trial court was not prevented from differentiating between such testimony and making separate rulings on the same. PPC Transp. v. Metcalf, 254 S.W.3d 636, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3291 (Tex. App.

48. Driver in a car accident negligence case failed to preserve alleged trial court errors for review because he failed to object, request curative instructions, or move for a mistrial; further, any error in the admission of testimony regarding a prior accident and an undisclosed witness to the accident was harmless. Gallaher v. Brown, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2851 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

49. Appellants, the children of a decedent, failed to preserve certain issues for appeal because they did not object to the issue as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103; the only exception was an issue involving a legal sufficiency challenge following a bench trial, which could be challenged for the first time on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Civ. P. 324. Hulen v. Hamilton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1672 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 28 2008).

50. In a personal injury case, failure to object waived a claim that statements made in compromise negotiations were inadmissible and were improperly admitted at a hearing on a motion to dismiss; an objection was required to preserve error, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 103. Hamrick v. Lopez, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8113 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 11 2007).

51. In a civil commitment proceeding for appellant, who was found to be a sexually violent predator, where appellant argued that the trial court erred in allowing the State's expert witness, a board-certified psychiatrist, to testify, challenging the standard that she employed in reaching her opinion that he was likely to reoffend, he had not preserved the issue for review; an expert-reliability challenge asking the reviewing court to examine the expert's underlying methodology, technique, or foundational data, required a timely objection so that the trial court had the opportunity to conduct such analysis. In re Commitment of Gollihar, 224 S.W.3d 843, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3786 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

52. Helicopter service facility did not preserve for appeal objections to an affidavit proffered by a helicopter manufacturer in support of the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment; each of the service facility's objections--to a lack of verification and authentication and to the affidavit of an interested witness--presented defects of form; because the trial court did not rule on these objections, they were not preserved for appellate review. Cent. Am. Aviation Servs., S. A. v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 1 2007).

53. Record did not reveal that the track owner ever specifically brought the couple's expert's qualifications or the reliability of his testimony to the trial court's attention and obtained a ruling from the court; consequently, the owner failed to preserve for appellate review any challenge relating to the expert's qualifications or the reliability of his testimony. S.E.A. Leasing, Inc. v. Steele, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1337 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 22 2007).

54. Employer's contention that the trial court erred by failing to instruct the jury that damages in a negligence action could not arise from conduct that amounted to statutory sexual harassment was waived for appellate review because during the charge conference, the employer did not plainly make the trial court aware of its complaint. Waffle House, Inc. v. Williams, 314 S.W.3d 1, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 843, 100 Fair Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 451 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

55. Husband did not properly preserve for review his assertion that the trial court abused its discretion when it appointed the mediator as arbitrator because there was no record of an objection being made to the trial court or of a ruling on the objection as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Gaskin v. Gaskin, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7689 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2006).

56. In a negligence action arising from a motor vehicle accident, failure to object waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103, claims of falsified or spoliated evidence. Kadyebo v. Chako, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 416 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2006).

57. In a civil forfeiture proceeding, defendant waived his complaint concerning evidence seized from his wallet during a pat down search incident to his arrest for possession of a controlled substance; defendant made no objection when the state presented testimony concerning the evidence. $ 1,590.00 United States Currency v. Tex., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10423 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 15 2005).

58. In child custody and support enforcement proceedings, the mother's failure to object to the trial court's questioning waived the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103; also, the questioning did not deny the mother her federal or state constitutional rights to a fair trial or violate Tex. R. Evid. 605 because the judge did not testify as a witness at the trial and the questions were reasonable and fact-based. Kogel v. Robertson, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10028 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 2 2005).

59. Trial court did not prevent appellant from presenting error to the reviewing court through an offer of proof because, while the trial court denied appellant an opportunity to develop the excluded testimony in a question-and-answer form, her attorney informed the court of the substance of the testimony in an offer of proof. In reaching that conclusion, the court compared Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), providing that an offer of proof was a trial-time offer of evidence excluded by court, and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, setting out that a formal bill of exception was a post-trial offer of evidence in written form. In re A A.E., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4419 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 9 2005).

60. Although a mother in a parental rights proceeding failed to preserve error on her objections to the reliability of the expert testimony presented during the proceeding because she did not file a written objection to the expert's testimony or object or ask any questions of the expert during the pretrial hearing, an appellate court held that it had broad discretion to remand in the interest of justice because the trial court had erred in overruling the father's objection to the expert opinion and that error was harmful, which made a new trial necessary. In re S.E.W., 168 S.W.3d 875, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3809 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

61. In a termination of parental rights case, the mother did not preserve her complaint for review because the complaint did not comport with the mother's objection made at the time certain testimony was being offered. At trial, the mother complained that a social worker had not followed statutory procedures under the Texas Health and Safety Code, but, on review, the mother complained that the social worker's testimony violated Tex. R. Evid. 510. Additionally, the mother's second objection at trial, which was based on Rule 510, was not made until after the social worker left the witness stand; therefore, this objection was not timely made. In re Smith, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 990 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 8 2005).

62. Customer argued that the trial court erred in denying her motion to compel discovery, but her counsel conceded at oral argument that she did not obtain a ruling from the trial court on the motion to compel; to preserve a complaint for the appellate court's review, a party had to have presented to the trial court a timely request, objection, or motion that stated the specific grounds for the desired ruling, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and the objecting party had to also get an express or implied ruling from the trial court, and because the customer failed to present her objection to the trial court and obtain a ruling, she waived this complaint on appeal. Banks v. River Oaks Steak House, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7517 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 19 2004).

63. Where a trial court did not exclude testimony regarding a patient's motive in bringing a negligence action based on medical malpractice against his doctor, but rather, indicated that the questioning was to be disallowed at one point and could be raised again later, but the patient failed to introduce the evidence again, there was no ruling excluding the evidence for purposes of appellate review and accordingly, the patient failed to preserve the error pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Ramsey v. Cravey, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5724 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

64. Where a wife in a divorce proceeding failed to make an offer of proof pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 or file a formal bill of exception pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, and the substance of the evidence she sought to present was not apparent from the record, her complaint that the trial court erred by not allowing her to prove that she had separate property and by finding that she had none was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Furthermore, because the wife did not present evidence of her ownership of separate property, the correctness of the trial court's finding that she had none had to be presumed under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.003. Smith v. Smith, 143 S.W.3d 206, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5670 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

65. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease failed to make an objection in the trial court as to the alleged date defect and discovery rule violation that one of lessee's exhibits was not created more than 30 days prior to trial as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 215.5 and waived error, and even if the lessor had made the proper objection, the trial court could have properly overruled it, because no discovery request was made for the exhibit as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 93. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

66. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease did not preserve by a proper objection any error regarding the lessee's alleged lack of standing to bring the suit; thus, any error as to lack of standing was waived. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : General Overview

67. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid 103(a)(2), error may not be predicated upon a ruling which excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and the substance of the objection is made known to the trial court by offer of proof; however, in this termination of parental rights case, the mother's attorney adequately described the substance of the proposed testimony, introduced the witness's letter, and referenced the best interest of the children, and the appeals court found this showing sufficient under the circumstances. In re N.R.C., 94 S.W.3d 799, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8566 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2002).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

68. Mother failed to preserve for review her assertion that the court abused its discretion by excluding evidence that the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services moved to strike her divorce petition, because the excluded evidence was subject to a motion in limine, and at no other time before or during trial did the mother ever object to the exclusion of the evidence. Casillas v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2210, 2010 WL 1173074 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2010).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

69. Despite sustaining defedant's hearsay objection in an action to quiet title, the trial court later allowed plaintiff to testify to many of the facts surrounding decedent's alleged parol gift; because the trial court allowed evidence of the substantial improvements plaintiff made to the land during decedent's lifetime and plaintiff's continuous possession of the land, the appellate court could not say that the trial court's ruling on decedent's hearsay statement to plaintiff regarding her donative intnet caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

70. In an inverse condemnation case, a trial court's refusal to allow the State to give an offer of proof was harmless because the substance of the evidence was apparent from the context within which the questions were asked; moreover, the testimony the State sought to offer concerning the impairment of access and the viability of driveway proposals was immaterial to the issue of damages. State v. Delany, 149 S.W.3d 655, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2385 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004), reversed by 2006 Tex. LEXIS 416, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 557 (Tex. 2006).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

71. Any error by determining the drug test results were admissible was harmless, because the father's testimony was admitted without objection, when the content of the testimony was cumulative of the drug test results the father argued were inappropriately admitted. D.O.H. v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6685, 2011 WL 3684568 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 23 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Reversible Errors

72. Any error in the admission of the expert's testimony did not affect the patient's substantial rights, because the trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction regarding the use of hearsay evidence. In re Commitment of Villegas, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1596, 2013 WL 645239 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 21 2013).

Civil Procedure : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Experts

73. In an action arising from the State's partial taking of owners' property for use in a highway project, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the State's pretrial motion to exclude the testimony of the owners' designated real estate appraiser without conducting an evidentiary hearing where the appraiser's qualifications were not challenged, and where he generally utilized the long favored comparable sales approach for appraising real property. The State failed to show that the denial of its motion affected a substantial right of the State pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). State v. Petropoulos, 346 S.W.3d 619, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2009).

Computer & Internet Law : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes

74. In a case where defendant was convicted under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 33.021(b), there was no ineffective assistance of counsel because a trial court would not have erred by admitting an exhibit showing pictures of scantily clad children that defendant was purportedly viewing at a library over a proper specific objection made by defense counsel; defense counsel had merely objected based on an improper predicate. It was evident from a librarian's testimony that the photographs were the product of a reliable system, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(9), and the proof was sufficient to demonstrate that the challenged exhibit was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Brier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3749, 2009 WL 998638 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Search & Seizure : Scope of Protection

75. In a civil forfeiture proceeding, defendant waived his complaint concerning evidence seized from his wallet during a pat down search incident to his arrest for possession of a controlled substance; defendant made no objection when the state presented testimony concerning the evidence. $ 1,590.00 United States Currency v. Tex., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10423 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 15 2005).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Assistance of Counsel

76. Prosecutors should avoid using an evidentiary objection to inject new facts into the record when such assertions are otherwise unsupported by properly admitted evidence. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

77. In a delinquency proceeding, a Confrontation Clause issue was preserved for review, even though the juvenile failed to identify for the trial court the particular portions of a contested report that he considered to be inadmissible, because the comments of the prosecutor, defense counsel, and the trial court all indicated that the basis for the objection was apparent from the context. In re M.P., 220 S.W.3d 99, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 921 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Simple Possession : General Overview

78. In an appeal from a marijuana conviction, the court reviewed the admission of the marijuana, even though defendant failed to object at the time that the evidence was admitted; under Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant was not required to object to the admission of the marijuana in order to preserve error because the trial court heard the objection to the admission of the marijuana outside of the presence of the jury and admitted the evidence. Skinner v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5498 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : Aggravated Offenses

79. Probative value of evidence regarding whether defendant and the complainant continued their relationship after the aggravated assault with a deadly weapon was slight for the purpose of showing whether the alleged assault occurred; in addition, because of the graphically sexual nature of the photos that defendant sought to introduce into evidence, there was a danger that the jury would unfairly consider them for purposes other than that for which they were offered; in any event, because the record contained no offer of proof or bill of exceptions containing the substance of the testimony that defendant sought to elicit, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's complaint presented nothing for the appellate court's review. Carranza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 28 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

80. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Children : General Overview

81. In a murder trial involving a claim of self-defense, there was no error in excluding evidence that the victim's child had been physically abused; to the extent that defendant sought to admit evidence that the victim was responsible for the child's injuries, defendant made no offer of proof or bill of exception, as required by Tex. R. Evid.103. Bina v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 667 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 31 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : Armed Robbery : Penalties

82. At the punishment phase of a trial for aggravated robbery, any error in admitting a prior conviction for unlawfully carrying a weapon was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). The conviction was not reiterated or emphasized, the jury also received evidence of three other misdemeanor convictions, and defendant was sentenced to 40 years, the middle of the sentencing range under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 12.32(a), 29.03. Abdolahi-Damaneh v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2003 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 15 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

83. In a murder trial, any error in refusing to admit letters written by the victim was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.3 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) because there was other evidence of the victim's behavior and demeanor that defendant sought to admit through the letters. Cantu v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1639, 2012 WL 664939 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 1 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

84. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by informing the jury that it had overruled defendant's objection to the State's attempt to offer defendant's grand jury testimony, which had occurred outside the jury's presence where the trial judge's explanation was not a comment on the weight of the evidence, and it did not rise to the level of fundamental error because the judge did not express an opinion on the weight of evidence. Martinez v. State, 147 S.W.3d 412, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2897 (Tex. App. Tyler 2004), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3073, 180 L. Ed. 2d 896, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4930 (2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Inchoate Crimes : Conspiracy : Elements

85. In a trial for conspiracy to commit murder, defendant waived the argument that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to exclude expert and lay testimony of defendant's mental retardation, through which she sought to contest that she had the requisite mens rea. Defendant did not call the witnesses and have their excluded testimony entered into the record, provided a general and cursory summary statement of the excluded evidence, and failed to meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 103, in that there was no evidence in the record of defendant's specific mental impairments or their impact on her mental state at the time of the offense. Rhoten v. State, 299 S.W.3d 349, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8058 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 16 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Riot, Rout & Unlawful Assembly

86. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33, defendant failed to preserve an argument that the State improperly elicited testimony concerning alleged gang membership because defendant failed to identify the objectionable testimony in the record and did not even assert that defense counsel raised such an objection to the testimony. Marshal v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1411 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Larceny & Theft : General Overview

87. In a case involving theft, defendant's objections regarding hearsay and lack of predicate were insufficient to inform a trial court that an objection to the State's method of proving value was being asserted; however, the failure to object did not deprive defendant of the constitutional right to insist upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt on the issue of value. Moff v. State, 131 S.W.3d 485, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 641 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Child Pornography : General Overview

88. Admission of extraneous-offense evidence, regarding defendant's two encounters with children in public restrooms, did not affect defendant's substantial rights because testimony regarding the encounters did not consume an inordinate amount of time during trial, the State focused the majority of its closing argument on the evidence establishing the charged offenses, and the trial court gave a limiting instruction. Hoard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11760 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 18 2013).

89. Admission of expert testimony regarding the connection between a photograph of a child and sexual arousal did not affect defendant's substantial rights because there was evidence of images of children on various devices owned by defendant, one of the devices contained a video of defendant with the victim, and the images were purposefully placed on defendant's devices. Hoard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11760 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 18 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

90. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error in limiting defense questioning of a witness regarding sexually explicit photographs of a woman who appeared to be asleep or unconscious; the witness was permitted to testify in support of the defensive theory that drug use and sexual conduct of the sort shown in the photographs were common among persons employed by topless clubs and that the woman in the photographs may have consented to the acts shown; defendant did not make an offer of proof regarding other questions, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Casey v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7940 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 5 2007).

91. In a trial for a mother's sexual abuse of her son, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 404 to admit evidence that defendant had been a victim of sexual assault as a child to show that she was more likely to commit the offense; the error was harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 because it was a close case resolved by a credibility determination between the child and defendant. Kirby v. State, 208 S.W.3d 568, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2785 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

92. Defendant's objections at an evidentiary hearing outside the jury's presence to determine the admissibility of a minor's testimony were deemed to apply when the evidence was admitted at his trial for indecency with a child. Pettigrew v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1898 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

93. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in the sentencing phase, by admitting a videotape depicting him engaging in sexual activity with an unidentified adult female where the State's attempt to establish defendant's character for sexual depravity was a legitimate purpose for permitting the videotape to be shown. Moreover, even if the trial court committed error in permitting the videotape to be played to the jury, the record did not necessarily establish that defendant suffered harm from its admission; as a result of a prior felony conviction, the applicable punishment range for the conviction for indecency with a child was enhanced to the range of 5 to 99 years or life. Chambers v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2693 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

94. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child, defendant failed to preserve for review an argument that he was erroneously prevented from presenting or eliciting evidence of the complainant's sexual history and sexual sophistication in part because defendant's offer of proof failed to establish that he was seeking to cross-examine or elicit testimony regarding the complainant's sexual history or sexual sophistication. Martinez v. State, 2014 Tex.

App. LEXIS 3827, 2014 WL 1396705 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 9 2014).

95. Defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child under six years of age at the time of the offense was appropriate because there was no error in the admission of the child's statement to the forensic interviewer. However, even there was error, it was harmless because evidence regarding the victim's statements that defendant sexually assaulted her on two occasions came into evidence without objection through the testimony of a nurse and the SAFE Form, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Loya v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8640, 2012 WL 4875499 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 16 2012).

96. In defendant's trial for indecency with a child, defendant failed to preserve his objection to an expert's testimony that false accusations had occurred in about 2 percent of the cases he had been involved in because, after he objected to the initial question posed to the expert, the State rephrased its question and defendant did not object to the rephrased question. Smikal v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2904, 2012 WL 1259127 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 12 2012).

97. In a trial for sexual assault of a child, defendant failed to preserve the argument that it was improper to exclude evidence of the complainant's sexual history because the record did not contain an offer of proof from which the reviewing court could analyze the excluded testimony, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Cordero v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2834, 2012 WL 1248064 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 11 2012).

98. In a trial for child sexual assault, defendant's complaint on appeal regarding a nurse's testimony (that the complainant's scarred hymen could have been caused by an adult's fingers) did not comport, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), with a pretrial objection to causation testimony; it was doubtful the trial court considered the nurse's testimony that it was possible for human fingers to cause such injuries. Moore v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6826, 2011 WL 3717058 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 23 2011).

99. In defendant's prosecution for sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011, defendant did not preserve error for review regarding the exclusion of the testimony of the victim's minor son, who was allegedly present during all her encounters with defendant, as he did not submit an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) setting forth the substance of the son's testimony. Daniel v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1996, 2011 WL 941301 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 16 2011).

100. Court affirmed a judgment convicting defendant of aggravated sexual assault of a child because defendant did not preserve error for review when he failed to make an offer of proof, and the court could not determine on what general subject defendant wished to cross-examine the prosecutor had he been allowed to do so. Balderas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7801 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 31 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

101. In a negligence suit by a driver against a trucker, the trial court's exclusion of the evidence concerning the driver's consumption of alcohol required reversal because the jury, believing the driver to be sober, declined to find the driver negligent; the judgment turned on evidence of the driver's consumption of alcohol, and therefore, the judgment rendered in favor of the driver was improper. PPC Transp. v. Metcalf, 254 S.W.3d 636, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3291 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

102. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, defendant's "amended" motion to suppress was not brought to the trial court's attention until after the State had rested its case during the guilt-innocence stage of the trial. By that time, the intoxilyzer operator had testified extensively about defendant's refusal, and because her motion to suppress on the additional ground was not timely, defendant did not preserve error on that issue. Boles v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3193 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

103. Complaint on appeal as to the reliability of retrograde extrapolation did not comport with his complaint below that the trial court was not permitting him to take the chemist on voir dire. Therefore, the reliability issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Garner v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5991, 2011 WL 3278533 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 2 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

104. In a driving while intoxicated case, because defendant did not present evidentiary complaints relating to the admission of a police officer's testimony and the results of a breath test to a trial court, they were not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Egerton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4848, 2009 WL 1815772 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : General Overview

105. In a delinquency proceeding, a Confrontation Clause issue was preserved for review, even though the juvenile failed to identify for the trial court the particular portions of a contested report that he considered to be inadmissible, because the comments of the prosecutor, defense counsel, and the trial court all indicated that the basis for the objection was apparent from the context. In re M.P., 220 S.W.3d 99, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 921 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : Statements

106. Defendant juvenile's complaint regarding the admissibility of his statment was preserved because the record as a whole indicated an understanding by the judge and counsel that the juvenile's counsel did not intend to forfeit the issue of admissibility of the statement by stating, "no objection," when it was offered at trial. In re X.J.T., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2312, 2014 WL 787832 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 27 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Exclusionary Rule : Rule Application & Interpretation

107. Objection to the admissibility of evidence under the first sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 is not a prerequisite to the right to a jury instruction regarding a disputed factual issue under the second sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 because a defendant may, but is not required to, object to the admission of evidence as well as make a request for a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction; even when the defendant affirmatively states that he has no objection to the admission of certain evidence, he may still be entitled to a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction because the admissibility of evidence and the jury's consideration of that evidence are not necessarily linked together. Holmes v. State, 248 S.W.3d 194, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 327 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Seizures of Persons

108. Defendant's suppression argument on appeal from a drug conviction--that he was detained without reasonable suspicion--did not comport with the argument raised in a motion to suppress--that there was no consent for a search of his vehicle. Therefore, defendant waived the detention issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Franklin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3686, 2010 WL 1957024 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 18 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Notice & Warning

109. Defendant failed to preserve for review his complaint under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22, § 3(a)(2) because, in light of defendant's clearly and persistently articulated constitutional argument, and the lack of a statutory reference in his second motion to suppress, defendant's reference to the videotape was most likely part of his argument that the police had violated his rights under the United States and Texas Constitutions by failing to Mirandize him. Resendez v. State, 306 S.W.3d 308, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1439 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Right to Counsel During Questioning

110. Because defendant did not object to an officer's testimony that defendant would not provide a statement at the scene of an aggravated assault without an attorney being present, he did not preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Testimonial references to a defendant's pre-arrest silence and his pre-arrest invocation of the right to counsel do not constitute fundamental error. McCullough v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2253 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 23 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Self-Incrimination Privilege

111. State's questions specifically referenced only one period of time -- when defendant was in police custody and before Miranda rights were read to him; the context of the questions, therefore, could only implicate defendant's post-arrest, pre-Miranda right to remain silent, which was protected only by Tex. Const. art. I, § 10; thus, despite the failure of the objection to specifically reference the Texas Constitution, given the context of the State's question, the objection was specific enough to have put the trial court on notice of defendant's objection; therefore, defendant's objection was sufficient to preserve for appellate review his claim that his right against self-incrimination was violated. Wyborny v. State, 209 S.W.3d 285, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10109 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

112. Because defendant complained only generally at trial of his "right to remain silent," without any further assertions concerning his rights to post-arrest silence under either Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 or the Sanchez case, defendant's trial objection was not sufficient to make the trial court aware of his complaint, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Moreover, the specific grounds of defendant's complaint were not apparent from the context under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Cleveland v. State, 177 S.W.3d 374, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2726 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005), cert. denied 126 S. Ct. 1774, 164 L. Ed. 2d 523, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 3222, 74 U.S.L.W. 3585 (U.S. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Voluntariness

113. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred when it admitted his statement to detectives on the ground that it was not voluntary due to his intoxication was not preserved for appellate review because his objections at trial were not sufficiently specific to inform the trial court that the basis of his objections was involuntariness due to intoxication. Maden v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2619, 2013 WL 1049040 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 13 2013).

114. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred when it admitted his telephone conversation with his wife recorded while he was detained a a police department holding facility on the ground that it violated the Texas wiretapping statute, Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 16.02(b)(1), was not preserved for appellate review because he made no mention of the wiretapping statute or any other Texas statutory provision in his objection to the admission of the recording. Maden v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2619, 2013 WL 1049040 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 13 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Preliminary Proceedings : Preliminary Hearings : Evidence

115. Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) requires that the trial court determine whether the probative value of admitting evidence of prior convictions outweighs its prejudicial effect to a party, and Tex. R. Evid. 609(f) requires timely notice of the State's intended use of evidence of prior convictions to provide the defendant a fair opportunity to contest the use of such evidence, but the phrase "fair opportunity" does not specify at what point in the proceedings the decision as to admissibility is to be made; there is not authority holding that a "fair opportunity" means an opportunity exclusively during a pretrial hearing and not during a hearing outside the presence of the jury during a trial on the merits; thus, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a pretrial hearing on his Tex. R. Evid. 609 motion was neither an abuse of discretion nor reversible error. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Motions in Limine

116. Defendant's objection that the complainant's testimony was in violation of a motion in limine was not a specific objection sufficient to preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. P. 33.1(a)(1), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). A motion in limine did not preserve error. Bennett v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4436, 2010 WL 2347066 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 9 2010).

117. In defendant's burglary case, he failed to preserve for review an issue of the admission of extraneous offenses because trial counsel made no objection to the State's alleged violation of the motion in limine, and the record reflected that the district court, if anything, ruled in defendant's favor and excluded evidence related to the offenses. Thus, the exception provided by Tex. R. Evid. 103 did not apply. Perez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6521, 2009 WL 2567908 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 21 2009).

118. In a robbery case, because defendant failed to offer evidence of the victim's voluntary manslaughter conviction at trial after the trial court granted the State's pretrial motion in limine to exclude evidence of the victim's voluntary manslaughter conviction, no error was preserved for appeal, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 103. Windham v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2440 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 7 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

119. Appellate court was not required to ignore defendant's point of error based on the trial court's denial of his pretrial motion to suppress because this rule does not dispense with appellate review of pretrial suppression motions; instead, it merely serves to protect against waiver of such objections offered outside the presence of the jury when the same evidence is offered at trial. Jackson v. State, 424 S.W.3d 140, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1170, 2014 WL 409946 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 4 2014).

120. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress on the ground that the officer lacked reasonable suspicion to justify the traffic stop because he did not file a pretrial motion to suppress and he did not object before or during the State's case-in-chief to the admissibility of any evidence the officers obtained after the stop. Sample v. State, 405 S.W.3d 295, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7288 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 13 2013).

121. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress because when the State presented the testimony of the officers who had entered defendant's apartment, defense counsel did not object or re-urge his motion to suppress. Clark v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5160, 2011 WL 2651902 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2011).

122. Admission of post-arrest statements by defendant, who was arrested for driving while intoxicated, that he was sorry and that he would not do it anymore could not be challenged as violating a suppression order because

123. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress evidence seized following the traffic stop and his arrest was not preserved for appellate review because his argument, that the officer could not have had the requisite probable cause to believe that a traffic violation had occurred as the evidence showed that the action taken by defendant did not violate any Transportation Code requirements, was not raised until the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial. Butler v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5646, 2010 WL 2836310 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2010).

124. Defendant did not address a suppression issue pretrial or object at trial, as required to preserve the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), until the State offered the seized contraband. Any error in the admission of the evidence was harmless because substantial testimony describing the contraband was admitted without objection. Griggs v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3433, 2010 WL 1840219 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

125. Where defendant was convicted of possession of cocaine, he did not urge his motion to suppress until the close of the evidence and failed to object to the evidence at the first opportunity; he failed to preserve review of the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress. Alex v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4031 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 10 2006).

126. In a capital murder case, although Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) did not require a trial objection to the same evidence after the denial of a motion to suppress, defendant's challenge to the admissibility of oral statements was not preserved for review because defendant's arguments at the suppression hearing dealt only with written statements. Higginbotham v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8184 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 4 2005).

127. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, defendant's "amended" motion to suppress was not brought to the trial court's attention until after the State had rested its case during the guilt-innocence stage of the trial. By that time, the intoxilyzer operator had testified extensively about defendant's refusal, and because her motion to suppress on the additional ground was not timely, defendant did not preserve error on that issue. Boles v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3193 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Guilty Pleas : Admissibility at Trial

128. In a murder trial, no harm occurred, within the meaning of Tex. R. App. P. 44 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, when the trial court admitted tape-recorded phone conversations that included defendant's statement about a plea offer on an unrelated offense; defendant's remark was in the middle of the State's first tape-recorded conversation, it was not singled out at trial, and the State did not attempt to introduce other evidence regarding the previous offense. Lewis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9519 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 5 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

129. Given the brief description of the proffered evidence with concise facts, as reflected by the record and stated by trial counsel regarding the civil suit, defendant's trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance. West v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3612, 2012 WL 1606239 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

130. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant failed to show that she received ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to make certain evidentiary objections; defendant did not file a motion for a new trial or otherwise develop a record concerning the motives behind trial counsel's decision not to make objections. Because speculation would have been required, counsel's actions were presumed to be within the wide range of reasonable and professional assistance. Egerton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4848, 2009 WL 1815772 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

131. In a case where defendant was convicted under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 33.021(b), there was no ineffective assistance of counsel because a trial court would not have erred by admitting an exhibit showing pictures of scantily clad children that defendant was purportedly viewing at a library over a proper specific objection made by defense counsel; defense counsel had merely objected based on an improper predicate. It was evident from a librarian's testimony that the photographs were the product of a reliable system, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(9), and the proof was sufficient to demonstrate that the challenged exhibit was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a). Brier v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3749, 2009 WL 998638 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 15 2009).

132. In an aggravated assault case, defendant failed to show that she received ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to make certain objections; the record was silent as to trial counsel's reasoning or strategy, and an appellate court was unable to speculate on such. Even if an objection would have been proper during voir dire based on comments made about the burden of proof, defendant failed to rebut the strong presumption that the failure to object was strategic; moreover, she did not show that the trial court would have committed error in failing to sustain an objection to cross-examination conducted during the punishment phase of the trial. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

133. In the punishment phase of a murder trial, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to preserve an expert witness's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 103 once the trial court prohibited the expert witness from testifying; counsel's brief description complied with the requirements to preserve the testimony for appellate review. Johnson v. State, 233 S.W.3d 109, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6010 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Right to Counsel : General Overview

134. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that it was error, at the punishment phase of a trial for intoxication manslaughter, to admit evidence of gang affiliation. Defendant's argument on appeal that it violated the Sixth Amendment to admit photographs of his tattoos did not comport with his argument at trial, as required under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), that it violated the Sixth Amendment to admit statements resulting from a police interview. Ruiz v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3666 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Jury Questions to the Court : Procedures

135. Because the record was silent as to whether appellant objected to the trial court's response to the jury's second note regarding deadlock to "keep deliberating", it was presumed that the trial court complied with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 36.27 regarding communications with the jury; by failing to timely object to the trial court's written response to the jury to "keep deliberating" as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), appellant failed to preserve his claim that the response was unduly coercive. Hartman v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6569, 2010 WL 3193565 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 12 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Province of Court & Jury : Weight of the Evidence

136. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court made two improper comments on the weight of the evidence because she failed to object to either comment during the trial. The alleged error was not fundamental because the trial court's comments suggested only that defense counsel was attempting to broach a subject that the court had previously and repeatedly instructed the parties to avoid and the trial court believed a defense witness's testimony was a "diatribe." Wyatt v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1308, 2012 WL 512654 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 16 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Voir Dire : General Overview

137. In an aggravated assault case, defendant waived an error relating to a trial court's comments during voir dire because no objection was made, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; there was no fundamental error allowing review because the burden of proof discussed in voir dire did not differ from the jury-charge instructions. Moreover, the comments in this case did not rise to the level set forth by the plurality in Blue v. State, 41 S.W.3d 129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000), because they did not taint defendant's presumption of innocence in front of the venire or vitiate the impartiality of the jury. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

138. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that that the State's introduction of photographs depicting defendant with his hands shackled and bagged behind him because the record showed that the photographs were admitted without objection. Diaz v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8904 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2007).

139. Because a trial judge's qualification of a venire panel in a case involving capital murder and serious bodily injury to a child did not vitiate the presumption of innocence, a failure to object at trial meant nothing was preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; there was no fundamental error affecting substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Mason v. State, 237 S.W.3d 800, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7451 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

140. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant waived his argument that the trial court's comment during voir dire was so prejudicial that he was deprived of a fair and impartial trial. There was no fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) that would excuse the waiver because the trial court properly instructed the jury that it could not consider a defendant's refusal to testify for any purpose. Vargas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4626 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Voir Dire : Appellate Review

141. Where defendant failed to object during voir dire that the trial court incorrectly described the State's burden of proof, he waived his complaints on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), unless there was fundamental error. There was no fundamental error when the trial court commented that jurors would know reasonable doubt when they saw it or that proof necessary to satisfy a juror beyond a reasonable doubt was "whatever it means to you." Meadows v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5874, 2010 WL 2874199 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 22 2010).

142. Judge's comments in a trial for prostitution under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 43.02 did not rise to such a level as to bear on the presumption of innocence or vitiate the impartiality of the jury, as required for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). The comments--that the judge had about 7,000 prostitutions cases in 22 years and that prostitution was not a victimless offense--were made while qualifying jurors during voir dire and in the context of explaining that regardless of their personal feelings, jurors had to follow the law. Mclean v. State, 312 S.W.3d 912, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 537 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 28 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Voir Dire : Individual Voir Dire

143. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court abused its discretion by limiting his voir dire examination of a veniremember because he did not object to the trial court's ruling. Samaripas v. State, 446 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 430, 2013 WL 178137 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Voir Dire : Judicial Discretion

144. Although defendant failed to make a timely objection to comments by the court during voir dire, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), the court reviewed the comments for fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and found none. Brown v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5300, 2011 WL 2714117 (Tex. App. El Paso July 13 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Closing Arguments : General Overview

145. Defendant's objections at trial--that the prosecutor's remarks constituted "argument" and "interpretation of evidence"--did not preserve a complaint on appeal focused on whether the argument shifted the burden of proof and violated defendant's right to the presumption of innocence. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), defendant was required to object unless the rights were either waivable only or an absolute systemic requirement. Reyes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2359, 2010 WL 1254543 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 1 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

146. In a stalking case, defendant's bill of exception arguing that testimony about the complainant's conduct should have been admitted because it would have gone to the weight, reliability, and credibility of the complainant was not specific enough to preserve a confrontation argument under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), (2). Armelin v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8680 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 3 2006).

147. In a kidnapping case, defendant waived a confrontation issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) by failing to raise the issue below. Wright v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5261 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Counsel : General Overview

148. Because defendant failed to object before or during trial, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), he did not preserve his argument that it was error to admit his recorded statement because he invoked his right to counsel twice near the beginning of the statement. Welch v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2692, 2011 WL 1364970 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 12 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Fair Trial

149. Defendant failed to preserve for review, as required under Tex. R. App. P. 33, his claims that the trial court abandoned its role as a neutral arbiter and thereby denied defendant his right to a fair trial, as he failed to show that he was prejudiced and that the fundamental error doctrine applied under Tex. R. Evid. 103; the trial court was permitted to question a witness to clarify defendant's misstatement of the witness's testimony, it was permitted to intervene under Tex. R. Evid. 611 by asking the State for objections to defendant's questioning; the trial court's insistence that defendant ask a witness relevant questions did not translate into an indication of the judge's views about defendant's guilt or innocence. Bogany v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10074 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2007).

150. Even though defense counsel did not object when the trial court told the jury at the outset of the trial that defendant seriously considered entering into a plea agreement and that he would have preferred that the defendant plead guilty, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) the appellate court was authorized to take notice of fundamental errors affecting substantial rights although they were not brought to the attention of the court, and the trial court's statements were plain error warranting reversal of defendant's conviction and remand. Blue v. State, 41 S.W.3d 129, 2000 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 113 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000), criticized by Rabago v. State, 75 S.W.3d 561, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 1828 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Remain Silent : General Overview

151. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant's failure to object waived error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the admission of testimony that defendant, after he was advised of his rights, chose not to give a statement and invoked his right to counsel; although the use of defendant's silence and invocation of his right to counsel as evidence of guilt was constitutionally impermissible and was prohibited by Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.38, the error was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Morales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3359 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Remain Silent

152. Although defendant argued that the prosecutor should not have been allowed to instruct the jury panel to consider her body language, if defendant chose not to testify at trial, defendant did not make any of her complaints on appeal in the trial court, and the prosecutor's comments did not amount to fundamental error. Nothing in the record suggested the prosecutor manifestly intended to comment on defendant's failure to testify, and the typical jury would not have naturally and necessarily understood the prosecutor's comment to refer to defendant's failure to testify. Floyd v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6656, 2011 WL 3667746 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2011).

153. In the absence of a timely and specific objection, defendant's claim that trial court erred in allowing testimony to be presented that may have amounted to a comment on his right to remain silent was not preserved for review. Perales v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5829 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 6 2006).

154. Defendant waived any error in the prosecutor's comments on the invocation of his right to counsel and right to remain silent by failing to object to this line of questioning. The error was not preversed for review. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2005).

155. Because defendant did not object to an officer's testimony that defendant would not provide a statement at the scene of an aggravated assault without an attorney being present, he did not preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Testimonial references to a defendant's pre-arrest silence and his pre-arrest invocation of the right to counsel do not constitute fundamental error. McCullough v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2253 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 23 2005).

156. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not preserve error on his claims that the trial court erred in allowing the State to refer to his post-arrest silence in violation of Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 due to: (1) the lack of time-specific questions by the State; (2) counsel's failure to cite to the state constitution, or even specify that he was objecting to post-arrest silence; and (3) the lack of commentary by the trial court in making its rulings on the objections. There was no indication in the record that the trial court understood that defendant was trying to invoke a protection different from the U.S. Const. amend. V protection which he was citing. Heidelberg v. State, 144 S.W.3d 535, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1479 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Remain Silent : Self-Incrimination Privilege

157. Defendant waived an argument that the complainant commented on defendant's state of mind, allegedly violating defendant's right not to testify, because defendant's argument at trial--that the complainant was not a credible witness--did not comport with the argument on appeal, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Blue v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3056 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Cross-Examination

158. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant failed to preserve error as to cross-examining the arresting officer about his own driving record because defendant failed to make an offer of proof. Because the court did not know what the officer's response to the question would have been, it could not review the complaint. Bridges v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9104, 2011 WL 5557534 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 16 2011).

159. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that evidence was improperly excluded by imposing an arbitrary time limit on his cross-examination; counsel failed to make an offer of proof in the form of a concise and specific summary of testimony to be elicited, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Garner v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5991, 2011 WL 3278533 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 2 2011).

160. Defendant did not preserve an argument that cross-examination should have been allowed as to a witness's intoxication role in the charged offense because the substance of the evidence was not made known to the trial court by offer of proof, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Reyes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2359, 2010 WL 1254543 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 1 2010).

161. Trial court properly sustained the State's objection that defendant was presenting jury argument during his cross-examination of a police officer because defendant's statement, "I'd like for the jury to note that," was not the equivalent of a "let the record reflect" statement, and there was simply no indication, as defendant argued, that he was attempting, during his cross-examination of the officer, to have the record reflect some observable, but non-verbal, incident that was occurring in the courtroom; even if defendant had been trying to have the record reflect a non-verbal event, he did not properly preserve his complaint for appeal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 because at no time did he object or indicate to the trial court that he wanted to preserve a complaint for appeal regarding some non-verbal event occurring in the courtroom, and there was no indication in the record or in defendant's arguments contained in his brief what evidence he claimed was improperly excluded, and it also was not apparent from the context within which defendant asked questions what evidence was improperly excluded. Cordova v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9457 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 5 2007).

162. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant preserved the argument that it was a deprivation of the right to present a defense when the trial court denied the right to cross-examine experts on the underlying science that supported a particular breath-testing machine; counsel adequately showed, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, that evidence sought through cross-examination related to the contention that the machine did not adequately control or correlate the actual (as opposed to presumed) temperature of the breath of the person tested in calculating breath-alcohol content; it was apparent from the record that counsel and the court both understood the broad picture of the questions counsel sought to propound and the line of questioning upon which the arguments were based. Woodall v. State, 216 S.W.3d 530, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1304 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

163. Defendant challenged the trial court's refusal to allow cross-examination of the complainant concerning withdrawals she made from defendant's bank account after his arrest and her history of mental health problems; defendant argued that the cross-examination was relevant to show the complainant's motive to have him arrested, credibility, and ability to process information; however, because the record contained no offer of proof or bill of exceptions containing the substance of the excluded cross-examination testimony, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's complaint presented nothing for the appellate court's review. Carranza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS

10137 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 28 2006).

164. Murder defendant failed to make an offer of proof showing the substance of cross-examination evidence that he alleged was improperly excluded; he therefore waived his arguments that he should have been given greater latitude in conducting a cross-examination to develop the witness's bias from her prolonged detention at the hands of the State and that he should have been allowed to cross-examine the witness about her drug use. Headley v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5104 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Judicial Discretion

165. Under the principles of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), the court of appeals reviewed a murder defendant's argument that the trial court's comments created a hostile environment, even though the prosecution argued that the issue was inadequately briefed and that defendant did not preserve error. Lozano v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9439 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Motions for Mistrial

166. It was not error to deny defendant's mistrial motion based on a prosecutor allegedly eliciting testimony that defendant was in jail before trial because (1) the testimony was not objected to in a timely manner, as no objection was lodged until after defense counsel asked the witness several follow-up questions, rather than when the witness gave the testimony at issue, (2) the testimony did not create fundamental error, and (3) it was presumed that the jury followed an instruction not to infer defendant's guilt from the testimony. Johnson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4524 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 10 2013).

167. Court rejected defendant's contention that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion for a mistrial based on jury misconduct, specifically, a juror sleeping during the trial. Defendant's argument was not properly preserved for appellate review because the only item before the trial court on the motion for mistrial was the statement of defendant's trial counsel. Trial counsel's statement that a juror was sleeping presented no evidence of the matter. It was incumbent upon defendant's trial counsel to develop the record for the trial court in order to clarify which specific juror counsel was referencing and to determine if that juror was sleeping. Thieleman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8833 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 30 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : General Overview

168. Motion to cross-examine the State's breath-test expert about the operation of the Intoxilyzer 5000 was not preserved for review because defendant failed to establish that the general subject matter of his proffered evidence would be used to impeach the expert, and not the substance of the expert's testimony as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). When the defense attorney failed to "perfect a bill" or to make a statement of what he would prove, as he told the trial court he would do, he failed to satisfy Rule 103(a)(2); counsel's statements were not a reasonably specific summary of the evidence offered. Holmes v. State, 323 S.W.3d 163, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 522 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Impeachment

169. Any error in the exclusion of evidence of a complainant's mental health for impeachment purposes was not preserved for review because defendant did not make an offer of proof or a bill of exception or otherwise indicate what the excluded evidence would have shown, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Campbell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1707 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 6 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Self-Defense

170. In an assault trial arising from a bar fight, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to exclude evidence of a prior violent act by the victim because there was evidence that the victim was the first aggressor. The error did not require reversal under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the excluded testimony did not have a substantial effect on the rejection of defendant's self-defense claim, given that defendant did not attempt to retreat but pulled a knife during a physical altercation and stabbed the unarmed victim, who did not not use deadly force. Dudzik v. State, 276 S.W.3d 554, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9073 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

171. Where appellant and the victim shot each other, the victim died, appellant asserted self-defense, and the witnesses disagreed as to whether the victim or appellant shot first, appellant's conviction of murder in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02 was affirmed because (1) the evidence as to why appellant was afraid of the victim was irrelevant under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a), (b) because the victim's conduct of flashing his gun and shooting first were unambiguous acts of aggression and violence, (2) appellant failed to properly preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), to the admission of evidence of his gang membership under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and (3) impeachment of the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) was proper because the witness created a false impression with the jury as to the extent of his arrests and convictions. Reyna v. State, 99 S.W.3d 344, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Use of Particular Evidence

172. Objection to the admissibility of evidence under the first sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 is not a prerequisite to the right to a jury instruction regarding a disputed factual issue under the second sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 because a defendant may, but is not required to, object to the admission of evidence as well as make a request for a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction; even when the defendant affirmatively states that he has no objection to the admission of certain evidence, he may still be entitled to a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction because the admissibility of evidence and the jury's consideration of that evidence are not necessarily linked together. Holmes v. State, 248 S.W.3d 194, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 327 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Appeals : Appealability

173. To the extent a victim testified at the punishment phase about defendant's "actual" intentions, as opposed to what she thought his intentions were, objection to the testimony was waived by failure to object. Rustin v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6523 (Tex. App. Dallas May 29 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Appeals : Proportionality & Reasonableness Review

174. Disproportionate sentencing issue was not fundamental error; therefore the issue was waived by failing to object. Walton v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14759, 2013 WL 6405478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 5 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Corrections, Modifications & Reductions : Illegal Sentences

175. In defendant's drug and robbery case, given that defendant's sentence was not illegal, the complaints that defendant asserted for the first time on appeal were not so fundamental as to have relieved him of the necessity of a timely, specific trial objection. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Cruel & Unusual Punishment

176. Where defendant pleaded guilty to two indictments for aggravated sexual assault of a child, he contended that his 50-year sentences constituted cruel and unusual punishment. Defendant never objected to the alleged disproportionality of his sentences either in the trial court or in a post-trial motion; in the absence of plain error, his argument was not preserved for review. Chevis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1573 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Guidelines : Adjustments & Enhancements : Criminal History : Prior Felonies

177. Defendant failed to preserve for review his argument that a judgment offered to prove a sentencing enhancement was void. Trial counsel specifically stated that he had no objection to the admission of the judgment. Pool v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7235 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : General Overview

178. Appellant was not denied due process at sentencing because he failed to object to the judge's statement that he would not consider probation under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Teixeira v. State, 89 S.W.3d 190, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

179. Where defendant was convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he was not harmed by the admission of evidence of a prior sexual assault during the punishment phase even though he had been acquitted of the offense. The jury was presented with defendant's lengthy and varied criminal history and threats against the victim; the admission of the prior sexual assault evidence did not influence the jury verdict. Benner v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2977 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 12 2006).

180. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in the sentencing phase, by admitting a videotape depicting him engaging in sexual activity with an unidentified adult female where the State's attempt to establish defendant's character for sexual depravity was a legitimate purpose for permitting the videotape to be shown. Moreover, even if the trial court committed error in permitting the videotape to be played to the jury, the record did not necessarily establish that defendant suffered harm from its admission; as a result of a prior felony conviction, the applicable punishment range for the conviction for indecency with a child was enhanced to the range of 5 to 99 years or life. Chambers v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2693 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Presentence Reports

181. Defendant forfeited his complaint for review regarding his right to have counsel present when a probation officer questioned him during preparation of the presentence report (PSI) because the rights he complained of were not systemic or absolute rights, and he failed to object to the PSI when it was considered by the trial court. Reyes v. State, 361 S.W.3d 222, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1085, 2012 WL 407439 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 9 2012).

182. In order to procedurally perfect for an appellate court's review a trial court's consideration of a presentence report (PSI) that is obtained in alleged violation of a defendant's Fifth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. V, right against self-incrimination; his Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 right to counsel; and his Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. VI, right to have counsel present when a probation officer questions him during preparation of the PSI, the defendant must object to the trial court's consideration of the PSI when it is considered by the trial court. Reyes v. State, 361 S.W.3d 222, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1085, 2012 WL 407439 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 9 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Restitution

183. In a criminal prosecution for arson where defendant did not specifically object to the admissibility of the State's evidence on the issue of restitution, the evidentiary question was not preserved for appellate review. However, defendant's claim that the restitution order lacked a sufficient factual basis was perserved without objection. Drilling v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1509 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 23 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Motions for New Trial

184. Defendant failed to preserve error on his complaint regarding failure to hold an evidentiary hearing on his motion for new trial because, at no point during the hearing did counsel inform the court that defendant had additional information to provide to the court, defendant never attempted to introduce the affidavits into evidence and never indicated to the trial court that he desired to examine the prosecutor or have co-counsel from the trial testify. When the trial court ruled on the motion for new trial, counsel thanked the trial court without notifying the court that defendant had additional evidence to present. Boyce v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 504, 2009 WL 5549302 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 27 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : General Overview

185. In a civil commitment case involving a sexually violent predator, an alleged error relating to a decision to allow experts to testify regarding a patient's truthfulness was not preserved for appellate review because it did not appear that he made an objection at trial. In re Commitment of Tolleson, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3660 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 28 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

186. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

187. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexual predator, a patient failed to preserve an error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 relating to the details of his offenses because he did not object and obtain an adverse ruling each time the complained-of evidence was presented or obtain a running objection to the evidence; the patient did not waive error by waiting until the evidence was repeated to complain that it was prejudicial because it was needlessly cumulative. Even if the patient had preserved error regarding the experts' discussion of the details of the offenses, there was no unfair prejudice under Rule 403; the evidence assisted the jury in weighing each expert's testimony and opinion that each expert offered regarding the ultimate issue in the case. In re Ford, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2221, 2012 WL 983323 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 22 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Procedures : Briefs

188. In a murder trial, defendant failed to preserve error, under Tex. R. App. P. 33, to the expert testimony of a medical examiner and the forensic firearms and tool marks examiner; the court declined to review the issue under Tex. R. Evid. 103, in part because defendant made no attempt to comply wit Tex. R. App. P. 38 by providing authority wherein courts had found the same or similar testimony to have been fundamentally erroneous, or to have caused egregious harm to a defendant. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10011 (Tex. App. San Antonio

Dec. 28 2007).

189. In a murder case, defendant's brief, which lacked citation to authority and argument, was inadequate under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) to support a claim of fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Boler v. State, 177 S.W.3d 366, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2719 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

190. In a drunk driving case, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant waived his objection to the admission of allegedly uncertified copies of judgments because his point of error on appeal did not comport with his trial court objection. Singer v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11712 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Procedures : Records on Appeal

191. Appellate court could not determine whether the trial court abused its discretion by excluding documents published by the United States government relating to immigration because the publication was marked for appellate purposes and was not in the record and defense counsel did not explain what the benefits were or how they were relevant to show any bias or motive to testify on the part of the witness. Guerrero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4219, 2011 WL 2176825 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2011).

192. Appellate court was unable to review the transcript of an alleged telephone conversation between defendant and his wife because it was never marked for appellate review and was not in the record, and defense counsel did not explain what was said during the conversation or how it was relevant to the case. Guerrero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4219, 2011 WL 2176825 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2011).

193. In a prosecution of defendant juvenile for felony murder, the court of appeals had no basis for reviewing defendant's contention that the trial court erred in excluding a defense exhibit in the absence of a bill of exception or offer of proof. In re E.B.M., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : General Overview

194. Because defendant did not object to an officer's testimony that defendant would not provide a statement at the scene of an aggravated assault without an attorney being present, he did not preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Testimonial references to a defendant's pre-arrest silence and his pre-arrest invocation of the right to counsel do not constitute fundamental error. McCullough v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2253 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 23 2005).

195. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by informing the jury that it had overruled defendant's objection to the State's attempt to offer defendant's grand jury testimony, which had occurred outside the jury's presence where the trial judge's explanation was not a comment on the weight of the evidence, and it did not rise to the level of fundamental error because the judge did not express an opinion on the weight of evidence. Martinez v. State, 147 S.W.3d 412, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2897 (Tex. App. Tyler 2004), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3073, 180 L. Ed. 2d 896, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4930 (2011).

196. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err in the sentencing phase, by admitting a videotape depicting him engaging in sexual activity with an unidentified adult female where the State's attempt to establish defendant's character for sexual depravity was a legitimate purpose for permitting the videotape to be shown. Moreover, even if the trial court committed error in permitting the videotape to be played to the jury, the record did not necessarily establish that defendant suffered harm from its admission; as a result of a prior felony conviction, the applicable punishment range for the conviction for indecency with a child was enhanced to the range of 5 to 99 years or life. Chambers v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2693 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Prosecutorial Misconduct

197. Defendant failed to preserve error on his contention that the State committed prosecutorial misconduct by eliciting testimony suggesting that defendant stole the gun because defendant objected only at the beginning of the witness's testimony but did not object to the remainder. Defendant objected to admission of the testimony on relevancy grounds, but did not assert that introduction of the allegedly irrelevant testimony constituted prosecutorial misconduct warranting a mistrial. Thibodeaux v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4964, 2009 WL 1748747 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 23 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

198. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that that the State's introduction of photographs depicting defendant with his hands shackled and bagged behind him because the record showed that the photographs were admitted without objection. Diaz v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8904 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2007).

199. Because a trial judge's qualification of a venire panel in a case involving capital murder and serious bodily injury to a child did not vitiate the presumption of innocence, a failure to object at trial meant nothing was preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; there was no fundamental error affecting substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Mason v. State, 237 S.W.3d 800, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7451 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

200. When the trial court granted defendant's motion to suppress evidence and excluded evidence of a second blood sample taken from defendant after an automobile accident, the State could not rely on Tex. R. Evid. 103 and merely make the substance of the evidence known to the trial court in order to preserve all issues for appeal, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; just as a defendant would be required to do, the State was required to raise all issues with the trial court or they would be forfeited on appeal. State v. Neesley, 196 S.W.3d 356, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4873 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

201. Defendant failed to properly object to evidence that was admitted at trial concerning unindicted aggravated robberies, even though he filed a motion in limine, because he failed to make objections under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) when the evidence was admitted at trial. Ashford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2770 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

202. Defendant preserved his complaint that a witness's outcry statement was insufficient for failure to describe an act for which he was indicted because defendant objected that the summary of the witness's testimony was insufficient and that the witness had indicated that she was going to testify to substantially more than the summary provided. Klein v. State, 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

203. In a child sexual abuse case, because there was no offer of proof, defendant did not preserve, under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a complaint that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence of the bias of a witness. Vega v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

204. By not objecting, defendant failed to preserve error regarding admission of a 911 call tape. Bailey v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1267 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 16 2006).

205. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant forfeited his arguments that his blood test results were improperly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and that he was entitled to an instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Although defendant objected when a blood-draw kit was offered into evidence, he failed to object when the report with the blood-test results was offered. Walker v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1328 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2006).

206. In a capital murder case, although Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) did not require a trial objection to the same evidence after the denial of a motion to suppress, defendant's challenge to the admissibility of oral statements was not preserved for review because defendant's arguments at the suppression hearing dealt only with written statements. Higginbotham v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8184 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 4 2005).

207. In a criminal trespass trial, defendant's complaint that an officer's testimony regarding his intoxication was inadmissible extraneous offense testimony was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because defendant failed to object to the admission of other evidence relating to his intoxication. Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8126 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 29 2005).

208. In a DWI trial, defendant forfeited his objection to laser radar gun evidence under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because he did not voice an objection to the officer's testimony regarding his use of the laser radar gun on defendant's vehicle until after the testimony was already in evidence and the officer was questioned on voir dire. Miley v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8132 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 29 2005).

209. In a criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault, the State gave notice of its intention to use evidence of extraneous offenses committed by defendant and the trial court admitted the evidence. Because defendant did not object on the ground that the State's notice was untimely, the issue was not preserved for review. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

210. Defendant failed to preserve error as to testimony that he had been imprisoned for eight years where he objected after the State's initial question but not to subsequent questioning, and never asked for a running objection or a hearing outside of the jury's presence. Wilson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7663 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 15 2005).

211. Defendant failed to preserve for review his argument that a judgment offered to prove a sentencing enhancement was void. Trial counsel specifically stated that he had no objection to the admission of the judgment. Pool v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7235 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

212. Defense counsel's objection that a police officer was speaking of someone else's knowledge was sufficiently specific to preserve defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. App. P. 103(a)(1); however, where defense counsel cited a field manual entitled "Standardized Field and Sobriety Testing," and had the officer read aloud a portion of it that said a person whose eyes did not track together could be indicative of an injury, serious medical condition, or neurological disorder, the effect of the countervailing evidence introduced was negligible; therefore, error, if any, in the admission of the complained-of hearsay testimony was harmless. Werdlow v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6788 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2005).

213. Where defendant did not object to the admission of the officers' testimony regarding their knowledge of defendant's reputation in the community, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6567 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 18 2005).

214. In a drug and weapons possession case, defendant's objection to an officer's testimony regarding reported drug activities at his residence, made almost immediately thereafter, was timely and was sufficient to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Summerville v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6773 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 18 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9715 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 15, 2005).

215. Any error in excluding an audiotaped interview between a private investigator and a robbery complainant was preserved under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), even though the substance of the evidence was not made known to the court by offer of proof, because the substance of the evidence was apparent from the context within which questions were asked. Guerrero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5734 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 21 2005).

216. Defendant waived any error in the prosecutor's comments on the invocation of his right to counsel and right to remain silent by failing to object to this line of questioning. The error was not preversed for review. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2005).

217. In a kidnapping case, defendant waived a confrontation issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) by failing to raise the issue below. Wright v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5261 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2005).

218. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant waived his argument that the trial court's comment during voir dire was so prejudicial that he was deprived of a fair and impartial trial. There was no fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) that would excuse the waiver because the trial court properly instructed the jury that it could not consider a defendant's refusal to testify for any purpose. Vargas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4626 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

219. Defendant failed to preserve error concerning the admission of extraneous-offense evidence or an identification of defendant as the person who committed a robbery because he failed to object. The record did not contain a running objection or a ruling made outside the presence of the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Russell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3703 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 13 2005).

220. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant's failure to object waived error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the admission of testimony that defendant, after he was advised of his rights, chose not to give a statement and invoked his right to counsel; although the use of defendant's silence and invocation of his right to counsel as evidence of guilt was constitutionally impermissible and was prohibited by Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.38, the error was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Morales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3359 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

221. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant's objection to his girlfriend's testimony that defendant had threatened to kill her by cutting her throat did not assert that it was inadmissible extraneous offense evidence because the threat was not sufficiently similar to the charged offense; hence, defendant could not raise that argument on appeal. Morales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3359 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

222. Defendant's claim that her fundamental right to confrontation was violated by a trial court's sustaining of the State's objections during a witness's cross-examination was not preserved for appellate review pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) because defendant had failed to make an offer of proof and had failed to demonstrate how the substance of the excluded evidence was apparent from the context within which questions were asked. Furthermore, defendant never asserted to the trial court that any of the constitutional rights she complained of in the appeal were violated by the trial court's ruling that sustained the State's objections. Bergman v. State, 2005 Tex.

App. LEXIS 3046 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 21 2005).

223. Because defendant complained only generally at trial of his "right to remain silent," without any further assertions concerning his rights to post-arrest silence under either Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 or the Sanchez case, defendant's trial objection was not sufficient to make the trial court aware of his complaint, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Moreover, the specific grounds of defendant's complaint were not apparent from the context under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Cleveland v. State, 177 S.W.3d 374, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2726 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005), cert. denied 126 S. Ct. 1774, 164 L. Ed. 2d 523, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 3222, 74 U.S.L.W. 3585 (U.S. 2006).

224. In a criminal prosecution for arson where defendant did not specifically object to the admissibility of the State's evidence on the issue of restitution, the evidentiary question was not preserved for appellate review. However, defendant's claim that the restitution order lacked a sufficient factual basis was perserved without objection. Drilling v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1509 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 23 2005).

225. In a murder case, defendant did not preserve his complaint about excluded evidence because he did not make an offer of proof as to the purported meaning of the victim's tattoos, nor demonstrate that the medical examiner had knowledge on the subject. Moore v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1130 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2005).

226. Murder defendant did not preserve for review an argument that his witness should have been allowed to testify that the deceased had attacked the witness with a knife. Defendant did not offer the evidence or obtain a ruling on his offer of proof, and the record did not show the substance of the testimony from the context within which the questions were asked. Denoso v. State, 156 S.W.3d 166, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 878 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

227. In defendant's murder trial, photos were excluded from evidence showing a large pool of blood outside of the victim's motel room; defendant attempted to argue on appeal that these photos were relevant to show that defendant acted in self-defense. Nevertheless, defendant failed to make this argument to the trial court, and he failed to make an offer of of proof; therefore, he failed to preserve the alleged error. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

228. Where excluded evidence was not apparent from the record and since defendant failed to make an offer of proof, the appellate court could not determine whether the evidence was relevant to a defensive issue, nor could it ascertain whether the error, if any, was harmful. Gallardo v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 913 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 3 2005).

229. In a trial for defendant's murder of her child, defendant failed to preserve her argument that the trial court improperly excluded evidence regarding her relationships, which she failed to pursue after being overruled as to the admissibility of her placement in a drug treatment program. She also did not make the required offer of proof regarding that testimony, as well as regarding excluded character evidence, and defendant's testimony regarding her relationship with her other children. Burke v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 198 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2005).

230. In a drunk driving case, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant waived his objection to the admission of allegedly uncertified copies of judgments because his point of error on appeal did not comport with his trial court objection. Singer v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11712 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist.

Dec. 23 2004).

231. Defendant failed to preserve error in allowing witnesses to refer to him by his street nickname, "Thug." Although he objected outside the presence of the jury to the admission of his nickname through one witness's testimony, this objection only relieved him of having to reassert his objection while that particular witness testified. The objection did not preserve error as to other witnesses. Ross v. State, 154 S.W.3d 804, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11407 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

232. Defendant on a charge of child sexual assault preserved error with regard to the admission of the victim's medical records during a hearing outside the presence of the jury in which the trial judge admitted the record and overruled the objections. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not have to object again when the State asked a testifying witness to read the objectionable portion of the record. Perez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11395 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2004).

233. Defendant waived his complaint regarding an officer's testimony that she had known defendant since she first went to work for the police department because he did not object at trial. Dennis v. State, 151 S.W.3d 745, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11296 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2004).

234. Defendant argued that the trial court improperly restricted his attempts to impeach a witness's testimony with a prior statement in which he said he saw the victim in the hallway with a shotgun just before he heard the fatal shot. The State properly responded that the witness's prior written statement was not in the record, and thus defendant had failed to preserve his complaint by making an offer of proof pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103. Lindsey v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11139 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2004).

235. In an aggravated kidnapping case, because no offers of proof were made, defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) regarding the trial court's refusal to admit prior inconsistent videotaped statements and the exclusion of a defense witness' testimony. Kelly v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10492 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 24 2004).

236. Although defendant did not raise the issue on appeal of whether a successfully completed community supervision sentence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 20(a) could be used to enhance a subsequent domestic assualt conviction, the appellate court had the authority to review the issue sus sponte. Comeaux v. State, 151 S.W.3d 710, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10344 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004).

237. Court rejected defendant's contention that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion for a mistrial based on jury misconduct, specifically, a juror sleeping during the trial. Defendant's argument was not properly preserved for appellate review because the only item before the trial court on the motion for mistrial was the statement of defendant's trial counsel. Trial counsel's statement that a juror was sleeping presented no evidence of the matter. It was incumbent upon defendant's trial counsel to develop the record for the trial court in order to clarify which specific juror counsel was referencing and to determine if that juror was sleeping. Thieleman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8833 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 30 2004).

238. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not preserve error on his claims that the trial court erred in allowing the State to refer to his post-arrest silence in violation of Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 due to: (1) the lack of time-specific questions by the State; (2) counsel's failure to cite to the state constitution, or even specify that he was objecting to post-arrest silence; and (3) the lack of commentary by the trial court in making its rulings on the objections. There was no indication in the record that the trial court understood that defendant was trying to invoke a protection different from the U.S. Const. amend. V protection which he was citing. Heidelberg v. State, 144 S.W.3d 535, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1479 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

239. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve error in the trial court's decision to sustain the State's hearsay objections when he attempted to testify regarding statements the victim made to him, and defendant did not make a formal offer of proof concerning this proposed evidence. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6800 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 28 2004).

240. Trial court's exclusion of evidence concerning the lifestyle and the violent nature of the nephew, who was shot to death by defendant, could not be considered error on appeal, as defendant, who was charged with murder did not preserve the issue for review because defendant did not make an offer of proof of what the excluded evidence was and, thus, the appellate court was not left with anything to review in that regard. Goodwin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6692 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 23 2004).

241. Where defendant failed to object to the admission of his statement to authorities regarding the credibility of his victim, he failed to preserve the issue for appellate review because none of the fundamental error categories included the admission or exclusion of evidence. Apolinar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6025 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 7 2004).

242. Complaining party, to preserve a complaint that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence, had to bring forward a record indicating the nature of the evidence and if the excluded evidence was not apparent from the context of the record, it had to be brought forward either through a timely offer of proof or a formal bill of exception; absent a showing of what such testimony would have been, nothing was presented for review, such that although defendant sought to introduce the evidence three times, he did not make an offer of proof regarding what the witnesses would say about the couple's relationship, how that would affect his defense, or how it would assist the jury in its deliberations. Because he made no offer of proof at the time of his objections, defendant waived his right to appeal this issue. Novillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5086 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004).

243. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, where the State offered defendant's statement into evidence without objection, no error was preserved for appellate review. Carter v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4901 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 28 2004).

244. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant waived an objection to the participation of co-counsel for the State because the objection was not made as soon as the basis for it became apparent, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Gardner v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 27 2004), affirmed by 164 S.W.3d 393, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 703 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

245. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, defendant's "amended" motion to suppress was not brought to the trial court's attention until after the State had rested its case during the guilt-innocence stage of the trial. By that time, the intoxilyzer operator had testified extensively about defendant's refusal, and because her motion to suppress on the additional ground was not timely, defendant did not preserve error on that issue. Boles v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3193 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2004).

246. In defendant's drug and robbery case, given that defendant's sentence was not illegal, the complaints that defendant asserted for the first time on appeal were not so fundamental as to have relieved him of the necessity of a timely, specific trial objection. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

247. Where appellant and the victim shot each other, the victim died, appellant asserted self-defense, and the witnesses disagreed as to whether the victim or appellant shot first, appellant's conviction of murder in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02 was affirmed because (1) the evidence as to why appellant was afraid of the victim was irrelevant under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a), (b) because the victim's conduct of flashing his gun and shooting first were unambiguous acts of aggression and violence, (2) appellant failed to properly preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), to the admission of evidence of his gang membership under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and (3) impeachment of the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) was proper because the witness created a false impression with the jury as to the extent of his arrests and convictions. Reyna v. State, 99 S.W.3d 344, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

248. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), an offer of proof was required to preserve error in the trial court's exclusion of part of a defense witness's testimony where the relevant matters the defense was attempting to prove by the testimony were not apparent from the context of the questioning. Railsback v. State, 95 S.W.3d 473, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8492 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

249. Defendant failed to preserve his claim that a trial court violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 by admitting into evidence, in defendant's trial for aggravated assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02, an incriminating statement made by defendant to a police officer after defendant was arrested and before he was given any Miranda warnings; because defendant did not raise his objections before the officer testified as to the statement or obtain an adverse ruling thereon as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the officer thereafter repeated the statement without objection, and defendant's trial objection was made under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.21 rather than Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22. Camarillo v. State, 82 S.W.3d 529, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3228 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

250. Even though defense counsel did not object when the trial court told the jury at the outset of the trial that defendant seriously considered entering into a plea agreement and that he would have preferred that the defendant plead guilty, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) the appellate court was authorized to take notice of fundamental errors affecting substantial rights although they were not brought to the attention of the court, and the trial court's statements were plain error warranting reversal of defendant's conviction and remand. Blue v. State, 41 S.W.3d 129, 2000 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 113 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000), criticized by Rabago v. State, 75 S.W.3d 561, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 1828 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

251. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by refusing her request to take the stand under the limited use doctrine to testify about the voluntariness of her confession, where the record was devoid of any reference to what, if anything, defendant would have testified to. Greenwood v. State, 948 S.W.2d 542, 1997 Tex. App. LEXIS 3616 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1997).

252. Defendant's claim that the trial court improperly communicated his opinion on the merits of the case to the jury in which he pointed to seven specific comments made by the trial court was waived because defendant lodged no objection to any comment, either during the trial or in his motion for a new trial, and without an objection pointing out the error to the trial court, noting was preserved for review under former Tex. R. App. P. 52(a). Mireles v. State, 1997 Tex. App. LEXIS 2179 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 1997).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Constitutional Issues

253. Defendant failed to preserve a complaint regarding the trial court's limitation of cross-examination and consequential exclusion of evidence because counsel did not lodge any complaint in the trial court concerning the denial of the right of confrontation or the exclusion of evidence. Gerik v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 2014 WL 546033 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 10 2014).

254. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that evidentiary rulings would violate his federal constitutional rights because he failed to alert the trial court to the argument; he did not argue that the constitutional rights relied on were immune from procedural default. Rodriguez v. State, 368 S.W.3d 821, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3913, 2012 WL 1744248 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 17 2012).

255. When defendant was convicted for cruelty to an animal under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 42.092(b)(3), he urged the jury to consider his religious beliefs but he never argued to the court or requested a ruling on the constitutionality of the statute; his claim that the animal cruelty statute violated the First Amendment was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Myers v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5665, 2011 WL 2989944 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 21 2011).

256. During defendant's trial for several counts of aggravated robbery, he failed to make a Confrontation-Clause objection to portions of the detective's testimony relating what a declarant told him about defendant's involvement in the crimes; while defendant was not given an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant, he waived his right to challenge the admission of the testimony by failing to object as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Vidal v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6339 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

257. Under the principles of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), the court of appeals reviewed a murder defendant's argument that the trial court's comments created a hostile environment, even though the prosecution argued that the issue was inadequately briefed and that defendant did not preserve error. Lozano v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9439 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

258. Defendant failed to preserve a complaint regarding the trial court's limitation of cross-examination and consequential exclusion of evidence because counsel did not lodge any complaint in the trial court concerning the denial of the right of confrontation or the exclusion of evidence. Gerik v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1446, 2014 WL 546033 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 10 2014).

259. Defendant did not preserve error as to the exclusion of the police report he offered during his cross-examination of an officer because defendant objected to the admission of the report unless he was allowed to examine the witness about the report before the State questioned him. Tesi v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 294, 2014 WL 70084 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 9 2014).

260. At defendant's DWI trial, the court did not deny his rights under the Sixth Amendment by limiting his cross-examination of the State's witness who was a former breath test technical advisor; without the substance of the proffered evidence, defendant's bill of exception failed to preserve his complaint for appellate review. Balderama v. State, 421 S.W.3d 247, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15133, 2013 WL 6637703 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 18 2013).

261. Any error associated with the admission of testimony of an informant and a sheriff's investigator establishing that defendant purchased methamphetamine from a dealer and then re-sold the methamphetamine to others, including the informant, was cured because the complained-of evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection. Alexander v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13562, 2013 WL 5888695 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 31 2013).

262. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress on the ground that the officer lacked reasonable suspicion to justify the traffic stop because he did not file a pretrial motion to suppress and he did not object before or during the State's case-in-chief to the admissibility of any evidence the officers obtained after the stop. Sample v. State, 405 S.W.3d 295, 2013 Tex. App.

LEXIS 7288 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 13 2013).

263. At defendant's trial for failure to comply with sex offender registration requirements, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling his objections to the admission of evidence of an extraneous bad act under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); because his objection in the trial court pertained to lack of adequate notice, his complaint that the evidence in question constituted improper pattern evidence was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Hogan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6706 (Tex. App. Dallas May 30 2013).

264. Even if the trial court erred by admitting testimony from defendant's husband regarding the victim's violent history, the error was harmless because other testimony in the record showed the victim's past violent behavior. To the extent that defendant's argument on appeal was that she should have been allowed to present additional evidence of defendant's violent past, defendant did not preserve error to make that showing. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4661 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 11 2013).

265. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred when it admitted his statement to detectives on the ground that it was not voluntary due to his intoxication was not preserved for appellate review because his objections at trial were not sufficiently specific to inform the trial court that the basis of his objections was involuntariness due to intoxication. Maden v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2619, 2013 WL 1049040 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 13 2013).

266. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred when it admitted his telephone conversation with his wife recorded while he was detained a a police department holding facility on the ground that it violated the Texas wiretapping statute, Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 16.02(b)(1), was not preserved for appellate review because he made no mention of the wiretapping statute or any other Texas statutory provision in his objection to the admission of the recording. Maden v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2619, 2013 WL 1049040 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 13 2013).

267. Even if the trial court erred by admitting into evidence a witness's testimony that defendant had been trying to send someone to harm him and his family, any error was cured when the same type of evidence concerning witnesses' fear of defendant was admitted elsewhere without objection, both before and after the complained-of testimony. Prior to the complained-of testimony, a co-defendant testified that he did not want to tell authorities about defendant's involvement in the offense because "snitches get stitches," and a second co-defendant testified that he gave three different statements to the police because he feared that defendant would harm his family in retaliation; after the complained-of testimony, defendant's ex-wife testified without objection that she came forward with what she knew about defendant's involvement because she feared that defendant would harm her because she no longer wanted to be involved with him. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1058, 2013 WL 476764 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 6 2013).

268. On appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated robbery, he claimed the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to allow the defense to cross-examine a witness regarding his criminal history; because defendant made no offer of proof regarding the underlying facts of the witness's conviction that he wanted to explore, the issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103; Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Henson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 974, 2013 WL 396015 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 31 2013).

269. Defendant preserved for review her argument that the trial court erred in admitting into evidence her fourth recorded interview with the officer, because in her motion to suppress, defendant expressly argued that she was either under arrest or substantially deprived of freedom by the attendant conduct of said law enforcement officers and the surrounding circumstances. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

270. Because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103 detailing what the excluded evidence would have been, the appellate court had no basis for reviewing his contention that the trial court erred in excluding the testimony of defendant's wife about the relationship between defendant and his children. Smith v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9037 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 31 2012).

271. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by excluding the testimony of her expert about approximate vehicle speeds based on "crush analysis" because the expert never stated what speeds she estimated the vehicles to be traveling, which would be crucial to understanding what testimony was excluded and whether the exclusion was harmful. Montgomery v. State, 383 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8491, 2012 WL 4829800 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2012).

272. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by excluding the expert's testimony about the angle of defendant's lane change because the court was unable to determine from the context what the expert would have said about the angle of defendant's vehicle. Montgomery v. State, 383 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8491, 2012 WL 4829800 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2012).

273. Sex offender failed to preserve error regarding the exclusion of his designated expert as an expert witness because he had not shown that he made an offer of proof in the trial court that made the substance of the purported testimony by his designated expert known or that he perfected a bill of exception. In re Brown, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8136, 2012 WL 4466348 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 27 2012).

274. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by excluding an officer's opinion about whether an interviewer used leading questions in a recorded interview because defendant made no offer of proof or bill of exception containing the substance of the officer's excluded testimony. Myles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4911, 2012 WL 2357426 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 21 2012).

275. Defendant failed to make an offer of proof regarding any other mental afflictions suffered by the informant, and therefore he failed to preserve them for review. Dowden v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3584, 2012 WL 1605234 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 8 2012).

276. Defendant's motion in limine and argument on the issue outside the presence of the jury adequately preserved for review his objections to evidence regarding his membership in the Aryan Brotherhood gang without the need to object to testimony as it came in or to obtain a continuing objection. Guffey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3293, 2012 WL 1470185 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 26 2012).

277. In defendant's trial for indecency with a child, defendant failed to preserve his objection to an expert's testimony that false accusations had occurred in about 2 percent of the cases he had been involved in because, after he objected to the initial question posed to the expert, the State rephrased its question and defendant did not object to the rephrased question. Smikal v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2904, 2012 WL 1259127 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 12 2012).

278. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by limiting the scope of cross-examination of the child victim and refusing to admit into evidence two affidavits signed by the victim was not preserved for appellate review because defendant failed to make either a formal bill of exceptions or request permission to make an informal offer of proof and therefore the court had no idea what the victim would have testified to and whether she would have denied making the statements in the affidavits. Duke v. State, 365 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2376, 2012 WL 1005069 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 27 2012).

279. Defendant's claim that her right of confrontation was violated by the trial court limiting her cross-examination during her theft trial presented nothing for review, because the record contained no offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) identifying the substance of the excluded testimony. Huff v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1079, 2012 WL 401047 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 9 2012).

280. Blood-test evidence concerning defendant's accident did not affect his substantial rights during the punishment phase of trial and even if the admission of the evidence in the absence of objection was fundamental error that survived the lack of preservation, its admission was harmless, because defendant pled guilty to four counts of intoxication manslaughter and two counts of intoxication assault, so the only issue was the length of the sentence, and the testimonial and photographic evidence admitted at the punishment phase, combined with the tragic loss of four lives and severe injuries to others, was compelling regarding the nature of the accident and the crimes. Looschen v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10257, 2011 WL 6938516 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 29 2011).

281. Defendant failed to preserve the trial court's alleged error in excluding her proposed testimony about prior acts of abuse by the boyfriend, because the substance of the excluded testimony was not apparent from the context and defendant made no offer of proof. Ellis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

282. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that the trial court erred not allowing him to make a formal bill of exception in question and answer form because defendant first stated he wanted to make a "lawyer's offer of proof" and then requested to make an offer in question and answer format at "the Court's discretion." Armstrong v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9760, 2011 WL 6188608 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 14 2011).

283. Defendant convicted of capital murder following the death of a restaurant employee during a robbery failed to preserve his claim that the trial court erred by excluding a co-conspirator's opinion that defendant could not have anticipated the murder. Defendant did not make an offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Barton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9229, 2011 WL 5846300 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 22 2011).

284. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court erred by admitting an audio-video recording containing portions of his grand jury testimony, because defendant never lodged any complaints regarding self-incrimination, and when the State offered the redacted recording of defendant's grand jury testimony, defendant objected solely on grounds of optional completeness. Lewis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6987, 2011 WL 3925633 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2011).

285. Objection under Tex. R. Evid. 404, 405 did not preserve defendant's complaints under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 regarding evidence of his gang affiliation, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Martin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5624, 2011 WL 2937423 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 21 2011).

286. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress because when the State presented the testimony of the officers who had entered defendant's apartment, defense counsel did not object or re-urge his motion to suppress. Clark v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5160, 2011 WL 2651902 (Tex. App. Austin July 8 2011).

287. Defendant convicted of owning an adult arcade without a permit did not offer evidence on the primary-business defense or the effect of the 50/50 rule during trial and made an untimely offer of proof after the jury charge was read; therefore, any error in excluding the evidence was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Ethridge v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4780, 2011 WL 2502542 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

288. Appellate court could not determine whether the trial court abused its discretion by excluding documents published by the United States government relating to immigration because the publication was marked for appellate purposes and was not in the record and defense counsel did not explain what the benefits were or how they were relevant to show any bias or motive to testify on the part of the witness. Guerrero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4219, 2011 WL 2176825 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2011).

289. Appellate court was unable to review the transcript of an alleged telephone conversation between defendant and his wife because it was never marked for appellate review and was not in the record, and defense counsel did not explain what was said during the conversation or how it was relevant to the case. Guerrero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4219, 2011 WL 2176825 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2011).

290. Appellate counsel's conclusion that an "optional completeness" argument had not been properly preserved for state appellate review was an objectively reasonable deduction because the specificity required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) was lacking; nothing in the exchanges between petitioner inmate's trial counsel and the state trial court reasonably alerted the state trial court that the inmate was suggesting a detective should be permitted to testify to the clearly hearsay within hearsay details of a witness's written statement based upon the Texas Rule of Optional Completeness found in Tex. R. Evid. 107. Hernandez v. Thaler, 787 F. Supp. 2d 504, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123538 (W.D. Tex. May 12 2011).

291. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant convicted of driving while intoxicated (DWI), second offense, failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred in denying his motion for mistrial following publication to the jury of portions of an audio-video recording of the traffic stop that led to his arrest because the recording was admitted and played to the jury without timely objection. Even if defendant had not waived his objection, any error in the admission of the audio recording was harmless because: (1) the recording made only vague reference to an intoxication offense, rather than direct mention of any prior DWI conviction; (2) the audio that was the subject of defense counsel's objection was played only once in open court to the jury, an instruction to disregard was given by the trial court, and only a redacted version excluding the three complained-of references was sent back with the jury to watch during deliberations; (3) the record contained ample evidence to support the jury's finding that defendant was driving while intoxicated; and (4) the jury had the opportunity to view the recording of the traffic stop and defendant's behavior. Doucette v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1750, 2011 WL 832129 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 9 2011).

292. When police officers responded to a domestic disturbance call at the residence of defendant and his wife, she told the officers that defendant had repeatedly struck her with a cane and held a gun to her head during an argument. At defendant's trial for assault, he did not object to the officers' testimony describing the discovery and seizure of the weapon as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) to preserve the issue; thus, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 he could not complain on appeal that the fact of his being armed was irrelevant or unfairly prejudicial. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 859, 2011 WL 350434 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 2 2011).

293. Admission of post-arrest statements by defendant, who was arrested for driving while intoxicated, that he was sorry and that he would not do it anymore could not be challenged as violating a suppression order because defendant failed to object to the evidence during trial as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Jimenez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 194, 2011 WL 192701 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 12 2011).

294. On appeal of defendant's conviction for causing serious bodily injury to a child, he claimed the trial court erred by excluding defensive testimony relevant to his culpable mental state. Defendant failed to preserve this contention for review, because he did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Ord v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9538, 2010 WL 4909951 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 1 2010).

295. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress evidence seized following the traffic stop and his arrest was not preserved for appellate review because his argument, that the officer could not have had the requisite probable cause to believe that a traffic violation had occurred as the evidence showed that the action taken by defendant did not violate any Transportation Code requirements, was not raised until the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial. Butler v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5646, 2010 WL 2836310 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2010).

296. Defendant forfeited his complaints about the admission of evidence that was obtained from his car because he failed to obtain a pretrial hearing or ruling on his motion to suppress and because he allowed the detective to testify about the evidence extensively before objecting to the admission of the State's physical evidence. Ratliff v. State, 320 S.W.3d 857, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5629 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2010).

297. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court abused its discretion by overruling his objection to the marihuana exhibit, because defendant did not obtain a running objection, and when the State offered the report stating that the exhibit to which defendant had previously objected was marihuana, defendant affirmatively stated that he had no objection. Lara v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5640, 2010 WL 2813522 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2010).

298. On appeal of the judgment revoking defendant's community supervision, he argued that the trial court erred by excluding an affidavit from a witness who was unavailable to testify at trial. Because defendant did not offer the affidavit for record purposes or describe the substance of the affidavit to the trial court as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), the error was not preserved for appellate review. White v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4773 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2010).

299. Defendant failed to preserve error in the admission of evidence because he did not object in the trial court, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). The trial court's ruling on the admissibility of evidence did not constitute "fundamental error" under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Roberts v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2374, 2010 WL 1253564 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2010).

300. Counsel properly objected to the State's effort to call a witness in a murder case, and because that objection was addressed before trial, it did not have to be uttered during trial to remain preserved under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Comparan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1173, 2010 WL 597158 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 18 2010).

301. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court erred in excluding testimony from the clinical psychologist, because defendant waived the complaint when he failed to make an offer of proof. Hatcher v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 362, 2010 WL 183521 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 21 2010).

302. Defendant failed to preserve his argument regarding unadjudicated offenses because, although defendant timely objected to the State's first line of questions pertaining to his unadjudicated offenses, defendant did not continue to object to the State's subsequent questions regarding the same unadjudicated offenses. Mccabe v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8828, 2009 WL 3823203 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2009).

303. In a case involving unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, defendant failed to preserve an error relating to the exclusion of evidence of his mental health treatment during the punishment phase of the trial. The trial court's indication that it was not going to allow testimony relating to competency proceedings did not relieve defendant of the responsibility of at least making an offer of proof and obtaining a ruling. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7251, 2009 WL 3365880 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 10 2009).

304. Defendant's objection to extraneous offense evidence that four truckloads of stolen car parts were found at his house, along with evidence that he had purchased stolen car parts in the past, was preserved for appellate review because a bench conference conducted outside of the jury's presence provided the trial court the opportunity to consider the necessary factors and rule on the objection. Marban v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6760, 2009 WL 2618343 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

305. In a driving while intoxicated case, because defendant did not present evidentiary complaints relating to the admission of a police officer's testimony and the results of a breath test to a trial court, they were not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Egerton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4848, 2009 WL 1815772 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

306. Defendant failed to preserve an argument regarding the omission of testimony because, although defense counsel explained to the trial court that defendant could testify as to an alleged prior stabbing or shooting, there was no offer of proof made as to defendant's testimony. Because the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted was not made known to the trial court, and was not apparent from the context, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appellate review. Martinez v. Texas, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 25 2009).

307. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant did not preserve an issue relating to extraneous offense evidence for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 because no objection was lodged; the record was replete with evidence of a homicide, its investigation, and a grand jury's return of a "no-bill" in favor of defendant. Vanderburgh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4643, 2009 WL 1740053 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 18 2009).

308. In defendant's murder case, defendant failed to preserve for review the exclusion of testimony regarding his state of mind because defense counsel did not provide the trial judge with a concise statement regarding the content of the testimony he proposed to elicit from defendant; instead, he merely informed the trial judge of his reason for asking the questions. Gobert v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4341, 2009 WL 1493036 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 28 2009).

309. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault of a child under 14, defendant failed to preserve an alleged error relating to the granting of the State's motion in limine regarding the admission of a videotape because no offer of proof was made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Defendant wanted to offer the tape to rebut the alleged victim's claim that she was afraid of him. Luna v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1146, 2009 WL 400629 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2009).

310. By failing to timely object, defendant waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, an argument that the right to the presumption of innocence was violated by a detective's testimony the detective would have taken a polygraph exam. Whatley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 556, 2009 WL 1607813 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 29 2009).

311. In a robbery case, because defendant failed to offer evidence of the victim's voluntary manslaughter conviction at trial after the trial court granted the State's pretrial motion in limine to exclude evidence of the victim's voluntary manslaughter conviction, no error was preserved for appeal, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 103. Windham v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2440 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 7 2008).

312. In the penalty phase following a guilty plea to manslaughter, defendant failed to preserve challenges to the State's use of the term "murder" because defendant failed to object, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33, and the error was not fundamental under Tex. R. Evid. 103, given that the references were inadvertent. Stevens v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2331 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 3 2008).

313. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33, defendant failed to preserve an argument that the State improperly elicited testimony concerning alleged gang membership because defendant failed to identify the objectionable testimony in the record and did not even assert that defense counsel raised such an objection to the testimony. Marshal v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1411 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2008).

314. During defendant's murder trial, he objected to a police officer's videotaped interview with a witness on Confrontation Clause grounds; on appeal, he claimed the trial court violated Tex. R. Evid. 613 by admitting the recording; because the objection at trial did not comport with the complaint on appeal, the error was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Brandon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8903 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2007).

315. Defendant asserted that the trial court erred in admitting an expert's testimony because he was not qualified to testify as an expert and because his "backdoor opinion" that sex offenders were not capable of being cured violated Tex. R. Evid. 702; that argument was rejected, however, because defendant did not properly object and, therefore, failed to preserve the alleged error as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33. Ghahremani v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8584 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 30 2007).

316. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the timeliness of the State's notice under Tex. R. Evid. 404 of its intent to introduce extraneous offense evidence in a child sexual abuse case because, although he raised the issue, he did not object to any specific testimony or obtain a ruling. Jared v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8448 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 25 2007).

317. Defendant's failure to make specific objections waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issues of hearsay in a police officer's testimony concerning an unsafe lane change and the lack of closing arguments; to the extent defendant's general objection to the officer's testimony could be construed as a more general contention that a conviction could not be based on hearsay evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 802 allows consideration of inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection. James v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7608 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 19 2007).

318. Defendant was accused of severing a complainant's penis with a knife; defendant argued that her actions were in self-defense, and the trial court should have admitted certain evidence in that regard; defendant, however, failed to cite the rules and the statutes to the trial court under which she objected; therefore, defendant's argument was waived on appeal. Ruiz v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6208 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 7 2007).

319. In the punishment phase of a murder trial, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to preserve an expert witness's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 103 once the trial court prohibited the expert witness from testifying; counsel's brief description complied with the requirements to preserve the testimony for appellate review. Johnson v. State, 233 S.W.3d 109, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6010 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

320. Where defendant was convicted of murder, he failed to object to the trial court's admission of his written statement and opinion testimony from two police officers; because the admission of the evidence did not constitute fundamental error, the claims were not preserved for review. Stearns v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5910 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2007).

321. Defendant preserved for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred in admitting impeachment evidence because the hearing outside the jury's presence preserved defendant's complaint. Lopez v. State, 230 S.W.3d 875, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5695 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

322. The trial court correctly admitted statements made by the defendant to his polygraph examiner, finding that the statements were made voluntarily. Defendant never asserted his right to remain silent, and he was not the victim of such deception that his will was overborne; further, promises that the statements would only be heard by the examiner were unlikely to elicit false statements. Harty v. State, 229 S.W.3d 849, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5404 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

323. By failing to object, appellant juvenile failed to preserve his claim that he was not allowed a full cross-examination of the assault victim at the disposition hearing. In re J.L.C., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3063 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 19 2007).

324. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing execution-impact testimony from members of appellant's family because appellant did not make an offer of proof conveying the substance of the proffered evidence and therefore failed to preserve the error. Roberts v. State, 220 S.W.3d 521, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 429 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

325. Because no offer of proof was made regarding testimony about previous problems in the police department crime laboratory and issues surrounding its re-certification and the record did not indicate what the excluded testimony would have been, defendant waived any error regarding the exclusion of that testimony, and nothing was presented for appellate review. Ruiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10318 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 30 2006).

326. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 as to the exclusion of evidence regarding other occupants of a house where drugs were found in her bedroom because she did not make an offer of proof. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8685 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

327. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the testimony of a police officer who stated that the victims identified a witness as being present during an armed robbery; although defendant previously had objected to similar testimony from another officer, he did not obtain a running objection or object outside the jury's presence to all testimony regarding the victims' identification of the witness. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6859 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

328. Where defendant was convicted of possession of cocaine, he did not urge his motion to suppress until the close of the evidence and failed to object to the evidence at the first opportunity; he failed to preserve review of the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress. Alex v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4031 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 10 2006).

329. Defendant juvenile's complaint regarding the admissibility of his statment was preserved because the record as a whole indicated an understanding by the judge and counsel that the juvenile's counsel did not intend to forfeit the issue of admissibility of the statement by stating, "no objection," when it was offered at trial. In re X.J.T., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2312, 2014 WL 787832 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 27 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Exceptions to Failure to Object

330. It was not error to deny defendant's mistrial motion based on a prosecutor allegedly eliciting testimony that defendant was in jail before trial because (1) the testimony was not objected to in a timely manner, as no objection was lodged until after defense counsel asked the witness several follow-up questions, rather than when the witness gave the testimony at issue, (2) the testimony did not create fundamental error, and (3) it was presumed that the jury followed an instruction not to infer defendant's guilt from the testimony. Johnson v. State, 2013 Tex. App.

LEXIS 4524 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 10 2013).

331. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), defendant did not show fundamental error where nothing in the record demonstrated that the witness's testimony was false; defendant's sentence was within the range of punishment and the witness testimony did not affect his sentence. Olivarez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9253, 2012 WL 5458422 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2012).

332. Where defendant entered a plea of true to intoxication manslaughter, defendant waived his claim that the presentation of evidence to the jury during sentencing violated his right to due process of law and equal protection of law. The fundamental error concept set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) did not apply. In re A.D., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3985 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 15 2009).

333. In an aggravated assault case, defendant waived an error relating to a trial court's comments during voir dire because no objection was made, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; there was no fundamental error allowing review because the burden of proof discussed in voir dire did not differ from the jury-charge instructions. Moreover, the comments in this case did not rise to the level set forth by the plurality in Blue v. State, 41 S.W.3d 129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000), because they did not taint defendant's presumption of innocence in front of the venire or vitiate the impartiality of the jury. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

334. Although defendant convicted of the felony offense of resisting arrest, for which he was sentenced to six years in prison pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.03, claimed that the trial court erred by making an erroneous statement regarding the law of juror disqualification to the venire in violation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 35.16(a), Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 35.19 and Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 62.102, the error, if any, was waived because defendant failed to assert any objection to the statement at trial; defendant did not argue that the trial court's alleged error was fundamental, that it bore upon the presumption of his innocence, that it vitiated the jury's impartiality, or that there was any other basis by which he might have been excused from preserving error pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103. Uribe v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1071 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2008).

335. In an appeal from a marijuana conviction, the court reviewed the admission of the marijuana, even though defendant failed to object at the time that the evidence was admitted; under Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant was not required to object to the admission of the marijuana in order to preserve error because the trial court heard the objection to the admission of the marijuana outside of the presence of the jury and admitted the evidence. Skinner v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5498 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2006).

336. Aggravated robbery conviction was affirmed because defendant did not object to the admission of the victim sympathy evidence, and the error, if any, in allowing the introduction of victim sympathy evidence was not fundamental error, when error in admitting evidence, even if constitutional rights were implicated, was neither systemic nor waivable-only, and thus was not fundamental. Connor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4896 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

337. Defendant convicted for possession of a controlled substance waived his challenge to the admission of evidence of methamphetamine discovered after a warrantless patdown search because he stated that he had no objection and did not raise his motion to suppress during trial. Jones v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9001 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 14 2014).

338. Defendant's objection, when it finally arrived, was too late to preserve the complaint; the prosecutor asked defendant a number of times if he thought the victim had lied, and defendant answered a number of times before he finally objected. Donato v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4698 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 30 2014).

339. Where defendant was convicted for failure to comply with sexual offender registration requirements, he failed to preserve review of the prosecutor's comment that he had previously been convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child because he did not object each time the State presented evidence of, or commented on, his previous sexual assault conviction. Hargiss v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3103, 2014 WL 1087924 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 20 2014).

340. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, because a patient did not object or request an instruction to disregard with respect to his complaints on appeal about hearsay or undue prejudice in relation to expert testimony, the error was not preserved for appellate review. The patient argued that the testimony from one expert exceeded the scope of a limiting instruction, and that another expert's testimony about the effect of his offenses on the victims had no probative value regarding the diagnosis of the patient's mental condition and was not related to a prediction of future dangerousness. In re Bocanegra, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 844 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 31 2013).

341. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the trial court abused its discretion by limiting his voir dire examination of a veniremember because he did not object to the trial court's ruling. Samaripas v. State, 446 S.W.3d 1, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 430, 2013 WL 178137 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

342. As to defendant's argument regarding the various, unspecified complaints about the confidential informant from people connected to the apartment building, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Bolton v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9402, 2012 WL 5507404 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 14 2012).

343. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not renew his objection during the detective's testimony, nor did he make a new objection, or seek to renew the objection, during the testimony of the witnesses, or the State's closing argument; defendant preserved nothing for appellate review. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8098, 2012 WL 4393391 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

344. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(1)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not preserve for appellate review his arguments concerning his complaints regarding witness testimony, and he did not object when the witness testified to essentially the same facts as the detective's testimony. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8099 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

345. Defendant failed to preserve his bolstering argument for appeal because his only objections to the admission of the sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony about the victim's statements were that it was hearsay and violated his rights to confront the complainant; defendant never complained to the trial court about the alleged bolstering effect of the testimony and therefore he failed to preserve error on that ground. Bowman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5210, 2012 WL 2444908 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

346. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court made two improper comments on the weight of the evidence because she failed to object to either comment during the trial. The alleged error was not fundamental because the trial court's comments suggested only that defense counsel was attempting to broach a subject that the court had previously and repeatedly instructed the parties to avoid and the trial court believed a defense witness's testimony was a "diatribe." Wyatt v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1308, 2012 WL 512654 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 16 2012).

347. Defendant forfeited his complaint for review regarding his right to have counsel present when a probation officer questioned him during preparation of the presentence report (PSI) because the rights he complained of were not systemic or absolute rights, and he failed to object to the PSI when it was considered by the trial court. Reyes v. State, 361 S.W.3d 222, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1085, 2012 WL 407439 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 9 2012).

348. In order to procedurally perfect for an appellate court's review a trial court's consideration of a presentence report (PSI) that is obtained in alleged violation of a defendant's Fifth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. V, right against self-incrimination; his Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 right to counsel; and his Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. VI, right to have counsel present when a probation officer questions him during preparation of the PSI, the defendant must object to the trial court's consideration of the PSI when it is considered by the trial court. Reyes v. State, 361 S.W.3d 222, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1085, 2012 WL 407439 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 9 2012).

349. Defendant waived error by failing to object to the trial court's comments on reasonable doubt during voir dire, because the comments did not rise to the level of fundamental error, when the comments did not taint the presumption of innocence. Haro v. State, 371 S.W.3d 262, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10218, 2011 WL 6938530 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 29 2011).

350. Defendant forfeited her complaint about the evidence under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and the evidentiary complaints made by her were not fundamental under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Osborne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9299, 2011 WL 5903651 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 23 2011).

351. Defendant neither filed a motion to suppress any evidence nor asserted an objection when the State offered the handgun into evidence; consequently, defendant failed to preserve this point for appellate review. Nero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9039, 2011 WL 5515495 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 10 2011).

352. Any statements addressed to defendant were for the purpose of clarifying an issue before the court, that being rehabilitation, and the trial court maintained a neutral and detached role; thus, an objection was required. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750, 2011 WL 5221263 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 26 2011).

354. Defendant did not preserve his claim that the court improperly permitted the officer to state his expert opinion that defendant was intoxicated for review because he did not object to this testimony at trial, and defendant did not argue that the admission of the evidence was fundamental error; the officer explained the basis of his opinion, permitting the jury to evaluate whether it agreed with the officer's conclusion. Reyna v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5038, 2011 WL 2621314 (Tex. App. Austin July 1 2011).

355. Defendant failed to preserve his claim for review, Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, as he did not make a record showing what other evidence he wanted to elicit. The appellate court could not tell what other evidence besides the witness's opinion testimony about the informant's credibility defendant sought to admit. Hicks v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4623, 2011 WL 2436818 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 16 2011).

356. Viewed in its proper context, the jury instruction neither tainted defendant's presumption of innocence or prevented him from receiving a fair trial, and no fundamental error was committed; therefore, defendant waived the issue by failing to object at trial. Gonzales v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4376, 2011 WL 2404272 (Tex. App.

Corpus Christi June 9 2011).

357. At the revocation hearing, defendant objected to an officer's testimony concerning text messages that he found on a cell phone that was in defendant's possession at the time of her arrest for driving while intoxicated on the grounds that the officer lacked a warrant, probable cause, or reasonable suspicion to justify searching the cell phone. Because defendant did not object that the testimony was hearsay or that it violated the Confrontation Clause, these issues were not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103 (a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Bird v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4211, 2011 WL 2203925 (Tex. App. Eastland June 2 2011).

358. After the trial court denied defendant's motion in limine, he waived his complaint regarding the officer's testimony about the horizontal gaze nystagmus field sobriety test during his trial for driving while intoxicated. Defendant made no objection as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and his motion in limine was not sufficient to preserve the error for review. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2352, 2011 WL 1198922 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2011).

359. Denial of defendant's motion in limine was not sufficient to preserve error in admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous offenses. By not objecting in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 103 to the admission of his guilty pleas at trial, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appellate review. Kuykendall v. State, 335 S.W.3d 429, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1722 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 9 2011).

360. Any error in admitting testimony regarding an extraneous offense was cured by defendant's failure to object, as required under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), when the same evidence was introduced through later testimony. Griffin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1039, 2011 WL 531558 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 15 2011).

361. On appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he claimed the trial court abused its discretion by admitting evidence that two of the guns found in his apartment were stolen. Because the jury had already heard evidence from two different witnesses that the guns were stolen without any objection from defendant, the error was not properly preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Chenier v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 678, 2011 WL 286156 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 27 2011).

362. Because the record was silent as to whether appellant objected to the trial court's response to the jury's second note regarding deadlock to "keep deliberating", it was presumed that the trial court complied with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 36.27 regarding communications with the jury; by failing to timely object to the trial court's written response to the jury to "keep deliberating" as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), appellant failed to preserve his claim that the response was unduly coercive. Hartman v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6569, 2010 WL 3193565 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 12 2010).

363. Defendant forfeited his complaints about the admission of evidence that was obtained from his car because he failed to obtain a pretrial hearing or ruling on his motion to suppress and because he allowed the detective to testify about the evidence extensively before objecting to the admission of the State's physical evidence. Ratliff v. State, 320 S.W.3d 857, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5629 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 15 2010).

364. Defendant was properly sentenced to five years' community supervision for sexual assault of a child, because the jury initially returned a verdict sentencing defendant to two years and recommending community supervision, which was illegal under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, and the trial court properly declared the verdict illegal and sent the jury back to continue its deliberations under the charge, and the jury returned with a proper verdict sentencing defendant to the minimum sentence available under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12 for a recommendation of community supervision for an offense under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011; defendant did not object to the instruction that the jury follow the law, and there was no indication that the instruction constituted fundamental error, but rather the instruction was correct on the law. Mayes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5393, 2010 WL 2723161 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 8 2010).

365. Defendant failed to preserve his points for appellate review in a driving while intoxicated trial as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because, although defendant objected to the expert's qualifications to testify on the subject of retrograde extrapolation, he did not object to the expert's specific testimony that related to the points he brought on appeal. Roe v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4904, 2010 WL 2555189 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 24 2010).

366. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the State commented on his failure to call defense witnesses, because defendant should have objected to the State's statements when it first became apparent that the State was referencing defendant's failure to call family members to testify. Charles v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4644, 2010 WL 2432048 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 17 2010).

367. Because defendant failed to object during trial to the constitutionality of the prosecutor's opening statement and the introduction of evidence that defendant refused to cooperate with the police investigation, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Saldivar v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3445, 2010 WL 1840240 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

368. Defendant forfeited his appellate complaint that Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.07 was unconstitutional because, at the revocation hearing, defense counsel did not state that any of art. 42.07's three reasons for withholding pronouncement of sentence applied and voiced no objection or complaint with respect to assessment of punishment and there were no post-judgment motions that included argument or authority challenging the constitutionality of art. 42.07; defendant referred to no authority holding that his complaint constituted either a waivable-only right or an absolute, systemic requirement, and thus failed to establish fundamental error. Arguellez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7832, 2009 WL 3210934 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 8 2009).

369. Trial court's statements to the jury venire during voir dire were not improper comments on the weight of the evidence in violation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.05 and did not rise to fundamental error because the trial court properly laid out the manner in which a misdemeanor theft offense was enhanced to a felony third-offender offense and described the State's burden, and, taken in context, the trial court explained to the venire that there had to have been an allegation of two prior theft convictions to charge a defendant with felony third-offender theft; the trial court explained that defendant was guilty only if the State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that he had been previously convicted of the two prior felony thefts alleged and that he had committed the underlying theft offense. The statements neither tainted defendant's presumption of innocence nor compromised the impartiality of the jury. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232, 2009 WL 3050588 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 10 2009).

370. In an aggravated assault case, an alleged error based on a prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant during the punishment phase of the trial was not preserved for review because the objection before the trial court did not comport with the issue raised on appeal; instead of bringing forth an objection based on DeGarmo v. State, 691 S.W.2d 657 (Tex. Crim. App. 1985), during trial, an objection was made that a question had been "asked and answered." Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

371. In an aggravated assault case, because defendant cited no binding authority for an argument that an appellate court should have waived a contemporaneous objection requirement and applied the principles associated with jury-charge error, as set out in Almanza v. State, 686 S.W.2d 157 (Tex. Crim. App. 1984), to commentary made during voir dire as a way of determining that egregious harm resulted, the argument was rejected. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20

372. In a case involving the civil commitment of a patient found to be a sexually violent predator, the patient failed to object at the first opportunity to an expert's opinion regarding truthfulness; therefore, the alleged error was not preserved for appellate review. In re Commitment of Eeds, 254 S.W.3d 555, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3337 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

373. Defendant failed to preserve his claim that a trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation by excluding certain testimony aimed at impeaching the key witness against him because although defendant argued that the testimony should be admitted because it would impeach the witness's credibility, he did not specifically assert his right of confrontation. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2644 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 15 2008).

374. Although defendant convicted of the felony offense of resisting arrest, for which he was sentenced to six years in prison pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.03, claimed that the trial court erred by making an erroneous statement regarding the law of juror disqualification to the venire in violation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 35.16(a), Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 35.19 and Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 62.102, the error, if any, was waived because defendant failed to assert any objection to the statement at trial; defendant did not argue that the trial court's alleged error was fundamental, that it bore upon the presumption of his innocence, that it vitiated the jury's impartiality, or that there was any other basis by which he might have been excused from preserving error pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103. Uribe v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1071 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2008).

375. Defendant failed to preserve for review, as required under Tex. R. App. P. 33, his claims that the trial court abandoned its role as a neutral arbiter and thereby denied defendant his right to a fair trial, as he failed to show that he was prejudiced and that the fundamental error doctrine applied under Tex. R. Evid. 103; the trial court was permitted to question a witness to clarify defendant's misstatement of the witness's testimony, it was permitted to intervene under Tex. R. Evid. 611 by asking the State for objections to defendant's questioning; the trial court's insistence that defendant ask a witness relevant questions did not translate into an indication of the judge's views about defendant's guilt or innocence. Bogany v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10074 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2007).

376. Defendant's convictions for multiple counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, indecency with a child, and sexual assault were appropriate pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 because defendant's claim that the trial court erred in admitting testimony that pornography was recovered from a computer seized during the search of his home was not preserved for appellate review; defendant failed to object at trial when an investigator testified that images of pornography involving animals were found on the computer. Patterson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9264 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 29 2007).

377. On appeal of his conviction for theft, defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting evidence concerning various instances of prior bad acts in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); because defendant did not object to the testimony when it was first elicted, he waived any error concerning the admissibility of such testimony according to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Craig v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6027 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2007).

378. Where defendant was convicted of murder, he failed to object to the trial court's admission of his written statement and opinion testimony from two police officers; because the admission of the evidence did not constitute fundamental error, the claims were not preserved for review. Stearns v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5910 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2007).

379. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault on a child case, defendant failed to preserve for review his complaint regarding admission of a statement he made to a witness because defendant objected on various grounds, including relevance, when the State asked the witness whether defendant made any comments of a sexual nature about young women, but defendant did not object when the State subsequently asked the witness to relay the substance of the comment at issue. Silva v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4720 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 19 2007).

380. Alleged sexually violent predator (SVP) failed to timely object to foundational basis for experts' opinion that he was likely a repeat offender; therefore, the alleged SVP waived his sole issue on appeal. In re Commitment of Sanchez, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3787 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 17 2007).

381. Where defendant pleaded guilty to two indictments for aggravated sexual assault of a child, he contended that his 50-year sentences constituted cruel and unusual punishment. Defendant never objected to the alleged disproportionality of his sentences either in the trial court or in a post-trial motion; in the absence of plain error, his argument was not preserved for review. Chevis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1573 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2007).

382. Given defendant's attorney's concession that defendant's comment that she had not had too much to drink in "many, many, many years" opened the door to questioning about prior driving while intoxicated (DWI) arrests and convictions, as well as his failure to object, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for new trial on her DWI conviction. Richardson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1052 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 14 2007).

383. Although the State asked a six-year-old sexual assault complainant numerous leading questions, defendant's trial counsel had objected only once, and because the one question objected to was not a leading question, the trial court did not err in overruling the objection; by not objecting to each leading question, defendant had not preserved his complaint for appellate review in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Embree v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7772 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

384. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof and the substance of the testimony regarding the victim's reputation for truthfulness at issue was not apparent from the context, his fourth point presented nothing for review. Jagneaux v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7871 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

385. Victim's counselor testified three times about the victim's statements about what defendant had done before defendant objected, and the need for an objection was apparent from the moment the prosecutor asked the counsel to use the victim's words; thus, defendant's objection was untimely, and this point was not preserved for appellate review. Jagneaux v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7871 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

386. Where defendant was convicted of possession of cocaine, he did not urge his motion to suppress until the close of the evidence and failed to object to the evidence at the first opportunity; he failed to preserve review of the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress. Alex v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4031 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 10 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Prosecutorial Misconduct

387. Appellant did not set forth and the court found no authority characterizing the State's discussion of plea negotiations or of the defendant's criminal history during closing argument as systemic, waivable-only, or fundamental or plain error; courts repeatedly had emphasized that a defendant had to preserve a complaint that the State's closing argument was improper. Parker v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9419, 2011 WL 5984539 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 1 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

388. Where defendant was convicted for failure to comply with sexual offender registration requirements, his claim that the trial court erred by overruling his objection to the prosecutor's closing argument was not preserved for review because it was not clear from his objection what he was objecting to at trial. Hargiss v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3103, 2014 WL 1087924 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 20 2014).

389. Defendant preserved the hearsay issue for appellate review, because the record clearly indicated that defendant objected to two portions of the medical record that were purportedly hearsay, even going so far as to read them aloud to the court, and counsel requested specific rulings on the hearsay and Crawford objections, which the trial court provided and from which defendant asked for reconsideration. Trevizo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 652, 2014 WL 260591 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 22 2014).

390. Defendant preserved the hearsay issue for appellate review, because the record clearly indicated that defendant objected to two portions of the medical record that were purportedly hearsay, even going so far as to read them aloud to the court, and counsel requested specific rulings on the hearsay and Crawford objections, which the trial court provided and from which defendant asked for reconsideration. Trevizo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 652, 2014 WL 260591 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 22 2014).

391. Prosecutor did not make a proper objection by remarking that he did not want that done after the trial court suggested to defense counsel that he could respond in closing to the prosecutor's closing argument that defendant's refusal to take a breath test was evidence of his intoxication. Montoya v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 473, 2014 WL 223228 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 16 2014).

392. Defendant convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon failed to preserve error on his claim that the trial court abused its discretion by limiting his cross-examination of the victim to exclude questions regarding the victim's drug use after the assault because defendant failed to make an offer of proof for the excluded testimony. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

393. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because his counsel did not make an offer of proof with the psychiatrist regarding the issue of behavioral abnormality, nor did he identify the answers he expected to receive from the psychiatrist. Without an offer of proof, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the trial court excluded relevant examination or whether the exclusion of the evidence was harmful, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

394. Merely stating a desire to ask questions about an officer's basis for reasonable suspicion, as defense counsel did, did not apprise the trial court of the basis for the objection or the testimony desired; because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103, he preserved nothing for appellate review. Emale v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9913 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2012).

395. Without an offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, the court declined to speculate about the nature of a trooper's excluded testimony. Watts v. State, 371 S.W.3d 448, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3607, 2012 WL 1601886 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

396. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by limiting the scope of cross-examination of the child victim and refusing to admit into evidence two affidavits signed by the victim was not preserved for appellate review because defendant failed to make either a formal bill of exceptions or request permission to make an informal offer of proof and therefore the court had no idea what the victim would have testified to and whether she would have denied making the statements in the affidavits. Duke v. State, 365 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2376, 2012 WL 1005069 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 27 2012).

397. Appellant did not set forth and the court found no authority characterizing the State's discussion of plea negotiations or of the defendant's criminal history during closing argument as systemic, waivable-only, or fundamental or plain error; courts repeatedly had emphasized that a defendant had to preserve a complaint that the State's closing argument was improper. Parker v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9419, 2011 WL 5984539 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 1 2011).

398. Defendant waived any error regarding the admission of the officer's testimony concerning the recording device in the patrol car, because defendant failed to object to the testimony in the trial court on the ground that he raised on appeal; the record did not reflect that defendant made or obtained a running objection to the admission of the evidence of which he now complained. Norfleet v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4567, 2011 WL 2436494 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2011).

399. Instruction to the jury that two defense witnesses violated the witness rule in Tex. R. Evid. 614 was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) because the comment on the evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.05 only suggested that the witnesses might be untrustworthy rather than that defendant might be guilty. Powell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2888, 2011 WL 1466876 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 15 2011).

400. Petitioner forfeited his complaint about the admission of the polygraph results, because although the petitioner objected to the first portion of the community supervision officer's testimony that mentioned the results of his polygraph tests and objected to a question in the middle of his own testimony, the petitioner did not object to every question or answer that disclosed the results, and he did not obtain a running objection to the polygraph evidence. Gardner v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8991, 2010 WL 4569899 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 4 2010).

401. Defendant failed to preserve his points for appellate review in a driving while intoxicated trial as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because, although defendant objected to the expert's qualifications to testify on the subject of retrograde extrapolation, he did not object to the expert's specific testimony that related to the points he brought on appeal. Roe v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4904, 2010 WL 2555189 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 24 2010).

402. Defendant's objection that the complainant's testimony was in violation of a motion in limine was not a specific objection sufficient to preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. P. 33.1(a)(1), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). A motion in limine did not preserve error. Bennett v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4436, 2010 WL 2347066 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 9 2010).

403. Defendant failed to preserve error on his complaint regarding failure to hold an evidentiary hearing on his motion for new trial because, at no point during the hearing did counsel inform the court that defendant had additional information to provide to the court, defendant never attempted to introduce the affidavits into evidence and never indicated to the trial court that he desired to examine the prosecutor or have co-counsel from the trial testify. When the trial court ruled on the motion for new trial, counsel thanked the trial court without notifying the court that defendant had additional evidence to present. Boyce v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 504, 2009 WL 5549302 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 27 2010).

404. Defendant's claim of error with respect to the admission of the recorded interview with an officer was not preserved for appellate review because, after the trial court concluded that the recording indicated that defendant was advised of his rights, defense counsel stated, "I have nothing else." The opportunity presented itself for defendant to clarify the objection and to specifically state the basis of it to have involved the mention of extraneous offenses. Crews v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9677, 2009 WL 4907423 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 22 2009).

405. Defendant failed to preserve his argument regarding unadjudicated offenses because, although defendant timely objected to the State's first line of questions pertaining to his unadjudicated offenses, defendant did not continue to object to the State's subsequent questions regarding the same unadjudicated offenses. Mccabe v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8828, 2009 WL 3823203 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2009).

406. Defendant failed to preserve for review his complaint under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22, § 3(a)(2) because, in light of defendant's clearly and persistently articulated constitutional argument, and the lack of a statutory reference in his second motion to suppress, defendant's reference to the videotape was most likely part of his argument that the police had violated his rights under the United States and Texas Constitutions by failing to Mirandize him. Resendez v. State, 306 S.W.3d 308, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1439 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

407. Defendant preserved an issue relating to the admission of autopsy photographs, even though he did not specifically invoke Tex. R. Evid. 403, because he objected on the basis that they were unfairly prejudicial and needlessly cumulative and the trial court granted him a running objection to the admission of each of the photographs, as permitted Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Kilgore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6904, 2009 WL 2707175 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 28 2009).

408. In defendant's burglary case, he failed to preserve for review an issue of the admission of extraneous offenses because trial counsel made no objection to the State's alleged violation of the motion in limine, and the record reflected that the district court, if anything, ruled in defendant's favor and excluded evidence related to the offenses. Thus, the exception provided by Tex. R. Evid. 103 did not apply. Perez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6521, 2009 WL 2567908 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 21 2009).

409. Defendant failed to preserve error relating to a trial court's ruling that evidence of diminished capacity was not admissible during the guilt phase of a capital murder trial because he did not make an offer of proof, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103; because the trial court intended for the exclusion of diminished capacity evidence to apply to the entire guilt phase of the trial, defendant was obligated to make an offer of proof that extended beyond the anticipated questions to, and topics of discussion with, potential jurors during voir dire. The fact that a trial judge was mistaken about the need for an offer of proof did not relieve defendant of his burden. Mays v. State, 285 S.W.3d 884, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 981 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

410. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant's objection was specific enough to put the trial judge and opposing counsel on notice of the issue and to afford them the opportunity to remedy the defect by calling an expert witness. The trial judge specifically stated that defendant made his record for the objection, and that indicated that the trial judge was aware of the basis for objection, but found it did not have any merit. Layton v. State, 280 S.W.3d 235, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 149 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

411. In a sexual assault of a child case, defendant failed to preserve his complaint of the child's competency to testify because the trial court found the child competent to testify, and defendant did not object, nor did he object when the trial court made its finding of competency. Furthermore, defendant did not make any objections when the child testified in the presence of the jury. Martin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8437 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

412. Defendant's contention that a DVD recording of his statement to a detective violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 was not properly preserved for appellate review because defendant complained to the trial court that there were omissions on the tape, but he did not argue that the device used to make the recording was incapable of making an accurate recording. Ellison v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6901 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 10 2008).

413. Defendant failed to preserve for review his claim that the trial court erred by denying him the opportunity to cross-examine one victim about her alleged sexual relationship with someone else because defendant made no offer of proof indicating the victim's answers to the questions and the substance of the evidence was not apparent from the context within which the questions were asked. Franklin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1171 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 20 2008).

414. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), a murder defendant waived the argument that autopsy photos were not relevant because an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403 did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6397 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2007).

415. Defendant alleged that the in-court identification of defendant was improperly suggestive in violation of his due process rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments because the arresting officer reviewed a photograph of defendant about one month prior to the trial; however, the issue was not preserved for appellate review because the objection was not timely under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 since (1) defendant failed to object when the officer's testimony about her review of the photograph was first elicited; and (2) counsel waited until the State rested before asserting any objections to the testimony. Abraham v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2109 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 20 2007).

416. State's questions specifically referenced only one period of time -- when defendant was in police custody and before Miranda rights were read to him; the context of the questions, therefore, could only implicate defendant's post-arrest, pre-Miranda right to remain silent, which was protected only by Tex. Const. art. I, § 10; thus, despite the failure of the objection to specifically reference the Texas Constitution, given the context of the State's question, the objection was specific enough to have put the trial court on notice of defendant's objection; therefore, defendant's objection was sufficient to preserve for appellate review his claim that his right against self-incrimination was violated. Wyborny v. State, 209 S.W.3d 285, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10109 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

417. In an aggravated robbery and burglary case, because defendant failed to lodge a timely objection pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 during the State's enhancement presentation, he forfeited appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) of his complaint regarding issues raised before the jury panel regarding his criminal history; the motion in limine indicated that defendant understood that measures were necessary to prevent the jury panel from being informed of his prior criminal history, and he failed to show any legitimate reason for waiting until the conclusion of the State's voir dire presentation to lodge his complaint. Lowe v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9487 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 1 2006).

418. Although defendant complained about a Power Point presentation that the State displayed for the venire panel, which set out the range of punishment for driving while intoxicated in a variety of scenarios, his objection was untimely and thus failed to preserve his complaint for appellate review where it appeared that he had the opportunity to review the Power Point slides before voir dire and affirmatively stated that he had no objection to the slides. Thrower v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6884 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 3 2006).

419. Defendant failed to preserve his complaint regarding prior acts evidence for review because the sister of a prior assault victim testified to the same or similar incidents and defendant did not object to her testimony, his earlier general objections to the testimony of that victim's children did not preserve error when the same evidence regarding the incidents of assault against the victim was admitted. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163

420. Where defendant was convicted of two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, he failed to preserve error in the trial court's admission of extraneous-offense evidence of defendant's sexual assault of the victim's younger sister; the same evidence was admitted through the testimony of several witnesses, and counsel did not timely object as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Sinclair v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4277 (Tex. App. Waco May 17 2006).

421. Defendant failed to preserve a point of error for review because he did not point to any offer of proof in the record; in order to preserve error, defendant would have had to engage in a question and answer with the witness outside of the jury's presence, or summarize what he believed the evidence would be. Ford v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2379, 2014 WL 823409 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 28 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

422. Counsel did not object when defendant was forced to take a breath test before his DWI trial to determine if he was intoxicated in the courtroom; defendant forfeited his right to complain about the admission of any evidence relating to the breath test or his alleged intoxication in the courtroom. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2771 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

423. In a revocation of community supervision proceeding, because defendant's complained-of error regarding the neutrality of the trial court did not rise to the level of fundamental error, and because there was no reason to believe that an objection would have been futile, defendant waived her appellate challenges by failing to object at trial. Perez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

424. Where the record showed that during the punishment phase of the trial, defendant's stepfather testified that defendant had previously taken his car without permission, defendant's conviction of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon was affirmed; defendant waived his objection as to the admission of his stepfather's testimony where he failed to object when subsequent witnesses testified about the same subject under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Childs v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9825 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 20 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Admission of Evidence

425. Defendant convicted for possession of a controlled substance waived his challenge to the admission of evidence of methamphetamine discovered after a warrantless patdown search because he stated that he had no objection and did not raise his motion to suppress during trial. Jones v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9001 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 14 2014).

426. Trial court did not err by revoking defendant's community supervision because the victim's positive identification of him as the individual who exposed himself to her on a college campus was sufficient to show that he committed the offense of indecent exposure. Because defendant did not make any objections to the admissibility of the in-court identification, he waived any error in the trial court's admission of the testimony. Samuel v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14665 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 5 2013).

427. Defendant waived any error in the admission of extraneous bad acts allegedly committed by defendant because he never obtained an adverse ruling as to the prior victim's testimony, and he did not object when the prior victim testified that defendant had spanked him. Reckart v. State, 323 S.W.3d 588, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7002 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26 2010).

428. In the absence of a timely and specific objection, defendant's claim that trial court erred in allowing testimony to be presented that may have amounted to a comment on his right to remain silent was not preserved for review. Perales v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5829 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 6 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : Waiver Triggers Generally

429. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because, without an offer of proof, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the trial court's exclusion of the doctor's testimony regarding his rate of error was erroneous and harmful, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Thus, respondent's claim was waived. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

430. Because defendant did not make a Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection at any point during the testimony of a witness or when the State actually introduced the exhibit, the Rule 403 complaint was waived; defendant did not obtain a running objection based on Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) after he first objected to the witness's testimony on the subject of the altercation at the hospital, and he did not raise a Rule 404(b) or 403 objection when the State offered the video, and as such, he waived error. White v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8118, 2011 WL 4825650 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 12 2011).

431. Defendant's trial counsel did not lodge any objections or obtain a running objection pertaining to the complained-of testimony regarding defendant's alleged misdeeds in his real estate dealings; thus, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issue was waived on appeal. Whitley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8651, 2010 WL 4264661 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 28 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Right to Appeal : Government

432. When the trial court granted defendant's motion to suppress evidence and excluded evidence of a second blood sample taken from defendant after an automobile accident, the State could not rely on Tex. R. Evid. 103 and merely make the substance of the evidence known to the trial court in order to preserve all issues for appeal, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; just as a defendant would be required to do, the State was required to raise all issues with the trial court or they would be forfeited on appeal. State v. Neesley, 196 S.W.3d 356, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4873 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : General Overview

433. Defendant forfeited his appellate complaint that Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.07 was unconstitutional because, at the revocation hearing, defense counsel did not state that any of art. 42.07's three reasons for withholding pronouncement of sentence applied and voiced no objection or complaint with respect to assessment of punishment and there were no post-judgment motions that included argument or authority challenging the constitutionality of art. 42.07; defendant referred to no authority holding that his complaint constituted either a waivable-only right or an absolute, systemic requirement, and thus failed to establish fundamental error. Arguellez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7832, 2009 WL 3210934 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 8 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

434. It could not be determined on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion by precluding defendant from questioning an officer about an allegedly inconsistent statement she gave to the police department's Internal Affairs Division to demonstrate bias because defendant did not make an offer of proof by presenting the entire statement. Foster v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1139, 2013 WL 476817 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 7 2013).

435. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing execution-impact testimony from members of appellant's family because appellant did not make an offer of proof conveying the substance of the proffered evidence and therefore failed to preserve the error. Roberts v. State, 220 S.W.3d 521, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 429 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : New Trial

436. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on a sworn statement by another individual confessing to the crime because the letter was in the record before the court and defendant failed to make an offer of proof at trial regarding the excluded letter and its contents. Henry v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7590 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 5 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

437. Record did not establish harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) from the trial court's failure to conduct a pretrial hearing to determine the admissibility of impeachment evidence because defendant elected not to testify; the jury, therefore, was not exposed to the allegedly prejudicial evidence; any possible harm flowing from the refusal to conduct a hearing was wholly speculative. Yanez v. State, 187 S.W.3d 724, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1289 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

438. Testimony by the officer that defendant could have been destroying evidence prior to his arrest was properly before the jury where the same evidence came in elsewhere without objection along with defendant's admission of two prior possession convictions of cocaine; thus, even without the officer's testimony, there was ample evidence that defendant was in possession of cocaine on the occasion in question and the officer's testimony did not have a substantial influence on the jury's verdict. Gardner v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2268 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 23 2005).

439. Appellant failed to show harm from a trial court's exclusion of extrinsic evidence of out-of-court statements made by State's witness where appellant's counsel made no offer of proof detailing the questions counsel wanted to ask or the specific inconsistent statements to be used for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

440. Where defendant was a passenger in a vehicle she had rented when it was pulled over by a sheriff's deputy, a consensual search led to the seizure of illegal drugs and the arrest of defendant and the driver, defendant was charged with unlawful possession, which required proof of intentional or knowing possession of the drugs, defendant consistently denied knowledge of the drugs, and the State relied upon circumstantial evidence to establish knowledge where the driver's statement to law enforcement, in which she claimed responsibility for the situation and asserted that she "used" defendant to obtain the rental vehicle and that defendant knew nothing about the drugs, was a statement against penal interest supported by corroborating evidence indicating its trustworthiness and should have been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) and its exclusion prevented defendant from adequately supporting her defense and substantially and injuriously affected the jury's verdict, thereby affecting a substantial right of the defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). James v. State, 102 S.W.3d 162, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 181 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

441. There was no reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because admitting the outcry witness's testimony without first conducting a hearing pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 was harmless, where the testimony included the same facts that were admitted into evidence without objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Duncan v. State, 95 S.W.3d 669, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9309 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

442. Where exclusion of evidence relevant to the defense of self-defense did not preclude presentation of the defense altogether, the exclusion did not impinge upon constitutional rights. Because the exclusion did not affect a substantial right, there was no error under this rule. Potier v. State, 68 S.W.3d 657, 2002 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 33 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

443. Exclusion of character evidence that a murder victim occasionally drank to excess and was violent when he drank was harmless error, given that defendant was able to present his defense that the victim was drunk and pulled a shotgun on defendant, which defendant then used to kill the victim. Milliff v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4589, 2014 WL 1713897 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 29 2014).

444. Even if the trial court erred by admitting testimony from defendant's husband regarding the victim's violent history, the error was harmless because other testimony in the record showed the victim's past violent behavior. To the extent that defendant's argument on appeal was that she should have been allowed to present additional evidence of defendant's violent past, defendant did not preserve error to make that showing. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4661 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 11 2013).

445. At defendant's trial for DWI, the admission of medical records containing extraneous offense evidence did not have a substantial effect on the verdict under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), because the jury heard evidence that defendant was passed out in his vehicle with a bottle of alcohol between his legs; the officer noticed defendant's glassy and bloodshot eyes, defendant admitted he consumed alcohol and prescription medications, and field sobriety test results suggested intoxication. The record contained sufficient evidence from which the jury could find defendant guilty of DWI beyond a reasonable doubt. Lorenz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7777, 2012 WL 4017766 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 12 2012).

446. Even if the trial court erred by admitting extraneous offense evidence, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights because: (1) the record did not indicate that the State specifically mentioned the agent's testimony regarding the 20 instances when similar counterfeit bills were passed; (2) the trial court instructed the jury that it could not consider extraneous offenses unless it found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offenses; and (3) the record contained sufficient other evidence to support defendant's forgery conviction. Mookdasnit v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2220, 2012 WL 983333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 21 2012).

447. Although the appellate court assumed without deciding that defendant's complaints about the admission of three 1981 convictions were preserved and that the trial court erred in admitting the evidence, the appellate court overruled the issue because it had a fair assurance that the admission of the convictions did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect. Blount v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1648, 2012 WL 662306 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 29 2012).

448. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for bribery, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's ruling on evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) allowing testimony from a witness urging the jury not to sentence defendant to probation. The testimony did not influence the jury, because its imposition of a 19-year sentence showed that the jury did not consider probation to be an appropriate option. Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

449. Blood-test evidence concerning defendant's accident did not affect his substantial rights during the punishment phase of trial and even if the admission of the evidence in the absence of objection was fundamental error that survived the lack of preservation, its admission was harmless, because defendant pled guilty to four counts of intoxication manslaughter and two counts of intoxication assault, so the only issue was the length of the sentence, and the testimonial and photographic evidence admitted at the punishment phase, combined with the tragic loss of four lives and severe injuries to others, was compelling regarding the nature of the accident and the crimes. Looschen v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10257, 2011 WL 6938516 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 29 2011).

450. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant convicted of driving while intoxicated (DWI), second offense, failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred in denying his motion for mistrial following publication to the jury of portions of an audio-video recording of the traffic stop that led to his arrest because the recording was admitted and played to the jury without timely objection. Even if defendant had not waived his objection, any error in the admission of the audio recording was harmless because: (1) the recording made only vague reference to an intoxication offense, rather than direct mention of any prior DWI conviction; (2) the audio that was the subject of defense counsel's objection was played only once in open court to the jury, an instruction to disregard was given by the trial court, and only a redacted version excluding the three complained-of references was sent back with the jury to watch during deliberations; (3) the record contained ample evidence to support the jury's finding that defendant was driving while intoxicated; and (4) the jury had the opportunity to view the recording of the traffic stop and defendant's behavior. Doucette v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1750, 2011 WL 832129 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 9 2011).

451. Believing that defendant had drugs in the car that he was driving, an undercover officer directed uniformed police officers to stop defendant after he observed defendant commit a traffic violation; based on prior encounters with defendant, the undercover officer called for a narcotics dog which lead to the discovery of drugs in defendant's car. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress, he raised objections under Tex. R. Evid. 103 that prevented the officer from testifying as to the articulable facts that led the officer to believe there was contraband in defendant's car; therefore, the invited error doctrine prevented defendant from challenging the State's failure to prove the articulable facts that led to the search of his car. Vennus v. State, 282 S.W.3d 70, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 977 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

452. In an aggravated sexual assault case, defendant was not harmed by the hearsay search warrant affidavit because the witnesses who provided the information that was in the affidavit provided the same or substantially the same testimony at trial. Rangel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1555, 2009 WL 540780 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 4 2009).

453. Court's exclusion of a witness's statement did not have a substantial or injurious effect on the jury's verdict in defendant's drug case because the statement concerning his assumption of responsibility did not absolve defendant from potential liability; the witness's responsibility was neither mutually exclusive of or inconsistent with defendant's possession. Therefore, the witness's gratuitous statement was of no legal consequence. Blum v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 466, 2009 WL 161980 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 26 2009).

454. Appellant was entitled to a new trial based on the erroneous admission of improper character evidence that appellant failed a drug test, contrary to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); the evidence of the drug-test results, which occurred after the assault for which appellant was on trial, came in unexpectedly and was later explained by appellant, yet it was embraced by the State and emphasized throughout trial in an effort to tie the drug-test results to the assault; consequently, the error in admitting the evidence was not harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Simmons v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9732 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 14 2007).

455. At the punishment phase of a trial for aggravated robbery, any error in admitting a prior conviction for unlawfully carrying a weapon was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). The conviction was not reiterated or emphasized, the jury also received evidence of three other misdemeanor convictions, and defendant was sentenced to 40 years, the middle of the sentencing range under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 12.32(a), 29.03. Abdolahi-Damaneh v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2003 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 15 2007).

456. Where defendant was convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he was not harmed by the admission of evidence of a prior sexual assault during the punishment phase even though he had been acquitted of the offense. The jury was presented with defendant's lengthy and varied criminal history and threats against the victim; the admission of the prior sexual assault evidence did not influence the jury verdict. Benner v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2977 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 12 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Plain Error : General Overview

457. Trial judge was disqualified because of the stated inability to rule based solely on the evidence adduced, and this error required disqualification and made the actions taken by the judge, including a denial of a motion to suppress, void; the court determined it had to address this unassigned error given that a defendant, as in this case, did not waive appellate review of the structural defect of the right to an impartial judge by failing to object, and court noted that even if review for harm was appropriate, a denial of one's right to an impartial judge was not subject to harmless error analysis. Gentry v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2923 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 12 2006).

458. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant waived his argument that the trial court's comment during voir dire was so prejudicial that he was deprived of a fair and impartial trial. There was no fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) that would excuse the waiver because the trial court properly instructed the jury that it could not consider a defendant's refusal to testify for any purpose. Vargas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4626 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

459. In a murder case, defendant's brief, which lacked citation to authority and argument, was inadequate under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) to support a claim of fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Boler v. State, 177 S.W.3d 366, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2719 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

460. Admission of testimony from the victim's sister during the penalty phase of defendant's trial about sexual abuse he committed against her was properly admitted, as defendant failed to object to the admission of the challenged testimony; further, said failure to object also precluded review for fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Martinez v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10811 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 31 2003).

461. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a defendant's substantial rights were not affected by the trial court's ruling that defense counsel could not question a witness, for impeachment purposes, regarding his being a drug dealer where the trial court offered defense counsel 20 minutes to question the witness outside of the jury's presence in order to establish whether the witness was indeed a drug dealer, and defense counsel declined the trial court's generous offer. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

462. Even though defense counsel did not object when the trial court told the jury at the outset of the trial that defendant seriously considered entering into a plea agreement and that he would have preferred that the defendant plead guilty, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) the appellate court was authorized to take notice of fundamental errors affecting substantial rights although they were not brought to the attention of the court, and the trial court's statements were plain error warranting reversal of defendant's conviction and remand. Blue v. State, 41 S.W.3d 129, 2000 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 113 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000), criticized by Rabago v. State, 75 S.W.3d 561, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 1828 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2002).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

463. Error based on improper authentication of exhibits during a summary judgment hearing was not preserved for appellate review because an attorney had "no objection" when the evidence was admitted at a prior hearing. Kent v. Holmes, 139 S.W.3d 120, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Evidence : Authentication : Self-Authentication

464. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

Evidence : Competency : Dead Man's Acts : Waiver

465. Where decedent's wife testified as to their agreement to be married, the trial court construed decedent's will as if a common law marriage existed; on appeal, decedent's children argued that the wife's testimony did not meet the requirements of the Dead Man's Statute under Tex. R. Evid. 601 because it was not corroborated by other evidence. The Court of Appeals of Texas would not address the argument, because no objection was made at trial as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). In the Estate of Landers, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7196, 2010 WL 3420905 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 1 2010).

Evidence : Competency : Disability : Children

466. In a sexual assault of a child case, defendant failed to preserve his complaint of the child's competency to testify because the trial court found the child competent to testify, and defendant did not object, nor did he object when the trial court made its finding of competency. Furthermore, defendant did not make any objections when the child testified in the presence of the jury. Martin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8437 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

Evidence : Competency : Judges

467. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that he should have been permitted to call the judge in his case as a witness, based on the judge's prior representation of a defendant in a case involving the same victim. Defendant failed to make an offer of proof, as require by Tex. R. Evid. 103, as to what the judge's testimony would have been with respect to an prior consistent statements made by the former client. Teczar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2919, 2011 WL 1743756 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 15 2011).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

468. Defendant failed to preserve error with regard to the admission of photographs because he did not make the proper offer of proof with the photos he wished to admit. Stewart v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4511, 2012 WL 2052148 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 7 2012).

469. Defendant preserved an issue relating to the admission of autopsy photographs, even though he did not specifically invoke Tex. R. Evid. 403, because he objected on the basis that they were unfairly prejudicial and needlessly cumulative and the trial court granted him a running objection to the admission of each of the photographs, as permitted Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Kilgore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6904, 2009 WL 2707175 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 28 2009).

470. In a sexual assault trial, there was no error in limiting defense questioning of a witness regarding sexually explicit photographs of a woman who appeared to be asleep or unconscious; the witness was permitted to testify in support of the defensive theory that drug use and sexual conduct of the sort shown in the photographs were common among persons employed by topless clubs and that the woman in the photographs may have consented to the acts shown; defendant did not make an offer of proof regarding other questions, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Casey v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7940 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 5 2007).

471. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant failed to preserve an issue regarding admission of a purportedly gruesome photograph because defendant stated that there was no objections to that exhibit. Pecina v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3424 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 3 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

472. Defendant failed to preserve error as to the admission of those portions of a recording that he did not specifically point to the trial court. Basinger v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3847, 2012 WL 1704322 (Tex. App. Dallas May 16 2012).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

473. During defendant's criminal trial for murder, the trial judge violated the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 when he allowed a 911 operator to testify that he asked defendant if he wanted to talk about what had happened, but excluded defendant's response indicating that he shot the victim in self-defense; the error was nonconstitutional under Tex. R. Evid. 103, because defendant testified about his longstanding strife with the victim; the trial court's erroneous exclusion of his 911 statements did not prevent him from fully presenting his self-defense theory. Walters v. State, 247 S.W.3d 204, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1701 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

474. In an aggravated sexual assault case, defendant was not harmed by the hearsay search warrant affidavit because the witnesses who provided the information that was in the affidavit provided the same or substantially the same testimony at trial. Rangel v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1555, 2009 WL 540780 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 4 2009).

475. Because the record did show any objections to the evidence, the court rejected the parents' claim that hearsay evidence constituted the majority of the evidence presented in a proceeding concerning the conservatorship of their daughter, and therefore no error was shown by the district court's consideration of unobjected-to evidence. Rodriguez v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3387 (Tex. App. Austin May 8 2008).

476. Hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801 was inadequate under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 where counsel asserted a reiteration of a previous objection but had not previously objected on hearsay grounds, where counsel failed to obtain a ruling, and where the evidence was admitted without objection elsewhere. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

477. In a murder trial, defendant failed to preserve hearsay error with regard to a statement that the complainant made to a witness because defendant permitted the contents of the complainant's statement to come in without objection and therefore failed to comply with Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Gay v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8753 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 1 2007).

478. Defendant's failure to make specific objections waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issues of hearsay in a police officer's testimony concerning an unsafe lane change and the lack of closing arguments; to the extent defendant's general objection to the officer's testimony could be construed as a more general contention that a conviction could not be based on hearsay evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 802 allows consideration of inadmissible hearsay admitted without objection. James v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7608 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 19 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

479. In a case of fleeing from arrest, hearsay testimony was cumulative of other properly admitted testimony; thus, in accordance with Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), its admission was not reversible error. Gant v. State, 153 S.W.3d 294, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11841 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1574, 164 L. Ed. 2d 307, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2315, 74 U.S.L.W. 3530 (U.S. 2006).

480. Trial court erred in admitting videotaped testimony of sexual assault victims under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, however, such error was harmless under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and to be disregarded on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, because it did not affect a substantial right of defendant where the in-court testimony of the victims mirrored their videotape testimony, and the State made no specific reference attributable solely to the videotapes. Dunn v. State, 125 S.W.3d 610, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9290 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

481. In a case involving unpaid credit card debt, business records showing a debtor's liability were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because an authenticating affiant did not have to be a custodian of records to qualify under Tex. R. Evid. 902(10); therefore, a designated agent was able to satisfy this standard. Moreover, the agent's affidavit tracked the model language of a self-authenticating affidavit, the affidavit was not conclusory, and an objection regarding personal knowledge was not raised at trial. McElroy v. Unifund CCR Partners, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 26, 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

482. Hearsay argument was preserved for review where it was clear from the record that both the prosecutor and the trial court understood defendant to be making a hearsay objection to the admission of a booking record. Martin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8903 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 7 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Former Testimony of Unavailable Declarants

483. In defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in excluding the former testimony of a witness from a co-defendant's trial because the requested excerpt of testimony contained both admissible and inadmissible evidence, and it was defendant's burden to segregate and specifically offer the portions that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1), pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10655 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

484. In a termination of parental rights case, a parent failed to preserve objections to the admission of the child's medical records because the trial court was not directed to specific parts of the records that were not relevant. In re K.L., 442 S.W.3d 396, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4294 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 31 2012).

485. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under

Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Public Records : Law Enforcement Reports

486. In a subrogation action, a trial court did not err by admitting a police report into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) because there was nothing to indicate that the report lacked trustworthiness. Moreover, because a large part of the report was admissible non-opinion evidence and a driver did not specifically object to the opinion statements, the trial court properly overruled an alleged driver's objection regarding expert opinion. Lawrence v. Geico Gen. Ins. Co., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5082, 2009 WL 1886177 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 2 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Reputation : General Overview

487. Where defendant did not object to the admission of the officers' testimony regarding their knowledge of defendant's reputation in the community, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6567 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 18 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : Proof of Earlier Acts

488. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements Against Interest

489. Despite sustaining defedant's hearsay objection in an action to quiet title, the trial court later allowed plaintiff to testify to many of the facts surrounding decedent's alleged parol gift; because the trial court allowed evidence of the substantial improvements plaintiff made to the land during decedent's lifetime and plaintiff's continuous possession of the land, the appellate court could not say that the trial court's ruling on decedent's hearsay statement to plaintiff regarding her donative intnet caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Conner v. Johnson, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9633 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

490. Defendant preserved his complaint that a witness's outcry statement was insufficient for failure to describe an act for which he was indicted because defendant objected that the summary of the witness's testimony was insufficient and that the witness had indicated that she was going to testify to substantially more than the summary provided. Klein v. State, 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

491. Appellant preserved error as to outcry testimony, even though he did not object when the witness testified in front of the jury, because he objected to the testimony at a hearing outside the jury's presence. He sufficiently objected on the same grounds raised on appeal; in addition to his hearsay objection, he objected that the testimony was not proper outcry because the witness could not get any meaningful information from the victim about exactly what happened. Chapman v. State, 150 S.W.3d 809, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9305 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist.

492. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting outcry testimony as to an extraneous child sexual assault because by its own terms, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 applied only to statements that described the alleged offense. Defendant objected to the testimony at a hearing outside the jury's presence and, in order to preserve error, was not required to object again when the witness testified before the jury. Chapman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7364 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 17 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 150 S.W.3d 809, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9305 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

493. Trial court erred in admitting videotaped testimony of sexual assault victims under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, however, such error was harmless under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and to be disregarded on appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2, because it did not affect a substantial right of defendant where the in-court testimony of the victims mirrored their videotape testimony, and the State made no specific reference attributable solely to the videotapes. Dunn v. State, 125 S.W.3d 610, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9290 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2003).

494. There was no reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because admitting the outcry witness's testimony without first conducting a hearing pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 was harmless, where the testimony included the same facts that were admitted into evidence without objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Duncan v. State, 95 S.W.3d 669, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9309 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

495. Defendant's convictions of indecency with a child by contact and exposure pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11 were affirmed, even though two witness were erroneously permitted to testify as outcry witnesses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, and the counselor was erroneously allowed to testify under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4) regarding the victim's statements during counseling, and where the testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), as defendant admitted that he engaged in the conduct described in the victim's statements to the three witnesses. Jones v. State, 92 S.W.3d 619, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8545 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Confessions : General Overview

496. Defendant failed to preserve his claim that a trial court violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 by admitting into evidence, in defendant's trial for aggravated assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02, an incriminating statement made by defendant to a police officer after defendant was arrested and before he was given any Miranda warnings; because defendant did not raise his objections before the officer testified as to the statement or obtain an adverse ruling thereon as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the officer thereafter repeated the statement without objection, and defendant's trial objection was made under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.21 rather than Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22. Camarillo v. State, 82 S.W.3d 529, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3228 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Prior Statements by Witnesses : General Overview

497. Appellant failed to show harm from a trial court's exclusion of extrinsic evidence of out-of-court statements made by State's witness where appellant's counsel made no offer of proof detailing the questions counsel wanted to ask or the specific inconsistent statements to be used for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Evidence : Hearsay : Hearsay Within Hearsay

498. Because the detective failed to address each document he objected to, identify which parts of the document contained hearsay and hearsay within hearsay, and explain why the documents were not admissible as a statement by a party opponent, his claim was rejected on appeal. Both at trial and on appeal, the detective made a blanket objection without identifying each part of each statement that contained hearsay with hearsay, and as such, his objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error. Flores v. City of Liberty, 318 S.W.3d 551, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 5 2010).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Presumptions : General Overview

499. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant failed to show that she received ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to make certain evidentiary objections; defendant did not file a motion for a new trial or otherwise develop a record concerning the motives behind trial counsel's decision not to make objections. Because speculation would have been required, counsel's actions were presumed to be within the wide range of reasonable and professional assistance. Egerton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4848, 2009 WL 1815772 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

Evidence : Judicial Notice

500. Defendant did not object to trial court's comments about his decision to proceed pro se in his trial for forgery; however, the appellate court took judicial notice of the comments. Nevertheless, the comments did not impinge on defendant's fundamental rights as they were not directed toward his possible guilt or innocence. Watson v. State, 176 S.W.3d 413, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9098 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : General Overview

501. Defendant did not object to trial court's comments about his decision to proceed pro se in his trial for forgery; however, the appellate court took judicial notice of the comments. Nevertheless, the comments did not impinge on defendant's fundamental rights as they were not directed toward his possible guilt or innocence. Watson v. State, 176 S.W.3d 413, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9098 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

Evidence : Privileges : Attorney-Client Privilege : Waiver

502. In a drug case, defendant did not have to waive his attorney-client privilege to obtain testimony from a former attorney regarding the attorney's notes on conflicting information in the police report; no waiver was required under the work product privilege of Tex. R. Evid. 503, and a discussion regarding the admissibility of the evidence, combined with defendant's offer of proof, sufficed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the exclusion of the evidence. Cameron v. State, 241 S.W.3d 15, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1120 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

503. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant's objections at the conclusion of an admissibility hearing preserved his complaint that the outcry statement was insufficient because it failed to describe an act for which he was indicted; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the objections were deemed to apply to the evidence when it was admitted before the jury without the necessity of repeating the objections. Klein v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 950 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

504. By failing to object to the admission of a hair sample at trial, defendant waived his complaint. Ocanas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7726 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 20 2005).

505. Where defendant did not object to the admission of the officers' testimony regarding their knowledge of defendant's reputation in the community, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6567 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 18 2005).

506. State was correct that defendant failed to preserve the issue of whether the testimony was inadmissible hearsay because he failed to object. Shook v. State, 172 S.W.3d 36, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6167 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

507. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant's failure to object waived error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the admission of testimony that defendant, after he was advised of his rights, chose not to give a statement and invoked his right to counsel; although the use of defendant's silence and invocation of his right to counsel as evidence of guilt was constitutionally impermissible and was prohibited by Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.38, the error was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Morales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3359 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

508. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant's objection to his girlfriend's testimony that defendant had threatened to kill her by cutting her throat did not assert that it was inadmissible extraneous offense evidence because the threat was not sufficiently similar to the charged offense; hence, defendant could not raise that argument on appeal. Morales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3359 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

509. Testimony by the officer that defendant could have been destroying evidence prior to his arrest was properly before the jury where the same evidence came in elsewhere without objection along with defendant's admission of two prior possession convictions of cocaine; thus, even without the officer's testimony, there was ample evidence that defendant was in possession of cocaine on the occasion in question and the officer's testimony did not have a substantial influence on the jury's verdict. Gardner v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2268 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 23 2005).

510. In a criminal prosecution for arson where defendant did not specifically object to the admissibility of the State's evidence on the issue of restitution, the evidentiary question was not preserved for appellate review. However, defendant's claim that the restitution order lacked a sufficient factual basis was perserved without objection. Drilling v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1509 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 23 2005).

511. Where excluded evidence was not apparent from the record and since defendant failed to make an offer of proof, the appellate court could not determine whether the evidence was relevant to a defensive issue, nor could it ascertain whether the error, if any, was harmful. Gallardo v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 913 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 3 2005).

512. In a trial for defendant's murder of her child, defendant failed to preserve her argument that the trial court improperly excluded evidence regarding her relationships, which she failed to pursue after being overruled as to the admissibility of her placement in a drug treatment program. She also did not make the required offer of proof regarding that testimony, as well as regarding excluded character evidence, and defendant's testimony regarding her relationship with her other children. Burke v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 198 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2005).

513. In a case of fleeing from arrest, hearsay testimony was cumulative of other properly admitted testimony; thus, in accordance with Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), its admission was not reversible error. Gant v. State, 153 S.W.3d 294, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11841 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1574, 164 L. Ed. 2d 307, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2315, 74 U.S.L.W. 3530 (U.S. 2006).

514. Where defendant failed to object to the admission of his statement to authorities regarding the credibility of his victim, he failed to preserve the issue for appellate review because none of the fundamental error categories included the admission or exclusion of evidence. Apolinar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6025 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 7 2004).

515. Complaining party, to preserve a complaint that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence, had to bring forward a record indicating the nature of the evidence and if the excluded evidence was not apparent from the context of the record, it had to be brought forward either through a timely offer of proof or a formal bill of exception; absent a showing of what such testimony would have been, nothing was presented for review, such that although defendant sought to introduce the evidence three times, he did not make an offer of proof regarding what the witnesses would say about the couple's relationship, how that would affect his defense, or how it would assist the jury in its deliberations. Because he made no offer of proof at the time of his objections, defendant waived his right to appeal this issue. Novillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5086 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004).

516. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, where the State offered defendant's statement into evidence without objection, no error was preserved for appellate review. Carter v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4901 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 28 2004).

517. Defendant, on a charge of driving while intoxicated, waived his argument that the trial court incorrectly refused to allow him to testify about his medical condition where he made no offer of proof. Hough v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 101 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 8 2004).

518. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a defendant's substantial rights were not affected by the trial court's ruling that defense counsel could not question a witness, for impeachment purposes, regarding his being a drug dealer where the trial court offered defense counsel 20 minutes to question the witness outside of the jury's presence in order to establish whether the witness was indeed a drug dealer, and defense counsel declined the trial court's generous offer. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

519. Where defendant was a passenger in a vehicle she had rented when it was pulled over by a sheriff's deputy, a consensual search led to the seizure of illegal drugs and the arrest of defendant and the driver, defendant was charged with unlawful possession, which required proof of intentional or knowing possession of the drugs, defendant consistently denied knowledge of the drugs, and the State relied upon circumstantial evidence to establish knowledge where the driver's statement to law enforcement, in which she claimed responsibility for the situation and asserted that she "used" defendant to obtain the rental vehicle and that defendant knew nothing about the drugs, was a statement against penal interest supported by corroborating evidence indicating its trustworthiness and should have been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) and its exclusion prevented defendant from adequately supporting her defense and substantially and injuriously affected the jury's verdict, thereby affecting a substantial right of the defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). James v. State, 102 S.W.3d 162, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 181 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

520. Any error in the trial court's ruling was preserved for appellate review because defendant timely requested the victim impact statement, when his request was denied, he asked that a copy of the statement be placed in the record for purposes of appeal, and the trial court granted this latter request. Gozdowski v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9363 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 2 2002).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Judicial Intervention in Trials : Comments by Judges : General Overview

521. In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err by informing the jury that it had overruled defendant's objection to the State's attempt to offer defendant's grand jury testimony, which had occurred outside the jury's presence where the trial judge's explanation was not a comment on the weight of the evidence, and it did not rise to the level of fundamental error because the judge did not express an opinion on the weight of evidence. Martinez v. State, 147 S.W.3d 412, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2897 (Tex. App. Tyler 2004), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3073, 180 L. Ed. 2d 896, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4930 (2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Judicial Intervention in Trials : Comments by Judges

522. Trial court's statements to the jury venire during voir dire were not improper comments on the weight of the evidence in violation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.05 and did not rise to fundamental error because the trial court properly laid out the manner in which a misdemeanor theft offense was enhanced to a felony third-offender offense and described the State's burden, and, taken in context, the trial court explained to the venire that there had to have been an allegation of two prior theft convictions to charge a defendant with felony third-offender theft; the trial court explained that defendant was guilty only if the State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that he had been previously convicted of the two prior felony thefts alleged and that he had committed the underlying theft offense. The statements neither tainted defendant's presumption of innocence nor compromised the impartiality of the jury. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7232, 2009 WL 3050588 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 10 2009).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

523. In defendant's sexual assault and indecency with a child case, any error in failing to give limiting instructions was harmless; defendant's first request was untimely and the trial court did not err by denying it, and within the context of the entire case, defendant's failure to request a limiting instruction during any other testimony covering the same extraneous offense evidence did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Neathery v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6625 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 16 2007).

524. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by refusing her request to take the stand under the limited use doctrine to testify about the voluntariness of her confession, where the record was devoid of any reference to what, if anything, defendant would have testified to. Greenwood v. State, 948 S.W.2d 542, 1997 Tex. App. LEXIS 3616 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1997).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

525. At defendant's DWI trial, the court did not deny his rights under the Sixth Amendment by limiting his cross-examination of the State's witness who was a former breath test technical advisor; without the substance of the proffered evidence, defendant's bill of exception failed to preserve his complaint for appellate review. Balderama v. State, 421 S.W.3d 247, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15133, 2013 WL 6637703 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 18 2013).

526. In a murder case, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant the opportunity to question an eyewitness about her experience with burning people to establish her as an alternate perpetrator. With little details regarding the alleged past conduct, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) describing the circumstances surrounding the alleged incidences, including who was involved and how long ago they occurred. Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

527. Motion to cross-examine the State's breath-test expert about the operation of the Intoxilyzer 5000 was not preserved for review because defendant failed to establish that the general subject matter of his proffered evidence would be used to impeach the expert, and not the substance of the expert's testimony as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). When the defense attorney failed to "perfect a bill" or to make a statement of what he would prove, as he told the trial court he would do, he failed to satisfy Rule 103(a)(2); counsel's statements were not a reasonably specific summary of the evidence offered. Holmes v. State, 323 S.W.3d 163, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 522 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

528. Defendant contended that the trial court erred in not granting a mistrial because the State was allowed to allude to inadmissible evidence, which violated due process, but the court disagreed; in keeping in line with Tex. R. Evid. 103(c), the trial court refused to allow the contents of a letter to be presented to the jury, the contents of the letter were never discussed, such that no error occurred, and even if error occurred, the trial court could have concluded that its instruction to disregard effectively removed any prejudice. Randle v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6154 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 14 2008).

529. Case was not one in which defendant had been denied the opportunity to present evidence or preserve the record, but rather defendant complained that the trial court denied his request to recall certain members of the venire for questioning, and thus, Tex. R. Evid. 103 did not apply; counsel had the chance to ask the venire questions related to certain photographs displayed during voir dire, but did not. Salazar v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1151 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 15 2008).

530. Terms bill of review and bill of exceptions were often confused; although defense counsel requested a bill of review when the appropriate request should have been a request for a bill of exception or an offer of proof, the court believed that the trial court was not confused. Salazar v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1151 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 15 2008).

531. Executor's failure to make a formal bill of exceptions pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33 after making no offer of proof waived his challenge to the exclusion of evidence in an action to remove him for cause; simply filing the excluded evidence with the probate court was insufficient. In the Estate of Miller, 243 S.W.3d 831, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 110 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

532. Counsel did not object when defendant was forced to take a breath test before his DWI trial to determine if he was intoxicated in the courtroom; defendant forfeited his right to complain about the admission of any evidence relating to the breath test or his alleged intoxication in the courtroom. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2771 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

533. Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, possession of cocaine in an amount of less than one gram, and robbery, were appropriate where defendant's argument on appeal that a statement was an improper comment on the evidence was not objected to at trial and there was no fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Williams v. State, 191 S.W.3d 242, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1687 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

534. In a child sexual abuse case, because there was no offer of proof, defendant did not preserve, under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a complaint that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence of the bias of a witness. Vega v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1513 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 23 2006).

535. Defendant failed to preserve error with an untimely objection that was not repeated each time as required, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Mai v. State, 189 S.W.3d 316, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1065 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

536. Without a witness's responses to the questions defendant wanted to ask, the court was unable to determine the impact the testimony might have had, and thus, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, 33.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), defendant did not preserve the issue for review and the court overruled it. Bird v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1091 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 9 2006).

537. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant's objections at the conclusion of an admissibility hearing preserved his complaint that the outcry statement was insufficient because it failed to describe an act for which he was indicted; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the objections were deemed to apply to the evidence when it was admitted before the jury without the necessity of repeating the objections. Klein v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 950 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 191 S.W.3d 766, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2790 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

538. In a negligence action arising from a motor vehicle accident, failure to object waived, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103, claims of falsified or spoliated evidence. Kadyebo v. Chako, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 416 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2006).

539. In a civil forfeiture proceeding, defendant waived his complaint concerning evidence seized from his wallet during a pat down search incident to his arrest for possession of a controlled substance; defendant made no objection when the state presented testimony concerning the evidence. $ 1,590.00 United States Currency v. Tex., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10423 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 15 2005).

540. Because a witness' testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, it did not constitute hearsay; even if the testimony was hearsay, because the testimony was cumulative, if there was error, it was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that defendant did not demonstrate that the admission of the testimony affected defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Alexander v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10298 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 7, 2005).

541. Because there was no proof as to what defendant's testimony would have been, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) or Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and the precise content of the excluded testimony was not apparent, the issue was not preserved for review. Kennedy v. State, 184 S.W.3d 309, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10126 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

542. In child custody and support enforcement proceedings, the mother's failure to object to the trial court's questioning waived the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103; also, the questioning did not deny the mother her federal or state constitutional rights to a fair trial or violate Tex. R. Evid. 605 because the judge did not testify as a witness at the trial and the questions were reasonable and fact-based. Kogel v. Robertson, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10028 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 2 2005).

543. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), preservation of error with regard to the exclusion of evidence involves a two-step process: informing the trial court of the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted and informing the trial court of the legal grounds for the admission of the evidence. Johnson v. State, 181 S.W.3d 760, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9441 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

544. Defendant sufficiently advised the trial court of the substance of the evidence defendant sought to admit, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); however, because defendant's theory for admissibility on appeal was different than the theory of admissibility pursued in the trial court, defendant failed to preserve the issue for review, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Johnson v. State, 181 S.W.3d 760, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9441 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

545. While it was clear that defendant's attorney did not obtain a running objection, the bench conference was a hearing outside the presence of the jury and satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), and thus, for purposes of Tex. R. App. 33.1(a), defendant properly preserved error and the appellate court was correct in addressing the issue. Haley v. State, 173 S.W.3d 510, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1621 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

546. In a criminal trespass trial, defendant's complaint that an officer's testimony regarding his intoxication was inadmissible extraneous offense testimony was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because defendant failed to object to the admission of other evidence relating to his intoxication. Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8126 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 29 2005).

547. In a DWI trial, defendant forfeited his objection to laser radar gun evidence under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because he did not voice an objection to the officer's testimony regarding his use of the laser radar gun on defendant's vehicle until after the testimony was already in evidence and the officer was questioned on voir dire. Miley v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8132 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 29 2005).

548. Defendant preserved no error regarding the trial court's handling of his request to present testimony to support his motion to disqualify the district attorney's office because defendant failed to present to the trial court any offer of proof of any evidence he anticipated providing on the subject. Green v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7841 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 27 2005).

549. By failing to object in the trial court on a particular basis under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant failed to preserve the issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Butler v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7709 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 21 2005).

550. In a criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault, the State gave notice of its intention to use evidence of extraneous offenses committed by defendant and the trial court admitted the evidence. Because defendant did not object on the ground that the State's notice was untimely, the issue was not preserved for review. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

551. By failing to object to the admission of a hair sample at trial, defendant waived his complaint. Ocanas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7726 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 20 2005).

552. Defendant failed to preserve error as to testimony that he had been imprisoned for eight years where he objected after the State's initial question but not to subsequent questioning, and never asked for a running objection or a hearing outside of the jury's presence. Wilson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7663 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 15 2005).

553. Because defendant's request to impeach the officer if the officer changed the officer's story on the stand was premature and not made with sufficient specificity, and because the substance of the evidence was not apparent from the context of the request, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), defendant waived any error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Ahmed v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7148 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

554. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant did not preserve certain issues for review because defendant initially objected to the testimony, but then did not ask for a running objection, nor did defendant get a court ruling to offered testimony outside of the jury's presence, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Miramontes v. State, 225 S.W.3d 132, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7160 (Tex. App. El Paso 2005).

555. In a prosecution of defendant juvenile for felony murder, the court of appeals had no basis for reviewing defendant's contention that the trial court erred in excluding a defense exhibit in the absence of a bill of exception or offer of proof. In re E.B.M., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2005).

556. Defendant did not make an offer of proof, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, to demonstrate what testimony would have been if allowed, and thus defendant did not preserve error; however, to the extent the court was able to glean the substance of the evidence that was excluded, the questions called for hearsay responses, as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), because a witness was asked to testify about a statement made by a third person, and the testimony defendant claimed was erroneously excluded was actually admitted elsewhere and defendant failed to show harm. Jones v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7049 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2005).

557. Party only partially preserved, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), its challenge to the exclusion of certain testimony and questioning related to deposition changes because counsel made an offer of proof concerning only three of the deposition changes. Chavez Constr., Inc. v. McNeely, 177 S.W.3d 593, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6930 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

558. Defense counsel's objection that a police officer was speaking of someone else's knowledge was sufficiently specific to preserve defendant's hearsay objection under Tex. R. App. P. 103(a)(1); however, where defense counsel cited a field manual entitled "Standardized Field and Sobriety Testing," and had the officer read aloud a portion of it that said a person whose eyes did not track together could be indicative of an injury, serious medical condition, or neurological disorder, the effect of the countervailing evidence introduced was negligible; therefore, error, if any, in the admission of the complained-of hearsay testimony was harmless. Werdlow v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6788 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 22 2005).

559. Will contestants' objection to an expert's testimony was untimely under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and hence, the issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); however, the court noted that the contestants' request to voir dire the witness to delve into the expert's qualifications did not invoke Tex. R. Evid. 705(b), which pertained to inquiry into the underlying facts or data and was discretionary in any event. In re Estate of Trawick, 170 S.W.3d 871, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6568 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

560. By making a vague objection to the admission of certain reports under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), defendant failed to preserve the issue for review pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Franklin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6620 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

561. County court erred in impliedly holding that error had been preserved because the testimony of two witnesses would have been repetitious and was properly excluded by the administrative law judge (ALJ), and as to the witnesses who were with the driver prior to the accident, the driver failed to make an offer of proof at the ALJ hearing regarding the excluded testimony of these witnesses and by failing to make an offer of proof or a bill of exceptions, the driver presented nothing for review. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Delaney, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6647 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

562. In a drug and weapons possession case, defendant's objection to an officer's testimony regarding reported drug activities at his residence, made almost immediately thereafter, was timely and was sufficient to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Summerville v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6773 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 18 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9715 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 15, 2005).

563. Party's response to a question was specific enough to show the nature of the testimony the party would have offered, and thus error was preserved pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Coleman v. Coleman, 170 S.W.3d 231, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6557 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

564. In a tax lien foreclosure suit, the tax lien holder was not estopped from recovering attorney fees at the rate of 15 percent under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 33.48; although the tax lien holder requested attorney fees as authorized by Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.06 et seq., that citation reasonably included Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.065(c), which provided that an assignee of a taxing authority was subrogated to all rights of the taxing authority, and the issue was not properly preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because an estoppel argument was not made to the trial court. JB Joyce, Ltd. v. Regions Fin. Corp., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7246 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 1 2005).

565. Defendant failed to preserve for review an issue related to the exclusion of evidence because no offer of proof was made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). LaHood v. State, 171 S.W.3d 613, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6258 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

566. Although defendant did not object to an extraneous offense each time it was offered, nor did he obtain a running objection from the trial court, because the trial court heard objections to the extraneous offense out of the presence of the jury and ruled that such evidence be admitted, it was unnecessary for defendant to repeat his objections when the evidence was presented to the jury. Consequently, defendant did not waive the issue by failing to object each time the evidence was presented or by extensively cross-examining witnesses and producing one witness in order to meet, rebut, destroy, deny, or explain the extraneous offense. Simoneaux v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5628 (Tex. App. Tyler July 20 2005).

567. Defendant waived any error in the prosecutor's comments on the invocation of his right to counsel and right to remain silent by failing to object to this line of questioning. The error was not preversed for review. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2005).

568. Defendant's conviction for one count of sexual assault was proper where the trial court did not err in not permitting his entire confession into evidence allegedly in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 because defendant failed to preserve the issue for review as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Salazar v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5487 (Tex. App. El Paso July 14 2005).

569. Defendant answered trial counsel's question regarding a witness's alleged drug use on the record, and thus counsel preserved the issue for appeal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); however, the trial court's decision to exclude defendant's testimony was not unreasonable, and counsel did not demonstrate how the purported evidence about the witness's drug use was relevant to the defense under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Edwards v. State, 178 S.W.3d 139, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5132 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

570. Defendant failed to preserve his claim for appeal that his punishment violated U.S. Const. amend. VIII, because defendant waived the court reporter for purposes of recording the pre-sentence investigation hearing, and defendant had no record of any objection that would have preserved a claim of error on Eighth Amendment grounds. Fletcher v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4710 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2005).

571. Trial court did not prevent appellant from presenting error to the reviewing court through an offer of proof because, while the trial court denied appellant an opportunity to develop the excluded testimony in a question-and-answer form, her attorney informed the court of the substance of the testimony in an offer of proof. In reaching that conclusion, the court compared Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), providing that an offer of proof was a trial-time offer of evidence excluded by court, and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, setting out that a formal bill of exception was a post-trial offer of evidence in written form. In re A A.E., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4419 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 9 2005).

572. Although a driver complained of not being allowed to cross-examine a motorist about certain issues, the record revealed that the trial court did permit such cross-examination; the trial court allowed the driver to present an offer of proof, but the driver did not request that the jury be allowed to hear the evidence. Presswood v. Goehring, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 9 2005).

573. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) concerning the testimony defendant wanted to elicit from a witness, defendant did not preserve this issue for review. Bronaugh v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455 (Tex. App. Waco June 8 2005).

574. Defendant's conviction for burglary of a habitation was proper where he failed to preserve error regarding the exclusion of testimony because he did not make an offer of proof or bill of exceptions establishing how witnesses would have answered particular questions. Love v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4236 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 2 2005).

575. Defendant forfeited one complaint by not preserving error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 in the exclusion of certain testimony; no offer of proof had been made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Richards v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3468 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 5 2005).

576. In an adverse possession case, because the claimants failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) regarding the exclusion of documentary evidence, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Melendez v. De Leon, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3360 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 4 2005).

577. Defendant's claim that her fundamental right to confrontation was violated by a trial court's sustaining of the State's objections during a witness's cross-examination was not preserved for appellate review pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) because defendant had failed to make an offer of proof and had failed to demonstrate how the substance of the excluded evidence was apparent from the context within which questions were asked. Furthermore, defendant never asserted to the trial court that any of the constitutional rights she complained of in the appeal were violated by the trial court's ruling that sustained the State's objections. Bergman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3046 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 21 2005).

578. Because defendant complained only generally at trial of his "right to remain silent," without any further assertions concerning his rights to post-arrest silence under either Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 or the Sanchez case, defendant's trial objection was not sufficient to make the trial court aware of his complaint, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Moreover, the specific grounds of defendant's complaint were not apparent from the context under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Cleveland v. State, 177 S.W.3d 374, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2726 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005), cert. denied 126 S. Ct. 1774, 164 L. Ed. 2d 523, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 3222, 74 U.S.L.W. 3585 (U.S. 2006).

579. Because the ex-husband did not make an offer of proof on certain proposed testimony, he waived on appeal the issue regarding the testimony. Smith v. Smith, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1983 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 17 2005).

580. Because counsel did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), nor did counsel argue certain grounds for the admission of testimony as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), any error regarding the exclusion of the testimony was waived and nothing was presented for review. Ortega v. LPP Mortg., Ltd., 160 S.W.3d 596, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1037 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

581. In a murder case, defendant did not preserve his complaint about excluded evidence because he did not make an offer of proof as to the purported meaning of the victim's tattoos, nor demonstrate that the medical examiner had knowledge on the subject. Moore v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1130 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2005).

582. In a termination of parental rights case, the mother did not preserve her complaint for review because the complaint did not comport with the mother's objection made at the time certain testimony was being offered. At trial, the mother complained that a social worker had not followed statutory procedures under the Texas Health and Safety Code, but, on review, the mother complained that the social worker's testimony violated Tex. R. Evid. 510. Additionally, the mother's second objection at trial, which was based on Rule 510, was not made until after the social worker left the witness stand; therefore, this objection was not timely made. In re Smith, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 990 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 8 2005).

583. In defendant's murder trial, photos were excluded from evidence showing a large pool of blood outside of the victim's motel room; defendant attempted to argue on appeal that these photos were relevant to show that defendant acted in self-defense. Nevertheless, defendant failed to make this argument to the trial court, and he failed to make an offer of of proof; therefore, he failed to preserve the alleged error. Kennedy v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16, 2005).

584. In an assault case, evidence of a reconciliation between defendant and the victim was not properly preserved for review because an offer of proof was required; the evidence was designed to elicit certain specific responses which had no bearing on the victim's bias, interest, prejudice, inconsistent statements, traits of character affecting credibility, or evidence that might go to any impairment or disability affecting credibility Mumphrey v. State, 155 S.W.3d 651, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 370 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

585. Because defendant did not contend at trial that the admission of the judgment violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.05, he had not preserved the issue for appellate review. Roberts v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 107 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 5 2005).

586. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's contention concerning the denial of the cross-examination of a witness regarding a prior offense was waived because he failed to make an offer of proof at trial in the form of records of the witness's prior convictions, or by any other method. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11481 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 22 2004).

587. Because the record did not contain a sufficient offer of proof, the court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred in not allowing defendant to recall a witness on rebuttal to impeach the witness with inconsistent statements and to recall another witness to prove those inconsistencies. De Leon v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11197 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 15 2004).

588. Defendant argued that the trial court improperly restricted his attempts to impeach a witness's testimony with a prior statement in which he said he saw the victim in the hallway with a shotgun just before he heard the fatal shot. The State properly responded that the witness's prior written statement was not in the record, and thus defendant had failed to preserve his complaint by making an offer of proof pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103. Lindsey v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11139 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2004).

589. In an aggravated kidnapping case, because no offers of proof were made, defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) regarding the trial court's refusal to admit prior inconsistent videotaped statements and the exclusion of a defense witness' testimony. Kelly v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10492 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 24 2004).

590. Father argued that the trial court erred by denying him the opportunity to present evidence of his net resources, but his attempted offer, however, came after both he and the State had rested, and the record did not reveal what evidence the father was attempting to offer, nor did it indicate that the father made an offer of proof or a formal bill of exceptions to preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Appellate review of alleged improperly excluded evidence was not possible without a showing of what evidence would have been presented, such that the issue of whether the trial court erred by refusing to let the father reopen to put on evidence of his net resources was not preserved for the appellate court's review, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Hilliard v. Holland, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10515 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 24 2004).

591. In a personal injury case, because no objection or offer of proof was made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), (b) regarding an alleged voir dire error, the issue was unpreserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Lewis v. UPS, 175 S.W.3d 811, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9813 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

592. At an administrative license suspension hearing, the driver waived any error in the denial of his right to fully cross-examine the arresting officer. The driver did not offer a bill of exceptions containing potential questions for the arresting officer, nor answers he expected to receive. Parks v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9365 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 21 2004).

593. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not preserve error on his claims that the trial court erred in allowing the State to refer to his post-arrest silence in violation of Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 due to: (1) the lack of time-specific questions by the State; (2) counsel's failure to cite to the state constitution, or even specify that he was objecting to post-arrest silence; and (3) the lack of commentary by the trial court in making its rulings on the objections. There was no indication in the record that the trial court understood that defendant was trying to invoke a protection different from the U.S. Const. amend. V protection which he was citing. Heidelberg v. State, 144 S.W.3d 535, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1479 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

594. Patient's spoliation argument was sufficiently specific to make the trial court aware of her complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); the patient alleged that the hospital's failure to identify, isolate, or test an allegedly defective infusion pump destroyed the ability to determine what occurred on the occasion in question. Martinez v. Abbott Labs., 146 S.W.3d 260, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8064, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17113 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

595. Customer argued that the trial court erred in denying her motion to compel discovery, but her counsel conceded at oral argument that she did not obtain a ruling from the trial court on the motion to compel; to preserve a complaint for the appellate court's review, a party had to have presented to the trial court a timely request, objection, or motion that stated the specific grounds for the desired ruling, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and the objecting party had to also get an express or implied ruling from the trial court, and because the customer failed to present her objection to the trial court and obtain a ruling, she waived this complaint on appeal. Banks v. River Oaks Steak House, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7517 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 19 2004).

596. Defendant waived the issue that the trial court abused its discretion by admitting evidence of the complainant's injuries, because he failed to object each time the challenged evidence was offered. Defendant did not request a Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) hearing but he did make a running objection to the testimony of the State's first witness, and defendant never renewed his request for a running objection when other witnesses testified on the same subject. Rodriguez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6910 (Tex. App. El Paso July 29 2004).

597. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve error in the trial court's decision to sustain the State's hearsay objections when he attempted to testify regarding statements the victim made to him, and defendant did not make a formal offer of proof concerning this proposed evidence. Butler v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6800 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 28 2004).

598. Trial court's exclusion of evidence concerning the lifestyle and the violent nature of the nephew, who was shot to death by defendant, could not be considered error on appeal, as defendant, who was charged with murder did not preserve the issue for review because defendant did not make an offer of proof of what the excluded evidence was and, thus, the appellate court was not left with anything to review in that regard. Goodwin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6692 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 23 2004).

599. Error based on improper authentication of exhibits during a summary judgment hearing was not preserved for appellate review because an attorney had "no objection" when the evidence was admitted at a prior hearing. Kent v. Holmes, 139 S.W.3d 120, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5844 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

600. Where a trial court did not exclude testimony regarding a patient's motive in bringing a negligence action based on medical malpractice against his doctor, but rather, indicated that the questioning was to be disallowed at one point and could be raised again later, but the patient failed to introduce the evidence again, there was no ruling excluding the evidence for purposes of appellate review and accordingly, the patient failed to preserve the error pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Ramsey v. Cravey, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5724 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 30 2004).

601. Where a wife in a divorce proceeding failed to make an offer of proof pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 or file a formal bill of exception pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, and the substance of the evidence she sought to present was not apparent from the record, her complaint that the trial court erred by not allowing her to prove that she had separate property and by finding that she had none was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Furthermore, because the wife did not present evidence of her ownership of separate property, the correctness of the trial court's finding that she had none had to be presumed under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 3.003. Smith v. Smith, 143 S.W.3d 206, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5670 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

602. Complaining party, to preserve a complaint that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence, had to bring forward a record indicating the nature of the evidence and if the excluded evidence was not apparent from the context of the record, it had to be brought forward either through a timely offer of proof or a formal bill of exception; absent a showing of what such testimony would have been, nothing was presented for review, such that although defendant sought to introduce the evidence three times, he did not make an offer of proof regarding what the witnesses would say about the couple's relationship, how that would affect his defense, or how it would assist the jury in its deliberations. Because he made no offer of proof at the time of his objections, defendant waived his right to appeal this issue. Novillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5086 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004).

603. Where appellants urged that the district court violated their procedural and substantive due process rights by limiting them to one hour to present their case, where, at no point in the trial did appellants make an offer of proof concerning evidence excluded because of time constraints, the appellate court had nothing to review. Health Enrichment & Longevity Inst., Inc. v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5094 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6246 (Tex. App. Austin July 15, 2004).

604. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, where the State offered defendant's statement into evidence without objection, no error was preserved for appellate review. Carter v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4901 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 28 2004).

605. In a child sexual abuse case, defendant waived an objection to the participation of co-counsel for the State because the objection was not made as soon as the basis for it became apparent, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Gardner v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 27 2004), affirmed by 164

606. To the extent defendant argued that the victim's uncle should have been allowed to testify that the victim had accused others of sexual contact, his contention was waived, because defendant's counsel did not suggest that the testimony should be admitted, and in fact specifically agreed with the trial court that it was inadmissible, and having failed to offer the evidence for admission, defendant could not complain on appeal that the trial court erred by excluding it. Hamrick v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4418 (Tex. App. El Paso May 13 2004).

607. In an inverse condemnation case, a trial court's refusal to allow the State to give an offer of proof was harmless because the substance of the evidence was apparent from the context within which the questions were asked; moreover, the testimony the State sought to offer concerning the impairment of access and the viability of driveway proposals was immaterial to the issue of damages. State v. Delany, 149 S.W.3d 655, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2385 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004), reversed by 2006 Tex. LEXIS 416, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 557 (Tex. 2006).

608. In a conversion case, following the trial court's ruling excluding the affidavit evidence, the mechanic made no offer of proof showing the substance of any of the affidavits pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the mechanic failed to preserve error as to the affidavits. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

609. In a conversion case, the mechanic failed to make an offer of proof following the trial court's ruling excluding the vehicle inquiry receipt and a police incident report regarding a different car pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the receipt or the incident report could not be considered on appeal. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

610. Admission of testimony from the victim's sister during the penalty phase of defendant's trial about sexual abuse he committed against her was properly admitted, as defendant failed to object to the admission of the challenged testimony; further, said failure to object also precluded review for fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Martinez v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10811 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 31 2003).

611. Where the record showed that during the punishment phase of the trial, defendant's stepfather testified that defendant had previously taken his car without permission, defendant's conviction of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon was affirmed; defendant waived his objection as to the admission of his stepfather's testimony where he failed to object when subsequent witnesses testified about the same subject under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Childs v. State, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 9825 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 20 2003).

612. Where appellant and the victim shot each other, the victim died, appellant asserted self-defense, and the witnesses disagreed as to whether the victim or appellant shot first, appellant's conviction of murder in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02 was affirmed because (1) the evidence as to why appellant was afraid of the victim was irrelevant under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a), (b) because the victim's conduct of flashing his gun and shooting first were unambiguous acts of aggression and violence, (2) appellant failed to properly preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), to the admission of evidence of his gang membership under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and (3) impeachment of the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) was proper because the witness created a false impression with the jury as to the extent of his arrests and convictions. Reyna v. State, 99 S.W.3d 344, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

613. Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) excuses the requirement to repeat objections in front of the jury if a proper objection has been made outside the jury's hearing; where defense counsel objected to two gang related photos at a bench conference, under Rule 103(a)(1) it was not necessary to repeat the objection to the photos but defense counsel was obligated to object to other gang related evidence. Martinez v. State, 98 S.W.3d 189, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 33 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3073, 180 L. Ed. 2d 896, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4930 (U.S. 2011).

614. Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected; in case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record, stating the specific ground of objection, if the specific ground is not apparent from the context. Martinez v. State, 91 S.W.3d 331, 2002 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 233 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002).

615. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), an offer of proof was required to preserve error in the trial court's exclusion of part of a defense witness's testimony where the relevant matters the defense was attempting to prove by the testimony were not apparent from the context of the questioning. Railsback v. State, 95 S.W.3d 473, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8492 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

616. A trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of a defendant's expert under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), where the defendant did not offer a bill of exception of offer of proof to show the substance of his expert's proposed testimony. Martinez v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7708 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 30 2002).

617. Absent a showing of proof regarding the testimony of defendant's witness as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, a trial court properly excluded the witness's testimony that appeared to have been based on facts not in evidence. Ricketts v. State, 89 S.W.3d 312, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7838 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

618. Appellant was not denied due process at sentencing because he failed to object to the judge's statement that he would not consider probation under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Teixeira v. State, 89 S.W.3d 190, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

619. Appellant's conviction was affirmed because the issue of the expert's testimony on sexual assault had been waived in that appellant failed to make a specific objection as to any aspect of her expertise under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Teixeira v. State, 89 S.W.3d 190, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

620. Objection that extraneous act evidence was prior to the act at issue and not part of the transaction at issue was not sufficient to preserve appeal based on lack of notice of extraneous act evidence. Hartson v. State, 59 S.W.3d 780, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 6810 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

621. Stockbroker's testimony in a bill of exception was insufficient to satisfy the burden born by a trial court when it excluded evidence because the substance of the evidence had to by known to the trial court by an offer pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Texas Capital Secs., Inc. v. Sandefer, 58 S.W.3d 760, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3223, Blue Sky L. Rep. (CCH) P74233 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2001), opinion withdrawn in part by 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 5004 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 26, 2001).

622. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by refusing her request to take the stand under the limited use doctrine to testify about the voluntariness of her confession, where the record was devoid of any reference to what, if anything, defendant would have testified to. Greenwood v. State, 948 S.W.2d 542, 1997 Tex. App. LEXIS 3616 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1997).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

623. Defendant's objection, when it finally arrived, was too late to preserve the complaint; the prosecutor asked defendant a number of times if he thought the victim had lied, and defendant answered a number of times before he finally objected. Donato v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4698 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 30 2014).

624. Where defendant was convicted for failure to comply with sexual offender registration requirements, his claim that the trial court erred by overruling his objection to the prosecutor's closing argument was not preserved for review because it was not clear from his objection what he was objecting to at trial. Hargiss v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3103, 2014 WL 1087924 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 20 2014).

625. Where defendant was convicted for failure to comply with sexual offender registration requirements, he failed to preserve review of the prosecutor's comment that he had previously been convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child because he did not object each time the State presented evidence of, or commented on, his previous sexual assault conviction. Hargiss v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3103, 2014 WL 1087924 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 20 2014).

626. Prosecutor did not make a proper objection by remarking that he did not want that done after the trial court suggested to defense counsel that he could respond in closing to the prosecutor's closing argument that defendant's refusal to take a breath test was evidence of his intoxication. Montoya v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 473, 2014 WL 223228 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 16 2014).

627. Trial court did not err by revoking defendant's community supervision because the victim's positive identification of him as the individual who exposed himself to her on a college campus was sufficient to show that he committed the offense of indecent exposure. Because defendant did not make any objections to the admissibility of the in-court identification, he waived any error in the trial court's admission of the testimony. Samuel v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14665 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 5 2013).

628. At defendant's trial for failure to comply with sex offender registration requirements, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling his objections to the admission of evidence of an extraneous bad act under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); because his objection in the trial court pertained to lack of adequate notice, his complaint that the evidence in question constituted improper pattern evidence was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Hogan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6706 (Tex. App. Dallas May 30 2013).

629. Even if a trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial, defendant waived error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) by failing to timely object; although there was extensive discussion among the prosecution, defense counsel, and the trial court regarding defendant's invoking his right against self-incrimination, defendant did not object when the State asked him the question of which he complained on appeal. Kalka v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6257 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 22 2013).

630. Trial court granted defendant a running objection as to hearsay and he did not specifically object on the basis that the repeated details of the offenses were cumulative of other evidence, or unduly repetitive, and he has waived that objection, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); there was no abuse of discretion under the circumstances in the trial court's exercise of control over the manner in which the trial was conducted, Tex. R. Evid. 611(a). In re Adame, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4847, 2013 WL 3853386 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2013).

631. Even if the court found that appellant's objections fit within the confines of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), appellant did not object each time the State sought to introduce evidence of the incident, nor did appellant obtain a running objection or set forth a proper objection outside the jury's presence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); because the evidence in question was admitted elsewhere without objection, any error in admitting the evidence was cured. Rudzavice v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3140, 2013 WL 1188924 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 21 2013).

632. Objection on relevance grounds did not preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) as to an asserted Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) error. Helping Hands Home Care, Inc. v. Home Health of Tarrant County, Inc., 393 S.W.3d 492, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 820, 2013 WL 326319 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2013).

633. In a partition action, the appellant property owner's complain of the relevancy of the evidence was not preserved for review because the exhibit had already been admitted when the appellee property owner testified and appellant did not object to appellee's expert's testimony; the same or similar evidence that appellant complained of on appeal was admitted elsewhere in the trial without a relevance objection, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Williams v. Mai, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10513, 2012 WL 6644704 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2012).

634. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), defendant did not show fundamental error where nothing in the record demonstrated that the witness's testimony was false; defendant's sentence was within the range of punishment and the witness testimony did not affect his sentence. Olivarez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9253, 2012 WL 5458422 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2012).

635. Defendant's conviction for aggravated sexual assault of a child under six years of age at the time of the offense was appropriate because there was no error in the admission of the child's statement to the forensic interviewer. However, even there was error, it was harmless because evidence regarding the victim's statements that defendant sexually assaulted her on two occasions came into evidence without objection through the testimony of a nurse and the SAFE Form, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Loya v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8640, 2012 WL 4875499 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 16 2012).

636. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not renew his objection during the detective's testimony, nor did he make a new objection, or seek to renew the objection, during the testimony of the witnesses, or the State's closing argument; defendant preserved nothing for appellate review. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8098, 2012 WL 4393391 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

637. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(1)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defendant did not preserve for appellate review his arguments concerning his complaints regarding witness testimony, and he did not object when the witness testified to essentially the same facts as the detective's testimony. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8099 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

638. In a case involving a forum selection clause, although two guarantors made a number of objections to an affidavit in an appellate brief, none of the objections were made at a hearing. Therefore, the issues were overruled. Chaseekhalili v. Cinemacar Leasing, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6617 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2012).

639. Defendant failed to preserve his bolstering argument for appeal because his only objections to the admission of the sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony about the victim's statements were that it was hearsay and violated his rights to confront the complainant; defendant never complained to the trial court about the alleged bolstering effect of the testimony and therefore he failed to preserve error on that ground. Bowman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5210, 2012 WL 2444908 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

640. Defendant's motion in limine and argument on the issue outside the presence of the jury adequately preserved for review his objections to evidence regarding his membership in the Aryan Brotherhood gang without the need to object to testimony as it came in or to obtain a continuing objection. Guffey v. State, 2012 Tex. App.

LEXIS 3293, 2012 WL 1470185 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 26 2012).

641. Defendant forfeited her complaint about the evidence under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and the evidentiary complaints made by her were not fundamental under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Osborne v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9299, 2011 WL 5903651 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 23 2011).

642. Defendant neither filed a motion to suppress any evidence nor asserted an objection when the State offered the handgun into evidence; consequently, defendant failed to preserve this point for appellate review. Nero v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9039, 2011 WL 5515495 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 10 2011).

643. Any statements addressed to defendant were for the purpose of clarifying an issue before the court, that being rehabilitation, and the trial court maintained a neutral and detached role; thus, an objection was required. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8750, 2011 WL 5221263 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 26 2011).

644. Because defendant did not make a Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection at any point during the testimony of a witness or when the State actually introduced the exhibit, the Rule 403 complaint was waived; defendant did not obtain a running objection based on Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) after he first objected to the witness's testimony on the subject of the altercation at the hospital, and he did not raise a Rule 404(b) or 403 objection when the State offered the video, and as such, he waived error. White v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8118, 2011 WL 4825650 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 12 2011).

645. Patient failed to object when the State read his admissions into evidence and when it explained the requests for admissions; the patient failed to preserve his complaints for appeal, Tex. E. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. In re Kilpatrick, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6997, 2011 WL 3925665 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 25 2011).

646. Defendant's "invading the province of the jury" amounted to no objection and did not preserve anything for appellate review, Tex. R. Evid. 103, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Contreras v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5891, 2011 WL 3273966 (Tex. App. Tyler July 29 2011).

647. Defendant did not preserve his claim that the court improperly permitted the officer to state his expert opinion that defendant was intoxicated for review because he did not object to this testimony at trial, and defendant did not argue that the admission of the evidence was fundamental error; the officer explained the basis of his opinion, permitting the jury to evaluate whether it agreed with the officer's conclusion. Reyna v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5038, 2011 WL 2621314 (Tex. App. Austin July 1 2011).

648. Trial court's explanation did not indicate approval of the State's argument, indicate disbelief in the defense's position, or diminish the credibility of the defense's approach; because the inmate did not object to the trial court's explanation, he waived his complaint. In re Frazier, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4896 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 30 2011).

649. Viewed in its proper context, the jury instruction neither tainted defendant's presumption of innocence or prevented him from receiving a fair trial, and no fundamental error was committed; therefore, defendant waived the issue by failing to object at trial. Gonzales v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4376, 2011 WL 2404272 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 9 2011).

650. At the revocation hearing, defendant objected to an officer's testimony concerning text messages that he found on a cell phone that was in defendant's possession at the time of her arrest for driving while intoxicated on the grounds that the officer lacked a warrant, probable cause, or reasonable suspicion to justify searching the cell phone. Because defendant did not object that the testimony was hearsay or that it violated the Confrontation Clause, these issues were not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103 (a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Bird v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4211, 2011 WL 2203925 (Tex. App. Eastland June 2 2011).

651. After the trial court denied defendant's motion in limine, he waived his complaint regarding the officer's testimony about the horizontal gaze nystagmus field sobriety test during his trial for driving while intoxicated. Defendant made no objection as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and his motion in limine was not sufficient to preserve the error for review. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2352, 2011 WL 1198922 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2011).

652. Denial of defendant's motion in limine was not sufficient to preserve error in admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous offenses. By not objecting in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 103 to the admission of his guilty pleas at trial, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appellate review. Kuykendall v. State, 335 S.W.3d 429, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1722 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 9 2011).

653. In a case in which defendant's issue on appeal related not to the admission of certain photographs of the victim, to which defendant objected, but to the trial court's asking of a predicate question, which defendant suggested indicated the judge's bias towards the State, the appellate court agreed that the trial court should have allowed the State to lay the predicate for its evidence, but it did not agree the trial court's conduct rose to the level of a fundamental error under Tex. R. Evidence 103(d) or a right that could not be forfeited. To the extent the trial court did err, its action was not incurable if defendant had objected. Vestal v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 802, 2011 WL 345943 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 3 2011).

654. On appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he claimed the trial court abused its discretion by admitting evidence that two of the guns found in his apartment were stolen. Because the jury had already heard evidence from two different witnesses that the guns were stolen without any objection from defendant, the error was not properly preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Chenier v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 678, 2011 WL 286156 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 27 2011).

655. Defendant's trial counsel did not lodge any objections or obtain a running objection pertaining to the complained-of testimony regarding defendant's alleged misdeeds in his real estate dealings; thus, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issue was waived on appeal. Whitley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8651, 2010 WL 4264661 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 28 2010).

656. Where decedent's wife testified as to their agreement to be married, the trial court construed decedent's will as if a common law marriage existed; on appeal, decedent's children argued that the wife's testimony did not meet the requirements of the Dead Man's Statute under Tex. R. Evid. 601 because it was not corroborated by other evidence. The Court of Appeals of Texas would not address the argument, because no objection was made at trial as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). In the Estate of Landers, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7196, 2010 WL 3420905 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 1 2010).

657. In a criminal case involving sexual abuse of a child, while defendant claimed that a speculation objection to a nurse practitioner's testimony on statistics of confirmed cases of sexual abuse where there were no physical findings was a challenge to the nurse practitioner's expert qualifications, that ground was not apparent from the context under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Cortez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5854, 2010 WL 2889670 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 22 2010).

658. Defendant's objection outside of a jury's presence to the State being allowed to question a codefendant when the State knew the codefendant would invoke the privilege against self-incrimination was sufficient to preserve the matter on appeal under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Gober v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3065, 2010 WL 1657164 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 26 2010).

659. State correctly recognized that under Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), no objection was required to be made before the jury where the court heard objections to offered evidence outside the presence of the jury; Rule 103(b) applies only where the court rules that the evidence be admitted. Downey v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2722 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 6 2010).

660. Defendant's claim of error with respect to the admission of the recorded interview with an officer was not preserved for appellate review because, after the trial court concluded that the recording indicated that defendant was advised of his rights, defense counsel stated, "I have nothing else." The opportunity presented itself for defendant to clarify the objection and to specifically state the basis of it to have involved the mention of extraneous offenses. Crews v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9677, 2009 WL 4907423 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 22 2009).

661. In a subrogation action, a trial court did not err by admitting a police report into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 803(8) because there was nothing to indicate that the report lacked trustworthiness. Moreover, because a large part of the report was admissible non-opinion evidence and a driver did not specifically object to the opinion statements, the trial court properly overruled an alleged driver's objection regarding expert opinion. Lawrence v. Geico Gen. Ins. Co., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5082, 2009 WL 1886177 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 2 2009).

662. In defendant's murder case, defendant failed to preserve for review the exclusion of testimony regarding his state of mind because defense counsel did not provide the trial judge with a concise statement regarding the content of the testimony he proposed to elicit from defendant; instead, he merely informed the trial judge of his reason for asking the questions. Gobert v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4341, 2009 WL 1493036 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 28 2009).

663. Where defendant entered a plea of true to intoxication manslaughter, defendant waived his claim that the presentation of evidence to the jury during sentencing violated his right to due process of law and equal protection of law. The fundamental error concept set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) did not apply. In re A.D., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3985 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 15 2009).

664. Believing that defendant had drugs in the car that he was driving, an undercover officer directed uniformed police officers to stop defendant after he observed defendant commit a traffic violation; based on prior encounters with defendant, the undercover officer called for a narcotics dog which lead to the discovery of drugs in defendant's car. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress, he raised objections under Tex. R. Evid. 103 that prevented the officer from testifying as to the articulable facts that led the officer to believe there was contraband in defendant's car; therefore, the invited error doctrine prevented defendant from challenging the State's failure to prove the articulable facts that led to the search of his car. Vennus v. State, 282 S.W.3d 70, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 977 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

665. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant's objection was specific enough to put the trial judge and opposing counsel on notice of the issue and to afford them the opportunity to remedy the defect by calling an expert witness. The trial judge specifically stated that defendant made his record for the objection, and that indicated that the trial judge was aware of the basis for objection, but found it did not have any merit. Layton v. State, 280 S.W.3d 235, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 149 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

666. In an aggravated assault case, defendant failed to show that she received ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to make certain objections; the record was silent as to trial counsel's reasoning or strategy, and an appellate court was unable to speculate on such. Even if an objection would have been proper during voir dire based on comments made about the burden of proof, defendant failed to rebut the strong presumption that the failure to object was strategic; moreover, she did not show that the trial court would have committed error in failing to sustain an objection to cross-examination conducted during the punishment phase of the trial. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

667. In an aggravated assault case, an alleged error based on a prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant during the punishment phase of the trial was not preserved for review because the objection before the trial court did not comport with the issue raised on appeal; instead of bringing forth an objection based on DeGarmo v. State, 691 S.W.2d 657 (Tex. Crim. App. 1985), during trial, an objection was made that a question had been "asked and answered." Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

668. In a negligence suit, the intervenors second objection to a doctor's expert testimony referred to the general violation of a motion in limine and was non-specific as to the basis of their objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Because intervenors did not identify the basis of their objection and there was no record of the trial court's placing any limitations on the expert's testimony, the intervenor's objection was insufficient and waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Sinegaure v. Bally Total Fitness Corp., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9435 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 18 2008).

669. In a case involving the civil commitment of a patient found to be a sexually violent predator, the patient failed to object at the first opportunity to an expert's opinion regarding truthfulness; therefore, the alleged error was not preserved for appellate review. In re Commitment of Eeds, 254 S.W.3d 555, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3337 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

670. Defendant failed to preserve his claim that a trial court violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation by excluding certain testimony aimed at impeaching the key witness against him because although defendant argued that the testimony should be admitted because it would impeach the witness's credibility, he did not specifically assert his right of confrontation. Johnson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2644 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 15 2008).

671. Defendant failed, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, to make an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403, Tex. R. Evid. 404 to the complained-of testimony, plus defendant failed to object to the introduction of two letters, and thus defendant forfeited his complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Guerrero v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 13 2008).

672. Appellants, the children of a decedent, failed to preserve certain issues for appeal because they did not object to the issue as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103; the only exception was an issue involving a legal sufficiency challenge following a bench trial, which could be challenged for the first time on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Civ. P. 324. Hulen v. Hamilton, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1672 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 28 2008).

673. Admission of extraneous offense evidence in a murder case was not error because defendant objected only to the admission of physical evidence related to the extraneous offense, not to testimony about it; defendant did not make a timely objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103 as soon as the basis for it became apparent. Stephens v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1301 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 21 2008).

674. Defendant's convictions for multiple counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, indecency with a child, and sexual assault were appropriate pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 because defendant's claim that the trial court erred in admitting testimony that pornography was recovered from a computer seized during the search of his home was not preserved for appellate review; defendant failed to object at trial when an investigator testified that images of pornography involving animals were found on the computer. Patterson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9264 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 29 2007).

675. During defendant's murder trial, he objected to a police officer's videotaped interview with a witness on Confrontation Clause grounds; on appeal, he claimed the trial court violated Tex. R. Evid. 613 by admitting the recording; because the objection at trial did not comport with the complaint on appeal, the error was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Brandon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8903 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 8 2007).

676. Defendant asserted that the trial court erred in admitting an expert's testimony because he was not qualified to testify as an expert and because his "backdoor opinion" that sex offenders were not capable of being cured violated Tex. R. Evid. 702; that argument was rejected, however, because defendant did not properly object and, therefore, failed to preserve the alleged error as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33. Ghahremani v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8584 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 30 2007).

677. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the timeliness of the State's notice under Tex. R. Evid. 404 of its intent to introduce extraneous offense evidence in a child sexual abuse case because, although he raised the issue, he did not object to any specific testimony or obtain a ruling. Jared v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8448 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 25 2007).

678. In defendant's sexual assault and indecency with a child case, any error in failing to give limiting instructions was harmless; defendant's first request was untimely and the trial court did not err by denying it, and within the context of the entire case, defendant's failure to request a limiting instruction during any other testimony covering the same extraneous offense evidence did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Neathery v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6625 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 16 2007).

679. During defendant's trial for several counts of aggravated robbery, he failed to make a Confrontation-Clause objection to portions of the detective's testimony relating what a declarant told him about defendant's involvement in the crimes; while defendant was not given an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant, he waived his right to challenge the admission of the testimony by failing to object as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Vidal v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6339 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 10 2007).

680. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of the thirteen-year-old victim, the State informed the defense of its intent to offer evidence of the three extraneous acts of sexual intercourse; outside the presence of the jury, defendant objected to the evidence on grounds of relevance and prejudice; he was not required to reassert the objections before the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6004 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 30 2007).

681. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault on a child case, defendant failed to preserve for review his complaint regarding admission of a statement he made to a witness because defendant objected on various grounds, including relevance, when the State asked the witness whether defendant made any comments of a sexual nature about young women, but defendant did not object when the State subsequently asked the witness to relay the substance of the comment at issue. Silva v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4720 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 19 2007).

682. By failing to object, appellant juvenile failed to preserve his claim that he was not allowed a full cross-examination of the assault victim at the disposition hearing. In re J.L.C., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3063 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 19 2007).

683. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, because evidence about defendant's drinking and arguments with the victims' mother was admitted without objection before the complained-of ruling, defendant failed to preserve any error associated with testimony regarding those issues. Mayfield v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2545 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 29 2007).

684. Because defendant failed, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, to object to testimony on the grounds asserted on appeal, the arguments were waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); even if error was preserved, the testimony in question was cumulative of other properly admitted evidence from the victim herself, and thus the court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred in admitting the testimony of the witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072. Stepp v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1439 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 1 2007).

685. Record did not reveal that the track owner ever specifically brought the couple's expert's qualifications or the reliability of his testimony to the trial court's attention and obtained a ruling from the court; consequently, the owner failed to preserve for appellate review any challenge relating to the expert's qualifications or the reliability of his testimony. S.E.A. Leasing, Inc. v. Steele, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1337 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 22 2007).

686. Husband did not properly preserve for review his assertion that the trial court abused its discretion when it appointed the mediator as arbitrator because there was no record of an objection being made to the trial court or of a ruling on the objection as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Gaskin v. Gaskin, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7689 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2006).

687. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the testimony of a police officer who stated that the victims identified a witness as being present during an armed robbery; although defendant previously had objected to similar testimony from another officer, he did not obtain a running objection or object outside the jury's presence to all testimony regarding the victims' identification of the witness. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6859 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

688. In the absence of a timely and specific objection, defendant's claim that trial court erred in allowing testimony to be presented that may have amounted to a comment on his right to remain silent was not preserved for review. Perales v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5829 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 6 2006).

689. Where defendant was convicted of two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, he failed to preserve error in the trial court's admission of extraneous-offense evidence of defendant's sexual assault of the victim's younger sister; the same evidence was admitted through the testimony of several witnesses, and counsel did not timely object as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Sinclair v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4277 (Tex. App. Waco May 17 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Offers of Proof

690. Where the expert could have presented or intended to present testimony which was not reflected in her report, any error relating to the exclusion of that testimony was not preserved for appeal; the mother failed to make an offer of proof and could not now complain of excluded testimony not reflected in the expert's report. In the Interest of D.W.C., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5166 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 15 2014).

691. Trial court was within its discretion in naming a grandparent as a joint managing conservator to protect the children's physical health and emotional development, in part because the decision to exclude testimony related to conservatorship of another of her child was not preserved for appellate review. The mother did not demonstrate the substance of the excluded testimony and the limited record regarding the stricken testimony belied the assertion that the grandmother would have testified that the mother was a fit mother. Compton v. Pfannenstiel, 428 S.W.3d 881, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1680, 2014 WL 576175 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 13 2014).

692. In a trial for aggravated assault on an officer arising from an exchange of gunfire between defendant and the officer, the Sixth Amendment did not require that defendant be allowed to question the officer's attorney, who had met with the officer at the scene, because it was not a sufficient offer of proof to argue that no one seeks the advice of an attorney unless they think they need one and that the attorney "may have" affected the officer's willingness to discuss the events with an investigator. Tesi v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 294, 2014 WL 70084 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 9 2014).

693. Patient's counsel made an offer of proof covering other areas of the doctor's testimony, but did not ask questions regarding the doctor's rate of error, and because the patient failed to include questions and elicit answers regarding the doctor's rates of error during his offers of proof, it could not be determined whether the exclusion of the evidence was harmful, and the patient's claim was not preserved. In re Commitment Lovings, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12927, 2013 WL 5658426 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

694. Defendant did not point to a place in the record, via an offer of proof or otherwise, that established the victim consented to sexual activity after age 18, and thus evidence supporting defendant's position on consent was not submitted for consideration of admissibility and defendant failed to preserve error on the point. Green v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10890 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 28 2013).

695. In defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in excluding the former testimony of a witness from a co-defendant's trial because the requested excerpt of testimony contained both admissible and inadmissible evidence, and it was defendant's burden to segregate and specifically offer the portions that were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 804(b)(1), pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10655 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

696. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred in excluding evidence of a murder victim's criminal history was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) because defendant never received an adverse ruling from the trial court and never made an offer of proof. Leyba v. State, 416 S.W.3d 563, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067, 2013 WL 4070770 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 13 2013).

697. At defendant's trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, the trial court did not reversibly err by sustaining the State's objection to expert testimony concerning the nature of the wounds defendant sustained when he was shot. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof, it was unclear from the record what he wished to ask the expert. Bowen v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9197 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 25 2013).

698. Appellate court had nothing to review on a father's claim that his due process rights were violated when the trial court refused to allow him to meaningfully cross-examine a mother; the father did not object to the two-and-a-half-hour time limit to present his case or make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) concerning evidence that was excluded. In the Interest of A.E.A., 406 S.W.3d 404, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8935 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 18 2013).

699. Husband did not assert that his constitutional complaint could be raised for the first time on appeal and he waived the issue for review and he failed to preserve the issue that he was not permitted to present specific evidence and ask specific questions of witnesses with an offer of proof or formal bill of exception, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); if the parties or the trial court did not agree with the contents of the bill, the rules provided a procedure for presenting the bill, Tex. R. Civ. P. 33.2(c)(2)(A)-(C). Lancaster v. Lancaster, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7708 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 25 2013).

700. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding details of certain complaints under Tex. R. Evid. 403, given that prolonged proof of what happened in other accidents could not be used to distract the jury's attention from what happened in the instant case, plus appellants did not make an offer of proof as to the contents of the complaints until filing a statutory offer of proof, while Tex. R. Evid. 103(b) required an offer to be made before the charge was read to the jury, and the record did not show that the procedure required in filing a formal bill of exception under Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 was followed. Estate of Muniz v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7158 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 12 2013).

701. It was clear from the record that the trial court's ruling on the motion in limine permitted testimony that the victim suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), but the trial court intended to exclude evidence that his actions were a result of his PTSD diagnosis without expert testimony; the court found no waiver of appellant's complaint on appeal, and although appellant might have made an offer of proof concerning how the victim's PTSD diagnosis related to her belief of his actions on the day in question, such an offer was not necessary because counsel made the trial court aware of the content of the testimony. Strache v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6494 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 29 2013).

702. Mother failed to preserve for review her contention that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding a psychologist's report from evidence because she never offered the report into evidence and there was nothing in the record showing that she made an offer of proof or a bill of exception. In the Interest of L.D.W., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6195 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 21 2013).

703. For purposes of seeking relief from a default judgment, it was not disputed that the original new trial motion and affidavits of the roofer and company did not assert facts that would established the existence of a meritorious defense, plus the trial court prohibited the roofer from testifying, and for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), counsel did not object to this or make an offer of proof. Kyle v. Zepeda, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6229, 2013 WL 2246030 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 21 2013).

704. Without knowing what facts the roofer would have testified to, the court was unable to determine whether the company would have established a meritorious defense for relief from default judgment purposes, and whether the exclusion of the testimony was harmful. Kyle v. Zepeda, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6229, 2013 WL 2246030 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 21 2013).

705. Nothing supported the claim that the statements qualified under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), and appellant did not assert this at trial or make an offer of proof. Carrion v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5673 (Tex. App. Eastland May 9 2013).

706. On appeal of the decision denying appellant property owner's request for a temporary injunction to prevent a foreclosure, appellant claimed the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to permit her to admit into evidence a tape recording of a conversation between her and the bank's president. The appellate court was unable to evaluate the merits of her claim, because appellant did not make an offer of proof or otherwise make the tape recording part of the appellate record under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Wright v. First Nat'l Bank of Bastrop, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4911 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2013).

707. Grandmother had waived the issue of whether the trial court improperly excluded evidence of the her grandchildren's heritage where she did not offer the evidence she contended should have been admitted, and consequently did not obtain a ruling excluding that evidence, nor did she make an offer of proof or a bill of exception. B. O. v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4712, 2013 WL 1567452 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 12 2013).

708. Defendant convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon failed to preserve error on his claim that the trial court abused its discretion by limiting his cross-examination of the victim to exclude questions regarding the victim's drug use after the assault because defendant failed to make an offer of proof for the excluded testimony. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2250, 2013 WL 857252 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2013).

709. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because, without an offer of proof, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the trial court's exclusion of the doctor's testimony regarding his rate of error was erroneous and harmful, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Thus, respondent's claim was waived. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

710. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator was proper because his counsel did not make an offer of proof with the psychiatrist regarding the issue of behavioral abnormality, nor did he identify the answers he expected to receive from the psychiatrist. Without an offer of proof, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the trial court excluded relevant examination or whether the exclusion of the evidence was harmful, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

711. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding additional evidence regarding the receipt of text messages, because the record indicated that the evidence defendant wanted the jury to hear, the jury did in fact hear; the jury heard the evidence, though perhaps from fewer witnesses and in less detail than defendant would have preferred. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1658, 2013 WL 625734 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 20 2013).

712. Appellant did not preserve for review his claim regarding the limitation on an expert's testimony and the cross-examination of the victim, given that he did not make an offer of proof as to what questions he would have asked and the testimony he would have elicited, he did not summarize what the evidence would have shown, and counsel's comments of inconsistencies indicating the victim was not able to hold a memory did not amount to a formal offer of proof or an informal bill, as they did not reveal the substance of the evidence; the court could not conduct a proper harm analysis. Covarrubias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1434, 2013 WL 557177 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 13 2013).

713. It could not be determined on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion by precluding defendant from questioning an officer about an allegedly inconsistent statement she gave to the police department's Internal Affairs Division to demonstrate bias because defendant did not make an offer of proof by presenting the entire statement. Foster v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1139, 2013 WL 476817 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 7 2013).

714. On appeal of defendant's conviction for aggravated robbery, he claimed the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to allow the defense to cross-examine a witness regarding his criminal history; because defendant made no offer of proof regarding the underlying facts of the witness's conviction that he wanted to explore, the issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103; Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Henson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 974, 2013 WL 396015 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 31 2013).

715. Counsel's description of a doctor's anticipated testimony at trial did not describe the context of the testimony, but only made a general comment on the nature of the evidence, and this was insufficient to preserve the issue for appeal, as it was not specific enough for the court to determine admissibility, and moreover, counsel's description did not reference the best interests of the child in this suit to modify the parent-child relationship; even if the court held that a sufficient offer of proof had been made, the court would have found no abuse of discretion by the trial court in limiting the doctor's testimony, as the offer only referred to generalized categories of testimony, the father did not show that the evidence would have been material to the ruling, and absent a complaint about the substantive ruling, it was hard to see how the exclusion of the evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment, plus the doctor could not have testified to any personal knowledge of harm to the child because he did not treat him. Watts v. Oliver, 396 S.W.3d 124, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2013 WL 266050 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 24 2013).

716. Mother claimed the trial court erred in excluding evidence when the trial court denied her the right to make a timely proffer, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), but the trial court expressly told the mother before the charge was read that she could make her offer of proof whenever she wanted to do so, and she did not timely act on this and instead offered her proof after the charge was read, and thus the court had no basis to review the issue and the mother waived any error in this regard. In the Interest of A.C., 394 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10299, 2012 WL 6204285 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2012).

717. Merely stating a desire to ask questions about an officer's basis for reasonable suspicion, as defense counsel did, did not apprise the trial court of the basis for the objection or the testimony desired; because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103, he preserved nothing for appellate review. Emale v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9913 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2012).

718. As to defendant's argument regarding the various, unspecified complaints about the confidential informant from people connected to the apartment building, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Bolton v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9402, 2012 WL 5507404 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 14 2012).

719. Because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103 detailing what the excluded evidence would have been, the appellate court had no basis for reviewing his contention that the trial court erred in excluding the testimony of defendant's wife about the relationship between defendant and his children. Smith v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9037 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 31 2012).

720. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by excluding the testimony of her expert about approximate vehicle speeds based on "crush analysis" because the expert never stated what speeds she estimated the vehicles to be traveling, which would be crucial to understanding what testimony was excluded and whether the exclusion was harmful. Montgomery v. State, 383 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8491, 2012 WL 4829800 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2012).

721. Defendant failed to preserve for review her claim that the trial court erred by excluding the expert's testimony about the angle of defendant's lane change because the court was unable to determine from the context what the expert would have said about the angle of defendant's vehicle. Montgomery v. State, 383 S.W.3d 722, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8491, 2012 WL 4829800 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2012).

722. Sex offender failed to preserve error regarding the exclusion of his designated expert as an expert witness because he had not shown that he made an offer of proof in the trial court that made the substance of the purported testimony by his designated expert known or that he perfected a bill of exception. In re Brown, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8136, 2012 WL 4466348 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 27 2012).

723. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on a sworn statement by another individual confessing to the crime because the letter was in the record before the court and defendant failed to make an offer of proof at trial regarding the excluded letter and its contents. Henry v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7590 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 5 2012).

724. Because the claimants' counsel in a products liability case did not make a bill of exception under Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 and did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), (b) regarding the exclusion of an exhibit, the claimants waived review of the trial court's exclusion of the exhibit. Tidwell v. Terex Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7724 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

725. At the hearing on a motion for closure of the estate and approval of the inventory, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to hear testimony from appellee estate administrator and his counsel. Because appellant estate beneficiary did not make an offer of proof of the substance of the evidence he hoped to elicit, he did not preserve the error for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), (b). In re Estate of Denton, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6212, 2012 WL 3063845 (Tex. App. Eastland July 26 2012).

726. Counsel did not claim to want to cross-examine a witness about a potential bias, no offer of proof was made, plus counsel's complaint was different than the one made on appeal, as counsel asked to visit the witness's criminal matters, and the trial court denied the request because convictions were not involved, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 609(a), and thus appellant waived complaints under Tex. R. Evid. 611 and the Sixth Amendment concerning the limitations on the cross-examination of the witness, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A); even absent waiver, the court would have overruled the claims, given that (1) there was no causal connection between the witness's deferred adjudication and his testimony, and (2) nothing showed the existence or expectation of a deal in the deferred adjudication case. Mcburnett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5300, 2012 WL 2583407 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 5 2012).

727. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by excluding an officer's opinion about whether an interviewer used leading questions in a recorded interview because defendant made no offer of proof or bill of exception containing the substance of the officer's excluded testimony. Myles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4911, 2012 WL 2357426 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 21 2012).

728. Husband failed to preserve his complaint on appeal that a trial court erred in a divorce action in refusing to hear evidence of an inheritance by the wife; the husband failed to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) by making the substance of the evidence known to the trial court by an offer of proof. Ashraf v. Ashraf, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4345, 2012 WL 1948347 (Tex. App. Austin May 24 2012).

729. Father failed to demonstrate the witness's unavailability, and he did not make an offer of proof regarding the evidence the witness would have provided, Tex. R. Evid. 103. In the Interest of S.G.E., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3944, 2012 WL 1795132 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 17 2012).

730. In a habeas corpus case in which an inmate had been convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death, his claim that the trial court violated his right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment when it denied his niece the opportunity to testify about how his execution would impact her was procedurally barred. At trial, defendant did not make an offer of proof, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals (TCCA) expressly relied on Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) in adjudicating the inmate's claim, and the TCCA had applied that procedural requirement strictly or regularly in the majority of similar claims in the capital context. Roberts v. Thaler, 681 F.3d 597, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 9790 (5th Cir. Tex. May 15 2012).

731. Defendant failed to make an offer of proof regarding any other mental afflictions suffered by the informant, and therefore he failed to preserve them for review. Dowden v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3584, 2012 WL 1605234 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 8 2012).

732. Given the brief description of the proffered evidence with concise facts, as reflected by the record and stated by trial counsel regarding the civil suit, defendant's trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance. West v. State,

2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3612, 2012 WL 1606239 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 8 2012).

733. Nothing showed that appellant attempted to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 103 or that the trial court denied appellant the chance to make an offer of proof as to evidence of his mother's mental health; as appellant did not present evidence and made no bill on the issue, the court was left to speculate, and the court overruled his claim of ineffective assistance in this regard. Arroyos v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3574, 2012 WL 1555900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 3 2012).

734. Defendant's conviction for retaliation against a public servant was proper because, although defendant contended that the trial court erred by limiting his cross-examination of a corporal, counsel failed to make it known to the court, and it was not apparent from the context, what evidence defendant intended to elicit from the witness to further show that the assault charge had no basis in fact; the appellate court was unable to determine whether error occurred or defendant was harmed, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Creeks v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2933 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2012).

735. In a case in which a trial court denied a mother's motion to modify the conservatorship provisions of the parties' divorce decree, if the mother thought evidence with respect to her claim that the father had received an alleged diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder was relevant and important to the issues raised in the modification hearing, she should have made an offer of proof so that the excluded evidence could be assessed on appeal; without it, a reviewing court could not determine if the trial court actually erred. In the Interest of I.J.M., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2710 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 5 2012).

736. Because there was no offer of proof or bill of exceptions that identified the substance of the allegedly erroneously-excluded testimony, nothing was presented for review. Beckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2293, 2012 WL 955358 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2012).

737. For purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(B) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b), appellant did not perfect an offer of proof or a bill of exceptions, and absent a showing of what the testimony would have been or an offer of a statement in this regard, and because the substance of what a witness's answers would have been was not apparent, appellant did not present anything for review and the issue was waived. Beckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2293, 2012 WL 955358 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2012).

738. Husband failed to preserve the issue for appeal concerning the exclusion his expert witness, because the husband did not make a timely offer of proof before the trial court and did not file a formal bill of exception. Sink v. Sink, 364 S.W.3d 340, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2006, 2012 WL 840340 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 14 2012).

739. Defendant's claim that her right of confrontation was violated by the trial court limiting her cross-examination during her theft trial presented nothing for review, because the record contained no offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) identifying the substance of the excluded testimony. Huff v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1079, 2012 WL 401047 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 9 2012).

740. No questions concerning certain sobriety tests were asked of appellant's father, either before the jury or in the offer of proof, and thus the issue was not preserved for review. Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

741. Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of a tenant's general partner; the tenant's counsel, in his offer of proof, gave no explanation for the basis of the partner's opinions and whether he had personal knowledge on the cost of damages or repairs, nothing in the bill of exception indicated such personal knowledge, and the partner agreed several times that he lacked personal knowledge about the work done at the leased property. Lone Starr Multi-Theatres, Ltd. v. Max Interests, Ltd., 365 S.W.3d 688, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10210, 2011 WL 6938527 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 29 2011).

742. In the proceeding to commit respondent as a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by restricting respondent's cross-examination of one of the State's experts. Even if respondent's proposed questions were relevant to an issue in dispute, his failure to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) preserved nothing for appellate review. In re Dees, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9807 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 15 2011).

743. Defendant convicted of capital murder following the death of a restaurant employee during a robbery failed to preserve his claim that the trial court erred by excluding a co-conspirator's opinion that defendant could not have anticipated the murder. Defendant did not make an offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Barton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9229, 2011 WL 5846300 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 22 2011).

744. Appellant made an offer of proof in which he described the testimony he expected witnesses would have provided, and thus appellant preserved the non-constitutional evidentiary arguments he raised. Jackson v. State, 352 S.W.3d 288, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8455 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 25 2011).

745. Appellant did not preserve a constitutional argument because he never argued that exclusion of proffered evidence prevented him from asserting a defense or violated his right to confrontation or due process. Jackson v. State, 352 S.W.3d 288, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8455 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 25 2011).

746. Excluded photographs were not included in the record, and although the court could not review the actual photographs, the court assumed appellant preserved the issue because the subject matter of the photographs was apparent from context, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Jackson v. State, 352 S.W.3d 288, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8455 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 25 2011).

747. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a company and a business failed to establish the absence of unfair surprise or unfair prejudice regarding a motion for leave to supplement its expert disclosure; the corporation incurred over $ 400,000 in attorney and expert fees already, the corporation's attorney testified that three months would not be enough time to analyze and oppose new opinions, and there was no offer of proof to show what the late-designated expert would have testified at trial. Popcap Games, Inc. v. MumboJumbo, LLC, 350 S.W.3d 699, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7122 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 31 2011).

748. Company and business argued that the denial of its motion for leave under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.6 was harmful because it left them without expert testimony to support its damages model, but any error was harmless unless the new testifying expert could have provided reliable, admissible testimony, and without an offer of proof, the court would be speculating to assume such. Popcap Games, Inc. v. MumboJumbo, LLC, 350 S.W.3d 699, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7122 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 31 2011).

749. Daughter did not claim that she intended to demonstrate that the signature on the deed was not her mother's, and there was no dispute that the signature on the notarized deed belonged to the decedent; instead, the only issue at trial was whether the decedent had the mental capacity to sign the deed. In re Estate of Johnson, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6243, 2011 WL 3503188 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 11 2011).

750. As to credibility of an officer's testimony, a traditional offer of proof was unnecessary under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), but appellant made no showing sufficient to satisfy even a relaxed standard for preserving error.

Villasenor v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6172, 2011 WL 3435376 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2011).

751. Seller failed to preserve error regarding admission of certain documents, because the seller failed to make an offer of proof; error could not be predicated upon a ruling which excluded evidence unless a substantial right of the party was affected and the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer, or was apparent from the context within which questions were asked. Brookins v. Coppa, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5931, 2011 WL 3242629 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 29 2011).

752. Defendant's complaint on appeal regarding a trial court's decision in defendant's criminal trial to exclude evidence addressing defendant's civil suit against the police was not waived by defendant's failure to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Van Goffney v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5334, 2011 WL 2731850 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

753. Because the substance of the excluded testimony was not apparent from the circumstances, defendant needed to provide an offer of proof to preserve the error, and he failed to do so; defendant's counsel offered no response to the trial court's ruling and passed the witness without further discussion, and any potential error was not preserved. Lewis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4861, 2011 WL 2536161 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 28 2011).

754. Party made no offer of proof and did not offer the excluded evidence into the record by filing a bill of exception; the court could not consider the records, and because the substance of those records was not apparent, the party failed to preserve error in this regard. In re Estate of Brooks, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4755, 2011 WL 2475846 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 23 2011).

755. Husband's complaint was not preserved for review where although he contended the trial court prevented him from presenting evidence of the wife's alleged adultery, the husband did not identify what additional evidence he was prevented from presenting, and he made no offer of proof or bill of exception for the appellate court to review. Ismik v. Ibrahimbas, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4540 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 16 2011).

756. Defendant failed to preserve his claim for review, Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, as he did not make a record showing what other evidence he wanted to elicit. The appellate court could not tell what other evidence besides the witness's opinion testimony about the informant's credibility defendant sought to admit. Hicks v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4623, 2011 WL 2436818 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 16 2011).

757. Insurer failed to preserve error with regard to its appellate issues, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), as it made its arguments against setting a hearing on attorney's fees, not against actually awarding the employee attorney's fees; the insurer did not inform the court that it had additional evidence to put on and objections to make. Am. Cas. Co. v. Neuwirth, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4069, 2011 WL 2139121 (Tex. App. Austin May 26 2011).

758. Appellant never submitted a formal offer of proof indicating what he intended to testify to; thus, the substance of the excluded testimony could not be determined and appellant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Hardeman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3858, 2011 WL 1901978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 19 2011).

759. Because appellant did not file a motion for new trial arguing ineffective assistance, there was no record to affirmatively show that counsel was deficient, and even assuming that counsel was deficient in not preserving error through an offer of proof regarding introducing a driver's handbook, prejudice was not shown; the purpose of introducing the handbook was to prove that a detective was at fault for making a left turn in front of appellant, but the handbook only made recommendations, and even without it, appellant was able to argue the Texas Penal Code to show fault. Toney v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3725, 2011 WL 1991031 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 18 2011).

760. Father properly preserved his complaint for appellate review where the trial court understood the substance of the evidence related to the father's defenses against the alleged arrearage; it was apparent that the father and his wife intended to testify that the child support had been paid in full. In re R.G., 362 S.W.3d 118, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3493 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 11 2011).

761. During the punishment phase of defendant's manslaughter prosecution, exclusion of evidence about the stepfather's religious principles and their influence on defendant was not improper because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) to show the relevance of that evidence. Fruge v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2829, 2011 WL 1441891 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 14 2011).

762. Appellant did not make an offer of proof or bill of exception to show what excluded testimony would have been, and counsel's statements did not constitute a summary of the evidence offered; even assuming that counsel's statements were sufficient and the trial court erred by excluding the proffered testimony, exclusion of the testimony did not affect appellant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that the record contained evidence from which the jury could have found that appellant committed the offenses in question. Fisher v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2746, 2011 WL 1416585 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 13 2011).

763. Because appellant did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), obtain an adverse ruling on the admissibility of evidence, or otherwise make a record of the proposed evidence by a bill of exception, he failed to preserve his complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 that the trial court erred in excluding his testimony concerning a request to change his child's surname. In re Interest of R.F., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2373 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 31 2011).

764. In defendant's prosecution for sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011, defendant did not preserve error for review regarding the exclusion of the testimony of the victim's minor son, who was allegedly present during all her encounters with defendant, as he did not submit an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) setting forth the substance of the son's testimony. Daniel v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1996, 2011 WL 941301 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 16 2011).

765. In a dispute between a condominium association and a unit owner, because the owner failed to object or make an offer of proof, evidentiary issues were waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Bosch v. Cedar Vill. Townhomes Homeowners Ass'n, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 804, 2011 WL 346317 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 3 2011).

766. Defendant failed to preserve for review his claim that a child sexual assault victim had bias or motive to lie because he did not introduce at a hearing that occurred outside the presence of the jury the victim's prior outcry statement that she had made against another man; he provided no offer of proof as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Littlepage v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9968 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2010).

767. On appeal of defendant's conviction for causing serious bodily injury to a child, he claimed the trial court erred by excluding defensive testimony relevant to his culpable mental state. Defendant failed to preserve this contention for review, because he did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Ord v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9538, 2010 WL 4909951 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 1 2010).

768. Before a witness took the stand, counsel stated what his first-aggressor witnesses would testify to, and based on these representations, the substance of the witness's testimony was made known to the trial court for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), and the complaint was therefore preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8834, 2010 WL 4361885 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 4 2010).

769. Although defendant complained that he was denied his constitutional right to confront and cross-examine one of the complainants about his credibility, specifically by asking the complainant about his prior felony and misdemeanor convictions, defendant never made an offer of proof of the evidence that he sought to have admitted; without an offer of proof, an appellate court could not evaluate the complaint, and error could not be predicated on the ruling, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b). Douglas v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8659, 2010 WL 4264541 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2010).

770. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), respondent failed to preserve for review a challenge to a trial court's sustaining of the State's objection to questions concerning what age respondent would be upon release from prison; respondent did not make an offer of proof concerning how the witness would have answered the questions had the trial court permitted the witness to do so. In re Commitment of Robertson, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

771. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a party had to make an offer of proof to preserve error with regard to the exclusion of evidence unless the substance of the evidence was apparent from the context; however, an offer of proof was not required when a defendant was cross-examining a State's witness about matters that might affect the witness's credibility. Because the witness's cross-examination did not focus on the witness's personal characteristics, an offer of proof was required to preserve the issue for appellate review, and because defendant failed to make an offer of proof, he failed to preserve this issue for review. Bonner v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7440, 2010 WL 3503858 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 8 2010).

772. Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by denying his request to make an offer of proof was rejected because it was unclear from the record that defendant intended to make such an offer, as it was not apparent from the plain language or the context of the record what defendant hoped to elicit from the witness and defendant did not make the trial court aware of what he expected to elicit. Lewis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6870, 2010 WL 3304205 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 19 2010).

773. Although a daughter sent many documents to the court that were not included in the record, the documents were not a part of the appellate record and the court was unable to review the complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence in question; even if an offer of proof had been made for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), without the documents the court could not ascertain the error. Thornton v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6462, 2010 WL 3160040 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 11 2010).

774. On appeal of the judgment revoking defendant's community supervision, he argued that the trial court erred by excluding an affidavit from a witness who was unavailable to testify at trial. Because defendant did not offer the affidavit for record purposes or describe the substance of the affidavit to the trial court as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), the error was not preserved for appellate review. White v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4773 (Tex. App. Dallas June 24 2010).

775. Appellant did not make an offer of proof in order to preserve error and thus error was not preserved. Shrenyee Cheng v. Zhaoya Wang, 315 S.W.3d 668, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4669 (Tex. App. Dallas June 22 2010).

776. Defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact was proper because, although the record indicated that defendant sought to question the State's expert on two Child Protective Services' reports involving physical abuse of the complainant, a prior report of physical abuse was not sufficiently similar to an allegation of sexual abuse to have any probative value, particularly given the risk that such evidence would unduly prejudice and confuse the jury. Furthermore, the record contained no evidence of the circumstances surrounding the making of the reports, including whether they were made by the complainant or someone else; because defendant made no offer of proof regarding the reports, there was nothing for the appellate court to review, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) Sosa v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4428, 2010 WL 2330304 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2010).

777. Defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact was proper because he presented nothing for review regarding the testimony he sought to elicit on cross-examination and because he failed to establish that any prior allegations of abuse were both false and similar in nature to the allegations at issue in the current case. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding such evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Sosa v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4428, 2010 WL 2330304 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2010).

778. In an attorney fee dispute, the client failed to preserve his issues for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, 33.2 because he did not object, make an offer of proof, or file a bill of exceptions after the trial court sanctioned him for refusing to answer a discovery request by not allowing him to present evidence at trial; thus, no harmful error could be found under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Nelson v. Duesler, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3390, 2010 WL 1796098 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 6 2010).

779. Defendant made no offer of proof or bill of exception showing what a witness's excluded testimony would have been; because defendant did not show what the witness's testimony would have been, he has not preserved this issue for appellate review. Thompson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 11, 2010).

780. In a negligence suit, the trial court properly sustained Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) hearsay objections to testimony from a police officer and to e-mails written in anticipation of litigation; the officer's testimony was not admissible under the Tex. R. Evid. 803(3) state of mind hearsay exception because the Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) offer of proof did not make clear when the declarant spoke with the officer, and the e-mails also were not spontaneous statements and did not qualify as business records under Rule 803(6). Estate of Ronnie Wren v. Bastinelli, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 330 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 20 2010).

781. Although defendant's argument based on Tex. R. Evid. 612 ultimately failed because defendant never established that a witness used the document to refresh her memory, defendant also failed to make an offer of proof concerning the document, and without the inclusion of the document in the record, the court could not determine whether the trial court committed harmful error by refusing to allow the defense to review the document. Love v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8952, 2009 WL 3930900 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 19 2009).

782. Relatives who sought custody of a child preserved their objection to the exclusion of testimony regarding the mother's competence to sign the statement of consent because they made an offer of proof in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). In re Cervantes, 300 S.W.3d 865, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8743 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2009).

783. In a case involving unlawful possession of a firearm by a felon, defendant failed to preserve an error relating to the exclusion of evidence of his mental health treatment during the punishment phase of the trial. The trial court's indication that it was not going to allow testimony relating to competency proceedings did not relieve defendant of the responsibility of at least making an offer of proof and obtaining a ruling. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7251, 2009 WL 3365880 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 10 2009).

784. In a child custody case, because a father failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) concerning the proposed testimony from his daughter, an issue relating to the exclusion of her testimony was not properly preserved for appellate review. Further, the father's comment to the trial court was not a sufficient burden of proof. Conn v. Rhodes, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6587, 2009 WL 2579577 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

785. Individual had not waived error by failing to make an offer of proof, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), where the individual complained of the entire procedure employed by the trial court in rendering judgment enforcing the settlement agreement without supporting pleadings, evidence, or an appropriate proceeding such as a trial or summary judgment, and the individual had made this complaint clear at the hearing on his motion to vacate the settlement agreement. Gunter v. Empire Pipeline Corp., 310 S.W.3d 19, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5685 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2009).

786. Defendant failed to preserve an argument regarding the omission of testimony because, although defense counsel explained to the trial court that defendant could testify as to an alleged prior stabbing or shooting, there was no offer of proof made as to defendant's testimony. Because the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted was not made known to the trial court, and was not apparent from the context, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appellate review. Martinez v. Texas, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 25 2009).

787. Defendant failed to preserve error relating to a trial court's ruling that evidence of diminished capacity was not admissible during the guilt phase of a capital murder trial because he did not make an offer of proof, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103; because the trial court intended for the exclusion of diminished capacity evidence to apply to the entire guilt phase of the trial, defendant was obligated to make an offer of proof that extended beyond the anticipated questions to, and topics of discussion with, potential jurors during voir dire. The fact that a trial judge was mistaken about the need for an offer of proof did not relieve defendant of his burden. Mays v. State, 285 S.W.3d 884, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 981 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

788. Habeas corpus relief was denied in a child support case where there was a finding of contempt because a father waived his argument that a trial court erred by not allowing him to offer evidence about certain offsets because the father did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). In re Corder, 332 S.W.3d 498, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2652 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 10 2009).

789. In a trust dispute, a grandson did not preserve his complaint regarding the exclusion of the testimony of a witness because he did not file an offer of proof or follow the procedures relating to a formal bill of exceptions. Cooper v. Cochran, 288 S.W.3d 522, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2522 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 9 2009).

790. Appellants did not cite any authority or outline their argument on appeal regarding tort claims and thus under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), they waived a challenge to the trial court's grant of the landowners no-evidence summary judgment; the trial court denied a motion to sever the claims, no bill of exception or offer of proof was sought under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(b), and counsel did not object to the charge or provide a proposed charge including the claims, for purposes of Tex. R. Cciv. P. 279. Estate of Jose Ernesto Trevino v. Melton, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4084, 2009 WL 891881 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 3 2009).

791. Court did not need to address defendant's argument regarding exclusion of his expert's testimony because error was not properly preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, 33.2, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), given that (1) counsel's identification of the mere topics of the expert's likely testimony did not qualify as a reasonably specific summary of the evidence, (2) in the absence of a bill of exception or offer of proof, the record did not indicate what the excluded testimony would have been at the guilt/innocence phase, and (3) although the trial court allowed defendant's expert to testify about defendant's relationship with his father, because the evidence was offered after the court's charge was read to the jury, it could not qualify as an offer of proof under Rule 103(b) that would otherwise have preserved error during the guilt/innocence phase. Solley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1118, 2009

WL 396268 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 19 2009).

792. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault of a child under 14, defendant failed to preserve an alleged error relating to the granting of the State's motion in limine regarding the admission of a videotape because no offer of proof was made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Defendant wanted to offer the tape to rebut the alleged victim's claim that she was afraid of him. Luna v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1146, 2009 WL 400629 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 19 2009).

793. Defendant made no attempt to introduce the evidence that he claimed that the trial court improperly excluded, and absent an offer of proof or a bill of exception setting forth the evidence he sought to introduce, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, nothing on this issue was presented for review on appeal. Moore v. State, 275 S.W.3d 633, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 48 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 7 2009).

794. In a trust dispute, a grandson did not preserve his complaint regarding the exclusion of the testimony of a witness because he did not file an offer of proof or follow the procedures relating to a formal bill of exceptions.

795. Because the court found that the trial court's ruling was based solely on its conclusion that damages were no longer available to a purchaser and predecessor after they had already elected to seek, and had obtained, specific performance as a remedy, the court confined its analysis to the trial court's specific ruling, and the purchaser and predecessor were not required to make an offer of proof to preserve this argument, as the seller contended. Paciwest, Inc. v. Warner Alan Props., LLC, 266 S.W.3d 559, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6812 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

796. In a family violence protective order hearing, the trial court excluded evidence of the victim's violation of her alcohol probation terms which was offered to impeach the victim's credibility. The issue was preserved for review, because defense counsel said that he was seeking to impeach the victim's credibility; an explicit offer of proof was not necessary under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Mercer v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5794 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 31 2008).

797. Although defendant claimed that the exclusion of testimony violated defendant's federal constitutional rights, defendant did not object to the exclusion on such grounds nor did he raise such grounds in his offer of proof; he was not free to raise this for the first time on appeal and the issue was waived. Poplin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5451 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

798. To the extent that defendant's proffer of testimony could have been construed as an offer of a prior inconsistent statement by the victim under Tex. R. Evid. 613, defendant did not lay the proper predicate to the admission of the testimony under Rule 613(a); by not confronting the victim first with her prior inconsistent statement, defendant did not give her an opportunity to explain the prior inconsistency and the vague and broad questions that defendant asked did not give the victim enough information to explain, deny, or admit her prior statement Poplin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5451 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

799. Where an ex-wife failed to make an offer of proof or file a formal bill of exceptions at the trial stage, she had failed to preserve for appeal her claim that the trial court erred in failing to admit her documents into evidence because although she stated in her brief that copies of the documents were in the appellate record, she did not state where in the record the documents could be found, and the appellate court was unable to locate them in its review of the record; in any event, simply filing the excluded evidence was not sufficient to make a proper bill of exceptions. Darby v. Darby, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3452 (Tex. App. Tyler May 14 2008).

800. In a personal injury suit, appellants properly preserved the error, if any, regarding excluded evidence of appellee's consumption of alcohol because, although single offers of proof from a witness might have elicited testimony concerning multiple classifications of excluded evidence, i.e., evidence concerning both the consumption of alcohol and speeding, the trial court was not prevented from differentiating between such testimony and making separate rulings on the same. PPC Transp. v. Metcalf, 254 S.W.3d 636, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3291 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

801. Defendant failed to articulate a basis for his objection to the trial court's failure to admit evidence concerning the purported meaning of a victim's tattoo and defendant failed to make his intended proffer, such that defendant waived this claim's review. Lopez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3167 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 1 2008).

802. Individual argued that the trial court erred in striking the individual's expert witness; however, there was nothing in the record showing an offer of proof, a bill of exception, or that the expert report was brought to the trial court's attention, and without an offer of proof, the individual failed to preserve the complaint for review. Bobbora v. Unitrin Ins. Servs., 255 S.W.3d 331, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2928 (Tex. App. Dallas 2008).

803. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant did not preserve error for review. Nixon v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2266 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 31 2008).

804. Water district board member failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court improperly excluded evidence from various reliable news articles and campaign materials and from several prominent citizens, because even though the board member attached an offer of proof to his motion for new trial, the record did not reflect that he made a timely offer, thus, there was no record of the precise testimony or evidence which the board member sought to include. Scott v. King, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2215 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 27 2008).

805. Defendant failed to preserve for review his claim that the trial court erred by denying him the opportunity to cross-examine one victim about her alleged sexual relationship with someone else because defendant made no offer of proof indicating the victim's answers to the questions and the substance of the evidence was not apparent from the context within which the questions were asked. Franklin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1171 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 20 2008).

806. By failing to make an offer of proof or bill of exception, a mortgagor failed to preserve a complaint regarding excluded testimony for appellate review in a dispute regarding a mortgage contract. Wakeland v. Wakeland, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1024 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 13 2008).

807. Trial court properly sustained the State's objection that defendant was presenting jury argument during his cross-examination of a police officer because defendant's statement, "I'd like for the jury to note that," was not the equivalent of a "let the record reflect" statement, and there was simply no indication, as defendant argued, that he was attempting, during his cross-examination of the officer, to have the record reflect some observable, but non-verbal, incident that was occurring in the courtroom; even if defendant had been trying to have the record reflect a non-verbal event, he did not properly preserve his complaint for appeal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 because at no time did he object or indicate to the trial court that he wanted to preserve a complaint for appeal regarding some non-verbal event occurring in the courtroom, and there was no indication in the record or in defendant's arguments contained in his brief what evidence he claimed was improperly excluded, and it also was not apparent from the context within which defendant asked questions what evidence was improperly excluded. Cordova v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9457 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 5 2007).

808. Normally, the remedy for an error regarding offers of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103 is not a new trial as defendant contended, but is to abate the appeal to permit counsel to develop the appellate record. Andrade v.

State, 246 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

809. Trial court's handling of defendant's requests to make offers of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103 was harmless error; while the trial court erred when it prevented defendant from making an offer of proof prior to the charge being read to the jury, the error was harmless because defendant was ultimately allowed to make his offer of proof. Andrade v. State, 246 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

810. Defendant did not object to the trial court stopping his offer of proof and defendant did not seek to resume his offer at any later point, and thus he failed to preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Andrade v. State, 246 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

811. As defendant had an absolute right to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to excluded testimony, the trial court erred when it prohibited defendant from making his offer, but because defendant did not raise an issue arguing error in this regard, an abatement to permit counsel to develop the appellate record would have served no purpose as it would not have resulted in the development of any information relevant to the appeal, and thus the error was harmless. Andrade v. State, 246 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

812. No offer of proof was made to documents excluded by the trial court, such that the contents of the documents and relevance could not be determined on appeal, and the alleged error was therefore not preserved. Roberts v. Davis, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8672 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 1 2007).

813. In a child support modification proceeding, the father's failure to make an offer of proof waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, the trial court's exclusion of certain documents. In re G.L.S., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8397 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 24 2007).

814. In a drug case, defendant did not have to waive his attorney-client privilege to obtain testimony from a former attorney regarding the attorney's notes on conflicting information in the police report; no waiver was required under the work product privilege of Tex. R. Evid. 503, and a discussion regarding the admissibility of the evidence, combined with defendant's offer of proof, sufficed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the exclusion of the evidence. Cameron v. State, 241 S.W.3d 15, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1120 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

815. On appeal of a conviction of misdemeanor theft, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's objection to the offender's question concerning profit margin in her inquiry as to the value of stolen retail property because the offender did not point to any offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, and the substance of the evidence she sought to offer was not apparent; thus, she forfeited her issue pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; moreover, had she preserved her complaint, the trial court did not err; the offender complained that the trial court should not have sustained the State's relevance objection, but evidence that the victim had a profit margin did not tend to rebut the fact that the victim's sales price was at a fair market value. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5880 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2007).

816. The trial court correctly admitted statements made by the defendant to his polygraph examiner, finding that the statements were made voluntarily. Defendant never asserted his right to remain silent, and he was not the victim of such deception that his will was overborne; further, promises that the statements would only be heard by the examiner were unlikely to elicit false statements. Harty v. State, 229 S.W.3d 849, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5404 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

817. Defendant's trial counsel did not make an offer of proof or present a bill of exception to the trial court to reveal the anticipated substance of the excluded testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), and the substance of the testimony was not apparent from the context, and because no offer of proof was made and the record did not indicate what the excluded testimony would have been, defendant waived any error, and nothing was presented for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Velez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4677 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 14 2007).

818. Only the last of three inconsistencies about which defendant complained on appeal appeared in an exhibit and thus, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), but defense counsel plainly informed the trial court of the substance of the evidence that was excluded, and thus the court agreed to address the complaints. Mooring v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3601 (Tex. App. Waco May 9 2007).

819. Defendant did not preserve error on the issue of the admissibility of mental status evidence, given that defendant failed to offer any evidence of this status at the guilt-innocence phase of the trial, and thus the trial court never made an admissibility ruling on which error could have been based. While defendant's mental status was discussed, that reflected only an intent or desire to introduce evidence of mental condition, which did not support the claim that defendant actually offered any evidence of mental status. Buentello v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3344 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 1 2007).

820. Nothing showed that the trial court ruled or refused to rule on the admissibility of certain testimony and defendant did not show that he obtained a ruling on whether the evidence was admissible under the Confrontation Clause; the offer of proof defendant made did not include any proffered testimony, and thus defendant failed to preserve the complaint for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Dowdell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2738 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2007).

821. While defendant included proposed testimony regarding the alleged evening assault by the victim, defendant's wife, in his offer of proof, there was no evidence the trial court actually denied defendant the opportunity to cross-examine the victim regarding this alleged assault, and there was nothing showing that defendant attempted to do so; because defendant failed to show that the trial court excluded the testimony and defendant failed to show he obtained a ruling on whether the evidence was admissible under the Confrontation Clause, defendant failed to preserve this complaint for appellate review. Dowdell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2738 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2007).

822. Patient's claim that an expert's testimony concerning a radiologist's alleged mistreatment and misdiagnosis of patients other than the patient was not properly preserved for review, because although the patient included some evidence in this regard in an offer of proof, the patient failed to state why the evidence was improperly excluded or why it should have been admitted, and the patient failed to specify the purpose for which the evidence was offered; in any event, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding this evidence given that the expert's testimony in one aspect amounted to pure speculation and the patient did not establish how the testimony was material to the radiologist's interpretation of certain scans, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the testimony was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, or that even if relevant, its probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Montgomery v. Varon, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2582 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2007).

823. Although a patient made an offer of proof, the patient failed to make any argument as to why evidence of a surgeon's reputation in the medical community and alleged mistreatment of other patients was improperly excluded or why it should have been admitted, and the patient failed to specify the purpose for which the evidence was offered; because both steps were required to avoid waiver, the patient failed to preserve certain issues for review. Montgomery v. Varon, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2582 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2007).

824. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, the record did not show that defendant attempted to offer evidence at a hearing, that defendant was prevented from doing so, that defendant objected, or that an offer of proof was made, such that the alleged error concerning compulsory process was arguably not properly preserved for review; assuming that error was preserved, the court consistently followed precedent and noted that (1) Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.15 was an additional procedural safeguard, not required under federal constitutional law, that a defendant was not to be convicted on insufficient evidence even if the defendant pleaded guilty, (2) nothing in the article prohibited the trial court from considering evidence offered by defendant or required the trial court to accept the State's evidence, and (3) a defendant was not required to expressly waive the right to compulsory process before the trial court was able to proceed to judgment on a plea of guilty. Jackson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1434 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 1 2007).

825. Allowing evidence of defendant's flight was not error; defendant made no affirmative showing that his flight was not connected with the offense at trial and evidence, through counsel's statements to the trial court, that defendant did not know of the warrant for his arrest was not affirmative evidence that defendant was fleeing for a reason other than guilt for aggravated robbery; the court noted that case law suggested that an attorney's statements were not enough to make the affirmative showing and that an offer of proof seemed to be the appropriate vehicle. Gore v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1124 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 15 2007).

826. Although the State argued that defendant failed to preserve a complaint for review by not making an offer of proof, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, of defendant's testimony until after the jury was charged, the court understood the trial court's ruling as one admitting, at least in limine, evidence of defendant's prior conviction and not a ruling excluding defendant's testimony, such that defendant preserved the complaint without regard to an offer of proof; although defendant did not testify before the jury, and thus the State did not attempt to offer evidence of defendant's conviction in the guilt-or-innocence stage of trial, the court assumed without deciding that defendant preserved the complaint. Herrera v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 910 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2007).

827. Defendant had already established a fact, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the prosecutor's objection when defendant asked the question again; while defendant argued that the trial court should have allowed the line of questioning so defendant was able to demonstrate a claim of police brutality, defendant made no offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103, and thus defendant failed to preserve any complaint regarding the trial court's exclusion of this line of questioning. Oduol v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 182 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2007).

828. Because no offer of proof was made regarding testimony about previous problems in the police department crime laboratory and issues surrounding its re-certification and the record did not indicate what the excluded testimony would have been, defendant waived any error regarding the exclusion of that testimony, and nothing was presented for appellate review. Ruiz v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10318 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 30 2006).

829. Defendant challenged the trial court's refusal to allow cross-examination of the complainant concerning withdrawals she made from defendant's bank account after his arrest and her history of mental health problems; defendant argued that the cross-examination was relevant to show the complainant's motive to have him arrested, credibility, and ability to process information; however, because the record contained no offer of proof or bill of exceptions containing the substance of the excluded cross-examination testimony, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's complaint presented nothing for the appellate court's review. Carranza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 28 2006).

830. Probative value of evidence regarding whether defendant and the complainant continued their relationship after the aggravated assault with a deadly weapon was slight for the purpose of showing whether the alleged assault occurred; in addition, because of the graphically sexual nature of the photos that defendant sought to introduce into evidence, there was a danger that the jury would unfairly consider them for purposes other than that for which they were offered; in any event, because the record contained no offer of proof or bill of exceptions containing the substance of the testimony that defendant sought to elicit, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's complaint presented nothing for the appellate court's review. Carranza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 28 2006).

831. Appellate court could not consider an expert's testimony from the bill of exceptions in determining whether the trial court erred in excluding his causation testimony because it did not first determine, pursuant to properly assigned error, that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the testimony. Mack Trucks v. Tamez, 206 S.W.3d 572, 2006 Tex. LEXIS 1074, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 80 (Tex. 2006).

832. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant failed, under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33, to preserve error regarding the exclusion of expert testimony that defendant's diabetic condition could have produced symptoms of alcohol intoxication; defendant's offer of proof consisted of a review of the expert's purported qualifications and potential helpfulness but failed to show the specific substance of the excluded evidence. Salam v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8856 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 12 2006).

833. Trial court did not err by excluding medical expense affidavits in a negligence case because the record did not reflect compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 103, which requires that the substance of the evidence must be made known to the trial judge at trial; the records were not offered at trial, and no questions relating to them were asked. Morris v. Marin, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8613 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 5 2006).

834. Defendant did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 as to the exclusion of evidence regarding other occupants of a house where drugs were found in her bedroom because she did not make an offer of proof. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8685 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 5 2006).

835. In a stalking case, defendant's bill of exception arguing that testimony about the complainant's conduct should have been admitted because it would have gone to the weight, reliability, and credibility of the complainant was not specific enough to preserve a confrontation argument under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), (2). Armelin v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8680 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 3 2006).

836. Although, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant made an offer of proof and obtained a ruling, the objection was not specific enough to put the trial court on notice that defendant was making a Confrontation Clause argument, and thus error was not preserved; defendant waived those contentions on appeal. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8147 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 14 2006).

837. Trial court did not exclude testimony offered by defendant and defendant did not make an offer of proof regarding any additional testimony that was purportedly excluded, and therefore, to the extent that defendant claimed to have been precluded from offering such, defendant waived the complaint, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Dixon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7953 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 5 2006).

838. Because defendant obtained a ruling on an offer of proof and it appeared that the substance of the offer was made known to the court, the court rejected the State's claim that defendant failed to preserve error because the offer of proof was made outside the trial court's presence. Freeman v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7675 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 31 2006).

839. Revocation of community supervision was affirmed because without speculating, the appellate court had no idea what the disqualified witnesses' testimony would have been and no way to determine whether it was crucial to the defense, since defendant never made an offer of proof or bill of exception. Duncan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7816 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2006).

840. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof and the substance of the testimony regarding the victim's reputation for truthfulness at issue was not apparent from the context, his fourth point presented nothing for review. Jagneaux v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7871 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

841. Because defendant did not raise certain arguments under Tex. R. Evid. 412 before the trial court, nor were the complaints apparent from the context in which they occurred, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant did not preserve error for review; the trial court indicated that the testimony sought was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 412 and defendant made an offer of proof, but defendant did not offer any other grounds for admitting the excluded testimony when the offer of proof was made. Denton v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6662 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 27 2006).

842. Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of defendant's expert witness because where was no adequate offer of proof following the very general responses given by the expert during questioning by the State; trial counsel's response was merely an attempt to reply to the State's objection, and did not provide a reasonably specific summary of what the expert testimony would contain. Fergerson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2006).

843. Court rejected a cardiologist's claim that appellants' offer of proof was inadequate for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103 because (1) this was not a case in which testimony on an isolated issue was buried in a long deposition, but instead, appellants' counsel included the entire deposition as a convenience, given that in attempting to identify a portion by page and line, counsel had included over 90 percent of the deposition, and (2) the nature of the disputed evidence was apparent and the offer was sufficiently specific; furthermore, neither the cardiologist nor the internist objected to the testimony as cumulative and appellants had no obligation to explain why it was not, such that the court found that appellants' offer of proof was sufficient to preserve error. Hooper v. Chittaluru, 222 S.W.3d 103, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5532 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

844. When the trial court granted defendant's motion to suppress evidence and excluded evidence of a second blood sample taken from defendant after an automobile accident, the State could not rely on Tex. R. Evid. 103 and merely make the substance of the evidence known to the trial court in order to preserve all issues for appeal, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; just as a defendant would be required to do, the State was required to raise all issues with the trial court or they would be forfeited on appeal. State v. Neesley, 196 S.W.3d 356, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4873 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

845. Because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103, nothing was preserved for review on defendant's claim of error related to certain testimony. Garst v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3841 (Tex. App. Austin May 3 2006).

846. Defendant failed to preserve a point of error for review because he did not point to any offer of proof in the record; in order to preserve error, defendant would have had to engage in a question and answer with the witness outside of the jury's presence, or summarize what he believed the evidence would be. Ford v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2379, 2014 WL 823409 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 28 2014).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Timeliness

847. No error was preserved regarding the exclusion of four photographs because the record contained nothing by way of an offer of photographs or an offer of proof until after the charge was read to the jury and it was deliberating. Riley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9580, 2012 WL 5866651 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 20 2012).

848. Defendant convicted of owning an adult arcade without a permit did not offer evidence on the primary-business defense or the effect of the 50/50 rule during trial and made an untimely offer of proof after the jury charge was read; therefore, any error in excluding the evidence was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103. Ethridge v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4780, 2011 WL 2502542 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

849. In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the mother failed to timely object to the admission of drug test results under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and error was waived under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) by the subsequent admission of drug test evidence without objection. Moreover, any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because the jury heard considerable evidence of the mother's drug use and her drug-related arrests. In the Interest of M.F., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3676 (Tex. App. Eastland May 13 2010).

850. Counsel properly objected to the State's effort to call a witness in a murder case, and because that objection was addressed before trial, it did not have to be uttered during trial to remain preserved under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Comparan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1173, 2010 WL 597158 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 18 2010).

851. In an aggravated assault case, because defendant cited no binding authority for an argument that an appellate court should have waived a contemporaneous objection requirement and applied the principles associated with jury-charge error, as set out in Almanza v. State, 686 S.W.2d 157 (Tex. Crim. App. 1984), to commentary made during voir dire as a way of determining that egregious harm resulted, the argument was rejected. Zachery v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 356, 2009 WL 136915 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 20 2009).

852. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of one expert because the subject matter of the testimony was not revealed under Tex. R. Civ. P. 194; the fact that the expert would have been offered for rebuttal was irrelevant, and there was no showing that the testimony of a State's witness was unanticipated; moreover, the patient did not raise the issue of good cause or seek a finding that there was no unfair surprise until a motion for a new trial, so it was untimely. In re Commitment of Marks, 230 S.W.3d 241, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5424 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

853. Defendant alleged that the in-court identification of defendant was improperly suggestive in violation of his due process rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments because the arresting officer reviewed a photograph of defendant about one month prior to the trial; however, the issue was not preserved for appellate review because the objection was not timely under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 since (1) defendant failed to object when the officer's testimony about her review of the photograph was first elicited; and (2) counsel waited until the State rested before asserting any objections to the testimony. Abraham v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2109 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 20 2007).

854. In an aggravated robbery and burglary case, because defendant failed to lodge a timely objection pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103 during the State's enhancement presentation, he forfeited appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) of his complaint regarding issues raised before the jury panel regarding his criminal history; the motion in limine indicated that defendant understood that measures were necessary to prevent the jury panel from being informed of his prior criminal history, and he failed to show any legitimate reason for waiting until the conclusion of the State's voir dire presentation to lodge his complaint. Lowe v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9487 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 1 2006).

855. Victim's counselor testified three times about the victim's statements about what defendant had done before defendant objected, and the need for an objection was apparent from the moment the prosecutor asked the counsel to use the victim's words; thus, defendant's objection was untimely, and this point was not preserved for appellate review. Jagneaux v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7871 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

856. Although defendant complained about a Power Point presentation that the State displayed for the venire panel, which set out the range of punishment for driving while intoxicated in a variety of scenarios, his objection was untimely and thus failed to preserve his complaint for appellate review where it appeared that he had the opportunity to review the Power Point slides before voir dire and affirmatively stated that he had no objection to the slides. Thrower v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6884 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 3 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

857. Attorney's motion in limine was heard on the record and reargued when the successor-in-interest actually offered the exhibits for admission into evidence, which occurred after jury selection but before opening statements; when the successor offered the exhibits and the trial judge asked for objections, at that point, the hearing became a hearing on the admissibility of the exhibits, and the attorney's objections to the exhibits were preserved. Thus, the attorney's complaints were not unreviewable. Houston v. Ludwick, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8415, 2010 WL 4132215 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 21 2010).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Hearings Out of Jury's Presence

858. Defendant's objection outside of a jury's presence to the State being allowed to question a codefendant when the State knew the codefendant would invoke the privilege against self-incrimination was sufficient to preserve the matter on appeal under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Gober v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3065, 2010 WL 1657164 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 26 2010).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

859. Issues were waived on review, because the dentist failed to appear and raise objection to the testimony of the board's expert witness, and the error concerning the dentist's employer could easily have been corrected had the dentist brought it to the board's attention but his motion for rehearing of the board's order raised no issue regarding the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the finding. Mcintosh v. Tex. State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2751, 2014 WL 931260 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 10 2014).

860. Appellate court was not required to ignore defendant's point of error based on the trial court's denial of his pretrial motion to suppress because this rule does not dispense with appellate review of pretrial suppression motions; instead, it merely serves to protect against waiver of such objections offered outside the presence of the jury when the same evidence is offered at trial. Jackson v. State, 424 S.W.3d 140, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1170, 2014 WL 409946 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 4 2014).

861. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity based on gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; the evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1430, 2014 WL 425613 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 31 2014).

862. In a civil proceeding to commit a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not err by allowing the State's experts to disclose various facts and data on which their respective opinions were based. The evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705 and the jury was given a limiting instruction about the appropriate use of the information. In re Tesson, 413 S.W.3d 514, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12919, 2013 WL 5651804 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

863. Defendant did not point to a place in the record, via an offer of proof or otherwise, that established the victim consented to sexual activity after age 18, and thus evidence supporting defendant's position on consent was not submitted for consideration of admissibility and defendant failed to preserve error on the point. Green v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10890 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 28 2013).

864. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred in excluding evidence of a murder victim's criminal history was not preserved for review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) because defendant never received an adverse ruling from the trial court and never made an offer of proof. Leyba v. State, 416 S.W.3d 563, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067, 2013 WL 4070770 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 13 2013).

865. At defendant's trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, the trial court did not reversibly err by sustaining the State's objection to expert testimony concerning the nature of the wounds defendant sustained when he was shot. Because defendant did not make an offer of proof, it was unclear from the record what he wished to ask the expert. Bowen v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9197 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 25 2013).

866. Appellate court had nothing to review on a father's claim that his due process rights were violated when the trial court refused to allow him to meaningfully cross-examine a mother; the father did not object to the two-and-a-half-hour time limit to present his case or make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) concerning evidence that was excluded. In the Interest of A.E.A., 406 S.W.3d 404, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8935 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 18 2013).

867. Specific objection to an exhibit was not recorded in the record and thus was not preserved for appeal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Hht Ltd. v. Nationwide Recovery Sys., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6717 (Tex. App. Dallas May 31 2013).

868. Even if a trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial, defendant waived error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) by failing to timely object; although there was extensive discussion among the prosecution, defense counsel, and the trial court regarding defendant's invoking his right against self-incrimination, defendant did not object when the State asked him the question of which he complained on appeal. Kalka v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6257 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 22 2013).

869. Appellant failed to preserve his second point for review, given that (1) at a pretrial hearing, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), appellant objected when the State offered an exhibit regarding a judgment and sentence for a prior conviction, but when the State offered the exhibit at trial, appellant stated that he had no objection, and (2) as to appellant's argument about the admission of facts of the prior conviction, he asserted an objection as to testimony from one witness, but the State had already elicited similar testimony from another witness without objection. Mccowan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6138 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 16 2013).

870. On appeal of the decision denying appellant property owner's request for a temporary injunction to prevent a foreclosure, appellant claimed the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to permit her to admit into evidence a tape recording of a conversation between her and the bank's president. The appellate court was unable to evaluate the merits of her claim, because appellant did not make an offer of proof or otherwise make the tape recording part of the appellate record under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Wright v. First Nat'l Bank of Bastrop, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS

4911 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2013).

871. Appellant claimed that the notice provided by the State, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(g) and Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), was incomplete and too late, and while the trial court overruled these objections at the time, the trial court invited defense counsel to revisit the issues and then a hearing would be conducted and a final ruling made, but appellant did not cite where he made a follow-up objection based on improper notice, and the court did not find any such objection; defense counsel did not ask for a hearing, renew any objection, or request a running objection, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and thus appellant did not preserve for review any error that might have taken place when the evidence was admitted without objection. Asael Furquim Dearruda v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4657 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 11 2013).

872. Even if the court found that appellant's objections fit within the confines of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), appellant did not object each time the State sought to introduce evidence of the incident, nor did appellant obtain a running objection or set forth a proper objection outside the jury's presence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); because the evidence in question was admitted elsewhere without objection, any error in admitting the evidence was cured. Rudzavice v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3140, 2013 WL 1188924 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 21 2013).

873. Any error in the admission of the expert's testimony did not affect the patient's substantial rights, because the trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction regarding the use of hearsay evidence. In re Commitment of Villegas, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1596, 2013 WL 645239 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 21 2013).

874. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding additional evidence regarding the receipt of text messages, because the record indicated that the evidence defendant wanted the jury to hear, the jury did in fact hear; the jury heard the evidence, though perhaps from fewer witnesses and in less detail than defendant would have preferred. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1658, 2013 WL 625734 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 20 2013).

876. Appellant did not preserve for review his claim regarding the limitation on an expert's testimony and the cross-examination of the victim, given that he did not make an offer of proof as to what questions he would have asked and the testimony he would have elicited, he did not summarize what the evidence would have shown, and counsel's comments of inconsistencies indicating the victim was not able to hold a memory did not amount to a formal offer of proof or an informal bill, as they did not reveal the substance of the evidence; the court could not conduct a proper harm analysis. Covarrubias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1434, 2013 WL 557177 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 13 2013).

877. Counsel's description of a doctor's anticipated testimony at trial did not describe the context of the testimony, but only made a general comment on the nature of the evidence, and this was insufficient to preserve the issue for appeal, as it was not specific enough for the court to determine admissibility, and moreover, counsel's description did not reference the best interests of the child in this suit to modify the parent-child relationship; even if the court held that a sufficient offer of proof had been made, the court would have found no abuse of discretion by the trial court in limiting the doctor's testimony, as the offer only referred to generalized categories of testimony, the father did not show that the evidence would have been material to the ruling, and absent a complaint about the substantive ruling, it was hard to see how the exclusion of the evidence probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment, plus the doctor could not have testified to any personal knowledge of harm to the child because he did not treat him. Watts v. Oliver, 396 S.W.3d 124, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 716, 2013 WL 266050 (Tex. App.

Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 24 2013).

878. Appellant did not make an offer of proof concerning the testimony she wanted to elicit from a witness, and thus she failed to preserve this issue for review. St. Amand v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 374 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

879. Defendant preserved for review her argument that the trial court erred in admitting into evidence her fourth recorded interview with the officer, because in her motion to suppress, defendant expressly argued that she was either under arrest or substantially deprived of freedom by the attendant conduct of said law enforcement officers and the surrounding circumstances. Nelson v. State, 405 S.W.3d 113, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 377, 2013 WL 174502 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 17 2013).

880. Mother waived on appeal her claim that the expert's testimony was not relevant, because she made no such objection at trial, nor did she move to strike any of the testimony. Mueller v. Bran, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 176, 2013 WL 123693 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 10 2013).

881. Assuming without deciding that the trial court abused its discretion in permitting expert witness testimony, the court could not find that appellant's substantial rights were affected, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given in part that (1) the jury heard evidence that appellant, while driving, weaved, struck a guardrail, failed to signal, and almost hit another car, (2) the jury saw a video recording showing appellant crossing into another lane and failing to signal, (3) the jury heard officer testimony that appellant smelled of alcohol, was wobbly and had slow speech and a cold beer can in his vehicle, and (4) appellant admitted to drinking and taking prescription medication; the defense reminded the jury that the expert was not a doctor, and the jury was advised that it could only find appellant guilty if it found so beyond a reasonable doubt, and thus even without the expert's testimony, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have found appellant guilty of driving with a child passenger while intoxicated. Miller v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10264, 2012 WL 6213735 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 12 2012).

882. Because a builder failed to object and make an offer of proof and instead affirmatively represented that the builder had no further questions to ask homeowners' construction expert, the builder failed to preserve under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) a claim that the trial court erred in limiting cross-examination of the expert. Kramer v. Hollmann, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9655, 2012 WL 5869423 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 21 2012).

883. Appellant did not show what other evidence he wanted to be considered, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a), and he did not file a new trial motion; because the substance of the evidence was not in the record, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, the court could not examine it to determine if the exclusion was harmful, and the issue was not preserved for review. Schulte v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 1 2012).

884. Appellant, in claiming the victim, a 19-year-old mentally disabled woman, was incompetent, requested a hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 601(a)(2), and the trial court found the victim competent, and during cross-examination, defense counsel re-urged the competency objection; appellant's motion did not only seek a hearing, but exclusion of the victim's testimony, and this was a timely request stating grounds for exclusion, which was pursued to an adverse ruling for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and thus appellant preserved this issue for review by obtaining an adverse ruling on the evidence's admissibility outside of the jury's presence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Luria v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8646, 2012 WL 4900908 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 17 2012).

885. Appellant's brief did not contain one statement that comported with his trial objection, and although appellant objected to the introduction of certain exhibits and testimony concerning those exhibits, he did not object when the victim testified to essentially the same facts; a party wishing to complain about evidence had to object each time the evidence was offered, or the objection was waived. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

886. Appellant's counsel objected to certain exhibits, but appellant did not renew the objection during a detective's testimony or make a new objection or renew the objection during other testimony or the State's closing argument, and he cited no authority that supported such a broad application of one objection, nor did the court find any; the court reviewed the record to see if a sufficient objection was made elsewhere for preservation purposes, but the court found none. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

887. Because no objection or motion was made before the trial court regarding appellant's complaints on appeal, nothing was preserved for review as to these complaints, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

888. Appellant did not make a timely request or objection during certain testimony and counsel instead stated he had no objection to the testimony or certain exhibits, such that nothing was presented for review in this regard. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

889. Complaints about the State's closing argument were unpreserved because appellant did not object, and the trial objections did not comport with the ones on appeal; error was waived. Suiters v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8097 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 26 2012).

890. Hearsay objection was not preserved for review, because appellants' counsel made only a general hearsay objection to the admission of the witness's testimony and did not object with specificity, despite the trial court's invitation to him to do so; nor did he obtain a definitive adverse ruling while the trial court was in a proper position to change its conditional ruling of admissibility and the claimant was in a position to offer other testimony or to subpoena the witness to testify. Tryco Enters. v. Robinson, 390 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7810, 2012 WL 4021126 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 13 2012).

891. At defendant's trial for DWI, the admission of medical records containing extraneous offense evidence did not have a substantial effect on the verdict under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), because the jury heard evidence that defendant was passed out in his vehicle with a bottle of alcohol between his legs; the officer noticed defendant's glassy and bloodshot eyes, defendant admitted he consumed alcohol and prescription medications, and field sobriety test results suggested intoxication. The record contained sufficient evidence from which the jury could find defendant guilty of DWI beyond a reasonable doubt. Lorenz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7777, 2012 WL 4017766 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 12 2012).

892. At a bench conference, counsel made an argument under Tex. R. Evid. 403 regarding a videotape, and although counsel failed to reassert her objection during the sentencing part of the trial, because the bench conference discussing the videotape was done outside of the jury's presence, the issue was preserved for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Garza v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6865, 2012 WL 3525634 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2012).

893. Extent to which defendant argued that the trial court prevented him from asking the witness a question regarding defendant's ability to follow the law, the complaint was without merit, because defense counsel did not ask the witness any questions regarding defendant's ability to follow the law and the trial court did not prevent defense counsel from asking such a question, and defendant had not shown that the exclusion of the witness's testimony regarding defendant's faith affected a substantial right. Villarreal v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5862, 2012 WL 2929390 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 19 2012).

894. Appellant did not object to a trooper's testimony concerning appellant's failure to answer questions on a form, and thus he failed to preserve error concerning admission of the form. Stovall v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5571, 2012 WL 2862369 (Tex. App. Eastland July 12 2012).

895. Trial court accepted the jury's second punishment for sexual assault of a child of five years' confinement, and because the sentence ultimately imposed was within the statutory range under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 22.011(f), 12.33(a), the sentence was not illegal and the trial court did not violate appellant's fundamental rights in imposing a sentence according to the second punishment verdict, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Mayes v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5157, 2012 WL 2453724 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 28 2012).

896. Error about which appellant complained, regarding the jury verdict and the sentence imposed, was not so fundamental as to have relieved him of the requirement to object, and the court found that (1) he did not object to the deliberations procedures and counsel agreed with the trial court's finding that the initial verdict was illegal and deliberations were to continue, and (2) the motion for a new trial did not preserve the issue; as the sentence imposed for sexual assault of a child was not illegal, and appellant failed to object and the motion for a new trial was not shown to have been presented, he failed to preserve for review his claims concerning the trial court's rejection of the original verdict and misstatement of the law. Mayes v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5157, 2012 WL 2453724 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 28 2012).

897. Appellant did not object to evidence of narcotics use when the State posed a question or when the witness answered, but at a bench conference, he argued that the evidence was not relevant, and this was sufficient to preserve the relevance objection given that the objection was deemed to apply when the evidence was subsequently admitted, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); at the bench conference, appellant did not object on prejudicial effect grounds, the objection at trial did not comport with the one on appeal, and he failed to preserve error on the claim that the testimony was prejudicial. Miles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4929, 2012 WL 2356478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 21 2012).

898. Husband failed to preserve his complaint on appeal that a trial court erred in a divorce action in refusing to hear evidence of an inheritance by the wife; the husband failed to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) by making the substance of the evidence known to the trial court by an offer of proof. Ashraf v. Ashraf, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4345, 2012 WL 1948347 (Tex. App. Austin May 24 2012).

899. Nothing showed that appellant attempted to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 103 or that the trial court denied appellant the chance to make an offer of proof as to evidence of his mother's mental health; as appellant did not present evidence and made no bill on the issue, the court was left to speculate, and the court overruled his claim of ineffective assistance in this regard. Arroyos v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3574, 2012 WL 1555900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 3 2012).

900. Debtor testified without objection that statements shown to him were his statements, and he answered questions about the documents before his counsel objected; the objection was not timely for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), plus the records were offered to refresh the debtor's recollection and impeach his credibility for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 612, credibility could be attacked by any party under Tex. R. Evid. 607, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the debtor's testimony in this regard. Ainsworth v. Cach, Llc, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2798 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 10 2012).

901. Ex-husband could not show that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to allow questions to the ex-wife about an excluded exhibit, given that (1) the exhibit was not offered into evidence and was not part of the record, (2) the ex-husband did not make an offer of proof or otherwise make the exhibit or testimony part of the record, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, and (3) the trial court already admitted evidence of emails between the ex-wife and her alleged paramour, and thus the trial court already admitted evidence of the ex-wife's affair. Prentiss v. Prentiss, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2070, 2012 WL 858592 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2012).

902. At trial, appellant only requested that it call a rebuttal witness without identifying the witness or the questioning, and thus appellant did not make the substance of its proposed testimony known, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), and appellant did not preserve the issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). 1.9 Little York, Ltd. v. Allice Trading Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2112, 2012 WL 897776 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 15 2012).

903. Husband failed to preserve the issue for appeal concerning the exclusion his expert witness, because the husband did not make a timely offer of proof before the trial court and did not file a formal bill of exception. Sink v. Sink, 364 S.W.3d 340, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2006, 2012 WL 840340 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 14 2012).

904. On appeal of defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact, defendant argued that the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) by disallowing the cross-examination of the complainant regarding her motive and state of mind in telling her friend that defendant fondled her. Because the evidence came in during the testimony of the friend, any error was harmless. Taylor v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1663, 2012 WL 662373 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 1 2012).

905. Appellant based her objection at trial upon an exhibit's alleged hearsay status because of the exhibit's purported failure to qualify as a business record, but she did not object on constitutional grounds, and an objection concerning hearsay rules did not preserve an argument concerning one's right of confrontation; because appellant failed to urge an objection regarding her right of confrontation under U.S. Const. amend. VI, XIV at trial, she forfeited her issue on appeal, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Buckner v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1258, 2012 WL 503522 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2012).

906. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for bribery, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's ruling on evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) allowing testimony from a witness urging the jury not to sentence defendant to probation. The testimony did not influence the jury, because its imposition of a 19-year sentence showed that the jury did not consider probation to be an appropriate option. Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

907. Client argued that he preserved his complaint for review because his objection grounds were apparent from context, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), but it was not clear what his objection was and whether he argued that a question was prejudicial or objectionable on some other ground, and the client did not object when conspiracy theories were mentioned, plus an objection with no basis was overruled; although the client claimed he did not have to renew his objections, there was no ruling on the record, and thus the matter was not preserved for review. Parsons v. Greenberg, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 888, 2012 WL 310505 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 2 2012).

908. No adverse ruling regarding appellant's father's testimony about appellant's medical records apepared, his offer of proof had no testimony from the father, and the record contained no explanation of how a diagnosis of neurofibromatosis was relevant to any contested issue in this driving while intoxicated case, such that the issue was not preserved for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b). Bradley v. State,

2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

909. No questions concerning certain sobriety tests were asked of appellant's father, either before the jury or in the offer of proof, and thus the issue was not preserved for review. Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

910. Appellant did not make an offer of proof regarding the contents of a letter and the relevance thereof, and therefore he failed to preserve this issue for review. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 100, 2012 WL 29326 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 5 2012).

911. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), appellant had to proffer with some degree of specificity the substantive evidence he intended to present with regard to the victim's anger and the relevance thereof, but he failed to do so, and thus he did not preserve this argument for review. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 100, 2012 WL 29326 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 5 2012).

912. Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of a tenant's general partner; the tenant's counsel, in his offer of proof, gave no explanation for the basis of the partner's opinions and whether he had personal knowledge on the cost of damages or repairs, nothing in the bill of exception indicated such personal knowledge, and the partner agreed several times that he lacked personal knowledge about the work done at the leased property. Lone Starr Multi-Theatres, Ltd. v. Max Interests, Ltd., 365 S.W.3d 688, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10210, 2011 WL 6938527 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 29 2011).

913. Defendant failed to preserve the trial court's alleged error in excluding her proposed testimony about prior acts of abuse by the boyfriend, because the substance of the excluded testimony was not apparent from the context and defendant made no offer of proof. Ellis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

914. Appellant failed to preserve complaints for appeal under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; appellant failed to object during a hearing to commit appellant as a sexually violent predator when the State read appellant's admissions into evidence and when the trial court gave appellant's explanation of requests for admissions. In re Hitt, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9377 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 1 2011).

915. Because a party failed to raise constitutional complaints below, she failed to preserve them for appeal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). In the Interest of A.S.D., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9205, 2011 WL 5607608 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 17 2011).

916. Where a decedent's husband made a blanket hearsay objection without identifying each part of each nurse's report that was problematic and because he did not specifically assert that the reports contained hearsay within hearsay, his blanket objection was not sufficiently specific to preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). In the Estate of Ward, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6811, 2011 WL 3720829 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 24 2011).

917. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court erred by admitting an audio-video recording containing portions of his grand jury testimony, because defendant never lodged any complaints regarding self-incrimination, and when the State offered the redacted recording of defendant's grand jury testimony, defendant objected solely on grounds of optional completeness. Lewis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6987, 2011 WL 3925633 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2011).

918. Any error by determining the drug test results were admissible was harmless, because the father's testimony was admitted without objection, when the content of the testimony was cumulative of the drug test results the father argued were inappropriately admitted. D.O.H. v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6685, 2011 WL 3684568 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 23 2011).

919. Substance of certain evidence was not made known to the trial court by offer, plus the substance was not apparent from the context within which the questions were asked; thus, appellant failed to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and waived any error regarding this evidence. Sanford v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6615 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2011).

920. Because defendant made no specific objection during a revocation hearing to testimony by defendant's probation officer as improper polygraph evidence, defendant failed to preserve the complaint for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6580, 2011 WL 3621333 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 17 2011).

921. Because counsel for appellant did not argue that the exclusion of evidence would violate appellant's constitutional right to present a defense under the Fourteenth and Sixth Amendments, he failed to preserve his complaint for appellate review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Villasenor v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6172, 2011 WL 3435376 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2011).

922. Error was preserved for review, because objections to evidence offered out of the jury's presence would be deemed to apply to such evidence when admitted without the necessity of repeating the objection. Schultz v. Lester, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2011 WL 3211271 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2011).

923. Seller failed to preserve error regarding admission of certain documents, because the seller failed to make an offer of proof; error could not be predicated upon a ruling which excluded evidence unless a substantial right of the party was affected and the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer, or was apparent from the context within which questions were asked. Brookins v. Coppa, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5931, 2011 WL 3242629 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 29 2011).

924. Defendant's complaint on appeal regarding a trial court's decision in defendant's criminal trial to exclude evidence addressing defendant's civil suit against the police was not waived by defendant's failure to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Van Goffney v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5334, 2011 WL 2731850 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

925. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), a trucking company preserved its issue regarding the admission of drug tests into evidence because it objected to the complained-of evidence outside the presence of the jury and pursued the objection to an adverse ruling. Tornado Trucking, Inc. v. Dodd, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5123, 2011 WL 2641272 (Tex. App. Waco July 6 2011).

926. When evidence was offered, a party made no complaint, and thus under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), he failed to preserve any error on this matter. Baxley v. Baxley, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4777, 2011 WL 2504216 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

927. Appellant objected immediately after witnesses answered questions, and this was when alleged grounds for an objection became apparent because neither question was phrased so as to have elicited a hearsay response, and the objections were timely for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Briscoe v. State,

2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4632, 2011 WL 2420367 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

928. Defendant waived any error regarding the admission of the officer's testimony concerning the recording device in the patrol car, because defendant failed to object to the testimony in the trial court on the ground that he raised on appeal; the record did not reflect that defendant made or obtained a running objection to the admission of the evidence of which he now complained. Norfleet v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4567, 2011 WL 2436494 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2011).

929. Defendant failed to present anything for appellate review as to two photographs that were admitted during trial because defense counsel had affirmatively stated at trial that defense counsel had no objection to admission of the photographs; hence, any error was waived under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Johnson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3754, 2011 WL 2083969 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 19 2011).

930. Appellant specifically stated she had no objection to the introduction of the presentence investigation report, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 9(e), into evidence, and it was not until closing arguments that appellant identified any complaints, but counsel's argument was not evidence and appellant never tried to obtain a ruling on any objection, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); thus, the issue was not preserved for review. Davis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3591, 2011 WL 1900569 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 12 2011).

931. Appellate counsel's conclusion that an "optional completeness" argument had not been properly preserved for state appellate review was an objectively reasonable deduction because the specificity required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) was lacking; nothing in the exchanges between petitioner inmate's trial counsel and the state trial court reasonably alerted the state trial court that the inmate was suggesting a detective should be permitted to testify to the clearly hearsay within hearsay details of a witness's written statement based upon the Texas Rule of Optional Completeness found in Tex. R. Evid. 107. Hernandez v. Thaler, 787 F. Supp. 2d 504, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123538 (W.D. Tex. May 12 2011).

932. Instruction to the jury that two defense witnesses violated the witness rule in Tex. R. Evid. 614 was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) because the comment on the evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.05 only suggested that the witnesses might be untrustworthy rather than that defendant might be guilty. Powell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2888, 2011 WL 1466876 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 15 2011).

933. Appellant did not object to an officer's trial testimony and his motion in limine did not preserve error for appeal. Shipp v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1976, 2011 WL 1005459 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 17 2011).

934. Appellant failed to make a timely and specific objection, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), and thus his issue survived only if the trial judge's comment constituted fundamental error. Basey v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1695, 2011 WL 825014 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 10 2011).

935. Because a party gave the trial court no indication that he found certain evidence objectionable during trial, he failed to preserve the issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Catalanotto v. Meador Oldsmobile Llc, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1590, 2011 WL 754413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 3 2011).

936. In a commercial dispute, the seller waived his challenge to the trial court's ruling on deposition testimony in which he asserted his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination by withdrawing the proffered testimony. The issue was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A); Tex.R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Ferro v.

Dinicolantonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 955, 2011 WL 494741 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

937. When police officers responded to a domestic disturbance call at the residence of defendant and his wife, she told the officers that defendant had repeatedly struck her with a cane and held a gun to her head during an argument. At defendant's trial for assault, he did not object to the officers' testimony describing the discovery and seizure of the weapon as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) to preserve the issue; thus, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 he could not complain on appeal that the fact of his being armed was irrelevant or unfairly prejudicial. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 859, 2011 WL 350434 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 2 2011).

938. Claimant failed to show that the trial court erred by admitting irrelevant evidence, because the issue was not preserved for review, when the claimant did not object at trial to the dealership's first exhibit, the claimant objected to the dealership's second exhibit, but the objection was based on hearsay rather than relevance, and the claimant did not identify on appeal any other specific evidence that should not have been admitted. Opuiyo v. Houston Auto M. Imps., Ltd., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 58, 2011 WL 61853 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 6 2011).

939. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the expert's testimony with regard to the cause of the claimant's right-side pain, because the expert asserted that the doctor performed the third set of injections without fluoroscopy and that this conduct constituted gross negligence, and the claimant raised the fluoroscopy issue before the trial court in terms of standard of care, not causation; the expert did not link this standard of care opinion to his causation conclusion that the third set of injections caused the claimant's right leg pain. Wilson v. Shanti, 333 S.W.3d 909, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 116 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 6 2011).

940. Because appellant did not object to the trial court's rulings on any Sixth Amendment basis, he waived this argument on appeal, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Costilla v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10321, 2010 WL 5463853 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 23 2010).

941. Record did not show a ruling by the trial court concerning appellant's alleged Fifth Amendment objection, plus a defendant had no right to hybrid representation, such that appellant's answer to the State's questioning did not adequately preserve his Fifth Amendment challenge, under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Costilla v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10321, 2010 WL 5463853 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 23 2010).

942. Defendant failed to preserve for review his claim that a child sexual assault victim had bias or motive to lie because he did not introduce at a hearing that occurred outside the presence of the jury the victim's prior outcry statement that she had made against another man; he provided no offer of proof as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Littlepage v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9968 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2010).

943. Appellant did not object to testimony on a competency basis at trial, so it would not serve as grounds for reversal unless it constituted fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Ates v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9777 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 10 2010).

944. Admitting a child's testimony was not fundamental error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), given that (1) the child successfully answered a series of questions about his age and interests, and nothing suggested that he was unable to intelligently observe what he witnessed, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 601(a)(2), (2) his testimony was not essential to appellant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 21.11, 22.021, as the victim's testimony did not require corroboration under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.07(a), (b)(1), and (3) the State did not elect to seek a conviction on the basis of the episode about which the witness testified. Ates v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9777 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 10 2010).

945. Even though the substance of the proposed testimony regarding prior violent acts by the decedent appeared in the record through affidavits attached to appellant's motion for a new trial, the court was faced with the issue, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), that the evidence was not offered at trial, and the trial court did not have the opportunity to rule on the admissibility of the testimony, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); absent a ruling by the trial court on the portion of the evidence of which appellant complained, the court had no cognizable complaint on which to pass judgment, and appellant waived this issue. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8834, 2010 WL 4361885 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 4 2010).

946. Defense failed to preserve any challenge to the reliability of the State's DNA-testing procedures by failing to object on that basis, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103. Vasquez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8839, 2010 WL 4361877 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 4 2010).

947. Petitioner forfeited his complaint about the admission of the polygraph results, because although the petitioner objected to the first portion of the community supervision officer's testimony that mentioned the results of his polygraph tests and objected to a question in the middle of his own testimony, the petitioner did not object to every question or answer that disclosed the results, and he did not obtain a running objection to the polygraph evidence. Gardner v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8991, 2010 WL 4569899 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 4 2010).

948. Because a party's public policy arguments were unpreserved for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the court did not address them. Montoya v. Bluebonnet Fin. Assets, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8691, 2010 WL 4261481 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2010).

949. Appellants did not object at trial to all of the arguments of which they complained on appeal, and for those they did object to, discussion was off the record, such that the record failed to show the statements of grounds, trial court's rulings, and a request for an instruction to disregard, but some of the statements were preserved in appellants' motion for a new trial; because appellants sponsored certain evidence, error could not be assigned for commenting on that in argument. Atwood v. Pietrowicz, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8689, 2010 WL 4261600 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 28 2010).

950. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), respondent failed to preserve for review a challenge to a trial court's sustaining of the State's objection to questions concerning what age respondent would be upon release from prison; respondent did not make an offer of proof concerning how the witness would have answered the questions had the trial court permitted the witness to do so. In re Commitment of Robertson, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

951. Appellant's objection that another witness's testimony was in violation of a motion in limine was not a specific objection sufficient to preserve error, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Bennett v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6684, 2010 WL 3292941 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 18 2010).

952. During a pretrial conference, the trial court overruled appellant's objection to evidence; under Tex. R. Evid. 103, when the court ruled on the admissibility of evidence outside the presence of the jury, repeating the objections when the evidence was later introduced was unnecessary to preserve the issue for review. Espinosa v. State, 328 S.W.3d 32, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6341 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 5 2010).

953. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court abused its discretion by overruling his objection to the marihuana exhibit, because defendant did not obtain a running objection, and when the State offered the report stating that the exhibit to which defendant had previously objected was marihuana, defendant affirmatively stated that he had no objection. Lara v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5640, 2010 WL 2813522 (Tex.

App. Fort Worth July 15 2010).

954. Individual did not advance any specific objection to an injunction's constitutionality or otherwise reference her right to free speech, and thus the court found that the individual's complaint that the injunction was overbroad, vague and ambiguous was not a sufficiently specific objection to preserve this error for appellate review for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Townson v. Liming, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5459, 2010 WL 2767984 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 14 2010).

955. When counsel tendered the exhibits appellant argued were erroneously admitted, appellant complained that they were not put in the same order, but this was not a valid objection to the evidence at trial, such that appellant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Shren-yee Cheng v. Zhaoya Wang, 315 S.W.3d 668, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4669 (Tex. App. Dallas June 22 2010).

956. Appellant failed to make timely and specific objections at trial and failed to preserve error for appellate review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); even if error was preserved, appellant failed to explain or cite any authority that any error in the admission or exclusion of evidence affected a substantial right and thus the court overruled the issue. Shren-yee Cheng v. Zhaoya Wang, 315 S.W.3d 668, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4669 (Tex. App. Dallas June 22 2010).

957. Record did not show any time when appellant raised the specific issue that he complained of on appeal, that his sentences were abuses of discretion; although appellant contended that any specific objection would not have served a useful purpose because the objection was apparent from the context, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), the court disagreed, because his argument assumed that no complaint was required under Rule 33.1. Hefley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4659 (Tex. App. Dallas June 21 2010).

958. Rather than narrowly reading a sentence of appellant's brief to invoke a waiver of rights, as the dissent did, the court read the brief as a whole and construed a statement to refer to the brief's prior discussion of the warrantless search of the residence; appellant did not waive his argument at trial because he obtained a ruling outside the presence of the jury, under Tex. R. Evid. 103, and he did reassert his objection to the admission of the statement based on the prior warrantless search of the residence. Limon v. State, 314 S.W.3d 694, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4565 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 17 2010).

959. Because defendant failed to object during trial to the constitutionality of the prosecutor's opening statement and the introduction of evidence that defendant refused to cooperate with the police investigation, defendant failed to preserve the issue for appeal under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Saldivar v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3445, 2010 WL 1840240 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

960. Any error in the exclusion of the evidence was not preserved because defendant did not make an offer of proof or a bill of exception or otherwise make a reasonably summary of the evidence offered; to the extent defendant argued he made an offer of proof in his attachments to his motion for new trial, the court rejected this contention because he was required to develop the record before the charge on guilt was read to the jury, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(b). Hiatt v. State, 319 S.W.3d 115, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3076 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 28 2010).

961. Defendant's objections during trial were sufficient under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) to preserve a complaint about the admissibility of evidence regarding two offenses that did not involve defendant; the trial court, outside of the jury's presence, heard and overruled defendant's objections to the evidence, and therefore, defendant was not required to continue to object when the evidence was actually presented to the jury. Jackson v. State, 314 S.W.3d 118, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2730 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist.

Apr. 15 2010).

962. State correctly recognized that under Tex. R. Evid. 103(b), no objection was required to be made before the jury where the court heard objections to offered evidence outside the presence of the jury; Rule 103(b) applies only where the court rules that the evidence be admitted. Downey v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2722 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 6 2010).

963. Mother failed to preserve for review her assertion that the court abused its discretion by excluding evidence that the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services moved to strike her divorce petition, because the excluded evidence was subject to a motion in limine, and at no other time before or during trial did the mother ever object to the exclusion of the evidence. Casillas v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2210, 2010 WL 1173074 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2010).

964. Even if due process allowed the court to consider the mother's new points on appeal, they were not preserved in the trial record under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1) and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), given that she did not object to certain evidence, she did not request, for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 278, that the charge include a certain instruction, and she did not identify what evidence was excluded and why it was admissible; the court saw nothing that supported the mother's position that issues of race could be raised for the first time on appeal when they have never been raised in the trial court, plus it was not argued that race was a deciding issue. Carlson v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1897 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 18 2010).

965. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), a claim that the State coerced sexual assault victims' mother into testifying against defendant at trial because defendant did not object to the mother's testimony on the basis that she was coerced. By allowing her to testify without objection, defendant failed to preserve error. Werner v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1657, 2010 WL 779336 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 9 2010).

966. Record did not show that defendant objected to certain evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), and his motion in limine did not preserve the issue for review. Saenz v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1519 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 3 2010).

967. Defendant did not preserve his claim that the trial court violated his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination by commenting on his failure to testify, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d); the error of which defendant complained was not fundamental and the court refused to extend case law to make the claimed error fundamental, and even if case law identified a fundamental error not previously recognized, the lack of a majority in that case law meant it was not binding precedent. Bell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1464, 2010 WL 695809 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 2 2010).

968. Defendant's bolstering objection was untimely as not made until after the question had been answered and defendant offered no explanation for his delay in objecting, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Thompson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 11, 2010).

969. Defendant made no offer of proof or bill of exception showing what a witness's excluded testimony would have been; because defendant did not show what the witness's testimony would have been, he has not preserved this issue for appellate review. Thompson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 994 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 11, 2010).

970. Because defendant failed to object to the indictment, he waived his right to complain on appeal of any nonfundamental defect, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.14(b). Cross v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 877, 2010 WL 438193 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 9 2010).

971. Defendant claimed the trial court erred in admitting testimony over his Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection, but this same evidence was introduced without objection, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), through defendant's own testimony, and thus any error the trial court might have made in admitting the challenged testimony was cured. Philip v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 353, 2010 WL 183524 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 21 2010).

972. Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court erred in excluding testimony from the clinical psychologist, because defendant waived the complaint when he failed to make an offer of proof. Hatcher v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 362, 2010 WL 183521 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 21 2010).

973. Even if outcry testimony was inadmissible because the summary was no more than a general allusion that something in the area of child abuse was going on, the admission of such evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 was nonconstitutional error and the court had to disregard it unless it affected defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Wingard v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9880 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 31 2009).

974. Because defendant failed to procedurally perfect his objection to an officer's testimony at trial, the court was prohibited from considering his assignment of error, unless the admission of that testimony violated an absolute or systemic requirement or defendant did not forfeit a right that was waivable-only. Hall v. State, 303 S.W.3d 336, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9542 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 16 2009).

975. Court finds that the right to have counsel present during post-indictment defendant-initiated interrogations is not a systemic or absolute right and is not a waivable-only right; thus, because defendant failed to make a timely objection to the admission of his inculpatory statements, he failed to preserve the argument on appeal. Hall v. State, 303 S.W.3d 336, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9542 (Tex. App. Amarillo Dec. 16 2009).

976. Defendant's argument on appeal did not comport with his objection at trial, such that the claimed error based on the trial court's failure to issue a limiting instruction was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); in any event, the complaint provided no basis for reversal because statements admitted as present sense impressions or excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) were admissible for all purposes and were not subject to a limiting instruction. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300, 2009 WL 4575146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 8 2009).

977. Because defendant did not raise one objection at trial, he presented nothing for appellate review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300, 2009 WL 4575146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 8 2009).

978. On appeal, defendant argued that testimony was inadmissible under extraneous evidence grounds, but defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve the issue for appellate review on a different theory. Norman v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8796, 2009 WL 3805830 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

979. Even if testimony was unexpected, the proper time for the objection was directly after the statement was made, and an objection made later was untimely and did not preserve error for review. Norman v. State, 2009 Tex.

App. LEXIS 8796, 2009 WL 3805830 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 12 2009).

980. No objection was made to the admission of evidence regarding a sexual assault when the evidence was offered through a victim's testimony, such that nothing was preserved for review, whether through the motion in limine or through objection to the admission of the evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Cherry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7755, 2009 WL 3153276 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

981. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), defense counsel did not object to victim-impact testimony, use the words "victim impact," refer to objectionable victim-impact testimony, or identify any testimony that he sought to exclude, plus he did not raise the objection to the testimony that he attempted to raise here, and thus the appellate complaint about the testimony was not preserved by any objections made during the bench conference, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Ashire v. State, 296 S.W.3d 331, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7316 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 17 2009).

982. Defendant's objections were sustained and he did not seek an instruction to disregard or move for a mistrial; because he received all of the relief that he sought from the trial court, there was nothing for him to complain of on appeal, and in any event, counsel's non-specific objection would not have preserved error as to the victim-impact evidence because counsel did not differentiate between any admissible testimony and non-admissible testimony. Ashire v. State, 296 S.W.3d 331, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7316 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 17 2009).

983. Defendant answered the State's question that was substantially identical to the question complained-of on appeal, the prosecutor asked another one and defendant answered it, and the State repeated the complained-of question before there was an objection; the objection was untimely, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), because it was made after a substantially identical question was asked and answered and defendant failed to preserve his complaint for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6950, 2009 WL 2750990 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 27 2009).

984. Defendant conceded that he failed to object to the use of a pseudonym or assert the unconstitutionality of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 57.02, and thus had to show fundamental error. Flint v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2009 WL 2408336 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 7 2009).

985. Alleged errors under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 57.02 and the Sixth Amendment were not fundamental in nature, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), as there was no indication that defendant did not know the identity of the child claiming to be the victim, and by failing to object at trial, defendant waived these claims, which were not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Flint v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6131, 2009 WL 2408336 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 7 2009).

986. Given that defendant did not object at trial that photographs were unduly prejudicial, he failed to preserve that issue for appeal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Wallace v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5794, 2009 WL 2265023 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 29 2009).

987. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his assertion that the trial court erred when it refused to admit his voluntary videotaped confession to six extraneous offenses into evidence at punishment, because defendant initially contended in the trial court at he was not interested in admitting the confession itself, but wanted to question the officer about the circumstances surrounding his voluntary confession, and this was not defendant's complaint on appeal; the only time defendant appeared to ask the trial court to admit the confession itself was when he was objecting to the State's offering evidence of the other six drive-bys, and defendant never obtained a ruling, thus, the complaint was not preserved for appellate review. Hernandez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5726, 2009

WL 2196130 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 23 2009).

988. Defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting evidence of his unlawful entry into the victims' house months earlier, but he did not object to this evidence; the rules of evidence, including Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), do not preclude taking notice of fundamental errors affecting substantial rights that were not brought to the attention of the trial court, but defendant's reliance on case law was misplaced because it applied only to charge error, and thus defendant failed to preserve his complaint regarding extraneous offense evidence. Santos v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3876, 2009 WL 1563571 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2009).

989. Any error in overruling defendant's hearsay objection was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(d), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); other evidence was admitted of defendant's improper jail conduct and prior criminal history and the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Henley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3653, 2009 WL 1464247 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2009).

990. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), an individual waived error on her claim that the trial court erred in refusing to allow her to comment on a negative presumption; the objection made was not specific enough and thus did not inform the trial court of the basis of the argument and the trial court did not have an opportunity to rule on it. Arabie v. Crete Carrier Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3390, 2009 WL 1372962 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 14 2009).

991. Appellants did not cite any authority or outline their argument on appeal regarding tort claims and thus under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), they waived a challenge to the trial court's grant of the landowners no-evidence summary judgment; the trial court denied a motion to sever the claims, no bill of exception or offer of proof was sought under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(b), and counsel did not object to the charge or provide a proposed charge including the claims, for purposes of Tex. R. Cciv. P. 279. Estate of Jose Ernesto Trevino v. Melton, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4084, 2009 WL 891881 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 3 2009).

992. Defendant objected to the admission of a recording, but not on the ground he now urged on appeal, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), plus defendant did not object to the admission of the victim's photograph, but argued that the admission was plain error for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d); however, defendant referred the court to no case authority holding that the admission of similar evidence under similar circumstances was fundamental error and the court found no basis for finding that the admission of either the recording or the photograph was so manifestly improper so as to have constituted fundamental error. Barrientes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1915, 2009 WL 722258 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 18 2009).

993. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), an insurance agency waived any argument as to an affidavit by failing to specifically identify objectionable statements within an affidavit; regarding the one statement specifically identified, another affidavit that was not objected to stated the same information and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the affidavit. Haye v. Elton Porter Marine Ins., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1704, 2009 WL 542486 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 5 2009).

994. Court did not need to address defendant's argument regarding exclusion of his expert's testimony because error was not properly preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, 33.2, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), given that (1) counsel's identification of the mere topics of the expert's likely testimony did not qualify as a reasonably specific summary of the evidence, (2) in the absence of a bill of exception or offer of proof, the record did not indicate what the excluded testimony would have been at the guilt/innocence phase, and (3) although the trial court allowed defendant's expert to testify about defendant's relationship with his father, because the evidence was offered after the court's charge was read to the jury, it could not qualify as an offer of proof under Rule 103(b) that would otherwise have preserved error during the guilt/innocence phase. Solley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1118, 2009

WL 396268 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 19 2009).

995. Defendant did not object or obtain a running objection to a witness's testimony that defendant had sold him cocaine on past occasions, and although a bench conference might have satisfied the requirement that a hearing be conducted outside the presence of the jury, defendant failed to offer a specific objection to the proffered evidence and defendant's objection that the witness's testimony was inadmissible was too vague and imprecise to have preserved error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; the objection did not properly advise the trial court of the specific basis for the objection. Roundtree v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1122, 2009 WL 433218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 19 2009).

996. Trial court gave a defense witness a brief contempt warning, but only after the witness had testified at length for the defense, and because the court found no fundamental error, defendant's lack of objection and offer of proof waived the argument for appeal. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

997. Because defendant failed to object at trial, the trial court's comments must have risen to the level of fundamental error to be preserved for appeal. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

998. Defendant relied on certain case law as the primary basis for his argument that the trial court's comments constituted fundamental error, therefore not requiring objection during trial to preserve error, but that case did not apply to these facts in any event, and even if the case in question was not a plurality opinion and was binding on the court, the trial court's comments did not rise to such a level as to bear on the presumption of innocence or vitiate the impartiality of the judge; the majority of the comments appellant complains of fell within the trial court's broad discretion to expedite and maintain control over the trial, and thus defendant failed to show fundamental error in this regard and the matter was waived. Henderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 677, 2009 WL 237473 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 3 2009).

999. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(d), occasions in taking notice of fundamental errors not brought to the attention of the trial court were rare and defendant simply stated that fundamental error existed while failing to point to any reason or authority to support that conclusion; moreover, Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), cited by defendant, was inapplicable in this context because it referred to extraneous offenses, and the prosecutor's use of the term "home invasion" was in reference to the offense for which defendant was on trial, burglary, not to any extraneous offense, and thus fundamental error was not shown. Anderson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 406 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 22 2009).

1000. Defendant made no attempt to introduce the evidence that he claimed that the trial court improperly excluded, and absent an offer of proof or a bill of exception setting forth the evidence he sought to introduce, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2, nothing on this issue was presented for review on appeal. Moore v. State, 275 S.W.3d 633, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 48 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 7 2009).

1001. Error of admitting expert testimony relating to the truthfulness of a witness, as the parties agreed in this case, is nonconstitutional error, and the appellate court reviews the entire record to see if the appellant's substantial rights were harmed, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). Long v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8885 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2008).

1002. While there was evidence of defendant's guilt of sexual assault of a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011(a)(2)(A), this was not a case where a guilty verdict was the only likely outcome, and while the evidence was substantial, it was not overwhelming, and the court held that the error of admitting expert testimony related to the truthfulness of the victim harmed defendant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); whether the victim was telling the truth was the singular issue in the trial, the expert testified that the victim testified truthfully, it was likely that this testimony was powerful, there were no instructions sought or given to explain how the jury was to use the expert's testimony, the State emphasized the expert's opinion in closing arguments, and the expert's testimony invaded the province of the jury in a fundamental way by putting the weight of expert opinion behind the conclusion that the complaining witness was telling the truth, and the court was not convinced that defendant's substantial rights were not harmed. Long v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8885 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 26 2008).

1003. In a civil case adopted daughters brought against their adoptive father and mother for damages related to sexual abuse, the father and mother argued that the trial court should not have admitted evidence of the father's conviction, but the court did not address this argument because error has not been properly preserved for review, given that (1) the trial court's ruling on their motion in limine did not preserve the error for review, (2) the mother and father's failure to object on the record, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), and obtain an adverse ruling waived the error, and (3) although they moved for a mistrial, because there was no timely objection made on the record and no request for the jury to disregard, error was not preserved for appeal; when the father and mother objected to the use of the conviction to impeach the father's testimony, it had already been admitted into evidence without objection, and because they failed to pursue an adverse ruling after evidence of the conviction was initially admitted, they waived any complaint regarding the admission of the evidence and preserved nothing for appellate review. K.H. v. Doe, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8636 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 18 2008).

1004. Defendant argued that a deputy's employment of the horizontal gaze nystagmus test was not reliable for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and the testimony was not only not helpful to the jury, but was misleading and unfairly prejudicial, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 402, 403, 702, but defendant's objection, which referred broadly to the deputy's administration of the test, was not specific enough to have informed the trial court of the basis of the argument defendant now raised on appeal so as to have afforded the trial court the opportunity to rule on it, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, defendant waived error, if any. Gowin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6873 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 17 2008).

1005. For purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's objection to evidence was incomplete and lacked specificity, plus his request for voir dire was granted, and he neither made a more specific objection to testimony, nor did he request a ruling from the trial court regarding his first incomplete objection, and thus defendant failed to preserve error, if any. Gowin v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6873 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 17 2008).

1006. In defendant's delivery of a controlled substance trial, before the State offered an exhibit, officers testified without objection that police found a stash of cocaine when they searched a dumpster; because defendant failed to urge his objection at the earliest opportunity for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), that is, when the officers testified, defendant waived his subsequent objection to the admission of the drugs themselves, and nothing was presented for review. King v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6564 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 26, 2008).

1007. Because evidence was not objected to on Tex. R. Evid. 403 grounds, the complaint was waived, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). South Plains Lamesa R.R. v. Heinrich, 280 S.W.3d 357, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6038 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

1008. Defendant did not object to the sentence at trial and thus any error was waived; although defendant relied on case law that held that the lack of an objection did not waive a similar error, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, unlike in that case, the trial court's comments did not taint defendant's presumption of innocence in front of the jury, as the comments were made during the punishment stage after the jury found defendant guilty and after the trial court had assessed punishment and the jury had already been dismissed, and thus the alleged error was not fundamental and the matter was not preserved for review; furthermore, the trial court's comments showed that it was considering statements made by defendant to the presentence investigation officer, not defendant's failure to testify at punishment, and those statements related to whether defendant could be rehabilitated or whether he was a good candidate for probation, which defendant requested, and thus the trial court's comments did not bear on defendant's failure to testify at the punishment hearing or show that he was denied an impartial tribunal. Phelps v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3090 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 24 2008).

1009. Driver in a car accident negligence case failed to preserve alleged trial court errors for review because he failed to object, request curative instructions, or move for a mistrial; further, any error in the admission of testimony regarding a prior accident and an undisclosed witness to the accident was harmless. Gallaher v. Brown, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2851 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 17 2008).

1010. Appellate court overruled the point of error that the probate court erroneously excluded testimony regarding the testatrix's testamentary intent, because this point of error was not properly preserved for appellate review, when there was no indication of what the witness would have said about the testatrix's intent. Hahn v. Estate of Stange, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1027 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 13 2008).

1012. During defendant's criminal trial for murder, the trial judge violated the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 when he allowed a 911 operator to testify that he asked defendant if he wanted to talk about what had happened, but excluded defendant's response indicating that he shot the victim in self-defense; the error was nonconstitutional under Tex. R. Evid. 103, because defendant testified about his longstanding strife with the victim; the trial court's erroneous exclusion of his 911 statements did not prevent him from fully presenting his self-defense theory. Walters v. State, 247 S.W.3d 204, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1701 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

1013. Appellate court found no merit to a wife's claim that a trial court improperly prevented her from offering evidence and testimony in a divorce action regarding the husband's business interests where the wife made no offer of proof showing the substance of any of the reports following the trial court's ruling, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103; the wife failed to preserve any error under Tex. R. App. P. 33. Dean-Groff v. Groff, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8881 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 8 2007).

1014. No offer of proof was made to documents excluded by the trial court, such that the contents of the documents and relevance could not be determined on appeal, and the alleged error was therefore not preserved. Roberts v. Davis, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8672 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 1 2007).

1015. Defense counsel's concise statement and examination of the victim's father was reasonably specific to have shown the trial court the substance of the excluded evidence and to preserve error for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33, Tex. R. Evid. 103; counsel made a reasonably specific summary of the evidence and argued the relevancy thereof, it was apparent by the State's Tex. R. Evid. 412 objection that it knew the precise nature of the excluded evidence, and the trial court was aware of the testimony defendant was trying to illicit by the nature of the trial court's ruling. Ladesic v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8106 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 11 2007).

1016. Defendant's objection did not make reference to Tex. R. Evid. 613; the court was unable to say that the ground objection asserted on appeal was apparent from context, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, and thus the court overruled the issue and noted that it was uncertain that the exhibit was viewed by either counsel purely as impeachment evidence, and no mention was made of an instruction limiting its use by the jury to that purpose. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 24 2007).

1017. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant did not properly preserve error because he did not renew his objection when the State resumed questioning and explicitly asked about the issue in question; there were two exceptions to the contemporaneous objection requirement, including that defendant object outside the jury's presence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, but defendant did not meet either exception. Pena v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6309 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2007).

1018. Because a party never obtained a ruling from the trial court regarding the exclusion of certain evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33, Tex. R. Evid. 103, the issue was not preserved for review. Morris v. Morris, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5878 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2007).

1019. On appeal of a conviction of misdemeanor theft, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's objection to the offender's question concerning profit margin in her inquiry as to the value of stolen retail property because the offender did not point to any offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, and the substance of the evidence she sought to offer was not apparent; thus, she forfeited her issue pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; moreover, had she preserved her complaint, the trial court did not err; the offender complained that the trial court should not have sustained the State's relevance objection, but evidence that the victim had a profit margin did not tend to rebut the fact that the victim's sales price was at a fair market value. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5880 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2007).

1020. Driver could not complain on appeal about admission of the evidence of his arrest and subsequent refusal to provide the specimen because the driver's counsel affirmatively stated he had no objection to the exhibits presented by the Texas Department of Public Safety. Morgan v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5208 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 3 2007).

1021. Order allowing the State, at the punishment phase, to cross-examine defendant's mother about an unadjudicated theft was upheld where, by failing to object, defendant did not preserve the error under Tex. R. Evid. 103; hence, defendant left the appellate court nothing to review. Bradley v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3748 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 16 2007).

1022. Penitentiary packet was admitted in evidence without objection and by failing to object to the offer of the packet that detailed extraneous offenses for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), defendant failed to preserve the issue for review. Daniels v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3421 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 4 2007).

1023. Court rejected an inmate's claim in a petition for writ of habeas corpus that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to preserve testimony of a corroborating witness who was precluded from testifying after violating Tex. R. Evid. 614; the court found that (1) counsel failed to preserve the witness's testimony and thus, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, the failure to make an offer of proof prevented the inmate from arguing on direct appeal that the trial court erred in precluding the witness from testifying, but (2) regardless of whether the failure resulted in deficient representation, the failure was not prejudicial because the trial court acted within its discretion in precluding the witness from testifying; although certain actions of the witness did not justify exclusion, the witness violated Tex. R. Evid. 614 when she spoke to the inmate on two separate occasions and the inmate necessarily had knowledge of the violations, and thus the inmate failed to prove prejudice in the ineffective assistance claim. David v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 3 2007).

1024. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), the court overruled a party's claim that the trial court erred in excluding a certain exhibit; it was not in the appellate record and thus the court had no way of reviewing it and the court was unable to say the trial court abused its discretion in excluding the exhibit. Tejas Toyota, Inc. v. Coffman, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3448 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 3 2007).

1025. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant waited until after the jury had decided guilt and punishment before making a bill of exception regarding the exclusion of evidence that defendant claimed on appeal was admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule under Tex. R. Evid. 803; defendant never argued this claim to the trial court and thus defendant failed to preserve this issue for review. Chapman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3184 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 25 2007).

1026. Trial court reviewed the presentence investigation report after defendant pleaded guilty, signed a judicial confession, and stipulated to the evidence of guilt, and thus the trial court could not have used the report to influence a decision on guilt, but only for punishment purposes, and thus defendant's constitutional rights were not violated under Tex. Const. art. I, § 19; furthermore, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 9(c) permitted a judge to inspect a report once defendant pleaded guilty or was convicted, and the trial court did not violate any of defendant's state statutory rights, and because defendant failed to object to the review of the report under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and there was no fundamental error, the court overruled defendant's arguments. Torres v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2874 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2007).

1027. Court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred in failing to sua sponte declare a mistrial when the trial court and later a jury member brought attention to the presence of armed security personnel in the courtroom; the trial court's initial comment was simply to introduce the court staff, nothing was said to suggest that the bailiff was needed to protect jurors from defendant, and the trial court said the bailiff was there for everyone's protection, and as for the juror, the prosecutor sought to allay any concerns and specifically explained that defendant was entitled to a presumption of innocence, such that fundamental error, given that defendant did not object, was not shown. Sneed v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2910 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 17 2007).

1028. No fundamental error was shown and thus the court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred by not declaring a mistrial after the State elicited victim impact testimony during its case-in-chief; defendant made no objection to the testimony and defendant cited no cases discussing situations in which courts had found the same or similar testimony to have been fundamentally erroneous. Sneed v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2910 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 17 2007).

1029. Because a party did not object, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, to the admission of an exhibit, the trial court did not err by admitting that exhibit. In re G.C.F., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2680 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 5 2007).

1030. Conviction for solicitation of capital murder was affirmed because defendant had preserved nothing for review, when defendant never informed the trial court that the excluded evidence as to the number of times the informant had worked for the investigator was relevant to the defense of entrapment, defendant offered no response to the State's relevancy objection, and defendant did not mention his entrapment defense to the trial court until the charge conference. Wormington v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2205 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 22 2007).

1031. Helicopter service facility did not preserve for appeal objections to an affidavit proffered by a helicopter manufacturer in support of the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment; each of the service facility's objections--to a lack of verification and authentication and to the affidavit of an interested witness--presented defects of form; because the trial court did not rule on these objections, they were not preserved for appellate review. Cent. Am. Aviation Servs., S. A. v. Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1469 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 1 2007).

1032. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the results of the out-of-court blood alcohol experiment conducted on defendant, because defendant failed to affirmatively show the proposed experiment was substantially similar to the incident, when the experiment did not attempt to replicate the drinking pattern defendant testified he followed the night in question, and differing absorption rates based on differing factors logically could cause differing results. Noyes v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1133 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 15 2007).

1033. Although the State argued that defendant failed to preserve a complaint for review by not making an offer of proof, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, of defendant's testimony until after the jury was charged, the court understood the trial court's ruling as one admitting, at least in limine, evidence of defendant's prior conviction and not a ruling excluding defendant's testimony, such that defendant preserved the complaint without regard to an offer of proof; although defendant did not testify before the jury, and thus the State did not attempt to offer evidence of defendant's conviction in the guilt-or-innocence stage of trial, the court assumed without deciding that defendant preserved the complaint. Herrera v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 910 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2007).

1034. Defendant's motion to suppress argued only that a search was illegal based on lack of consent and a valid warrant or probable cause; however, a search incident to arrest did not require these things and at no time did defendant contest the validity of the search, such that nothing was presented for review, and even if the error was preserved, the argument still lacked merit because the trial court could have found that (1) an officer stopped defendant, (2) defendant attempted to evade and then flee on foot, and (3) defendant attempted to have the vehicle removed, such that the trial court could have found that defendant was a recent occupant of the vehicle whose arrest justified a search thereof. Mares v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8370 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 26 2006).

1035. Defendant waived a complaint under Tex. R. App. p. 33.1(a) by failing to object to the trial court's statements, defendant did not make any argument or cite any authority to show the trial court's statements were incorrect or that defendant was harmed by the statements, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), and defendant's argument failed to inform the court how the trial court allegedly misstated the law regarding Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23; the record showed that the statements, even if incorrect, caused no harm for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103, given that two statements were general explanations of the statute, one statement concerned a hypothetical illustration of the statute, and another statement was more of a comment than an explanation. Dixon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7953 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 5 2006).

1036. For purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the record showed no objection, request, or motion in which the individual, an inmate, requested the trial court to issue a bench warrant for the individual's attendance at trial; thus, the individual waived this complaint. Guy M. v. Marie M., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6049 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 13 2006).

1037. Aggravated robbery conviction was affirmed because defendant did not object to the admission of the victim sympathy evidence, and the error, if any, in allowing the introduction of victim sympathy evidence was not fundamental error, when error in admitting evidence, even if constitutional rights were implicated, was neither systemic nor waivable-only, and thus was not fundamental. Connor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4896 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 8 2006).

1038. Defendant's claim that the trial court violated defendant's right to confrontation by admitting testimony from a witness regarding a statement by defendant's former girlfriend was not preserved for review, given that defendant did not timely object each time the witness was asked the question; even if an earlier objection could have been construed as timely, defendant still failed to preserve error because the hearsay objection did not comport with the complaint on appeal, and defendant's hearsay objection did not preserve error on defendant's Confrontation Clause complaint. Reyes v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3649 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 27 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4160 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 16, 2006).

1039. Trial judge was disqualified because of the stated inability to rule based solely on the evidence adduced, and this error required disqualification and made the actions taken by the judge, including a denial of a motion to suppress, void; the court determined it had to address this unassigned error given that a defendant, as in this case, did not waive appellate review of the structural defect of the right to an impartial judge by failing to object, and court noted that even if review for harm was appropriate, a denial of one's right to an impartial judge was not subject to harmless error analysis. Gentry v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2923 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 12 2006).

1040. Defendant failed to preserve his issues for appellate review because defendant withdrew his hearsay objection to the alleged burglary thereby failing to preserve error, defendant failed to raise his confrontation clause complaint regarding the alleged burglary, and defendant did not adequately brief his right to counsel complaint. Badger v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1486 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 23 2006).

1041. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), appellant preserved an issue regarding attorney fees; appellant raised the issue before the trial court and received an adverse ruling from the trial court each time. Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church v. Morse St. Baptist Church, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5546 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 14 2005).

1042. Defendant did not object to the lack of notice or adequacy of notice, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), Tex. R. Evid. 609(f), Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 38.37, § 3, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(g), when the evidence in question was offered, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); thus, defendant did not preserve this aspect of defendant's first issue for appellate review. Bronaugh v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455 (Tex. App. Waco June 8 2005).

1043. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b), the court did not consider the portion of defendant's offer of proof made after the charge was read to the jury. Alvarez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4075 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2005).

1044. Although a mother in a parental rights proceeding failed to preserve error on her objections to the reliability of the expert testimony presented during the proceeding because she did not file a written objection to the expert's testimony or object or ask any questions of the expert during the pretrial hearing, an appellate court held that it had broad discretion to remand in the interest of justice because the trial court had erred in overruling the father's objection to the expert opinion and that error was harmful, which made a new trial necessary. In re S.E.W., 168 S.W.3d 875, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3809 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

1045. Because defendant failed to object to the trial court's comments at the time, the court had to determine if error existed, and if error was shown, whether such error constituted fundamental error affecting substantial rights, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(d). Flores v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2353 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 30, 2005).

1046. Defendant's objection to evidence seized was not timely made under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because the State referred to the evidence in its opening statement, called a witness who testified about the evidence, and introduced the evidence, and defendant waited to object until after the State introduced the form on which defendant gave consent to the search. Because defendant did not object before substantial testimony was given regarding the evidence, defendant failed to preserve error for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Ralston v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 885 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005).

1047. Even though the complaint to the introduction of a photographic array itself was waived by counsel's "no objection" comment, the complaint about the taint arising from that array was not; that objection had been properly presented during the suppression hearing and was not affirmatively waived during trial and remained viable under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Mayfield v. State, 152 S.W.3d 829, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1049. Father argued that the trial court erred by denying him the opportunity to present evidence of his net resources, but his attempted offer, however, came after both he and the State had rested, and the record did not reveal what evidence the father was attempting to offer, nor did it indicate that the father made an offer of proof or a formal bill of exceptions to preserve error, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). Appellate review of alleged improperly excluded evidence was not possible without a showing of what evidence would have been presented, such that the issue of whether the trial court erred by refusing to let the father reopen to put on evidence of his net resources was not preserved for the appellate court's review, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Hilliard v. Holland, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10515 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 24 2004).

1050. Defendant did not preserve for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 an alleged error regarding the exclusion of testimony because defendant did not sure that the record reflected what the excluded testimony would have been pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103. Ybarra v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9488 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 28 2004).

1051. Court rejected defendant's contention that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion for a mistrial based on jury misconduct, specifically, a juror sleeping during the trial. Defendant's argument was not properly preserved for appellate review because the only item before the trial court on the motion for mistrial was the statement of defendant's trial counsel. Trial counsel's statement that a juror was sleeping presented no evidence of the matter. It was incumbent upon defendant's trial counsel to develop the record for the trial court in order to clarify which specific juror counsel was referencing and to determine if that juror was sleeping. Thieleman v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8833 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 30 2004).

1052. Without a showing of what testimony would have been or an offer of proof pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), there was nothing presented for review pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Rivera v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8400 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 22 2004).

1053. Even assuming that the trial court erred in allowing the State to use evidence of allegations of extraneous acts in connection with defendant's forgery trial, which defendant did not object to pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A) as required, the improper admission of extraneous offenses did not constitute fundamental error subject to review under Tex. R. Evid. 103(d); defendant could also not claim fundamental error to excuse the failure to preserve the alleged error in the State's arguments to the jury. Lamkin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7826 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 26 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 79, 163 L. Ed. 2d 100, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 6301, 74 U.S.L.W. 3204 (U.S. 2005).

1054. With respect to the victim's probation officer's testimony, defendant objected on the grounds that the officer was not properly identified as an outcry witness under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, but the State did not offer the officer's testimony as such, and the court found no error in the admission of the officer's testimony in connection with defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child because where there were attempts to impeach the credibility of the victim, testimony from the officer would not have constituted hearsay because, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(B), it related a prior consistent statement made by the victim, who was subject to cross-examination and whose prior statement rebutted a charge of motive or recent fabrication; moreover, the content of the officer's testimony was admitted elsewhere through direct testimony from the victim, and even if the trial court erred in admitting the testimony, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights, and, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a), Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), error could not have been predicated on a ruling admitting evidence unless a substantial right of the party was affected. Sanchez v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7043 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 5 2004).

1055. Court rejected defendant's claim of the denial of due process of law when the prosecution twice elicited testimony from the arresting officer that defendant refused to answer questions after an arrest for driving while intoxicated since an objection was required to preserve issues related to the right to remain silent, and the court found that (1) the officer's first answer was given before defense counsel objected, defendant did not preserve, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), an objection to the officer's testimony on direct examination regarding defendant's post-arrest silence, and the court presumed that the instruction to disregard given to the jury was effective, and (2) because defense counsel did not request a second instruction to disregard or move for a mistrial after the officer's nonresponsive answer on redirect, defendant also waived error concerning the officer's second answer. Thompson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6860 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 29 2004).

1056. Where defendant did not articulate the legal basis for an objection, the basis was not apparent to the trial court from the context of the objection, and without knowing the legal basis of defendant's objection regarding the admission of a presentence investigation report at which defendant's counsel was not present, the trial court did not know which constitutional analysis to apply, and thus, the court could not hold that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the report and the court held that defendant failed to preserve error pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Alegria v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5405 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 17 2004).

1057. In a case involving theft, defendant's objections regarding hearsay and lack of predicate were insufficient to inform a trial court that an objection to the State's method of proving value was being asserted; however, the failure to object did not deprive defendant of the constitutional right to insist upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt on the issue of value. Moff v. State, 131 S.W.3d 485, 2004 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 641 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004).

1058. In a conversion case, following the trial court's ruling excluding the affidavit evidence, the mechanic made no offer of proof showing the substance of any of the affidavits pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the mechanic failed to preserve error as to the affidavits. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

1059. In a conversion case, the mechanic failed to make an offer of proof following the trial court's ruling excluding the vehicle inquiry receipt and a police incident report regarding a different car pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the receipt or the incident report could not be considered on appeal. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

1060. There was no reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because admitting the outcry witness's testimony without first conducting a hearing pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 was harmless, where the testimony included the same facts that were admitted into evidence without objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Duncan v. State, 95 S.W.3d 669, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9309 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

1061. Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected; in case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record, stating the specific ground of objection, if the specific ground is not apparent from the context. Martinez v.

State, 91 S.W.3d 331, 2002 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 233 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002).

1062. Defendant failed to preserve his claim that a trial court violated Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 by admitting into evidence, in defendant's trial for aggravated assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02, an incriminating statement made by defendant to a police officer after defendant was arrested and before he was given any Miranda warnings; because defendant did not raise his objections before the officer testified as to the statement or obtain an adverse ruling thereon as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the officer thereafter repeated the statement without objection, and defendant's trial objection was made under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.21 rather than Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22. Camarillo v. State, 82 S.W.3d 529, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 3228 (Tex. App. Austin 2002).

Evidence : Relevance : Character Evidence

1063. Exclusion of character evidence that a murder victim occasionally drank to excess and was violent when he drank was harmless error, given that defendant was able to present his defense that the victim was drunk and pulled a shotgun on defendant, which defendant then used to kill the victim. Milliff v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 4589, 2014 WL 1713897 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 29 2014).

1064. In a trial for interfering with the lawful custody of a child, proffered character testimony was irrelevant on its face because whether defendants had ever helped other children in the past was not evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that was of consequence more or less probable. Little v. State, 246 S.W.3d 391, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1126 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

1065. Defendant adequately preserved error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 as to the exclusion of character evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404 and satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), even though he did not make an offer of proof, because counsel told the trial court that he wanted to elicit evidence of defendant's reputation for the ethical treatment of children; accordingly, the nature of the disputed evidence was apparent to all. Moody v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9788 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 9 2006).

1066. In a trial for a mother's sexual abuse of her son, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 404 to admit evidence that defendant had been a victim of sexual assault as a child to show that she was more likely to commit the offense; the error was harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103 because it was a close case resolved by a credibility determination between the child and defendant. Kirby v. State, 208 S.W.3d 568, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2785 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

1067. Where appellant and the victim shot each other, the victim died, appellant asserted self-defense, and the witnesses disagreed as to whether the victim or appellant shot first, appellant's conviction of murder in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02 was affirmed because (1) the evidence as to why appellant was afraid of the victim was irrelevant under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a), (b) because the victim's conduct of flashing his gun and shooting first were unambiguous acts of aggression and violence, (2) appellant failed to properly preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), to the admission of evidence of his gang membership under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and (3) impeachment of the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) was proper because the witness created a false impression with the jury as to the extent of his arrests and convictions. Reyna v. State, 99 S.W.3d 344, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

Evidence : Relevance : Compromise & Settlement Negotiations

1068. In a personal injury case, failure to object waived a claim that statements made in compromise negotiations were inadmissible and were improperly admitted at a hearing on a motion to dismiss; an objection was required to preserve error, as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 103. Hamrick v. Lopez, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8113 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 11 2007).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

1069. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity based on gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; the evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1430, 2014 WL 425613 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 31 2014).

1070. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity and gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account for his campaign. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; additional evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 823, 2014 WL 261063 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

1071. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity and gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account for his campaign. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; additional evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 823, 2014 WL 261063 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

1072. Objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403 was not preserved by an argument that photographs had no probative value. Smith v. East, 411 S.W.3d 519, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1753, 2013 WL 692456 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 22 2013).

1073. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexual predator, a patient failed to preserve an error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 relating to the details of his offenses because he did not object and obtain an adverse ruling each time the complained-of evidence was presented or obtain a running objection to the evidence; the patient did not waive error by waiting until the evidence was repeated to complain that it was prejudicial because it was needlessly cumulative. Even if the patient had preserved error regarding the experts' discussion of the details of the offenses, there was no unfair prejudice under Rule 403; the evidence assisted the jury in weighing each expert's testimony and opinion that each expert offered regarding the ultimate issue in the case. In re Ford, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2221, 2012 WL 983323 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 22 2012).

1074. Defendant failed to properly object to evidence that was admitted at trial concerning unindicted aggravated robberies, even though he filed a motion in limine, because he failed to make objections under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) when the evidence was admitted at trial. Ashford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2770 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

1075. Eventhough Texas has long discouraged needless presentation of cumulative evidence, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 403, the mere fact that another witness may have given the same or substantially the same testimony is not the decisive factor, as recognized pursuant to Tex. R. Evid 103(a)(2), as error may not be predicated upon a ruling which excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and the substance of the objection was made known to the trial court by offer of proof; however, in this termination of parental rights case, the mother's attorney adequately described the substance of the proposed testimony, introduced the witness's letter and referenced the best interest of the children, and the appeals court found this showing sufficient under the circumstances, by considering whether the excluded testimony would have added substantial weight to the mother's case. In re N.R.C., 94 S.W.3d 799, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8566 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2002).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

1076. Admission of extraneous-offense evidence, regarding defendant's two encounters with children in public restrooms, did not affect defendant's substantial rights because testimony regarding the encounters did not consume an inordinate amount of time during trial, the State focused the majority of its closing argument on the evidence establishing the charged offenses, and the trial court gave a limiting instruction. Hoard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11760 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 18 2013).

1077. Even if the trial court erred by admitting into evidence a witness's testimony that defendant had been trying to send someone to harm him and his family, any error was cured when the same type of evidence concerning witnesses' fear of defendant was admitted elsewhere without objection, both before and after the complained-of testimony. Prior to the complained-of testimony, a co-defendant testified that he did not want to tell authorities about defendant's involvement in the offense because "snitches get stitches," and a second co-defendant testified that he gave three different statements to the police because he feared that defendant would harm his family in retaliation; after the complained-of testimony, defendant's ex-wife testified without objection that she came forward with what she knew about defendant's involvement because she feared that defendant would harm her because she no longer wanted to be involved with him. Brown v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1058, 2013 WL 476764 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 6 2013).

1078. Even if the trial court erred by admitting extraneous offense evidence, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights because: (1) the record did not indicate that the State specifically mentioned the agent's testimony regarding the 20 instances when similar counterfeit bills were passed; (2) the trial court instructed the jury that it could not consider extraneous offenses unless it found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offenses; and (3) the record contained sufficient other evidence to support defendant's forgery conviction. Mookdasnit v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2220, 2012 WL 983333 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 21 2012).

1079. Defendant failed to preserve error regarding extraneous offense evidence because defendant failed to object when the State questioned him about the incident, after the court had sustained an objection outside the jury's presence. Mcnatt v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8037, 2011 WL 4712002 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 6 2011).

1080. Defendant's objection to extraneous offense evidence that four truckloads of stolen car parts were found at his house, along with evidence that he had purchased stolen car parts in the past, was preserved for appellate review because a bench conference conducted outside of the jury's presence provided the trial court the opportunity to consider the necessary factors and rule on the objection. Marban v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6760, 2009 WL 2618343 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

1081. Defendant failed to preserve error on his contention that the State committed prosecutorial misconduct by eliciting testimony suggesting that defendant stole the gun because defendant objected only at the beginning of the witness's testimony but did not object to the remainder. Defendant objected to admission of the testimony on relevancy grounds, but did not assert that introduction of the allegedly irrelevant testimony constituted prosecutorial misconduct warranting a mistrial. Thibodeaux v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4964, 2009 WL 1748747 (Tex. App.

Houston 14th Dist. June 23 2009).

1082. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant did not preserve an issue relating to extraneous offense evidence for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 because no objection was lodged; the record was replete with evidence of a homicide, its investigation, and a grand jury's return of a "no-bill" in favor of defendant. Vanderburgh v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4643, 2009 WL 1740053 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 18 2009).

1083. Despite a mother's argument that it was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), a trial court did not err by admitting evidence concerning an oldest daughter, who was not part of a termination of parental rights proceeding, because such evidence was probative of whether the termination was in the best interest of four other children under the factors set forth in Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 263.307; the State had to prove, by clear and convincing evidence, both the grounds for termination and that termination was in the best interest of the children. It was not necessary for the appellate court to decide whether this issue was preserved by a nonparticularized objection because, even if error was preserved, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence, which related to a history of abusive or assaultive conduct by the children's family. In re J.A.P., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2422, 2009 WL 839953 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 1 2009).

1084. Defendant failed to preserve an argument as to the admissibility of a murder victim's violent nature because nothing in the record indicated what knowledge the witness had as to the victim's previous acts, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2); Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Bundy v. State, 280 S.W.3d 425, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 326 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 15 2009).

1085. In an assault trial arising from a bar fight, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to exclude evidence of a prior violent act by the victim because there was evidence that the victim was the first aggressor. The error did not require reversal under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the excluded testimony did not have a substantial effect on the rejection of defendant's self-defense claim, given that defendant did not attempt to retreat but pulled a knife during a physical altercation and stabbed the unarmed victim, who did not not use deadly force. Dudzik v. State, 276 S.W.3d 554, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9073 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

1086. Appellant was entitled to a new trial based on the erroneous admission of improper character evidence that appellant failed a drug test, contrary to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); the evidence of the drug-test results, which occurred after the assault for which appellant was on trial, came in unexpectedly and was later explained by appellant, yet it was embraced by the State and emphasized throughout trial in an effort to tie the drug-test results to the assault; consequently, the error in admitting the evidence was not harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 and Tex. R. Evid. 103. Simmons v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9732 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 14 2007).

1087. On appeal of his conviction for theft, defendant argued that the trial court erred in admitting evidence concerning various instances of prior bad acts in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); because defendant did not object to the testimony when it was first elicted, he waived any error concerning the admissibility of such testimony according to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Craig v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6027 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2007).

1088. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, defendant waived error, under Tex. R. App. P. 33, regarding the admission of extraneous offense evidence and outcry testimony; although counsel objected to some extraneous offense evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404, counsel did not ask for a running objection and did not request that the objection be applied to all similar testimony, as permitted by Tex. R. Evid 103. Ivey v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3186 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 26 2007).

1089. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, because evidence about defendant's drinking and arguments with the victims' mother was admitted without objection before the complained-of ruling, defendant failed to preserve any error associated with testimony regarding those issues. Mayfield v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2545 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 29 2007).

1090. Defendant failed to preserve his complaint regarding prior acts evidence for review because the sister of a prior assault victim testified to the same or similar incidents and defendant did not object to her testimony, his earlier general objections to the testimony of that victim's children did not preserve error when the same evidence regarding the incidents of assault against the victim was admitted. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

1091. Where defendant was convicted of two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, he failed to preserve error in the trial court's admission of extraneous-offense evidence of defendant's sexual assault of the victim's younger sister; the same evidence was admitted through the testimony of several witnesses, and counsel did not timely object as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Sinclair v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4277 (Tex. App. Waco May 17 2006).

1092. Where defendant was convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he was not harmed by the admission of evidence of a prior sexual assault during the punishment phase even though he had been acquitted of the offense. The jury was presented with defendant's lengthy and varied criminal history and threats against the victim; the admission of the prior sexual assault evidence did not influence the jury verdict. Benner v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2977 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 12 2006).

1093. Defendant failed to properly object to evidence that was admitted at trial concerning unindicted aggravated robberies, even though he filed a motion in limine, because he failed to make objections under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) when the evidence was admitted at trial. Ashford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2770 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

1094. In a criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault, the State gave notice of its intention to use evidence of extraneous offenses committed by defendant and the trial court admitted the evidence. Because defendant did not object on the ground that the State's notice was untimely, the issue was not preserved for review. Foxworth v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7728 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 21 2005).

1095. Defendant failed to preserve error concerning the admission of extraneous-offense evidence or an identification of defendant as the person who committed a robbery because he failed to object. The record did not contain a running objection or a ruling made outside the presence of the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Russell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3703 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 13 2005).

1096. Defendant contended that testimony that he pressured his girlfriend to have sex with him should not have been admitted in his trial for sexual assault on a child; however, defendant failed to promptly object to this line of questioning. Barnes v. State, 165 S.W.3d 75, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2603 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

1097. Where appellant and the victim shot each other, the victim died, appellant asserted self-defense, and the witnesses disagreed as to whether the victim or appellant shot first, appellant's conviction of murder in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02 was affirmed because (1) the evidence as to why appellant was afraid of the victim was irrelevant under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a), (b) because the victim's conduct of flashing his gun and shooting first were unambiguous acts of aggression and violence, (2) appellant failed to properly preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), to the admission of evidence of his gang membership under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and (3) impeachment of the witness under Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) was proper because the witness created a false impression with the jury as to the extent of his arrests and convictions. Reyna v. State, 99

S.W.3d 344, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 1391 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

1098. Counsel's objection to the admissibility of defendant's prior unadjudicated offenses made at a bench conference--a hearing outside the presence of the jury--satisfied Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). The point was preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Aguilar v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8656 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2001).

1099. In a murder trial, an argument on appeal that photographs, which showed bruising from a prior assault, were inflammatory did not comport with the argument below, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, that the bruising was from an unadjudicated offense. Aguilar v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8656 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2001).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

1100. Because defendant presented no evidence showing the relevance of the witness's prior misdemeanor conviction or the circumstances surrounding his alleged dismissal from the sheriff's department, the trial court did not err by limiting her cross-examination of him. Sheffield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12789, 2013 WL 5638878 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2013).

1101. In a murder case, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant the opportunity to question an eyewitness about her experience with burning people to establish her as an alternate perpetrator. With little details regarding the alleged past conduct, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection because defendant failed to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) describing the circumstances surrounding the alleged incidences, including who was involved and how long ago they occurred. Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

1102. In a murder trial, the trial court did not err when it excluded testimony regarding defendant's prior emotional and behavioral examinations because neither witness knew about defendant's emotional or behavioral condition at the time of his admitted action, and neither could testify about whether defendant continued to suffer from an anxiety disorder or the trauma of his childhood abuse at the time of the offense. Lewis v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10449 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 7 2006).

1103. Court, in defendant's driving while intoxicated case, did not err in preventing defendant from offering evidence about the lack of specialized training of a police officer, where the jury was able to infer from the officer's testimony that the officer was not a medical doctor and did not have any training in toxicology. Railsback v. State, 95 S.W.3d 473, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8492 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : General Overview

1104. In a trial for child sexual assault, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 103 in determining that defendant could not cross-examine the mother of the victims as to the details of a prior sexual assault she allegedly suffered as a child. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9524, 2010 WL 4901389 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2010).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Rape Shield Laws

1105. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child, defendant failed to preserve for review an argument that he was erroneously prevented from presenting or eliciting evidence of the complainant's sexual history and sexual sophistication in part because defendant's offer of proof failed to establish that he was seeking to cross-

examine or elicit testimony regarding the complainant's sexual history or sexual sophistication. Martinez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3827, 2014 WL 1396705 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 9 2014).

1106. At a hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 412, defendant failed to preserve error with regard to a request for continuance and the request to recall a particular witness because defendant failed to submit his proposed questions under Tex. R. App. P. 33 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). LaPointe v. State, 225 S.W.3d 513, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 505 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1015, 128 S. Ct. 544, 169 L. Ed. 2d 381 (2007).

1107. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant failed to preserve error regarding his inquiry into complainant's sexual experience by not making an offer of proof, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103. Alfaro v. State, 224 S.W.3d 426, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Acts

1108. In a trial for indecency with a child, it was error to admit extraneous offense evidence regarding incidents that involved defendant and two other children in order to rebut defendant's fabrication defense; the reviewing court noted that prior to the testimony defendant received a running objection under Tex. R. Evid. 103 as to the extraneous offenses. Bass v. State, 222 S.W.3d 571, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1856 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Autopsies

1109. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), a murder defendant waived the argument that autopsy photos were not relevant because an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403 did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6397 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2007).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood Alcohol

1110. Counsel did not object when defendant was forced to take a breath test before his DWI trial to determine if he was intoxicated in the courtroom; defendant forfeited his right to complain about the admission of any evidence relating to the breath test or his alleged intoxication in the courtroom. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2771 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 6 2006).

1111. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant forfeited his arguments that his blood test results were improperly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and that he was entitled to an instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Although defendant objected when a blood-draw kit was offered into evidence, he failed to object when the report with the blood-test results was offered. Walker v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1328 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2006).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : DNA

1112. Defendant failed to preserve an argument that it was necessary to suppress a DNA sample in CODIS because his Fourth Amendment argument at trial did not comport with his statutory argument on appeal. Hardge v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11102 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 29 2013).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Hairs & Fibers

1113. By failing to object to the admission of a hair sample at trial, defendant waived his complaint. Ocanas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7726 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 20 2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Polygraphs

1114. By failing to timely object, defendant waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, an argument that the right to the presumption of innocence was violated by a detective's testimony the detective would have taken a polygraph exam. Whatley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 556, 2009 WL 1607813 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 29 2009).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Sobriety Tests

1115. In a trial for driving with a child passenger while intoxicated, there was no reversible error from the admission of a trooper's testimony on the issue of intoxication, even if the trooper's method and technique used to administer and interpret field sobriety tests was flawed. Even without the trooper's testimony regarding the horizontal gaze nystagmus test, the record contained sufficient evidence that defendant was intoxicated. Pointe v. State, 371 S.W.3d 527, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4295, 2012 WL 1948880 (Tex. App. Beaumont May 30 2012).

1116. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant preserved the argument that it was a deprivation of the right to present a defense when the trial court denied the right to cross-examine experts on the underlying science that supported a particular breath-testing machine; counsel adequately showed, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, that evidence sought through cross-examination related to the contention that the machine did not adequately control or correlate the actual (as opposed to presumed) temperature of the breath of the person tested in calculating breath-alcohol content; it was apparent from the record that counsel and the court both understood the broad picture of the questions counsel sought to propound and the line of questioning upon which the arguments were based. Woodall v. State, 216 S.W.3d 530, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1304 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

1117. Even if an officer's testimony regarding defendant's horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test, was improperly admitted at a trial for driving while intoxicated, the alleged error did not affect defendant's substantial rights within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given the presence of other evidence of defendant's intoxication properly presented to the jury. Bordelon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 275 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 17 2007).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

1118. In an assault case, evidence of a reconciliation between defendant and the victim was not properly preserved for review because an offer of proof was required; the evidence was designed to elicit certain specific responses which had no bearing on the victim's bias, interest, prejudice, inconsistent statements, traits of character affecting credibility, or evidence that might go to any impairment or disability affecting credibility Mumphrey v. State, 155 S.W.3d 651, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 370 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

1119. Appellant failed to show harm from a trial court's exclusion of extrinsic evidence of out-of-court statements made by State's witness where appellant's counsel made no offer of proof detailing the questions counsel wanted to ask or the specific inconsistent statements to be used for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.2. Ferguson v. State, 97 S.W.3d 293, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 148 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Bias, Motive & Prejudice

1120. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity and gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account for his campaign. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; additional evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 823, 2014 WL 261063 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

1121. Defendant was convicted for organized criminal activity and gambling promotion, because he organized a raffle drawing to benefit his political campaign, his employees distributed and sold raffle tickets, and defendant deposited the ticket sales proceeds into his bank account for his campaign. The trial court did not err by excluding evidence attacking the credibility of the State's witnesses who were defendant's former employees, because the jury was aware that all three witnesses had possible motives to make false accusations; additional evidence tended to be needlessly cumulative, risked confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Evans v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 823, 2014 WL 261063 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 23 2014).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : General Overview

1122. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103, defendant's contention concerning the denial of the cross-examination of a witness regarding a prior offense was waived because he failed to make an offer of proof at trial in the form of records of the witness's prior convictions, or by any other method. Mason v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11481 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 22 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : Admissibility

1123. Defendant's objection to the admissibility of a remote conviction under Tex. R. Evid. 609 was properly preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33 because defendant's objection was timely and stated the specific ground of objection; under Tex. R. Evid 103 defendant was not required to object to the admission of the evidence at the time that evidence was offered before the jury during cross-examination because the trial court ruled on the objection outside the presence of the jury. Grant v. State, 247 S.W.3d 360, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1135 (Tex. App. Austin 2008).

1124. Tex. R. Evid. 609(a) requires that the trial court determine whether the probative value of admitting evidence of prior convictions outweighs its prejudicial effect to a party, and Tex. R. Evid. 609(f) requires timely notice of the State's intended use of evidence of prior convictions to provide the defendant a fair opportunity to contest the use of such evidence, but the phrase "fair opportunity" does not specify at what point in the proceedings the decision as to admissibility is to be made; there is not authority holding that a "fair opportunity" means an opportunity exclusively during a pretrial hearing and not during a hearing outside the presence of the jury during a trial on the merits; thus, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a pretrial hearing on his Tex. R. Evid. 609 motion was neither an abuse of discretion nor reversible error. Yanez v. State, 199 S.W.3d 293, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10540 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : Inadmissibility

1125. Because defendant presented no evidence showing the relevance of the witness's prior misdemeanor conviction or the circumstances surrounding his alleged dismissal from the sheriff's department, the trial court did not err by limiting her cross-examination of him. Sheffield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12789, 2013 WL 5638878 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2013).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Conduct

1126. Record did not establish harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(d) from the trial court's failure to conduct a pretrial hearing to determine the admissibility of impeachment evidence because defendant elected not to testify; the jury, therefore, was not exposed to the allegedly prejudicial evidence; any possible harm flowing from the refusal to conduct a hearing was wholly speculative. Yanez v. State, 187 S.W.3d 724, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1289 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

1127. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), a defendant's substantial rights were not affected by the trial court's ruling that defense counsel could not question a witness, for impeachment purposes, regarding his being a drug dealer where the trial court offered defense counsel 20 minutes to question the witness outside of the jury's presence in order to establish whether the witness was indeed a drug dealer, and defense counsel declined the trial court's generous offer. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : General Overview

1128. At an administrative license suspension hearing, the driver waived any error in the denial of his right to fully cross-examine the arresting officer. The driver did not offer a bill of exceptions containing potential questions for the arresting officer, nor answers he expected to receive. Parks v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9365 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 21 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : Cross-Examination : General Overview

1129. On appeal of defendant's conviction for indecency with a child by contact, defendant argued that the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2) by disallowing the cross-examination of the complainant regarding her motive and state of mind in telling her friend that defendant fondled her. Because the evidence came in during the testimony of the friend, any error was harmless. Taylor v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1663, 2012 WL 662373 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 1 2012).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : Judicial Interrogation

1130. In child custody and support enforcement proceedings, the mother's failure to object to the trial court's questioning waived the issue under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103; also, the questioning did not deny the mother her federal or state constitutional rights to a fair trial or violate Tex. R. Evid. 605 because the judge did not testify as a witness at the trial and the questions were reasonable and fact-based. Kogel v. Robertson, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10028 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 2 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : Leading Questions

1131. Defendant failed to preserve an objection to leading questions because when the prosecutor rephrased a withdrawn question in essentially the same terms, defendant did not object to the newly posed question. Franklin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7626, 2012 WL 3861970 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 6 2012).

1132. Although the State asked a six-year-old sexual assault complainant numerous leading questions, defendant's trial counsel had objected only once, and because the one question objected to was not a leading question, the trial court did not err in overruling the objection; by not objecting to each leading question, defendant had not preserved his complaint for appellate review in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Embree v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7772 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 30 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

1133. Appellant's conviction was affirmed because the issue of the expert's testimony on sexual assault had been waived in that appellant failed to make a specific objection as to any aspect of her expertise under the provisions of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Teixeira v. State, 89 S.W.3d 190, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

1134. In a civil proceeding to commit a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not err by allowing the State's experts to disclose various facts and data on which their respective opinions were based. The evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 705 and the jury was given a limiting instruction about the appropriate use of the information. In re Tesson, 413 S.W.3d 514, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12919, 2013 WL 5651804 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

1135. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review her claims that the trial court improperly admitted evidence, including expert testimony, because she failed to object to the evidence when it was presented during the trial as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. In re A.B.G., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 601, 2013 WL 257311 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 24 2013).

1136. In the proceeding to commit respondent as a sexually violent predator, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by restricting respondent's cross-examination of one of the State's experts. Even if respondent's proposed questions were relevant to an issue in dispute, his failure to make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) preserved nothing for appellate review. In re Dees, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9807 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 15 2011).

1137. In the insureds' appeal of a judgment entered in favor of the insurer, the court held that: (1) the insurer's expert did not admit that his testimony was speculative; (2) to the extent that the insureds challenged the expert's qualifications to testify regarding roof damage or that his opinion was not reliable, the complaint was waived because there was no timely objection to his qualifications or the reliability of his testimony; and (3) the expert's testimony was based on his training and 28 years of experience. Patel v. Nautilus Ins. Co., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 724, 2011 WL 345967 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 28 2011).

1138. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the expert's testimony with regard to the cause of the claimant's right-side pain, because the expert asserted that the doctor performed the third set of injections without fluoroscopy and that this conduct constituted gross negligence, and the claimant raised the fluoroscopy issue before the trial court in terms of standard of care, not causation; the expert did not link this standard of care opinion to his causation conclusion that the third set of injections caused the claimant's right leg pain. Wilson v. Shanti, 333 S.W.3d 909, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 116 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 6 2011).

1139. In a civil commitment proceeding for appellant, who was found to be a sexually violent predator, where appellant argued that the trial court erred in allowing the State's expert witness, a board-certified psychiatrist, to testify, challenging the standard that she employed in reaching her opinion that he was likely to reoffend, he had not preserved the issue for review; an expert-reliability challenge asking the reviewing court to examine the expert's underlying methodology, technique, or foundational data, required a timely objection so that the trial court had the opportunity to conduct such analysis. In re Commitment of Gollihar, 224 S.W.3d 843, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3786 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

1140. Appellate court could not consider an expert's testimony from the bill of exceptions in determining whether the trial court erred in excluding his causation testimony because it did not first determine, pursuant to properly assigned error, that the trial court erred in refusing to admit the testimony. Mack Trucks v. Tamez, 206 S.W.3d 572, 2006 Tex. LEXIS 1074, 50 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 80 (Tex. 2006).

1141. Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of defendant's expert witness because where was no adequate offer of proof following the very general responses given by the expert during questioning by the State; trial counsel's response was merely an attempt to reply to the State's objection, and did not provide a reasonably specific summary of what the expert testimony would contain. Fergerson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

1142. Admission of expert testimony regarding the connection between a photograph of a child and sexual arousal did not affect defendant's substantial rights because there was evidence of images of children on various devices owned by defendant, one of the devices contained a video of defendant with the victim, and the images were purposefully placed on defendant's devices. Hoard v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11760 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 18 2013).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Qualifications

1143. In a criminal case involving sexual abuse of a child, while defendant claimed that a speculation objection to a nurse practitioner's testimony on statistics of confirmed cases of sexual abuse where there were no physical findings was a challenge to the nurse practitioner's expert qualifications, that ground was not apparent from the context under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1). Cortez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5854, 2010 WL 2889670 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 22 2010).

Evidence : Testimony : Presentation of Evidence

1144. Trial court granted defendant a running objection as to hearsay and he did not specifically object on the basis that the repeated details of the offenses were cumulative of other evidence, or unduly repetitive, and he has waived that objection, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a); there was no abuse of discretion under the circumstances in the trial court's exercise of control over the manner in which the trial was conducted, Tex. R. Evid. 611(a). In re Adame, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4847, 2013 WL 3853386 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 18 2013).

Family Law : Child Custody : Modification : General Overview

1145. In a case in which a trial court denied a mother's motion to modify the conservatorship provisions of the parties' divorce decree, if the mother thought evidence with respect to her claim that the father had received an alleged diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder was relevant and important to the issues raised in the modification hearing, she should have made an offer of proof so that the excluded evidence could be assessed on appeal; without it, a reviewing court could not determine if the trial court actually erred. In the Interest of I.J.M., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2710 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 5 2012).

Family Law : Child Support : Obligations : Computation : Guidelines

1146. In a divorce case, a former husband failed to preserve an alleged error relating to child support because he did not bring to a trial court's attention a discrepancy between the oral pronouncement of child support and the amount that he was ordered to pay in both the original and corrected decrees. Further, he did not challenge the finding that his net monthly income was $ 6,000, and the $ 1,500 child support amount awarded in the original and corrected decrees was consistent with the guidelines for that income amount. Beckner v. Beckner, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 759, 2009 WL 279485 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

Family Law : Child Support : Obligations : Enforcement : Contempt

1147. Habeas corpus relief was denied in a child support case where there was a finding of contempt because a father waived his argument that a trial court erred by not allowing him to offer evidence about certain offsets because the father did not make an offer of proof under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2). In re Corder, 332 S.W.3d 498, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2652 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 10 2009).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

1148. Despite a mother's argument that it was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), a trial court did not err by admitting evidence concerning an oldest daughter, who was not part of a termination of parental rights proceeding, because such evidence was probative of whether the termination was in the best interest of four other children under the factors set forth in Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 263.307; the State had to prove, by clear and convincing evidence, both the grounds for termination and that termination was in the best interest of the children. It was not necessary for the appellate court to decide whether this issue was preserved by a nonparticularized objection because, even if error was preserved, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence, which related to a history of abusive or assaultive conduct by the children's family. In re J.A.P., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2422, 2009 WL 839953 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 1 2009).

1149. In a termination of parental rights case, the father failed to preserve for appellate review his arguments that the continuation of the trial in his absence infringed upon his constitutional rights because the record did not demonstrate that the father lodged his own objection based on constitutional grounds challenging the trial court's decision to proceed with the trial. Although the mother's counsel stated that "we" believe that the father had a constitutional right to be at trial, the mother's counsel did not represent the father at trial, nor did the father's counsel join in the objection. In re T.H., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

1150. During voir dire in a termination of parental rights case, a trial court's alleged limitation on questioning was not preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103 because an attorney did not give an explanation after the State's objection, but reworded the question and proceeded without further objection. In re C.S., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5481 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 12 2007).

Governments : Courts : Authority to Adjudicate

1151. Where appellants urged that the district court violated their procedural and substantive due process rights by limiting them to one hour to present their case, where, at no point in the trial did appellants make an offer of proof concerning evidence excluded because of time constraints, the appellate court had nothing to review. Health Enrichment & Longevity Inst., Inc. v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5094 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6246 (Tex. App. Austin July 15, 2004).

Real Property Law : Eminent Domain Proceedings : General Overview

1152. In an inverse condemnation case, a trial court's refusal to allow the State to give an offer of proof was harmless because the substance of the evidence was apparent from the context within which the questions were asked; moreover, the testimony the State sought to offer concerning the impairment of access and the viability of driveway proposals was immaterial to the issue of damages. State v. Delany, 149 S.W.3d 655, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2385 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004), reversed by 2006 Tex. LEXIS 416, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 557 (Tex. 2006).

Real Property Law : Landlord & Tenant : Lease Agreements : Commercial Leases : General Overview

1153. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease failed to make an objection in the trial court as to the alleged date defect and discovery rule violation that one of lessee's exhibits was not created more than 30 days prior to trial as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 215.5 and waived error, and even if the lessor had made the proper objection, the trial court could have properly overruled it, because no discovery request was made for the exhibit as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 93. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

1154. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1), the lessor in a commercial lease did not preserve by a proper objection any error regarding the lessee's alleged lack of standing to bring the suit; thus, any error as to lack of standing was waived. Parts Indus. Corp. v. A.V.A. Servs., 104 S.W.3d 671, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2244 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2003).

Real Property Law : Nonmortgage Liens : Tax Liens

1155. In a tax lien foreclosure suit, the tax lien holder was not estopped from recovering attorney fees at the rate of 15 percent under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 33.48; although the tax lien holder requested attorney fees as authorized by Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.06 et seq., that citation reasonably included Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 32.065(c), which provided that an assignee of a taxing authority was subrogated to all rights of the taxing authority, and the issue was not properly preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because an estoppel argument was not made to the trial court. JB Joyce, Ltd. v. Regions Fin. Corp., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7246 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 1 2005).

Torts : Intentional Torts : Conversion : General Overview

1156. In a conversion case, following the trial court's ruling excluding the affidavit evidence, the mechanic made no offer of proof showing the substance of any of the affidavits pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the mechanic failed to preserve error as to the affidavits. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

1157. In a conversion case, the mechanic failed to make an offer of proof following the trial court's ruling excluding the vehicle inquiry receipt and a police incident report regarding a different car pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103; thus, the receipt or the incident report could not be considered on appeal. Berry v. Covarrubias, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 236 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2004).

Torts : Malpractice & Professional Liability : Healthcare Providers

1158. Trial judges are not required to adopt the methods of Sherlock Holmes and divine without written or oral guidance as to where, when, why, and how an expert's report is conclusory. Therefore, in a health care liability case, an alleged error was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because a doctor's objection before a trial court was that an expert report was factually inaccurate; however, on appeal, he acknowledged that he was not raising a factual inaccuracy argument. Plemons v. Harris, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 145, 2009 WL 51290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

Torts : Negligence : General Overview

1159. In a negligence suit by a driver against a trucker, the trial court's exclusion of the evidence concerning the driver's consumption of alcohol required reversal because the jury, believing the driver to be sober, declined to find the driver negligent; the judgment turned on evidence of the driver's consumption of alcohol, and therefore, the judgment rendered in favor of the driver was improper. PPC Transp. v. Metcalf, 254 S.W.3d 636, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3291 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Operator Licenses : General Overview

1160. At an administrative license suspension hearing, the driver waived any error in the denial of his right to fully cross-examine the arresting officer. The driver did not offer a bill of exceptions containing potential questions for the arresting officer, nor answers he expected to receive. Parks v. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9365 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 21 2004).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Administrative Proceedings : Evidence : General Overview

1161. Insurer waived any objection that the decision of the Appeals Panel of the Texas Department of Insurance, Division of Workers' Compensation, was not based on competent medical evidence, because the insurer did not object before the trial court took judicial notice of the decision. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Burk, 295 S.W.3d 771, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6956 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2009).

Tex. Evid. R. 104

THIS DOCUMENT IS CURRENT THROUGH August 16, 2020

Rule 104 Preliminary Questions

(a) In General.--The court must decide any preliminary question about whether a witness is qualified, a privilege exists, or evidence is admissible. In so deciding, the court is not bound by evidence rules, except those on privilege.

(b) Relevance That Depends on a Fact.--When the relevance of evidence depends on whether a fact exists, proof must be introduced sufficient to support a finding that the fact does exist. The court may admit the proposed evidence on the condition that the proof be introduced later.

(c) Conducting a Hearing So That the Jury Cannot Hear It.--The court must conduct any hearing on a preliminary question so that the jury cannot hear it if:

(1)the hearing involves the admissibility of a confession in a criminal case;

(2)a defendant in a criminal case is a witness and so requests; or

(3)justice so requires.

(d) Cross-Examining a Defendant in a Criminal Case.--By testifying outside the jury's hearing on a preliminary question, a defendant in a criminal case does not become subject to cross-examination on other issues in the case.

(e) Evidence Relevant to Weight and Credibility.--This rule does not limit a party's right to introduce before the jury evidence that is relevant to the weight or credibility of other evidence.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Experts

1. In an action arising from the State's partial taking of owners' property for use in a highway project, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the State's pretrial motion to exclude the testimony of the owners' designated real estate appraiser without conducting an evidentiary hearing where the appraiser's qualifications were not challenged, and where he generally utilized the long favored comparable sales approach for appraising real property. The State failed to show that the denial of its motion affected a substantial right of the State pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 103(a). State v. Petropoulos, 346 S.W.3d 619, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2009).

Computer & Internet Law : General Overview

2. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Children

3. Evidence was sufficient to support a finding that an extraneous offense occurred, specifically that defendant parent failed to report that there might have been abuse of the child years before the charged offense, because the child testified that she told defendant about the prior inappropriate sexual activity by the same abuser and that nothing happened because defendant did not tell authorities. Cannell v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15299, 2013 WL 6729857 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

4. In a case involving sexual assault of a child, a trial court did not err by admitting expert testimony; even though there was no explicit ruling made on a doctor's qualifications, an implicit ruling was made since defendant's predicate objection was overruled. The trial court did not err by finding that the doctor was qualified based on her knowledge, training, skill, experience, and education; inter alia, the doctor testified that she had performed about 8,500 sexual abuse examinations. Little v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7091, 2009 WL 2882932 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

5. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Exclusionary Rule : Rule Application & Interpretation

6. Objection to the admissibility of evidence under the first sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 is not a prerequisite to the right to a jury instruction regarding a disputed factual issue under the second sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 because a defendant may, but is not required to, object to the admission of evidence as well as make a request for a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction; even when the defendant affirmatively states that he has no objection to the admission of certain evidence, he may still be entitled to a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction because the admissibility of evidence and the jury's consideration of that evidence are not necessarily linked together. Holmes v. State, 248 S.W.3d 194, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 327 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Search Warrants : Affirmations & Oaths : Sufficiency Challenges

7. Trial court acted within its discretion in allowing and considering the officer's testimony that the May 18, 2009 date in the search warrant affidavit was a typographical error. Because the May 18, 2009 date was a typographical error, the court rejected defendant's contention that the information in the affidavit was stale; the controlled buy actually occurred on May 18, 2010 and the warrant was issued on May 19, 2010. Reyes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4367 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 4 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Search Warrants : Probable Cause : General Overview

8. Trial court acted within its discretion in allowing and considering the officer's testimony that the May 18, 2009 date in the search warrant affidavit was a typographical error. Because the May 18, 2009 date was a typographical error, the court rejected defendant's contention that the information in the affidavit was stale; the controlled buy actually occurred on May 18, 2010 and the warrant was issued on May 19, 2010. Reyes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4367 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 4 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Notice & Warning

9. State did not meet its burden to show under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) that defendant's video-taped confession was admissible because it did not present evidence that officers read defendant his Miranda warnings before he made initial off-camera incriminating statements and there was evidence that a two-step interrogation technique was deliberately employed to undermine the later warnings. Vasquez v. State, 397 S.W.3d 850, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4039, 2013 WL 1248304 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Competency to Stand Trial

10. Evidence of incompetency need not be in admissible form; reliable information that meets the standards of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) suffices. McDaniel v. State, 98 S.W.3d 704, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 45 (Tex. Crim. App.

11. Evidence of incompetency need not be in admissible form where reliable information that meets the standards of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) suffices, and the defendant's attorney might orally recite the specific problems he has had in communicating with his client, and the trial judge might consider the defendant's conduct or statements in court; in addition, hearsay letters or reports may be appropriately reliable evidence to consider at this stage. McDaniel v. State, 98 S.W.3d 704, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 45 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Joinder & Severance : Severance of Defendants

12. In a case of solicitation of capital murder, Tex. R. Evid. 104 did not bar the State from inquiring into defendant's theories of defense at a severance hearing. Benavides v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2691 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 5 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

13. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by amending a pretrial suppression order that suppressed all evidence because a pretrial ruling on such was interlocutory and subject to reconsideration and revision during trial, just as any other ruling on the admissibility of evidence. The trial court was able to reconsider and change the pretrial order at any time during the course of the trial. Mince v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8771 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 17 2013).

14. Court properly relied upon an officer's unsworn hearsay document at defendant's suppression hearing because, although it was better practice to produce the witness or attach the documentary evidence to an affidavit, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 28.01, § 1(6) did not create a "best evidence" rule that mandated such a procedure in a motion to suppress hearing. The offense report included defendant's name, correct offense date, and specific information that coincided with the same basic information to which defendant testified at the hearing, and defendant did not argue that the offense report was, in any way, unauthentic, inaccurate, unreliable, or lacking in credibility. Ford v. State, 305 S.W.3d 530, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1440 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

15. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the trial court was not prohibited from admitting unsworn police reports offered by the State detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

16. Assistance of counsel was not rendered ineffective by a failure to object to hearsay and leading questions at a suppression hearing. The Texas Rules of Evidence, with the exception of privileges, did not apply to suppression hearings. Piper v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7601 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

17. Defendant forfeited, by his own misconduct of fatally shooting the victim during a robbery or the burglary of her home, his right to confront the victim in court under the Sixth Amendment about hearsay statements she made to police officers before she died, and therefore her statements were properly admitted into evidence. Gonzalez v. State, 195 S.W.3d 114, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Judicial Discretion

18. Sufficiency of a witness's oath or affirmation is a preliminary question to be decided by a court pursuant to Tex. Evid. R. 104(a). The rules of evidence afford the court broad discretion in the determination of such questions. Scott v. State, 80 S.W.3d 184, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4349 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

19. Preliminary questions concerning the admissibility of evidence are to be determined by the trial court, and such determinations are committed to the trial court's discretion; the trial court's ruling on the admission or exclusion of evidence will not be disturbed unless the record clearly demonstrates an abuse of such discretion. To demonstrate an abuse of discretion, the appellant must show that the trial court acted arbitrarily and without reference to guiding principles. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

20. In defendant's capital murder trial, the testimony of a relative whom defendant referred to as his "sister" was properly admitted where she testified through an interpreter that defendant arrived at his mother's house early in the morning wearing bloody clothing and that he told his mother that he was in trouble and that he had killed the victim. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence even though the witness understood little English, her testimony had to be elicited through an interpreter, she was testifying against her own relative, and her testimony was contradictory at times because the witness provided significant evidence pertaining to the facts of the case; her credibility was for the jury to determine, and defense counsel had ample opportunity to cross-examine her. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Credibility

21. Nothing in the record reflected an abuse of discretion by a trial court in permitting a witness who defendant claimed was intoxicated to testify because the possibility that the witness was intoxicated at the time of trial was a factor that the jury could have considered in evaluating her credibility. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion to strike her testimony. Horace v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2208, 2012 WL 983337 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 21 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Scienter : General Intent

22. Where a detective administered a lie detector test but testified that he was not trying to determine whether defendant was being truthful, the detective had the intent to deceive if the testimony was false, even if his motive was to avoid the jury being tainted by hearing improper testimony; the reviewing court noted that questions concerning the admissibility of evidence were to be decided by the court, not by the witnesses. Nelson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8059 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Use of Particular Evidence

23. Objection to the admissibility of evidence under the first sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 is not a prerequisite to the right to a jury instruction regarding a disputed factual issue under the second sentence of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 because a defendant may, but is not required to, object to the admission of evidence as well as make a request for a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction; even when the defendant affirmatively states that he has no objection to the admission of certain evidence, he may still be entitled to a Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23 jury instruction because the admissibility of evidence and the jury's consideration of that evidence are not necessarily linked together. Holmes v. State, 248 S.W.3d 194, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 327 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Capital Punishment : Aggravating Circumstances

24. If the jury believed from the evidence presented that petitioner state death row inmate was a sexual sadist, and if it understood that non-consensual anal intercourse was an act of criminal violence, then the expert's testimony -- that sexual sadists prefer to commit anal rape, have high recidivism rates, and do not respond well to treatment -- made more likely the proposition that there was a probability that the inmate would commit acts of criminal violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society, and because the testimony was highly relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), its relevance was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Wyatt v. Dretke, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26997 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 3 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

25. Trial court abused its discretion by allowing the arresting officer to testify regarding his opinion on defendant's prescription medications in conjunction with his ultimate opinion on defendant's intoxication because the officer's testimony was neither relevant nor reliable and the officer was not qualified to offer such detailed testimony as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702;.the officer conceded that he was not certified by the police department as a drug-recognition expert, he did not conduct the standard 12-step examination that would have been conducted by a drug-recognition expert, he did not contact such an expert after defendant refused a breath test, and the officer's testimony did not reveal that he had expert knowledge about the medications that defendant had taken or their effects. The error was not harmless because the officer's extensive testimony about defendant's prescription medications was unreliable and the testimony was constituted a substantial part of the State's case. Delane v. State, 369 S.W.3d 412, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 905, 2012 WL 340234 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 2 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

26. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : General Overview

27. Preliminary questions concerning the admissibility of evidence are to be determined by the trial court, and such determinations are committed to the trial court's discretion; the trial court's ruling on the admission or exclusion of evidence will not be disturbed unless the record clearly demonstrates an abuse of such discretion. To demonstrate an abuse of discretion, the appellant must show that the trial court acted arbitrarily and without reference to guiding principles. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

28. In defendant's capital murder trial, the testimony of a relative whom defendant referred to as his "sister" was properly admitted where she testified through an interpreter that defendant arrived at his mother's house early in the morning wearing bloody clothing and that he told his mother that he was in trouble and that he had killed the victim. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence even though the witness understood little English, her testimony had to be elicited through an interpreter, she was testifying against her own relative, and her testimony was contradictory at times because the witness provided significant evidence pertaining to the facts of the case; her credibility was for the jury to determine, and defense counsel had ample opportunity to cross-examine her. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : De Novo Review : Motions to Suppress

29. In a suppression hearing, an officer was properly allowed to testify as to his personal knowledge of the existence of an ordinance, even though the ordinance was not admitted into evidence or judicially noticed. Olguin v.

State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8401, 2011 WL 5009793 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 21 2011).

30. In a hearing on a motion to suppress, an officer's purported lack of independent knowledge of events surrounding an investigative stop did not make the officer incompetent as a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 601 in part because the rules of evidence (except for those rules concerning privileges) did not apply to suppression hearings. Belcher v. State, 244 S.W.3d 531, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9883 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

31. During the guilt-innocence phase of defendant's murder trial, the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 104 in admitting evidence regarding the theft of a rifle from the store where defendant worked based on the State's proffer where although the proffer might well have identified defendant as one of several possible suspects in the theft, it fell short of providing legally sufficient evidence to allow the trier of fact to reasonably find that defendant committed the offense because, based on the proffer, the only link between defendant and the theft was that he was one of possibly 14 managers with a key to the gun locker and that he "mentioned" that the store was selling a small child's rifle; furthermore, the erroneous admission of the extraneous offense evidence had a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury's verdict, thereby affecting defendant's substantial rights pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44. Fischer v. State, 235 S.W.3d 470, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8378 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

Estate, Gift & Trust Law : Will Contests : Testamentary Capacity : Evidence

32. In a will contest alleging lack of testamentary capacity and undue influence, a probate court did not err in excluding the affidavits or exhibits from summary judgment evidence; a review of the record indicated the excluded items were irrelevant to the will contest or were unsworn copies of what they purported to be. In re Estate of Mask, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5439 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 23 2008).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

33. Admission of a surveillance video recording depicting the capital murder of a cab company employee was proper because the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to determine that the testimony concerning the recording was sufficient for a reasonable jury to determine that the recording was in fact an accurate video recording of the events that occurred that morning at the cab company; two witnesses familiar with the video surveillance system testified regarding the video evidence, and the cab driver who discovered the victim also testified about the recording. Turnbull v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13167 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 24 2013).

34. Trial court did not abuse it discretion when it authenticated and admitted the e-mails under Tex. R. Evid. 104 and 901 because the alleged victim's mother testified that about personally knowing defendant's e-mail address and the content of the e-mails referred to matters that only defendant and the alleged victim would know. Sennett v. State, 406 S.W.3d 661, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 25 2013).

35. In defendant's criminal prosecution for bribery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter into evidence because it contained sufficient distinctive characteristics to support a finding that defendant was the intended recipient. The authentication requirement was met because the evidence supported a finding that the letter was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), 901(a). Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

36. In defendant's murder case, the conditional admission of handwritten letters of the victim was proper because the State did indeed authenticate the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on all three letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

Evidence : Competency : General Overview

37. Nothing in the record reflected an abuse of discretion by a trial court in permitting a witness who defendant claimed was intoxicated to testify because the possibility that the witness was intoxicated at the time of trial was a factor that the jury could have considered in evaluating her credibility. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion to strike her testimony. Horace v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2208, 2012 WL 983337 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 21 2012).

Evidence : Competency : Affirmations & Oaths

38. Sufficiency of a witness's oath or affirmation is a preliminary question to be decided by a court pursuant to Tex. Evid. R. 104(a). The rules of evidence afford the court broad discretion in the determination of such questions. Scott v. State, 80 S.W.3d 184, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4349 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

39. Trial court did not abuse it discretion when it authenticated and admitted the e-mails under Tex. R. Evid. 104 and 901 because the alleged victim's mother testified that about personally knowing defendant's e-mail address and the content of the e-mails referred to matters that only defendant and the alleged victim would know. Sennett v. State, 406 S.W.3d 661, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 25 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Medical Diagnosis & Treatment

40. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting the child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule, before permitting the counselor to testify, the trial court had held a hearing under rule of Tex. R. Evid. 104 at which the State elicited testimony concerning the counselor's treatment of the complainant; the counselor testified that his eliciting of facts concerning the complainant's sexual abuse was an important part of her diagnosis and treatment, he provided a treatment-related reason for the timing of her statements, and he also testified that an important part of his work was ensuring that the complainant made truthful statements, and similar testimony had been held in other cases to support admission of child sexual abuse victim statements. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

41. Defendant's convictions for multiple counts of felony aggravated sexual assault were proper where the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion to prevent the victim from testifying because the admissibility of the victim's testimony and qualification to be a witness was within the discretion of the trial court pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a). Although the identification procedure was unduly suggestive, the trial court had found that the victim's testimony was still reliable. Johnson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10133 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Unavailability : General Overview

42. Defendant forfeited, by his own misconduct of fatally shooting the victim during a robbery or the burglary of her home, his right to confront the victim in court under the Sixth Amendment about hearsay statements she made to police officers before she died, and therefore her statements were properly admitted into evidence. Gonzalez v. State, 195 S.W.3d 114, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Evidence : Privileges : Attorney-Client Privilege

43. Where defendant's cell mate was a former attorney who surrendered his license to practice law in lieu of disciplinary proceedings, he was not a "lawyer" as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 503(a)(1). The cell mate was permitted to testify that defendant had confessed to him; the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) by ruling that the attorney-client privilege did not apply. Salatini v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10664 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 28, 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Curative Admissibility

44. In an aggravated assault case, extraneous conduct of theft of a firearm was properly admitted because the victim testified that defendant had showed him a pistol that defendant had stolen, and it was clear that the evidence was offered to negate defendant's theory that the victim was the first aggressor and establish that defendant intentionally attacked the victim because defendant believed that the victim had "snitched" on him. While the evidence was prejudicial, such prejudice was not unfair. White v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6875, 2009 WL 2914480 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2009).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

45. Defendant's convictions for multiple counts of felony aggravated sexual assault were proper where the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion to prevent the victim from testifying because the admissibility of the victim's testimony and qualification to be a witness was within the discretion of the trial court pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a). Although the identification procedure was unduly suggestive, the trial court had found that the victim's testimony was still reliable. Johnson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10133 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 10 2004).

46. Evidence of incompetency need not be in admissible form where reliable information that meets the standards of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) suffices, and the defendant's attorney might orally recite the specific problems he has had in communicating with his client, and the trial judge might consider the defendant's conduct or statements in court; in addition, hearsay letters or reports may be appropriately reliable evidence to consider at this stage. McDaniel v. State, 98 S.W.3d 704, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 45 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

47. Preliminary questions concerning the admissibility of evidence are to be determined by the trial court, and such determinations are committed to the trial court's discretion; the trial court's ruling on the admission or exclusion of evidence will not be disturbed unless the record clearly demonstrates an abuse of such discretion. To demonstrate an abuse of discretion, the appellant must show that the trial court acted arbitrarily and without reference to guiding principles. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

48. In defendant's capital murder trial, the testimony of a relative whom defendant referred to as his "sister" was properly admitted where she testified through an interpreter that defendant arrived at his mother's house early in the morning wearing bloody clothing and that he told his mother that he was in trouble and that he had killed the victim. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence even though the witness understood little English, her testimony had to be elicited through an interpreter, she was testifying against her own relative, and her testimony was contradictory at times because the witness provided significant evidence pertaining to the facts of the case; her credibility was for the jury to determine, and defense counsel had ample opportunity to cross-examine her. Pina v. State, 38 S.W.3d 730, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 307 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2001).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

49. Trial court admitted the evidence conditionally under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and appellant did not renew a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801and Tex. R. Evid. 802, and thus this issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Watson v. Michael Haskins Photography, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9838 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 23 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : General Overview

50. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it excluded defendant's cross-examination question to the victim, asking whether the victim made an allegation that defendant did the same thing to his daughter, as impermissible, as defendant made an inadequate showing that the complaining witness made such an allegation and that it was false. Pierson v. State, 426 S.W.3d 763, 2014 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 539 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 9 2014).

51. Trial court admitted the evidence conditionally under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and appellant did not renew a hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801and Tex. R. Evid. 802, and thus this issue was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Watson v. Michael Haskins Photography, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9838 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 23 2005).

52. In a dispute regarding open-space valuation of real property, there was no error in the trial court's decision to qualify the taxpayers' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 702; although the expert did not have training specific to ad valorem taxation, he had substantial experience and expertise in agricultural use of land and prudent land management. Calhoun County Appraisal Review Bd. v. Stofer L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

53. Given that under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), before the admission of extraneous offense evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), the trial court had to be satisfied that a jury could have found that defendant committed the offense, and assuming that defendant, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, preserved this complaint for review by objecting below, the court rejected defendant's argument that the extraneous offenses were not proven, given the State's uncontradicted evidence. Thompson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5817 (Tex. App. Dallas July 27 2005).

54. Evidence of incompetency need not be in admissible form; reliable information that meets the standards of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) suffices. McDaniel v. State, 98 S.W.3d 704, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 45 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

55. Evidence of incompetency need not be in admissible form where reliable information that meets the standards of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) suffices, and the defendant's attorney might orally recite the specific problems he has had in communicating with his client, and the trial judge might consider the defendant's conduct or statements in court; in addition, hearsay letters or reports may be appropriately reliable evidence to consider at this stage. McDaniel v. State, 98 S.W.3d 704, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 45 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

56. Court erred, in parental rights termination case, by admitting expert testimony regarding the mother's ability to parent, where the State proffered only the testimony of the expert to establish the reliability of his methodology, and the expert offered no specific, independent sources to support the reliability of his methodology. In re J.B., 93 S.W.3d 609, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8505 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

57. Suppression hearings involve determination of preliminary matters of admissibility, so the rules of evidence, except those governing privilege, do not apply. This interpretation is consistent with the reading of the federal counterpart to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a). Granados v. State, 85 S.W.3d 217, 2002 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 99 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1081, 127 S. Ct. 732, 166 L. Ed. 2d 568, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 9310 (2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

58. Although a picture of a text message sent to a sexual assault victim might have been insufficient for authentication purposes, the evidence was proffered in such a way that, in combination with other evidence, it was sufficient for a jury to reasonably believe the text message was sent by defendant; hence, the trial court properly admitted the evidence. Aekins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13694, 2013 WL 5948188 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 6 2013).

59. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by amending a pretrial suppression order that suppressed all evidence because a pretrial ruling on such was interlocutory and subject to reconsideration and revision during trial, just as any other ruling on the admissibility of evidence. The trial court was able to reconsider and change the pretrial order at any time during the course of the trial. Mince v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8771 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 17 2013).

60. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 901, the content of Facebook messages purported to be messages that were sent from an account with appellant's name to an account with the victim's name, and although this alone was insufficient to authenticate that appellant was the author of the messages, when combined with other evidence that was circumstantial, the record might support a finding that appellant authored and sent the messages, and thus the court examined whether the other evidence supported the ruling that admitted the Facebook messages. Campbell v. State, 382 S.W.3d 545, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7684 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2012).

61. Trial court "may," but is not required to, resolve a motion to suppress evidence in a pretrial hearing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 28.01, and a pretrial ruling on such a motion is interlocutory in nature, and as such, it should be regarded as just as much the subject of reconsideration and revision as any other ruling on the admissibility of evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 104, which a trial court may revisit at its discretion at any time during the course of a trial; to the extent that Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.02 may be said to circumscribe a trial court's authority to reopen a hearing on a motion suppress, it should be construed according to its terms, and Article 36.02 restricts the trial court's discretion to reopen a hearing on a motion to suppress only to the extent that it prohibits further evidence of any kind once the parties have concluded their arguments of the cause, that is to say, the trial itself. This conclusion is bolstered by case law from other jurisdictions that have concluded that a trial court retains the authority to reopen a suppression hearing and revisit its pretrial ruling thereon during the course of trial. Black v. State, 362 S.W.3d 626, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 357 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

62. Tex. R. Evid. 104(b) clearly contemplates that the trial court may be required to revisit the question of the admissibility of certain evidence long after it has declared that evidence at least contingently admissible; the court sees no reason why a trial court should lack the authority likewise to revisit a preliminary determination with respect to the admissibility of evidence under Rule 104(a), if requested to do so for sufficient cause by one of the parties, at its discretion, of course, and subject to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.02. Black v. State, 362 S.W.3d 626, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 357 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

63. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

64. In defendant's criminal prosecution for bribery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a letter into evidence because it contained sufficient distinctive characteristics to support a finding that defendant was the intended recipient. The authentication requirement was met because the evidence supported a finding that the letter was what its proponent claimed it to be under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), 901(a). Watts v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1044, 2012 WL 403859 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 8 2012).

65. In a murder case, the court did not err by refusing to allow defendant to make his objections regarding an extraneous firebombing outside of the presence of the jury because, in his objection on the record, defendant did not refer to a firebomb or what specific testimony he believed to be forthcoming to which he objected. Additionally, the jury was instructed in the charge that they were only to consider any extraneous offenses if the State had proved them beyond a reasonable doubt. Asberry v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8512 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 4 2009).

66. Court properly relied upon an officer's unsworn hearsay document at defendant's suppression hearing because, although it was better practice to produce the witness or attach the documentary evidence to an affidavit, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 28.01, § 1(6) did not create a "best evidence" rule that mandated such a procedure in a motion to suppress hearing. The offense report included defendant's name, correct offense date, and specific information that coincided with the same basic information to which defendant testified at the hearing, and defendant did not argue that the offense report was, in any way, unauthentic, inaccurate, unreliable, or lacking in credibility. Ford v. State, 305 S.W.3d 530, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1440 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

67. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly denied defendant's witness's testimony relating to the field of false confessions because the witness's testimony could not have assisted the jury in understanding the evidence or in making a determination of a fact issue. He did not intend to offer an opinion as to the truth or falsity of defendant's confession, and during cross-examination defendant admitted the truth of the portions of his confession that he earlier claimed were inaccurate. Munoz v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6475, 2009 WL 2517664 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 19 2009).

68. Decision of the trial court to admit the extraneous-offense evidence regarding defendant's drug sales was within the zone of reasonable disagreement and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting same, and it was noted that extraneous offense evidence could not be considered by the jury unless there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that defendant committed the offense beyond a reasonable doubt, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104(b); the State claimed that evidence of defendant's sale of drugs was admissible as his motive to conspire to have the victim killed and motive was one of the possible bases for admission of extraneous offense evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Toliver v. State, 279 S.W.3d 391, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 345 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 21 2009).

69. In defendant's murder case, the conditional admission of handwritten letters of the victim was proper because the State did indeed authenticate the letters through the victim's daughter, who recognized the handwriting on all three letters as being that of her mother. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

70. In defendant's trial for capital murder, a trial court did not err in admitting evidence; there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding that defendant wrote a letter and an envelope that was sent from the jail and returned to defendant for insufficient postage; the documents had sufficient internal characteristics to authenticate the evidence. Druery v. State, 225 S.W.3d 491, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 392 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1550, 182 L. Ed. 2d 180, 2012 U.S. LEXIS 1267 (U.S. 2012).

71. Where defendant was charged with aggravated robbery based on his involvement in a gang-style offense with two other men, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence an extraneous robbery that was committed by two or three Hispanic men; the facts of the robberies were similar, and personal documents taken during the extraneous robbery were found in defendant's apartment; as required by Tex. R. Evid. 104, the trial court made the requisite threshold determination that a jury could reasonably find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the extraneous robbery. Gonzalez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2318 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 26 2007).

72. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), the trial court was entitled to admit a witness's lay opinion testimony at the preliminary hearing without the predicate of Tex. R. Evid. 701 being met. Denton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1706 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 7 2007).

73. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in admitting the child sexual assault complainant's hearsay statements to her counselor through the medical records exception to the hearsay rule, before permitting the counselor to testify, the trial court had held a hearing under rule of Tex. R. Evid. 104 at which the State elicited testimony concerning the counselor's treatment of the complainant; the counselor testified that his eliciting of facts concerning the complainant's sexual abuse was an important part of her diagnosis and treatment, he provided a treatment-related reason for the timing of her statements, and he also testified that an important part of his work was ensuring that the complainant made truthful statements, and similar testimony had been held in other cases to support admission of child sexual abuse victim statements. Graham v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8063 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 8 2006).

74. To the extent that defendant contended that the trial court erred by failing to conduct a preliminary hearing outside the jury's presence concerning extraneous offense evidence the State intended to offer, the court overruled the complaint; there was no requirement that the initial determination -- that a jury could reasonably find beyond a reasonable doubt that a defendant committed extraneous offenses -- be made following a hearing as opposed to some other form of preliminary review. Hernandez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4834 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 7 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : Existence of Privileges

75. Testimony was insufficient to show that the woman was defendant's common law wife, because the couple did not have a joint bank account, and the woman had last filed her income tax return as a single person. Ward v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2405, 2010 WL 1266777 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 31 2010).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : Witness Qualifications

76. There was no abuse of discretion by excluding the expert's testimony regarding alleged marketing or design defects in the automatic external defibrillator or its battery, because the expert did not test the actual device or battery involved and did not express specific expertise regarding automatic external defibrillators and batteries. Schronk v. Laerdal Med. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9916 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 8 2013).

77. Evidence was insufficient to defeat no-evidence motion for summary judgment, because the expert's opinions were not reliable, were conclusory and speculative, and the expert was not qualified to render such opinions; the expert's opinions relied extensively on one published article, which did nothing more than conclude that darker shoes would become hotter than lighter shoes when exposed to sun light, and the expert failed to provide testimony regarding the temperature at which to expect blisters to form on the claimant's feet. Davis v. Aetrex Worldwide, Inc., 392 S.W.3d 213, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9845, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18967, 2012 WL 5969621 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 29 2012).

78. In a child sexual abuse case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) in finding that a forensic interviewer who videotaped an interview with the victim testified as a lay witness under Tex. R. Evid. 701 by describing the events she personally observed. Because the witness did not testify as an expert under Tex. R. Evid. 702, notice was not required under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 39.14(b), and there was no need to lay an expert predicate. Flood v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5409, 2011 WL 2732608 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 14 2011).

79. In a proceeding to civilly commit appellant as a sexually violent predator, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) in admitting testimony from the State's experts, a psychologist and a psychiatrist, because their opinions were reliable and adequately tied to relevant facts; they diagnosed appellant with paraphilia, polysubstance dependence, and personality disorder with antisocial features. In re Polk, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1323, 2011 WL 662928 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 24 2011).

80. Under the court's standard of review, the court assumed that the trial court was operating from the best vantage point to interpret the situation as to whether a witness was confused by the phrasing of a question, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104(a). Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8834, 2010 WL 4361885 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 4 2010).

81. In defendant's trial for injury to a child, the court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) in excluding the testimony of defendant's expert witness regarding the mother's interaction and bonding with the child because defendant wholly failed to establish that the witness was an expert on the subject matter upon which the witness was called to testify. Esch v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8220, 2010 WL 3981924 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 12 2010).

82. Express ruling on a company's expert objections to the methodology, technique, or foundational data was required to exclude as unreliable the treating oncologist's causation opinion; considered with notice and opportunity-to-be-heard principles, the two proceedings, a challenge under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) and a no-evidence motion for summary judgment, had to be separate under the circumstances of this case, and the court was not to consider the company's reliability objections as implicitly sustained by the trial court. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

83. By conducting a separate E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson hearing before considering a no-evidence motion for summary judgment, the trial court applies the process applicable to each hearing, provides the parties notice and an opportunity to present the best available evidence, and provides the appellate court with a full record for review, and that process was required in this case. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

84. Process missing from the record and necessary in this case was a hearing under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), and without an express ruling that the treating oncologist's causation opinion was unreliable, however, the treating oncologist's affidavit remained part of the summary judgment proof and provided some evidence to defeat the no-evidence motion on causation; if the trial court decided the affidavit had to be stricken because of unreliable data or for some other reason, the trial court might then decide whether to grant the no-evidence summary judgment, or order a continuance, and the court reversed the judgment against the company. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

85. Ruling sustaining a company's objections to the oncologist's causation opinion was not implicit in the trial court's ruling on the motion for summary judgment; a contrary conclusion, that the trial court implicitly sustained the company's objections and found the causation affidavit unreliable and inadmissible, would arguably require that two standards of review be applied, but without a record of the Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) determination, and the court applied the summary judgment standard in this appeal. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

86. If the trial court did not abuse its discretion in implicitly sustaining the expert evidence challenge, there would be no affidavit by the treating oncologist to consider and no causation evidence in response to the no-evidence motion, and practically this approach would reduce the summary judgment appellate review standard to an abuse of discretion standard whenever case-determinative objections, coupled with a no-evidence motion, were considered implicitly sustained by the granting of summary judgment; whether or not the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the objections would be determinative on appeal of whether the summary judgment had to be reversed or affirmed. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

87. Fusion of review standards cannot be avoided simply by requiring an express ruling on the E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Robinson challenge, along with a ruling on the no-evidence summary judgment motion, but an express Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) determination does clarify the process followed in the trial court, and notifies the nonmovant that the expert's opinion is ruled inadmissible before summary judgment is granted; because Tex. R. Evid. 705(a) allows the expert to express an opinion without first introducing the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires the disclosure, an express ruling notifies the nonmovant of that ruling as well and permits an opportunity to comply with the ruling. Pink v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 324 S.W.3d 290, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

88. In a hearing on a motion to suppress, an officer's purported lack of independent knowledge of events surrounding an investigative stop did not make the officer incompetent as a witness under Tex. R. Evid. 601 in part because the rules of evidence (except for those rules concerning privileges) did not apply to suppression hearings. Belcher v. State, 244 S.W.3d 531, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9883 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

89. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting opinion testimony from a pediatrician; the testimony the witness gave regarding her qualifications, experience, and education all went to her status as an expert for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104; no express words were required to offer the expert; the defense never objected that she was unqualified or that the subject matter of her testimony was inappropriate for expert testimony. Degollado v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6032 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 1 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Conditional Admissions

90. Trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b) in admitting letters that defendant purportedly wrote to a district attorney and an assistant district attorney because the trial court recalled a detective who interviewed defendant to testify; the detective testified that the two letters appeared to be in the same handwriting as on a warning form that defendant signed. Woodall v. State, 376 S.W.3d 122, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6245 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 31 2012).

91. Although the State had not elicited testimony connecting appellant to another armed robbery when the State offered certain evidence, the State later offered evidence through other testimony, from which the jury could have found that appellant committed that robbery; evidence was not to be excluded merely because its relevance might depend on other evidence being produced later in the trial, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and the court saw no reason why this standard should not have applied when the trial court made its admissibility finding of the extraneous evidence at punishment, especially given that the trial court had the chance to reconsider the same evidence when appellant objected. To the extent appellant argued that the extraneous evidence was irrelevant, the court found no abuse of discretion. Bryant v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 479, 2012 WL 171243 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2012).

92. In a driving while intoxicated case, evidence of defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant because there was no evidence as to the dosage, the exact times of ingestion, or the half-life of the drug; a lay juror was not in a position to determine whether the drugs, taken more than 12 hours before arrest, would have any effect on defendant's intoxication. Without expert testimony to provide the foundation required to admit scientific evidence, the testimony regarding defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant. Layton v. State, 280 S.W.3d 235, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 149 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

93. Defendant's conviction for the murder of defendant's aunt was overturned and a new trial was ordered where the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 104 in admitting extraneous offense evidence relating to the theft of a rifle from a store where defendant worked; the erroneous admission of the extraneous offense evidence had a substantial and injurious effect on the jury's verdict and was reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44. Fischer v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7220 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 5 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Hearings Out of Jury's Presence

94. Court did not err by not allowing defendant to question two witnesses outside the presence of the jury to demonstrate that a witness knowingly violated the motion in limine, because the court reviewed the records relating to defendant's registration as a sex offender and knew that even with this evidence it would not grant a mistrial. Brownlee v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3679 (Tex. App. Eastland May 13 2010).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Testimony by Accused

95. In a case of solicitation of capital murder, Tex. R. Evid. 104 did not bar the State from inquiring into defendant's theories of defense at a severance hearing. Benavides v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2691 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 5 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Weight & Credibility of Evidence

96. During the guilt-innocence phase of defendant's murder trial, the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 104 in admitting evidence regarding the theft of a rifle from the store where defendant worked based on the State's proffer where although the proffer might well have identified defendant as one of several possible suspects in the theft, it fell short of providing legally sufficient evidence to allow the trier of fact to reasonably find that defendant committed the offense because, based on the proffer, the only link between defendant and the theft was that he was one of possibly 14 managers with a key to the gun locker and that he "mentioned" that the store was selling a small child's rifle; furthermore, the erroneous admission of the extraneous offense evidence had a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the jury's verdict, thereby affecting defendant's substantial rights pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44. Fischer v. State, 235 S.W.3d 470, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8378 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

97. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the trial court was not prohibited from admitting unsworn police reports offered by the State detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

98. Although the power to disregard the rules of evidence exists, nothing in the language of the rule compels the trial to exercise that power; appellant did not show that an application of the rules of evidence during the pre-trial hearing in his case constituted an abuse of discretion. Baldree v. State, 248 S.W.3d 224, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5057 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

99. Defendant forfeited, by his own misconduct of fatally shooting the victim during a robbery or the burglary of her home, his right to confront the victim in court under the Sixth Amendment about hearsay statements she made to police officers before she died, and therefore her statements were properly admitted into evidence. Gonzalez v. State, 195 S.W.3d 114, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1129 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

100. Where defendant's cell mate was a former attorney who surrendered his license to practice law in lieu of disciplinary proceedings, he was not a "lawyer" as defined in Tex. R. Evid. 503(a)(1). The cell mate was permitted to testify that defendant had confessed to him; the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) by ruling that the attorney-client privilege did not apply. Salatini v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10664 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 28, 2005).

101. At the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress intoxilyzer results, the trial court was not prohibited from admitting unsworn police reports offered by the State detailing defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated. The rules of evidence do not apply in suppression hearings. Caballero v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1865 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 10 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

102. Admission of a surveillance video recording depicting the capital murder of a cab company employee was proper because the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to determine that the testimony concerning the recording was sufficient for a reasonable jury to determine that the recording was in fact an accurate video recording of the events that occurred that morning at the cab company; two witnesses familiar with the video surveillance system testified regarding the video evidence, and the cab driver who discovered the victim also testified about the recording. Turnbull v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13167 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 24 2013).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

103. Evidence was sufficient to support a finding that an extraneous offense occurred, specifically that defendant parent failed to report that there might have been abuse of the child years before the charged offense, because the child testified that she told defendant about the prior inappropriate sexual activity by the same abuser and that nothing happened because defendant did not tell authorities. Cannell v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15299, 2013 WL 6729857 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

104. In an aggravated assault case, extraneous conduct of theft of a firearm was properly admitted because the victim testified that defendant had showed him a pistol that defendant had stolen, and it was clear that the evidence was offered to negate defendant's theory that the victim was the first aggressor and establish that defendant intentionally attacked the victim because defendant believed that the victim had "snitched" on him. While the evidence was prejudicial, such prejudice was not unfair. White v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6875, 2009 WL 2914480 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2009).

105. Where defendant was charged with aggravated robbery based on his involvement in a gang-style offense with two other men, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence an extraneous robbery that was committed by two or three Hispanic men; the facts of the robberies were similar, and personal documents taken during the extraneous robbery were found in defendant's apartment; as required by Tex. R. Evid. 104, the trial court made the requisite threshold determination that a jury could reasonably find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the extraneous robbery. Gonzalez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2318 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 26 2007).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

106. In defendant's murder case, the court did not err in admitting evidence that she stole insulin from a hospital because the issue was whether a reasonable jury could have found that she had knowledge of insulin and access to it within a reasonable time before the victim's death. Defendant had a key to a locked medication room, defendant had "working knowledge" of insulin and its effects, and defendant worked in an area where over seventy percent of the patients were in need of regular insulin injections. Hannah v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6361 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 21, 2008).

107. In defendant's murder case, the court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's link to another person's death and the theft of her ring because a reasonable jury could have found that defendant was culpable in the death. A jury could have inferred that defendant most likely killed the other victim by injecting her with an overdose of insulin and then expedited her plan by forging the victim's signature on a do not resuscitate order and urging other nurses to stay away. Hannah v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6361 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 21, 2008).

108. In a will contest alleging lack of testamentary capacity and undue influence, a probate court did not err in excluding the affidavits or exhibits from summary judgment evidence; a review of the record indicated the excluded items were irrelevant to the will contest or were unsworn copies of what they purported to be. In re Estate of Mask, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5439 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 23 2008).

109. If the jury believed from the evidence presented that petitioner state death row inmate was a sexual sadist, and if it understood that non-consensual anal intercourse was an act of criminal violence, then the expert's testimony -- that sexual sadists prefer to commit anal rape, have high recidivism rates, and do not respond well to treatment -- made more likely the proposition that there was a probability that the inmate would commit acts of criminal violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society, and because the testimony was highly relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), its relevance was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Wyatt v. Dretke, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26997 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 3 2003).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : General Overview

110. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence concerning the victim's alleged recantation because due to the dissimilarity of the sexual abuse and the physical abuse that she allegedly recanted, the evidence could be deemed a collateral matter which was not permitted to be used to impeach and defendant failed to show an exception to that rule. Hosey v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7876, 2014 WL 3621796 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 23 2014).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : General Overview

111. Tex. R. Evid. 104(a) afforded the trial court broad discretion in determining admissibility; thus, under Rule 104(a) the trial court could consider the NCIC report in determining the admissibility of defendant's prior conviction, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in considering the NCIC report to determine whether defendant's prior conviction was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 609. Gay v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Dallas June 18 2004).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : General Overview

112. In a driving while intoxicated case, evidence of defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant because there was no evidence as to the dosage, the exact times of ingestion, or the half-life of the drug; a lay juror was not in a position to determine whether the drugs, taken more than 12 hours before arrest, would have any effect on defendant's intoxication. Without expert testimony to provide the foundation required to admit scientific evidence, the testimony regarding defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant. Layton v. State, 280 S.W.3d 235, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 149 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

113. In a dispute regarding open-space valuation of real property, there was no error in the trial court's decision to qualify the taxpayers' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 702; although the expert did not have training specific to ad valorem taxation, he had substantial experience and expertise in agricultural use of land and prudent land management. Calhoun County Appraisal Review Bd. v. Stofer L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

114. Appellate court overruled defendant's argument that the trial court erred in allowing the witness to answer because she did not have the expertise to testify as to whether the victim's condition would improve because the witness did not testify to her opinion about the victim's prospects for improvement, but rather she testified to what the doctors had told her. Cushing v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5699 (Tex. App. Waco July 20 2005).

115. Appellate court overruled defendant's complaint that the State asked the officer whether an appearance of confusion, not knowing the time, and having time lapses could be an indication of someone trying to be deceptive, because defendant failed to demonstrate that he was harmed by the testimony about which he complained. Cushing v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5699 (Tex. App. Waco July 20 2005).

116. If the jury believed from the evidence presented that petitioner state death row inmate was a sexual sadist, and if it understood that non-consensual anal intercourse was an act of criminal violence, then the expert's testimony -- that sexual sadists prefer to commit anal rape, have high recidivism rates, and do not respond well to treatment -- made more likely the proposition that there was a probability that the inmate would commit acts of criminal violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society, and because the testimony was highly relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), its relevance was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Wyatt v. Dretke, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26997 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 3 2003).

117. Court erred, in parental rights termination case, by admitting expert testimony regarding the mother's ability to parent where the State proffered only the testimony of the expert to establish the reliability of his methodology, and the expert offered no specific, independent sources to support the reliability of his methodology. In re J.B., 93 S.W.3d 609, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8505 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

118. Court erred, in parental rights termination case, by admitting expert testimony regarding the mother's ability to parent, where the State proffered only the testimony of the expert to establish the reliability of his methodology, and the expert offered no specific, independent sources to support the reliability of his methodology. In re J.B., 93 S.W.3d 609, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8505 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

119. At defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a licensed professional counselor who treated sex offenders; the expert's testimony about grooming for a sexual offense was relevant to assist the jury in understanding defendant's behavior. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

120. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for aggravated assault and endangering a child in permitting a State witness to testify as an expert witness where the witness's expertise fit with the subject matter at issue, which was whether the damages to the victims' vehicles were consistent with their accounts of how the damage occurred. The witness had seventeen years of experience in the automotive industry and thirteen years of experience as an estimator for damaged vehicles, and his testimony did not involve a complex subject, but rather consisted of matching up paint transfer and damages to the victims' vehicles with damages to defendant's truck. Ibarra v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 169, 2013 WL 123705 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2013).

121. Trial court abused its discretion by allowing the arresting officer to testify regarding his opinion on defendant's prescription medications in conjunction with his ultimate opinion on defendant's intoxication because the officer's testimony was neither relevant nor reliable and the officer was not qualified to offer such detailed testimony as required by Tex. R. Evid. 702;.the officer conceded that he was not certified by the police department as a drug-recognition expert, he did not conduct the standard 12-step examination that would have been conducted by a drug-recognition expert, he did not contact such an expert after defendant refused a breath test, and the officer's testimony did not reveal that he had expert knowledge about the medications that defendant had taken or their effects. The error was not harmless because the officer's extensive testimony about defendant's prescription medications was unreliable and the testimony was constituted a substantial part of the State's case. Delane v. State, 369 S.W.3d 412, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 905, 2012 WL 340234 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 2 2012).

122. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly denied defendant's witness's testimony relating to the field of false confessions because the witness's testimony could not have assisted the jury in understanding the evidence or in making a determination of a fact issue. He did not intend to offer an opinion as to the truth or falsity of defendant's confession, and during cross-examination defendant admitted the truth of the portions of his confession that he earlier claimed were inaccurate. Munoz v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6475, 2009 WL 2517664 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 19 2009).

123. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated sexual assault, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting opinion testimony from a pediatrician; the testimony the witness gave regarding her qualifications, experience, and education all went to her status as an expert for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104; no express words were required to offer the expert; the defense never objected that she was unqualified or that the subject matter of her testimony was inappropriate for expert testimony. Degollado v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6032 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 1 2007).

124. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

125. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for aggravated assault and endangering a child in permitting a State witness to testify as an expert witness where the witness's expertise fit with the subject matter at issue, which was whether the damages to the victims' vehicles were consistent with their accounts of how the damage occurred. The witness had seventeen years of experience in the automotive industry and thirteen years of experience as an estimator for damaged vehicles, and his testimony did not involve a complex subject, but rather consisted of matching up paint transfer and damages to the victims' vehicles with damages to defendant's truck. Ibarra v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 169, 2013 WL 123705 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2013).

126. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err by admitting a pediatrician's testimony where: (1) the pediatrician, a specialist in child maltreatment, had published research in the area of maltreatment, particularly in the area of child abuse; (2) the pediatrician had personally examined over one thousand children and was considered an expert in the area of sexual abuse; and (3) the pediatrician's ten-page curriculum vitae, which was admitted into evidence without objection, reflected her extensive training, skills, education, experience, and publications in the area of child sexual abuse. The prosecutor specifically requested the pediatrician's opinion based on her training and experience, as well as her examinations of children who had made a delayed outcry, for an opinion on why sexually abused children might delay outcry, which did not require a greater or more specific degree of expertise in the psychology or sociology of sexually abused children than possessed by the pediatrician, and the pediatrician's testimony would assist the jury in understanding why children might delay reporting sexual abuse. Salinas v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7828, 2009 WL 3210941 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 8 2009).

127. In a case in which defendant was convicted of intentionally causing serious bodily injury to his stepson, causing his death, and intentionally or knowingly concealing the body, the trial court did not err by completely excluding the testimony of a defense expert pathologist who was board certified in both clinical and anatomical pathology, but was not a forensic pathologist, where the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the defense did not demonstrate that the pathologist was sufficiently qualified in the sub-speciality of forensic pathology and that his methodology, without accessing or viewing the corpse, was not scientifically reliable; defendant did not demonstrate to the trial court that the pathologist had any experience with strangulations or decomposed bodies. Crunk v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7329, 2009 WL 2973474 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 17 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Daubert Standard

128. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Helpfulness

129. At defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a licensed professional counselor who treated sex offenders; the expert's testimony about grooming for a sexual offense was relevant to assist the jury in understanding defendant's behavior. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Qualifications

130. Evidence was insufficient to defeat no-evidence motion for summary judgment, because the expert's opinions were not reliable, were conclusory and speculative, and the expert was not qualified to render such opinions; the expert's opinions relied extensively on one published article, which did nothing more than conclude that darker shoes would become hotter than lighter shoes when exposed to sun light, and the expert failed to provide testimony regarding the temperature at which to expect blisters to form on the claimant's feet. Davis v. Aetrex Worldwide, Inc., 392 S.W.3d 213, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9845, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18967, 2012 WL 5969621 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 29 2012).

131. In a case involving sexual assault of a child, a trial court did not err by admitting expert testimony; even though there was no explicit ruling made on a doctor's qualifications, an implicit ruling was made since defendant's predicate objection was overruled. The trial court did not err by finding that the doctor was qualified based on her knowledge, training, skill, experience, and education; inter alia, the doctor testified that she had performed about 8,500 sexual abuse examinations. Little v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7091, 2009 WL 2882932 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

132. In a workers' compensation action regarding an employee's impairment rating, the trial court properly admitted testimony from the physician appointed to evaluate the employee on behalf of the employer under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a); although the doctor's orthopedic training was in Canada, the doctor was licensed and practiced in Texas, and had been approved as a designated doctor by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission. Barrigan v. MHMR Servs., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 43 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 4 2007).

133. As a pathologist, a doctor, who was an expert witness for the State, could reliably base her opinion concerning bone fractures upon her examination, background, studies, and experience with the tensile strength of pediatric bones, particularly ribs, and the amount of force necessary to break a two and a half year old child's ribs; thus, there was no merit to the argument that a forensic pathologist needed to have a sub speciality in merry-go-round accidents or stair falls in order to testify to the pathological consequences of that type of a fall; accordingly, in a termination of parental rights case, the doctor's testimony regarding the deceased daughter's injuries was admissible. In re J.L., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11102 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 28 2006), (citation omitted).

134. When the appellate court in a sexual assault trial improperly evaluated the qualifications of a proposed defense expert, a certified legal nurse consultant, under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 401, 402, and 702, and did not evaluate the reliability of the consultant's proposed testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 705(c), and did not give proper deference to the trial judge's decision not to allow her to testify as an expert, the appellate court's judgment was vacated, and case was remanded to allow the appellate court to conduct a proper analysis. Vela v. State, 209 S.W.3d 128, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2384 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

135. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that a forensic psychiatrist was qualified as an expert in the field of psychiatry and was qualified to testify to the opinions she expressed in a civil commitment case because: (1) the psychiatrist received her bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma; (2) she was a graduate of Emory Medical School; (3) she also completed a one-year internship at Emory Medical School; (4) she completed psychology and psychiatry residency training; (5) after receiving specialized training during her fellowship in forensic psychiatry, she was in private practice; (6) as part of her outpatient practice, she had treated inmates for about eight hours a week for eight years at a county Jail; (7) the psychiatrist had evaluated and treated juveniles, including sex offenders, committed to the Texas Youth Commission and at the state school in Gainesville; (8) at the time of her deposition she still evaluated defendants for the criminal courts in several counties. In re Martinez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7459 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2006).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

136. Court erred, in parental rights termination case, by admitting expert testimony regarding the mother's ability to parent where the State proffered only the testimony of the expert to establish the reliability of his methodology, and the expert offered no specific, independent sources to support the reliability of his methodology. In re J.B., 93 S.W.3d 609, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8505 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

137. Court erred, in parental rights termination case, by admitting expert testimony regarding the mother's ability to parent, where the State proffered only the testimony of the expert to establish the reliability of his methodology, and the expert offered no specific, independent sources to support the reliability of his methodology. In re J.B., 93 S.W.3d 609, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8505 (Tex. App. Waco 2002).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

138. As a pathologist, a doctor, who was an expert witness for the State, could reliably base her opinion concerning bone fractures upon her examination, background, studies, and experience with the tensile strength of pediatric bones, particularly ribs, and the amount of force necessary to break a two and a half year old child's ribs; thus, there was no merit to the argument that a forensic pathologist needed to have a sub speciality in merry-go-round accidents or stair falls in order to testify to the pathological consequences of that type of a fall; accordingly, in a termination of parental rights case, the doctor's testimony regarding the deceased daughter's injuries was admissible. Public Health & Welfare Law : Healthcare : Mental Health Services : Commitment : Involuntary Commitment of Adults

139. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that a forensic psychiatrist was qualified as an expert in the field of psychiatry and was qualified to testify to the opinions she expressed in a civil commitment case because: (1) the psychiatrist received her bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Oklahoma; (2) she was a graduate of Emory Medical School; (3) she also completed a one-year internship at Emory Medical School; (4) she completed psychology and psychiatry residency training; (5) after receiving specialized training during her fellowship in forensic psychiatry, she was in private practice; (6) as part of her outpatient practice, she had treated inmates for about eight hours a week for eight years at a county Jail; (7) the psychiatrist had evaluated and treated juveniles, including sex offenders, committed to the Texas Youth Commission and at the state school in Gainesville; (8) at the time of her deposition she still evaluated defendants for the criminal courts in several counties. In re Martinez, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7459 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 24 2006).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : Assessment & Valuation : General Overview

140. In a dispute regarding open-space valuation of real property, there was no error in the trial court's decision to qualify the taxpayers' expert witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 104(a), 702; although the expert did not have training specific to ad valorem taxation, he had substantial experience and expertise in agricultural use of land and prudent land management. Calhoun County Appraisal Review Bd. v. Stofer L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6629 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 18 2005).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Benefit Determinations : Permanent Partial Disabilities

141. In a workers' compensation action regarding an employee's impairment rating, the trial court properly admitted testimony from the physician appointed to evaluate the employee on behalf of the employer under Tex. R. Evid. 104(a); although the doctor's orthopedic training was in Canada, the doctor was licensed and practiced in Texas, and had been approved as a designated doctor by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission. Tex. Evid. R. 105

THIS DOCUMENT IS CURRENT THROUGH August 16, 2020

Rule 105 Evidence That is Not Admissible Against Other Parties or for Other Purposes

(a) Limiting Admitted Evidence.--If the court admits evidence that is admissible against a party or for a purpose - but not against another party or for another purpose - the court, on request, must restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly.

(b) Preserving a Claim of Error.

(1) Court Admits the Evidence Without Restriction.--A party may claim error in a ruling to admit evidence that is admissible against a party or for a purpose - but not against another party or for another purpose - only if the party requests the court to restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly.

(2) Court Excludes the Evidence.--A party may claim error in a ruling to exclude evidence that is admissible against a party or for a purpose - but not against another party or for another purpose - only if the party limits its offer to the party against whom or the purpose for which the evidence is admissible.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Trials : Bench Trials

1. Where a trial court, in a bench trial, found for a creditor on contract and fraud claims but did not make specific findings allocating the damages, although there was no evidence to support the fraud finding, the judgment was affirmed; under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the evidence on damages, which consisted of testimony admitted without objection, could be considered for all purposes. Advanced Messaging Wireless, Inc. v. Campus Design, Inc., 190 S.W.3d 66, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8991 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2005).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : General Overview

2. Trial court did not err in not giving a jury a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105 regarding the legal ability of an employee of a contractor to hold himself out as an engineer where there was no testimony or evidence requiring such an instruction because, at trial, the employee was clear in stating that while he held an engineering degree from a preeminent educational institution, he was not a licensed engineer, and he testified that he had merely provided AutoCAD drafting services, which did not require an engineering license; finally, the employee had not been held out to the contractor's customer as a licensed engineer. Purnell Furniture Servs. v. Warehouse Rack Co., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6858 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

3. Because the horse farm owners did not request a limiting instruction regarding the horse owner's hearsay testimony impeaching a veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court did not give a limiting instruction, the jury was able to consider the evidence for any and all purposes. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : Requests for Instructions

4. Portion of the automobile manufacturer's spreadsheet reflecting the 67 code 56 claims concerning airbags was admissible as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the spreadsheet was created by the manufacturer and produced in discovery, and a witness testified that the 67 open circuits reflected on the spreadsheet were all claims submitted to the manufacturer and paid because technicians confirmed the claims all involved defects. Because the manufacturer did not request a limiting instruction as to the statements from customers listed on the spreadsheet or the remainder of the warranty claims, the inclusion of the items was not ground for complaint on appeal. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : General Overview

5. In an action involving a fire and who was the cause of it, the condominium's contention that the trial court erred by forcing it to present evidence of insurance to the jury was without merit since the condominium apparently did not enter the proof of loss into evidence and the proof of loss was admitted without limitation, Tex. R. Evid. 105. Richmond Condos. v. Skipworth Commer. Plumbing, Inc., 245 S.W.3d 646, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 963 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

6. In a negligence case arising from a fire at a condominium complex, absent a request for a limiting instruction on evidence of insurance, that issue was waived on appeal under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Richmond Condos. v. Skipworth Commer. Plumbing, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5977 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

Civil Rights Law : Protection of Disabled Persons : General Overview

7. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

8. Defendant's objection to the whole community-supervision document did not preserve the error complained of on appeal that admission of the document violated his confrontation rights because his objection was to testimony from any portion of the community-supervision records, and by his own argument, portions of the records were admissible. Blackman v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 115, 2014 WL 50804 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 7 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

9. In a trial for child sexual assault, a limiting instruction was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 105 as to testimony about extraneous acts because defendant failed to timely request an instruction. The court noted that although the trial court placed a limiting instruction in the jury charge, limiting instructions given for the first time during the jury charge did not constitute an efficacious application of Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) because limiting instructions, when properly requested, were most effective when given simultaneously with the relevant evidence. Miller v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6227 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary

10. In a trial for two counts of burglary, defendant was not egregiously harmed by the trial court's failure to instruct the jury to use the evidence concerning each cause separately and not to use evidence in one case in the other. Under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the trial court did not have a duty to sua sponte include such a limiting instruction in the jury charge, and there was nothing indicating improper use of the evidence. Owen v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9016, 2011 WL 5515548 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 10 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary : Elements

11. Trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 105 by refusing to give a limiting instruction when it admitted testimony related to defendant's prior conviction because defendant's request was untimely and the State solicited the victim's testimony about defendant's criminal history as part of its efforts to rebut the impression created by defense counsel's questioning that defendant lived at the apartment at the time of the burglary. Ruth v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7006, 2011 WL 3840503 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 29 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

12. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child, the trial court erred by failing to give a contemporaneous limiting instruction, but the error was harmless because there was ample evidence of guilt, and the trial court included a limiting instruction in the jury charge. Martin v. State, 176 S.W.3d 887, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8514 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

13. In a trial for child sexual assault, the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 105 by denying defendant's request for an oral limiting instruction as to extraneous offense; the error in not giving the instruction warranted reversal, considering that extraneous-offense evidence was admitted at the very earliest stages of the trial on guilt/innocence, that 35 percent of the record was devoted to the extraneous offense, and that the jury had unfettered discretion to compare the extraneous offense evidence to the victim's accusations of molestation before receiving the trial court's written jury charge. Pedersen v. State, 237 S.W.3d 882, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8383 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

14. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

15. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, although the trial judge erred in giving a limiting instruction informing the jury that, by itself, the test result did not prove more than that defendant ingested alcohol (and became intoxicated) "only at some time before the time of the test" because it was improper and misleading, it did not prohibit the jury from using the blood alcohol test result, along with the rest of the evidence, to conclude that defendant was per se intoxicated at the time he was driving. Kirsch v. State, 306 S.W.3d 738, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 11 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

16. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant was not harmed by the court's limiting instruction regarding blood alcohol because the jury could have considered the blood alcohol content to decide whether defendant's blood alcohol content was above the legal limit. Therefore, the court's jury instruction allowing the jury to convict under the per se definition was not erroneous because there was evidence from which the jury could have found defendant guilty under the per se impairment definition of intoxication. Kirsch v. State, 276 S.W.3d 579, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9069 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Hit & Run Accidents : General Overview

17. In a trial for failing to stop and give information after a motor vehicle accident, defendant did not object to limited testimony about a driving while intoxicated investigation or request a limiting instruction; therefore, those complaints were waived. Dudley v. State, 205 S.W.3d 82, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8564 (Tex. App. Tyler 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Accusatory Instruments : Indictments : General Overview

18. In an aggravated sexual assault case where the victim testified regarding multiple acts of sexual abuse, a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) was not required because the indictment contained "on or about" language; each of the purported extraneous acts could have been prosecuted under the indictment, so they were not extraneous. Pittillo v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1646 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 1 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

19. Defendant did not show that counsel was ineffective in failing request a limiting instruction at the time of defendant's testimony about his criminal history because the jury charge contained a limiting instruction. Mars v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7342 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 9 2014).

20. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a limiting instruction concerning defendant's girlfriend's testimony concerning an altercation between defendant and a former business partner because it was reasonable to conclude that after the trial court sustained the objection, counsel decided that seeking an instruction to disregard the testimony would only bring further attention to it. Agbogwe v. State, 414 S.W.3d 820, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 29 2013).

21. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault of a child, trial counsel did not perform ineffectively, even though no limiting instruction was requested concerning evidence of prior acts, crimes, or wrongs, because the decision might have been strategic. The record was silent regarding the reasons for the failure to request the instruction, and an argument was made that certain activities brought up by the State were normal family interactions. Arcement v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1096, 2009 WL 383398 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 18 2009).

22. Because the record contained no evidence regarding why defense counsel chose not to request a limiting instruction or object to written jury instructions regarding extraneous offense evidence, the court held that counsel's conduct in failing to do so was not so outrageous that no competent attorney would have done so. Hassenplug v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 28 2007).

23. In a theft case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a); absent evidence as to why counsel made the decision, counsel was presumed to have rendered adequate assistance and exercised reasonable professional judgment. Jackson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 36 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 5 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Closing Arguments : Fair Comment & Fair Response

24. During closing arguments in defendant's aggravated assault trial, the prosecutor was permitted to remark during closing argument that defendant buried the gun after he shot the victim; the prosecutor's statement that defendant tampered with evidence was a reasonable deduction; defendant was not harmed by the trial court's failure to give the jury an instruction to disregard under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7033 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 30 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Impeachment

25. Because a witness's testimony was admissible only to rebut defendant's statement of good conduct with minors, a court should have given an instruction to use the testimony only in assessing defendant's credibility, not as proof that he committed the offense or as proof of a plan to have a sexual relationship with the victim. Daggett v. State, 187 S.W.3d 444, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2127 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Presentation

26. Not timely requesting a limiting instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, which the jury was told was admitted for the limited purpose of showing criminal conduct by the accomplice, when the evidence of the conviction was introduced or prior to charging the jury waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 105 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, the right to appeal the instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, and the fact that the accomplice was not a live witness who was speaking under oath at defendant's trial meant that the requirement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14 that a conviction could not be based on an accomplice's testimony unless that testimony was corroborated by evidence other than evidence of an offense's commission did not apply. Evans v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2705 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 15 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Self-Defense

27. In a murder case, the trial court's failure to give a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) regarding evidence of extraneous offenses was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the evidence of self-defense, as limited by Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 9.31(b)(4), 9.32(a) was very weak. Taylor v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2338 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 10, 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

28. In his trial for aggravated sexual assault of his adopted sister, defendant failed to preserve for review his contention that he was entitled to a limiting instruction regarding other acts evidence because he did not specify what limitations should be placed on the testimony and only objected to one question. Washburn v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8351, 2014 WL 3756486 (Tex. App. Dallas July 30 2014).

29. Because defendant failed to request a limiting instruction when the State used his previously-suppressed custodial statement to impeach his testimony regarding his intent in going to the victim's home, the evidence that he told police that he intended to steal from the victim was rendered admissible for all purposes and was properly considered in a review of the legal sufficiency of the evidence. Sanchez v. State, 428 S.W.3d 240, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1054, 2014 WL 346444 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 30 2014).

30. At defendant's trial for burglary of a habitation, the trial court was not required to give an instruction in the jury charge limiting the use of defendant's prior convictions for impeachment purposes only because defendant never requested a limiting instruction at the time the evidence was introduced. Reyes v. State, 422 S.W.3d 18, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13573, 2013 WL 5872738 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 31 2013).

31. Court's failure to give the jury a contemporaneous instruction when admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous sexual acts, as defendant requested, was harmless, because the error did not deprive defendant of a substantial right; failure to give the jury timely limiting instructions did not influence the jury or had only slight effect with respect to the jury's evaluating the victim's credibility. Hunter v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11992, 2013 WL 5425707 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 25 2013).

32. Because defendant convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child failed to request a limiting instruction at the moment the complainant started testifying regarding vaginal penetration, the evidence was admitted for all purposes; his untimely request for a limiting instruction was properly overruled. Edwards v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11918 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 20 2013).

33. Counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a limiting instruction concerning defendant's girlfriend's testimony concerning an altercation between defendant and a former business partner because it was reasonable to conclude that after the trial court sustained the objection, counsel decided that seeking an instruction to disregard the testimony would only bring further attention to it. Agbogwe v. State, 414 S.W.3d 820, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 29 2013).

34. Defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence was admitted; thus, the trial court did not err by failing to include a limiting instruction in the jury charge. Grubbs v. State, 440 S.W.3d 130, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10657 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

35. Trial court was not obligated to issue an instruction limiting the usage of evidence pertaining to a pornographic video that defendant showed to his child sexual assault victim (his teenaged daughter) because the complained-of evidence constituted same-transaction contextual evidence; the evidence was properly received as general evidence. Freeman v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8566 (Tex. App. Waco July 11 2013).

36. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child trial, at which evidence of his conduct with the child when he was younger than 17 was admitted, the trial court erred when it omitted an instruction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 8.07(b); however, defendant did not suffer egregious harm. Limiting instructions pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37 were given. Mendoza v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6914 (Tex. App. Eastland June 6 2013).

37. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to give a jury a limiting instruction where defendant had failed to request a limiting instruction at the time that the evidence at issue was admitted at trial. Iglesias v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 433 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 17 2013).

38. Even though the trial court gave an improper limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) concerning the extraneous offense evidence, the instruction helped defendant because it prohibited the jury from using the evidence to rebut defendant's implication that the charges had been fabricated to form the basis of a civil lawsuit. Hetherington v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 437, 2013 WL 173760 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

39. Assuming with deciding that the trial court erred by refusing defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) regarding evidence of his recent history of writing hot checks, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because defendant admitted that he knew he could not afford to pay the checks he had written. Tausch v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7081, 2012 WL 3601095 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 15 2012).

40. Trial court did not err by refusing to give a limiting instruction with regard to hearsay statements contained in the video of defendant's son's second forensic interview because the video was admitted without limitation and defendant did not timely request a limiting instruction. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

41. Defendant was not entitled to a limiting instruction because he failed to request one at the time of the testimony at issue, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Cantu v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1639, 2012 WL 664939 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 1 2012).

42. Trial court did not err, under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), by allowing the jury to hear evidence of defendant's extraneous offenses during the guilt/innocence stage of the trial because the evidence was not admitted to show that defendant had actually committed the prior offense, but to show that he had lied to the officer about whether he had been previously arrested. The trial court properly instructed the jury to use the evidence solely for the purpose of showing the existence of defendant's untruth about a prior arrest, providing some support for the officer to have a reasonable suspicion about the nature of defendant's activities. Davila v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 2012

WL 376634 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 7 2012).

43. Trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 105 by refusing to give a limiting instruction when it admitted testimony related to defendant's prior conviction because defendant's request was untimely and the State solicited the victim's testimony about defendant's criminal history as part of its efforts to rebut the impression created by defense counsel's questioning that defendant lived at the apartment at the time of the burglary. Ruth v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7006, 2011 WL 3840503 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 29 2011).

44. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of guns and cash during his capital murder trial because, to put the conspiracy offense in context, evidence that defendant and his sons were drug dealers who dealt in large amounts of cash and guns to protect their drugs and case was necessary, and therefore the evidence was same-transaction contextual evidence and background contextual evidence excepted from Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Because the evidence was same-transaction contextual evidence, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to give limiting instructions. Davis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 835, 2011 WL 322877 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 2 2011).

45. Trial court did not err by failing to sua sponte give a limiting instruction to the jury regarding the dog's prior bad acts because defendant did not request such a limiting instruction, and therefore the evidence was admissible for all purposes. Watson v. State, 337 S.W.3d 347, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 592 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

46. Trial court did not err by failing to sua sponte give a limiting instruction to the jury regarding the dog's prior bad acts because defendant did not request such a limiting instruction, and therefore the evidence was admissible for all purposes. Smith v. State, 337 S.W.3d 354, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 594 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

47. During defendant's punishment hearing for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, his daughter, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of unadjudicated extraneous offenses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) as to a 1992 offense because the evidence was admissible with respect to the other two counts; defendant did not request a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Watson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3402, 2010 WL 1814680 (Tex. App. Austin May 5 2010).

48. Defendant juvenile waived his right to complain of a trial court's denial of his request for a limiting instruction where defendant failed to request a limiting instruction at the time the evidence was admitted, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). In re J.R.N., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280, 2009 WL 6312273 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2010).

49. In defendant's driving while intoxicated case, although the trial judge erred in giving a limiting instruction informing the jury that, by itself, the test result did not prove more than that defendant ingested alcohol (and became intoxicated) "only at some time before the time of the test" because it was improper and misleading, it did not prohibit the jury from using the blood alcohol test result, along with the rest of the evidence, to conclude that defendant was per se intoxicated at the time he was driving. Kirsch v. State, 306 S.W.3d 738, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 11 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

50. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the trial court did not err in declining to strike the previously admitted evidence of the knife and a witness's testimony about the knife because the knife was relevant, it was admitted into evidence before the witness testified, and a photograph showed the exact location where the knife was found. Because the evidence was properly admitted, the trial court did not err by refusing defendant's request for a limiting instruction. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9570, 2009 WL 4856420 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 17 2009).

51. In an attempted capital murder case, there was no error in the limiting instruction provided in the jury charge because the trial court was not required to further instruct the jury that it could not consider the impeachment testimony for purposes of determining guilt-innocence because that idea was implicit in the court's instruction that the impeachment testimony was to be used to determine credibility and "for no other reason." Walker v. State, 300 S.W.3d 836, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7763 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

52. In defendant's attempted capital murder case, a court's error in a limiting instruction was harmless because the trial court clarified and corrected the instruction in the jury charge, and also, because the trial court provided the correct instruction to the jury immediately before it began deliberating, it would have been more influential in the jury's deliberations. Walker v. State, 300 S.W.3d 836, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7763 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

53. In a case involving aggravated sexual assault of a child, trial counsel did not perform ineffectively, even though no limiting instruction was requested concerning evidence of prior acts, crimes, or wrongs, because the decision might have been strategic. The record was silent regarding the reasons for the failure to request the instruction, and an argument was made that certain activities brought up by the State were normal family interactions. Arcement v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1096, 2009 WL 383398 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 18 2009).

54. Although the trial court erred by denying a limiting instruction because the witnesses' prior statements did not fall within any hearsay exception and so were admissible for impeachment purposes only, the error was harmless. Absent from the inconsistent statements, the record contained other evidence from which the jury could have inferred that defendant did not act in self-defense, and the trial court's charge instructed the jury that a witness's prior inconsistent statement could only be considered for impeachment purposes to asses the witness's credibility. Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

55. Although the trial court erred by denying defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction regarding the terroristic threat conviction, the error was harmless. The trial court's charge instructed the jury that extraneous offenses could not be considered as evidence of defendant's guilt, but solely to rebut the defensive claim of self-defense, the evidence was presented toward the end of trial, and the conviction was not "more heinous or inflammatory than the charged offense." Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

56. In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant was not harmed by the court's limiting instruction regarding blood alcohol because the jury could have considered the blood alcohol content to decide whether defendant's blood alcohol content was above the legal limit. Therefore, the court's jury instruction allowing the jury to convict under the per se definition was not erroneous because there was evidence from which the jury could have found defendant guilty under the per se impairment definition of intoxication. Kirsch v. State, 276 S.W.3d 579, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9069 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

57. In defendant's trial for the offense of injury to a child, a trial court did not err in not giving a limiting instruction, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). with respect to testimony about defendant's confrontation with the child's mother because the evidence was res gestae as the incident occurred immediately prior to defendant hitting the child. Barbera v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6849 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 28 2008).

58. In a child sexual assault case, the trial court did not err by denying defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction in connection with the admission of a different extraneous offense because, when the same evidence was later introduced through the matching testimony of a witness, defendant did not object or request a limiting instruction; consequently, the issue was moot. Sanders v. State, 255 S.W.3d 754, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS

3413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

59. Trial court did not err in admitting a letter the district attorney issued to defendant before her arrest because: (1) the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as it was admitted to show that defendant had notice that her activities might have been illegal, rather than to prove that the letter's contents were true; (2) defendant failed to request a limiting instruction, and therefore she could not complain on appeal about the letter's admission for all purposes; and (3) defendant's due process rights were not violated, as the State did not expressly represent the letter as a correct statement of the law until its closing argument, after the trial court had instructed the jury as to the applicable law. Pardue v. State, 252 S.W.3d 690, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2421 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

60. In a drug case, the trial court was not required under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14 to instruct the jury sua sponte on the burden of proof when considering evidence of an extraneous offense during the guilt phase; even if a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) would have been appropriate, defendant failed to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105 when the evidence was offered. Delgado v. State, 235 S.W.3d 244, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1235 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

61. During closing arguments in defendant's aggravated assault trial, the prosecutor was permitted to remark during closing argument that defendant buried the gun after he shot the victim; the prosecutor's statement that defendant tampered with evidence was a reasonable deduction; defendant was not harmed by the trial court's failure to give the jury an instruction to disregard under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7033 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 30 2007).

62. Defendant's challenge to a jury instruction that was given regarding the use of that evidence was rejected because defendant did not request a limiting instruction at the time the evidence was first admitted, and therefore it was admitted for all purposes, and the trial court was not required to give a limiting instruction at all. Vargas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4209 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 30 2007).

63. In a criminal trial where defendant was charged with several offenses, the State was not required to elect among the various offenses it sought to prove; in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 105, the trial court's general limiting instruction to the jury on extraneous offenses was sufficient to protect the defendant from an unfair trial. Pittillo v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6534 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

64. Two defendants' sexual assault convictions were inappropriate because the trial court erred by failing to have the State elect, at the close of its evidence, which occurrence it would use to convict as requested by the defense; the requirement of an election was distinct from a limiting instruction, Tex. R. Evid. 105, because the election requirement provided explicit notice to a defendant and prompted unanimous jury verdicts; a limiting instruction alone did not adequately serve all of those purposes. Phillips v. State, 193 S.W.3d 904, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1069 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

65. Where defendant was charged with criminal mischief for causing damage to his neighbor's motorcycle, the trial court admitted evidence that on one prior occasion defendant had knocked down the mailbox with his truck; the trial court's failure to instruct the jury that evidence of extraneous bad acts or offenses could only be considered if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed them was harmless; defendant made no objection at trial and did not request any kind of limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Giddens v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1957 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 15 2006).

66. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child case, defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence of extraneous acts was admitted; thus, the evidence became admissible for all purposes and a limiting instruction was not required. Therefore, the trial court committed no error in failing to instruct the jury that extraneous acts admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2 could only be considered to show defendant's state of mind or the relationship between him and the complainants. Garza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2092 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 15 2006).

67. In an aggravated sexual assault case where the victim testified regarding multiple acts of sexual abuse, a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) was not required because the indictment contained "on or about" language; each of the purported extraneous acts could have been prosecuted under the indictment, so they were not extraneous. Pittillo v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1646 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 1 2006).

68. Because a witness's testimony was admissible only to rebut defendant's statement of good conduct with minors, a court should have given an instruction to use the testimony only in assessing defendant's credibility, not as proof that he committed the offense or as proof of a plan to have a sexual relationship with the victim. Daggett v. State, 187 S.W.3d 444, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2127 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

69. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child, the trial court erred by failing to give a contemporaneous limiting instruction, but the error was harmless because there was ample evidence of guilt, and the trial court included a limiting instruction in the jury charge. Martin v. State, 176 S.W.3d 887, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8514 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

70. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child based on oral sex and breast touching, defendant forfeited error regarding the trial court's failure to give a contemporaneous limiting instruction when it admitted testimony that defendant penetrated the victim's sexual organ with his penis. Defendant objected to the extraneous evidence rather than requesting a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and his request for a limiting instruction after two additional witnesses testified was untimely. Martin v. State, 176 S.W.3d 887, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8514 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

71. In a trial for child sexual assault, a limiting instruction was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 105 as to testimony about extraneous acts because defendant failed to timely request an instruction. The court noted that although the trial court placed a limiting instruction in the jury charge, limiting instructions given for the first time during the jury charge did not constitute an efficacious application of Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) because limiting instructions, when properly requested, were most effective when given simultaneously with the relevant evidence. Miller v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6227 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2005).

72. While the trial court should have instructed the jurors under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) that a chart admitted as demonstrative evidence had a purpose limited to assisting them in understanding the officer's testimony as he testified in court, the error did not effect a substantial right of defendant pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the officer attested, through his oral testimony, to all of the information on the chart. Baker v. State, 177 S.W.3d 113, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 662 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

73. In a theft case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a); absent evidence as to why counsel made the decision, counsel was presumed to have rendered adequate assistance and exercised reasonable professional judgment. Jackson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 36 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 5 2005).

74. Request for a limiting instruction must be made at the admission of the evidence. Revill v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5654 (Tex. App. Tyler June 23 2004).

75. Where evidence is admissible for a limited purpose and the court admits it without limitation, the party opposing the evidence has the burden of requesting a limiting instruction. Revill v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5654 (Tex. App. Tyler June 23 2004).

76. Under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), because defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the police officer testified regarding the extraneous offense, the evidence was admitted for all purposes and did not warrant a limiting instruction. Davis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4748 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 27 2004).

77. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), a request for a limiting instruction must be made as soon as evidence is admitted; accordingly, court did not err in denying a limiting instruction on the victim's police statement during the punishment stage of defendant's trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child where defendant requested the limiting instruction during the punishment phase after the jury had considered the statement without restriction. Zavala v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2986 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 1 2004).

78. In drug and robbery case, although defendant's relevancy objection to evidence of other thefts sufficiently apprised the trial court of the nature of his complaint, where defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and obtain a ruling as to whether the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, nor ask for a limiting instruction, defendant waived at trial any complaint over admission of evidence of extraneous thefts. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

79. In a murder case, the trial court's failure to give a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) regarding evidence of extraneous offenses was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the evidence of self-defense, as limited by Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 9.31(b)(4), 9.32(a) was very weak. Taylor v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2338 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 10, 2004).

80. Not timely requesting a limiting instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, which the jury was told was admitted for the limited purpose of showing criminal conduct by the accomplice, when the evidence of the conviction was introduced or prior to charging the jury waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 105 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, the right to appeal the instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, and the fact that the accomplice was not a live witness who was speaking under oath at defendant's trial meant that the requirement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14 that a conviction could not be based on an accomplice's testimony unless that testimony was corroborated by evidence other than evidence of an offense's commission did not apply. Evans v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2705 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 15 2002).

81. Party opposing evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 105 has the burden of requesting the limiting instruction at the introduction of the evidence. Once evidence is received without a limiting instruction, it becomes part of the general evidence and may be used for all purposes, and a limiting instruction in the jury charge is no longer appropriate. Hammock v. State, 46 S.W.3d 889, 2001 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 39 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001).

82. It is not required to object to evidence prior to requesting a limiting instruction for that evidence. Hammock v. State, 46 S.W.3d 889, 2001 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 39 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Objections

83. In a trial for sexual assault of a child, the trial court was not required to instruct the jury, sua sponte, not to consider evidence of extraneous offenses, in part because defendant failed to request a limiting instruction at the time the extraneous offense evidence was admitted, thereby allowing it to be admitted for all purposes. Allen v. State, 180 S.W.3d 260, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9709 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

84. In a trial for child sexual assault, a limiting instruction was not required under Tex. R. Evid. 105 as to testimony about extraneous acts because defendant failed to timely request an instruction. The court noted that although the trial court placed a limiting instruction in the jury charge, limiting instructions given for the first time during the jury charge did not constitute an efficacious application of Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) because limiting instructions, when properly requested, were most effective when given simultaneously with the relevant evidence. Miller v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6227 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : General Overview

85. Defendant's assertion that a trial court erred in refusing to instruct a jury, at the time evidence was offered, on the burden of proof for unadjudicated offenses and bad acts that were introduced at the punishment phase of the trial failed because Tex. R. Evid. 105 addressed parties and purpose; the rule did not address burdens of proof. Jackson v. State, 992 S.W.2d 469, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 42 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Use of Particular Evidence

86. Although a trial court cannot delay in giving a limiting jury instruction, timely requested, until the end of the trial, the burden of timely requesting a limiting instruction is on the party opposing the general admission of the evidence and there is nothing in the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 105 or the case law that requires the trial court, upon a pre-trial request, to recognize each instance of extraneous offense evidence and deliver a limiting instruction at each instance; thus, the trial court did not err in not giving a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) each time extraneous offense evidence was admitted without a timely request by defendant. Reeves v. State, 99 S.W.3d 657, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 909 (Tex. App. Waco 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Verdicts : Unanimity

87. Two defendants' sexual assault convictions were inappropriate because the trial court erred by failing to have the State elect, at the close of its evidence, which occurrence it would use to convict as requested by the defense; the requirement of an election was distinct from a limiting instruction, Tex. R. Evid. 105, because the election requirement provided explicit notice to a defendant and prompted unanimous jury verdicts; a limiting instruction alone did not adequately serve all of those purposes. Phillips v. State, 193 S.W.3d 904, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1069 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Procedures : Records on Appeal

88. Trial court had no obligation under Tex. R. Evid. 105 to limit the use of evidence in the jury charge because defendant provided no record cites to show a request for a limiting instruction each time the complained-of evidence was admitted or where the trial court denied his requests. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

89. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant forfeited his arguments that his blood test results were improperly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and that he was entitled to an instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Although defendant objected when a blood-draw kit was offered into evidence, he failed to object when the report with the blood-test results was offered. Walker v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1328 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2006).

90. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child based on oral sex and breast touching, defendant forfeited error regarding the trial court's failure to give a contemporaneous limiting instruction when it admitted testimony that defendant penetrated the victim's sexual organ with his penis. Defendant objected to the extraneous evidence rather than requesting a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and his request for a limiting instruction after two additional witnesses testified was untimely. Martin v. State, 176 S.W.3d 887, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8514 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

91. Appeals court would not consider the lack of an instruction on extraneous offense evidence because defendant had not requested an instruction. Adams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8999 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 12 2004).

92. Not timely requesting a limiting instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, which the jury was told was admitted for the limited purpose of showing criminal conduct by the accomplice, when the evidence of the conviction was introduced or prior to charging the jury waived, under Tex. R. Evid. 105 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, the right to appeal the instruction as to the evidence of the accomplice's conviction, and the fact that the accomplice was not a live witness who was speaking under oath at defendant's trial meant that the requirement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14 that a conviction could not be based on an accomplice's testimony unless that testimony was corroborated by evidence other than evidence of an offense's commission did not apply. Evans v. State, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2705 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 15 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Constitutional Issues

93. Where defendant was convicted for DWI based in part on officer's testimony that he believed defendant was intoxicated because he slurred his speech, he wanted to provide a voice exemplar for the limited purpose of showing the jury that he always slurred his speech. Because the trial court sustained the State's objection on the ground that defendant could easily manipulate his voice to sound slurred and defendant did not claim constitutional error, the issue was not preserved for review. Tollett v. State, 422 S.W.3d 886, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1216, 2014 WL 462275 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 4 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

94. Trial court did not err by refusing to give a limiting instruction with regard to hearsay statements contained in the video of defendant's son's second forensic interview because the video was admitted without limitation and defendant did not timely request a limiting instruction. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

95. Defendant's objection to the whole community-supervision document did not preserve the error complained of on appeal that admission of the document violated his confrontation rights because his objection was to testimony from any portion of the community-supervision records, and by his own argument, portions of the records were admissible. Blackman v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 115, 2014 WL 50804 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 7 2014).

96. Reviewing court did not address defendant's arguments that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to introduce an out-of-court statement of its own witness in the guise of impeachment and that the error was compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and did not request a limiting instruction, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Jury Instructions

97. Defendant juvenile waived his right to complain of a trial court's denial of his request for a limiting instruction where defendant failed to request a limiting instruction at the time the evidence was admitted, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). In re J.R.N., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2280, 2009 WL 6312273 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 1 2010).

98. Drug defendant had no ground for complaint on appeal based on the admission of extraneous offense evidence pertaining to other controlled substances and illegal narcotics because defendant failed to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7773 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 27 2007).

99. Because defendant did not request a limiting instruction concerning a deputy's testimony about her co-defendant's confronting the deputy when he seized a vehicle, she forfeited the alleged error. Chase v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2007).

100. Reviewing court did not address defendant's arguments that it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 403 to allow the State to introduce an out-of-court statement of its own witness in the guise of impeachment and that the error was compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Defendant did not object to the admission on Rule 403 grounds, as required by Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and did not request a limiting instruction, as required by Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Galvan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3197 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 20 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

101. By failing to request a limiting instruction at the time evidence was offered and by failing to object to the court's failure to give a limiting instruction, defendant waived this complaint for appellate purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 105 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Hernandez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 851, 2010 WL 391850 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 5 2010).

102. In a driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, defendant was unable to object to testimony regarding the abilities of other individuals arrested for DWI on the basis of the Sixth Amendment, Tex. Const. art. I, § 10, Tex. R. Evid. 801, and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.25 because the issues were not raised to the trial court; moreover, his preserved complaints relating to comparative evidence and relevance were waived because the evidence came in without objection during other parts of the trial. Taylor v. State, 264 S.W.3d 914, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

103. In a trial for child sexual assault, defendant failed to preserve an argument under Tex. R. Evid. 105 that the trial court erred by failing to give the jury a limiting instruction regarding extraneous offenses at the time the evidence was admitted into evidence; defendant did not specify what limiting instruction was sought, and, when the court stated that the limiting instruction would be included in the charge rather than given contemporaneously, defendant did not object. Wells v. State, 241 S.W.3d 172, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8413 (Tex. App. Eastland 2007).

104. In a trial for failing to stop and give information after a motor vehicle accident, defendant did not object to limited testimony about a driving while intoxicated investigation or request a limiting instruction; therefore, those complaints were waived. Dudley v. State, 205 S.W.3d 82, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8564 (Tex. App. Tyler 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

105. In drug and robbery case, although defendant's relevancy objection to evidence of other thefts sufficiently apprised the trial court of the nature of his complaint, where defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and obtain a ruling as to whether the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, nor ask for a limiting instruction, defendant waived at trial any complaint over admission of evidence of extraneous thefts. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

106. Where defendant was charged with criminal mischief for causing damage to his neighbor's motorcycle, the trial court admitted evidence that on one prior occasion defendant had knocked down the mailbox with his truck; the trial court's failure to instruct the jury that evidence of extraneous bad acts or offenses could only be considered if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed them was harmless; defendant made no objection at trial and did not request any kind of limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Giddens v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1957 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 15 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Jury Instructions

107. In defendant's attempted capital murder case, a court's error in a limiting instruction was harmless because the trial court clarified and corrected the instruction in the jury charge, and also, because the trial court provided the correct instruction to the jury immediately before it began deliberating, it would have been more influential in the jury's deliberations. Walker v. State, 300 S.W.3d 836, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7763 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

108. Although the trial court erred by denying a limiting instruction because the witnesses' prior statements did not fall within any hearsay exception and so were admissible for impeachment purposes only, the error was harmless. Absent from the inconsistent statements, the record contained other evidence from which the jury could have inferred that defendant did not act in self-defense, and the trial court's charge instructed the jury that a witness's prior inconsistent statement could only be considered for impeachment purposes to asses the witness's credibility. Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

109. Although the trial court erred by denying defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction regarding the terroristic threat conviction, the error was harmless. The trial court's charge instructed the jury that extraneous offenses could not be considered as evidence of defendant's guilt, but solely to rebut the defensive claim of self-defense, the evidence was presented toward the end of trial, and the conviction was not "more heinous or inflammatory than the charged offense." Arnold v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9768 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 31 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

110. In an insurance fraud case, the trial court did not err in admitting the insurance claim file as it was not admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, as defendant argued, and its contents about the detective's investigation were not inadmissible on hearsay grounds. Wycough v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4608 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

111. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

112. In a breach of contract and fraudulent inducement case, a trial court properly refused to admit an exhibit because it was irrelevant to either claim; moreover, it did not fit within the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Further, no attempt was made to segregate the admissible from the inadmissible. Case Corp. v. Hi-Class Bus. Sys. of Am., Inc., 184 S.W.3d 760, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10549 (Tex. App. Dallas 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Absence of Records

113. In revocation of community supervision proceedings, while defendant conceded that his probation file was admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), defendant failed to object on the basis that the State never established the necessary predicate for admitting the negative evidence in the business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(7). The trial court, therefore, could properly admit the entire proffer under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Ferris v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1232, 2011 WL 664016 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : Adopted Statements

114. Portion of the automobile manufacturer's spreadsheet reflecting the 67 code 56 claims concerning airbags was admissible as an admission by a party opponent under Tex. R. Evid. 801 because the spreadsheet was created by the manufacturer and produced in discovery, and a witness testified that the 67 open circuits reflected on the spreadsheet were all claims submitted to the manufacturer and paid because technicians confirmed the claims all involved defects. Because the manufacturer did not request a limiting instruction as to the statements from customers listed on the spreadsheet or the remainder of the warranty claims, the inclusion of the items was not ground for complaint on appeal. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Truth of Matter Asserted

115. Trial court did not err in admitting a letter the district attorney issued to defendant before her arrest because: (1) the letter was not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as it was admitted to show that defendant had notice that her activities might have been illegal, rather than to prove that the letter's contents were true; (2) defendant failed to request a limiting instruction, and therefore she could not complain on appeal about the letter's admission for all purposes; and (3) defendant's due process rights were not violated, as the State did not expressly represent the letter as a correct statement of the law until its closing argument, after the trial court had instructed the jury as to the applicable law. Pardue v. State, 252 S.W.3d 690, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2421 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

Evidence : Privileges : Self-Incrimination Privilege : Scope

116. Under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) and 513(d), it was error to deny defendant a limiting instruction that the jury draw no inference against defendant from a co-defendant's invocation of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Hudnall v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5877 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 31, 2008).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : General Overview

117. In revocation of community supervision proceedings, while defendant conceded that his probation file was admissible as a business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(6), defendant failed to object on the basis that the State never established the necessary predicate for admitting the negative evidence in the business record under Tex. R. Evid. 803(7). The trial court, therefore, could properly admit the entire proffer under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Ferris v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1232, 2011 WL 664016 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 17 2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

118. In a murder case, the prosecutor's affidavit regarding trial strategy was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401and Tex. R. Evid. 602 at a new trial hearing because it addressed the issue of effective assistance and included some statements made from personal knowledge; defendant did not seek to limit the scope of the affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Shanklin v. State, 190 S.W.3d 154, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

119. Request for a limiting instruction must be made at the admission of the evidence. Revill v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5654 (Tex. App. Tyler June 23 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

120. Because defendant did not request a limiting instruction when a sexual assault victim testified about alleged other wrongs or acts, Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) never became law applicable to the case, the evidence was admissible for all purposes, and the trial court had no duty to include a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Irielle v. State, 441 S.W.3d 868, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8771 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 12 2014).

121. Trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) in failing to include a limiting instruction in a jury charge on an extraneous offense because defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the extraneous offense evidence was admitted. Ivy v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7501 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 10 2014).

122. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact based on conduct occurring over a two-year period, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence about the details of defendant's ongoing sexual misconduct with the victim. Because it was same-transaction contextual evidence, the trial court was not obligated to issue a contemporaneous-limiting instruction. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

123. Where defendant was convicted for DWI based in part on officer's testimony that he believed defendant was intoxicated because he slurred his speech, he wanted to provide a voice exemplar for the limited purpose of showing the jury that he always slurred his speech. Because the trial court sustained the State's objection on the ground that defendant could easily manipulate his voice to sound slurred and defendant did not claim constitutional error, the issue was not preserved for review. Tollett v. State, 422 S.W.3d 886, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1216, 2014 WL 462275 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 4 2014).

124. Court's failure to give the jury a contemporaneous instruction when admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous sexual acts, as defendant requested, was harmless, because the error did not deprive defendant of a substantial right; failure to give the jury timely limiting instructions did not influence the jury or had only slight effect with respect to the jury's evaluating the victim's credibility. Hunter v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11992, 2013 WL 5425707 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 25 2013).

125. Because defendant convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child failed to request a limiting instruction at the moment the complainant started testifying regarding vaginal penetration, the evidence was admitted for all purposes; his untimely request for a limiting instruction was properly overruled. Edwards v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11918 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 20 2013).

126. Defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence was admitted; thus, the trial court did not err by failing to include a limiting instruction in the jury charge. Grubbs v. State, 440 S.W.3d 130, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10657 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

127. Defendant claimed the trial court erred in admitting an exhibit into evidence and not sua sponte giving the jury a limiting instruction, but he did not request one and the court found the complaint waived. Moore v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7436 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 19 2013).

128. Any error in admitting a witness's testimony that defendant was locked up was harmless because the same evidence came before the jury at different points during his testimony without an objection, plus the trial court issued a limiting instruction to disregard such statements. Mendoza v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7157 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 12 2013).

129. Court noted that absent an election, the trial court was required to render a judgment framed to give a party all the relief to which he might be entitled, for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 301, but under the one-satisfaction rule, one was only entitled to one recovery for any damages; a borrower claimed he was entitled to recover the sum of all damages found for each injury under the various theories submitted because the bank and servicer did not plead the one-satisfaction rule as an affirmative defense, did not object to the submission of more than one measure of damages, and did not ask for a limiting instruction to prevent a double recovery, but these actions were not required. Nat'l City Bank of Ind. v. Ortiz, 401 S.W.3d 867, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6117 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 16 2013).

130. To prevail on his ineffective assistance claims, the father had to show that counsel's performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness based on the failure to make hearsay objections and seek limiting instructions, and then the father had to show that but for these errors, the results of the proceedings would have been different; as the father failed to meet the second prong, given that his conclusory allegation did not meet the prejudice requirement, the court did not need to address the first prong, and the court overruled this issue. In re R.L.A., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745, 2013 WL 1092210 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2013).

131. Failure to include a limiting instruction as to extraneous offense evidence admitted during the punishment phase did not cause appellant egregious harm, given that (1) the State did not mention the extraneous offense during voir dire or opening statements, (2) the State put on strong evidence of appellant's guilt of indecency, (3) the jury did not punish appellant's inappropriate touching of one victim more harshly based on the extraneous offense, and (4) the sentence fell within the lower half of the available range. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452, 2013 WL 593484 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2013).

132. Appellant claimed counsel failed to request a certain limiting instruction, but the record was silent as to counsel's inaction, and thus the court could not speculate in order to find counsel's performance ineffective; even if the court assumed the failure to request the instruction fell below an objective standard of reasonableness, appellant could still not prevail because he did not show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if counsel had succeeded in obtaining the instruction. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452, 2013 WL 593484 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2013).

133. Appellant did not request a limiting instruction regarding extraneous offenses offered during the punishment phase, but a trial court had a duty to provide such even without objection. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1452, 2013 WL 593484 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2013).

134. During closing argument, appellant did not object or ask for a limiting instruction, and her motion for a new trial was based just on the denial of a mistrial, which was based on an alleged violation of a motion in limine; thus, appellant failed to preserve her incurable jury argument issue for review. Nguyen v. Myers, 442 S.W.3d 434, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2085, 2013 WL 1277838 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 14 2013).

135. Utterance could have been seen as indicative of the mother's state of mind in response to her frustration that arose from being told that police were interested in talking to appellant, her son; construing the declaration this way would have fallen within the zone of reasonable disagreement, and no limiting instruction was sought by appellant, such that the jury was free to use the evidence as it cared to. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 695 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 24 2013).

136. Appellant's testimony concerning a prior incident was admissible for more than one reason, and because the testimony touched on several other relevant issues at trial, a limiting instruction to determining appellant's credibility was not required. Moten v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9541, 2012 WL 5696200 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2012).

137. In undermining appellant's theory of self-defense, the evidence complained-of was also admissible to prove appellant's state of mind at the time of the shooting, and the trial court did not err in refusing to give a limiting instruction regarding appellant's testimony about a prior incident, in connection with his conviction of aggravated assault on a peace officer. Moten v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9541, 2012 WL 5696200 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2012).

138. Absent a request that the trial court admit evidence of a subsequent remedial measure with a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(b) that the jury could consider it only for the products liability claims, the trial court did not err in not admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 407(a). Moreover, because the claimants did not argue at trial that the evidence was admissible to show control, they failed to preserve this argument for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Tidwell v. Terex Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7724 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 30 2012).

139. Appellant failed to meet his burden of proof as to ineffective assistance of counsel, given that (1) there was not testimony from counsel concerning his strategy, (2) had a limiting instruction been given, it would have kept the jury from considering previous offenses for non-credibility issues, but the lack of a statement from counsel lessened the effectiveness of the State's theory in this regard, (3) while an error affecting a single aspect of a trial might undermine the entire result, it was not clear that was what happened here, (4) counsel filed relevant motions and examined witnesses, and (5) appellant did not show that counsel's failure to permit or obtain a limiting instruction rendered his representation ineffective. Simmons v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7178, 2012 WL 3629864 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 22 2012).

140. Even if appellant met the first prong of the ineffective assistance test, appellant did not show the absence of a limiting instruction affected the trial's outcome, given that (1) the key to the trial was witness credibility, (2) the jury still could have considered appellant's prior offenses to impeach his credibility, even had a limiting instruction been given, (3) the absence of the instruction permitted the jury to consider those offenses for any purpose, but the court did not see how that changed the outcome in any harmful way, and (4) the prior offenses did not show character conformity, and thus the absence of the limiting instruction did not have a discernible effect on the trial's outcome. Simmons v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7178, 2012 WL 3629864 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 22 2012).

141. Although appellant filed a motion for a new trial, he did not allege ineffective assistance and there was no hearing, and thus the record did not show why counsel did not request a limiting instruction or object to a purportedly erroneous instruction given, and all explanations were conjecture only; the court noted that counsel's question was not designed to elicit a response that appellant had been incarcerated, the court could not speculate as to counsel's strategy, appellant was unable to rebut the presumption of reasonable assistance, and counsel's actions, without explanation, did not compel a finding that counsel's performance was deficient, nor could the court say that no strategy could have justified the decisions or that counsel's conduct was so outrageous that no attorney would have done so. Parker v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7179, 2012 WL 3630163 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 22 2012).

142. Potential of the extraneous offense evidence to impress the jury in an irrational but indelible way was not high, given that the evidence did not involve a crime of violence and the trial court gave a limiting instruction, and this factor weighed in favor of admitting the evidence. Garcia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6924, 2012 WL 3574715 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 21 2012).

143. Mother did not preserve for appellate review under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) her complaint about evidence of her predicate violations being used in a termination of parental rights proceeding; when evidence of her predicate violations was offered during trial, she made no request for the jury to be instructed that the evidence be admitted for the limited purpose of the predicate violations. In the Interest of A.M., 385 S.W.3d 74, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 9 2012).

144. Appellant's claim that the admission of a hearsay document was error had to be looked at within the confines of the limiting instruction given that precluded use of the affidavit to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and appellant did not object to the limiting instruction; the contents of the affidavit were not inadmissible on hearsay grounds and appellant's claim could not be sustained. Richard v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5872, 2012 WL 2945970 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 20 2012).

145. Counselor's inability to cite studies did not make her testimony unreliable, given the nature of her expertise field; the trial court properly limited the testimony to comport with the counsel's expertise, and the court found no abuse of discretion in admitting her testimony in order to help the jury understand why the victim delayed in calling the police in this aggravated assault case involving appellant, the victim's fiance. Brewer v. State, 370 S.W.3d 471, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4519, 2012 WL 2290871 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 7 2012).

146. State did not meet the predicate for admissibility as a recorded recollection because the victim did not vouch for the statement's accuracy and did not remember much of what was in the statement, plus parts were not in her handwriting, and thus a limiting instruction, advising the jury to consider the statement for testing the victim's credibility only for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), should have been granted. Lund v. State, 366 S.W.3d 848, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3406, 2012 WL 1503014 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 1 2012).

147. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

148. Court has located no authority to support an argument that the trial court had a duty to give the jury a limiting instruction in the absence of a request for the instruction the first time the evidence was admitted at trial. Beckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2293, 2012 WL 955358 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2012).

149. Trial court stated that the denial of a limiting instruction did not mean the jury could consider certain evidence as evidence of appellant's guilt, and the instruction nullified the tendency of the jury to infer appellant's pre-trial detention was evidence of guilt; error, if any, was rendered harmless by the instruction given. Beckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2293, 2012 WL 955358 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2012).

150. Although the trial court erred by failing to give a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105 with regard to extraneous acts contained in a prosecution's exhibit when the exhibit was first admitted into evidence, this error had no more than a slight effect on the jury's verdict and, thus, was harmless. Mccormick v. State, 2012 Tex. App.

LEXIS 2026, 2012 WL 851696 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 14 2012).

151. Where there was no limiting instruction and no request for a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) during defendant's trial for burglary and theft, a detective's testimony was admitted for all purposes and could be considered in a sufficiency review. Harralson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1583, 2012 WL 682345 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 1 2012).

152. Having failed to request a limiting instruction, parties could not argue on appeal about any harm allegedly caused by the introduction of evidence in this regard; also, the court could not say that the evidence influenced the jury to the extent that it probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Carlton Energy Group, LLC v. Phillips, 369 S.W.3d 433, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1299, 2012 WL 555980 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 14 2012).

153. Trial court's failure to instruct the jury during the witness's testimony did not affect appellant's substantial rights under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect; the trial court gave a limiting instruction in the charge of each offense, and nothing showed that the jury failed to comply with the limiting instruction. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

154. State's theory was that appellant killed his ex-wife in a rage when confronted about sexual conduct with her daughter, and appellant admitted being accused of molestation before he stabbed the ex-wife; the evidence concerning appellant's sexually-oriented emails and alleged fantasizing about his stepdaughter was probative of motive and intent under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), plus the trial court gave limiting instructions, and the court found no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part. Zavala v. State, 401 S.W.3d 171, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8671, 2011 WL 5156843 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 1 2011).

155. Supervisor's statements telling an employee the purpose of a per diem payment were within his apparent authority and were not hearsay because they addressed terms of employment; thus, the absence of a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) could not be harmful error. Tex. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Guar. Ass'n v. Brooks, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7269, 2011 WL 3890405 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2011).

156. Because neither side requested an instruction limiting the jury's consideration of certain evidence, it was admitted for all purposes. Penaloza v. State, 349 S.W.3d 709, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6463 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 16 2011).

157. Given that (1) appellant requested a limiting instruction and the trial court said it had to hear the evidence first and would be receptive to such an instruction, (2) the State elicited testimony concerning extraneous offenses, and (3) appellant did not renew his request or later ask for another one, the court could not find that the trial court's comment that it would "certainly be receptive" to a limiting instruction constituted an adverse ruling, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and the issue was not preserved for review. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4811, 2011 WL 2507002 (Tex. App. Austin June 24 2011).

158. Limiting instruction was given in the charge; without a specific request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction at the time the evidence was admitted and the denial of such a request, there was nothing for the trial court to review. Reyes v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4811, 2011 WL 2507002 (Tex. App. Austin June 24 2011).

159. Even assuming counsel was deficient for failing to object to testimony or request a limiting instruction, the record did not support the conclusion that appellant met the second prong of the test for ineffective assistance.

Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4663, 2011 WL 2463049 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 16 2011).

160. Under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), it appeared that appellant waived any objection to testimony, given that he failed to object to the evidence when it was offered, and there was no request for any instruction in the charge on punishment; even if the court assumed appellant could raise some appellate objection, appellant did not request a limiting instruction and the failure of the trial court to give one was not error. Moore v. State, 339 S.W.3d 365, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2602 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 6 2011).

161. Assuming the court was able to consider the issue, appellant failed to demonstrate that the failure to give the instruction limiting the jury's use of gang membership was egregious error, given that (1) appellant received a mid-range sentence, and (2) the State concentrated its argument on the fact that this was appellant's third conviction. Moore v. State, 339 S.W.3d 365, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2602 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 6 2011).

162. In an action for breach of a gas purchase agreement, evidence of early pays and appellant's relationship with a third party was properly admitted to show they had oral agreements and the third party's authority was not encompassed by the sole written contract between them; this evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for purposes of establishing apparent agency. Because appellant did not request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the evidence was admissible for any purpose. Reliant Energy Servs. v. Cotton Valley Compression, Llc, 336 S.W.3d 764, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 173 Oil & Gas Rep. 732 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

163. Trial court did not err in refusing the limiting instruction regarding testimony about drugs; examining the home environment and evidence of illegal drug-use and related criminal activity was necessary in determining endangerment. In the Interest of S.R., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9681, 2010 WL 4983484 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2010).

164. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that an accomplice's testimony was not offered for character conformity purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), but instead was offered to rebut appellant's defensive theory in his trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 32.51(b) that the identifying information was in his car by mistake and that he had no knowledge of the information; the trial court's limiting instruction showed that the trial court admitted the testimony for noncharacter conformity purposes and the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony as rebuttal evidence. Richardson v. State, 328 S.W.3d 61, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6564 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 12 2010).

165. Second and third factors of a Tex. R. Evid. 403 analysis weighed in favor of the trial court's decision to admit extraneous offense evidence; the trial court gave a limiting instruction and the State did not spend an unduly lengthy amount of time to develop the evidence. Fletcher v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5084, 2010 WL 2650008 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 6 2010).

166. Witness's testimony was not admitted for all purposes, because the court's statement adequately informed the jury that the testimony should be considered for impeachment only and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Saavedra v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3878 (Tex. App. Dallas May 24 2010).

167. Trial court's decision to admit a videotape under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) fell within the zone of reasonable disagreement, given that (1) the charge contained a limiting instruction of how the evidence of another wrong was to be considered, and (2) the videotape, which showed defendant struggling with police, was probative of the issue of whether defendant intentionally kicked an officer or did so by accident; the actions depicted on the videotape did not warrant the conclusion that the probative value was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the videotape into evidence on substantive grounds. Salazar v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3619, 2010 WL 1930106 (Tex. App. Austin May 13 2010).

168. During defendant's punishment hearing for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, his daughter, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of unadjudicated extraneous offenses under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) as to a 1992 offense because the evidence was admissible with respect to the other two counts; defendant did not request a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Watson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3402, 2010 WL 1814680 (Tex. App. Austin May 5 2010).

169. Court could assume without deciding that defendant was correct that a videotape was not admissible as a prior consistent statement or prior inconsistent statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 801(e)(1)(B), even though he failed to raise the latter objection at trial and raised the former with insufficient specificity because the videotape was still admissible (1) to rebut the suggestion that the police fed the witness his answers to their questions, and (2) to show that the witness was not parroting what the police told him; defendant did not object or seek a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), such that the jury was free to consider the tape's contents for any purposes, plus the videotape was admissible to clarify what the witness actually said, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107. Franks v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3224, 2010 WL 1730032 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2010).

170. Cases do not prohibit the trial court from including a limiting instruction in the charge even when the evidence is admissible for all purposes and even though the defendant does not request such an instruction. Gilmore v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1944 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2010).

171. Because defendant did not request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) on certain evidence regarding pictures of a house, the jury could consider the pictures of the house for all purposes, and thus the trial court's oral and written limiting instructions were not necessary; although the trial court was not required to give a limiting instruction, the trial court did not commit egregious error by instructing the jury that they could consider the evidence only for background contextual purposes. Gilmore v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1944 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2010).

172. Defendant did not object to certain extraneous evidence by the victim and related evidence was admitted without objection as to other witnesses, plus the jury was given a limiting instruction, such that any error that might have occurred was harmless. Dempsey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9537, 2009 WL 4840158 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 17 2009).

173. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), defendant waived his complaint about the admission of a prior fight because he failed to continuously object to the evidence and he allowed the same evidence to come in through another witness without objection, which cured the error, plus the trial court instructed the jury about the limited purpose of the evidence, such that any error that might have occurred was harmless. Dempsey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9537, 2009 WL 4840158 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 17 2009).

174. Defendant's argument on appeal did not comport with his objection at trial, such that the claimed error based on the trial court's failure to issue a limiting instruction was waived under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, Tex. R. Evid. 103(a); in any event, the complaint provided no basis for reversal because statements admitted as present sense impressions or excited utterances under Tex. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) were admissible for all purposes and were not subject to a limiting instruction. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300, 2009 WL 4575146 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 8 2009).

175. Defendant objected to certain testimony and asked for an instruction telling the jury to disregard the testimony, but defendant did not seek a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), and in the absence of a request, defendant could not complain on appeal that such an instruction was not given. Perez v. State, 2009 Tex.

App. LEXIS 8963 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 20 2009).

176. State did not request a limiting instruction after its objection to certain testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b) and the trial court sustained no objection to another's testimony about the victim's truthfulness, such that defendant failed to present any error for the court's review as to certain witnesses. Love v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8952, 2009 WL 3930900 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 19 2009).

177. In an attempted capital murder case, there was no error in the limiting instruction provided in the jury charge because the trial court was not required to further instruct the jury that it could not consider the impeachment testimony for purposes of determining guilt-innocence because that idea was implicit in the court's instruction that the impeachment testimony was to be used to determine credibility and "for no other reason." Walker v. State, 300 S.W.3d 836, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7763 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

178. Trial court ruled that testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and when the trial court gave a limiting instruction, defendant did not object; defendant's contention that the trial court failed to correctly instruct the jury had not been preserved. Villarreal v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7305, 2009 WL 2965281 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 17 2009).

179. Extraneous offense was highly probative on the issue of identity because of its similarity to the charged offense, the evidence was only introduced after defendant asserted an alibi, thus making the evidence probative to disprove that defense, and all the evidence bearing on identity was disputed, thus elevating the State's need for extraneous offense testimony; given that (1) the testimony was not so graphic or appalling that it would impress the jury in some irrational, but indelible way, (2) the trial court gave a limiting instruction, (3) the extraneous offense testimony was presented after all the evidence of the charged crime was presented and it did not consume an inordinate amount of time, (4) there was nothing about the witness's testimony that would cause jurors to improperly rely on her statements, and (5) her testimony was not repetitive of other evidence already admitted, the danger of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of the extraneous offense evidence and the trial court did not err in admitting it. Teal v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7247, 2009 WL 2933723 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 15 2009).

180. While the offenses were no doubt prejudicial, they were not unfairly so in proportion to their probative value; moreover, the jury received an instruction limiting their consideration of the offenses to the issue of fabrication, and this factor favored admissibility under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Galvez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6300, 2009 WL 2476600 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 12 2009).

181. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), a witness's testimony was admissible as proper rebuttal evidence to show that defendant had the requisite intent to rob or violate or abuse the victim sexually, which was necessary to establish the offense of aggravated kidnapping; given that the witness's testimony showed that defendant was involved in a similar crime, it was at least subject to reasonable disagreement that the witness's testimony made defendant's defensive theory of lack of intent more or less probable, plus under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the trial court admitted the evidence for its noncharacter conformity purpose of determining defendant's intent, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence. Dale v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5784, 2009 WL 2264230 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 29 2009).

182. Under the Tex. R. Evid. 403 balancing test, the probative value of a witness's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, given that (1) the testimony was probative to rebut defendant's defensive theory of a lack of intent, which was an issue in the aggravated kidnapping case, (2) the evidence was presented in a short and concise manner, (3) the testimony was preceded by a limiting instruction, plus the jury charge clarified that the evidence was offered only for its noncharacter conformity purpose of determining defendant's intent, and (4) while the witness's testimony injured defendant's case, it did not adversely affect defendant beyond its purpose of tending to prove his intent to commit the offense, and the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. Dale v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5784, 2009 WL 2264230 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 29 2009).

183. Trial court could have found that evidence of defendant's drug dealing, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), had some logical relevance aside from character conformity, plus the evidence was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, given the other evidence admitted at trial, including evidence of defendant's gang membership; assuming it was error to admit the extraneous offense evidence, defendant's substantial rights were not affected under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that the jury was instructed to use the evidence for the limited purpose of determining a relationship between defendant and another and the drug dealing was not mentioned by the State in closing arguments and thus was not emphasized. Mata v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5410, 2009 WL 2045250 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 15 2009).

184. Regarding an apparent charge error complaint, defendant, contrary to Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(i), cited to no authority in support of his statement that the trial court's failure to include a limiting instruction in the jury charge constituted charge error and the court did not consider it as a separate complaint among those raised under his second point but instead as part of the harm discussion; the court noted that where no limiting instruction was requested when evidence was first admitted, it was admitted for all purposes, and no subsequent limitation on the evidence by means of a jury charge instruction was appropriate. John v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4853, 2009 WL 1815650 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

185. Any error in admitting extraneous offense evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that (1) the State presented ample evidence of defendant's guilt of murder, (2) the disputed evidence did not serve to improperly bolster other evidence against defendant, but was proffered to help the factfinder in understanding the circumstances under which defendant obtained a murder weapon, (3) the State spent little time eliciting the disputed testimony and made no reference to it in closing argument, and (4) the trial court gave a limiting instruction regarding extraneous offense testimony, which instruction the jury was presumed to have followed, and this presumption was not rebutted by defendant. Lewis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4889, 2009 WL 1813132 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 25 2009).

186. Although defendant complained about the State's reference to defendant's prior conviction and argued that the State was attempting to show the jury that defense counsel did not know the law, it appeared that the State was referring to the law applicable to the use of evidence admitted in the absence of a limiting instruction; when the State asked defendant about the prior conviction, counsel did not request a limiting instruction, nor did the jury charge contain any such instruction, and thus the conviction was before the jury for all purposes and the State's reference to the conviction was not improper argument, plus the State's remarks appeared to have been in response to defense counsel's argument. Vega v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4102, 2009 WL 1617670 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 10 2009).

187. Although defendant referred to much of the State's evidence as extraneous or under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), it was incumbent upon defendant to argue that objections to this evidence properly would have been sustained or a limiting instruction properly given; he made no attempt to show that any of the purported Rule 404(b) evidence was inadmissible or that a limiting instruction was appropriate, and because he failed to discuss the facts in light of the relevant authority, he inadequately briefed this complaint; nevertheless, the record established much of the purported extraneous offense evidence was admissible as same transaction contextual evidence or was admitted without objection as part of trial counsel's strategy that was not so outrageous that no attorney would have engaged in it and defendant would not have been entitled to a limiting instruction. The court thus rejected defendant's ineffective assistance claim in this regard. Ruiz v. State, 293 S.W.3d 685, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3632 (Tex. App.

San Antonio May 27 2009).

188. Any error in admitting extraneous offense evidence did not have a substantial effect on the verdict and did not affect defendant's substantial rights, such that any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that (1) the State presented ample evidence of defendant's guilt of aggravated robbery, (2) the only evidence directly supporting one defense theory was a single affirmative response by defendant's former girlfriend, who admitted to having prior felony convictions, and the only evidence of defendant's alibi defense was defendant's father's testimony, (3) although the State referenced the extraneous offense in its closing argument, the State did so to rebut defendant's fabrication and alibi defenses, plus the State told the jury to consider the extraneous offense evidence for rebuttal only, and (4) the trial court also provided a limiting instruction and defendant did not rebut the presumption that the jury followed the instructions given. Burton v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2781, 2009 WL 1086934 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 23 2009).

189. Trial court impliedly sustained defendant's vague hearsay objection by ordering the State to rephrase the question and defendant's limiting instruction request went only to the issue of nonresponsiveness; the record did not support the view that the trial court was given an opportunity to address the issue being raised on appeal, that the trial court failed to instruct the jury to disregard. Bryant v. State, 282 S.W.3d 156, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1737 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 13 2009).

190. Defendant did not meet the first prong of the test for ineffective assistance of counsel because the record was undeveloped, defendant failed to rebut the presumption that trial counsel's decisions were reasonable, and the court was not required to speculate on counsel's actions when confronted with a silent record; although the record contained no explanation as to why defense counsel (1) allowed the introduction of allegations of extraneous offenses and another statement, and (2) did not object to certain testimony, reasonable trial strategy might have justified counsel's conduct, as counsel might not have pursued a limiting instruction on the extraneous offenses because of concern that such would lend more credibility to the offenses. Rivas v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 983, 2009 WL 335274 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

191. Admission of the extraneous offenses carried a risk of irrationally impressing the jury of defendant's character conformity, which the law seeks to avoid, but the trial court gave a limiting instruction and the testimony in question did not take up a significant portion of the trial for aggravated sexual assault, and the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence. Jabari v. State, 273 S.W.3d 745, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8814 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

192. In defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.11(a)(1), extraneous evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, given that (1) the extraneous evidence did tend to show a scheme or plan and a motive on the part of defendant to throw bodily fluids on people in order to stay in administrative segregation, (2) the State demonstrated a need to use this evidence, (3) the trial court limited the number of incidents that the State could use and testimony was admitted accordingly, and (4) the trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction. Cantu v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8560 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 13 2008).

193. Neither of two witnesses testified that a jail identification card belonged to defendant, defendant did not seek a limiting instruction or an instruction to disregard, and even if there had been an error in one witness's statement, an instruction to disregard could have been requested to cure any possible error and defendant's failure to request a cure short of a mistrial waived any error; defendant also did not object when the other witness testified about the card, and thus defendant waived any error related to the testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Garza v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7004 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 19, 2008).

194. In an ex-husband's appeal of a divorce judgment, the appellate court excluded the husband's submission notebook from its review of the evidence and excluded the husband's arguments based on the notebook from its analysis because the trial court had admitted the notebook only as a summary of a witness's testimony, and the husband had not testified at trial. To the extent that any specific portion of the notebook was admitted into evidence without limitation elsewhere during the trial, the court concluded that it would consider such portion pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Hancock v. Hancock, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5737 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 31 2008).

195. In a child sexual assault case, the trial court did not err by denying defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction in connection with the admission of a different extraneous offense because, when the same evidence was later introduced through the matching testimony of a witness, defendant did not object or request a limiting instruction; consequently, the issue was moot. Sanders v. State, 255 S.W.3d 754, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

196. In connection with defendant's conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, defendant did not assert in his new trial motion that counsel was ineffective for the reasons defendant asserted on appeal and the record did not indicate why counsel asked the victim whether the sexual abuse occurred only once or why counsel did not ask for a limiting instruction, and on this record, the court was unable to conclude that the challenged conduct was not sound trial strategy or was so outrageous that no competent attorney could have engaged in it; it was plausible that counsel was attempting to cast doubt on the victim's credibility, which was a proper trial strategy, and if counsel engaged in such strategy without success, the court was unable to conclude in hindsight that he was ineffective for attempting it, and thus defendant failed to overcome the strong presumption that counsel might have acted pursuant to a sound trial strategy. Marine v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3161 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 1 2008).

197. In an action involving a fire and who was the cause of it, the condominium's contention that the trial court erred by forcing it to present evidence of insurance to the jury was without merit since the condominium apparently did not enter the proof of loss into evidence and the proof of loss was admitted without limitation, Tex. R. Evid. 105. Richmond Condos. v. Skipworth Commer. Plumbing, Inc., 245 S.W.3d 646, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 963 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

198. During a trial for assault, defendant's failure to redact the machine-generated numbers on the back of a photograph before offering it into evidence or to request a limiting instruction that the jury consider only the front of the photograph resulted in the admission of the photograph for all purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 105 and allowed the jury to consider the entire photograph, including the back. Kuhn v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 960 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 7 2008).

199. Defendant was not required to request a further limiting instruction where the trial court, in overruling his objection to a witness's testimony that he told her that he had abused his stepdaughter, had stated that the testimony was for impeachment purposes only and thus, the statement adequately informed the jury the testimony should be considered for impeachment only and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Saavedra v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 25 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 3 2008).

200. To the extent that defendant's issue could have been construed as the trial court erring in not giving a limiting instruction that the ejection of counsel was not to be held against defendant, that issue was not preserved under Tex. R. App. P. 33 because defendant failed to make a request for such an instruction at that time. Andrade v. State, 246 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9288 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

201. One victim's testimony was sufficient to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the charged offenses occurred in a particular county, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 13.17; the jury reasonably inferred that the victim meant that defendant lived in two counties and defendant did not request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105 as to the victim's testimony, and thus it was admissible for all purposes. Bryant v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9425 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 29 2007).

202. Defendant's requested jury instruction was not warranted because he failed to object and request a limiting instruction when he first had the opportunity to do so; although the evidence of extraneous wrongdoing would likely have merited a limiting instruction, defendant did not object when the comment was made, but instead requested an instruction in the jury charge. Chuber v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9227 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 28 2007).

203. Court was bound by the Texas Criminal Court of Appeals' holdings, wherein the Court found that a "car dumping" incident was not probative of defendant's intent or motive for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and thus the court held that the trial court should not have instructed the jury to consider the incident for intent and motive; by giving the instruction, the trial court exacerbated the prejudicial impact of the evidence and the court found that defendant was harmed as a result, but the Court had previously found that a limiting instruction was a reason why any potential prejudice was diminished, and the court was bound by this holding and overruled defendant's issues in this regard; because the Court had previously found that the car dumping incident was not erroneously admitted, there was no evidentiary error that denied defendant a fundamentally fair trial. Garcia v. State, 246 S.W.3d 121, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8051 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 949, 129 S. Ct. 404, 172 L. Ed. 2d 295, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7457 (2008).

204. Defendant's objection did not make reference to Tex. R. Evid. 613; the court was unable to say that the ground objection asserted on appeal was apparent from context, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103, and thus the court overruled the issue and noted that it was uncertain that the exhibit was viewed by either counsel purely as impeachment evidence, and no mention was made of an instruction limiting its use by the jury to that purpose. Mendoza v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7679 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 24 2007).

205. Videotape showing the route taken by defendant during a chase was not an experiment or a reconstruction that required expert explanation, but instead it was a videotape version of a print map showing defendant's efforts to avoid officers and was used to show the jury the route followed, and the jury was instructed that its consideration of the evidence was limited to that purpose; relevant to the issue of intent in defendant's trial for aggravated assault on a public servant with a deadly weapon finding, under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02, was the preceding flight and the court did not find that the admission of the evidence in question was error. Timmons v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7519 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 17 2007).

206. Complained-of testimony was not extraneous offense evidence, but was multiple occurrences of acts alleged in the indictment, such that defendant was not entitled to a limiting instruction or an instruction during either the guilt/innocence phase or the punishment phase of the trial indicating that the State needed to prove the extraneous offenses beyond a reasonable doubt; because the court found that the trial court did not err in refusing to submit the requested instructions, the court did not address harm. Aportela v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7580 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 6 2007).

207. In defendant's sexual assault and indecency with a child case, any error in failing to give limiting instructions was harmless; defendant's first request was untimely and the trial court did not err by denying it, and within the context of the entire case, defendant's failure to request a limiting instruction during any other testimony covering the same extraneous offense evidence did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Neathery v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6625 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 16 2007).

208. In a negligence case arising from a fire at a condominium complex, absent a request for a limiting instruction on evidence of insurance, that issue was waived on appeal under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Richmond Condos. v.

Skipworth Commer. Plumbing, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5977 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

209. Trial court properly sustained the objection to the admission of a chemist report prepared by the expert's employee and relied upon by the expert, but the trial court properly admitted the expert's testimony because it was not hearsay and was not required to be based on personal knowledge; even if the expert's testimony did improperly reveal underlying facts or data that were inadmissible, for which Tex. R. Evid. 705 would have required the trial court to give a limiting instruction upon request, no such instruction was requested and thus the trial court did not err in admitting the expert's testimony. Collins v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6116 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

210. It could have been strategic that defense counsel did not object to certain evidence, and defendant failed to show that counsel's failure to object to the admission of the evidence or to request a limiting instruction fell below an objective standard of reasonableness as required to show ineffective assistance of counsel. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5693 (Tex. App. Austin July 18 2007).

211. Because the record did not reflect counsel's reason for not requesting a limiting instruction, the court found no basis for concluding that counsel did not exercise reasonable professional judgment, and defendant failed to rebut the presumption that counsel's actions or inactions were reasonable. Mathews v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5349 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 5 2007).

212. In a case where two people were being tried for aggravated sexual abuse of a child, "have you heard" questions under Tex. R. Evid. 405 were properly asked when witnesses testified about the character of the co-defendant; defendant failed to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, so she could not challenge the issue on appeal; the evidence was not offered to prove the extraneous offense, but to test the qualification of the witnesses to testify regarding character. Little v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4194 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 30 2007).

213. Trial court properly overruled defendant's motion to sever under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.09 because defendant failed to establish that a joint trial would have been prejudicial to him; defendant did not show a serious risk that a specific trial right would be compromised by a joint trial or that a joint trial would have prevented the jury from making a reliable judgment and that the problem could not have been adequately addressed by other curative measures such as a limiting instruction. Hernandez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4088 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 24 2007).

214. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; although defendant argued that counsel was ineffective for not asking for a limited instruction regarding the admissibility of DNA evidence, nothing in the record supported defendant's claims, defendant did not assert this issue in a motion for a new trial, counsel did not have the chance to explain himself, the trial court's handwritten note to the jury was not determinative evidence, and defendant failed to show that but for counsel's performance, the result would have been different. Reese v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3137 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 25 2007).

215. For purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 4, the prosecutor only restated the parole law rather than actually calculating the issue with regard to defendant, and regardless of whether the argument was error, the record did not show that but for counsel's failure to object or seek a limiting instruction, the outcome would have been different; for robbery, the jury was allowed to assess between two and 20 years in prison, the jury assessed punishment at eight years, less than the State requested, and defendant did not show prejudice. Hagos v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2928 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 18 2007).

216. Even assuming an officer's testimony of events occurring after the arrest was irrelevant, the failure to object to its admission could not have formed the basis of an ineffective assistance claim, and the court was hesitant to speculate as to why counsel failed to seek a limiting instruction regarding the extraneous acts, and thus defendant failed to show that counsel's lack of objection was not part of strategy. Hagos v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2928 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 18 2007).

217. Trial court erred in admitting a document because it contained several instances of hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, and thus it should not have been admitted for all purposes, and because the offer was not limited, it was an offer for all purposes, including the truth of the matter asserted; the State's claim that the hearsay objection was forfeited by wrongdoing had no basis in Texas evidence law; however, error was not harmful under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2 because the jury never heard the hearsay contained in the document. Sapp v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2875 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2007).

218. Court rejected defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, given that (1) defendant failed to provide an adequate record explaining counsel's reasons for conducting a cross-examination of a detective as counsel did, (2) counsel might have had a strategy in doing so, and even if the strategy was not as effective as counsel intended, the effectiveness of counsel was not to be evaluated based on hindsight, (3) counsel might have decided not to request a limiting instruction to avoid drawing attention to the extraneous offenses, and (4) nothing showed that counsel's actions were not of sound legal strategy; the court also did not find that counsel's performance was so outrageous that no competent attorney would have engaged in it. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2855 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

219. Witness's prior out of court statement to police, if offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted, likely constituted inadmissible hearsay, and thus the statements were subject to a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and because counsel did not request the instruction at the first opportunity, the evidence was admitted for all purposes; the record was undeveloped as to counsel's reasons for not requesting the instruction, no new trial motion was filed to create such a record, and thus defendant did not overcome the presumption of reasonable assistance; even if the court found counsel's performance was not within the range of professional assistance, defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the result of the proceeding would have been different had counsel sought to limit the use of the witness's statements sooner than in the jury charge, as this testimony was not the only evidence that could have defeated defendant's self-defense theory in the murder trial. Scott v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2896 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 12 2007).

220. Admission of an extraneous conviction amounted to harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b); while there was enough evidence to convict defendant of attempted sexual assault without the conviction, there was some contradictory evidence and the error involved the introduction of evidence, a prior conviction for indecency with a child, that was inherently inflammatory; although the trial court gave a limiting instruction, the relevance of the evidence was suspect and the court had little choice but to recognize the high likelihood that the prior conviction influenced one or more of the jurors. Bjorgaard v. State, 220 S.W.3d 555, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2514 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2007).

221. Because defendant did not request a limiting instruction concerning a deputy's testimony about her co-defendant's confronting the deputy when he seized a vehicle, she forfeited the alleged error. Chase v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2007).

222. Although defendant argued that the trial court gave an improper limiting instruction, defendant failed to object and thus forfeited the complaint on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Maldonado v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2276 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2007).

223. The inclusion of certain documents was not permitted under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.173(a), and the taxpayer made no attempt to offer the evidence for the limited purpose of consideration and thus it was not free to complain on appeal, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; moreover, the taxpayer did not show reversible error for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1 because the exclusion of the documents did not prevent the taxpayer from making its case or lead to an improper verdict. DuPont Photomasks, Inc. v. Strayhorn, 219 S.W.3d 414, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10986 (Tex. App. Austin 2006).

224. Defendant failed to show that, but for counsel's failure to ask for limiting instructions, the outcome of the trial would have been different; testimony had already been admitted and thus defendant was not harmed by counsel's failure, and although counsel did not request a limiting instruction regarding certain evidence, one was provided in the jury charge. Romero v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10723 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 15 2006).

225. Defendant did not object to the State's failure to give defendant notice of alleged extraneous offenses and defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence was admitted, such that these complaints were not preserved for appellate review. Najar v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8499 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 28 2006).

226. Defendant did not request a limiting instruction when alleged extraneous offense evidence was admitted, and because it was admitted for all purposes, the trial court did not err by not issuing a limiting instruction in the jury charge regarding the evidence. Najar v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8499 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 28 2006).

227. Defendant claimed that the admission of extraneous offense evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) was error; because the trial court instructed the jury to disregard an officer's testimony about defendant's prior arrest in 2003, the court assumed without deciding that the introduction of the officer's testimony was erroneous, and because the officer's testimony was not so inflammatory that its effect could not have been cured by an instruction to disregard, the court presumed that the jury followed the instructions; defendant failed to rebut the presumption that the jury followed the limiting instructions, and given the amount of drugs possessed by defendant, as well as a 1998 drug conviction, the court was unable to find that defendant's 18-year sentence for possession of more than four grams, but less than 200 grams, of methamphetamine was excessive. Elliott v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6220 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 20 2006).

228. Defendant conceded to being present at the drug buy and knowing that a drug transaction was going to occur, and because the evidence made defendant's intent to participate in the offense more probable, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b); furthermore, there was no error in the admission of the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because (1) evidence that defendant had sold drugs in the past was probative of the fact that defendant intended to participate in the drug transaction at issue, (2) the testimony helped rebut the defensive theory that defendant was merely present at the time, (3) the evidence was not more heinous than the crime charged and thus the potential for irrationally impressing the jury was slight, (4) the State did not spend much time introducing the evidence in question, (5) there was a need for the evidence given defendant's questioning of the link between defendant and the offense under violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.112(a), and (6) the trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction. Malone v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6088 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 13 2006).

229. Because it was one instance involving several acts of sexual contact that were committed in one continuous act of force and threats and part of the same criminal transaction, election was not required for purposes of defendant's charge of indecency under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(a)(1) and Tex. Const. art. V, § 13 and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.29(a), which required unanimity in verdicts; although defendant asserted that one incident was a fourth incident of sexual contact, the instance was an extraneous offense under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to which defendant's objection was overruled, defendant's failure to request a limiting instruction on the extraneous offense waived error on appeal, and the failure to include such an instruction was not fundamental error. Alvarez v.

State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4904 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 8 2006).

230. Two defendants' sexual assault convictions were inappropriate because the trial court erred by failing to have the State elect, at the close of its evidence, which occurrence it would use to convict as requested by the defense; the requirement of an election was distinct from a limiting instruction, Tex. R. Evid. 105, because the election requirement provided explicit notice to a defendant and prompted unanimous jury verdicts; a limiting instruction alone did not adequately serve all of those purposes. Phillips v. State, 193 S.W.3d 904, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1069 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

231. Portions of an offense report contained factual findings resulting from an officer's investigation of one of the State's witnesses, and the factual findings were admissible even though the report in its entirety was not admissible; under Tex. R. Evid. 803, defendant could have properly offered those factual findings into evidence to show bias or motive, but defendant offered the entire report, including the part that was inadmissible, and because defendant did not limit the offer to the admissible portions of the report, the trial court did not err in excluding the entire report. August v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3829 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 4 2006).

232. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child case, defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence of extraneous acts was admitted; thus, the evidence became admissible for all purposes and a limiting instruction was not required. Therefore, the trial court committed no error in failing to instruct the jury that extraneous acts admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2 could only be considered to show defendant's state of mind or the relationship between him and the complainants. Garza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2092 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 15 2006).

233. Even if the consumer was right that portions of a report were inadmissible, the consumer waived any complaint to the general admission thereof by failing to request redaction and by failing to ask for a limiting instruction, under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), as well as by failing to object to the admission of the witness's videotaped deposition, during which the witness described the contents of the report. Benavides v. Cushman, Inc., 189 S.W.3d 875, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 716 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

234. Individual's testimony regarding diminished income in the year following the accident in question was admitted without any objection, and appellants' failure to request an instruction to limit the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) to specific issues allowed the jury to consider the evidence for any and all purposes; thus, any error was waived under Tex. R. Civ. P. 274. Smith v. Scott, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 509 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 20 2006).

235. In a murder case, the prosecutor's affidavit regarding trial strategy was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401and Tex. R. Evid. 602 at a new trial hearing because it addressed the issue of effective assistance and included some statements made from personal knowledge; defendant did not seek to limit the scope of the affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Shanklin v. State, 190 S.W.3d 154, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

236. By failing to request a limiting instruction regarding the causation opinion of a witness pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the party waived its complaint to the general admission of the evidence. Duke Energy Field Servs., L.P. v. Meyer, 190 S.W.3d 149, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10658 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2005).

237. Because defendant did not ask the trial court to give a limiting instruction, defendant waived the complaint on appeal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Onwukwe v. State, 186 S.W.3d 81, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9603 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

238. Where a trial court, in a bench trial, found for a creditor on contract and fraud claims but did not make specific findings allocating the damages, although there was no evidence to support the fraud finding, the judgment was affirmed; under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the evidence on damages, which consisted of testimony admitted without objection, could be considered for all purposes. Advanced Messaging Wireless, Inc. v. Campus Design, Inc., 190 S.W.3d 66, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8991 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2005).

239. While the complainant could not testify that the knife offered by the State was an exact replica of the knife used during the assault, nothing in the record indicated that the probative value of the knife was substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice or any possible inflammatory effect, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the knife for demonstrative purposes Risley v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4468 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 9 2005).

240. Because the horse farm owners did not request a limiting instruction regarding the horse owner's hearsay testimony impeaching a veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court did not give a limiting instruction, the jury was able to consider the evidence for any and all purposes. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

241. When the trial court sustained the State's objection that certain punishment evidence was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b), defendant did not inform the trial court of any alternative theories of admissibility; because defendant did not expressly offer the evidence for its limited admissible purpose pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(b), defendant was not free to complain of its exclusion on appeal and defendant failed to preserve error. Hatcher v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 884 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005).

242. In the absence of any request to limit the scope of a prosecutor's affidavit, the court upheld the trial court's ruling under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) because parts of the material in the affidavit were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as they recounted the prosecutors' recollection regarding voir dire in defendant's theft trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03(a), and the affidavit was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the trial court was the fact finder and there was less danger that it was influenced by improper suggestion. Biagas v. State, 177 S.W.3d 161, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 947 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

243. Although a manufacturer filed a request for a limiting instruction, no ruling appeared in the record on appeal; the evidence was thus properly admitted for all purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Nissan Motor Co. v. Armstrong, 145 S.W.3d 131, 2004 Tex. LEXIS 737, 47 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 955, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17123 (Tex. 2004).

244. In an insurance fraud case, the trial court did not err in admitting the insurance claim file as it was not admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, as defendant argued, and its contents about the detective's investigation were not inadmissible on hearsay grounds. Wycough v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4608 (Tex. App. El Paso May 20 2004).

245. In a motor vehicle accident case, a summary of medical expenses, admitted into evidence without any limiting instruction, could be considered by the jury for all purposes, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Huddleston v. Lovvorn, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4536 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 19 2004).

246. In a motor vehicle accident case, a summary of medical expenses, admitted into evidence without any limiting instruction, could be considered by the jury for all purposes, in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Huddleston v. Lovvorn, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4536 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 19 2004).

247. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), a request for a limiting instruction must be made as soon as evidence is admitted; accordingly, court did not err in denying a limiting instruction on the victim's police statement during the punishment stage of defendant's trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child where defendant requested the limiting instruction during the punishment phase after the jury had considered the statement without restriction. Zavala v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2986 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 1 2004).

248. Although a trial court cannot delay in giving a limiting jury instruction, timely requested, until the end of the trial, the burden of timely requesting a limiting instruction is on the party opposing the general admission of the evidence and there is nothing in the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 105 or the case law that requires the trial court, upon a pre-trial request, to recognize each instance of extraneous offense evidence and deliver a limiting instruction at each instance; thus, the trial court did not err in not giving a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) each time extraneous offense evidence was admitted without a timely request by defendant. Reeves v. State, 99 S.W.3d 657, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 909 (Tex. App. Waco 2003).

249. Defendant's assertion that a trial court erred in refusing to instruct a jury, at the time evidence was offered, on the burden of proof for unadjudicated offenses and bad acts that were introduced at the punishment phase of the trial failed because Tex. R. Evid. 105 addressed parties and purpose; the rule did not address burdens of proof. Jackson v. State, 992 S.W.2d 469, 1999 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 42 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

250. Under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), because defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the police officer testified regarding the extraneous offense, the evidence was admitted for all purposes and did not warrant a limiting instruction. Davis v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4748 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 27 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

251. In defendant's sexual assault and indecency with a child case, any error in failing to give limiting instructions was harmless; defendant's first request was untimely and the trial court did not err by denying it, and within the context of the entire case, defendant's failure to request a limiting instruction during any other testimony covering the same extraneous offense evidence did not affect defendant's substantial rights. Neathery v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6625 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 16 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

252. Because defendant failed to request a limiting instruction when the State used his previously-suppressed custodial statement to impeach his testimony regarding his intent in going to the victim's home, the evidence that he told police that he intended to steal from the victim was rendered admissible for all purposes and was properly considered in a review of the legal sufficiency of the evidence. Sanchez v. State, 428 S.W.3d 240, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1054, 2014 WL 346444 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 30 2014).

253. In an action for breach of a gas purchase agreement, evidence of early pays and appellant's relationship with a third party was properly admitted to show they had oral agreements and the third party's authority was not encompassed by the sole written contract between them; this evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for purposes of establishing apparent agency. Because appellant did not request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), the evidence was admissible for any purpose. Reliant Energy Servs. v. Cotton Valley Compression, Llc, 336 S.W.3d 764, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 173 Oil & Gas Rep. 732 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

Evidence : Relevance : Character Evidence

254. In a case where two people were being tried for aggravated sexual abuse of a child, "have you heard" questions under Tex. R. Evid. 405 were properly asked when witnesses testified about the character of the co-defendant; defendant failed to request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, so she could not challenge the issue on appeal; the evidence was not offered to prove the extraneous offense, but to test the qualification of the witnesses to testify regarding character. Little v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4194 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 30 2007).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

255. It was error not to give a limiting instruction when evidence of extraneous offense was admitted, but the error was harmless because fewer than 24 hours passed between the erroneous admission and the jury charge, which included the limiting instruction; the issues were not confusing; and there was no evidence the error affected the jury. Cannell v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15299, 2013 WL 6729857 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

256. Trial court was not obligated to issue an instruction limiting the usage of evidence pertaining to a pornographic video that defendant showed to his child sexual assault victim (his teenaged daughter) because the complained-of evidence constituted same-transaction contextual evidence; the evidence was properly received as general evidence. Freeman v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8566 (Tex. App. Waco July 11 2013).

257. Even though the trial court gave an improper limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) concerning the extraneous offense evidence, the instruction helped defendant because it prohibited the jury from using the evidence to rebut defendant's implication that the charges had been fabricated to form the basis of a civil lawsuit. Hetherington v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 437, 2013 WL 173760 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 17 2013).

258. Assuming with deciding that the trial court erred by refusing defendant's request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) regarding evidence of his recent history of writing hot checks, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because defendant admitted that he knew he could not afford to pay the checks he had written. Tausch v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7081, 2012 WL 3601095 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 15 2012).

259. Defendant was not entitled under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a) to a limiting instruction on extraneous offense evidence because the instruction was not timely requested. Taylor v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2279, 2012 WL 955383 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2012).

260. Trial court did not err, under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), by allowing the jury to hear evidence of defendant's extraneous offenses during the guilt/innocence stage of the trial because the evidence was not admitted to show that defendant had actually committed the prior offense, but to show that he had lied to the officer about whether he had been previously arrested. The trial court properly instructed the jury to use the evidence solely for the purpose of showing the existence of defendant's untruth about a prior arrest, providing some support for the officer to have a reasonable suspicion about the nature of defendant's activities. Davila v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 2012 WL 376634 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 7 2012).

261. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of guns and cash during his capital murder trial because, to put the conspiracy offense in context, evidence that defendant and his sons were drug dealers who dealt in large amounts of cash and guns to protect their drugs and case was necessary, and therefore the evidence was same-transaction contextual evidence and background contextual evidence excepted from Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Because the evidence was same-transaction contextual evidence, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to give limiting instructions. Davis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 835, 2011 WL 322877 (Tex. App.

262. Trial court did not err by failing to sua sponte give a limiting instruction to the jury regarding the dog's prior bad acts because defendant did not request such a limiting instruction, and therefore the evidence was admissible for all purposes. Watson v. State, 337 S.W.3d 347, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 592 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

263. Trial court did not err by failing to sua sponte give a limiting instruction to the jury regarding the dog's prior bad acts because defendant did not request such a limiting instruction, and therefore the evidence was admissible for all purposes. Smith v. State, 337 S.W.3d 354, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 594 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 27 2011).

264. In a trial for child sexual assault, the trial court erred under Tex. R. Evid. 105 by denying defendant's request for an oral limiting instruction as to extraneous offense; the error in not giving the instruction warranted reversal, considering that extraneous-offense evidence was admitted at the very earliest stages of the trial on guilt/innocence, that 35 percent of the record was devoted to the extraneous offense, and that the jury had unfettered discretion to compare the extraneous offense evidence to the victim's accusations of molestation before receiving the trial court's written jury charge. Pedersen v. State, 237 S.W.3d 882, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8383 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

265. In a murder trial, defendant was entitled under Tex. R. Evid. 105 to receive a limiting instruction when extraneous evidence was admitted to show motive; however, defendant's complaint to the trial court did not comport with the complaint on appeal because counsel requested a limiting instruction stating that the extraneous offense evidence would only be relevant if it was connected up later; that request could not be read as a request that the extraneous offense evidence be considered only for the purpose of motive. Bullard v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7943 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 4 2007).

266. Because the record contained no evidence regarding why defense counsel chose not to request a limiting instruction or object to written jury instructions regarding extraneous offense evidence, the court held that counsel's conduct in failing to do so was not so outrageous that no competent attorney would have done so. Hassenplug v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 28 2007).

267. Defendant's objection to testimony addressed only the fact that the defendant made no comment during the relevant part of his interrogation, not extraneous offenses. Defendant did not request a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, no objection or request was made for the charge to instruct the jury regarding the extraneous acts, and thus the issue was not preserved for appeal pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Zelaya v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8233 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 21 2006).

268. In a criminal trial where defendant was charged with several offenses, the State was not required to elect among the various offenses it sought to prove; in accordance with Tex. R. Evid. 105, the trial court's general limiting instruction to the jury on extraneous offenses was sufficient to protect the defendant from an unfair trial. Pittillo v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6534 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

269. Where defendant was charged with criminal mischief for causing damage to his neighbor's motorcycle, the trial court admitted evidence that on one prior occasion defendant had knocked down the mailbox with his truck; the trial court's failure to instruct the jury that evidence of extraneous bad acts or offenses could only be considered if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed them was harmless; defendant made no objection at trial and did not request any kind of limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105. Giddens v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1957 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 15 2006).

270. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child and indecency with a child case, defendant did not request a limiting instruction when the evidence of extraneous acts was admitted; thus, the evidence became admissible for all purposes and a limiting instruction was not required. Therefore, the trial court committed no error in failing to instruct the jury that extraneous acts admitted under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2 could only be considered to show defendant's state of mind or the relationship between him and the complainants. Garza v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2092 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 15 2006).

271. Because a witness's testimony was admissible only to rebut defendant's statement of good conduct with minors, a court should have given an instruction to use the testimony only in assessing defendant's credibility, not as proof that he committed the offense or as proof of a plan to have a sexual relationship with the victim. Daggett v. State, 187 S.W.3d 444, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2127 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

272. In a trial for sexual assault of a child, the trial court was not required to instruct the jury, sua sponte, not to consider evidence of extraneous offenses, in part because defendant failed to request a limiting instruction at the time the extraneous offense evidence was admitted, thereby allowing it to be admitted for all purposes. Allen v. State, 180 S.W.3d 260, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9709 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

273. In drug and robbery case, although defendant's relevancy objection to evidence of other thefts sufficiently apprised the trial court of the nature of his complaint, where defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and obtain a ruling as to whether the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, nor ask for a limiting instruction, defendant waived at trial any complaint over admission of evidence of extraneous thefts. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

274. Party opposing evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 105 has the burden of requesting the limiting instruction at the introduction of the evidence. Once evidence is received without a limiting instruction, it becomes part of the general evidence and may be used for all purposes, and a limiting instruction in the jury charge is no longer appropriate. Hammock v. State, 46 S.W.3d 889, 2001 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 39 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001).

275. It is not required to object to evidence prior to requesting a limiting instruction for that evidence. Hammock v. State, 46 S.W.3d 889, 2001 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 39 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

276. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, the trial court did not err in declining to strike the previously admitted evidence of the knife and a witness's testimony about the knife because the knife was relevant, it was admitted into evidence before the witness testified, and a photograph showed the exact location where the knife was found. Because the evidence was properly admitted, the trial court did not err by refusing defendant's request for a limiting instruction. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9570, 2009 WL 4856420 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 17 2009).

277. In a murder case, the prosecutor's affidavit regarding trial strategy was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401and Tex. R. Evid. 602 at a new trial hearing because it addressed the issue of effective assistance and included some statements made from personal knowledge; defendant did not seek to limit the scope of the affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Shanklin v. State, 190 S.W.3d 154, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Acts

278. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact based on conduct occurring over a two-year period, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence about the details of defendant's ongoing sexual misconduct with the victim. Because it was same-transaction contextual evidence, the trial court was not obligated to issue a contemporaneous-limiting instruction. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Crimes : General Overview

279. In a trial for sexual assault and indecency with a child based on oral sex and breast touching, defendant forfeited error regarding the trial court's failure to give a contemporaneous limiting instruction when it admitted testimony that defendant penetrated the victim's sexual organ with his penis. Defendant objected to the extraneous evidence rather than requesting a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105, and his request for a limiting instruction after two additional witnesses testified was untimely. Martin v. State, 176 S.W.3d 887, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8514 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Similar Crimes : Child Molestation Cases

280. In his trial for aggravated sexual assault of his adopted sister, defendant failed to preserve for review his contention that he was entitled to a limiting instruction regarding other acts evidence because he did not specify what limitations should be placed on the testimony and only objected to one question. Washburn v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8351, 2014 WL 3756486 (Tex. App. Dallas July 30 2014).

281. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child trial, at which evidence of his conduct with the child when he was younger than 17 was admitted, the trial court erred when it omitted an instruction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 8.07(b); however, defendant did not suffer egregious harm. Limiting instructions pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37 were given. Mendoza v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6914 (Tex. App. Eastland June 6 2013).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood Alcohol

282. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, defendant forfeited his arguments that his blood test results were improperly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and that he was entitled to an instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Although defendant objected when a blood-draw kit was offered into evidence, he failed to object when the report with the blood-test results was offered. Walker v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1328 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 16 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : General Overview

283. Trial court did not err in not giving a jury a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105 regarding the legal ability of an employee of a contractor to hold himself out as an engineer where there was no testimony or evidence requiring such an instruction because, at trial, the employee was clear in stating that while he held an engineering degree from a preeminent educational institution, he was not a licensed engineer, and he testified that he had merely provided AutoCAD drafting services, which did not require an engineering license; finally, the employee had not been held out to the contractor's customer as a licensed engineer. Purnell Furniture Servs. v. Warehouse Rack Co., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6858 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

284. Because the horse farm owners did not request a limiting instruction regarding the horse owner's hearsay testimony impeaching a veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court did not give a limiting instruction, the jury was able to consider the evidence for any and all purposes. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Convictions : Admissibility

285. At defendant's trial for burglary of a habitation, the trial court was not required to give an instruction in the jury charge limiting the use of defendant's prior convictions for impeachment purposes only because defendant never requested a limiting instruction at the time the evidence was introduced. Reyes v. State, 422 S.W.3d 18, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13573, 2013 WL 5872738 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 31 2013).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Admissibility

286. No abuse of discretion in excluding evidence regarding the Americans With disabilities Act and the Texas Accessibility Standards, because the evidence was not crucial to whether the clinic had actual or constructive knowledge of a dangerous condition on the premises that presented an unreasonable risk of harm and that the condition proximately caused the claimant's injuries. Craig v. Beeville Family Practice, L.L.P., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4422, 2012 WL 1656492 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

Family Law : Marital Termination & Spousal Support : Dissolution & Divorce : Procedures

287. In an ex-husband's appeal of a divorce judgment, the appellate court excluded the husband's submission notebook from its review of the evidence and excluded the husband's arguments based on the notebook from its analysis because the trial court had admitted the notebook only as a summary of a witness's testimony, and the husband had not testified at trial. To the extent that any specific portion of the notebook was admitted into evidence without limitation elsewhere during the trial, the court concluded that it would consider such portion pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Hancock v. Hancock, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5737 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 31 2008).

Family Law : Paternity & Surrogacy : Establishing Paternity : Father's Acknowledgment

288. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence during a wrongful death action a prior order from a family law court regarding parental rights to the decedent because the order was not offered as a determination of parentage but was offered only for the limited purpose of showing that appellee had accepted his parentage of the decedent in the family court proceeding. Gurka v. Gurka, 402 S.W.3d 341, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363, 2013 WL 2253587 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 23 2013).

Governments : State & Territorial Governments : Licenses

289. Trial court did not err in not giving a jury a limiting instruction pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105 regarding the legal ability of an employee of a contractor to hold himself out as an engineer where there was no testimony or evidence requiring such an instruction because, at trial, the employee was clear in stating that while he held an engineering degree from a preeminent educational institution, he was not a licensed engineer, and he testified that he had merely provided AutoCAD drafting services, which did not require an engineering license; finally, the employee had not been held out to the contractor's customer as a licensed engineer. Purnell Furniture Servs. v. Warehouse Rack Co., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6858 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 1 2006).

Torts : Wrongful Death & Survival Actions : Potential Plaintiffs

290. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence during a wrongful death action a prior order from a family law court regarding parental rights to the decedent because the order was not offered as a determination of parentage but was offered only for the limited purpose of showing that appellee had accepted his parentage of the decedent in the family court proceeding. Gurka v. Gurka, 402 S.W.3d 341, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6363, 2013 WL 2253587 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 23 2013).

Rule 106 Remainder of or Related Writings or Recorded Statements

If a party introduces all or part of a writing or recorded statement, an adverse party may introduce, at that time, any other part - or any other writing or recorded statement - that in fairness ought to be considered at the same time. "Writing or recorded statement" includes depositions.

COMMENT

Pre-March 1, 1998 Comment This rule is the federal rule with one modification. Under the federal rule, a party may require his opponent to introduce evidence contrary to the latter's own case. The Committee believes the better practice is to permit the party himself to introduce such evidence contemporaneously with the introduction of the incomplete evidence. This rule does not in any way circumscribe the right of a party to develop fully the matter on cross-examination or as part of his own case. Cf. Tex. C. Crim. P. , art. 38.24. Nor does it alter the common law doctrine that the rule of optional completeness, as to writings, oral conversations, or other matters, may take precedence over exclusionary doctrines such as the hearsay or best evidence rule or the first-hand knowledge requirement. See also Tex. R. Evid. 610(a).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Custodial Interrogation

1. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's motion to suppress voluntary statements she gave to the police because, after saying that he had no objection to the written statement, defense counsel requested that the entire videotape statement be introduced pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107, and the videotapes of the full three-and-a-half hour interview were introduced in evidence as defense exhibits and played for the jury. As such, defendant could not assert that it was error to admit the videotaped interview at trial because it was she who offered it in evidence. Herron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7231 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26, 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

2. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 and Tex. R. Evid. 107, which comprised the rule of optional completeness as excluding the letter and failing to include a limiting instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14, and gave rise to a strong possibility that the jury could have formed a false impression regarding defendant's intent such that defendant's substantial rights were affected and she was prevented from adequately presenting her defense. Elmore v. State, 116 S.W.3d 801, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

3. In a trial for assault of a family member, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 106 for the complainant's written statement to be read into evidence; the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44. because there was other evidence of the fight and the complainant's injuries. Long Xuan Thai v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6056 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 1 2007).

4. In the trial of an officer for lying in a warrant affidavit about the reliability of an informant, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107 was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) when the trial court refused to allow the jury to hear that guns and money were seized under the tainted warrant. Although the excluded evidence was relevant to a defensive theory relating to the identity of the informant, the exclusion did not prevent defendant from presenting the substance of that defense to the jury. Delapaz v. State, 228 S.W.3d 183, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2377 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

5. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's motion to suppress voluntary statements she gave to the police because, after saying that he had no objection to the written statement, defense counsel requested that the entire videotape statement be introduced pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107, and the videotapes of the full three-and-a-half hour interview were introduced in evidence as defense exhibits and played for the jury. As such, defendant could not assert that it was error to admit the videotaped interview at trial because it was she who offered it in evidence. Herron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7231 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26, 2008).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

6. In a theft trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 106 in admitting a videotape put together by a store's loss prevention officer from numerous surveillance cameras. The record did not show that defendant made any effort to obtain the original recording from the store. Massey v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5284, 2011 WL 2698608 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2011).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

7. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the officer's testimony because defendant opened the door to it, where the trial court could allow the State to present evidence to clear up the erroneous impression by admitting evidence that the manual did have something to say about the other definition of intoxication; the trial court's ruling admitting the officer's testimony regarding the correlation between the HGN and alcohol concentration was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Jordy v. State, 413 S.W.3d 227, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12409, 2013 WL 5493408 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 3 2013).

8. Probate court did not abuse its discretion by admitting redacted billing statements and excluding unredacted statements in a dispute over attorney's fees and expenses because the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107 was not an exception to the attorney-client privilege, and it did not mandate a waiver of the privilege. Even if the rule of optional completeness was found to apply, an administrator did not show that unredacted statements were necessary for the probate court to understand the attorney's fees recoverable from an estate; significant information was provided to the court in the redacted billing statements, and, when combined with the testimony of the guardian's attorneys, further information was not necessary for the court to understand the matter. In the Estate of Johnston, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4255, 2012 WL 1940656 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 30 2012).

9. In an assault on a correctional officer case, a court erred by admitting a portion of the State's document regarding the incident because, under the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 107 it was error to admit the exhibit into evidence when a portion thereof had only been read into evidence; however, the error was harmless because the evidence had already been admitted without objection through another witness. Stewart v. State, 221 S.W.3d 306, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

10. Defendant's conviction for one count of sexual assault was proper where the trial court did not err in not permitting his entire confession into evidence allegedly in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 because defendant failed to preserve the issue for review as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Salazar v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5487 (Tex. App. El Paso July 14 2005).

11. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 and Tex. R. Evid. 107, which comprised the rule of optional completeness as excluding the letter and failing to include a limiting instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14, and gave rise to a strong possibility that the jury could have formed a false impression regarding defendant's intent such that defendant's substantial rights were affected and she was prevented from adequately presenting her defense. Elmore v. State, 116 S.W.3d 801, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

14. Probate court did not abuse its discretion by admitting redacted billing statements and excluding unredacted statements in a dispute over attorney's fees and expenses because the rule of optional completeness under Tex. 15. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

16. Where an issue related to admissibility of evidence, the reviewing court applied Tex. R. Evid. 107 rather than Tex. R. Evid. 106, which was merely a rule of timing. Ziolkowski v. State, 223 S.W.3d 640, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2580 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

Rule 107 Rule of Optional Completeness

If a party introduces part of an act, declaration, conversation, writing, or recorded statement, an adverse party may inquire into any other part on the same subject. "Writing or recorded statement" includes a deposition.

Comment to 1998 change This rule is the former Criminal Rule 107 except that the example regarding "when a letter is read" has been relocated in the rule so as to more accurately indicate the provision it explains. While this rule appeared only in the prior criminal rules, it is made applicable to civil cases because it accurately reflects the common law rule of optional completeness in civil cases.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

1. In a personal injury case arising from an auto-pedestrian accident, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b), 107 in excluding evidence of a driver's subsequent automobile accidents was harmless because it was unlikely that, if the jury heard that evidence, it would apportioned more fault to the driver, given the admitted evidence that he consumed a pint of vodka on the day in question, was arrested for driving while intoxicated at the scene of the accident, and failed a breathalyzer test with a blood alcohol content that was nearly twice the legal limit. Muhs v. Whataburger, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9229, 2010 WL 4657955 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : General Overview

2. When defendant asked about a statement his wife made concerning ownership of the cocaine, the prosecution could follow up that question, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, to explain the statement and make it more understandable. Broussard v. State, 68 S.W.3d 197, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 250 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

3. Defense counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object when the prosecutor elicited testimony showing that defendant had assaulted a murder victim because the hearsay evidence was admissible under the rule of optional completeness, given that the portion of the statement admitted by the defense gave the false impression that defendant was not present when the victim was murdered. Salazar v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4983, 2012 WL 2357744 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2012).

4. In a murder trial, the rule of optional completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107 did not require the admission of a redacted portion of the DVD video recording of defendant's statement because there has been no showing either that the redacted portion of the video recording was on the same subject or that it was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the evidence. Johnson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10051, 2010 WL 5142392 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 20 2010).

5. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 107 in not admitting the complete text of defendant's statements after the State introduced portions relating to defendant's possession of the murder weapon because there was no showing that defendant's self-serving statements that another person acted alone were on the same subject or corrected a false impression. Ziolkowski v. State, 223 S.W.3d 640, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2580 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

6. In a murder trial, the court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness's written statement under the rule of optional completeness because defendant had questioned the witness about inconsistencies between her written statement and her trial testimony, creating the impression that the statement contained more than it actually did. Moreover, the written statement and the portion introduced by defendant during his cross-examination were on the "same subject," specifically, what happened at the apartment. Wilson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7663 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 15 2005).

7. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, the report of a Child Protective Services investigator was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because the matter was "opened up" when defense counsel questioned the investigator about how she reached the conclusions stated in her report, and then attempted to impeach her by raising questions about the affidavits which were attached. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Money Laundering : General Overview

8. In a money laundering case, a court did not err in failing to admit a videotape under Tex. R. Evid. 107 where the State introduced the entire conversation between the officer and defendant, and to the extent defendant argued that the videotape showed his ability to speak and understand the English language, Rule 107 was not intended for that purpose. Pham v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9439 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 27 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : Elements

9. Under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the State was properly allowed to present testimony of a driving while intoxicated defendant's videotaped statements about his drinking, even though the trial court had previously suppressed the audio portion of the tape because of its poor quality, because defendant attempted to impeach the officer's credibility as to the basis for his opinion that defendant had been drinking, as permitted by Tex. R. Evid 607. Cadena v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8622 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 5 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Custodial Interrogation

10. In defendant's drug case, error in the admission of defendant statements that did not comply with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 was harmless because the evidence was subsequently admitted through admission of a portion of an officer's report, admitted on the basis of the rule of optional completeness. Rascon v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 593, 2010 WL 337044 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 29 2010).

11. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's motion to suppress voluntary statements she gave to the police because, after saying that he had no objection to the written statement, defense counsel requested that the entire videotape statement be introduced pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107, and the videotapes of the full three-and-a-half hour interview were introduced in evidence as defense exhibits and played for the jury. As such, defendant could not assert that it was error to admit the videotaped interview at trial because it was she who offered it in evidence. Herron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7231 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26, 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Appeals

12. Appellate counsel for a prisoner, who was convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death, was not ineffective for habeas corpus relief for not complaining on appeal that the trial court should have admitted the rest of a witness's statement under the doctrine of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, even though the complaint was preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), because counsel was justified in believing that any error was harmless since the rest of the statement would not have helped exonerate the prisoner; the Texas law of parties under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02 (2003) further supported the harmlessness of refusing to admit the full statement because the prisoner also could have been convicted if the prisoner aided in the ways described in § 7.02, and the evidence of the prisoner's extensive participation was strong enough that admitting the statement would not have changed the result. Hernandez v. Thaler, 463 Fed. Appx. 349, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 4256 (5th Cir. Tex. Mar. 1 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

13. Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by not introducing evidence that his client's codefendant had judicially confessed to the murder that resulted in his client's conviction for capital murder and death sentence because, if counsel had introduced codefendant's testimony from the punishment phase of his own trial, the prosecution would have introduced codefendant's testimony from the guilt determination phase of his trial under the Rule of Optional Completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, and this testimony would have contradicted the contention counsel's client did not direct both the kidnapping and the shooting. Adams v. Thaler, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74807 (E.D. Tex. July 26 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : General Overview

14. When defendant asked about a statement his wife made concerning ownership of the cocaine, the prosecution could follow up that question, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, to explain the statement and make it more understandable. Broussard v. State, 68 S.W.3d 197, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 250 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

15. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 and Tex. R. Evid. 107, which comprised the rule of optional completeness as excluding the letter and failing to include a limiting instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14, and gave rise to a strong possibility that the jury could have formed a false impression regarding defendant's intent such that defendant's substantial rights were affected and she was prevented from adequately presenting her defense. Elmore v. State, 116 S.W.3d 801, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Theory of Defense

16. In a murder trial, the court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness's written statement under the rule of optional completeness because defendant had questioned the witness about inconsistencies between her written statement and her trial testimony, creating the impression that the statement contained more than it actually did. Moreover, the written statement and the portion introduced by defendant during his cross-examination were on the "same subject," specifically, what happened at the apartment. Wilson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7663 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 15 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

17. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his 12-year-old daughter, evidence that the victim had been previously assaulted by another relative was properly excluded in the punishment phase after the victim described the impact of the assault, including three attempted suicides. The rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was inapplicable because a prior act, conversation, declaration, or written or recorded statement was not at issue. Delapaz v. State, 297 S.W.3d 824, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7510 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 24 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

18. Trial court's admission into evidence-over a hearsay objection-of three of four related telephone conversations, and subsequent exclusion of the fourth conversation by sustaining a hearsay objection, was an abuse of discretion under the rule of optional completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, and the error could not be said not to have contributed to defendant's conviction or punishment; defendant sought to introduce a recording of the entirety of the conversations, which would have included the remainder of the content, and allowed the jury to determine for itself his demeanor without filtration through a third party, which was the very purpose of the rule of optional completeness. Walters v. State, 206 S.W.3d 780, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9555 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

19. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defendant's objection that he had not "opened the door" to the admission of a videotaped interview of complainant was insufficient to alert the trial court that he was asserting an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 107. Tovar v. State, 221 S.W.3d 185, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

20. In a murder case, videotapes were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because they were offered to prove that conversations had taken place, and in addition, the tapes were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defendant opened the door by suggesting that the conversations had not occurred. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

21. Trial court did not err by refusing to admit text messages between the victim and third parties under this rule because the fact that the victim used profanity with others or communicated with other men was not necessary to explain the context of the text messages between defendant and the victim and defendant failed to point to any other text message relevant to the relationship and communications between defendant and the victim. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13242, 2013 WL 5781489 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 24 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

22. Even if the trial court erred by admitting the video recording of the victim's sexual assault interview under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the error was harmless because the victim provided the same account in her trial testimony that defendant touched her "both" on the inside and outside of her vaginal area. Cline v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 872 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 31 2013).

23. Court did not violate the rule of optional completeness by excluding a portion of defendant's statement because it did not concern the same subject matter as the portion offered by the prosecution (i.e., defendant's statement of guilt), and the redacted portion would have been cumulative of admitted evidence. Campa v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5065 (Tex. App. Dallas July 2 2009).

24. During defendant's criminal trial for murder, the trial judge violated the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 when he allowed a 911 operator to testify that he asked defendant if he wanted to talk about what had happened, but excluded defendant's response indicating that he shot the victim in self-defense; the error was nonconstitutional, because defendant testified about his longstanding strife with the victim; the trial court's erroneous exclusion of his 911 statements did not prevent him from fully presenting his self-defense theory. Walters v. State, 247 S.W.3d 204, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1701 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

25. In a trial for assault of a family member, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 107 for the complainant's written statement to be read into evidence; the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44. because there was other evidence of the fight and the complainant's injuries. Long Xuan Thai v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6056 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 1 2007).

26. In the trial of an officer for lying in a warrant affidavit about the reliability of an informant, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107 was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) when the trial court refused to allow the jury to hear that guns and money were seized under the tainted warrant. Although the excluded evidence was relevant to a defensive theory relating to the identity of the informant, the exclusion did not prevent defendant from presenting the substance of that defense to the jury. Delapaz v. State, 228 S.W.3d 183, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2377 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

27. Defendant's conviction of theft under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03 was affirmed because any error in the admission of her manager's testimony that the cleaning crew owner stated he saw defendant at the restaurant before the bank deposits were reported missing was harmless, as provided in Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), where the testimony was cumulative of other evidence of defendant's guilt; further, the testimony was admissible under the rule of optional completeness provided in Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defense counsel had invited a response from the State by suggesting that the manager did not know of anyone on the cleaning crew who saw defendant at the store. Sheridan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6942 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Habeas Corpus : Appeals : Certificate of Appealability

28. Defendant was not entitled to a certificate of appealability as to defendant's claim that his U.S. Const. amend. VI right to confront witnesses was violated when the trial court admitted into evidence, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107, testimony from a detective who described a conversation in which an accomplice stated that defendant had used the accomplice's knife to commit a murder; such claim was procedurally defaulted because defendant only asserted a hearsay objection at trial, which did not meet the specificity requirements of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Wright v. Quarterman, 470 F.3d 581, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28509 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006), cert. denied, 551 U.S. 1134, 127 S. Ct. 2996, 168 L. Ed. 2d 707, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 7775 (2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

29. In a murder case, the trial court did not err by overruling defendant's motion to suppress voluntary statements she gave to the police because, after saying that he had no objection to the written statement, defense counsel requested that the entire videotape statement be introduced pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107, and the videotapes of the full three-and-a-half hour interview were introduced in evidence as defense exhibits and played for the jury. As such, defendant could not assert that it was error to admit the videotaped interview at trial because it was she who offered it in evidence. Herron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7231 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26, 2008).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

30. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defense counsel's cross-examination opened the door under Tex. R. Evid. 107 to a videotaped interview of complainant because counsel asked whether the complainant "remembered" telling the interviewer that another person was in the room during the assault, even though she actually said she was alone with defendant; thus the question falsely suggested that the complainant had given inconsistent statements about the presence of another person during the assault and the admission was necessary to fully and fairly to explain the contents of the complainant's videotaped statement. Tovar v. State, 221 S.W.3d 185, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Best Evidence Rule

31. Because appellant did not object to the admission of a CD under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Parr v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3144, 2012 WL 1392614 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 23 2012).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Completeness

32. Defendant failed to show the court erred by admitting the exhibit since its admission violated the rule of optional completeness, because the rule did not provide for excluding the original exhibit. Adams v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6619, 2014 WL 2807978 (Tex. App. Dallas June 18 2014).

33. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the entire statement of the victim into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

34. In a child support dispute, the trial court did not err when it admitted, over the mother's "completeness" objection, the father's bank statements from 2003 to 2005 that did not include copies of the canceled checks referenced in each statement because the mother never offered any other document to complete the statements offered by the father, nor did it appear that such documents were available to offer. In the Interest of C.S., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2593, 2014 WL 972310 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 6 2014).

35. Admission of a police officer's report based on the rule of optional completeness was not an option because defendant's questions on cross-examination regarding the report were general, no reference was made with regard to specific statements in the report, and no portion of the report was read to the jury. Maxwell v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1514, 2014 WL 556377 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 12 2014).

36. Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Tex. R. Evid. 107 did not require admission of a portion of the officer's video and audio recording that the State redacted because the excluded portion of the video would not have countered or helped explain any impression created by the officer's direct testimony or the unredacted portion of the video. Godfrey v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 879, 2014 WL 309381 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

37. Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that Tex. R. Evid. 107 did not require admission of a portion of the officer's video and audio recording that the State redacted because the excluded portion of the video would not have countered or helped explain any impression created by the officer's direct testimony or the unredacted portion of the video. Godfrey v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 879, 2014 WL 309381 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

38. In a case in which a jury convicted defendant of solicitation to commit capital murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a recording of defendant's statement to police following her arrest. Although defendant claimed that her post-arrest statement was admissible under the rule of optional completeness, there was nothing in the record to indicate that the post-arrest statement was necessary to explain her earlier statement or to make it fully understood. Gelber v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 257, 2014 WL 98802 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 9 2014).

39. Employee did not meet the first requirement for the application of Tex. R. Evid. 107 as the employer did not introduce the disciplinary records into evidence, and the trial court did not err in excluding them from evidence. Moreno v. Tex. DOT, 440 S.W.3d 889, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15180, 2013 WL 6668714 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 18 2013).

40. Trial court did not err by refusing to admit text messages between the victim and third parties under this rule because the fact that the victim used profanity with others or communicated with other men was not necessary to explain the context of the text messages between defendant and the victim and defendant failed to point to any other text message relevant to the relationship and communications between defendant and the victim. Davis v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13242, 2013 WL 5781489 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 24 2013).

41. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the officer's testimony because defendant opened the door to it, where the trial court could allow the State to present evidence to clear up the erroneous impression by admitting evidence that the manual did have something to say about the other definition of intoxication; the trial court's ruling admitting the officer's testimony regarding the correlation between the HGN and alcohol concentration was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Jordy v. State, 413 S.W.3d 227, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12409, 2013 WL 5493408 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 3 2013).

42. Trial court did not err in allowing the tax appraisal district to introduce the taxpayer's complete applications for exemptions after the taxpayer sought to broaden the scope of its claim for an exemption and introduced only a portion of its applications. Harvest Life Found. v. Harris County Appraisal Dist., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6906 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 6 2013).

43. Although Tex. R. Evid. 107 is limited by Tex. R. Evid. 403, appellant failed to object that the evidence was substantially more prejudicial than probative, and to the extent he tried to raise a Rule 403 complaint on appeal, he did not preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Hailey v. State, 413 S.W.3d 457, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8717, 2012 WL 4936655 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 18 2012).

44. Court did not need to decide if the entire interview was on the same subject, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107, because even assuming the trial court committed error in permitting the taped interview to be played in its entirety, this nonconstitutional error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that (1) any extraneous information on the tape was cumulative of other evidence, and (2) any error in admitting the entire interview did not have a substantial influence on the verdict; witnesses described appellant's incriminating statements, appellant testified, which gave the jury a chance to assess his credibility, appellant still challenged the mother's credibility despite the introduction of the interview, other evidence was introduced that implicated appellant that was more damaging than the interview, and ample evidence supported the capital murder guilty verdict, and although there was no confession, appellant did not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence. Hailey v. State, 413 S.W.3d 457, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8717, 2012 WL 4936655 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 18 2012).

45. Probate court did not abuse its discretion by admitting redacted billing statements and excluding unredacted statements in a dispute over attorney's fees and expenses because the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107 was not an exception to the attorney-client privilege, and it did not mandate a waiver of the privilege. Even if the rule of optional completeness was found to apply, an administrator did not show that unredacted statements were necessary for the probate court to understand the attorney's fees recoverable from an estate; significant information was provided to the court in the redacted billing statements, and, when combined with the testimony of the guardian's attorneys, further information was not necessary for the court to understand the matter. In the Estate of Johnston, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4255, 2012 WL 1940656 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 30 2012).

46. At defendant's trial for indecency with a child, defense counsel's questioning of a caseworker created the false impression that the victim did not make an allegation of sexual abuse during the interview. The trial court did not err in admitting additional testimony from the caseworker under the rule of optional completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, to correct that false impression. Smith v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2510, 2012 WL 1067946 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

47. Appellate counsel for a prisoner, who was convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death, was not ineffective for habeas corpus relief for not complaining on appeal that the trial court should have admitted the rest of a witness's statement under the doctrine of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, even though the complaint was preserved for appellate review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), because counsel was justified in believing that any error was harmless since the rest of the statement would not have helped exonerate the prisoner; the Texas law of parties under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02 (2003) further supported the harmlessness of refusing to admit the full statement because the prisoner also could have been convicted if the prisoner aided in the ways described in § 7.02, and the evidence of the prisoner's extensive participation was strong enough that admitting the statement would not have changed the result. Hernandez v. Thaler, 463 Fed. Appx. 349, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 4256 (5th Cir. Tex. Mar. 1 2012).

48. Statements in a letter relating to defendant's abusive conduct causing the victim's suicidal thoughts were admissible under the rule of optional completeness because those statements were from the same document and on the same subject as the statements used by defendant, and defendant's cross-examination of the victim could have left a false impression with the jury that the victim's suicidal thoughts were due to issues other than defendant's conduct. Lofton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9666 (Tex. App.--Dallas Dec. 9, 2011).

49. Statements in a letter relating to defendant's abusive conduct causing the victim's suicidal thoughts were admissible because defendant's cross-examination of the victim could have left a false impression with the jury that the victim's suicidal thoughts were due to issues other than defendant's conduct. Lofton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9664, 2011 WL 6225415 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 9 2011).

50. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in admitting a videotape of an interview by a forensic interviewer of the victim because defendant's cross-examination of the victim about her specific statements in the forensic interview created the possibility of confusion and false impressions had the jury not been permitted to see and hear the conversation in context. Bailey v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5085, 2011 WL 2732596 (Tex. App. Eastland June 30 2011).

51. Appellate counsel's conclusion that an "optional completeness" argument had not been properly preserved for state appellate review was an objectively reasonable deduction because the specificity required by Tex. R. Evid. 103 and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) was lacking; nothing in the exchanges between petitioner inmate's trial counsel and the state trial court reasonably alerted the state trial court that the inmate was suggesting a detective should be permitted to testify to the clearly hearsay within hearsay details of a witness's written statement based upon the Texas Rule of Optional Completeness found in Tex. R. Evid. 107. Hernandez v. Thaler, 787 F. Supp. 2d 504, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123538 (W.D. Tex. May 12 2011).

52. Because the prosecution made no effort whatsoever to introduce any of the contents of a witness's written statement, under the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 107 the Texas Rule of Optional Completeness had no application to a detective's testimony regarding the contents of that written statement; the rule would not be implicated until such time as a party attempted to have a portion of an act, declaration, conversation, writing or recorded statement given in evidence. Hernandez v. Thaler, 787 F. Supp. 2d 504, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123538 (W.D. Tex. May 12 2011).

53. In a commercial dispute, the seller invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in response to a series of deposition questions; he later reversed his position and provided substantive answers to those questions. Under the rule of completeness set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 107, the trial court granted his motion to add allow testimony showing that the seller decided not to invoke the privilege and answered the questions. Ferro v. Dinicolantonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 955, 2011 WL 494741 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

54. By suggesting the victim's statement and testimony were inconsistent, appellant's counsel gave the State the right correct the false impressions, and because counsel used specific statements from an interview to challenge the victim's credibility, the entire recording was admissible; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the recording under Tex. R. Evid. 107 to clarify the contents of the victim's statement. Castillo v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8392, 2010 WL 4117674 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 20 2010).

55. Trial court did not err by admitting defendant's husband's statement because defendant presented a portion of the statement to the jury through a detective, and therefore the State was entitled to offer the remainder of the statement under Tex. R. Evid. 107. Roberson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6421, 2010 WL 3075612 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 5 2010).

56. Court could assume without deciding that defendant was correct that a videotape was not admissible as a prior consistent statement or prior inconsistent statement, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 801(e)(1)(B), even though he failed to raise the latter objection at trial and raised the former with insufficient specificity because the videotape was still admissible (1) to rebut the suggestion that the police fed the witness his answers to their questions, and (2) to show that the witness was not parroting what the police told him; defendant did not object or seek a limiting instruction under Tex. R. Evid. 105(a), such that the jury was free to consider the tape's contents for any purposes, plus the videotape was admissible to clarify what the witness actually said, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107. Franks v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3224, 2010 WL 1730032 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2010).

57. Trial court properly admitted challenged testimony under the rule of optional completeness; after the defense adduced defendant's wife's testimony that she believed her daughters' accusations because of other things that had happened in her marriage, the State was entitled to ask the wife what those things were, and by adducing testimony regarding defendant's unwelcome sexual advances and touching, the defense opened the door for the State to more fully develop the circumstances under which he would touch his wife. Schoff v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1350, 2010 WL 668904 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 23 2010).

58. In defendant's drug case, error in the admission of defendant statements that did not comply with Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 was harmless because the evidence was subsequently admitted through admission of a portion of an officer's report, admitted on the basis of the rule of optional completeness. Rascon v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 593, 2010 WL 337044 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 29 2010).

59. In defendant's murder case, the trial court could have found that it was appropriate to admit hearsay evidence under the rule of optional completeness because the written statements by the deaf victim and testimony by the deputy were brought in during the State's rebuttal in the punishment phase after defendant opened the door to the issue during his direct examination. Defendant told only part of the story, leaving the jury with a false impression of the situation. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9779 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

60. Court did not violate the rule of optional completeness by excluding a portion of defendant's statement because it did not concern the same subject matter as the portion offered by the prosecution (i.e., defendant's statement of guilt), and the redacted portion would have been cumulative of admitted evidence. Campa v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5065 (Tex. App. Dallas July 2 2009).

61. Defendant objected to the admission of recordings only on the ground that the recordings were not accurate and complete, and in his motion for new trial, he contended that this trial objection was based on the doctrine of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, but that was not a rule of exclusion; his objection at trial was too general to alert the trial court that he was actually objecting on the grounds that the recording equipment malfunctioned or that the recordings were manipulated and he did not argue in his new trial motion that he had a legitimate reason for not asserting these objections when the recordings were offered, such that the objections made for the first time in the new trial motion were not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Even if the matter was preserved, a witness's testimony was sufficient to meet the requirement that the evidence be authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901, plus defendant's complaint that the recordings were not accurate went to the weight of the evidence only and not to its admissibility. Manis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4909 (Tex. App. Dallas June 26 2009).

62. Defense counsel's cross-examination "opened the door" when he inquired about DNA results, and therefore, the trial court properly overruled defendant's hearsay objection and allowed the State to question a detective on re-direct about the actual DNA results of the vulvar swabs, which she had misstated during defendant's cross-examination. Because defendant opened the door to the detective's testimony regarding the DNA results, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's hearsay objection. Alvarez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3039, 2009 WL 1176440 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 30 2009).

63. In an intoxication manslaughter case, the trial court's decision to exclude the statements at issue did not violate the doctrine of optional completeness because the officer's testimony that people at the scene said they saw what happened did not leave a false impression with the jury, and the excluded statements were not necessary to fully understand the officer's testimony; he further testified that people were approaching him while he was laying the flare line on the scene and that he gave one person a stack of affidavits so that witnesses could begin writing down what they saw. The officer testified that he did not talk to every witness on the scene, thus informing the jury that not all witnesses testified at trial. Mole v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2838, 2009 WL 1099433 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 23 2009).

64. In response to a question seeking a yes-or-no answer, defendant volunteered information that suggested police brutality in his arrest, and thus defendant "opened up" the matter of the circumstances of his arrest, permitting the State to elicit additional evidence to explain fully and fairly those circumstances, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107. Penney v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2824, 2009 WL 1058742 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 21 2009).

65. Trial court acted within its discretion when it excluded the redacted portion of defendant's statement and thus the court overruled defendant's claim that the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was violated; because the excluded portion did not concern the same subject matter as the part offered by the prosecution, the rule did not apply, plus the trial court's refusal to admit the redacted portion did not create reversible harm under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(a), as the redacted portion would have been cumulative of admitted evidence. Campa v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2682 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 20 2009).

66. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that (1) defendant's half-brother's testimony did not substantially outweigh its prejudicial value. (2) the State's need for the evidence was considerable since it suggested that defendant misled the jury about the reason for his expulsion from the family home, and (3) the half-brother's testimony did not tend to suggest that the jury decide the case on an improper basis; the conduct in which the half-brother testified that appellant engaged with him, inappropriate touching and oral genital contact, was no more serious and potentially inflammatory than the offense defendant was charged with committing against the victim in this aggravated sexual assault trial and the testimony did not confuse or distract the or take an inordinate amount of time, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that the probative value of testimony outweighed any unfairly prejudicial impact and the testimony was admissible under the rule of optional completeness. Goodwin v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 875, 2009 WL 311457 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 10 2009).

67. Even if the trial court abused its discretion by allowing defendant's half-brother to testify under the rule of optional completeness, the error was harmless because defendant admitted on cross-examination that he sexually assaulted him and defendant did not object to the questioning on this subject, and improper admission of evidence was not reversible error if the same facts are shown by other evidence that was unchallenged. Goodwin v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 875, 2009 WL 311457 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 10 2009).

68. Defendant suggested on direct examination that he was kicked out of a home because of his alcoholic step-father's abusiveness, but according to his half-brother, defendant was actually kicked out of the house, at least in part, because he molested the half-brother, and pursuant to the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the State was entitled to cull details to paint a broader picture of the event referred to by defendant, provided those details were on the same subject and the prejudicial value of such testimony did not substantially outweigh its probative value; the half-brother's testimony was on the same subject and thus completed the picture painted by defendant about his life. Goodwin v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 875, 2009 WL 311457 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 10 2009).

69. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly excluded a psychiatrist's memo because the entirety of it was not on the same subject as the portion read aloud by the doctor during direct examination. The memo covered her entire conversation with defendant which took place over more than six hours, and much of the memo was not on the same subject as the portion read into evidence by the prosecutor. Whipple v. State, 281 S.W.3d 482, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6344 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

70. Witness statement was properly admitted because the statement was not merely referred to during the testimony, but portions of the statement were actually read aloud on the record by defendant's attorney, and therefore, the rest of the statement was properly offered into evidence under the rule of optional completeness because it related to the same subject -- the shooting that the witness observed. Jones v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3797 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2008).

71. Defendant did not explain how Tex. R. Evid. 107 operated in furtherance of the admission of autopsy photographs, such that the point was inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38 and presented nothing for review. Lopez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3167 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 1 2008).

72. In defendant's drug case, the court properly precluded defendant from offering the informant's criminal record under the rule of completeness because a deputy did not offer details about the background check of the informant, he did not testify that he had obtained a criminal history as part of the background check, and therefore, because the State did not introduce any portion of the informant's background check or criminal history into evidence, there was nothing for defendant to offer for purposes of "completeness." Kuecker v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2778 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 17 2008).

73. During defendant's criminal trial for murder, the trial judge violated the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 when he allowed a 911 operator to testify that he asked defendant if he wanted to talk about what had happened, but excluded defendant's response indicating that he shot the victim in self-defense; the error was nonconstitutional, because defendant testified about his longstanding strife with the victim; the trial court's erroneous exclusion of his 911 statements did not prevent him from fully presenting his self-defense theory. Walters v. State, 247 S.W.3d 204, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1701 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

74. In order to invoke the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, defendant had to show that the portion of the statement he sought to admit was part of the same statement previously admitted by the opposing party, but his statement to a detective was not part of his statement to a nurse, as the statement given to the nurse was for medical assessment and the statement given to the detective was for criminal investigation purposes. Ramirez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8349 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 23 2007).

75. Defendant failed to object to evidence on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 107 and thus defendant failed to preserve for review this complaint, as his trial objection did not comport with his complaint on appeal. Martinez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7482 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 13 2007).

76. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 107 by excluding evidence that the complainant had falsely accused defendant of sexually assaulting another child where the State did not present any evidence at trial concerning the complainant's accusation that defendant molested the other child and where defendant himself, on cross-examination of the complainant, elicited testimony that the complainant had falsely reported to police that defendant molested the other child; with regard to the testimony of the other child's mother, defendant did not state what specific evidence was omitted and had not demonstrated that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that her vague recollections that defendant might have called her house one to four times created an incomplete or misleading impression that defendant molested her son, or that such evidence was necessary to make her testimony fully understood. Billodeau v. State, 263 S.W.3d 318, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6404 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

77. Defendant raised the subject of the victim's letters and inquired into specific portions of their content, which entitled the State to introduce, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, those portions of the letters addressing the same subject, but the State was not entitled to introduce the letters in their entirety, and the letters were thus reviewed by both sides to determine what portions to redact; by creating false impressions of the relationship between defendant and the victim, defendant invited a reply from the State to fully explain the content of the letters, and hearsay was admissible when it went to clarify other hearsay evidence elicited by the opposition, such that the court found no error in the admission of the letters. Rios v. State, 230 S.W.3d 252, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5123 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

78. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence that the victim had falsely accused defendant of sexually assaulting another child because the State did not present any evidence at trial concerning that accusation as required by Tex. R. Evid. 107. Billodeau v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4462 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2007).

79. On direct examination by the State, a nurse orally recounted selected portions of her report, leaving out any reference to abuse by the victim's natural father; defendant argued that the trial court erred by refusing his request to introduce the nurse's full report into evidence; however, the unadmitted statements to which counsel directed the appellate court's attention were not directly related to the assault case, and there was nothing about that assault that the unadmitted statements would illuminate; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the motion to present the remainder of the report to the jury for its consideration pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107. Bryant v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3054 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 20 2007).

80. In an assault on a correctional officer case, a court erred by admitting a portion of the State's document regarding the incident because, under the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 107 it was error to admit the exhibit into evidence when a portion thereof had only been read into evidence; however, the error was harmless because the evidence had already been admitted without objection through another witness. Stewart v. State, 221 S.W.3d 306, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

81. Defendant immediately objected when the State offered a prosecution report into evidence pursuant to the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107, and thus the court found that defendant adequately apprised the trial court of the basis for the complaint on appeal, such that it was properly preserved for review. Mata v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2319 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 26 2007).

82. Defense counsel's use of a prosecution report to cross-examine a witness did not invoke Tex. R. Evid. 107, as other than questioning the witness about the time of the offense, the report was not read to the jury, such that the trial court erred in admitting the narrative portion of the report into evidence; however, it was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) given that the State presented overwhelming evidence supporting the jury's guilty verdict and much of the contents of the report were proven by other evidence introduced at trial, and the contents not proven by other evidence were not emphasized by the State. Mata v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2319 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 26 2007).

83. In a second trial for sexual abuse, it was error under Tex. R. Evid. 107 to admit the entirety of the complainant's testimony from the first trial, even though the defense used part of the testimony for impeachment, because there was no showing that the entire prior testimony was either on the same subject or was necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression of the witness' testimony. Sneed v. State, 209 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10067 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

84. Defendant was not entitled to a certificate of appealability as to defendant's claim that his U.S. Const. amend. VI right to confront witnesses was violated when the trial court admitted into evidence, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107, testimony from a detective who described a conversation in which an accomplice stated that defendant had used the accomplice's knife to commit a murder; such claim was procedurally defaulted because defendant only asserted a hearsay objection at trial, which did not meet the specificity requirements of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Wright v. Quarterman, 470 F.3d 581, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 28509 (5th Cir. Tex. 2006), cert. denied, 551 U.S. 1134, 127 S. Ct. 2996, 168 L. Ed. 2d 707, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 7775 (2007).

85. Trial court did not err, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107, the rule of optional completeness, in redacting the last sentence of defendant's statement that stated he was willing to take a polygraph because, inter alia, the evidence he sought to introduce was inadmissible, defendant made no attempt to introduce the remainder of the statement and he failed to show why it was necessary to admit the entire statement to explain the portion read by the State. Weaver v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9996 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

86. Defendant's arguments under Tex. R. Evid. 107 were inadequately briefed under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h) and defendant waived appellate review of the issue. Dixon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7953 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 5 2006).

87. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the State's request under Tex. R. Evid. 107 to introduce a videotape of the forensic interview of the victim; while the State referred to the existence of the tape, the State did not inquire into the substance of what was contained on the tape, and on redirect by defendant, substantive matters contained on the tape were raised; by doing so, defendant opened the door and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the videotape, and by challenging the credibility of the victim using specific statements on the videotape, the entire tape was admissible. Rodarte v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6938 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2006).

88. In a trial for a "shaken-baby" murder, the report of a Child Protective Services investigator was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because the matter was "opened up" when defense counsel questioned the investigator about how she reached the conclusions stated in her report, and then attempted to impeach her by raising questions about the affidavits which were attached. San Martin Adriano v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7140 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2005).

89. When a letter was used to show that a bank had said that it was a lender to a developer, both paragraphs of the letter, read together, indicated that the bank had not made a false statement about the loan, and the loan was conditional; on that basis, a corporation's suit for negligent misrepresentation failed. C. E. Barker, Inc. v. Firstcapital Bank, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3814 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 19 2005).

90. Trial court did not err in ruling that the entire videotape containing an interview with the child sexual assault victim was admissible on the State's motion, under the rule of optional completeness, if defendant introduced specific segments to impeach the victim's testimony, as that ruling was necessary to keep statements made in the interview from being taken out of context. Miles v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2919 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

91. Defendant opened the door to the question of why the child victim did not testify, and a detective's testimony regarding the competency of child witnesses was appropriate to clarify the issue pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107; in addition, the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701 because (1) the detective had personal experience with child witnesses and their ability or inability to testify, (2) the detective's testimony was based on inferences made as a result of the detective's personal experience and observations, and (3) common sense also dictated that a three-year-old child might not be fit to testify. Martinez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1822 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

92. Under the rule of optional completeness, the trial court did not err in excluding a tape-recorded oral statement that defendant made to police following his arrest. The record did not establish that any portion of the statement was read or played for the jury; further, defendant did not show that it was necessary to admit the entire audio-taped statement to explain or understand the portions referred to by the State, nor had he contended that the State misrepresented the statements in any way. Smith v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1087 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 9 2005).

93. Trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 107 by excluding portions of a business record that consisted of a report regarding defendant's speak to a counselor while in jail because the report was not admitted for the truth of the matter but was admitted to impeach defendant's testimony that he could not read and write. Ponce-Duron v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10149 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2004).

94. In a money laundering case, a court did not err in failing to admit a videotape under Tex. R. Evid. 107 where the State introduced the entire conversation between the officer and defendant, and to the extent defendant argued that the videotape showed his ability to speak and understand the English language, Rule 107 was not intended for that purpose. Pham v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9439 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 27 2004).

95. Record confirmed that the State used the victim's autopsy report solely to establish the victim's cause of death. Because the various tattoos were not germane to the same subject, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the redacted autopsy report. Wortham v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8810 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 30 2004).

96. In an aggravated assault case, although pursuant to the rule of optional completeness the State was entitled to cull details to paint a broader picture of the event referred to by defendant, provided the details were on the same subject as the shooting referred to by defendant and the prejudicial value of such testimony did not substantially outweigh its probative value, the State went beyond clarifying any possible misconception defendant created by delving into his defensive strategy in the prior conviction (self-defense), whether he accepted a plea bargain, and whether such defensive strategy worked. Arebalo v. State, 143 S.W.3d 402, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7157 (Tex. App. Austin 2004).

97. Defendant contended that the letters he wrote to the victim's mother should have been admitted to show his continued remorsefulness, but at the same time, he conceded that the substance of the letters was basically identical to the letter already in evidence; given those arguments, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the letters, and defendant's argument that the letters should have been admitted to show his continued remorsefulness did not amount to an argument for admission under the rule of optional completeness. Miller v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7273 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 12 2004).

98. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 and Tex. R. Evid. 107, which comprised the rule of optional completeness as excluding the letter and failing to include a limiting instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14, and gave rise to a strong possibility that the jury could have formed a false impression regarding defendant's intent such that defendant's substantial rights were affected and she was prevented from adequately presenting her defense. Elmore v. State,

116 S.W.3d 801, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

99. Tex. R. Evid. 107 is properly invoked when an opposing party reads part, but not all of a statement into evidence. Merely referring to a statement or to a quotation from it does not invoke Tex. R. Evid. 107. Goldberg v. State, 95 S.W.3d 345, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6114 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1190, 124 S. Ct. 1436, 158 L. Ed. 2d 99, 2004 U.S. LEXIS 1219 (2004).

100. Tex. R. Evid. 107 did not permit defendant to get everything that he told a police officer about his activities of the day of the murder into evidence because it would have been self-serving hearsay and it was not necessary to correct a false or incorrect impression created by the officer's testimony. Goldberg v. State, 95 S.W.3d 345, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 6114 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1190, 124 S. Ct. 1436, 158 L. Ed. 2d 99, 2004 U.S. LEXIS 1219 (2004).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : General Overview

101. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the officer's testimony because defendant opened the door to it, where the trial court could allow the State to present evidence to clear up the erroneous impression by admitting evidence that the manual did have something to say about the other definition of intoxication; the trial court's ruling admitting the officer's testimony regarding the correlation between the HGN and alcohol concentration was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Jordy v. State, 413 S.W.3d 227, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12409, 2013 WL 5493408 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 3 2013).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Transcripts & Translations : General Overview

102. In an assault on a correctional officer case, a court erred by admitting a portion of the State's document regarding the incident because, under the plain language of Tex. R. Evid. 107 it was error to admit the exhibit into evidence when a portion thereof had only been read into evidence; however, the error was harmless because the evidence had already been admitted without objection through another witness. Stewart v. State, 221 S.W.3d 306, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2533 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Evidence : Documentary Evidence : Writings : Transcripts & Translations : Deposition Transcripts

103. In a commercial dispute, the seller invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in response to a series of deposition questions; he later reversed his position and provided substantive answers to those questions. Under the rule of completeness set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 107, the trial court granted his motion to add allow testimony showing that the seller decided not to invoke the privilege and answered the questions. Ferro v. Dinicolantonio, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 955, 2011 WL 494741 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : General Overview

104. Statements in a letter relating to defendant's abusive conduct causing the victim's suicidal thoughts were admissible under the rule of optional completeness because those statements were from the same document and on the same subject as the statements used by defendant, and defendant's cross-examination of the victim could have left a false impression with the jury that the victim's suicidal thoughts were due to issues other than defendant's conduct. Lofton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9666 (Tex. App.--Dallas Dec. 9, 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Credibility of Declarants : General Overview

105. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : General Overview

106. During defendant's criminal trial for two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the investigating detective was permitted to testify as to hearsay evidence relating the child's grandmother's concern that another illicit sexual contact had occurred; the testimony was admissible as "the whole on the same subject" inquired into by the State and thus allowed by Tex. R. Evid. 107. Phillips v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9509 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 2 2006).

107. In a murder case, videotapes were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d) because they were offered to prove that conversations had taken place, and in addition, the tapes were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defendant opened the door by suggesting that the conversations had not occurred. Williams v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5351 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 12 2005).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Admissibility in Criminal Trials

108. Trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 107 by excluding portions of a business record that consisted of a report regarding defendant's speak to a counselor while in jail because the report was not admitted for the truth of the matter but was admitted to impeach defendant's testimony that he could not read and write. Ponce-Duron v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10149 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 12 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : General Overview

109. Defendant's conviction of theft under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03 was affirmed because any error in the admission of her manager's testimony that the cleaning crew owner stated he saw defendant at the restaurant before the bank deposits were reported missing was harmless, as provided in Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), where the testimony was cumulative of other evidence of defendant's guilt; further, the testimony was admissible under the rule of optional completeness provided in Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defense counsel had invited a response from the State by suggesting that the manager did not know of anyone on the cleaning crew who saw defendant at the store. Sheridan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6942 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Residual Exceptions : Necessity

110. Trial court did not abuse its discretion on excluding appellant's recorded interview with the police where the trial court could have reasonably concluded the statement was not res gestae of the offense or arrest given that appellant made the statement sometime after the burglaries and well before his arrest. Lee v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8481 (Tex. App. Dallas July 10 2013).

111. Trial court did not abuse its discretion on excluding appellant's recorded interview with the police where the State did not introduce any part of the recorded statement into evidence, and Tex. R. Evid. 107 was not invoked by a mere reference to a document, statement, or act. Lee v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8481 (Tex. App. Dallas July 10 2013).

112. Trial court did not abuse its discretion on excluding appellant's recorded interview with the police where nothing in a witness' brief statement that appellant sold some property at a drug house because he needed money created a false impression or misled the jury, and thus, the statement was not necessary to contradict or explain any acts or declarations offered by the State. Lee v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8481 (Tex. App. Dallas July 10 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Spontaneous Statements : General Overview

113. In defendant's murder case, the trial court could have found that it was appropriate to admit hearsay evidence under the rule of optional completeness because the written statements by the deaf victim and testimony by the deputy were brought in during the State's rebuttal in the punishment phase after defendant opened the door to the issue during his direct examination. Defendant told only part of the story, leaving the jury with a false impression of the situation. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9779 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Statements of Child Abuse

114. Complainant initially told her school counselor that defendant had touched her inappropriately; however, the complainant testified at trial that she had made up the scenario; a videotape of complainant was admissible because defendant's attorney opened the door by insinuating that if a person were to watch the video, he could "see what happened." Roberts v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6214 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 7 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : General Overview

115. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred by admitting hearsay evidence from a police officer about what transpired behind a restaurant before the officer's arrival was overruled on appeal because even if the testimony concerning what a store's employees told the officer related to defendant's stated issue, the testimony was admissible because it explained how defendant became a suspect in the investigation; generally, when evidence was necessary to explain a matter opened up by the other party, a trial court could decide to admit evidence which would otherwise be inadmissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107. Godwin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 15 2007).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Coconspirators : General Overview

116. Where defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit his co-conspirator's out-of-court statement in which he said that he was involved in the crime but that a third co-conspirator fired the shot that struck the victim. The statement was not admissible under the rule of optional completeness, because defendant was not trying to complete the jury's picture of the assault but to rebut the complainant's testimony that defendant was the last person he saw holding the gun before he was shot. Perkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14372, 2013 WL 6459390 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 26 2013).

Evidence : Privileges : Attorney-Client Privilege : Exceptions

117. Probate court did not abuse its discretion by admitting redacted billing statements and excluding unredacted statements in a dispute over attorney's fees and expenses because the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 106, 107 was not an exception to the attorney-client privilege, and it did not mandate a waiver of the privilege. Even if the rule of optional completeness was found to apply, an administrator did not show that unredacted statements were necessary for the probate court to understand the attorney's fees recoverable from an estate; significant information was provided to the court in the redacted billing statements, and, when combined with the testimony of the guardian's attorneys, further information was not necessary for the court to understand the matter. In the Estate of Johnston, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4255, 2012 WL 1940656 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 30 2012).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Curative Admissibility

118. At defendant's trial for three counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child and two counts of indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting the entire statement of the victim into evidence under the rule of completeness. The State was allowed to question a detective about the victim's statements and the differences between the two police reports, because defense counsel opened the door by asking questions based on the discrepancies between the reports. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3955, 2014 WL 1410344 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 10 2014).

119. Where defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the trial court did not err in refusing to admit his co-conspirator's out-of-court statement in which he said that he was involved in the crime but that a third co-conspirator fired the shot that struck the victim. The statement was not admissible under the rule of optional completeness, because defendant was not trying to complete the jury's picture of the assault but to rebut the complainant's testimony that defendant was the last person he saw holding the gun before he was shot. Perkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14372, 2013 WL 6459390 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 26 2013).

120. Trial court did not err by admitting only a portion of defendant's videotaped interview without showing jurors the entire interview did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 107 because it could have concluded that references in the full interview to extraneous offenses would likely create confusion and the record did not show that the entire interview was necessary to reduce the possibility of the jury receiving a false impression. Taylor v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10129 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

121. Trial court did not err by not admitting his accomplice's written statement in its entirety and the written agreement the accomplice made with the State in exchange for his testimony pursuant to the rule of optional completeness because the evidence was not necessary to explain the evidence of the offense itself, the accomplice admitting to participating in the robbery, and an officer testified that the accomplice was believed to be a member of the same gang as defendant and the co-defendant. Hernandez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9291 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2013).

122. Defendant's statement to police that he had, 20 years earlier, been accused of improper conduct with his former stepdaughter, was not relevant to prove defendant's intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and it was unduly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Defendant did not "open the door" to admission of the statement, Tex. R. Evid. 107, by responding to a question by the State. However, given the evidence of guilt, the error was harmless. Cressman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9849, 2012 WL 5974013 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 29 2012).

123. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the entire written statement of the complaining witness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defense counsel chose to give the jury special information found in the statement, and admitting the entire statement allowed the jury to place the portions injected into the case in context and minimize the chance that the jury might have believed that the witness gave the officer an inconsistent account of her encounter with defendant. Kelly v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 906 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 1 2012).

124. There was no abuse of discretion by admitting the child's interview under Tex. R. Evid. 107 and over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection, because the interview was inherently probative and necessary for the Tex. R. Evid. 107 purpose for which it was admitted, and it was unlikely to distract the jury from the issues in the case; although the defense argued that the State should just be allowed to ask follow-up questions, the jury would not have had any yardstick by which to measure the effect of the interviewer's questions and techniques on the child, which occurred before the child testified at trial, other than by seeing the actual interview. Ibenyenwa v. State, 2011

Tex. App. LEXIS 9908, 2011 WL 6260874 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 15 2011).

125. There was no err in denying defendant's request to present testimony during the guilt/innocence phase from a physician that performed a pelvic examination of the complainant during the previous year based upon an allegation that defendant had sexually assaulted her at that time, because Tex. R. Evid. 412 contained five exceptions, and the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was not listed as one of the exceptions. Williams v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8754, 2010 WL 4324430 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 28 2010).

126. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting the admission of the witness's written statement because defense counsel misquoted the handwritten portion of the statement and actually created a visual of the misquoted statement for the jury to view, and therefore the rule of completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was properly invoked. Bell v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6635 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

127. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence concerning defendant juvenile's disciplinary problems in high school and his obsession with a girlfriend where the juvenile's counsel had opened the door to the juvenile's past behavioral problems. Such testimony was in direct relation to counsel's questions relating to the juvenile's stepmother not wanting him back. In re D. A. H., 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6537 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 27, 2008).

128. Trial court reasonably concluded that defendant opened the door to allowing into evidence the results of a portable breath test, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, and correctly overruled defendant's objection to the lack of reliability evidence because defendant's questions at trial necessarily implicated what a trooper saw on a portable breath testing machine following defendant's test because (1) defendant's questions went beyond merely asking if the machine worked correctly; (2) defendant asked whether the machine gave a result and if that result was saved; and (3) in the context of whether a portable breath tester worked when used on defendant, the only way the trooper would know this was by reading the digital readout. Baley v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9582 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 6 2007).

129. Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of extraneous bad acts that defendant allegedly committed where defendant invited the inquiry by suggesting to the jury that there was some relationship between defendant and a police officer; even if the evidence was admitted erroneously, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the complainants had already testified in front of the jury about defendant's prior disturbances. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9176 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 26 2007).

130. In a case alleging aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, defendant was not allowed to question witnesses regarding a previous child abuse complaint against the same child since it was not relevant or material to the offense, and a mother could not have been questioned about specific instances of conduct; moreover, the mother's testimony during direct examination did not leave a misleading impression with the jury which needed clarification under Tex. R. Evid. 107; the focus of the prior investigation was a grandmother, who was not a witness in the case. Hernandez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6815 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 23 2007).

131. Trial court's admission into evidence-over a hearsay objection-of three of four related telephone conversations, and subsequent exclusion of the fourth conversation by sustaining a hearsay objection, was an abuse of discretion under the rule of optional completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, and the error could not be said not to have contributed to defendant's conviction or punishment; defendant sought to introduce a recording of the entirety of the conversations, which would have included the remainder of the content, and allowed the jury to determine for itself his demeanor without filtration through a third party, which was the very purpose of the rule of optional completeness. Walters v. State, 206 S.W.3d 780, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9555 (Tex. App. Texarkana

132. Under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the State was properly allowed to present testimony of a driving while intoxicated defendant's videotaped statements about his drinking, even though the trial court had previously suppressed the audio portion of the tape because of its poor quality, because defendant attempted to impeach the officer's credibility as to the basis for his opinion that defendant had been drinking, as permitted by Tex. R. Evid 607. Cadena v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8622 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 5 2006).

133. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to exclude the victim's statement that she was fearful of the police because of her DWI probation because the two statements at issue were not on the same subject as required for the rule of optional completeness; the State offered the victim's statements to identify defendant. Sabillon v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2006).

134. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, defense counsel's cross-examination opened the door under Tex. R. Evid. 107 to a videotaped interview of complainant because counsel asked whether the complainant "remembered" telling the interviewer that another person was in the room during the assault, even though she actually said she was alone with defendant; thus the question falsely suggested that the complainant had given inconsistent statements about the presence of another person during the assault and the admission was necessary to fully and fairly to explain the contents of the complainant's videotaped statement. Tovar v. State, 221 S.W.3d 185, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6440 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

135. It was not error to refuse to allow defendant to put on evidence of the sentences that his codefendants received after they testified in his capital murder trial; there was no evidence that a false impression was created with regard to two of the codefendants, because the record did not show the outcomes of their cases, and evidence regarding the third codefendant's sentence would not have benefitted defendant. Johnson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1897 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 9 2006).

136. Trial court did not err in ruling that the entire videotape containing an interview with the child sexual assault victim was admissible on the State's motion, under the rule of optional completeness, if defendant introduced specific segments to impeach the victim's testimony, as that ruling was necessary to keep statements made in the interview from being taken out of context. Miles v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2919 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 14 2005).

137. In an aggravated sexual assault case, the admission of the complainant's redacted medical records did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 107 because the omission of chlamydia test results did not create a misleading impression. Scott v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1872 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 10 2005).

138. Defendant was not entitled to introduce the entirety of a witness's prior statement where the State briefly questioned the witness on cross-examination about the statement. Tex. R. Evid. 107 was not properly invoked because the State never sought to introduce the statement into evidence nor did the State directly read any portion of it to the jury. Burke v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 198 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 11 2005).

139. Defendant's claim that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding a letter she wrote in response to a letter written to her by the police chief when the chief's letter was admitted into evidence was upheld as a violation of Tex. R. Evid. 106 and Tex. R. Evid. 107, which comprised the rule of optional completeness as excluding the letter and failing to include a limiting instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.14, and gave rise to a strong possibility that the jury could have formed a false impression regarding defendant's intent such that defendant's substantial rights were affected and she was prevented from adequately presenting her defense. Elmore v. State, 116 S.W.3d 801, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7163 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

140. During defendant's trial for capital murder, the court did not err in excluding a video recording containing a redacted portion of defendant's statement to the police, during which defendant admitted participation in the burglary, but denied direct responsibility for killing the victim; there was no evidence that the exhibit was necessary to make an earlier "I'm sorry" statement fully understood. Estrada v. State, 352 S.W.3d 762, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6739 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 24 2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

141. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in limiting his cross-examination of two witnesses in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 107, he did not point the appellate court to any place in the record where he lodged an objection under Rule 107; where defendant's complaint was different than that presented below, the appellate court did not address it. Roth v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 180 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 8 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : General Overview

142. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Admissibility of Evidence : General Overview

143. Complainant initially told her school counselor that defendant had touched her inappropriately; however, the complainant testified at trial that she had made up the scenario; a videotape of complainant was admissible because defendant's attorney opened the door by insinuating that if a person were to watch the video, he could "see what happened." Roberts v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6214 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 7 2007).

144. Trial court did not err, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107, the rule of optional completeness, in redacting the last sentence of defendant's statement that stated he was willing to take a polygraph because, inter alia, the evidence he sought to introduce was inadmissible, defendant made no attempt to introduce the remainder of the statement and he failed to show why it was necessary to admit the entire statement to explain the portion read by the State. Weaver v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9996 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 15 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : Conditional Admissions

145. During defendant's trial for capital murder, the court did not err in excluding a video recording containing a redacted portion of defendant's statement to the police, during which defendant admitted participation in the burglary, but denied direct responsibility for killing the victim; there was no evidence that the exhibit was necessary to make an earlier "I'm sorry" statement fully understood. Estrada v. State, 352 S.W.3d 762, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6739 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 24 2011).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

146. Rule of optional completeness was not invoked where the State did not admit any part of either video-recorded statement, and the detective did not testify to any particular statements that defendant made during either interview. Trejo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5046, 2011 WL 2637458 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 6 2011).

147. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred by admitting hearsay evidence from a police officer about what transpired behind a restaurant before the officer's arrival was overruled on appeal because even if the testimony concerning what a store's employees told the officer related to defendant's stated issue, the testimony was admissible because it explained how defendant became a suspect in the investigation; generally, when evidence was necessary to explain a matter opened up by the other party, a trial court could decide to admit evidence which would otherwise be inadmissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107. Godwin v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6458 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 15 2007).

148. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in violation of Tex. R. Evid. 107 by excluding evidence that the complainant had falsely accused defendant of sexually assaulting another child where the State did not present any evidence at trial concerning the complainant's accusation that defendant molested the other child and where defendant himself, on cross-examination of the complainant, elicited testimony that the complainant had falsely reported to police that defendant molested the other child; with regard to the testimony of the other child's mother, defendant did not state what specific evidence was omitted and had not demonstrated that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that her vague recollections that defendant might have called her house one to four times created an incomplete or misleading impression that defendant molested her son, or that such evidence was necessary to make her testimony fully understood. Billodeau v. State, 263 S.W.3d 318, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6404 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

149. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 107, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a videotape of the child victim's interview with a forensic interviewer about defendant's sexual assault of the victim; counsel's examination of the interviewer created potential confusion and false impressions that made the admission of the videotape necessary. Aguirre v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1089 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 9 2006).

150. Defendant opened the door to the question of why the child victim did not testify, and a detective's testimony regarding the competency of child witnesses was appropriate to clarify the issue pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 107; in addition, the testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 701 because (1) the detective had personal experience with child witnesses and their ability or inability to testify, (2) the detective's testimony was based on inferences made as a result of the detective's personal experience and observations, and (3) common sense also dictated that a three-year-old child might not be fit to testify. Martinez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1822 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 10 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Character Evidence

151. In a murder trial, there was no error, after allowing testimony about a conversation in which defendant expressed a desire to get rid of the victim, in excluding further evidence offered under Tex. R. Evid. 107, the rule of optional completeness; the evidence that defendant sought--allegations that the victim had sexually abused their child and was involved with child pornography--was properly found to be more prejudicial than probative under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because the evidence did not tend to show that defendant's desire to get rid of the victim was any less serious. Glover v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8852 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 8 2007).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

152. On appeal from his convictions for continuous sexual abuse, aggravated sexual assault, and indecency with a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the child's interview under Tex. R. Evid. 107 and did not abuse its discretion by admitting the evidence over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection. The interview was inherently probative to the issue of whether the interviewer's technique amounted to "coaching" the child and was the only evidence of whether the child equivocated in the interview; moreover, it was unlikely to distract the jury from the issues in the case. Ibenyenwa v. State, 367 S.W.3d 420, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2333, 2012 WL 955401 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2012).

153. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly excluded a psychiatrist's memo because the entirety of it was not on the same subject as the portion read aloud by the doctor during direct examination. The memo covered her entire conversation with defendant which took place over more than six hours, and much of the memo was not on the same subject as the portion read into evidence by the prosecutor. Whipple v. State, 281 S.W.3d 482, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6344 (Tex. App. El Paso 2008).

154. In an aggravated assault case, although pursuant to the rule of optional completeness the State was entitled to cull details to paint a broader picture of the event referred to by defendant, provided the details were on the same subject as the shooting referred to by defendant and the prejudicial value of such testimony did not substantially outweigh its probative value, the State went beyond clarifying any possible misconception defendant created by delving into his defensive strategy in the prior conviction (self-defense), whether he accepted a plea bargain, and whether such defensive strategy worked. Arebalo v. State, 143 S.W.3d 402, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7157 (Tex. App. Austin 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

155. Defendant's statement to police that he had, 20 years earlier, been accused of improper conduct with his former stepdaughter, was not relevant to prove defendant's intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and it was unduly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Defendant did not "open the door" to admission of the statement, Tex. R. Evid. 107, by responding to a question by the State. However, given the evidence of guilt, the error was harmless. Cressman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9849, 2012 WL 5974013 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 29 2012).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

156. On appeal from his convictions for continuous sexual abuse, aggravated sexual assault, and indecency with a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the child's interview under Tex. R. Evid. 107 and did not abuse its discretion by admitting the evidence over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection. The interview was inherently probative to the issue of whether the interviewer's technique amounted to "coaching" the child and was the only evidence of whether the child equivocated in the interview; moreover, it was unlikely to distract the jury from the issues in the case. Ibenyenwa v. State, 367 S.W.3d 420, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2333, 2012 WL 955401 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 22 2012).

157. In a case alleging aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, defendant was not allowed to question witnesses regarding a previous child abuse complaint against the same child since it was not relevant or material to the offense, and a mother could not have been questioned about specific instances of conduct; moreover, the mother's testimony during direct examination did not leave a misleading impression with the jury which needed clarification under Tex. R. Evid. 107; the focus of the prior investigation was a grandmother, who was not a witness in the case. Hernandez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6815 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 23 2007).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : General Overview

158. There was no err in denying defendant's request to present testimony during the guilt/innocence phase from a physician that performed a pelvic examination of the complainant during the previous year based upon an allegation that defendant had sexually assaulted her at that time, because Tex. R. Evid. 412 contained five exceptions, and the rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was not listed as one of the exceptions. Williams v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8754, 2010 WL 4324430 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 28 2010).

Evidence : Relevance : Sex Offenses : Rape Shield Laws

159. In a trial for defendant's sexual assault of his 12-year-old daughter, evidence that the victim had been previously assaulted by another relative was properly excluded in the punishment phase after the victim described the impact of the assault, including three attempted suicides. The rule of optional completeness under Tex. R. Evid. 107 was inapplicable because a prior act, conversation, declaration, or written or recorded statement was not at issue. Delapaz v. State, 297 S.W.3d 824, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7510 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 24 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : General Overview

160. Trial court abused its discretion in designating the child's mother as the outcry witness, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072, because her testimony was that the child only made a general allusion to something that happened to him, the mother's lack of knowledge was confirmed at trial, and the child first described the alleged offense to the child's psychotherapist, who was the proper outcry witness; even assuming that the mother was the proper outcry witness, the trial court properly admitted the psychotherapist's statement under the rule of optional completeness, because defense counsel's questioning left the jury with the impression that the child was not to be believed and that he had not accused defendant during the therapy session, and the State was entitled to correct that impression under the rule, and there was no harm because the psychotherapist was the proper outcry witness. Hatcher v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3734 (Tex. App. Eastland May 4 2006).

161. Defendant's objection, to a psychotherapist's testimony that a child abuse report was made after interviewing the victim, differed at trial from that on appeal, and nothing was presented for review; however, the court noted that the victim's statement to the psychotherapist was properly allowed either as the proper outcry statement under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.072 or as a statement under the doctrine of optional completeness. Hatcher v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3734 (Tex. App. Eastland May 4 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : General Overview

162. Horse owner was properly permitted to testify in rebuttal that a veterinarian who testified that the horse owner's filly did not die because of any actions taken by the horse farm owners, with whom the horse owner left his filly, had told the horse owner that the filly died because the horse farm owners failed to get the filly to the veterinary clinic sooner. The testimony pertained to the same subject matter as did veterinarian's testimony and was directly contrary to veterinarian's testimony. Therefore, the evidence was clearly admissible for the limited purpose of impeaching the veterinarian's earlier testimony, and the trial court properly admitted it over the horse farm owners' hearsay objection. Gabriel v. Lovewell, 164 S.W.3d 835, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4060 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

Evidence : Testimony : Credibility : Impeachment : Prior Inconsistent Statements

163. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 613 when the trial court admitted the transcript of a witness's grand jury testimony under the rule of optional completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, even though the witness unequivocally admitted to making the prior inconsistent statements raised by defendant during cross-examination. The witness's illiteracy necessitated that both attorneys read the prior testimony aloud to the witness, which could have caused confusion for the jury concerning the substance of the prior testimony. Green v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 651, 2009 WL 223366 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 30 2009).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : General Overview

164. When defendant asked about a statement his wife made concerning ownership of the cocaine, the prosecution could follow up that question, under Tex. R. Evid. 107, to explain the statement and make it more understandable. Broussard v. State, 68 S.W.3d 197, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 250 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2002).

Evidence : Testimony : Examination : Cross-Examination : Scope

165. Defendant's conviction of theft under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03 was affirmed because any error in the admission of her manager's testimony that the cleaning crew owner stated he saw defendant at the restaurant before the bank deposits were reported missing was harmless, as provided in Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), where the testimony was cumulative of other evidence of defendant's guilt; further, the testimony was admissible under the rule of optional completeness provided in Tex. R. Evid. 107 because defense counsel had invited a response from the State by suggesting that the manager did not know of anyone on the cleaning crew who saw defendant at the store. Sheridan v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6942 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 4 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Presentation of Evidence

166. Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by not introducing evidence that his client's codefendant had judicially confessed to the murder that resulted in his client's conviction for capital murder and death sentence because, if counsel had introduced codefendant's testimony from the punishment phase of his own trial, the prosecution would have introduced codefendant's testimony from the guilt determination phase of his trial under the Rule of Optional Completeness, Tex. R. Evid. 107, and this testimony would have contradicted the contention counsel's client did not direct both the kidnapping and the shooting. Adams v. Thaler, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74807 (E.D. Tex. July 26 2010).

Family Law : Child Support : Procedures

167. In a child support dispute, the trial court did not err when it admitted, over the mother's "completeness" objection, the father's bank statements from 2003 to 2005 that did not include copies of the canceled checks referenced in each statement because the mother never offered any other document to complete the statements offered by the father, nor did it appear that such documents were available to offer. In the Interest of C.S., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2593, 2014 WL 972310 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 6 2014).

Tax Law : State & Local Taxes : Real Property Tax : Exemptions

168. Trial court did not err in allowing the tax appraisal district to introduce the taxpayer's complete applications for exemptions after the taxpayer sought to broaden the scope of its claim for an exemption and introduced only a portion of its applications. Harvest Life Found. v. Harris County Appraisal Dist., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6906 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 6 2013).

Torts : Business Torts : Fraud & Misrepresentation : Negligent Misrepresentation : General Overview

169. When a letter was used to show that a bank had said that it was a lender to a developer, both paragraphs of the letter, read together, indicated that the bank had not made a false statement about the loan, and the loan was conditional; on that basis, a corporation's suit for negligent misrepresentation failed. C. E. Barker, Inc. v. Firstcapital Bank, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3814 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 19 2005).

Torts : Transportation Torts : General Overview

170. In a personal injury case arising from an auto-pedestrian accident, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b), 107 in excluding evidence of a driver's subsequent automobile accidents was harmless because it was unlikely that, if the jury heard that evidence, it would apportioned more fault to the driver, given the admitted evidence that he consumed a pint of vodka on the day in question, was arrested for driving while intoxicated at the scene of the accident, and failed a breathalyzer test with a blood alcohol content that was nearly twice the legal limit. Muhs v. Whataburger, Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9229, 2010 WL 4657955 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 18 2010).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Business & Corporate Law : General Partnerships : Management Duties & Liabilities : General Overview

1. Where a purported partner's failure to file a Tex. R. Civ. P. 93 verified denial of partnership was not brought to the trial court's attention, the trial court was not required to take judicial notice of it under Tex. R. Evid. 201(d) as an admission of partnership. Ball v. Smith, 150 S.W.3d 889, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11025 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Civil Procedure : Pleading & Practice : Pleadings : Time Limitations : Computation

2. In a paternity case, a motion for new trial, although filed more than 30 calendar days after entry of a default judgment, was timely; taking judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) of the fact that the courthouse was closed for a hurricane evacuation, which was the equivalent of a legal holiday under Tex. R. Civ. P. 4, meant that the motion was timely filed within the 30-day period of Tex. R. Civ. P. 329b(a). Garcia v. Vera, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8701 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 5 2006).

Civil Procedure : Pleading & Practice : Service of Process : Proof : General Overview

3. Trial court erred in granting summary judgment pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c) to appellee in appellant's personal injury action arising from a car accident, based on the trial court's determination that the action was barred by the limitations period of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003(a) because appellant had not exercised due diligence in serving appellee; the record indicated that appellant had met his burden of showing that he exercised due diligence in his continual efforts to have appellee served, and that appellee's attempt to have the court take judicial notice of a phone book page that listed her and her address, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201, was insufficient to conclusively establish appellee's address and to show appellant's lack of diligence. Tranter v. Duemling, 129 S.W.3d 257, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1912 (Tex. App. El Paso 2004).

Civil Procedure : Judicial Officers : Judges : Disqualifications & Recusals : Grounds : Financial Interests

4. Supreme Court of Texas held that neither it nor the appellate court had jurisdiction to consider the merits of the parties' arguments because the trial court judge accepted a bribe for ruling on the newspapers' summary judgment motion, disqualifying him from the case under Tex. Const. art. V, § 11 and making his order void. The facts in the trial judge's plea agreement in another case, which the court took judicial notice of under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), showed that he had an illegal interest in the instant case because he obtained a pecuniary gain as a direct result of his rulings. Freedom Communs., Inc. v. Coronado, 372 S.W.3d 621, 2012 Tex. LEXIS 503 (Tex. 2012).

Civil Procedure : Judicial Officers : Judges : Successors

5. It was appropriate to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201 that a judge named as respondent in a mandamus proceeding had resigned, and consequently Tex. R. App. P. 7 required the substitution of his successor as respondent and the abatement of the mandamus proceeding to allow the newly appointed judge to consider the pleadings. In re Newby, 280 S.W.3d 298, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2685 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

Civil Procedure : Pretrial Judgments : Default : Default Judgments

6. Record supported the trial court's finding that a defaulting party's location was unknown, and the court took judicial notice of the party's correspondence, which showed that none of her envelopes or letters had included a return mailing address. Raines v. Gomez, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6924 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 30 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 143 S.W.3d 867, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7605 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

Civil Procedure : Pretrial Judgments : Default : Entry of Default Judgments

7. Post-answer default judgment was properly entered against appellant and in favor of appellee when appellant and her attorney failed to appear for trial because there was no evidence that the attorney was not a licensed attorney or not the attorney of record for appellant at the time the attorney received notice of the trial setting under Tex. R. Civ. P. 21a and the court could not take judicial notice of the attorney's suspensions, which did not fall within the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 201. Gutierrez v. Draheim, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7415 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 12 2007).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Standards : General Overview

8. Trial court erred in granting summary judgment pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c) to appellee in appellant's personal injury action arising from a car accident, based on the trial court's determination that the action was barred by the limitations period of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003(a) because appellant had not exercised due diligence in serving appellee; the record indicated that appellant had met his burden of showing that he exercised due diligence in his continual efforts to have appellee served, and that appellee's attempt to have the court take judicial notice of a phone book page that listed her and her address, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201, was insufficient to conclusively establish appellee's address and to show appellant's lack of diligence. Tranter v. Duemling, 129 S.W.3d 257, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1912 (Tex. App. El Paso 2004).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

9. In a dispute involving a road, a trial court erred by taking judicial notice of prior court records since they were not attached to a motion for summary judgment; moreover, judicial notice could not have been taken of documents that were no longer in existence. Graff v. Berry, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2069 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 18 2008).

10. Trial court erred in taking judicial notice of documents pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201 when some of the judicially noticed documents no longer existed and when others were not attached to to the motion of a party seeking summary judgment as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a. Graff v. Berry, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1163 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 20 2008).

Civil Procedure : Alternative Dispute Resolution : Judicial Review

11. Arbitration award could not be confirmed as provided in Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 171.087 because there was no evidence establishing the award; attaching the award documents to the petition did not make them admissible evidence, and the trial court's taking judicial notice of the contents of its file under Tex. R. Evid. 201 did not elevate averments to proof. Gruber v. CACV of Colo., LLC, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 2 2008).

Civil Procedure : Trials : Jury Trials : Jury Instructions : General Overview

12. In a tort suit following a motor vehicle collision that occurred on the shoulder of the highway, Tex. R. Evid. 201 did not require the trial court to instruct the jury on judicial notice. Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 545.058 and its terms are legislative facts, rather than judicial facts. Perkins v. Delaney, 170 S.W.3d 136, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4027 (Tex. App. Eastland 2005).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Preclusion & Effect of Judgments : Estoppel : Judicial Estoppel

13. Church and pastors were estopped from asserting that they were entitled to First Amendment protections, in the form of a malice requirement, with regard to a church member's assault and false imprisonment claims because the church and pastors had obtained the dismissal of all but those claims in a prior mandamus proceeding. The court took judicial notice, under Tex. R. Evid. 201(d), of the records of that proceeding and found that defendants swore under oath that the assault and battery and false imprisonment claims should go forward because those claims were purely secular and entitled to no First Amendment protections. Pleasant Glade Assembly of God v. Schubert, 174 S.W.3d 388, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Motions for New Trials

14. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

15. In a will contest, an objector was not entitled to a new trial under Tex. R. App. P. 34.6(f) because he failed to show that a missing portion of a reporter's record was necessary to the resolution of an appeal; the trial court had not taken judicial notice of a common law marriage because it was a fact issue in dispute during the proceedings, and the fact that other parties referred to the objector and a decedent as married did not mean that the trial court had made a determination on that issue. In re Estate of Rabke, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 481, 2009 WL 196328 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 28 2009).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Void Judgments

16. Supreme Court of Texas held that neither it nor the appellate court had jurisdiction to consider the merits of the parties' arguments because the trial court judge accepted a bribe for ruling on the newspapers' summary judgment motion, disqualifying him from the case under Tex. Const. art. V, § 11 and making his order void. The facts in the trial judge's plea agreement in another case, which the court took judicial notice of under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), showed that he had an illegal interest in the instant case because he obtained a pecuniary gain as a direct result of his rulings. Freedom Communs., Inc. v. Coronado, 372 S.W.3d 621, 2012 Tex. LEXIS 503 (Tex. 2012).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Bonds : Sureties : Liability

17. Where a creditor obtained a judgment against a constable and an insurance company regarding the constable's duty with respect to a writ of execution and the insurance company filed a resticted appeal, even if the constable's bond was a public record and an appropriate subject for judicial notice, there was no evidence in the record that the insurance company was the surety on the constable's bond since, inter alia, the record did not contain the bond. Dupree v. KingVision Pay-Per-View, Ltd., 219 S.W.3d 602, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2676 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : General Overview

18. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : Attorney Expenses & Fees : Statutory Awards

19. In a breach of contract case, trial attorney's fees should have been awarded because a manufacturer failed to request that the trial court take judicial notice of Michigan law until it was too late, the fees were not precluded by a limitation-of-damages provision in a contract, and a failure to segregate attorney's fees did not preclude recovery of all attorney's fees. There was no argument that the requirements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 38.001, 38.002 were not met. Daimlerchrysler Motors Co., Llc v. Manuel, 362 S.W.3d 160, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1489 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 24 2012).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Judgment Interest : Postjudgment Interest

20. In a dispute regarding interests in gas wells, judicial notice could be taken pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201 of the postjudgment interest rate under former Tex. Fin. Code Ann. § 304.003, resulting in a determination that the trial court correctly set the postjudgment interest rate. Griffin v. Long, 442 S.W.3d 380, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8910, 2011 WL 5545942 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 9 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review

21. Mother failed to preserve for review her contention that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding a psychologist's report from evidence because she never offered the report into evidence and there was nothing in the record showing that she made an offer of proof or a bill of exception. The trial court did not err failing to sua sponte taking judicial notice of the report because the record was not part of the appellate record and therefore the court could not determine whether it would have met the requirements for an adjudicative fact. In the Interest of L.D.W., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6195 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 21 2013).

22. Because a surety's motion for new trial did not argue that the terms of the judgments nisi were in any respect at variance with the tenor of the bail bonds that were forfeited, the surety did not preserve for review any claim that the particular bonds were not properly the subject of judicial notice. Kubosh v. State, 241 S.W.3d 60, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1563 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Freedoms : Freedom of Religion : Free Exercise of Religion

23. Church and pastors were estopped from asserting that they were entitled to First Amendment protections, in the form of a malice requirement, with regard to a church member's assault and false imprisonment claims because the church and pastors had obtained the dismissal of all but those claims in a prior mandamus proceeding. The court took judicial notice, under Tex. R. Pleasant Glade Assembly of God v. Schubert, 174 S.W.3d 388, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Freedoms : Judicial & Legislative Restraints : Prior Restraint

24. When entering a gag order in the retrial of a murder charge, the trial judge's decision to take judicial notice of pretrial publicity did not satisfy Tex. R. Evid. 201 because the judge never gave defendant an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. Had defendant been given such opportunity, a record could have been made documenting the nature and extent of the pretrial publicity in the case and the impact such publicity would have on the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury. In re Graves, 217 S.W.3d 744, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2341 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Obstruction of Justice : Elements

25. Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.02(b) when defendant gave a police officer a fictitious name because there was nothing to suggest the officer was not wearing a uniform or driving a marked vehicle during a traffic stop, the State was able to prove that the crime was committed in Texas through circumstantial evidence after judicial notice was taken that Jasper County was located in Texas, and the element of lawful detention was satisfied because defendant was detained under U.S. Const. amend. IV as a passenger in a car that was stopped for a minor traffic violation. Defendant asserted no constitutional argument on the grounds of U.S. Const. amend. IV or Tex. Const. art. I, § 9 with respect to an unlawful arrest or unreasonable search or seizure. Waalee v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1012, 2008 WL 5622656 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 11 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Arson : Simple Arson : General Overview

26. Evidence was sufficient so sustain defendant's arson conviction because it was not necessary that the State present evidence to prove that Corpus Christi was incorporated. The court of appeals took judicial notice that Corpus Christi was an incorporated city. Rios v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6524 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26, 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : General Overview

27. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the evidence was sufficient to prove venue in Galveston County; citing Tex. R. Evid. 201, the court noted that the victim testified that she had been sexually assaulted by defendant on two separate occasions, once in Houston (Harris County) and once in Texas City (Galveston County). Clark v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 6 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

28. In defendant's sexual assault case, a court did not err by taking judicial notice of defendant's birth date where the alleged discrepancy regarding defendant's date of birth was not reflected in the appellate record, and as to the age difference, the victim testified without objection that she was 14 years old and that defendant told her he was 35 years old. The jury could also draw its own conclusions from the appearance of the victim and defendant in the courtroom. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2878 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 927, 125 S. Ct. 1652, 161 L. Ed. 2d 489, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2556, 73 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : License Violations : General Overview

29. Where defendant was tried for driving with license suspended in Texas, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to take judicial notice of the that fact defendant had a valid New Mexico driver's license; this was a question of fact for the jury. McGrew v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2752 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 6 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Interrogation : Miranda Rights : Custodial Interrogation

30. Rules pertaining to custodial interrogations are not extended to information not received from investigative questioning and information that is not incriminating; therefore, a trial court did not err when it took judicial notice of the fact that defendant was married to a particular person in a burglary case because this information was merely provided in an indigency affidavit. Britt v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

31. Trial court's decision to take judicial notice of defendant's date of birth was not an error preserved for review because the complaint made on appeal did not comport with the complaint made in the trial court; defendant contended for the first time on appeal that the admission of such evidence violated his right against self-incrimination. Britt v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Preliminary Proceedings

32. In a termination of parental rights case, it was improper to take judicial notice of prior testimony, evidence, and factual assertions from earlier hearings and from the court's files because the evidence was not notorious or verifiable and was not admitted into evidence at the termination trial. B. L. M. v. J. H. M., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7707 (Tex. App. Austin July 17 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Forfeitures

33. In proceedings to finalize a forfeiture of two bail bonds, judicial notice could be taken, under the common law, of both the judgments nisi and the bonds; because Tex. R. Evid. 101 indicates that proceedings regarding bail are not covered by the rules of evidence, judicial notice in such cases does not have to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 201, although Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 22.10 provides that civil rules govern all proceedings in the trial court in a bond-forfeiture case following a judgment nisi. Kubosh v. State, 241 S.W.3d 60, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1563 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

34. Because a surety's motion for new trial did not argue that the terms of the judgments nisi were in any respect at variance with the tenor of the bail bonds that were forfeited, the surety did not preserve for review any claim that the particular bonds were not properly the subject of judicial notice. Kubosh v. State, 241 S.W.3d 60, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1563 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Bail : Hearings

35. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Gag Orders

36. When entering a gag order in the retrial of a murder charge, the trial judge's decision to take judicial notice of pretrial publicity did not satisfy Tex. R. Evid. 201 because the judge never gave defendant an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. Had defendant been given such opportunity, a record could have been made documenting the nature and extent of the pretrial publicity in the case and the impact such publicity would have on the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury. In re Graves, 217 S.W.3d 744, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2341 (Tex. App. Waco 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

37. In a murder trial, the trial court erred in taking judicial notice of defendant's testimony at another defendant's trial for the purpose of ruling on defendant's motion to suppress a confession; the facts the trial court utilized were disputed, and contrary to the State's assertion, defendant did not treat the prior testimony as if it had been admitted into evidence; further, the testimony the trial court judicially noticed was inherently swayed towards the viewpoint of opposing parties at the prior trial, and defendant did not have an opportunity to present the facts in the most favorable light. Resendez v. State, 256 S.W.3d 315, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7052 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

38. In a drug case, counsel was not ineffective for not making objections to an officer's testimony regarding the GPS measurement to the school because counsel testified that there had been a measurement done with a roller measurer that was evidence at trial showing that the distance was less than a 1,000 feet. Additionally, the court of appeals took judicial notice of the fact that the school was less than 1,000 feet from the location of the drug transaction. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5997, 2009 WL 2372973 (Tex. App. Eastland July 30 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juries & Jurors : Peremptory Challenges : Proving Discriminatory Use

39. In the context of a Batson challenge, the appellate court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 201 when it declined to take judicial notice of a study commissioned by a newspaper that purportedly showed the county's continuing pattern of exercising peremptory challenges in a racially discriminatory manner. Watkins v. State, 245 S.W.3d 444, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 215 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 846, 129 S. Ct. 92, 172 L. Ed. 2d 78, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7139 (2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jurisdiction & Venue : Venue

40. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the evidence was sufficient to prove venue in Galveston County; citing Tex. R. Evid. 201, the court noted that the victim testified that she had been sexually assaulted by defendant on two separate occasions, once in Houston (Harris County) and once in Texas City (Galveston County). Clark v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5837 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 6 2006).

41. In delinquency proceedings, an employee of the juvenile detention facility in Post, Texas, testified that while he was working he saw appellant strike another resident on the head; Tex. R. Evid. 201 permitted the court may take judicial notice that Post was the county seat of Garza County, Texas; the evidence was sufficient to prove venue in Garza County. In re E.H., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4310 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 18 2006).

42. In a criminal prosecution for evading arrest, the deputy testified that he located defendant's vehicle near the intersection of Westfield Place Drive and Hollow Tree Lane in Houston, Texas; Tex. R. Evid. 201 permitted the court to take judicial notice that this location was within Harris County, Texas; the evidence was sufficient to establish venue. Crawford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2722 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 6 2006).

43. Although defendant attempted to argue on appeal that Harris County was not the proper venue for his trial on a charge of aggravated assault, the appellate court could take judicial notice of a photograph of the crime scene, which had been admitted to evidence and showed the location's address, which was in Harris County. Campos v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3259 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 6 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Self-Representation

44. In an appeal relating to the right to self-representation, the reviewing court took judicial notice of a hearing in which defendant discussed invocation of his right to self-representation with the same trial court judge on a different criminal case. The discussion was not subject to reasonable dispute, was capable of accurate determination by referring to the reporter's record, and provided the basis for the trial court's finding that defendant was aware of the dangers and disadvantages of self-representation. Curry v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14286, 2013 WL 6157573 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 21 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Revocation : Proceedings

45. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it revoked defendant's community supervision because the evidence was sufficient to prove that he committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance. Although the State asked the trial court to take judicial notice of the judgment of conviction, the judge inferentially took judicial notice of the evidence in the possession case over which she presided and found defendant committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance. Adams v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6022, 2012 WL 3025917 (Tex. App. El Paso July 25 2012).

46. In a community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in finding that defendant committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance because the trial court took judicial notice of the evidence in the possession case over which she had presided. Adams v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 2012 WL 3025921 (Tex. App. El Paso July 25 2012).

Where defendant was convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he filed an affidavit of indigence and a motion requesting a free copy of the reporter's record on appeal; the trial court took judicial notice of the fact that defendant was assessed a $ 5,000 fine in the underlying criminal conviction with the understanding that he had the means to pay the fine. Howard v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3900 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 10 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Forfeitures : Proceedings

48. From defendant's murder conviction, the trial court's granting of the forfeiture of defendant's vehicle as contraband under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 59.01(2) was reversed as the trial court erred when it took judicial notice of prior testimony without admitting a transcript of it into evidence in the forfeiture proceeding as required by Tex. R. Evid. 201; there was no evidence that created even a mere surmise or suspicion of a nexus between the illegal activity and the seized vehicle. Davis v. State, 293 S.W.3d 794, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5493 (Tex. App. Waco July 15 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

49. In a case of aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, although the written plea admonishments were not offered into evidence, they were filed with the trial court and were properly before the trial court at the punishment hearing because the trial court could take judicial notice of its own records. Gaffney v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2738 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 7 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Presentence Reports

50. In re Gonzales, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8057 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 6 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Procedures : General Overview

Griego v. State, 331 S.W.3d 815, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 204 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 11 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Prosecutorial Misconduct : Use of False Testimony

54. New trial on punishment was necessary in a Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.03 capital murder case because a prosecution witness incorrectly testified that an inmate sentenced to life without parole might become eligible for a less restrictive prison classification status. The State conceded federal constitutional error, and the court, taking judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b)-(d) of a regulation that prohibited such reclassification, found it probable that the death sentence was based upon the incorrect testimony. Estrada v. State, 313 S.W.3d 274, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 722 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

Baeza v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3426 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

Davis v. State, 227 S.W.3d 733, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 864 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

57. Trial court's decision to take judicial notice of defendant's date of birth was not an error preserved for review because the complaint made on appeal did not comport with the complaint made in the trial court; defendant contended for the first time on appeal that the admission of such evidence violated his right against self-incrimination. Britt v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : General Overview

58. In a case of organized criminal activity and burglary, the appellate court declined defendant's request to take judicial notice of documents purporting to show that the prosecutor lacked authority to act; judicial notice cannot be taken for the first time on appeal of facts that do not uphold the integrity of the judgment. Davis v. State, 227 S.W.3d 766, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

59. Violation of an evidentiary rule, such as Tex. R. Evid. 201, that results in the erroneous admission of evidence is not constitutional error. Assuming arguendo that the trial court erred in a probation revocation proceeding by judicially noticing defendant's federal judgment and accompanying unsworn statements, the error was harmless. Deshone v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7409 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 17 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : Sufficiency of Evidence

60. Evidence was sufficient to support a conviction under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.02(b) when defendant gave a police officer a fictitious name because there was nothing to suggest the officer was not wearing a uniform or driving a marked vehicle during a traffic stop, the State was able to prove that the crime was committed in Texas through circumstantial evidence after judicial notice was taken that Jasper County was located in Texas, and the element of lawful detention was satisfied because defendant was detained under U.S. Const. amend. IV as a passenger in a car that was stopped for a minor traffic violation. Defendant asserted no constitutional argument on the grounds of U.S. Const. amend. IV or Tex. Const. art. I, § 9 with respect to an unlawful arrest or unreasonable search or seizure. Waalee v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1012, 2008 WL 5622656 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 11 2009).

Estate, Gift & Trust Law : Will Contests : General Overview

61. Fletcher v. Harris, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2961 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 19 2007).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

62. In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not err by refusing to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence; Tex. R. Evid. 901(b)(7) did not require the admission of the evidence since appellant offered no evidence about an Internal Revenue Service document other than his unsworn statement that he received the document in the mail, and it was not authenticated by either certification or any extrinsic evidence. Moreover, the trial court did not err by failing to take judicial notice of the document. Nixon v. GMAC Mortg. Corp., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7350, 2009 WL 2973660 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 18 2009).

Evidence : Judicial Notice

63. In a criminal prosecution for evading arrest, the deputy testified that he located defendant's vehicle near the intersection of Westfield Place Drive and Hollow Tree Lane in Houston, Texas; Tex. R. Evid. 201 permitted the court to take judicial notice that this location was within Harris County, Texas; the evidence was sufficient to establish venue. Crawford v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2722 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 6 2006).

64. Where defendant was tried for driving with license suspended in Texas, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to take judicial notice of the that fact defendant had a valid New Mexico driver's license; this was a question of fact for the jury. McGrew v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2752 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 6 2006).

65. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

66. Upon sentencing defendant for aggravated sexual assault, the trial court was permitted to take judicial notice of and consider unobjected to facts contained in the presentence investigation report (PSI). Defendant made no challenge to the facts of the PSI. Guerra v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 850 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 1 2005).

67. Violation of an evidentiary rule, such as Tex. R. Evid. 201, that results in the erroneous admission of evidence is not constitutional error. Assuming arguendo that the trial court erred in a probation revocation proceeding by judicially noticing defendant's federal judgment and accompanying unsworn statements, the error was harmless. Deshone v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7409 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 17 2004).

68. In defendant's sexual assault case, a court did not err by taking judicial notice of defendant's birth date where the alleged discrepancy regarding defendant's date of birth was not reflected in the appellate record, and as to the age difference, the victim testified without objection that she was 14 years old and that defendant told her he was 35 years old. The jury could also draw its own conclusions from the appearance of the victim and defendant in the courtroom. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2878 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 927, 125 S. Ct. 1652, 161 L. Ed. 2d 489, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2556, 73 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2005).

69. The trial court granted the parties' divorce on grounds of cruelty; because the protective order finding that the husband committed family violence against the wife and affidavit in support thereof were filed with the trial court in the same cause as the divorce, the appellate court presumed that the trial court took judicial notice of the contents of the file. Barnard v. Barnard, 133 S.W.3d 782, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3009 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2004).

70. In an aggravated assault case, because blood spatter analysis was subject to judicial notice and the State proved the proper application of blood spatter analysis, the trial court did not err in admitting the State's testimony on the issue of blood spatter analysis. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

71. Texas takes judicial notice of the validity of blood spatter analysis; the State is not required to produce evidence on the first two criteria of Kelly. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

72. Under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) and (d), the appellate court properly denied a defendant's motion asking the court to take judicial notice of the complainant's age at the time of the offense based upon a computer print-out of the defendant's sex offender registration record because the victim's age was not generally known in the county and the accuracy of the online record could reasonably be questioned. Ex parte Alakayi, 102 S.W.3d 426, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 3135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : General Overview

73. Rational trier of fact could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that sufficient evidence linked defendant to the previous judgment of conviction for burglary of a building; previous judgment was rendered in the Houston and the court took judicial notice that Houston was approximately seventy-three miles from where the case took place. Farrell v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9213 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 21 2014).

74. Trial judge said he took judicial notice of the public nature of a street and the jury had to take that as a true fact, which directly contradicted the permissive instruction required by the rule, and thus the trial judge essentially told the jury to find satisfied the public place element of the offense; however, the charge was proper as to the public place element and defendant did not suffer egregious harm from the trial court's failure to include an instruction, as the public place element was supported by the evidence and not seriously contested. Lyle v. State, 418 S.W.3d 901, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15243, 2013 WL 6689387 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

75. Appellant claimed the trial court erred in taking judicial notice of a disputed fact, but he made no objection when the trial court said it was taking judicial notice of the gestures observed as to certain witnesses, and thus appellant did not preserve this complaint for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; also, although the trial court used the term judicial notice, the trial court was simply articulating the observations made of the witnesses' gestures for the record. Gutierrez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2159, 2013 WL 820489 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 6 2013).

76. Although the panel expresses its concern with the practice of relying on judicially-noticed affidavits, not formally introduced into evidence at trial, as evidence supporting the trial court's findings in termination cases, the court is nevertheless obligated to follow the court's precedent in relying on such affidavits when they are judicially noticed without objection. T.L.S., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10297, 2012 WL 6213515 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2012).

77. Court could not review alleged testimony because a transcript of the hearing for the bail reduction motion was not admitted and nothing indicated that the trial court took judicial notice of the evidence or was aware of the evidence admitted at a prior hearing before a different judge. Ex Parte Moore, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4556, 2012 WL 2078257 (Tex. App. Austin June 8 2012).

78. Trial court never formally took judicial notice of the documents produced at a temporary injunction hearing, and while the court could take judicial notice of court documents on appeal, no such request was made; thus, the documents themselves could not be considered competent evidence supporting the injunction order.

79. Although the widow asked the court to take judicial notice that oil, gas, and minerals were subject to the Relinquishment Act and were owned by the State, the court declined; the facts that the court was asked to take judicial notice of were found in a letter from someone who purportedly worked at the state general land office, and the issue of whether the State owned the minerals was an issue best resolved by the trial court. Burchard v. Burchard, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 80, 2012 WL 28831 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 5 2012).

80. It would be illogical to hold that the landowners did not present sufficient evidence to exclude the neighbor as a possible source of contamination after the trial court took judicial notice, and instructed the jury, that the neighbor was not responsible for the contamination. E-z Mart Stores, Inc. v. Ronald Holland's A Plus Transmission & Auto., Inc., 358 S.W.3d 665, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6000, 41 Envtl. L. Rep. 20273 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 3 2011).

81. Court exercised its discretion to take judicial notice of the correct postjudgment interest rate under Tex. Fin. Code Ann. § 304.003. Griffin v. Long, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3521, 2011 WL 1849271 (Tex. App. Tyler May 11 2011).

82. While the rules no longer treat as harmless all errors made in a non-jury trial, that does not mean the appellate court cannot consider the fact that the judge was the factfinder, and the trial court was aware of the difference between argument based on evidence and that without support; the prosecutor's statement that recidivism rates in sex offender programs were horrendous and the programs did not work was made in a request that the trial court take judicial notice, which was not done, and by making the request, the State implicitly conceded that this argument was not supported by the evidence. Stroble v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3205 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 28 2011).

83. Party could not ask the trial court to take judicial notice, and then on appeal complain that the trial court did as he asked. Smale v. Torchmark Corp., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2333, 2011 WL 1238386 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2011).

84. Because a mother did not object at the time that the trial court took judicial notice, she waived this complaint under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. In the Interest of T.C., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9685, 2010 WL 4983512 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 1 2010).

85. To the extent certain matters were relevant to the court's analysis, the court took judicial notice of those matters. Vista Healthcare, Inc. v. Tex. Mut. Ins. Co., 324 S.W.3d 264, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7046 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2010).

86. Court did not abuse its discretion by revoking defendant's community supervision, because it should have been apparent to defendant that the trial court took judicial notice of the evidence, as opposed to the conviction, when the trial court announced that the evidence supported the State's motion, yet defendant did not object or seek to be heard on the issue of sufficient evidence. Lighteard v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3854, 2010 WL 1997723 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 19 2010).

87. Court did not abuse its discretion in entering the turnover order, because the evidence supported the order, when the tenants had not established that, by the trial court's turnover order, the company had obtained a suit against itself or that the order restricted the tenant's common law cause of action; applying Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 31.002 that the tenants owned its cause of action (the lease dispute it filed), that its cause of action could not be readily attached or levied on by ordinary legal process, and that its cause of action was not exempt from attachment, execution, or seizure for the satisfaction of liabilities were facts readily susceptible to judicial notice. E. Bloc Entm't, Ltd. v. Abco Props., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2179 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 11 2010).

88. State offered Louisiana documents to prove defendant's out-of-state convictions without offering proof of Louisiana's evidentiary requirements for proof of a final conviction, and the State did not ask the trial court to take judicial notice of those evidentiary requirements; therefore, Texas law applied. Andrus v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1665, 2010 WL 797196 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 10 2010).

89. Trial court erred in taking judicial notice of documents pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201 when some of the judicially noticed documents no longer existed and when others were not attached to to the motion of a party seeking summary judgment as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a. Graff v. Berry, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1163 (Tex. App. Texarkana Feb. 20 2008).

90. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a guarantor's motion to appear by telephone, given that (1) Tex. R. Jud. Admin. 7 did not require courts to allow parties to attend pretrial hearings via telephone, (2) the guarantor failed to cite any authority, nor was the court aware of any, for the proposition that a violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act voided an otherwise valid judgment, and (3) it was not necessary for the court to decide whether the guarantor's due process rights were violated by an alleged violation of the Act because (a) assuming that a violation could void a judgment, the claim was an affirmative defense that had to be pleaded and proven, (b) the guarantor failed to plead an affirmative defense based on a violation of the Act, and (c) even if the guarantor's motion to transfer venue pleaded an affirmative defense based on an Act violation and assuming a violation of the Act voided a judgment, the guarantor failed to prove that the trial court's action violated the Act, as the trial court took judicial notice that the courthouse was wheelchair accessible and the guarantor failed to prove that he could not access the courtroom. Corona v. Pilgrim's Pride Corp., 245 S.W.3d 75, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 492 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

91. Post-answer default judgment was properly entered against appellant and in favor of appellee when appellant and her attorney failed to appear for trial because there was no evidence that the attorney was not a licensed attorney or not the attorney of record for appellant at the time the attorney received notice of the trial setting under Tex. R. Civ. P. 21a and the court could not take judicial notice of the attorney's suspensions, which did not fall within the scope of Tex. R. Evid. 201. Gutierrez v. Draheim, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7415 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 12 2007).

92. Appellate court denied an appellant's motion to take judicial notice of various rules, statutes, cases, and alleged facts because: (1) many of the items were not the proper subject of judicial notice; (2) other items contained either incomplete or inaccurate information; and (3) none of the items affected the resolution of the specific issues that the appellant raised on appeal. Hunt v. Rodriguez-Mendoza, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7250 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 29 2007).

93. Whether a judge was constitutionally qualified to serve as a visiting judge was a legal conclusion and not a fact that could be judicially noticed. In re Caraway, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5131 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 28 2007).

94. Evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the offense took place in Palo Pinto County (Texas), as the detective testified that all four offenses took place in the county, defendant did not contest this testimony, and defendant's guilty plea constituted an admission of all elements of the offense charged; the court declined to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201 that the offenses took place in another county based on a deed and maps because the documents were not in a form that would have been admissible at trial and a judicially noticed fact had to be one that was not subject to reasonable dispute. Pollone v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 174 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 11 2007).

95. Where the trial court failed to rule on relator's motion for judicial notice for three months, the appellate court declined to hold that that period of time constituted an unreasonable delay; the relator was not entitled to mandamus relief to compel the trial judge to hold an evidentiary hearing on his motion for judicial notice; relator failed to show that he demanded performance, or that he had no other adequate remedy at law. In re Gonzales, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8057 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 6 2006).

96. Even though the trial court incorrectly took judicial notice of the arrest warrant and clerk's certificate of defendant's failure to appear at trial for his speeding citation, defendant was not harmed by the error, because the jury was not told by the trial court or anyone else that the trial court had taken judicial notice of the exhibits, and the jury did not know that by taking judicial notice of the documents the trial court was telling them they could consider them as conclusive proof of facts contained therein. Azeez v. State, 203 S.W.3d 456, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7821 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

97. Trial court was free to take judicial notice of its own records and prior pleadings in the case with or without a request of a party, and thus the court rejected appellant's claim that the trial court was limited to considering only the evidence presented at the hearing in making its determination regarding removal under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 222. In re Estate of Clark, 198 S.W.3d 273, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3234 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

98. Trial court was free to take judicial notice of its own records and prior pleadings in the case with or without a request of a party, and thus the court rejected appellant's claim that the trial court was limited to considering only the evidence presented at the hearing in making its determination regarding removal under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 222. In re Estate of Clark, 198 S.W.3d 273, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3234 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

99. Defense counsel had a duty to investigate defendant's prior convictions and present evidence that the judgment for a prior conviction was void, and counsel's performance was deficient because there was no reasonable trial strategy in failing to present evidence that might have proven the indictment relied on a void prior conviction to enhance defendant's punishment for unlawful possession with the intent to deliver heroin; the court declined to take judicial notice of facts that went to the merits of the dispute. Rodgers v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2858 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 10 2006).

100. Because Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 38.004 is more specific than Tex. R. Evid. 201, it controls in claims for attorney's fees. Cox v. Wilkins, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2598 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 31 2006).

101. The victim testified that the assault occurred in Cass County, and under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), the court took judicial notice that Cass County was located in the State of Texas, and the court found the evidence sufficient to prove venue. Van Schoyck v. State, 189 S.W.3d 333, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1936 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

102. Trial court properly refused to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201 of public record documents that were not certified and were for informational purposes only, given that Tex. R. Evid. 1005 provided that the contents of official public records could be proven by a certified copy. Verizon California, Inc. v. Douglas, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1622 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 2, 2006).

103. The trial court was free to take judicial notice of usual and customary attorney fees and the company did not show an abuse of discretion on the trial court's part. First Nat'l Acceptance Co. v. Bishop, 187 S.W.3d 710, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1159 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

104. Trial court was not able to take judicial notice of testimony from a prior hearing unless a transcription of the testimony was offered in evidence; nevertheless, this requirement may be waived if no objection is made to a proponent's failure to offer the transcription in evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Roberts v. Roberts, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1090 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 8 2006).

105. Defendant's complaints, that the trial court erred in failing to take judicial notice of the reliability of a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test and in failing to make other inquiry under Tex. R. Evid. 702, were not raised in the trial court, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; however, HGN tests had previously been found to be scientifically reliable, and thus the State was not required to present evidence on the issue and the appellate court was free to take judicial notice of the reliability on appeal, and thus, even if preserved, no abuse of discretion existed on these grounds. Cooper v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 942 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 2 2006).

106. Court took judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(d) of a trustee's deed, and the court noted that the foreclosed deed of trust lien was dated in 2000, but the inception of the materialmen's lien related back to when work started, which was in 1998, for purposes of Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 53.021(a), Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 53.123, and Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 53.124; because the materialmen's lien was not a junior lien but was superior to the deed of trust, the court declined to hold that the issue of the removal of the lien was moot based on foreclosure. Northside Marketplace W.D. '97, Ltd. v. David Christopher, Inc., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9830 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 23 2005).

107. Church and pastors were estopped from asserting that they were entitled to First Amendment protections, in the form of a malice requirement, with regard to a church member's assault and false imprisonment claims because the church and pastors had obtained the dismissal of all but those claims in a prior mandamus proceeding. The court took judicial notice, under Tex. R. Evid. 201(d), of the records of that proceeding and found that defendants swore under oath that the assault and battery and false imprisonment claims should go forward because those claims were purely secular and entitled to no First Amendment protections. Pleasant Glade Assembly of God v. Schubert, 174 S.W.3d 388, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

108. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

109. Trial court was entitled to take judicial notice of its own prior order entered in a related case between substantially the same parties. In re Shell E&P, Inc., 179 S.W.3d 125, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7313 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

110. Defendant did not challenge venue in the trial court, and thus under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(c)(1), the issue was presumed proven, given that the record did not affirmatively show otherwise; the evidence report identified the location as in a particular city, and courts were free to take judicial notice that the city was the county seat, which was sufficient to establish venue in the county, and there was no evidence to rebut that the offense took place in the county. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

111. Courts can take judicial notice that El Paso, Texas is the county seat of El Paso County. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6705 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 18 2005).

112. In a case of organized criminal activity and burglary, the appellate court declined defendant's request to take judicial notice of documents purporting to show that the prosecutor lacked authority to act; judicial notice cannot be taken for the first time on appeal of facts that do not uphold the integrity of the judgment. Davis v. State, 227 S.W.3d 766, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Tyler 2005).

113. Trial court did not err in not taking judicial notice of case law because the case was not an adjudicative fact as required by Tex. R. Evid. 201(a). Crook v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5075 (Tex. App. El Paso June 30 2005).

114. Trial court did not err in taking judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(a) of Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 7.03(a), 8.04(a)(1), reprinted in Tex. Gov't Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G app. A (2005) (Tex. State Bar R. art. X, sec. 9) because the rules were applicable in defendant's charge in a trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 38.12. Crook v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5075 (Tex. App. El Paso June 30 2005).

115. Under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), the trial court was permitted to take judicial notice of the fact that a doctor's report was filed on a particular date, but the mother did not request that the report be admitted, and thus the substance of the report could not have been considered as evidence on the issue of best interest of the child in a motion to modify an order appointing the mother and father as joint managing conservators; in any event, the doctor's expert opinions of what might have been in the child's best interests were not facts and therefore not a proper subject for judicial notice, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to consider the report at a later hearing. In re C.A.N.M., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4372 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 9 2005).

116. Property an officer saw in plain view during an investigation appeared to be packaged in the same manner that illegal drugs were packaged, and the officer believed the bag contained cocaine; athough this belief was not required to be correct or more likely true than false in order to support probable cause under U.S. Const. amend. IV and Tex. Const. art. I, § 9, for purposes of the suppression hearing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23, the trial court could have taken judicial notice that the property seized was cocaine based on the indictment before it, under Tex. R. Evid. 201. Cruz v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4250 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 2 2005).

117. In a tort suit following a motor vehicle collision that occurred on the shoulder of the highway, Tex. R. Evid. 201 did not require the trial court to instruct the jury on judicial notice. Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 545.058 and its terms are legislative facts, rather than judicial facts. Perkins v. Delaney, 170 S.W.3d 136, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4027 (Tex. App. Eastland 2005).

118. In a mother's appeal of the termination of her parental rights to one of her children, the court of appeals should not have taken judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) of expert testimony given by an expert of the State in criminal proceedings against the mother and her boyfriend for the death of another of her children that appeared to contradict the child's autopsy because the testimony concerned disputed facts and opinions. In re J.L., 163 S.W.3d 79, 2005 Tex. LEXIS 299, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 559 (Tex. 2005).

119. In a case of aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, although the written plea admonishments were not offered into evidence, they were filed with the trial court and were properly before the trial court at the punishment hearing because the trial court could take judicial notice of its own records. Gaffney v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2738 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 7 2005).

120. Court agreed that an individual's action against a state workforce commission was timely filed under Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 212.201(a), pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 5; on the record before the court, it was established that the individual's petition was mailed on December 23, a holiday as the court noticed under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), (c), and was received on December 26, and thus, the petition was timely filed under the mailbox rule. Jackson v. Tex. Workforce Comm'n, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 891 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 3 2005).

121. Because a company did not offer a record of a previous hearing into evidence, the trial court, which took judicial notice of the evidence, erred, and thus the resulting damage award was unsupported by the evidence. Paradigm Oil, Inc. v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 161 S.W.3d 531, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11196, 167 Oil & Gas Rep. 227 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

122. Trial judge's personal knowledge about flight prices and flight times within Texas was knowledge of facts of which the judge could not take judicial knowledge. In re A.C.S., 157 S.W.3d 9, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11315 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

123. Where a purported partner's failure to file a Tex. R. Civ. P. 93 verified denial of partnership was not brought to the trial court's attention, the trial court was not required to take judicial notice of it under Tex. R. Evid. 201(d) as an admission of partnership. Ball v. Smith, 150 S.W.3d 889, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11025 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

124. Client failed to show that the trial court erred in not taking judicial notice of the records of his divorce because judicial notice of the client's divorce records could not be taken through reference to a publication containing the information, and for the client to have supplied the trial court with the necessary information to take judicial notice of the divorce records, the client must have presented those records to the trial court, which he did not do. Brown v. Brown, 145 S.W.3d 745, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7892 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

125. Because the record in this case on its first appeal was relevant to the issues in the second appeal, the court took judicial notice of the record from the first appeal pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201. Raines v. Gomez, 143 S.W.3d 867, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7605 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2004).

126. Court declined to take judicial notice of a particular fire guide because there were no Texas cases that recognized the methodology prescribed in the guide for arson investigations as a reliable methodology. Davis v. State, 147 S.W.3d 554, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7756 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

127. Trial court had the discretion to take judicial notice of a judgment in a different case pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(c), (f); although the bank argued that the judgment was not offered in proper form, any error was waived pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a) because the bank failed to make the proper objection, and even if the trial court erred, the error probably did not cause an improper judgment or prevent the bank from properly presenting the case on appeal, pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1), (2). First Commerce Bank v. J.V.3, Inc., 165 S.W.3d 366, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7423 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

128. Copy of the email correspondence appellant claimed was from appellees to the trial court that appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims was not accompanied by an affidavit, nor was it authenticated; appellees did not concede that the copy of the email was accurate, nor did they concede that it was ever sent, nor did the copy appear to fall within the category of facts that may be judicially noticed, such that the appellate court could not consider it for purposes of determining whether appellees intended for the judgment to be final as to their counterclaims. Lindsey v. Kline, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6941 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 29 2004).

129. Trial court erred in granting summary judgment pursuant to Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a(c) to appellee in appellant's personal injury action arising from a car accident, based on the trial court's determination that the action was barred by the limitations period of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 16.003(a) because appellant had not exercised due diligence in serving appellee; the record indicated that appellant had met his burden of showing that he exercised due diligence in his continual efforts to have appellee served, and that appellee's attempt to have the court take judicial notice of a phone book page that listed her and her address, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201, was insufficient to conclusively establish appellee's address and to show appellant's lack of diligence. Tranter v. Duemling, 129 S.W.3d 257, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1912 (Tex. App. El Paso 2004).

130. Under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) and (d), the appellate court properly denied a defendant's motion asking the court to take judicial notice of the complainant's age at the time of the offense based upon a computer print-out of the defendant's sex offender registration record because the victim's age was not generally known in the county and the accuracy of the online record could reasonably be questioned. Ex parte Alakayi, 102 S.W.3d 426, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 3135 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

131. Tex. R. Evid. 201 governs judicial notice of adjudicative facts. Watts v. State, 99 S.W.3d 604, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 58 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

132. Court order restricting media access to trial was proper when it took judicial notice not only of the emotional nature of issues in the case, but also the extensive media coverage, including numerous interviews with counsel for both sides in the media. In re Houston Chronicle Publ. Co., 64 S.W.3d 103, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 5300 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2001).

133. Judicial notice is mandatory if requested by a party and the court is supplied with the necessary information; however, Tex. R. Evid. 201 governs only judicial notice of adjudicative facts. Adjudicative facts are those facts concerning the immediate parties; who did what, where, when, how, and with what motive or intent. Occidental Permian, Ltd. v. R.R. Comm'n, 47 S.W.3d 801, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 3583, 149 Oil & Gas Rep. 321 (Tex. App. Austin 2001).

134. Judicial notice is an exception to the normal requirements of proof, and a trial court may take judicial notice of an adjudicative fact if it is not subject to reasonable dispute. Althoff v. State, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 2679 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 25 2000).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : General Overview

135. Facts in the certificates of account status were relevant, in connection with a claim that a company could not affirmatively seek to enforce an arbitration clause by not meeting all franchise tax requirements under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 171.253, and thus it was appropriate for the court to take judicial notice of the certificates from the Texas Comptroller. Dish Network L.L.C. v. Brenner, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7838, 163 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P61367 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 27 2013).

136. In this termination case, the court presumed the trial court took judicial notice of its record without any request being made and without any announcement that it had done so, and certain case law was not inconsistent. In the Interest K.F., 402 S.W.3d 497, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 20 2013).

137. In this termination case, the mother claimed certain case law and Tex. R. Evid. 201(e) required the trial court to notify the parties that it was taking judicial notice of an order and give the parties the chance to challenge the decision, but the court found that neither case law nor the rule applied in this case; case law and Tex. R. Evid. 201(e) pertain to adjudicative facts rather than the mere existence of a document in a court's record, the trial court here was not required to ascertain adjudicative facts, and the court presumed the trial court merely took judicial notice of the existence of the order. In the Interest K.F., 402 S.W.3d 497, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 20 2013).

138. Because the court could presume that the trial court took judicial notice of its own records, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services proved there was an order that established the actions the mother had to take to obtain the return of her children. In the Interest K.F., 402 S.W.3d 497, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7461 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 20 2013).

139. Mother failed to preserve for review her contention that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding a psychologist's report from evidence because she never offered the report into evidence and there was nothing in the record showing that she made an offer of proof or a bill of exception. The trial court did not err failing to sua sponte taking judicial notice of the report because the record was not part of the appellate record and therefore the court could not determine whether it would have met the requirements for an adjudicative fact. In the Interest of L.D.W., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6195 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 21 2013).

140. Trial court was free to examine its own prior orders that found that the child had been removed from the home for neglect or abuse, plus those findings were part of the record and the trial court was free to take judicial notice thereof; the findings that the child was removed for abuse or neglect were clear and convincing evidence of those points, a fact finder could have found that the mother did not comply with her service plan after the child was removed, and as the mother did not challenge any of the other elements to support termination under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(O), the evidence was sufficient to support termination under this subsection. In re A.O., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9373, 2012 WL 5507107 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 14 2012).

141. Taking judicial notice of the court's records, the reporter's record and the clerk's record were filed on certain dates, and to the extent the petition for mandamus relief might be seeking an order requiring preparation of the record on appeal, the petition was moot. In re Garcia, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8740, 2012 WL 5188050 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 12 2012).

142. Appellee could not amend his first amended new trial motion because a witness's testimony was not available until one day after the deadline, and the State would not agree to a further amendment, but the trial court had judicial notice of the witness's testimony and found that the State's primary witness was not credible, plus the trial court had already found he had perjured himself; the court found no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in granting appellee's first amended new trial motion in his capital murder case. State v. Matthews, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7253 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 28 2012).

143. Appellate court presumed that the trial court took notice of its contempt order and considered it as evidence when deciding whether the employee had engaged in sanctionable conduct; accordingly, the appellate court rejected the employee's complaint that there was no evidence for the trial court to consider when deciding whether sanctions were warranted. Cognata v. Down Hole Injection, Inc., 375 S.W.3d 370, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4827 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 19 2012).

144. Trial court properly admitted its prior order incorporating a family service plan by judicial notice during closing argument in a parental rights termination case because the family service plan was incorporated in this order. Also, the plan was admitted at trial without objection. In the Interest of D.J.H., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3638 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 9 2012).

145. Same judge who signed the order following a Tex. Fam. Code Ann. ch. 262 hearing also signed the termination decree, and while the judge did not state he was taking judicial notice of the order, which order was in the record and ordered the mother to comply, the court presumed the judge took judicial notice in following the court's precedent. In the Interest of A.W.B., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2362, 2012 WL 1048640 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 27 2012).

146. Regardless of whether the court presumed judicial notice of an order for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 262.201, there was sufficient evidence that the mother knew what was required by the plan and that her failure to comply was a ground for termination of her rights; thus, the evidence supported the finding that the mother failed to comply with the provisions of the order. In the Interest of A.W.B., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2362, 2012 WL 1048640 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 27 2012).

147. Ex-husband filed an amended proposed property division, the trial court could take judicial notice of matters in its files, the division constituted sufficient evidence of the existence and value of an account, and there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in relying on that unchallenged amount in making a valuation; furthermore, a valuation error would have reduced the ex-wife's share by less than one percentage point, and thus no error was shown that resulted in a manifestly unjust property division. Sias-Chinn v. Chinn, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1687, 2012 WL 677496 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 29 2012).

148. On the first day of the termination trial, the court took judicial notice of its prior orders in the case; in this circumstance, the trial court was entitled to take judicial notice of its own orders. In re J.T.G., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 430, 2012 WL 171012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 19 2012).

149. Mother argued it was inappropriate for the court to take judicial notice of the affidavit supporting the original termination petition, but the court did not need to decide the issue because the substance of the affidavit that supported the original action was included in a report admitted at trial, and the mother did not claim that the trial court erred in admitting that report. In re J.T.G., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 430, 2012 WL 171012 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 19 2012).

150. In connection with appellant's conviction of possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance, the jury was not required to rely solely on the testimony of a scientist's about the aggregate weight of the bags in determining whether appellant was guilty of possessing four or more grams of methamphetamine, and the jury could have also considered the testimony of an informant that an officer asked to buy two ounces and the informant had conversations to arrange a meeting with appellant for that reason; the court took judicial notice for purposes of this appeal that one ounce equaled 28.349 grams, and the evidence showed that appellant contemplated a sale of methamphetamine that weighed more than 56 grams. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

151. In this commitment proceeding, although the trial court could not properly take judicial notice of the truth of allegations contained within physician certificates, it was proper for the trial court to take notice of the file to show the certificates were part of the court's files, that the certificates were filed on a certain date, and that they were before the trial court at the hearing. State Ex Rel. S.W., 356 S.W.3d 576, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9631 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 9 2011).

152. For contempt purposes, the trial court might have had direct knowledge that a litigant failed to seek permission of the local administrative judge to file his petition if the trial court judge was the local administrative judge, but the county was served by two district courts, under Tex. Gov't Code Ann. §§ 24.166, 24.419, and the record did not show which judge was serving, and the court had no basis for which to take judicial notice. Johnson v. Clark, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8593 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 28 2011).

153. Appellant argued that the trial court improperly took judicial notice of the impact of geographical features on the value of real property, but he did not challenge the trial court's related findings. Wheeler v. Phillips, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7402 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 7 2011).

154. Evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the property was not susceptible to an equitable partition in kind under Tex. R. Civ. P. 761 and the trial court did not err in ordering the property partitioned by sale under Tex. R. Civ. P. 770, given that (1) the trial court found that there were multiple joint owners with various interests, (2) to the extent appellant challenged the trial court's judicial notice of the impact of geographical features on the value of the property, appellant's counsel agreed that frontage property was more valuable, (3) the value of the property was uncertain, and (4) although appellant claimed that the property was easily divisible and that he did not want to sell the property, the trial court's finding was not clearly wrong. Wheeler v. Phillips, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7402 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 7 2011).

155. Because an inmate's pleadings and an excerpt from his trial showed that the inmate and his counsel knew about the photographs in question, his Brady claim had no arguable basis in law; the court took judicial notice of a portion of counsel's closing argument in which he stated that it was true he did not subpoena the photographs in question. Reger v. Crim. Da, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6413 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 11 2011).

156. There was no err by refusing initially to take judicial notice of the safety regulations and handbook, because they were not adjudicative facts, and when a fact was classified as legislative rather than adjudicative, judicial notice was discretionary. Schultz v. Lester, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2011 WL 3211271 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2011).

157. In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the record contained the order that established the actions necessary for the mother to obtain return of her children because the trial court had taken judicial notice of the order requiring the mother to comply with the family service plan. In re R.W., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4556 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2011).

158. Court in prior case noted that an inmate was a vexatious litigant, of which the court could take judicial notice. Douglas v. Porter, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3068, 2011 WL 1601292 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 26 2011).

159. Evidence was legally insufficient to support a finding that a decedent's daughter, who had priority under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 77(d), (e), was unsuitable under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 78 to serve as successor administratrix based on reasons that had not been asserted by any interested party. Because Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) did not allow the trial court to take judicial notice of the entire case file, there was no evidence to support its conclusion that there was family discord, and appointing an attorney instead of the daughter did not reduce the estate's expenses under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. §§ 241, 242. Guyton v. Monteau, 332 S.W.3d 687, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 219 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2011).

160. On appeal of defendant's conviction for evading arrest or detention using a vehicle, Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), (c), (f) authorized the Court of Appeals of Texas to take judicial notice for the first time on appeal of the location, direction, and trajectories of the streets described during the encounter. Griego v. State, 331 S.W.3d 815, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 204 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 11 2011).

161. Copy of that 2008 turnover order was included in the record of a related appeal from the same trial-court cause involving the same parties; the court took judicial notice of that order. Bahar v. Lyon Fin. Servs., 330 S.W.3d 379, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8872 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 5 2010).

162. Letter was filed in the trial court during trial, it was part of the clerk's record, it was presented to the trial court, and a trial court could take judicial notice of its own documents even though no request was made, such that the trial court did not err in considering the letter. Dominion Okla. Tex. Exploration & Prod. v. Faulconer Energy Corp., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7150, 2010 WL 3422454 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2010).

163. Defendant challenged as ineffective his counsel's request that the trial court to take judicial notice of its own file, but such was proper, and all of the information that the trial court noted from its files was duplicative of testimony, such that defendant could not show that but for counsel's request, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Gavin v. State, 404 S.W.3d 597, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3862, 2010 WL 2025759 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 20 2010).

164. Mother claimed there was no evidence of a court-ordered service plan because none was admitted in evidence, but the plan and order adopting the plan was filed in the trial court and found in the clerk's record and the court presumed that the trial court took judicial notice of its own files. In the Interest of A.X.A., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9788, 2009 WL 5150068 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2009).

165. As a trial court did not take judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(c) of prior proceedings involving a mother and her children, and the Department of Family and Protective Services offered insufficient evidence to support the elements for termination of a mother's parental rights under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(O), the decision could not stand; judicial notice could not be taken without affording the parties notice thereof and an opportunity to be heard pursuant to Rule 201(e). In re C.L., 304 S.W.3d 512, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7994 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 14 2009).

166. Court granted a motion for judicial notice in part as to a city charter because the citizen presented the same request to the trial court. Brock v. Tandy, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3411 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 14 2009).

167. Even if the court was to grant a citizen's motion for judicial notice as to a development code, which was not presented to the trial court, in light of the court's resolution with regard to the imputation of official dishonesty for libel purposes, the court did not need to address the argument that, although the mayor violated the code, she failed to show that backdating was a basis to remove her from her office as mayor. Brock v. Tandy, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3411 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 14 2009).

168. Trial court did not err in denying an ex-husband's motion for enforcement; the ex-husband had the burden of proof, the ex-wife generally denied the allegations, and the ex-husband generally complained that she did not let him see the children, but he did not offer any specifics, plus the trial court was free to accept the ex-wife's testimony and disregard that of the ex-husband and the items the ex-husband cited to in the clerk's record did not constitute evidence because they were not admitted as exhibits at trial or judicially noticed by the court. Siddiqui v. Siddiqui, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1443, 2009 WL 508260 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

169. Ex-husband cited to the clerk's record in support of an argument regarding a legal fee award, but nothing in that record constituted evidence unless admitted at trial or judicially noticed, plus he did not assert any particular legal argument as a basis for overturning the award, and thus the court overruled this issue. Siddiqui v. Siddiqui, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1443, 2009 WL 508260 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

170. Court agrees with those courts that hold that, unless the claim is one set forth in Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 38.001, the court may not take judicial notice that the usual and customary fees are reasonable but, rather, the party must offer legally and factually sufficient evidence on the issue, and because the judgment was based upon violations of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, this case was not a claim described in § 38.001 and the trial court abused its discretion when it awarded attorney's fees based only on judicial notice under Tex. Civ.

Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 38.003, 38.004; because an award of attorney fees was mandated under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50(d), the proper action was to remand the issue of attorney fees to the trial court. Scott v. Spalding, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 628, 2009 WL 223459 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 30 2009).

171. In a will contest, an objector was not entitled to a new trial under Tex. R. App. P. 34.6(f) because he failed to show that a missing portion of a reporter's record was necessary to the resolution of an appeal; the trial court had not taken judicial notice of a common law marriage because it was a fact issue in dispute during the proceedings, and the fact that other parties referred to the objector and a decedent as married did not mean that the trial court had made a determination on that issue. In re Estate of Rabke, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 481, 2009 WL 196328 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 28 2009).

172. Arbitration award could not be confirmed as provided in Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 171.087 because there was no evidence establishing the award; attaching the award documents to the petition did not make them admissible evidence, and the trial court's taking judicial notice of the contents of its file under Tex. R. Evid. 201 did not elevate averments to proof. Gruber v. CACV of Colo., LLC, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2314 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 2 2008).

173. In a dispute involving a road, a trial court erred by taking judicial notice of prior court records since they were not attached to a motion for summary judgment; moreover, judicial notice could not have been taken of documents that were no longer in existence. Graff v. Berry, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2069 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 18 2008).

174. In a construction dispute, the trial court's review of the contract documents at a hearing on a motion to compel arbitration was proper and established the existence of a valid arbitration agreement. Northwest Constr. Co. v. Oak Partners, L.P., 248 S.W.3d 837, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1734 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

175. Debtors and relatives did not request the trial court to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in the answer to the previous motion for summary judgment, nor did they incorporate that response or even refer to it, and even if the court found that it should review the entirety of depositions, which was questionable, they were not filed in response to the no-evidence motion and were not otherwise presented to the trial court, and thus summary judgment on those issues was properly rendered. Fears v. Texas Bank, 247 S.W.3d 729, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 851 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2008).

176. In proceedings to finalize a forfeiture of two bail bonds, judicial notice could be taken, under the common law, of both the judgments nisi and the bonds; because Tex. R. Evid. 101 indicates that proceedings regarding bail are not covered by the rules of evidence, judicial notice in such cases does not have to comply with Tex. R. Evid. 201, although Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 22.10 provides that civil rules govern all proceedings in the trial court in a bond-forfeiture case following a judgment nisi. Kubosh v. State, 241 S.W.3d 60, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1563 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

177. Defendant failed to preserve the right to question a prosecutor's qualifications under Tex. Const. art. XVI, § 1 on direct appeal where there was no evidence in the appellate record to support defendant's allegations until defendant tendered four exhibits to the court of appeals and asked that court to take judicial notice of those documents as proof of allegations that he raised for the first time on direct appeal. Davis v. State, 227 S.W.3d 733, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 864 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

178. For purposes of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 38.003, the proceeding was before the trial court, and although it did not state that it was taking judicial notice of customary fees, the court presumed that it did, and the customers' counsel testified to his attorney fees; the company did not present any contrary evidence indicating that the fees charged were excessive or unreasonable and thus the evidence was sufficient to support the award of attorney fees. D'Lux Movers & Storage v. Fulton, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3430 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 3 2007).

179. Appellate court refused to take judicial notice that a purported signature on a will was not genuine or could not have been procured in the absence of undue influence because this fact was not generally known in the community or capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy could not have been reasonably questioned. Fletcher v. Harris, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2961 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 19 2007).

180. Evidence was factually insufficient to support an order authorizing the administration of psychoactive medication because the State failed to prove that the patient was under a court order to receive inpatient mental health services; although judicial notice could be taken pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 574.031(e) of the fact that the application was made, the application did not contain facts showing that the patient was under a court order. In re C.S., 208 S.W.3d 77, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8873 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

181. Rules pertaining to custodial interrogations are not extended to information not received from investigative questioning and information that is not incriminating; therefore, a trial court did not err when it took judicial notice of the fact that defendant was married to a particular person in a burglary case because this information was merely provided in an indigency affidavit. Britt v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

182. Trial court's decision to take judicial notice of defendant's date of birth was not an error preserved for review because the complaint made on appeal did not comport with the complaint made in the trial court; defendant contended for the first time on appeal that the admission of such evidence violated his right against self-incrimination. Britt v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : Facts Generally Known

183. Evidence illustrated that defendant's blood was drawn by a registered nurse at a medical center and the court could take judicial notice that the medical center was a hospital, which was a sanitary place within the contemplation of Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.017(a), and thus the record supported the trial court's decision to overrule defendant's motion to suppress filed in his felony driving while intoxicated trial. Jimenez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3376 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 8 2008).

184. It was appropriate to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201 that a judge named as respondent in a mandamus proceeding had resigned, and consequently Tex. R. App. P. 7 required the substitution of his successor as respondent and the abatement of the mandamus proceeding to allow the newly appointed judge to consider the pleadings. In re Newby, 280 S.W.3d 298, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2685 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : Proceedings in Other Courts

185. In a termination of parental rights case, it was improper to take judicial notice of prior testimony, evidence, and factual assertions from earlier hearings and from the court's files because the evidence was not notorious or verifiable and was not admitted into evidence at the termination trial. B. L. M. v. J. H. M., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7707 (Tex. App. Austin July 17 2014).

186. Judicial notice of a federal trial court's orders, which constituted adjudicative facts, was permissible in an appeal from a turnover order. D&m Marine v. Turner, 409 S.W.3d 853, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10374 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 15 2013).

187. In a tenant's suit against her landlord for repairs and judicial remedies, the trial court erred by sua sponte dismissing the case on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel; it could not take judicial notice of the evidence from the prior proceedings without admitting it into evidence at the hearing. Holmes v. Jaafreh, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Waco May 30 2013).

188. Trial court could have found that (1) the inmate did not have a reasonable probability of prevailing on his professional negligence claim against his attorney, as he did not offer evidence of a duty and recovery was barred in the absence of exoneration from his conviction, and (2) the inmate had a long history of starting baseless litigation, and the trial court was free to take judicial notice of other cases decided adversely to appellant, as well as cases that had been issued since the earlier order was entered; the record supported a finding that in seven years, the inmate maintained at least five lawsuits that were finally determined adverse to him, and he repeatedly relitigated the same case against others in cases that had finally been determined, and thus there was sufficient evidence to support a finding under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 11.054. Douglas v. Redmond, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9712, 2012 WL 5921200 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 27 2012).

189. Neither oral nor written admonishments were given to appellant concerning the deportation possibility, and notwithstanding that the record did not address citizenship, the court took judicial notice of the record in his prior appeal, where his mother testified he was a United States citizen, to establish such; the court had a fair assurance that appellant's substantial rights were not affected by the trial court's error in failing admonish him under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 26.13(a)(4). Hernandez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7020, 2012 WL 3600192 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 22 2012).

190. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it revoked defendant's community supervision because the evidence was sufficient to prove that he committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance. Although the State asked the trial court to take judicial notice of the judgment of conviction, the judge inferentially took judicial notice of the evidence in the possession case over which she presided and found defendant committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance. Adams v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6022, 2012 WL 3025917 (Tex. App. El Paso July 25 2012).

191. In a community supervision revocation proceeding, the trial court did not err in finding that defendant committed the offense of possession of a controlled substance because the trial court took judicial notice of the evidence in the possession case over which she had presided. Adams v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6021, 2012 WL 3025921 (Tex. App. El Paso July 25 2012).

192. Although the trial court took judicial notice of appellant's acquittal on the possession charge, she did not produce evidence that her charges stemmed from the same cocaine, and thus no juror could have found that the State was prosecuting appellant for having the same cocaine she was previously found not guilty as to possession; as there was no evidence in support of her plea, the trial court did not err in failing to submit it to the jury. Bussey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1505, 2012 WL 626316 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 3 2012).

193. In a mandamus petition, relator asked the appellate court to order the trial court to grant his motion for judgment nunc pro tunc to correctly credit relator with actual time served for which no credit was given. Because a previous petition was filed by relator based on the same facts giving rise to this petition, the appellate court was permitted to take judicial notice of the exhibits previously provided to the court. In re Bledsoe, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2599 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 8 2011).

194. Because prior adjudications were from the same court and involved appellant, counsel's continued objection to the judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) would most likely have been futile, and counsel was not ineffective for failing to make futile objections. Morales v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10049, 2010 WL 5141838 (Tex. App.

Dallas Dec. 20 2010).

195. Appellant did not cite authority indicating that the State failed to establish a proper foundation for judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) of his prior adjudications and error was not shown. Morales v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10049, 2010 WL 5141838 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 20 2010).

196. Court assumed without deciding that a deficiency in the record could make the factual basis of a claim unavailable for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 11.072, § 9(c), and even assuming that the trial court was authorized to grant relief under appellant's attempted actual innocence claim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying relief because the evidence at the plea hearing met the requirements of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 5 to substantiate guilt, and the habeas record in no way established appellant's actual innocence; the court took judicial notice of the clerk's record on direct appeal, and noted that appellant's written judicial confession, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 1.15, included his statements that he committed the allegation in the indictment. Ex Parte Jessep, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8845 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 4 2010).

197. Entered under Tex. R. Evid. 201, a certified copy of a 2006 decree terminating the mother's rights to another child based on the finding that she endangered the child was admitted into evidence, for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(M); this evidence was legally and factually sufficient to support the trial court's finding of termination based on this section. In the Interest of R.S., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7632, 2009 WL 3191515 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 1 2009).

198. In connection with an inmate's previous motion for DNA testing, a laboratory letter and a record of the trial court's reliance on it were contained within the court's records; the court presumed that the trial court relied on the evidence of the nonexistence of testable materials in denying the inmate's motion for further DNA testing and the court took judicial notice of the content of the letter and record in the court's determination. Jacobs v. State, 294 S.W.3d 192, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6145 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 7 2009).

199. From defendant's murder conviction, the trial court's granting of the forfeiture of defendant's vehicle as contraband under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 59.01(2) was reversed as the trial court erred when it took judicial notice of prior testimony without admitting a transcript of it into evidence in the forfeiture proceeding as required by Tex. R. Evid. 201; there was no evidence that created even a mere surmise or suspicion of a nexus between the illegal activity and the seized vehicle. Davis v. State, 293 S.W.3d 794, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5493 (Tex. App. Waco July 15 2009).

200. In resolving a dispute, the court took judicial notice of two of its prior opinions stemming from different phases of the same litigation. Kachar v. Harris County Attys., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3161, 2009 WL 1270288 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 7 2009).

201. Trial court was not free to take judicial notice from a previous proceeding at a subsequent proceeding unless the testimony was admitted into evidence at the subsequent proceeding. Augillard v. Madura, 257 S.W.3d 494, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 4552 (Tex. App. Austin 2008).

202. Because the same trial judge presided over both the trial of the subsequent cause and defendant's revocation hearing, the trial court acted within its discretion in taking judicial notice of the record in the subsequent cause and considering it in deciding whether to adjudicate defendant's guilt, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1). Rivera v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 4389 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 5 2008).

203. It was not an abuse of discretion for the district court to take judicial notice of the finality of defendant's 1982 conviction for aggravated robbery because the State presented the district court with evidence of a conviction that had occurred 23 years earlier, there was nothing in the evidence presented to indicate that the conviction was not final, and defendant presented no evidence to overcome the presumption of finality. Figueroa v. State, 250 S.W.3d 490, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2028 (Tex. App. Austin 2008).

204. Trial court did not conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702, to determine whether the State had established that an ignition interlock device met the requirements of case law, and the court did not find any authority establishing that any court had found the reliability of the ignition interlock device, and thus the trial court was not able to take judicial notice of the evidence; had the trial court previously conducted numerous gatekeeping hearings on this issue and repeatedly found evidence of the use of ignition interlock device scientifically reliable, then the trial court or the State could have put that in the record along with materials from those previous hearings. Brock v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8689 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 1 2007).

205. Trial court erred in failing to hold a gatekeeper hearing because the ignition interlock evidence was scientific in nature, however, the error did not require reversal under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because (1) the evidence was merely cumulative, and (2) even without the evidence, defendant was still not a suitable candidate for community supervision as there was sufficient evidence to support her felony driving while intoxicated conviction and her eight-year prison term rather than community supervision, given that (1) she narrowly missed hitting someone, (2) her blood alcohol content was four times the legal limit, and (3) she refused to take responsibility for her repeated offenses. Brock v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8689 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 1 2007).

206. Court found that identity was not an issue in the inmate's case, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 64.03(a)(1)(B), and in the absence of factual allegations that, if true, would have supported the finding required by the statute, the court was unable to say that the trial court erred in denying the inmate's motion; furthermore, assuming the trial court took judicial notice of the underlying aggravated sexual assault trial, the evidence supported the conclusion that identity was not an issue, although the victim did not directly identify the inmate, given that (1) the victim said her attacker fell asleep on her couch after the assault, (2) officers found the inmate sleeping there a short time later, (3) the inmate had blood on him and the victim was bleeding after the attack, and (4) the inmate had a knife and the victim said her attacker had a knife. McAfee v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 940 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 8 2007).

207. Where defendant was convicted of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, he filed an affidavit of indigence and a motion requesting a free copy of the reporter's record on appeal; the trial court took judicial notice of the fact that defendant was assessed a $ 5,000 fine in the underlying criminal conviction with the understanding that he had the means to pay the fine. Howard v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3900 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 10 2006).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : Public Records

208. Where a creditor obtained a judgment against a constable and an insurance company regarding the constable's duty with respect to a writ of execution and the insurance company filed a resticted appeal, even if the constable's bond was a public record and an appropriate subject for judicial notice, there was no evidence in the record that the insurance company was the surety on the constable's bond since, inter alia, the record did not contain the bond. Dupree v. KingVision Pay-Per-View, Ltd., 219 S.W.3d 602, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2676 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : Verifiable Facts

209. Court takes judicial notice that Lamar County has a population of 49,793 according to the 2010 census; however, Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 281.003 did not affect roads impliedly dedicated to public use before the effective date of the statute, and thus appellees had to show that the road in question had been impliedly dedicated by appellants as a county road of the county prior to August 31, 1981. Mitchell v. Ballard, 420 S.W.3d 122, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8585, 2012 WL 4840812 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 12 2012).

210. In a dispute regarding interests in gas wells, judicial notice could be taken pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201 of the postjudgment interest rate under former Tex. Fin. Code Ann. § 304.003, resulting in a determination that the trial court correctly set the postjudgment interest rate. Griffin v. Long, 442 S.W.3d 380, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8910, 2011 WL 5545942 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 9 2011).

211. Of facts concerning a pro bono pilot program, the court took judicial notice on its own initiative. Eggers v. Van Zandt, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6479, 2011 WL 3568943 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 15 2011).

212. If one believed the State's version of events, appellant possessed cocaine at the Williamson County jail, and there was no evidence that this jail was anywhere other than Williamson County, such that venue was established; to the extent necessary, the court took judicial notice of the fact that the Williamson County jail was in Williamson County. Perez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6368, 2011 WL 3518047 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 12 2011).

213. In a forcible detainer action, taking judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b)(2) of a bankruptcy court's order that annulled its stay to validate a foreclosure sale led to the conclusion that the foreclosure sale was not invalid because of the bankruptcy stay. Ramey v. Bank of N.Y., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5727 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 22 2010).

214. New trial on punishment was necessary in a Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.03 capital murder case because a prosecution witness incorrectly testified that an inmate sentenced to life without parole might become eligible for a less restrictive prison classification status. The State conceded federal constitutional error, and the court, taking judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b)-(d) of a regulation that prohibited such reclassification, found it probable that the death sentence was based upon the incorrect testimony. Estrada v. State, 313 S.W.3d 274, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 722 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

215. Political party affiliation of a candidate for local office was a proper subject for judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b)(2). In re Baker, 404 S.W.3d 575, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1426 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 25 2010).

216. In a drug case, counsel was not ineffective for not making objections to an officer's testimony regarding the GPS measurement to the school because counsel testified that there had been a measurement done with a roller measurer that was evidence at trial showing that the distance was less than a 1,000 feet. Additionally, the court of appeals took judicial notice of the fact that the school was less than 1,000 feet from the location of the drug transaction. Jackson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5997, 2009 WL 2372973 (Tex. App. Eastland July 30 2009).

217. Evidence was sufficient so sustain defendant's arson conviction because it was not necessary that the State present evidence to prove that Corpus Christi was incorporated. The court of appeals took judicial notice that Corpus Christi was an incorporated city Rios v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6524 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26, 2008).

218. Under Tex. R. Evid. 201, the trial court was not required to take judicial notice of the location of Hurricane Emily on July 18, 2005 and related evacuations, even though those facts could be facts subject to judicial notice, because defendant provided nothing that could serve as a reliable source to support an accurate and ready determination. Tidwell v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3507 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 9 2007).

219. In a paternity case, a motion for new trial, although filed more than 30 calendar days after entry of a default judgment, was timely; taking judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) of the fact that the courthouse was closed for a hurricane evacuation, which was the equivalent of a legal holiday under Tex. R. Civ. P. 4, meant that the motion was timely filed within the 30-day period of Tex. R. Civ. P. 329b(a). Garcia v. Vera, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8701 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 5 2006).

220. In delinquency proceedings, an employee of the juvenile detention facility in Post, Texas, testified that while he was working he saw appellant strike another resident on the head; Tex. R. Evid. 201 permitted the court may take judicial notice that Post was the county seat of Garza County, Texas; the evidence was sufficient to prove venue in Garza County. In re E.H., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4310 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 18 2006).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Domestic Laws

221. Court granted a citizen's motion to take judicial notice of a city charter because he presented some this same request to the trial court, but the court denied the motion otherwise; even if the court were to grant the motion as to the development code, which was not presented to the trial court, given the court's finding that the citizen's advertisement appeared to impeach a mayor's honesty or reputation for purposes of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 73.001, the court did not need to address the argument that, although the mayor allegedly violated the code, she failed to show that backdating was a basis to remove her from office, for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.10(a)(1)-(3), (c)(1). Brock v. Tandy, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5171, 2009 WL 1905130 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 2 2009).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Laws of Foreign States

222. In a breach of contract case, trial attorney's fees should have been awarded because a manufacturer failed to request that the trial court take judicial notice of Michigan law until it was too late, the fees were not precluded by a limitation-of-damages provision in a contract, and a failure to segregate attorney's fees did not preclude recovery of all attorney's fees. There was no argument that the requirements of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 38.001, 38.002 were not met. Daimlerchrysler Motors Co., Llc v. Manuel, 362 S.W.3d 160, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1489 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 24 2012).

223. Under Tex. R. Evid. 202, the court took judicial notice of the laws of various other jurisdictions as per a party's request, but such was immaterial because the court disposed of the party's complaints under Texas law. In re B.G., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5026 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 13 2006).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Scientific & Technical Facts

224. Although defendant originally objected to the trial court taking judicial notice of evidence including a certificate of a drug analysis laboratory report, defendant conceded that the legislature had authorized this method of admitting laboratory analysis of physical evidence. Ray v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3295 (Tex. App. Dallas May 8 2008).

225. On appeal of the trial court's decision granting the defendant's motion in limine to prohibit expert testimony relating to the Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus (HGN) test, the appellate court could not take judicial notice of scientific articles offered by the State concerning reliability of the HGN test results; judicial notice on appeal cannot serve as the sole source of support for a bare trial court record concerning scientific reliability. State v. Trinidad, 2006 Tex.

App. LEXIS 8180 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 13 2006).

226. It could not be concluded on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to take judicial notice of the National Highway Transportation and Safety Administration instructor's manual because the manual was not part of the record from the trial court. Hartman v. State, 198 S.W.3d 829, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6869 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : General Overview

227. Because the surety never objected to the trial court taking judicial notice of its file and the prior proceedings, he failed to preserve his contention for review; the State introduced both the bond and judgment nisi into evidence without any objection from the surety and took judicial notice as requested. Baeza v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3426 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 15 2004).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rule Application & Interpretation

228. In a bond reduction hearing where defendant was charged with two aggravated sexual assault of a child offenses, the trial judge was permitted to take judicial notice of the evidence presented in defendant's previous sexual assault trial involving the same victim; the same judge presided over both cases. The Texas Rules of Evidence do not apply to bond reduction hearings. Ex parte Bratcher, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5418 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Weight & Sufficiency

229. Evidence was legally insufficient to support a finding that a decedent's daughter, who had priority under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 77(d), (e), was unsuitable under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. § 78 to serve as successor administratrix based on reasons that had not been asserted by any interested party. Because Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) did not allow the trial court to take judicial notice of the entire case file, there was no evidence to support its conclusion that there was family discord, and appointing an attorney instead of the daughter did not reduce the estate's expenses under Tex. Prob. Code Ann. §§ 241, 242. Guyton v. Monteau, 332 S.W.3d 687, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 219 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2011).

230. In delinquency proceedings, an employee of the juvenile detention facility in Post, Texas, testified that while he was working he saw appellant strike another resident on the head; Tex. R. Evid. 201 permitted the court may take judicial notice that Post was the county seat of Garza County, Texas; the evidence was sufficient to prove venue in Garza County. In re E.H., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4310 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 18 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

231. In defendant's sexual assault case, a court did not err by taking judicial notice of defendant's birth date where the alleged discrepancy regarding defendant's date of birth was not reflected in the appellate record, and as to the age difference, the victim testified without objection that she was 14 years old and that defendant told her he was 35 years old. The jury could also draw its own conclusions from the appearance of the victim and defendant in the courtroom. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2878 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 927, 125 S. Ct. 1652, 161 L. Ed. 2d 489, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2556, 73 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2005).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Blood & Bodily Fluids

232. In an aggravated assault case, because blood spatter analysis was subject to judicial notice and the State proved the proper application of blood spatter analysis, the trial court did not err in admitting the State's testimony on the issue of blood spatter analysis. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

233. Texas takes judicial notice of the validity of blood spatter analysis; the State is not required to produce evidence on the first two criteria of Kelly. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

Evidence : Scientific Evidence : Sobriety Tests

234. On appeal of the trial court's decision granting the defendant's motion in limine to prohibit expert testimony relating to the Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus (HGN) test, the appellate court could not take judicial notice of scientific articles offered by the State concerning reliability of the HGN test results; judicial notice on appeal cannot serve as the sole source of support for a bare trial court record concerning scientific reliability. State v. Trinidad, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8180 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 13 2006).

Evidence : Testimony : Experts : Criminal Trials

235. In an aggravated assault case, because blood spatter analysis was subject to judicial notice and the State proved the proper application of blood spatter analysis, the trial court did not err in admitting the State's testimony on the issue of blood spatter analysis. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

236. Texas takes judicial notice of the validity of blood spatter analysis; the State is not required to produce evidence on the first two criteria of Kelly. Holmes v. State, 135 S.W.3d 178, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2690 (Tex. App. Waco 2004).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : General Overview

237. In a mother's appeal of the termination of her parental rights to one of her children, the court of appeals should not have taken judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b) of expert testimony given by an expert of the State in criminal proceedings against the mother and her boyfriend for the death of another of her children that appeared to contradict the child's autopsy because the testimony concerned disputed facts and opinions. In re J.L., 163 S.W.3d 79, 2005 Tex. LEXIS 299, 48 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 559 (Tex. 2005).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : General Overview

238. As a trial court did not take judicial notice pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(c) of prior proceedings involving a mother and her children, and the Department of Family and Protective Services offered insufficient evidence to support the elements for termination of a mother's parental rights under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(O), the decision could not stand; judicial notice could not be taken without affording the parties notice thereof and an opportunity to be heard pursuant to Rule 201(e). In re C.L., 304 S.W.3d 512, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7994 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 14 2009).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Procedure

239. In determining the evidentiary sufficiency for a termination of parental rights, the court of appeals declined to consider documents filed in the clerk's record, which included statements about the children's living conditions with their aunt and details about the aunt's intellect. Although the trial court had taken judicial notice of its file, a court could not take judicial notice of the truth of allegations in the record. Rios v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5724, 2012 WL 2989237 (Tex. App. Austin July 11 2012).

Family Law : Parental Duties & Rights : Termination of Rights : Involuntary Termination : Reunification Plans

240. Trial court properly admitted its prior order incorporating a family service plan by judicial notice during closing argument in a parental rights termination case because the family service plan was incorporated in this order. Also, the plan was admitted at trial without objection. In the Interest of D.J.H., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3638 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 9 2012).

Healthcare Law : Treatment : Incompetent, Minor & Mentally Disabled Patients : General Overview

241. Evidence was factually insufficient to support an order authorizing the administration of psychoactive medication because the State failed to prove that the patient was under a court order to receive inpatient mental health services; although judicial notice could be taken pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 201(b), Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 574.031(e) of the fact that the application was made, the application did not contain facts showing that the patient was under a court order. In re C.S., 208 S.W.3d 77, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8873 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2006).

Real Property Law : Landlord & Tenant : Tenant's Remedies & Rights : General Overview

242. In a tenant's suit against her landlord for repairs and judicial remedies, the trial court erred by sua sponte dismissing the case on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel; it could not take judicial notice of the evidence from the prior proceedings without admitting it into evidence at the hearing. Holmes v. Jaafreh, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6648 (Tex. App. Waco May 30 2013).

Real Property Law : Restrictive Covenants : General Overview

243. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

Transportation Law : Private Vehicles : Traffic Regulation : General Overview

244. In a tort suit following a motor vehicle collision that occurred on the shoulder of the highway, Tex. R. Evid. 201 did not require the trial court to instruct the jury on judicial notice. Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 545.058 and its terms are legislative facts, rather than judicial facts. Perkins v. Delaney, 170 S.W.3d 136, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4027 (Tex. App. Eastland 2005).

Workers' Compensation & SSDI : Third Party Actions : Third Party Liability

245. Reviewing court took judicial notice of administrative decisions regarding the sufficiency of insurers' explanation of benefits to hospitals in workers' compensation medical-fee disputes. Vista Med. Ctr. Hosp. v. Tex. Mut. INS. Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6853 (Tex. App. Austin June 6 2013).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Civil Procedure : Federal & State Interrelationships : Choice of Law : General Overview

1. In an action for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud and related claims, the underlying agreement provided that all legal proceedings would be governed by the laws of the State of Delaware. Because neither party argued that Delaware law differed substantially from Texas law, the Court of Appeals of Texas presumed according to Tex. R. Evid. 202 that the law of Delaware was identical to Texas law for purposes of resolving an arbitration dispute. Continuum Health Servs., Llc v. Cross, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9566, 2012 WL 5845367 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 19 2012).

2. Appellant filed a Tex. R. Evid. 202 motion that identified the conflict between Texas and Wisconsin, plus appellant submitted an affidavit from a Wisconsin attorney stated that Wisconsin did not have a statute requiring manufacturers to indemnify an innocent retailer; thus, the court rejected appellee's claim that appellant did not provide the trial court with enough information to determine the issue of choice of law. Engine Components, Inc. v. A.E.R.O. Aviation Co., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1528, 2012 WL 666648 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 29 2012).

3. Nothing in Tex. R. Evid. 202 requires a definitive choice-of-law analysis; the rule simply provides a mechanism by which a party may compel the trial court to judicially notice the law of another state; it does not force a party to make a definitive declaration as to which state's law applies. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. v. Gunderson, Inc., 235 S.W.3d 287, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6832 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

4. Assignor's argument that the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania were to be applied to his agreement with an assignee failed because no preliminary motion was filed pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 202 asking the trial court to apply another state's laws. Furthermore, there was nothing in the record showing that either party advised the trial court that there was a choice of law issue or pointed out the distinctions between the laws of Pennsylvania and Texas regarding the matter in controversy. Johnson v. Structured Asset Servs., LLC, 148 S.W.3d 711, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9622 (Tex. App. Dallas 2004).

Civil Procedure : Alternative Dispute Resolution : Arbitrations : General Overview

5. In a dispute over a mall, because there was no request for a trial court to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 202 of the relevant provisions of the California Arbitration Act, Cal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1280-1294.2, it was presumed that California law was the same as Texas law with regard to judicial review and enforcement of arbitration awards. The Texas General Arbitration Act, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 171.001-.098, was applied to the appeal. Collins v. Tex Mall, L.P., 297 S.W.3d 409, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

Civil Procedure : Pretrial Matters : Continuances

6. In a case alleging product liability and other causes of action, a trial court did not err by failing to conduct a conflict of law analysis because a purchaser never filed a motion under Tex. R. Evid. 202; therefore, the trial court presumed that the law of the foreign state was identical to that in Texas. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. v. Gunderson, Inc., 235 S.W.3d 287, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6832 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Costs & Attorney Fees : General Overview

7. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

8. In a case arising from a car accident, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to take judicial notice of Louisiana law regarding spousal immunity, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 202, because there was an untimely motion providing inadequate proof of the content of the law in Louisiana. Colvin v. Colvin, 291 S.W.3d 508, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5329 (Tex. App. Tyler July 8 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : General Overview

9. In a sex offender registration case, the evidence was legally and factually sufficient to support a finding of "true" that defendant had a prior felony sex offense conviction in Colorado for the offense of criminal attempt to commit third degree sexual assault where a four-year sentence was imposed, and a reference was made to "F-5;" judicial notice was properly taken of Colorado law. Laningham v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5511 (Tex. App. Waco July 11 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Substantial Evidence : General Overview

10. In a sex offender registration case, the evidence was legally and factually sufficient to support a finding of "true" that defendant had a prior felony sex offense conviction in Colorado for the offense of criminal attempt to commit third degree sexual assault where a four-year sentence was imposed, and a reference was made to "F-5;" judicial notice was properly taken of Colorado law. Laningham v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5511 (Tex. App. Waco July 11 2007).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : General Overview

11. There was no indication in the record that a condominium association failed to comply with the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 202 when it asked the trial court to take judicial notice of 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000. The Texas Court of Appeals therefore found that the trial court erred in failing to take judicial notice of the regulation, and took judicial notice of it then, recognizing that the First Court of Appeals also did so during the first appeal of this case. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

12. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

13. In a fraudulent transfer case, although the trial court was asked to take judicial notice of California trust law, no argument was made in support of that request; hence, applying Texas law was not error. Schaefer v. Bellfort Chateau L.P., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6564 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 18 2005).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Domestic Laws

14. Kansas default judgment was entitled to full faith and credit and was enforceable because the Kansas court had personal jurisdiction over nonresidents performing services in Kansas. Jurisdictional facts alleged in the Kansas petition were deemed admitted in the Texas enforcement proceeding, and Texas law was properly applied absent a request to apply or take judicial notice of Kansas law. Ward v. Hawkins, 418 S.W.3d 815, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15125, 2013 WL 6578766 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 16 2013).

15. In a case arising from a car accident, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to take judicial notice of Louisiana law regarding spousal immunity, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 202, because there was an untimely motion providing inadequate proof of the content of the law in Louisiana. Colvin v. Colvin, 291 S.W.3d 508, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5329 (Tex. App. Tyler July 8 2009).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Laws of Foreign States

16. Before the trial court was required to determine if Connecticut or Texas law applied, the company had the initial burden to show that a conflict existed between the two and provide the trial court with sufficient information to make its choice of law determination. Grizzly Mt. Aviation, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12869, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P19252, 2013 WL 5676069 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 17 2013).

17. Company's arguments failed to meet its burden to show that a conflict existed between Texas and Connecticut law, and absent proof or argument to the contrary, the trial court could have presumed that the laws were the same, and the trial court was under no obligation to find that Connecticut law differed from Texas law. Grizzly Mt. Aviation, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12869, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P19252, 2013 WL 5676069 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 17 2013).

18. In an action for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud and related claims, the underlying agreement provided that all legal proceedings would be governed by the laws of the State of Delaware. Because neither party argued that Delaware law differed substantially from Texas law, the Court of Appeals of Texas presumed according to Tex. R. App. Dallas Nov. 19 2012).

19. Trial court properly held that an oil company was entitled to recover attorney fees based on a sanctions award and the presumption that California law was identical to Texas law; appellants neither requested that the trial court take judicial notice of California law nor alerted it to any discrepancies between California and Texas law. Paradigm Oil, Inc. v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 330 S.W.3d 342, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7087, 178 Oil & Gas Rep. 162 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 31 2010).

20. In a dispute over a mall, because there was no request for a trial court to take judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 202 of the relevant provisions of the California Arbitration Act, Cal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1280-1294.2, it was presumed that California law was the same as Texas law with regard to judicial review and enforcement of arbitration awards. The Texas General Arbitration Act, Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. §§ 171.001-.098, was applied to the appeal. Collins v. Tex Mall, L.P., 297 S.W.3d 409, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6602 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 20 2009).

21. In a dispute concerning title to mineral interests, no party asked the trial court to take judicial notice of the applicable laws of Alabama with respect to a will that had been probated in Alabama, and there was no indication that the trial court undertook to do so on its own motion; therefore, the pertinent law of Alabama was presumed on appeal to be identical to Texas law. McCuen v. Huey, 255 S.W.3d 716, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3615 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

22. Nothing in Tex. R. Evid. 202 requires a definitive choice-of-law analysis; the rule simply provides a mechanism by which a party may compel the trial court to judicially notice the law of another state; it does not force a party to make a definitive declaration as to which state's law applies. 23. In a case alleging product liability and other causes of action, a trial court did not err by failing to conduct a conflict of law analysis because a purchaser never filed a motion under Tex. R. Evid. 202; therefore, the trial court presumed that the law of the foreign state was identical to that in Texas. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. v. Gunderson, Inc., 235 S.W.3d 287, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6832 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2007).

24. Texas Court of Appeals was uncertain that the fact sheet should have been given judicial notice under either Tex. R. Evid. 201 or Rule 202 because there was no indication in the fact sheet that the FCC intended for the 47 C.F.R. § 1.4000(a)(3)'s limitation on the availability of attorney's fees to apply only when a restriction is held invalid. The fact sheet does not discuss the attorney's fees provision in any respect. River Oaks Place Council of Co-Owners v. Daly, 172 S.W.3d 314, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7154 (Tex. Rule 203 Determining Foreign Law

(a) Raising a Foreign Law Issue.--A party who intends to raise an issue about a foreign country's law must:

(1)give reasonable notice by a pleading or other writing; and

(2)at least 30 days before trial, supply all parties a copy of any written materials or sources the party intends to use to prove the foreign law.

(b) Translations.--If the materials or sources were originally written in a language other than English, the party intending to rely on them must, at least 30 days before trial, supply all parties both a copy of the foreign language text and an English translation.

(c) Materials the Court May Consider; Notice.--In determining foreign law, the court may consider any material or source, whether or not admissible. If the court considers any material or source not submitted by a party, it must give all parties notice and a reasonable opportunity to comment and submit additional materials.

(d) Determination and Review.--The court - not the jury - must determine foreign law. The court's determination must be treated as a ruling on a question of law.

(e) Suits Brought Under the Family Code Involving a Marriage Relationship or Parent-Child Relationship.--Subsections (a) and (b) of this rule do not apply to an action to which Rule 308b, Texas Rules of Civil Procedure, applies.

Civil Procedure : Federal & State Interrelationships : Choice of Law : General Overview

1. In a case in which a Canadian petroleum company and related entities brought claims against an engineering company headquartered in Texas for engineering work that the engineering company had done in Yemen on a pipeline for the petroleum company's corporate predecessor, the trial court was deemed to have made the proper choice of law when it was presented with the choice-of-law issue and the evidence in support of it; furthermore, the Alberta case law, the Alberta Limitations Act, and an Alberta Law Reform Institute report on limitations that, together, both parties presented below, were the type of materials contemplated under Tex. R. Evid. 203 to prove foreign jurisdictions' laws. Nexen Inc. v. Gulf Interstate Eng'g Co., 224 S.W.3d 412, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10289, 166 Oil & Gas Rep. 629 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2006).

2. Where the parties had a loan agreement that provided Belgium law would apply to any dispute, appellee company A did not waive any argument regarding the application of Belgium law under Tex. R. Evid. 203 by failing to provide notice that it intended to raise an issue concerning the law of Belgium in an action to enforce the Belgium court's judgment in Texas in a dispute concerning loan payments. Appellee provided appellant company B with notice that it was relying on the judgments issued by the Belgium courts, and furnished the Texas court with complete copies of the Belgium judgments with English translations. Presley v. Veredeling, 370 S.W.3d 425, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3282, 2012 WL 1441399 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 26 2012).

3. Party who intends to raise an issue about foreign law is required to give notice and, at 30 days before trial, furnish all parties copies of any written materials or sources the party intends to use as proof of foreign law; if a party fails to give notice and prove foreign law as provided by the rule, the foreign law may not be applied. Exxon Corp. v. Breezevale, Ltd., 82 S.W.3d 429, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 2407, 157 Oil & Gas Rep. 785 (Tex. App. Dallas 2002).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : General Overview

4. Judgment debtor and his wife, who owned a Mexican entity that the court assumed was a corporation, submitted no proof of any Mexican laws or relevant expert testimony to interpret the documents at issue, nor did the trial court take judicial notice of Mexican law pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 203, and thus the court applied Texas law to the turnover order issued under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 31.002. The documents ordered turned over were specific corporate resolutions that effected a transfer of the interest in the entity, and accordingly, consents in writing would be signed by the holders of all the shares, which made Tex. Bus. Corp. Act Ann. art. 9.10 applicable and dispensed with the requirement of a meeting in the entity's domicile, and the "action so taken" did not need to be taken in a formal manner, and therefore the order did not require the violation of the entity's articles of incorporation. Gerdes v. Kennamer, 155 S.W.3d 541, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10945 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2004).

5. Corporation's motion for judicial notice did not adequately apprise the trial court of any distinction in the laws of Texas and Japan regarding judgment interest because: (1) the corporation failed to direct the trial court's attention to any distinctions regarding judgment interest in its motion, and (2) although the corporation argued that judgment interest differed under Japanese law in response to the representative's summary judgment motion under Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a, which was a pleading under Tex. R. Evid. 203, the corporation merely referenced two pages in a treatise, which was a conclusory statement; thus, the trial court was left to presume that Japan law was the same as Texas law on the issue. PennWell Corp. v. Ken Assocs., 123 S.W.3d 756, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10401 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2003).

6. Tex. R. Evid. art. 203 governs judicial notice of adjudicative facts and foreign law, but does not apply to judicial notice of the laws of the forum where individual statutes, rules, and judicial decisions govern. Watts v. State, 99 S.W.3d 604, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 58 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

7. Tex. R. 11. Although under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 159.604(a)(2), Canadian law governed a dispute over child support arising out a child support order issued by a Canadian court, the father failed to notify the parties and the court of his intent to invoke Canadian law or to provide notice of the sources he relied on, as required by Tex. 12. Pursuant to Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 2A.505, the cancellation of the parties' agreement could not be construed as a discharge of any right belonging to the other party based on an antecedent breach by the other unless such intention clearly appeared in the parties' second agreement, and that agreement was silent regarding the discharge of any claims that arose prior to the cancellation of the first agreement; appellant failed to meet its burden to show that any rights appellee had to recover for a breach that occurred prior to the cancellation of the first agreement were extinguished by the cancellation. Rule 204 Judicial Notice of Texas Municipal and County Ordinances, Texas Register Contents, and Published Agency Rules

(a) Scope.--This rule governs judicial notice of Texas municipal and county ordinances, the contents of the Texas Register, and agency rules published in the Texas Administrative Code.

(b) Taking Notice.--The court:

(1)may take judicial notice on its own; or

(2)must take judicial notice if a party requests it and the court is supplied with the necessary information.

(c) Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard.

(1) Notice.--The court may require a party requesting judicial notice to notify all other parties of the request so they may respond to it.

(2) Opportunity to Be Heard.--On timely request, a party is entitled to be heard on the propriety of taking judicial notice and the nature of the matter to be noticed. If the court takes judicial notice before a party has been notified, the party, on request, is still entitled to be heard.

(d) Determination and Review.--The court - not the jury - must determine municipal and county ordinances, the contents of the Texas Register, and published agency rules. The court's determination must be treated as a ruling on a question of law.

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Evidence : Judicial Notice : General Overview

1. Pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33.1, defendant failed to preserve an issue on appeal related to the jury charge in defendant's trial under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.124(a)(2) because the complaint on appeal did not comport with the objection made at trial, and the court reviewed only for egregious error, but none was found. The instruction complained of was an instruction in accordance with the Texas Register, the extra sentence declaring red phosphorous and iodine as immediate precursors was an extension of the definition of immediate precursors under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.002(22), and the court noted that whether such items were immediate precursors was a question of law and subject to judicial notice under Tex. R. Evid. 204, and defendant failed to show any error in the charge for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 36.19. Miramontes v. State, 225 S.W.3d 132, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7160 (Tex. App. El Paso 2005).

2. Under Tex. R. Evid. 204, the court judicially notes that red phosphorous and iodine are immediate precursors, as defined in Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.002(22), as prescribed by the Texas Commissioner of Health in 27 Tex. Reg. 8327-28. Miramontes v. State, 225 S.W.3d 132, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7160 (Tex. App. El Paso 2005).

3. Judicial notice of the existence and content of local laws and ordinances, as well as the contents of the Texas Register and Administrative Code, is governed by Tex. R. Evid. 204. Watts v. State, 99 S.W.3d 604, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 58 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Domestic Laws

4. During defendant's felony DWI trial, the court did not err in denying defendant's request to take judicial notice of the contents of 37 Tex. Admin. Code § 221.9 as that section existed on the date of defendant's arrest because an officer's testimony about defendant's performance on standardized field sobriety tests was properly admitted even if the officer was not certified as a practitioner at the time of the tests. Henderson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9653, 2012 WL 5869585 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 21 2012).

5. In a condemnation case, although the court took judicial notice of regulations that the county had not presented to the trial court, the county failed to show that the regulations were material to the resolution of any issue presented in the appeal. Dallas County v. Crestview Corners Car Wash, 370 S.W.3d 25, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5945 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2012).

6. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 204, the court took judicial notice of the ordinances of a city. City of Paris v. Abbott, 360 S.W.3d 567, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8440 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 21 2011).

7. Court erred in overturning defendant's cruelty to animals conviction because defendant never demonstrated that the statute had been adopted by the county voters; the reviewing court could not determine the content of local law with sufficient certainty to take judicial notice of whether or not the statute applied to the location in which the incident occurred. Volosen v. State, 227 S.W.3d 77, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 810 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

8. Rule requires a court to take judicial notice of a county or municipal ordinance upon request, so long as the requesting party furnishes sufficient information to enable the court properly to comply with the request; the rule also permits a court to take judicial notice upon its own motion. Volosen v. State, 227 S.W.3d 77, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 810 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Scientific & Technical Facts

9. In a felony driving while intoxicated case, the trial court did not err in taking judicial notice of the reliability of the theory underlying the horizontal gaze nystagmus test and its technique without conducting a gatekeeper hearing. Goains v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7875, 2011 WL 4537892 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 28 2011).

Governments : Local Governments : Ordinances & Regulations

10. Judicial notice of the existence and content of local laws and ordinances, as well as the contents of the Texas Register and Administrative Code, is governed by Tex. R. Evid. 204. Watts v. State, 99 S.W.3d 604, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 58 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003).

LexisNexis (R) Notes

Business & Corporate Law : Agency Relationships : Authority to Act : Apparent Authority : Proof

1. In an action for breach of a gas purchase agreement, evidence of early pays and appellant's relationship with a third party was properly admitted to show they had oral agreements and the third party's authority was not encompassed by the sole written contract between them. This evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for purposes of establishing apparent agency. Reliant Energy Servs. v. Cotton Valley Compression, Llc, 336 S.W.3d 764, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 173 Oil & Gas Rep. 732 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

Business & Corporate Law : Corporations : Shareholders : Disregard of Corporate Entity : General Overview

2. In an action alleging an alter ego theory, letters and asset purchase agreement of an individual defendant showed the nature of the actions taken by him in regard to the corporate defendants. Accordingly, the letters and agreement were relevant as to whether the individual was the alter ego of the corporation. Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

3. In an action alleging an alter ego theory, letters and asset purchase agreement of an individual defendant showed the nature of the actions taken by him in regard to the corporate defendants. Accordingly, the letters and agreement were relevant as to whether the individual was the alter ego of the corporation. Carone v. Retamco Operating, Inc., 138 S.W.3d 1, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2557 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2004).

Civil Procedure : Jurisdiction : Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions : In Personam Actions : General Overview

4. In an appeal from the denial of a special appearance, the court rejected a foreign manufacturer's argument that some exhibits were irrelevant in that they related to other companies, which the opposing party asserted were predecessors. The court determined that the opposing party met its initial burden of pleading sufficient allegations to bring the manufacturer within the provisions of the Texas long-arm statute and therefore that the relevancy argument was without merit. Ho Wah Genting Kintron Sdn Bhd v. Leviton Mfg. Co., 163 S.W.3d 120, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1414, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17391 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

Civil Procedure : Counsel : Disqualifications

5. Disqualification of opposing counsel in a suit affecting the parent-child relationship was proper because the product of the risk and the consequences was great enough that the representation was adverse, and there was a reasonable probability that the representation would have violated the rule pertaining to confidential information where opposing counsel had represented a family member of a father's fiancee in a previous custody case, and her medical history was relevant to a child's best interest. In re C.G.H., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8202, 2013 WL 3377421 (Tex. App. Tyler July 3 2013).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Disclosures : Mandatory Disclosures

6. In a gross negligence case arising from a fatal vehicle accident, a petition for a writ of mandamus was denied in relation to the discovery of relevant tax returns, even though the returns were not duplicative of balance sheets that were not audited or certified, because a widower failed to show that the returns were not duplicative other financial information already supplied; the privacy standards for tax returns applied to the returns of corporations as well. In re Brewer Leasing, Inc., 255 S.W.3d 708, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Admissions : Objections

7. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding quality control documents the automobile manufacturer produced the day before trial because they were untimely produced. The documents should have been produced at the time the manufacturer made its objections concerning relevance because the documents were outside the scope of the manufacturer's objections and they directly related to the estate representative's claim that the manufacturer had negligent quality control; in addition, the manufacturer did not assert a lack of possession, custody or control of the documents. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Methods : Oral Depositions

8. Trial court did not err by failing to quash the property owner's accountant's deposition based on the accountant-client privilege because: (1) the property owner produced no evidence to substantiate any claim of an alleged privilege, as the existence of such a privilege based on Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 901.457 (2004) was doubtful; (2) even assuming that § 901.457 created a privilege, the accountant's deposition fell within the statutory exception to the privilege as a court order directed to the accountant, mentioning the property owner by name, and requesting specific information concerning the property owner; (3) the accountant's actions and knowledge regarding the ownership of the property were relevant to the employee's premises liability issues and rendered the accountant a fact witness subject to deposition; and (4) the property owner did not file a motion for a protective order as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.6. In re Arnold, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9957, 2012 WL 6085320 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2012).

Civil Procedure : Discovery : Relevance

9. In a premises liability lawsuit, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in compelling discovery of two incident reports where its order was narrowly tailored to limit discovery to a period of three years, to the particular store where the underlying injury occurred, to the parking lot of that store, and to trip and falls. Although those incidents did not involve cart corrals, plaintiff broadly alleged that the store was negligent and failed to use ordinary care in maintaining the premises in a reasonably safe condition and free of hazards and thus, the reports were relevant and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. In re H.E.B. Grocery Co., L.P., 2014 Tex.

App. LEXIS 1777, 2014 WL 700749 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 18 2014).

10. City was entitled to mandamus relief, because the owner failed to object to the city's discovery requests, and the discovery information the city sought went to the heart of the owner's lost profits claim for inverse condemnation through a regulatory taking; the owner had a duty to supplement its answers to the city's requests for production and failed to do so, and the requested documents were relevant. In re City of Houston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 21 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 4 2013).

11. Trial court did not err by failing to quash the property owner's accountant's deposition based on the accountant-client privilege because: (1) the property owner produced no evidence to substantiate any claim of an alleged privilege, as the existence of such a privilege based on Tex. Occ. Code Ann. § 901.457 (2004) was doubtful; (2) even assuming that § 901.457 created a privilege, the accountant's deposition fell within the statutory exception to the privilege as a court order directed to the accountant, mentioning the property owner by name, and requesting specific information concerning the property owner; (3) the accountant's actions and knowledge regarding the ownership of the property were relevant to the employee's premises liability issues and rendered the accountant a fact witness subject to deposition; and (4) the property owner did not file a motion for a protective order as required by Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.6. In re Arnold, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9957, 2012 WL 6085320 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2012).

12. In a case stemming from a house fire and the resulting product liability lawsuit filed by real parties in interest against the manufacturer of a computer power supply/surge protector and others, the trial court abused its discretion in ordering the manufacturer to produce certain of its back up power supply products, discovery produced in relation to another lawsuit, and other documents because real parties failed to establish a correlation between the specific model they had purchased and another of the manufacturer's product lines, failed to show that their request was not narrowly tailored to include only relevant materials, and failed to show that the litigation information they sought was relevant. In re Am. Power Conversion Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9369, 2012 WL 5507111 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 14 2012).

13. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that the phone records from the two and one-half hour window immediately before and after the accident were reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to support the pleadings, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering production of the phone records from 4:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. on the date of the accident; whether the mother made threats to the driver did not make it more or less probable that she negligently entrusted the go-cart to her son, or that her son was negligent in driving the go-cart, Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3, Tex. R. Evid. 401, and the trial court abused its discretion in ordering those records to be produced. In re Moor, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9232, 2012 WL 5463193 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 8 2012).

14. Store was entitled to partial conditional writ of mandamus, because the claimant's discovery requests for information relating to incidents at all 23 grocery stores in the slip and fall case was overbroad, the claimant's discovery request for accident and/or incident reports regarding other incidents was overbroad, and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that floor safety training records of managers, maintenance partners, and partners who were working in the area where the claimant fell could lead to relevant, admissible evidence to support the pleading. In re Heb Grocery Co., L.P., 375 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5409 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 10 2012).

15. In a product liability case involving an allegedly defective surge protector, the trial court properly ordered discovery relating to a recall of a predecessor product that caused overheating and fires, but erred in allowing discovery of complaints regarding models that were not similar to the model in question and in failing to limit the scope of the requests as to time and locale. In re Am. Power Conversion Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5310, 2012

WL 2584290 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 5 2012).

16. Information sought by an injured person in the request for production was relevant and discoverable because, whether or not the accident was caused because the waste management company did not properly train its drivers in safety matters, or improperly scheduled them, or because it did not employ a safety director when other locations did, was relevant to the claim that the office was deficient in its safety training and management. In re Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7192, 2011 WL 3855745 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2011).

17. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding quality control documents the automobile manufacturer produced the day before trial because they were untimely produced. The documents should have been produced at the time the manufacturer made its objections concerning relevance because the documents were outside the scope of the manufacturer's objections and they directly related to the estate representative's claim that the manufacturer had negligent quality control; in addition, the manufacturer did not assert a lack of possession, custody or control of the documents. Kia Motors Corp. v. Ruiz, 348 S.W.3d 465, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6144, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P18719 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 5 2011).

18. Private club was entitled to mandamus relief from a discovery order requiring it to produce documents containing members' names in a defamation suit; although the names of members who allegedly made defamatory statements might be relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and subject to discovery under Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3(b), other members' names were not, and the order was thus overbroad. In re Houstonian Campus, Llc, 312 S.W.3d 178, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2805 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 16 2010).

19. Discovery order in a product liability case requiring the manufacturer to produce documents about protective systems on several model years was not overbroad; evidence about similar products was relevant under Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3(a), Tex. R. Evid. 401 to a safer alternative design as contemplated by Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 82.005, and the manufacturer did not meet its burden under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.4(a), 199.6 of showing that the time parameters were burdensome or otherwise presenting proof to support its objections. In re Exmark Mfg. Co., 299 S.W.3d 519, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8469 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 30 2009).

20. District court judge did not err in ordering disclosure of the names and addresses of other insured property owners whose claims were handled by the investigator that denied the insured homeowner's water damage claim because Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3(e)(5) specifically provided that a party could discover any bias of the witness and did not contain any requirement that an expert's credibility must be an issue for evidence of the expert's potential bias to be discoverable; further, the insurer failed to show the names and addresses were not relevant as provided in Tex. R. Evid. 401 or that they were within any constitutionally protected zone of privacy. In re Kemper Lloyds Ins. Co., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1602 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 28 2006).

21. In a breach of contract case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion to compel discovery; the documents sought, which were tax returns, did not constitute relevant information because the terms of the parties' contract did not give rise to the duties alleged. Wakeland v. Wakeland, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 4 2006).

Civil Procedure : Summary Judgment : Supporting Materials : General Overview

22. Affidavits of expert witnesses offered in support of homeowners' motion against summary judgment in an action seeking losses for a house fire failed to meet the requirements of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 702, and 703, as the testimony was a pyramid of inferences lacking probative force because it was based on assumed facts that varied from the actual undisputed facts. Rayon v. Energy Specialties, Inc., 121 S.W.3d 7, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 9160 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

Civil Procedure : Judgments : Relief From Judgment : Motions for New Trials

23. Fact that a witness might have suffered a shoulder injury as a result of the accident did not tend to make the parents' allegation that their son suffered a shoulder injury as a result of the accident more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; thus, the witness's testimony was irrelevant under Tex. Evid. R. 401 and was properly excluded. Therefore, the trial court did not err in denying the parents' motion for a new trial. McGaffigan v. Mora, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4697 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 26 2004).

Civil Procedure : Remedies : Writs : Common Law Writs : Mandamus

24. In a case arising from a fatal vehicle accident, a petition for a writ of mandamus was granted in relation to the discovery of financial records in a gross negligence case because the records sought were not duplicative of balance sheets produced; the balance sheets were not audited or certified, and they did not contain an affidavit or statement that they represented the net worth of a truck owner and an employer; evidence of net worth was relevant to this lawsuit and discoverable because punitive damages were sought under Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 41.003(a). In re Brewer Leasing, Inc., 255 S.W.3d 708, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

25. In a gross negligence case arising from a fatal vehicle accident, a petition for a writ of mandamus was denied in relation to the discovery of relevant tax returns, even though the returns were not duplicative of balance sheets that were not audited or certified, because a widower failed to show that the returns were not duplicative other financial information already supplied; the privacy standards for tax returns applied to the returns of corporations as well. In re Brewer Leasing, Inc., 255 S.W.3d 708, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion

26. In an action under the the Federal Employers Liability Act, in the absence of any evidence that a railroad employee had a genetic predisposition to such injuries, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding testimony that genetics was a cause of degenerative disc disease. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Phillips, 434 S.W.3d 675, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5533 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 22 2014).

27. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence concerning sexual abuse allegations made against the father because the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services did not seek to terminate the father's parental rights based on those allegations, the Department did not contend that the allegations were true, and the trial court gave the jury a limiting instruction concerning the evidence. J.H. v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4434, 2011 WL 2297723 (Tex. App. Austin June 9 2011).

Civil Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Harmless Error Rule

28. Where a former employee alleged that a former employer terminated the employee because the employee refused to drive a truck without a required permit and a jury found in favor of the employer, any error in excluding seven overweight permits as irrelevant was harmless because the excluded permits were not relevant to the first jury question since whether the truck was overweight on the day in question was not relevant to whether the employee was discharged, and the jury did not reach the remaining questions. Nezat v. Tucker Energy Servs., 437 S.W.3d 541, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6518, 38 I.E.R. Cas. (BNA) 1033 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2014).

29. In a negligence case arising from a fire at a condominium complex, speculative testimony regarding the adequacy of plumbing work was irrelevant and inadmissible and no showing of expert qualifications was made under Tex. R. Evid. 702; however, the trial court's error in admitting the testimony was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44. Richmond Condos. v. Skipworth Commer. Plumbing, Inc., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5977 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 26 2007).

Civil Procedure : Eminent Domain Proceedings : Experts

30. In an eminent domain proceeding in which a land planner designated as an expert by the owner testified that the owner could not achieve full compliance with the town's zoning ordinances after the State's condemnation and that the owner would be required to demolish all of its buildings, the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the land planner's opinion about the allegedly required demolition of the owner's buildings because his opinion was impermissibly speculative and conjectural. Reversal was required because there was a reasonable probability that the inadmissible evidence that characterized the demolition of the owner's buildings as a certainty, rather than a market-affecting factor, improperly influenced the jury's verdict on remainder damages. State v. Little Elm Plaza, Ltd., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8880 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 25 2012).

31. In an action arising from the State's partial taking of owners' property for use in a highway project, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the State's pretrial motion to exclude the expert testimony of the owners' designated real estate appraiser where his testimony was relevant because the market value of the whole property prior to the taking was a fact of consequence to the determination of the disputed element of the measure of damages. Moreover, the owners met their burden to show that the appraiser's expert testimony was reliable because he provided data of comparable sales with a variety of possible uses for the property and also testified that he performed a feasibility study on the possible uses for the property considering such factors as the impervious cover limitations, and although the State's experts provided conflicting testimony of the property's highest and best use as an office building and the property's market value based on four different land sales with a different unit of comparison, it was for the jury to resolve the conflicting evidence of the experts to determine the market value of the whole property prior to the taking. State v. Petropoulos, 346 S.W.3d 619, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3021 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 28 2009).

Computer & Internet Law : General Overview

32. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

Computer & Internet Law : Criminal Offenses : General Overview

33. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, 404 in admitting a video of a social networking page, on which defendant was depicted holding a gun. The evidence was relevant because a witness testified that the gun in the video was the same gun the witness saw defendant use in the murder; it wass unlikely that the jury would have felt compelled to convict defendant of murder simply because he acted like a "bad boy" and brandished a weapon on camera. Brumfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137, 2010 WL 5187690 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2010).

34. In a trial for a murder by ligature strangulation, there was no error in admitting exhibits relating to defendant's use of an erotic asphyxiation Web site, in part because images of unrelated sexual activity and nudity were eliminated, leaving only those images showing ligature and manual strangulation that defendant had viewed in the five weeks before the murder; the State was able to tie some of the viewings to the dates that defendant visited other female homeowners and realtors, in order to show intent and motive in the murder of the female victim during an ostensible viewing of her home. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Procedural Due Process : Self-Incrimination Privilege

35. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by requiring appellant, who was on trial for capital murder, to display his gang-related tattoo to the jury because the tattoos were admissible to prove the "criminal street gang" element of the offense, and their probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Garza v. State, 213 S.W.3d 338, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 98 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Assistance of Counsel

36. Ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI was shown where defendant's counsel failed to object to evidence that one of two women who died after being run over by defendant's truck was pregnant; evidence of her pregnancy was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 402 because the fact that the woman was pregnant did not tend to make it more or less probable that defendant had the requisite intent to injure her and there was no evidence that defendant in fact even was aware of the woman's pregnancy. White v. Thaler, 610 F.3d 890, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 13329 (5th Cir. Tex. 2010).

Constitutional Law : Bill of Rights : Fundamental Rights : Criminal Process : Right to Confrontation

37. Although a driver had the right under U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 and Tex. Const. art. I, § 19 to cross-examine the officer who arrested him for driving while intoxicated after he was involved in an auto accident, the administrative law judge (ALJ) who suspended his driver's license was within her discretion to limit questioning on relevancy grounds pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 because the record showed that when the officer was asked by the ALJ if he had taken the driver's driving and possible culpability in causing the accident into consideration for probable cause to arrest him, the officer responded negatively. Because the officer did not take the fault of the accident into consideration in determining probable cause for intoxication, the issue was irrelevant. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Burrer, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3534 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 11 2005).

Contracts Law : Contract Interpretation : Intent

38. Trial court abused its discretion in denying the deletions and revisions in the lease drafts on hearsay and relevancy grounds in parties' dispute over the terms of an oil and gas lease because they were offered to show what was said, such that they were not hearsay, and they were clearly relevant to the parties' intentions. PNP Petroleum I, LP v. Taylor, 438 S.W.3d 723, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5402, 180 Oil & Gas Rep. 1049 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 21 2014).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Equitable Relief : General Overview

39. Trial court's evidentiary rulings were not an abuse of discretion, as the evidence admitted in a dialysis service provider's action against a self-insurer, seeking recovery for services rendered, was relevant to the claims made by each party pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401; other payment plans, other providers' acceptance of the rates provided by Blue Cross, and other lawsuits filed by the provider were relevant to the reasonable value of the services rendered under the provider's quantum meruit claim. H.E. Butt Grocery Co. v. Rencare, Ltd., 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 1005 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 4 2004).

Contracts Law : Remedies : Specific Performance

40. In a collection suit by a creditor that purchased the debt from a credit card company, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the deposition of the creditor's employee concerning a different case because that deposition did not pertain to the credit card company. The deposition was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 406. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Partners, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2687, 2010 WL 1492267 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 15 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Manufacture : General Overview

41. In a trial for manufactured methamphetamine, there was no error in the admission of evidence concerning a subsequent arrest, seven months later, for possession of chemicals with intent to manufacture methamphetamine. That evidence tended to make less probable defendant's argument that he possessed items used to manufacture methamphetamine solely for use in bartering for drugs; thus, the evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid 401 and 402. Tarpley v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6289 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 8782 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 24, 2005).

42. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of two prior extraneous acts in defendant's trial on charges of possession of pseudoephedrine with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine because there was no direct evidence of defendant's intent, and intent could not necessarily be inferred from the act itself. The evidence of the prior extraneous act in which defendant was found with fresh track marks in his arm was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because methamphetamine use and addiction was highly probative regarding commission of the charged offense, and the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to show intent, plan, and absence of mistake. Fulfer v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2449 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 31 2005).

43. In a possession and manufacture of methamphetamine case, admission of evidence regarding defendant's arrest in another county was proper as issues of who was in care, custody, or control of the clandestine laboratory equipment and the methamphetamine, and of defendant's intent and knowledge, were in dispute, and that he had the same type of equipment used in the manufacture on his own property in the other county was therefore relevant to those issues. Tullos v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5186 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 9 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : General Overview

44. Evidence of trace quantities of controlled substances that were found in defendant's car during the same search in which the methadone was found was relevant and admissible because it was visible in a baggie and on a scale, and the baggie was found in the location where the trooper had seen defendant secret something. Lamkin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6484, 2010 WL 3170647 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 12 2010).

45. Documents relating to purchases of a vehicle were properly admitted in a trial for possession of marihuana that was found in a false compartment in the vehicle because the documents were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to prove the chain of custody, possession, or ownership of the vehicle from two prior owners to defendant. Trevino v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6139 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 4 2005).

46. Defendant forfeited consideration of his argument that the monetary value of cocaine was not an element of his possession offense and was, therefore, irrelevant because the street value of rock-cocaine was admitted before the jury without objection earlier in the trial. Broussard v. State, 163 S.W.3d 312, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3382 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

47. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of drug paraphernalia found in a vehicle outside a residence in which police arrested defendant because the State demonstrated that the evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the issue of defendant's intent to deliver crack cocaine by connecting a woman in the residence to the vehicle in which the contraband was found. With the connection between the contraband in the vehicle and the residence, along with scales, razor blades, and testimony that defendant was seen directing traffic in front of the location, the evidence had a tendency to prove that defendant possessed crack cocaine with intent to deliver. Guy v. State, 160 S.W.3d 606, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1289 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

48. In a trial for heroin possession, gang-membership evidence was relevant because it was specifically linked to the case and was not used as character conformity evidence. The expert testified about defendant's affiliation with a gang and about the gang's trade being the trafficking of heroin, primarily by using a female's body cavity to transport the contraband, and having that female accompanied by a gang member; that evidence was relevant to the offense, which was charged after defendant entered the country with a woman who was carrying heroin in her vaginal cavity. Ojeda v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8557 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 24 2004).

49. In a possession and manufacture of methamphetamine case, admission of evidence regarding defendant's arrest in another county was proper as issues of who was in care, custody, or control of the clandestine laboratory equipment and the methamphetamine, and of defendant's intent and knowledge, were in dispute, and that he had the same type of equipment used in the manufacture on his own property in the other county was therefore relevant to those issues. Tullos v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5186 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 9 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Intent to Distribute

50. Trial court did not err by prohibiting defendant from eliciting testimony at trial that pertained to the drug seller's identity because the trial court could have reasonably determined that even if defendant and the seller were not the same person, it was not logically less probable that defendant possessed cocaine with intent to deliver it on the date of his arrest merely because someone else did so at the apartment on other occasions. Harris v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 732, 2012 WL 254086 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Intent to Distribute : Elements

51. In a drug trial, video excerpts from a seized camera were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, because they were material to the issues of possession-with-intent-to-deliver a controlled substance and a deadly weapon finding, in that they placed defendant in a drug house around the money and guns. They were not unduly prejudicial because they did not show actual drug dealing. Mincey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2825, 2009 WL 1058734 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 21 2009).

52. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's statement, which contained a list of persons to whom defendant admitted he had sold methamphetamine as well as his admissions that he had bought approximately a half-ounce of methamphetamine every week for the last three years, that he used about a quarter-ounce every week, that he sold the rest, and that he sold enough methamphetamine to support his habit, because those portions of the statement that related to defendant's selling methamphetamine were relevant to proving intent to deliver, which was an essential element of defendant's offense, possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver. Furthermore, the probative force and the State's need to admit the statement outweighed the factors that favored exclusion because defendant's admission that he regularly sold methamphetamine was compelling evidence that he intended to sell methamphetamine, and his admission further served to rebut his theories that the drugs were planted on him and that the money that he carried when he was arrested had come, not from selling drugs, but from payments from his rental properties. Bridges v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6634 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

53. In a trial for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute a narcotics officer was properly allowed to describe the cocaine, its packaging, amounts and prices, and to testify that a person in possession of a 100 grams of cocaine would be in possession with intent to distribute. Brooks v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6973 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Controlled Substances : Possession : Simple Possession : General Overview

54. In a driving while intoxicated trial, evidence that cocaine was located in plain view next to the driver's seat in the vehicle defendant was driving was relevant to prove the State's allegation in the indictment that defendant was intoxicated, and, because the possession of cocaine evidence went to a material element of the State's case, it was not an extraneous offense. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2064, 2013 WL 765711 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : General Overview

55. In an assault trial arising from an incident in which defendant was bounced from a bar, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 in admitting evidence that defendant was taking prescription medication to control temper. Dudzik v. State, 276 S.W.3d 554, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9073 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

56. In an aggravated assault case, a court properly admitted evidence of a witness that she miscarried after jumping out a window because it was relevant to show the witness's physical and emotional state during and following the assault. Smith v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9172 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 19 2004).

57. Defendant argued that the trial court erred by excluding evidence relating to his strained marital relationship with the victim because that evidence was probative of his state of mind and motivation at the time of his actions; however, because the only conduct elements potentially implicated for the crime of aggravated assault were the nature of the conduct and the result of the conduct, the circumstances surrounding the conduct were not relevant and were properly excluded. Novillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5086 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004).

58. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

59. In a prosecution for intentionally and knowingly causing serious bodily injury to a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04, evidence that defendant had personal knowledge that his girlfriend, the child's mother, had a fight with her sister and that anger management classes resulted did not appear to meet the relevance test of Tex. R. Evid. 401; further, defendant failed to reveal the "meaningful" defense that he was deprived of presenting by virtue of the excluded evidence. Ortiz v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2246 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 11 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : Aggravated Offenses

60. In a shooting case, it was proper to admit extraneous offenses as same transaction contextual evidence because shooting two other victims at the same place and time as the victim of the charged shooting, flight, and assault on a deputy were relevant to the issues of identity and rebutting defendant's other-shooter theory. Hignojos v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8929 (Tex. App. Eastland July 18 2013).

61. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, it was proper to admit a rifle and associated photographs to show that defendant had access to the rifle, which was located in the same room. Airheart v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3235, 2012 WL 1431762 (Tex. App. El Paso Apr. 25 2012).

62. In a trial for aggravated assault on a public servant, evidence of defendant's assault on his wife earlier the same evening was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 404 as same transaction contextual evidence or as background contextual evidence. The series of events that took place that night was an uninterrupted continuum of conduct that was, in essence, a single event. Hester v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9311, 2009 WL 4597948 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 8 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Assault & Battery : Simple Offenses

63. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding expert psychological testimony who allegedly would have testified that as a result of his mental defects defendant was incapable of forming the necessary mens rea to commit an assault because defendant's amnesia was caused by his head injury, which occurred after the assault, and therefore could not be relevant to his intent at the time of the assault. In addition, the expert's report only noted that defendant told the expert that he had post-traumatic stress disorder, and nothing suggested that the expert himself confirmed the diagnosis. Iniquez v. State, 374 S.W.3d 611, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5436, 2012 WL 2742632 (Tex. App. Austin July 6 2012).

64. In a trial for assault on a public servant, testimony that defendant was a convicted felon and in possession of drugs and a handgun was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it was relevant to motive. Thurman v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 135 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 10 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Coercion : General Overview

65. When an inmate was charged with harassment by persons in certain correctional facilities for throwing urine and feces at two correctional officers, the officers' testimony about how they felt when defendant engaged in this conduct was circumstantial evidence relevant to the element of whether defendant had the intent to harass and alarm and annoy another person, so it could not be said that it was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, or admissible, under Tex. R. Evid. 402. Wheatly v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5671 (Tex. App. Waco June 23 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : General Overview

66. Defendant's allegation that the complainant's unlawful sexual contact with her thirteen years prior to the assault was irrelevant to disproving the allegation of a dating relationship was rebutted by the State because the complainant testified he and defendant were dating at the time he was injured, and defendant testified that during a phone call she made to the victim after he was injured, she told him "I love you" several times. Smith v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8848, 2012 WL 5238280 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 24 2012).

67. In a trial for child sexual assault, testimony about extraneous acts was properly admitted from a complainant, defendant's stepdaughter, because the testimony concerning two sexual encounters was relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, as to defendant's intent to engage in the charged offenses and the states of mind of defendant and the stepdaughter. Miller v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6227 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 4 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Children : General Overview

68. In a trial for injury to a child, defendant's letters to his girlfriend while awaiting trial were relevant because they contained apologies, some specific and bordering on admissions, and also contained attempts to persuade the girlfriend to recant, both circumstances indicating consciousness of guilt. Pizano v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7459, 2013 WL 3155954 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 20 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Children : Elements

69. In a murder trial involving a child victim, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403 in admitting an autopsy photograph because it demonstrated the scope and extent of the child's injuries and the cause of death. It was not cumulative because it showed injuries to the victim's neck and head from a side view, whereas two other photographs showed injuries from a frontal view. Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1045 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 12 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Custodial Interference

70. In defendant's prosecution for interference with child custody under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.03(a)(1), evidence that he continued to pay child support after July 2006 was relevant and not unfairly prejudicial as it tended to rebut his claim that he and the complainant had reconciled and that he believed that the divorce decree was void. Long v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9804 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Custodial Interference

71. In a prosecution for interference with child custody in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.03(a)(1), as there was no mutual agreement between defendant and the children's mother to vary from the divorce decree's terms of possession, evidence of their past dealings regarding possession of the children was properly excluded as irrelevant. Gallegos v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12149, 2013 WL 5460044 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2013).

72. In a prosecution for interference with child custody, the trial court properly excluded evidence that defendant sought to present to show that the mother was not a fit custodial parent, as it was not relevant to any issue in the case. Gallegos v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12149, 2013 WL 5460044 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Domestic Offenses : Domestic Assault

73. In a trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.02 for assault with a deadly weapon on a family member, evidence that the complainant's parent had a gun was properly excluded as irrelevant because the fact had no bearing on who had access to the gun and did not make it less likely that defendant assaulted the complainant with a gun; therefore, limiting defendant's cross-examination of the complainant on that issue did not violate Tex. Const. art. I, § 10. Dancy v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 13 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Endangerment : General Overview

74. During the punishment phase of a criminal trial where defendant was charged with endangering a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence from defendant's ex-boyfriend who was convicted of sexually assaulting defendant's daughter since the probative value of the confession was not substantially outweighed by its prejudice. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Kidnapping : General Overview

75. In trial for the aggravated kidnapping of a two-year-old girl, the trial court's decision to admit the evidence about defendant purchasing a condom the night before the kidnapping was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. The evidence about defendant's condom purchase tended to make the existence of a material fact, that defendant had planned to sexually assault the victim during the kidnapping, more probable than it would have been without the evidence; thus, the evidence was relevant and admissible. Howe v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2417 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 16 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : General Overview

76. Court did not err by admitting into evidence the photographic lineup viewed by the officer; the lineup was relevant because the lineup and the officer's identification of defendant in the lineup had a tendency to make defendant's identity as the third robber more probable than it would be without the evidence. Caine v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13601, 2013 WL 5918402 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2013).

77. Because the robberies occurred in the same geographic area within a relatively brief time frame, and all were committed by an assailant who covered his hands with socks or gloves, and whose face was completely covered by a similar covering, leaving only the eyes exposed, there are sufficient common characteristics between each of the robberies, that the extraneous offenses were relevant to prove identity and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 404(b). Heigelmann v. State, 362 S.W.3d 763, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1670, 2012 WL 688427 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 2 2012).

78. In a robbery trial, there was no error in the trial court's refusal to admit testimony regarding a scalp condition from a registered nurse who had examined defendant. Defendant did not explain how the nurse's testimony about his scalp condition on February 1, 2010 was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to his appearance--whether he was going bald--at the time of the crime, August 2007. Griffin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1039, 2011 WL 531558 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 15 2011).

79. In a robbery trial, evidence that defendant committed a similar robbery in a nearby location a few days after he was alleged to have committed the charged offense was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to rebut alibi testimony that he was not in Houston at the time of the charged offense. Griffin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1039, 2011 WL 531558 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 15 2011).

80. In a trial for capital murder arising from a robbery and shooting, it was reversible error to admit evidence that defendant committed an armed robbery of a grocery store a month after the charged murder because any probative value as to intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Jackson v. State, 320 S.W.3d 873, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6572 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 12 2010).

81. In a robbery trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in admitting the complainant's demonstration before the jury of the degree of movement he had in his legs because the evidence was relevant to whether he had suffered bodily injury. Onyeche v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3659, 2010 WL 1946772 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 13 2010).

82. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant was properly denied the opportunity to impeach a victim regarding the amount of her paycheck because it was not relevant to the offense charged. Moore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982, 2009 WL 1886450 (Tex. App. Waco July 1 2009).

83. During the punishment of defendant's trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing testimony and photographs of the victim's injuries to show defendant committed the enhancement offense of a prior aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.03; evidence establishing that defendant inflicted "serious bodily injury" upon his victim was an essential part of the State's proof of the enhancement offense; the photographs were relevant and highly probative. Thompson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 57 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 5 2007).

84. In a trial for the robbery of a pickup truck, the trial court properly admitted a police chase video of the robbers' pickup along with testimony about the chase, even though defendant was not in the truck, as well as evidence of three handguns found in the pickup; the evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it substantiated defendant's confession and rebutted his claim that he was not armed when robbing the complainant. Hawkins v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6439 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 20 2006).

85. In a robbery trial, the court did not have to admit evidence of the complainant's prior conviction for misdemeanor assault against defendant's nephew. Contrary to defendant's argument, the two-year-old conviction was not relevant to show that the complainant ran from his apartment because he feared a physical confrontation. Allison v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4055 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 24 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Robbery : Armed Robbery : General Overview

86. In a robbery trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 in admitting evidence that after the robbery, someone stole the complainant's tools from the complainant's vehicle and set the vehicle on fire. The extraneous offenses were contextual evidence that helped to explain why the police became involved in the case that led to the investigation of the underlying facts and how the police ultimately arrested defendant for robbery. Flores v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6539 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 16 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Stalking : General Overview

87. In a stalking case, the trial court did not err by allowing the cross-examination of a defense witness regarding whether she was aware that defendant had been charged with a crime following an alleged domestic violence incident with the victim and whether she was aware that he had violated a protective order and assaulted his former wife; this evidence was relevant to defendant's good character after the witness testified that she had called the victim and asked her to give defendant another chance. Allen v. State, 218 S.W.3d 905, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2527 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

88. Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's testimony about incidents of property damage that were not included in the stalking indictment, which included testimony that someone piled her trash in front of her door, flipped her breaker box, flooded her yard, damaged her yard decorations, pulled down an outside light fixture, cut her satellite cable, and spray-painted her gate, because (1) the evidence was not improper character evidence under Tex. Evid. R. 404(a) as the victim never claimed that defendant committed the acts; and (2) the victim's testimony that the offenses against her property had occurred was relevant to establishing her state of mind at the time of the events in the stalking indictment. Marsh v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3620 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 22 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Crimes Against Persons : Violation of Protective Orders

89. In a trial for violating a protective order under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.07, the underlying protective order and findings of family violence under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 85.001 were relevant within the meaning of Tex. R. Evid. 401; the issuing court's findings were relevant to a determination of defendant's intent in violating the protective order, the complainant's fear of bodily injury or death, and a reasonable person's fear of bodily injury or death. Marston v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8671 (Tex. App. Eastland Nov. 1 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Involuntary Manslaughter : General Overview

90. In a homicide trial, there was no error in admitting evidence of defendant's gang membership. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, the evidence was admissible to explain defendant's anger at the victim's alleged false claim regarding prison time and gang affiliation. McCallum v. State, 311 S.W.3d 9, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 440 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 27 2010).

91. In defendant's manslaughter case, the trial judge did not err in excluding evidence that a toxicology report revealed that a passenger had cocaine in her system at the time of her death where the evidence was not relevant because defendant presented no evidence that the driver used drugs on the day of the accident, and the fact that the passenger had cocaine in her system did not mean that the driver in the same car likewise had used cocaine. Tijerina v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 9539 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 28 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Involuntary Manslaughter : Elements

92. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403, the testimony of a claims representative for defendant's insurer that the insurer was liable was not barred by Tex. R. Evid. 411 because it allowed for an inference of fault on the part of defendant, which was a fact of consequence in the manslaughter prosecution under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.04. Mitchell v. State, 377 S.W.3d 21, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8970, 2011 WL 5994154 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 9 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : General Overview

93. In a trial for defendant's murder of his wife, evidence that he remarried a month after being released on bond was relevant to motive. Davis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8372, 2011 WL 5026403 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

94. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, 404 in admitting a video of a social networking page, on which defendant was depicted holding a gun. The evidence was relevant because a witness testified that the gun in the video was the same gun the witness saw defendant use in the murder; it wass unlikely that the jury would have felt compelled to convict defendant of murder simply because he acted like a "bad boy" and brandished a weapon on camera. Brumfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137, 2010 WL 5187690 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2010).

95. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in admitting pawn shop tickets showing that defendant was in Houston on two of the days when an alibi witness testified he was in New Orleans. The pawn shop tickets were relevant because they were helpful in determining the truth or falsity of the witness's testimony.

Brumfield v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10137, 2010 WL 5187690 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 23 2010).

96. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 when the trial court admitted, at the punishment phase of a murder trial, a video of sexual acts involving defendant and the victim, his wife, who was unconscious due to alleged intoxication, because the video countered defendant's assertions of sudden passion and that he was law abiding until the murder. Skolnik v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5509, 2010 WL 2783872 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 15 2010).

97. In a murder trial, shell casings that were retrieved from defendant's residence prior to the charged offense were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because they were circumstantial evidence of a connection between defendant and the murder weapon. Quesada v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1011 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 8 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6181 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 19, 2006).

98. Where defendant was charged with the murder of her ex-boyfriend's new girlfriend, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a letter written by defendant to her ex-boyfriend. In the letter, defendant described the intensity of her feelings for him and her concern about the possibility of his philandering. Defendant's statements proved that she had a motive to kill the complainant. Harris v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 346 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

99. In a trial for murder and robbery, evidence that a gun was taken in a prior robbery was same transaction contextual evidence and was relevant to show preparation for the planned robbery and murder at issue. The evidence was not unduly prejudicial, given the other evidence that the stolen gun was the murder weapon. Hill v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8474 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 22 2004).

100. In a prosecution for murder, the medical records of defendant's shooting victims were properly admitted at the sentencing phase; the medical records were relevant to the circumstances of the murder and provided evidence of bad acts for which defendant could be held criminally responsible. Mendoza v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2486 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2004).

101. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony, in defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.01(a) and Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(a)(2) for being a party to his wife's murder, as to defendant's statement regarding researching how to make a silencer for a gun on the ground that it was relevant to a fact of consequence as set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 401. Guevara v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8520 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 26 2001), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 103 S.W.3d 549, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 960 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : General Overview

102. In a murder trial, there was no error in admitting extraneous offense evidence regarding a robbery/shooting that occurred ten minutes before the murder or regarding an assault that occurred as the suspects drove away from the robbery victim's apartment. The other offenses bore bear striking similarities to the offense for which defendant was convicted and were relevant to the hotly contested issue of identity. Mason v. State, 416 S.W.3d 720, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13527, 2013 WL 5861492 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 31 2013).

103. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 404(b) in admitting the extraneous offense evidence of an aggravated robbery that defendant and an accomplice allegedly committed six days prior to the murder because it was reasonable to conclude that the evidence went directly to the issue of intent, given that the extraneous robbery occurred less than a week prior to the shooting and had several similarities to the charged offense. Maxwell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9036, 2010 WL 4595702 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 12 2010).

104. In a trial for capital murder arising from a robbery and shooting, it was reversible error to admit evidence that defendant committed an armed robbery of a grocery store a month after the charged murder because any probative value as to intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Jackson v. State, 320 S.W.3d 873, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6572 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 12 2010).

105. In a capital murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in admitting testimony from witnesses who had encounters with defendant either six months or three months before the offense; the evidence was not too remote to be relevant. Russo v. State, 228 S.W.3d 779, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4499 (Tex. App. Austin 2007).

106. In a murder trial, photographs of the deceased were properly introduced into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401, even though they showed the gruesome appearance of the body, which was badly burned in arson, because the photographs showed the position of stab wounds that caused death; although graphic, the photographs did not inject any additional, intangible, or inappropriate emotional element into the case such that the trial court should have necessarily excluded these photographs. Ledbetter v. State, 208 S.W.3d 723, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10040 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

107. In a capital murder case, a court did not err by admitting bullet fragments where there was a weapon already connected to the crime, there was no dispute that the accomplice had the gun that evening, the fragments recovered from the apartment were similar both in appearance and in chemical composition to those recovered from the victim's body, defendant was admittedly at the apartment once that evening and at the complex a second time, he did not accounted for a sizeable portion of his own time line, and all the jury had to infer was that he and the accomplice test-fired the weapon in contemplation of using it in the robbery. Jacques v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7264 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 12 2004).

108. In a capital murder trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.03(a), the trial court did not err in admitting the expert testimony of an FBI agent because the agent's testimony was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to rebut defendant's defensive theory of insanity. Resendiz v. State, 112 S.W.3d 541, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, Resendiz v. Texas, 541 U.S. 1032, 124 S. Ct. 2098, 158 L. Ed. 2d 713, 2004 U.S. LEXIS 3274 (2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : Capital Murder : Elements

109. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the knives recovered from defendant's vehicle to be relevant because defendant admitted in his statement made in 2005 that he had collected knives since he was a child and he carried a knife in his vehicle 1989 for protection. This evidence was relevant to show defendant's considerable familiarity with knives and to provide a "small nudge" toward demonstrating his opportunity, means, and capacity to have committed the murder of the victim, who was stabbed to death. Tilford v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5933, 2011 WL 3273543 (Tex. App. El Paso July 29 2011).

110. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's admission that he was paid after the crime because the State had the burden to prove that defendant received renumeration for the killing in order to prove its capital murder charge, and therefore defendant's statement about receiving money was relevant. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

111. Evidence of a judgment that terminated defendant's parental rights to three of her children after the date that she allegedly murdered her newborn infant was relevant at her capital murder trial under Tex. R. Evid. 401, and had relevance apart from mere proof of character conformity in compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), because an extraneous offense/bad act that took place subsequent to the offense for which a defendant was on trial did not make the extraneous offense/bad act inadmissible per se; furthermore, the judgment was introduced by the State after defendant had testified that the infant's death on the night in question was not the result of any intentional or knowing conduct on defendant's part, and the termination judgment contained findings by the trial judge that defendant "knowingly" placed or allowed her other children to remain in conditions dangerous to their physical or emotional well-being, which at least arguably made it more probable that defendant's acts or omissions on the night in question were done either intentionally or knowingly. Fergerson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Homicide : Murder : First-Degree Murder : General Overview

112. In defendant's murder case, the court properly admitted testimony regarding the victim having worked for defendant as a prostitute because the witness testified that the cycle of violence evolved from "slapping" to the point of "pretty brutal beatings." That testimony tended to show that defendant was violent toward the victim in the past and that his violence toward her was escalating; therefore, the testimony was relevant to the charge of murder. Wilson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 604, 2010 WL 323537 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 28 2010).

113. In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly excluded defendant's testimony about the victim's alleged indifference to her pregnancy and the problems she encountered just before her son's birth because the proffered evidence was not probative of the alleged reasonableness of defendant's belief that the victim had used, was using, or even might use deadly force at the time that she shot and killed him. Eisenman v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2008).

114. In defendant's murder case, the court did not err by omitting evidence of pornography found on the victim's computer because there was no showing by defendant that the pornographic images were related to the shooting, that the images were the subject of the argument that preceded the shooting, or that the images played any part whatsoever during the events leading up to the shooting. Eisenman v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 10 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : General Overview

115. During defendant's trial for illegal dumping, the trial court did not err in excluding documentary evidence consisting of numerous receipts indicating that defendant had sold or recycled metals and other materials in 2002 and 2003, which defendant claimed was offered to prove he was recycling, rather than dumping, solid waste on his property, because the fact that defendant might not have been operating a solid waste site in 2002 and 2003 had little or no logical relevance to whether he began operating such a site in 2004, which was when the activity for which he was prosecuted occurred. Gandy v. State, 222 S.W.3d 525, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

116. Defendant's conviction of fraudulent use or possession of identifying information, arising out of the creation of a fake warehouse store shopper's card, was affirmed because the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection to fake drivers' licenses seized from the home of defendant's relative. Bell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3830 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 4 2006).

117. Trial court erred in excluding from jury consideration evidence of discriminatory enforcement of the Blue Law, former Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 9001; however, the error was harmless in that there was no hint of any reason that constituted the kind of invidious enforcement that gave rise to constitutional protection. Wolf v. State, 661 S.W.2d 765, 1983 Tex. App. LEXIS 5456 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1983).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Fleeing & Eluding : General Overview

118. In defendant's evading arrest case, the court properly allowed testimony concerning typical behavior during a traffic stop because the testimony that very few people fled when a squad car initiated a stop by activating its lights was relevant to the offense of evading arrest, and went to defendant's intent. The fact that most people pulled over after the police initiated a stop made it more probable that defendant intentionally disregarded the officer's attempt to pull him over. Spencer v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2227, 2013 WL 1282307 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 6 2013).

119. In a trial for evading arrest, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, or 404 in the admission of evidence that defendant placed a marijuana cigar on the pavement outside his motor vehicle while fleeing from a deputy sheriff. The evidence was relevant because it helped to prove that defendant intentionally fled; it was not submitted to show that defendant acted in conformity with his character because it indicated a motive; and it was highly probative in establishing intent, an essential element of the charge. Slaughter v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8694 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 3 2006).

120. In a criminal prosecution for indecency with a child by sexual contact, evidence of defendant's flight was relevant to show guilt. Howard v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1083 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Fleeing & Eluding : Consciousness of Guilt

121. At defendant's trial for robbery, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony regarding his efforts to resist arrest because evidence relevant to his flight from the scene was a circumstance indicative of guilt. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 471, 2014 WL 222929 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 16 2014).

122. In a trial for aggravated sexual assault, there was no error in admitting evidence that defendant, after being confronted by the victim's mother and fleeing to a nearby apartment complex, was seen fleeing from the complex, in which a fire had been started. A reasonable inference from the evidence was that defendant started the fire to aid his flight from the apartment complex; thus, the evidence was of value in establishing consciousness of guilt. Craft v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 199, 2012 WL 112527 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 11 2012).

123. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, evidence that defendant was driving a vehicle that matched the description of the vehicle involved in the shooting and that he attempted to flee from officers when one of them tried to pull him over was probative of his consciousness of guilt. Therefore, defendant's flight was relevant evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401; the probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Owens v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2871, 2011 WL 1435499 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 14 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Riot, Rout & Unlawful Assembly

124. Court properly admitted evidence of defendant's gang affiliation during the punishment phase of his trial because, after admitting, the evidence the court properly instructed the jury it could not consider any evidence of an alleged extraneous crime or bad act unless the State had proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had committed the act, or it was one for which defendant could be held criminally responsible. By issuing that instruction, the trial court limited the jury's review of evidence in the punishment phase to those bad acts that had been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Sierra v. State, 266 S.W.3d 72, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6417 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

125. Defendant did not object to testimony about gang affiliation during the guilt-innocence phase of a murder trial and therefore failed to preserved error under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

126. In a trial for heroin possession, gang-membership evidence was relevant because it was specifically linked to the case and was not used as character conformity evidence. The expert testified about defendant's affiliation with a gang and about the gang's trade being the trafficking of heroin, primarily by using a female's body cavity to transport the contraband, and having that female accompanied by a gang member; that evidence was relevant to the offense, which was charged after defendant entered the country with a woman who was carrying heroin in her vaginal cavity. Ojeda v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8557 (Tex. App. El Paso Sept. 24 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Miscellaneous Offenses : Witness Tampering

127. Assault defendant failed to request notice of other crimes and acts evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) and therefore could not complain of the adequacy of the State's notice; moreover, the notice gave her reasonable notice of a neighbor's expected testimony that defendant sought to bribe her to say that the victim struck defendant first. Additionally, this bribery evidence was relevant as consciousness of guilt and was not unfairly prejudicial. Cavazos v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5045, 2014 WL 1881691 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 8 2014).

128. In a trial for child sexual assault, the complainant's parent was properly allowed to testify that, after the parent discovered defendant, a pastor, watching an R-rated movie with the complainant, defendant threatened to take away the parent's children, house, business, and car if the parent did not sign some papers and that when the parent refused, defendant told the parent to commit suicide; the disputed statement was probative of defendant's state of mind and consciousness of guilt and was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 401, Tex. R. Evid. 403. Hinson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 554 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 24 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : General Overview

129. In defendant's burglary case, although the testimony of the victims regarding illegal drugs taken during the robbery was of only slight probative value, it was relevant for purposes of sentencing because it pertained to the circumstances of the offense, and therefore, the trial court erred by excluding it. In addition, although the victims denied any involvement in drug-related activities, the jury should have been allowed to assess their credibility and demeanor and the jury may have considered those circumstances in assessing defendant's sentence; therefore, the error was harmful. McKaine v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3777 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2004), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 170 S.W.3d 285, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7147 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary

130. In a burglary trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 404(b), 403 in admitting evidence of an extraneous burglary in order to show intent. The prior burglary was near in time and location to the charged burglary. Martinez v. State, 304 S.W.3d 642, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 413 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 21 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Burglary & Criminal Trespass : Burglary : Elements

131. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the utility knife, the pocket knife, and wire cutters that were found on defendant's person after his arrest into evidence because they were relevant, as the officer testified that such items were commonly used for burglaries and the State's purpose for introducing the items was to show defendant's intent; defendant's possession of the items tended to show his intent to commit the offense of burglary and assisted the jury in drawing an inference that he entered the garage with the intent to commit theft. Enloe v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 19 2009).

132. In a burglary trial, there was no error in the admission of evidence that defendant had, in his possession when he was arrested, items taken in a subsequent burglary from the same victim; the evidence was admissible to rebut a line of questioning directed at burglaries that occurred after defendant was in custody. Ellis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 24 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Property Crimes : Larceny & Theft : Elements

133. Witness acknowledged in a recorded statement that he committed the theft, that he did not have the owner's authority to use the vehicle, and that he misled defendant in that regard, and thus the witness's statement exposed him to criminal liability, for analysis purposes under Tex. R. Evid. 803; the trial court could properly consider the witness's changing versions in finding whether his version of events in the recorded statement was credible, but the court ultimately found the evidence credible, given that (1) the witness was in a position to commit the crimes with which defendant had been tried, including theft and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, (2) the witness's admissions were made at a time when they were relevant to then-existing charges, and (3) independent corroborative facts supported the credibility of the account, such that defendant met the burden of corroborating the witness's statement against interest and the corroborating circumstances indicated the trustworthiness of the statement. Watkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 9 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : General Overview

134. At defendant's trial for indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting his recorded interview with an investigator from the district attorney's office. Defendant's description of his sexual urges toward children was relevant to the elements of the offense. Mattingly v. State, 382 S.W.3d 611, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8126, 2012 WL 4457713 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Prostitution : General Overview

135. Video recordings showing sex acts between dancers and patrons of the adult establishment were relevant, and therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them during defendant's trial, because they tended to show that the establishment was a prostitution enterprise and was relevant to the charged offense of aggravated promotion of prostitution. Coutta v. State, 385 S.W.3d 641, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8692 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 17 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : General Overview

136. In an aggravated assault and aggravated sexual assault case, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting testimony of a victim's former sexual partner that the victim had not engaged in sadomasochistic activities with her former partner prior to or after defendant's assault as it was relevant to determine whether she consented to sexual encounter and to having defendant brand his initials on her buttocks. Reed v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 22 2006).

137. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony of the complaining witness and two other children about extraneous acts by defendant; although defendant argued that the testimony was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it was not necessary to prove elements of the offense that were essentially uncontested, such as identity, intent, plan, preparation, and opportunity, the evidence was relevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2 to show defendant's intentions toward the complaining witness. Nesby v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3379 (Tex. App. Austin May 5 2005).

138. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony of the complainant and other children about defendant's extraneous acts as the evidence was relevant to show the relationship between defendant and the complainant and their respective states of mind. Nesby v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2182 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 24 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3379 (Tex. App. Austin May 5, 2005).

139. In a child sexual assault trial, testimony that there would not necessarily be bleeding during a female's first sexual intercourse was properly admitted. Although there was no evidence that the victim bled the day of the incident, the testimony was relevant to explain the lack of medical findings of trauma or physical injury and to determine whether defendant and the victim engaged in sexual intercourse. Croft v. State, 148 S.W.3d 533, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 8398 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2004).

140. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had sexually assaulted another woman approximately three months prior to the instant assault where the state was not allowed to use the extraneous sexual assault evidence until defendant had presented his defensive theory of consent in his testimony. Martin v. State, 144 S.W.3d 29, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7755 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2004), affirmed by 173 S.W.3d 463, 2005 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1618 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005).

141. In the sentencing phase of defendant's sexual assault case, a court properly excluded testimony regarding prison conditions and defendant's potential status of being "fresh meat" in prison where the witness's testimony was elicited specifically to educate the jury on what defendant's prison experiences would be, and the testimony would not have been helpful to the jury in determining the appropriate sentence. Zunker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4376 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 177 S.W.3d 72, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

142. In a sexual assault case, a court properly allowed an expert to testify regarding sexual abuse where, although the State did not tie the testimony to the facts of the case, the testimony was relevant, it had a relatively close association with the evidence, and it was better for the expert not to tie his or her testimony too tightly to the particular child victim, but instead, to limit the import of such testimony to general characteristics and empirically obtained data, so that the jury could draw its own conclusions. Carey v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3188 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 8, 2004).

143. In defendant's sexual assault case, a court did not err permitting the victim's stepfather to testify that he saw defendant in the parking lot of the family's apartment complex a few weeks after the victim made her outcry where that evidence tended to corroborate the victim's testimony and was not, in itself, evidence of misconduct or bad character. The prosecutors' description of defendant as a "sexual predator" was a logical inference from his overall behavior as shown by the victim's testimony. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2878 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 927, 125 S. Ct. 1652, 161 L. Ed. 2d 489, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2556, 73 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2005).

144. Evidence of defendant's prior history of sexual assault against a child victim was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as "other crimes, wrongs, or acts" pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37. McCulloch v. State, 39 S.W.3d 678, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 1327 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2001).

145. In defendant's trial on two counts of indecency with a child, testimony from defendant's ex-wife that defendant occasionally paraded around in front of his minor daughters, the complainants, in the nude with an erection was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and, thus, admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 402, and its prejudicial effect did not substantially outweigh its probative value under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because the State had to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant had contact with the complainants and the contact was done for his sexual gratification, and because the evidence was relevant to prove sexual motive in as much as the manner that defendant acted around his own children was the only proof of defendant's possible sexual motive if the touching did in fact occur. Montgomery v. State, 810 S.W.2d 372, 1990 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 90 (Tex. Crim. App. 1990).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : General Overview

146. Testimony of a sexual assault nurse examiner was relevant, even thought the examination took place two years after the last alleged act of child sexual abuse, because it refuted defense questioning of other witnesses about the absence of trauma or physical evidence to establish that the alleged acts occurred. Kaizer v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7271 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 13 2013).

147. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in a case in which defendant was convicted of continuous sexual abuse of a child, his two daughters, by allowing evidence of computer searches for child pornography on defendant's laptop because the complained-of testimony showed that defendant viewed the father-daughter relationship as a sexual one; his viewing of child pornography, particularly father-daughter pornography, was relevant circumstantial evidence of his intent to arouse or gratify his sexual desire. Watkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1512, 2013 WL 531062 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 14 2013).

148. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence a portion of defendant's statement to the police about manipulating and threatening other children into proposed sexual activity because the evidence made it more likely that he threatened the victim and it rebutted the defensive theory that defendant was guilty of only sexual assault, not aggravated sexual assault. Sandles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5518, 2012 WL 3104377 (Tex. App. Dallas July 11 2012).

149. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it found that sex toys, lubricant, and a camcorder found in defendant's home were relevant during his trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they were relevant to the daughter's claims of the abuse she suffered from defendant and her stepmother and defendant told a coworker that his daughter might have hurt herself on sex toys she had been caught using. The trial court did not err by admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it made facts of consequence more probable, each of the items went directly to the series of events described by the daughter, the jury was entitled to know the context in which the events took place, and the evidence took up only 47 pages of the 800 pages in the reporter's record. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

150. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting nude photographs of the daughter's stepmother during defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they were relevant to the daughter's claims of sexual abuse and her physical description of her stepmother's genitals. The photographs were probative because they contained compelling evidence that made the fact that the sexual abuse occurred as claimed more probable. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

151. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting pornography that was found at defendant's home during his trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they depicted events similar to some of the instances of sexual abuse described by the daughter and thus had a tendency to make the daughter's claims more plausible, and defendant did not overcome the presumption that the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS

5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

152. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court found that defendant's acquittal in the assault charge on police officers had no tendency to make the existence of any fact of consequence to the determination of the aggravated sexual assault charge more or less probable. Lopez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 676, 2012 WL 256103 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 26 2012).

153. In a trial for child sexual assault, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 702 in admitting testimony from a pediatrician with expertise in child abuse cases, who examined the complainant after she made her outcry, (nine years after the offense occurred) and who was unable to medically confirm or refute the allegations of abuse. Alejo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6652, 2011 WL 3659309 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 19 2011).

154. In a trial for indecency with a child, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 in admitting testimony about the complainant's delayed outcry. The trial court was within its discretion to find that fear of defendant by his son was relevant because it explained the complainant's fear of defendant, which was the proffered reason for her prior denial when the son reported the abuse and for the complainant's delayed outcry. Welch v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2692, 2011 WL 1364970 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 12 2011).

155. In a trial for child sexual assault, statements about a phone conversation between defendant and his priest and testimony from a forensic examiner who interviewed the complainant were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 to rebut defendant's claim that the complainant fabricated the allegation. Gutierrez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8952, 2010 WL 4484350 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2010).

156. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child younger than 14 years old case, where a doctor's testimony and opinions were based on his experience and training as a physician at the child advocacy center, his educational and professional background was relevant to prove his expertise in the evaluation and treatment of child victims and to lay the predicate for his testimony; thus, without a showing of harm, evidence, like the doctor's curriculum vitae, was properly admitted to assist the jury in making its determination as it served a relevant purpose beyond solely bolstering the witness and any extraneous information included on the curriculum vitae had only slight effect. Walker v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8452 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 21 2010).

157. In a trial for child sexual assault, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in excluding questioning of a case worker regarding the complainant's credibility because the complainant had already admitted before the jury that she initially denied the sexual abuse but that she was lying when she did so. Smith v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7021 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 27 2010).

158. In a trial for child sexual assault, defendant was not entitled to question the complaint about her having been hospitalized for "cutting" behavior. The evidence was of only minimal relevance and could only lead to speculation and therefore was properly excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Smith v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7021 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 27 2010).

159. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's relevancy objection to the testimony of the victim's mother that defendant owned pornography because the mother's testimony corroborated the fact that defendant owned pornography he could have shown to the victim. Defendant's ownership of pornography was relevant to the allegation of sexual assault and relevant on the issue of intent. Garrett v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 685, 2010 WL 338202 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 1 2010).

160. In a trial for indecency with a child, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(b), there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 404, in admitting extraneous offense evidence. Evidence of possession of child pornography was relevant to defendant's intent to arouse or gratify his sexual desire; evidence of methamphetamine use was relevant to show defendant's state of mind at the time of the charged offense and tended to show how the offense unfolded and progressed; and evidence that defendant physically abused the victim and two other children, in addition to providing context about the relationship between the victim and defendant, was admissible to show the victim's state of mind and explain why the victim did not speak up earlier about the abuse. Stinson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3186, 2009 WL 1267348 (Tex. App. Dallas May 8 2009).

161. In a trial for child sexual assault, a State medical expert did not testify that the victim was truthful or that sexual abuse victims, as a class, were truthful. To the contrary, the expert properly testified, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 702, that, although not definitive, the complainant's physical condition was consistent with the abuse later described. Reyes v. State, 274 S.W.3d 724, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5921 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

162. In a case involving the sexual abuse of a child, a trial court did not err by allowing the introduction of evidence that a young victim saw defendant having sexual relations with his own sister around the time of an alleged abuse incident because this was relevant since it was similar to the charged offense; moreover, it rebutted a defensive theory that family members had conspired to frame defendant. Belt v. State, 227 S.W.3d 339, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3749 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

163. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, the mere fact the complainant might have had intercourse with defendant's nephew did not rebut the scientific proof provided by the State showing a probability of greater than 99.99 percent that defendant fathered the complainant's child. More importantly, paternity of the child did not bear on defendant's guilt. Reagan v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3589 (Tex. App. El Paso May 10 2007).

164. In a trial for indecency with a child, it was proper to exclude evidence of conduct by the complainant's mother, such as extramarital affairs and involvement in pornography and drug abuse, because the probative value in establishing a motive for the complainant to make false accusations against defendant was low. Jimenez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6538 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Sex Crimes : Sexual Assault : Abuse of Children : Elements

165. In defendant's trial for indecency with a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, the trial court properly excluded as speculative and irrelevant defendant's evidence that the victims' mother's friend, with whom the mother was drinking at the time of the incidents, was a convicted child molester whose probation was revoked due to his proximity to the two boys. Smikal v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2904, 2012 WL 1259127 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 12 2012).

166. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the victim's mother to testify that the victim had experienced approximately 12 episodes of urinary incontinence at school because it tended to corroborate the victim's accusations and made the existence of the alleged penetration more probable. Arredondo v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8465, 2010 WL 4137425 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 19 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : General Overview

167. In a trial for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, testimony that defendant removed a bumper sticker on the missing truck was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because tended to make more probable the notion that defendant did not want the truck to be recognized because he had taken it. Seat v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4322, 2011 WL 2306249 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 8 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : General Overview

168. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding part of defendant's employer's testimony concerning the employer's son's prescription medication and a videotape of defendant's 2000 arrest for driving while intoxicated because the evidence was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to whether defendant was guilty of the charged crimes of driving while intoxicated and evading arrest. Peavey v. State, 248 S.W.3d 455, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1818 (Tex. App. Austin 2008).

169. In a trial for driving while intoxicated, evidence of defendant's medical condition, including that she had lupus and allergies, was properly excluded on the basis that there was no expert medical testimony as to what effect the medicines that she was taking would have on a person's conduct or condition, or on a person's normal use of mental and physical faculties; the proffered evidence was properly subject to a relevancy objection because it was a self-serving, sympathy-provoking recitation of her health and current medication without any showing of a link or nexus to any fact that is of consequence. Taylor v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5148 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

170. Photographs used by defendant's opponent in a mayoral election referring to defendant's automobile accident were properly excluded from his trial on an intoxication assault charge because the tactics used by defendant's opponent were irrelevant to the issue of defendant's guilt. Rodriguez v. State, 191 S.W.3d 428, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2841 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2006).

171. Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's intoxilyzer test results into evidence in the absence of retrograde extrapolation evidence on defendant's claim that the results were irrelevant under Rule 401 because the results of breath tests were relevant without retrograde extrapolation evidence. Trillo v. State, 165 S.W.3d 763, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2792 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

172. In defendant's DWI case, he objected to the State's introduction of his blood-test results and extrapolation testimony because the blood draw occurred two hours after he was arrested and therefore was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to whether he had the normal use of his faculties at the time of the alleged offense. The trial court overruled the objection. Crenshaw v. State, 378 S.W.3d 460, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1254, 2012 WL 4372284 (Tex. Crim. App. Sept. 26 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

173. Because the DIC-24 Statutory Warning Form was relevant to prove that defendant refused to submit to the taking of a specimen of breath and was provided with the required information before her specimen was requested, a trial court did not err in admitting the DIC-24 Form during defendant's driving while intoxicated trial. The DIC-24 Form contained the information that Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.015 required to be given in writing. Zamora v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 943, 2010 WL 456941 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 11 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence

174. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by admitting a DIC-24 form into evidence because it was relevant to prove that defendant refused to submit to the taking of a specimen of his breath and that defendant was provided with the required information under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.015 before his specimen was requested. Frnka v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7095, 2009 WL 2882939 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Driving Under the Influence : Elements

175. In a driving while intoxicated trial, evidence that cocaine was located in plain view next to the driver's seat in the vehicle defendant was driving was relevant to prove the State's allegation in the indictment that defendant was intoxicated, and, because the possession of cocaine evidence went to a material element of the State's case, it was not an extraneous offense. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2064, 2013 WL 765711 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Vehicular Homicide : Elements

176. Trial court did not err by refusing to exclude the blood alcohol test under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because the test result was circumstantial evidence that, coupled with other evidence, tended to show that defendant was intoxicated at the time she drove. Damon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4017, 2011 WL 2112807 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 26 2011).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Vehicular Crimes : Vehicular Homicide : Penalties

177. During defendant's trial for intoxication manslaughter, testimony about the difference between punishment for murder and intoxication manslaughter was relevant because it gave the jury complete information about how the punishment range for a particular criminal offense varies when a mental state is proven; defendant claimed that the collision was an accident or a mistake. Hackler v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4995 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Weapons : Possession : General Overview

178. Trial court did not err when it admitted evidence that defendant had been seen selling drugs a month before her indicted offense of being a felon in possession of a firearm because the testimony, elicited from a witness present when the indicted offense was committed, was relevant and tended to make the existence of defendant's intent to possess a firearm more likely than not, as the witness testified that he knew of five prior occasions on which defendant sold crack cocaine and also commented that drug dealers were often armed to protect themselves from being robbed. Moody v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1762 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 8 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Criminal Offenses : Weapons : Use : Commission of Another Crime : Elements

179. In a trial for failing to stop and render aid, evidence of the complainant's intoxication was properly excluded because the complainant's intoxication or sobriety when he was struck or his degree of fault in the accident was not relevant. Soto v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10071, 2012 WL 6049112 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 6 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Accessories : Aiding & Abetting

180. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony, in defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.01(a) and Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(a)(2) for being a party to his wife's murder, as to defendant's statement regarding researching how to make a silencer for a gun on the ground that it was relevant to a fact of consequence as set forth in Tex. R. Evid. 401. Guevara v. State, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 8520 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 26

2001), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 103 S.W.3d 549, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 960 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Juvenile Offenders : Juvenile Proceedings : General Overview

181. In a proceeding to modify a juvenile's disposition, there was no error in the exclusion of evidence that was purportedly relevant to whether the juvenile was fearful for his safety when he evaded an officer because his defense of necessity would have related only to fleeing from one officer, not from the other, and he did not admit that he fled from the first officer. In re S.G.V., 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2688 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 5 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Arrests : Probable Cause

182. Videotape of a driver's performance on field sobriety tests can be sufficient evidence to support probable cause to proceed with an arrest for driving while intoxicated. The reviewing court assumed that such a video, which was introduced in the trial court as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 401, 1001, supported a probable cause finding where defendant failed to include the video in the record and the trial court did not file findings of fact. Amador v. State, 187 S.W.3d 543, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Search & Seizure : Warrantless Searches : Investigative Stops

183. Even if questions regarding the scent of herbal incense were relevant to defendant's claim that he was not smoking marijuana when officers approached his vehicle, any error in limiting the questions was harmless; even if defendant conclusively proved that the substance he was smoking did not smell like marijuana, that would not have raised a fact issue regarding whether the officers smelled marijuana emanating from his vehicle. Broussard v. State, 434 S.W.3d 828, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6142, 2014 WL 2535273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 5 2014).

184. As a police officer had reasonable suspicion to detain defendant based upon the information in the NCIC system, such that ownership of the vehicle was not relevant to the detention, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence regarding the actual ownership of the vehicle that defendant was in when he was stopped. Thornton v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2273, 2014 WL 813745 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 27 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Accusatory Instruments : Indictments : General Overview

185. Testimony of a witness not named in an indictment did not constitute irrelevant victim impact testimony because her reaction to witnessing the shooting of a police officer was admissible as circumstances of the crime under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a). Espinosa v. State, 194 S.W.3d 703, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4611 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Discovery & Inspection : Brady Materials : Brady Claims

186. It was not reversible Brady error to exclude evidence that one of the officers involved in a search was later convicted of theft of property from crime scenes because the State disclosed the fact of the conviction and there was no evidence that the officer had anything to do with the money in the current case. Ramirez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8144, 2014 WL 3735290 (Tex. App. Dallas July 28 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Eyewitness Identification : Photo Identifications

187. Court did not err by admitting into evidence the photographic lineup viewed by the officer; the lineup was relevant because the lineup and the officer's identification of defendant in the lineup had a tendency to make defendant's identity as the third robber more probable than it would be without the evidence. Caine v. State, 2013

Tex. App. LEXIS 13601, 2013 WL 5918402 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 1 2013).

188. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, the statement by the witness that she was afraid to select the photo of defendant in the photo lineup was relevant and admissible because it showed that she identified defendant as the person that perpetrated the victim's murder. Benavides v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4971, 2012 WL 2353731 (Tex. App. Dallas June 21 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Pretrial Motions & Procedures : Suppression of Evidence

189. Defendant complained that the State did not produce a chain of custody for the videotape and the baseball bat; however, those exhibits were properly authenticated and there was no evidence that they had been tampered with; defendant also contended that her statements on the videotape and the testimony regarding the bat were irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, but the evidence was relevant if it had any tendency to make the existence of any fact of consequence more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; thus, the evidence was relevant, and the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress that evidence. Barnes v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4502 (Tex. App. Austin June 7 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Sentencing

190. In a case in which a jury had convicted a habeas corpus applicant of possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine, in the amount of 200 grams or more, but less than 400 grams, applicant demonstrated that trial counsel was deficient at the punishment stage of trial because counsel failed to: (1) object to a DEA agent's testimony on the dangers and societal costs caused by methamphetamine constituted deficient performance; (2) request pre-trial notice of the State's experts; (3) determine that a DEA agent would testify about methamphetamine addiction; (4) properly object to the agent's testimony about addiction and the number of people who could get high from the methamphetamine that applicant possessed; and (5) call an expert in rebuttal. During the punishment stage of trial, the prosecutors asked for a life sentence, relying heavily on the objectionable testimony that was introduced during both phases of trial, and because applicant had received a life sentence, the maximum sentence available for her offense, she had shown that there was a reasonable probability--one sufficient to undermine confidence in the result--that the outcome at the punishment stage would have been different but for her counsel's deficient performance. Ex Parte Lane, 303 S.W.3d 702, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1750 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

191. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission of evidence that the petitioner had used and sold illegal drugs roughly 10 years before his arrest for sex crimes was not relevant to the jury's sentencing determination. The petitioner's involvement with illegal drugs was separate and unrelated to his sex crimes, and was therefore not helpful to the jury in making its sentencing determination. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

192. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission during the jury's sentencing determination of images of adult bestiality taken from the petitioner's computer. The images did not form part of the factual basis for the charges to which the petitioner had plead guilty, and had no relevance to the jury's sentencing determination apart from demonstrating the depths of depravity to which the petitioner had sunk; even if the evidence were relevant in some tangential way to the determination of his sentence, it was highly probable that considerations of unfair prejudice would have sufficed to keep this evidence from the jury. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Counsel : Effective Assistance : Trials

193. In a case in which a jury had convicted a habeas corpus applicant of possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine, in the amount of 200 grams or more, but less than 400 grams, applicant demonstrated that trial counsel was deficient for failing to object to: (1) an officer's testimony regarding the extent of the methamphetamine problem; and (2) the prosecutor's argument, that "people" were bringing methamphetamine into the county to poison the children and turn them into addicts and that children were in fact shooting up and smoking methamphetamine. However, applicant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed because she was unable to show that there was a reasonable probability, sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome that, but for counsel's deficient performance, the result of the trial would have been different. Ex Parte Lane, 303 S.W.3d 702, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1750 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

194. In a child pornography case, habeas relief was denied to an accused on the basis of ineffectiveness of trial counsel relating to a failure to object on the basis of relevance because, since the gravamen of the offense was the accused's intentional or knowing possession of images of child pornography, the images themselves and how the accused intentionally or knowingly possessed them (via his home computers) were highly relevant to the prosecution. Ex Parte Yusafi, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6715, 2008 WL 6740798 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

195. Even if trial counsel should have objected to testimony from a murder victim's parent, defendant admitted shooting the victim three times; therefore, it was unlikely that the outcome of the trial would have been different if trial counsel had objected to the relevance of the evidence; defendant therefore failed to show that counsel was ineffective in failing to object. Kearse v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9828 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 19 2007).

196. In a resisting arrest case, counsel was ineffective where, inter alia, counsel failed to investigate or interview defendant in detail about his criminal history or his prior contacts with the arresting officer; failed to seek discovery from the State; failed to file and obtain rulings on a motion in limine to require the State to raise extraneous matters outside the presence of the jury; failed to prepare defendant to testify; failed to object to evidence of inadmissible extraneous matters during the guilt phase; invited evidence of unadjudicated arrests during the punishment phase; and failed to object to failure of the punishment-phase charge to include a reasonable doubt instruction. Walker v. State, 195 S.W.3d 250, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1381 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

197. Because a police officer's testimony concerning the environment and activities in and around the club at which defendant was arrested explained why the police officers were there and how defendant became a suspect, defense counsel's failure to object to that evidence was not sufficient to establish ineffective assistance of counsel; subject to certain exceptions not applicable to defendant's case, an officer's testimony explaining how he happened to be at the scene of a crime or accident would almost always be relevant. LeBleu v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 887 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 1 2006).

198. In a trial for aggravated robbery, counsel was not rendered ineffective by failing to object to evidence that showed the complainant suffered actual serious bodily injury rather than that he was threatened and placed in fear of imminent bodily injury or death. The contextual evidence admitted to prove the crime was clearly admissible because it placed the offense in its proper setting so that the jury could evaluate it. Washington v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11809 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 30 2004).

199. Defendant was not entitled to have his murder conviction overturned based on his claim that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel did not object to the introduction of the photographs of the shooting victim, defendant's nephew where such evidence was relevant and defendant did not show that the probative value of such evidence was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. Goodwin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6692 (Tex. App. Texarkana July 23 2004).

200. In an assault case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an extraneous assault offense as being not relevant, unfairly prejudicial, and based on hearsay where the evidence was relevant because it tended to make it more probable that the victim's father was a credible witness; without the evidence, the jury was presented with the impression that he was being evasive and that he was racially biased against defendant. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence presented a reason for the witness's feelings toward defendant, and the extraneous offense was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past; rather, the evidence was admitted to prove that the victim's father disapproved of defendant because of his belief that defendant had assaulted the victim in the past. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2775 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 30 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Burdens of Proof : Defense

201. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of prior statements made to police by two individuals whom the State contended were with defendant at the time of a shooting where evidence that both individuals made statements that defendant admitted to being involved in a freeway shooting and later recanted them was relevant because the statements, even if recanted, indicated that the witnesses had knowledge that a freeway shooting had occurred and showed the witnesses' willingness to implicate defendant in order to exonerate themselves, thus making the State's theory that all three men were involved more probable than the theory would have been without the evidence. Furthermore, defendant had not demonstrated that the negative attributes of the statements substantially outweighed their probative value because the State had made clear that the statements had been recanted so that the jury was not given the impression that the witnesses still maintained that defendant had admitted the shooting to them. Dinh Tan Ho v. State, 171 S.W.3d 295, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4405 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Confrontation

202. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow defendant to cross-examine the complainant and her mother because his allegations suggesting that the complainant and her mother lied about the assault because they took his personal belongings from the house while he was jailed did not fairly tend to raise an inference that the complainant and her mother had motive to testify falsely. McClendon v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9300 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 29 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Due Process

203. Trial court did not violate defendant's due process rights during his trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child by excluding testimony of the complainant's neighbor and her adult son that concerned the complainant's threats to falsely accuse them of molestation where, in light of the remoteness in time and the dissimilarity between the alleged threats toward the neighbor and her son and the accusation in the charged offense, their testimony was not relevant because it was not probative regarding the complainant's credibility at the time of the instant offense. Billodeau v. State, 263 S.W.3d 318, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6404 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Fair Trial

204. Trial court did not commit constitutional error by denying defendant's right to present a defensive theory that someone else could have murdered a security guard because it was not relevant that unknown persons three months before the murder asked another security guard about a minor theft. Peace v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7700 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 20 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Defendant's Rights : Right to Remain Silent : Self-Incrimination Privilege

205. In a case involving aggravated sexual abuse of a child, defendant was unable to invoke her Fifth Amendment rights while testifying on her own behalf during sentencing when asked about an extraneous offense; moreover, cross-examination of defendant was proper since this evidence was relevant to sentencing considerations based on the fact that it concerned a prior, similar offense against a child. Little v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4194 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 30 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Examination of Witnesses : Cross-Examination

206. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing defendant to cross-examine the CPS supervisor about an investigation into the victims' adoptive grandfather because testimony was irrelevant, as the supervisor testified that the grandfather sexually abused his sons not his daughters and there was no evidence that any victims identified the grandfather as the perpetrator of the sexual abuse. Oliver v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2836, 2014 WL 1016244 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 13 2014).

207. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing defendant to cross-examine the foster mother because the evidence was not relevant, as none of the victims made outcries of sexual abuse against their adopted grandfather, the foster mother's adult son, or the foster mother's ex-husband, and the foster mother's testimony was that none of the victims were left alone with any of those men. The foster's mother's encounters with CPS and her own past experience as a victim of sexual abuse was also irrelevant. Oliver v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2836, 2014 WL 1016244 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 13 2014).

208. Trial court did not err by refusing to allow defendant to cross-examine an officer about the confidential informant because the disallowed questions were not relevant to the issue of defendant's guilt or innocence, as the State did not rely on events related to obtaining the search warrant in proving defendant's guilt. Nwaogu v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4588, 2013 WL 1490489 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 11 2013).

209. Defendant failed to show an abuse by the trial court in excluding evidence where he did not show the exclusion of relevant and reliable evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, that formed such a vital part of his case that its exclusion effectively precluded him from presenting a defense, U.S. Const. amends. VI, XIV. Houston v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5276, 2012 WL 2511588 (Tex. App. Dallas July 2 2012).

210. In a stalking case, the trial court did not err by allowing the cross-examination of a defense witness regarding whether she was aware that defendant had been charged with a crime following an alleged domestic violence incident with the victim and whether she was aware that he had violated a protective order and assaulted his former wife; this evidence was relevant to defendant's good character after the witness testified that she had called the victim and asked her to give defendant another chance. Allen v. State, 218 S.W.3d 905, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2527 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2007).

211. Court did not err by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the medical examiner concerning the lapse of her medical license because defendant adduced no evidence that the status of the medical examiner's license in 2004 had any relevance to the facts or validity of her testimony, the State had a strong case, and the testimony as to the cause of the child's death was corroborated by a large amount of other forensic evidence; defendant cross-examined the medical examiner fully regarding the autopsy, and the record showed that the medical examiner was licensed when she performed the autopsy and compiled the autopsy report; thus, even if the trial court abused its discretion in limiting and denying cross-examination, defendant did not demonstrate harm. Valdez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10295 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2006).

212. Although defendant claimed that a trial court erred in not allowing him to cross-examine his arresting officer concerning another officer's relationship with a former girlfriend of defendant, there was no evidence presented of any bias or prejudice on the part of the arresting officer, only that six months after the incident he became aware that a fellow officer was dating a woman who had a relationship with defendant; having established no possible bias or prejudice, defendant had not shown that the evidence was relevant or that the trial judge abused his discretion by failing to allow testimony of the post-arrest knowledge obtained by the arresting officer. Waldrop v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8017 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 7 2006).

213. Court properly limited defense counsel's cross-examination of a State's witness where his question regarding whether the prosecutor told the witness she needed a different attorney was not relevant and did not reveal evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that was of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Roda v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4475 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 25 2006).

214. During defendant's trial for indecent exposure, the trial court properly excluded evidence that the victim called the police regarding various disturbances at her residence on several occasions following the report of exposure because the decision was within the zone of reasonable disagreement; the trial court maintained broad discretion to impose reasonable limits on cross-examination to avoid harassment, prejudice, confusion of the issues, endangering the witness, and the injection of cumulative and collateral evidence, and, under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b), specific instances of conduct, other than conviction of a crime, when offered to attack the witness's credibility could not be explored on cross-examination. Tennison v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2120 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 16 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Trials : Prison Attire & Restraints

215. Video (but not audio) of defendant's interview with a detective was properly excluded because the jury could discern that defendant was in custody, given the venue; his ill-fitting, monochrome jail uniform with the name of a county jail stenciled on the back; and a plastic identification bracelet. The court deferred to the trial court's finding that the probative value was diminished by the State's ability to recreate defendant's pantomime of the events in question through its witness. State v. Pringle, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7671 (Tex. App. Tyler June 25 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Credibility

216. Because the testimony contained in the record addressing the victim's pending driving while intoxicated (DWI) charge reflected that he had no agreement with the State regarding a dismissal of the charge, and he had no expectation of leniency in return for his testimony against defendant, the trial court was entitled to conclude that the victim's pending DWI charge was not relevant on the question of the victim's motivations in testifying. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5338, 2011 WL 2732270 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

217. Even though evidence was admissible during sentencing if it was relevant, pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), a trial court did not err by excluding a psychologist's testimony in a sexual assault case because a report and evaluation of a child held little probative value with respect to the truthfulness of her version of events. The evaluation and report concerning the child simply listed the textbook symptoms associated with the conditions that the psychologist diagnosed, and the tendency to lie was merely one of the traits of a condition that the child had been diagnosed with. Canales v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2716, 2009 WL 1034933 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 17 2009).

218. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child, the State's expert to give expert opinion testimony as to the truthfulness of the complaining witness. The defense opened the door to the testimony by questioning the expert about the manipulation of children who make allegations of sexual abuse. Johnson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7412 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2005).

219. Trial court properly excluded evidence of a witness's mental health problems under Tex. R. Evid. 401 where there was no reasonable logical nexus connecting the ability of the witness to observe the details of an assault and communicate those details to the police and the witness's mental health problems. The evidence concerning the mental health problems of the witness was therefore not relevant. Goodwin v. State, 91 S.W.3d 912, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8455 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Witnesses : Impeachment

220. During a capital murder trial, the State admitted an unauthenticated letter, written by a third party and sent to defendant at the county jail for the purpose of impeaching defendant's trial court testimony that she never had sex with another woman; the letter was not relevant to anything at issue, was not proper impeachment, and the trial court erred in admitting the letter. Abdygapparova v. State, 243 S.W.3d 191, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8205 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2007).

221. Where the State had already established on direct examination that the complainant was serving a deferred adjudication probation during one point in her relationship with defendant, any further inquiry would not have made the existence of any fact of consequence to the determination of defendant's alleged offense more or less probable than it was without the evidence, and such testimony was not relevant to any bias, motive, or interest to help the State, making it an impermissible method of impeachment; accordingly, the trial court was within its discretion to limit the question posed by defendant's counsel on cross-examination. Crook v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3485 (Tex. App. Dallas May 6 2005).

222. Where defendant was tried for murdering the victim in exchange for his wife's promise for a share of the insurance proceeds, the State's failure to charge the wife was irrelevant to the credibility of the State's key witness, defendant's girlfriend. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the proffered impeachment evidence. Day v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6238 (Tex. App. Austin July 15 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : General Overview

223. Although defendant's proffered alternative perpetrator evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because identity was a material issue in the case and vigorously contested at defendant's aggravated robbery trial, and although there was no danger that the evidence would create a side issue that would unduly distract the jury from the main issues under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because the evidence addressed a material issue in the case, the trial court's exclusion of the evidence was not error because defendant failed to show the required nexus between the alleged alternative perpetrator and the offense-at-issue; although the alleged alternative perpetrator's indictments and convictions indicated that he engaged in a spree of robberies overlapping the offense-at-issue, that evidence supported no conclusions other than that he was committing robberies around the time of the offense-at-issue, and defendant did not present evidence that the alleged alternative perpetrator's offenses were committed at or near the location of the offense-at-issue or present testimony from any of the witnesses identifying that individual as the robber. Dickson v. State, 246 S.W.3d 733, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9859 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Alibi

224. In an aggravated robbery case, the court properly allowed the State to present a witness's testimony that defendant had robbed her at gunpoint at a time when defendant's witness testified that he was working for her because the testimony had significant potential value to prove that defendant's alibi witness was not truthful; in light of the instructions given, the evidence did not have the potential to impress the jury in an irrational way, and no other evidence except the witness's significantly assisted the State in contradicting the account of defendant's whereabouts. Davis v. State, 214 S.W.3d 101, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10866 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Coercion & Duress

225. In a trial for writing threatening letters to the appellate court in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 36.06, evidence that defendant was mistreated in prison was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, to defenses of duress or necessity; the evidence was properly excluded, and defendant was not entitled to instructions on those defenses. Trove v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9028 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 14 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Insanity : General Overview

226. Although defendant argued that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding a psychologist's testimony during the guilt-innocence phase of trial because it would have assisted the jury in determining whether defendant was insane, the trial court properly excluded the testimony, where the psychologist did not testify about defendant's past mental health during a proffer, and he specifically testified that he was unaware of defendant's mental health status on the date of the incident at issue. Teel v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9391, 2010 WL 4812994 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 24 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Insanity : Insanity Defense

227. In a capital murder trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.03(a), the trial court did not err in admitting the expert testimony of an FBI agent because the agent's testimony was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to rebut defendant's defensive theory of insanity. Resendiz v. State, 112 S.W.3d 541, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 97 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, Resendiz v. Texas, 541 U.S. 1032, 124 S. Ct. 2098, 158 L. Ed. 2d 713, 2004 U.S. LEXIS 3274 (2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Necessity

228. In a trial for writing threatening letters to the appellate court in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 36.06, evidence that defendant was mistreated in prison was not relevant, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, to defenses of duress or necessity; the evidence was properly excluded, and defendant was not entitled to instructions on those defenses. Trove v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9028 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 14 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Right to Present

229. In a child sexual assault case, testimony that a victim's mother sent inappropriate text messages to her underage step-daughter was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401; this did not show that the mother manipulated the victim into making a false accusation. Because the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence in question, the appellate court did not need to determine if the exclusion of that evidence prevented appellant from presenting a meaningful defense. Garcia v. State, 397 S.W.3d 860, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4035, 2013 WL 1248305 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Defenses : Self-Defense

230. Witness's testimony was relevant because the fact that defendant was angry and agitated earlier the same evening of the stabbing tended to prove his intent to commit an act clearly dangerous to human life against the victim without a reasonable belief that deadly force was necessary to protect himself. Allen v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7895 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 22 2014).

231. In a case in which a jury found defendant guilty of the offense of murder, the trial court did not err in excluding defendant's testimony regarding the specifics about the "immoral teachings" that he believed his children's grandmother and the complainant had been exposing the children to because defendant did not explain, nor was a reviewing court able to discern, how any testimony about the contents of any "immoral teachings" would have had any tendency to make his self-defense claim more or less probable. Washington v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4434, 2009 WL 40168 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2009).

232. In the assault trial of a father who shot his son, the trial court properly excluded a post-shooting psychological evaluation of the son, and any evidence of the son's violent nature that surfaced after the shooting was at best only minimally relevant and was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or confusion of the issues concerning the father's assertion of self-defense. Iverson v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7007 (Tex. App. Texarkana Aug. 2 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Scienter : Specific Intent

233. Evidence of an extraneous assault offense that defendant allegedly committed against his wife after her aggravated kidnapping and six days before his trial on that charge was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) for the purpose of showing his intent to inflict bodily injury on his wife where defendant's intent was a fact of consequence because the indictment included an allegation that he intended to commit murder or to inflict bodily injury when he abducted his wife. Furthermore, evidence of defendant's subsequent alleged assault of his wife was relevant because his subsequent conduct made it more probable that he intended to inflict bodily injury on his wife during the charged offense. Simoneaux v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5628 (Tex. App. Tyler July 20 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Limiting Instructions

234. In drug and robbery case, although defendant's relevancy objection to evidence of the other thefts sufficiently apprised the trial court of the nature of his complaint, where defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and obtain a ruling as to whether the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, nor ask for a limiting instruction, defendant waived at trial any complaint over admission of evidence of extraneous thefts. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Jury Instructions : Particular Instructions : Use of Particular Evidence

235. Where defendant convicted of driving while intoxicated after a traffic stop challenged the officer's basis for stopping him, the trial court erred by not including an Tex. Crim. Proc. Code Ann. art. 38.23(a) instruction in the jury charge. The videotape of the stop and the officers' testimony about the videotape was relevant for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it created some affirmative evidence to show that the stop was not justified. Dyer v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9964 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2010).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Community Confinement

236. Question to appellant's aunt in the punishment phase regarding the criminal history of appellant's brother and sister was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because one of the issues was whether appellant was a suitable candidate for community supervision and, in determining that issue, the character and criminal background of family members with whom appellant would associate was relevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a)(3); any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the aunt never responded and appellant had, inter alia, tested positive for alcohol on two separate occasions during urinalysis tests while out on bond. Jones v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5860, 2010 WL 2889690 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 22 2010).

237. In revoking community supervision, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's objection to a police officer's testimony regarding his conduct in evading arrest by using a vehicle, as the evidence was relevant to sentencing. Cooper v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4334 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 13 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : General Overview

238. In a hearing to revoke defendant's community supervision, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of the underlying offense of cruelty to animals; the evidence was relevant to whether defendant was entitled to a reduced sentence. Davis v. State, 181 S.W.3d 426, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9093 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

239. In a hearing to revoke defendant's community supervision, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of the underlying offense of cruelty to animals; the evidence was relevant to whether defendant was entitled to a reduced sentence. Davis v. State, 181 S.W.3d 426, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9093 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Alternatives : Probation : Eligibility

240. Trial court's decision to overrule a relevancy objection based on Tex. R. Evid. 401 regarding questions about the criminal history of defendant's family members was not beyond the zone of reasonable disagreement because the character of the people he would have worked and associated with was relevant to his suitability for community supervision. Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1810 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 12 2009).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Capital Punishment : Aggravating Circumstances

241. Trial court did not err by admitting testimony regarding an alleged threat defendant made against the unborn child of a witness because the testimony was relevant to the jury's determination of defendant's future dangerousness because it had a tendency to make the existence of defendant's future dangerousness more probable than it would be without the evidence. The statement had probative value, as the fact that he would make such a statement to a pregnant woman regarding an unborn child was some evidence of defendant's character, and it was not unfairly prejudicial, as it was not mentioned again after the witness testified. Martinez v. State, 327 S.W.3d 727, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1653 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010), cert. denied, No. 10-9833, --U.S. --, 131 S. Ct. 2966, 180 L. Ed.2d 253, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4238 (2011).

242. Trial court did not err by admitting during sentencing an audio recording of jokes defendant told his brother on the telephone while in jail over his First Amendment objection because it was within the zone of reasonable disagreement that the evidence was indicative of defendant's character and thus relevant to the issue of future dangerousness; the jocks, which defendant told after raping, beating, and murdering a 15-year-old girl showed that he found the topics of violence and disrespect towards women to be humorous. The evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it had a tendency to make the existence of defendant's future dangerousness more probable, and it was not so prejudicial that there was a clear disparity between the degree of prejudice and its probative value. Davis v. State, 329 S.W.3d 798, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1207 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

243. Trial court did not err when it allowed the State to present evidence that defendant had become a Satanist while imprisoned on death row because the evidence was relevant to the issue of defendant's future dangerousness and outside the protection of the First Amendment, as an expert testified that some members of the religion advocated violence, that Satanic religious publications like the ones found in defendant's cell discussed rituals of destruction and human sacrifice, and that various people had committed murder and mutilation in the name of Satan. Davis v. State, 329 S.W.3d 798, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1207 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

244. In the penalty phase of a capital murder trial, there was no error in allowing testimony about Texas prison conditions in general and that violence could occur within the Texas prison system; an issue for the jury's determination was future dangerousness; therefore, the testimony was relevant to whether defendant would have opportunities to commit violent acts in prison. Lucero v. State, 246 S.W.3d 86, 2008 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 219 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Capital Punishment : Mitigating Circumstances

245. In a capital sentencing proceeding, mitigating evidence of life in poverty and a crime-ridden neighborhood was relevant, within the language of Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it had a tendency to make a deprived and troubled childhood more probable than it would be without the evidence. Ex Parte Smith, 309 S.W.3d 53, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 534 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

246. In a capital murder case, a court did not err by excluding testimony in mitigation of punishment regarding a history of family sexual abuse of multiple generations of children in defendant's family because the fact that others in defendant's family were abused did not by itself make him more or less morally culpable for the crime for which he was on trial, nor did it, by itself, make a jury's finding of mitigation any more or less probable than it would have been without the evidence. Shuffield v. State, 189 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 365 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Evidence

247. At the punishment phase of defendant's trial for robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence photographs of his wife after a domestic violence incident because the photographs were "relevant" for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) to a police officer's testimony that defendant might have a propensity toward intoxication and violence; the photographs were also helpful to the jury in assessing a proper sentence. The definition of "relevant," as stated in Tex. R. Evid. 401, did not readily apply. Cordova v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9947 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 8 2013).

248. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of a tattoo on defendant's chest which read "murder is my motive" during sentencing because the tattoo was relevant to his character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9477 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

249. In defendant's unauthorized use of a motor vehicle case, a court did not err during punishment the phase by admitting a photograph of defendant's chest tattoo that read "murder is my motive" because a defendant's choice of tattoos was some evidence of his character, and therefore, the photograph was relevant to defendant's character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9474, 2013 WL 3943108 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

250. In defendant's evading arrest case, the court did not err during the punishment phase by admitting a photograph of defendant's chest tattoo that read "murder is my motive" because a defendant's choice of tattoos was some evidence of his character, and therefore, the photograph was relevant to defendant's character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9473, 2013 WL 3943120 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

251. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of a tattoo on defendant's chest which read "murder is my motive" during sentencing because the tattoo was relevant to his character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9479 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

252. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for intoxication assault, the trial court did not err by admitting a statement probative of defendant's general attitude of selfishness because the statement was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to show defendant's character and helpful to the jury in determining whether she was a good candidate for community supervision. Ford v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8034, 2012 WL 4243715 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 20 2012).

253. Where defendant entered a plea of guilty to four aggravated robberies, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's tattoos as it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the jury's determination of his suitability for community supervision. Jackson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5221, 2012 WL

2445052 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

254. When defendant pleaded guilty to intoxication manslaughter in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08(a), the doctrines of double jeopardy and collateral estoppel did not preclude the trial court at sentencing from determining that defendant's prior offense involved alcohol even though the State had reduced the charge in the prior case from driving while intoxicated (DWI) to obstruction of a highway or other passageway; double jeopardy did not attach, because there were no common factual elements between DWI and obstruction of a highway or other passageway. Under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 401-402, the trial court was permitted to consider all relevant evidence at sentencing. Cherian v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8646, 2010 WL 4244002 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2010).

255. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 when the trial court admitted, at the punishment phase of a murder trial, a video of sexual acts involving defendant and the victim, his wife, who was unconscious due to alleged intoxication, because the video countered defendant's assertions of sudden passion and that he was law abiding until the murder. Skolnik v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5509, 2010 WL 2783872 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 15 2010).

256. Even without medical evidence to verify it, defendant's volunteered statement to a police officer that he was HIV positive had probative value to show he was infected by the HIV virus when he sexually assaulted a child victim and was relevant as a circumstance of the offense that the jury could consider in assessing punishment under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1). Lewis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4545 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 16 2010).

257. Evidence pertaining to defendant's flight from justice and efforts to arrest him for assault on a public servant was relevant and admissible at sentencing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), which governed the ruling on relevance instead of the general Tex. R. Evid. 401 definition, because defendant's flight was an extension of his conduct during the offense and showed his lack of respect for lawful authority. Campbell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8643, 2009 WL 3593481 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 28 2009).

258. In a sentencing trial for felony assault to a family member, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 when the trial court admitted testimony from defendant's wife about the circumstances of a prior assault and guilty plea. The testimony was relevant punishment evidence because it illustrated defendant's propensity for family violence and that he was not deterred by his earlier conviction. Murchison v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7481, 2009 WL 3050823 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 24 2009).

259. Even though evidence was admissible during sentencing if it was relevant, pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), a trial court did not err by excluding a psychologist's testimony in a sexual assault case because a report and evaluation of a child held little probative value with respect to the truthfulness of her version of events. The evaluation and report concerning the child simply listed the textbook symptoms associated with the conditions that the psychologist diagnosed, and the tendency to lie was merely one of the traits of a condition that the child had been diagnosed with. Canales v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2716, 2009 WL 1034933 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 17 2009).

260. In a case involving indecency with a child, testimony from defendant's former wife regarding defendant's sexual behavior with neighborhood boys and with his niece was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it was helpful to the jury in determining an appropriate sentence, and any issues relating to truthfulness or a lack of specificity went to the weight, not the admissibility, of the evidence and was for the jury to determine; moreover, the extraneous offense testimony was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it was probative, it would not have irrationally impressed the jury, the time needed to develop the evidence was minimal, and the State needed the evidence. To the extent the evidence showed defendant's sexual conduct with children, it was not unfairly prejudicial. Orr v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4152, 2009 WL 485502 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 27 2009).

261. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, evidence during the punishment phase of defendant's gang affiliation was relevant to defendant's punishment and the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. An officer testified that defendant's gang was involved in narcotics trafficking, theft, kick burglaries, and other similar offenses. Sutton v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9068 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 4 2008).

262. Court properly admitted evidence of defendant's gang affiliation during the punishment phase of his trial because, after admitting, the evidence the court properly instructed the jury it could not consider any evidence of an alleged extraneous crime or bad act unless the State had proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had committed the act, or it was one for which defendant could be held criminally responsible. By issuing that instruction, the trial court limited the jury's review of evidence in the punishment phase to those bad acts that had been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Sierra v. State, 266 S.W.3d 72, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6417 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2008).

263. In a sexual assault case, the court properly allowed the victim to read her poem to the jury during punishment because it was relevant to show that the consequences of defendant's act included the victim's sadness at having lost the sense of safety she once knew with defendant, her mixed feelings, her anger, her need to apologize for her promise not to tell, and implicitly, for breaking that promise. Mansfield v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5615 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 29 2008).

264. In the punishment phase of a kidnapping trial, there was no error in the admission of extraneous evidence of the victim's murder because the murder was relevant and attributable to defendant. Leffew v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 389 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 17 2008).

265. In an assault trial, there was no error in admitting opinion evidence at the sentencing phase relating to defendant's gang membership; the expert opinion testimony that certain of defendant's tattoos had distinctive meanings and were common in certain gangs supplied sound evidence of gang membership, which was relevant to defendant's character. Garcia v. State, 239 S.W.3d 862, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8307 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

266. In a case involving aggravated sexual abuse of a child, defendant was unable to invoke her Fifth Amendment rights while testifying on her own behalf during sentencing when asked about an extraneous offense; moreover, cross-examination of defendant was proper since this evidence was relevant to sentencing considerations based on the fact that it concerned a prior, similar offense against a child. Little v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4194 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 30 2007).

267. Under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 401, evidence of defendant's commission of an offense similar to the ones for which she pleaded guilty, allegedly committed during the pendency of the indictment, was clearly relevant to the issue of whether community supervision was appropriate. Terrell v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9780 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 10 2006).

268. Probation officer was properly allowed to testify that defendant was not a suitable candidate for community supervision because suitability is a matter relevant to sentencing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) when a defendant seeks placement on community supervision; the court noted that the trial judge still had operate within the bounds of Tex. R. Evid. 401. Ellison v. State, 201 S.W.3d 714, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1689

269. During defendant's trial for intoxication manslaughter, testimony about the difference between punishment for murder and intoxication manslaughter was relevant because it gave the jury complete information about how the punishment range for a particular criminal offense varies when a mental state is proven; defendant claimed that the collision was an accident or a mistake. Hackler v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4995 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

270. Trial court did not err when it allowed the introduction of defendant's threatening statement to a jailor relating to his release from prison under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07. § 3(a); this statement was highly relevant in assessing punishment for the attempted murder of police officers, and it was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Espinosa v. State, 194 S.W.3d 703, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4611 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

271. Where defendant, a large Caucasian man, was accused of burglarizing the homes of two Hispanic families, photographs of defendant's tattoos were admissible as evidence of defendant's selfishness and his impact on the victims. The photographs were not admissible to establish that defendant's race would make him more likely to engage in future criminal conduct. Hicks v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10663 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 28 2005).

272. In a hearing to revoke defendant's community supervision, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of the underlying offense of cruelty to animals; the evidence was relevant to whether defendant was entitled to a reduced sentence. Davis v. State, 181 S.W.3d 426, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9093 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

273. In a hearing to revoke defendant's community supervision, the State was permitted to introduce evidence of the underlying offense of cruelty to animals; the evidence was relevant to whether defendant was entitled to a reduced sentence. Davis v. State, 181 S.W.3d 426, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9093 (Tex. App. Waco 2005).

274. In a case of indecency with a child, the admission of irrelevant evidence at punishment that the victim's brother also abused the victim was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the victim testified that defendant did not know of the brother's abuse and because proper evidence of defendant's conduct warranted the sentence imposed. Dustman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6588 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2005).

275. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission of evidence that the petitioner had used and sold illegal drugs roughly 10 years before his arrest for sex crimes was not relevant to the jury's sentencing determination. The petitioner's involvement with illegal drugs was separate and unrelated to his sex crimes, and was therefore not helpful to the jury in making its sentencing determination. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

276. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission during the jury's sentencing determination of images of adult bestiality taken from the petitioner's computer. The images did not form part of the factual basis for the charges to which the petitioner had plead guilty, and had no relevance to the jury's sentencing determination apart from demonstrating the depths of depravity to which the petitioner had sunk; even if the evidence were relevant in some tangential way to the determination of his sentence, it was highly probable that considerations of unfair prejudice would have sufficed to keep this evidence from the jury. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

277. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence during the sentencing phase that a gun used in the commission of the assault on the victim was operable even though the jury had not found that defendant had possessed a deadly weapon during the guilt phase of the trial as the trial court could have reasonably believed that it was relevant and would be helpful for the jury to know whether the pistol was capable of being fired since it was available for defendant's use in the midst of a volatile situation. Kerr v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1081 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 10 2005).

278. Where defendant was tried for aiding seven men escape from prison, evidence of the post-escape crimes committed by the seven men bore heavily upon defendant's character and moral blameworthiness; the evidence was admissible to help the jury determine an appropriate sentence for defendant's crimes. Rodriguez v. State, 163 S.W.3d 115, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1084 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

279. Trial court did not err by excluding proffered evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) to show that defendant was in psychiatric hospital at the time of his arrest for sexual assault in order to show his state of mind following the commission of the offense because even though defendant's mental state during and after the offense might have been relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the jury's determination of an appropriate punishment, his location at the time of his arrest and his mental state were not one and the same. Furthermore, defendant was not prohibited from introducing direct evidence of his mental condition because he could have offered significantly more relevant testimony to establish a diminished mental capacity by testifying as to whether he had ever been treated for drug addiction or mental illness and by calling the doctor who certified him competent to stand trial to testify to the significant mental deficits noted in his competency evaluation of defendant. Lamb v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 879 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 3 2005).

280. In a joint trial on the offense of sexual assault, a trial court's decision to admit a portion of a videotape showing one co-defendant's presence during the accidental overdose of a friend was not erroneous because the trial court repeatedly instructed the jury that defendant was not there. Klock v. State, 177 S.W.3d 53, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 317 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

281. Trial court's decision to exclude testimony from a former prisoner regarding confinement conditions during sentencing was not erroneous because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony would not have been helpful to the jury in determining the appropriate sentence in a sexual assault case; moreover, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony went beyond the scope of any door opened by the State. Klock v. State, 177 S.W.3d 53, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 317 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

282. In an aggravated sexual assault case, a court properly excluded a defense witness's testimony where it described prison life as he had observed it several years before, rather than present prison life, and the court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony was not helpful to determining an appropriate sentence. Zunker v. State, 177 S.W.3d 72, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

283. In the punishment phase of defendant's murder case, autopsy photographs were properly admitted because they supplied complete information regarding the nature of the wounds, that information was helpful to the court in devising an appropriate sentence, and they were probative as to the extent and nature of the injuries. Therefore, the autopsy photographs were relevant and were not unduly prejudicial. Williams v. State, 176 S.W.3d 476, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004).

284. In the sentencing phase of defendant's sexual assault case, a court properly excluded testimony regarding prison conditions and defendant's potential status of being "fresh meat" in prison where the witness's testimony was elicited specifically to educate the jury on what defendant's prison experiences would be, and the testimony would not have been helpful to the jury in determining the appropriate sentence. Zunker v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS

4376 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 13 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 177 S.W.3d 72, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 320 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

285. In revoking community supervision, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's objection to a police officer's testimony regarding his conduct in evading arrest by using a vehicle, as the evidence was relevant to sentencing. Cooper v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4334 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 13 2004).

286. Tex. R. Evid. 401 definition of relevant evidence is not a perfect fit in the punishment context. Mendoza v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2486 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2004).

287. In a prosecution for murder, the medical records of defendant's shooting victims were properly admitted at the sentencing phase; the medical records were relevant to the circumstances of the murder and provided evidence of bad acts for which defendant could be held criminally responsible. Mendoza v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2486 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2004).

288. Trial court did not err under Texas Rule of Evidence 403 when it held inadmissible at the punishment stage of trial defendant's exhibit, a videotape depicting the administrative segregation facilities of a Texas prison unit as the videotape portrayed only one aspect of an entire system and offered only general information about some procedures used in that system, and the fact that other inmates had been controlled in the prison system or that certain procedures were in place, was not evidence of consequence to the jury's factual determination of whether defendant would pose a continuing threat to society where no evidence was offered that the circumstances portrayed in the videotape would specifically apply to defendant. Sells v. State, 121 S.W.3d 748, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 63 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 986, 124 S. Ct. 511, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 8067 (2003).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Sentencing : Imposition : Victim Statements

289. Testimony of defendant's former girlfriend during the punishment phase as to the impact of an extraneous offense on her was not victim impact evidence because she was the victim of that extraneous offense, and the testimony was admissible in a case of evading arrest or detention using a motor vehicle. Guerra v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5655, 2010 WL 2816215 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 19 2010).

290. In the punishment phase of a kidnapping trial, it was error to admit testimony from the victim's parent regarding the impact of the victim's murder because defendant was not charged with the murder; therefore, the victim impact testimony was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07; the error was not harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44; the State emphasized during closing arguments that the victim would not be coming back and that if the punishment were enhanced, it would be of some comfort to the family. Leffew v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 389 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 17 2008).

291. Even if trial counsel should have objected to testimony from a murder victim's parent, defendant admitted shooting the victim three times; therefore, it was unlikely that the outcome of the trial would have been different if trial counsel had objected to the relevance of the evidence; defendant therefore failed to show that counsel was ineffective in failing to object. Kearse v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9828 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 19 2007).

292. Testimony of a witness not named in an indictment did not constitute irrelevant victim impact testimony because her reaction to witnessing the shooting of a police officer was admissible as circumstances of the crime under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a). Espinosa v. State, 194 S.W.3d 703, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4611 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

293. Where defendant was convicted of sexual assault, trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403 in admitting testimony from the victim and his sister of the effect of the assault on the victim; testimony of an inflammatory or sympathetic nature will not bar its admissibility if it is relevant to the issue at trial, and the issue need not be contested. Ranels v. State, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 2867 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 20 1996).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : General Overview

294. In defendant's indecency with a child case, the court properly excluded evidence that a boyfriend of the victims' mother was a registered sex offender because evidence of the boyfriend's registered-sex-offender status would only have been relevant if the identity of the alleged perpetrator of the offenses was an issue in the case. However, evidence of an alternative perpetrator was not relevant to the determination of whether the alleged offenses occurred. Shaw v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9038 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 3 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Civil Commitments

295. Admission of evidence of a sex offender's 1975 murder conviction during a proceeding to commit him as a sexually violent predator was not error because the conviction and the facts surrounding his nonsexual criminal history were relevant to the issue of whether he suffered from a behavioral abnormality that predisposed him to engage in a predatory act of sexual violence. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

296. In a civil commitment proceeding, defense counsel's cross-examination of an expert was not improperly limited because counsel sought to elicit information that did not make the existence of any fact of consequence to the determination of whether an inmate was a sexually violent predator more or less probable. In re Ramirez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12917, 2013 WL 5658597 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

297. In a sexually violent predator civil commitment case brought under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a)(2), the trial court did not err in admitting a videotape appellant had made of a comatose woman that demonstrated the extent of his voyeurism and the escalation of his voyeurism to sexual assault, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401. In re Chapman, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11404, 2013 WL 4773231 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 5 2013).

298. In a trial of inmate's civil commitment as a sexually violent predator under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.062, the trial court properly excluded the inmate's expert's testimony that one of the victims had recanted pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, and 702, because such evidence represented a collateral attack on the underlying convictions, which had not been set aside. In re Barron, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8495, 2013 WL 3487385 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 11 2013).

299. In proceedings on a petition to civilly commit an inmate as a sexually violent predator, it was not error to exclude evidence on the inmate's super intensive supervision parole plan because the issue was whether the inmate was a repeat sexually violent offender with a behavioral abnormality making the inmate likely to commit a predatory act of sexual violence, under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a), so the inmate's parole supervision level was irrelevant. In re Smith, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1095, 2013 WL 476771 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 7 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Classification

300. Admission of evidence of a sex offender's 1975 murder conviction during a proceeding to commit him as a sexually violent predator was not error because the conviction and the facts surrounding his nonsexual criminal history were relevant to the issue of whether he suffered from a behavioral abnormality that predisposed him to engage in a predatory act of sexual violence. In re Martinez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13512, 2013 WL 5874583 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

301. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator (SVP) was proper under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.002(5) because there was no error in failing to allow respondent's counsel to question a witness on the interpretation of the SVP statute, Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.001-851.151. The questions respondent was not allowed to ask did not address a fact of consequence that would have made the doctor's prognosis more or less probable. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Postconviction Proceedings : Sex Offenders : Registration

302. Based on his conviction for first-degree felony offense burglary of a habitation with intent to commit sexual assault, defendant did not show why it was reasonable for him to believe that the findings of fact and conclusions of law established he was not required to comply with sex-offender registration, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 62.001(5)(D); it was within the trial court's discretion to determine that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were not relevant evidence. Durham v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7301 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 13 2013).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : General Overview

303. During defendant's trial for indecent exposure, the danger of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of evidence that defendant walked around nude in front of his stepdaughters, masturbated in the presence of his stepdaughter, and inappropriately touched his stepdaughter because the evidence was probative to show defendant's intent and motive to sexually gratify himself in the presence of others and to rebut his defensive theory of mistake. Tennison v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2120 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 16 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reversible Errors : Evidence

304. In an indecency with a child case, the court committed reversible error in the admission of sex toys because there was no suggestion that sex toys were used in any way related to the complainant, and the State emphasized those items in providing a detailed description of each item, making certain to emphasize their graphic nature by carrying them in a single plastic tub, pointing out the testifying officer's wearing of gloves, and repeatedly apologizing to the jury for the graphic nature of those items. Warr v. State, 418 S.W.3d 617, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2538 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 15 2009).

305. In a trial for child sexual assault, there was no reversible error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, from the admission of evidence that defendant was a former police officer. Nino v. State, 223 S.W.3d 749, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3519 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

306. During defendant's trial for illegal dumping, the trial court did not err in excluding documentary evidence consisting of numerous receipts indicating that defendant had sold or recycled metals and other materials in 2002 and 2003, which defendant claimed was offered to prove he was recycling, rather than dumping, solid waste on his property, because the fact that defendant might not have been operating a solid waste site in 2002 and 2003 had little or no logical relevance to whether he began operating such a site in 2004, which was when the activity for which he was prosecuted occurred. Gandy v. State, 222 S.W.3d 525, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : General Overview

307. In a trial for arson based on defendant's setting fire to a piece of cloth in the gas tank of his ex-girlfriend's car, it was not error to exclude the ex-girlfriend's testimony concerning her new boyfriend. The relevancy was not readily apparent, given that neither the girlfriend nor her new boyfriend was present when the arson was committed. Flores v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6255 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 8 2005).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Constitutional Issues

308. On appeal of defendant's conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child, his complaint that the trial court erred by refusing to allow him to confront a witness was not preserved for appellate review because defense counsel did not articulate that either U.S. Const. amend. VI or Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 demanded admission of testimony about the victim's sexual relations with her boyfriend. Defense counsel's argument that the testimony was admissible as relevant evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401 was not sufficient to preserve the Confrontation Clause claim for review. Dukes v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6151 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2012).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Evidence

309. Defendant also failed to preserve for appellate review any claim that exclusion of the evidence violated the Texas Rules of Evidence because the rules were not argued or cited in defendant's brief. Even if the issue had been preserved, the court held that any error was harmless because the record contained ample evidence that defendant's wife harbored ill will towards him, and therefore the excluded evidence was merely cumulative. Rhodes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5218 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 30 2013).

310. Defendant's relevancy objections did not preserve his argument that admission of extraneous offense evidence of uncharged sexual conduct violated Tex. R. Evid. 404; in any event, because the same evidence came in through other testimony without objection, any error was cured. Goodwin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6918, 2012 WL 3590723 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 20 2012).

311. Objection under Tex. R. Evid. 404, 405 did not preserve defendant's complaints under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 regarding evidence of his gang affiliation. Martin v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5624, 2011 WL 2937423 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 21 2011).

312. While defendant claimed evidence of the nature of an arrest warrant was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in his prosecution for, inter alia, evading arrest, defendant waived his argument because he failed to object every time the nature of his arrest warrant came into evidence or obtain a running objection. Even if the argument had not been waived, an error would have been harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because strong evidence of defendant's guilt was presented, including video recordings of the police pursuit and the testimony of the police officers regarding the fact that defendant drove his car toward the first police officer. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1426, 2011 WL 677390 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 25 2011).

313. Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion during the punishment phase of the trial by admitting extraneous offense evidence to which jeopardy had attached, because none of the objections were based on a double-jeopardy violation, and the undisputed facts showed that defendant's claim of a double jeopardy violation was not clearly apparent on the face of the record, when the facts establishing double jeopardy were disputed. Williams v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9561, 2010 WL 4910243 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 2 2010).

314. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit evidence of a fight between the victim and his older brother because defendant failed to show the victim's propensity to fight when challenged was a pertinent character trait that had any relevance in a sexual assault on a child case. Soto v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS

8709, 2010 WL 4273173 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 29 2010).

315. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the district court erred by excluding evidence regarding the motivation of the authorities to prosecute the case against him because he failed to objected on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) during the trial. Even assuming that defendant had preserved error, the trial court did not abuse its discretion because: (1) the proffered evidence had no relevance to the issue of whether defendant had committed the offense of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle; (2) the trial court could have found that the evidence would have put the officers and the police department on trial, confused the issues, and caused undue delay; and (3) there was considerable evidence showing that defendant committed the offense, particularly the videotape showing defendant entering the bait vehicle on three separate dates. Bishop v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7056, 2010 WL 3369845 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2010).

316. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by allowing the State to question him about testimony he gave in a prior trial because at trial defendant specifically objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 403, but on appeal he argued that the testimony was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6738, 2010 WL 3279386 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 19 2010).

317. It could be argued that defendant waived an objection under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 to evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 because objections that the evidence was not fair and cumulative did not comport with the objection on appeal. McCallum v. State, 311 S.W.3d 9, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 440 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 27 2010).

318. In a driving while intoxicated case, even though defendant made several challenges to the trial court's admission of a DC-24 form into evidence, because the only objection made at trial was for relevance, that was the only issue preserved for appellate review. Frnka v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7095, 2009 WL 2882939 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

319. Defendant did not object to testimony about gang affiliation during the guilt-innocence phase of a murder trial and therefore failed to preserved error under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2952 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 24 2008).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Failure to Object

320. Because defendant failed to object to the relevance of his jailhouse tattoos, as opposed to an alleged gang affiliation, and failed to object to the State's continued questioning about his tattoos, testimony concerning his tattoos was admitted into evidence without objection. While defendant failed to obtain an adverse ruling in the first place, even if he had, he would have waived the objection by failing to either interpose it each time the evidence in question was offered or seek a running objection. Shipley v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2868, 2014 WL 1004498 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 14 2014).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Preservation for Review : Requirements

321. Defense counsel preserved for review the issue of whether the trial court erred in admitting an extraneous offense because defense counsel emphasized what rules his request for a running objection was based on, and the trial court stated that the evidence was admitted as inextricably intertwined with the offense. Finney v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8317 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2013).

322. In an appeal from a kidnapping conviction, the court reviewed arguments relating to the admission of evidence, even though defendant failed to object, because defendant's complaints were apparent from the context of defendant's objections; therefore, Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 was satisfied. Leffew v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 389

(Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 17 2008).

323. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a) and Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), a murder defendant waived the argument that autopsy photos were not relevant because an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403 did not preserve error under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Williams v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6397 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 9 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Reviewability : Waiver : General Overview

324. In a murder trial, defendant waived his Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403 objections to the portion of a surveillance videotape that depicted the victim's wife kneeling and crying over the victim's body after defendant had fled the store. Two witnesses testified, without objection, regarding actions depicted on the videotape and verbally conveyed the same imagery. Fernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7068 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 30 2005).

325. In drug and robbery case, although defendant's relevancy objection to evidence of the other thefts sufficiently apprised the trial court of the nature of his complaint, where defendant did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and obtain a ruling as to whether the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, nor ask for a limiting instruction, defendant waived at trial any complaint over admission of evidence of extraneous thefts. Loftin v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2651 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 25 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : General Overview

326. Where defendant was charged with possession with intent to deliver cocaine after police searched him as a suspect in a nearby shooting, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the spent bullet from evidence. A defense theory that the shots were fired by men who placed the cocaine in defendant's pockets while he was unconscious was mere speculation. Seay v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2048 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 17 2005).

327. Questions of relevance should be left largely to the trial court, relying on its own observations and experience, and will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion. Day v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6238 (Tex. App. Austin July 15 2004).

328. Relevance of an allegation of sexual assault on a minor made over two years after the one at bar, without more, was extremely minimal, and under those circumstances, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence. Keith v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4450 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2004).

329. Relevance of an allegation of sexual assault on a minor made over two years after the one at bar, without more, was extremely minimal, and under those circumstances, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence. Keith v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4450 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2004).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Abuse of Discretion : Evidence

330. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence regarding defendant's membership in a gang because it was relevant to show defendant's motive for shooting the two victims and to rebut defendant's theory that he shot at the vehicle in self-defense. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3618 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2014).

331. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence because the trial court's decision to admit evidence of defendant's knowledge that he was prohibited from owning a firearm fell within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Tran v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2387, 2014 WL 859674 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 4 2014).

332. Court did not abuse its discretion in the exclusion of the proffered evidence because the excluded testimony failed to establish the existence of "bad blood" between defendant and the alleged victim. Tran v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2387, 2014 WL 859674 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 4 2014).

333. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a shovel into evidence because the State's theory was that defendant dumped the victim's body in a wooded area and covered the body with grass clippings, rocks, leaves, and bamboo, and the fact he had a shovel readily available to assist him was relevant. Briscoe v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10859 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 29 2013).

334. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an extraneous offense regarding marijuana found on defendant's person and in his car because it was admissible same transaction contextual evidence; defendant's possession of an illegal substance explained his possible motive for hitting a detective and fleeing the scene before the drugs could be found, and he was not acting suspiciously until the detective moved closer. Finney v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8317 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2013).

335. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of another potential suspect because defendant made an offer of proof but did not tender any other evidence connecting his brother's alleged drug use or dealing to his murder. Honish v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5139 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

336. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by preventing defense counsel from asking the medical examiner about the percentage of people who died from violent deaths while having narcotics in their bodies because the question would not have elicited any relevant testimony, as the percentage did not make defendant more of less culpable of the victim's murder and did not make a jury's finding of mitigation any more or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Herrera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5594, 2012 WL 2861673 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 12 2012).

337. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a tattoo of "187" on defendant's hand as a statement that defendant committed murder pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) because the record showed that defendant did not have the tattoo on the night of the shooting, it was placed on him after he was in jail in connection with the underlying murder charge, and went to his state of mind at the time of the shooting and clarified the circumstances surrounding the shooting. It was clear from the placement of the tattoo on his hand that it was an open and obvious statement he wanted everyone to see and it directly contradicted his defensive theory that he acted in self defense. Salazar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6835, 2011 WL 3770297 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26 2011).

338. In a criminal solicitation of a minor for sexual assault case, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the defense witness's testimony about the veracity of the chat room logs because it was irrelevant as he could not say whether the State's or defendant's version of the chat logs was an accurate version of the actual chat sessions. Pudasaini v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5582, 2011 WL 2905592 (Tex. App. Dallas July 21 2011).

339. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by prohibiting defendant from questioning his daughter about the victim's use of marijuana because whether the victim used drugs over a month earlier would not rebut the toxicology report showing no drugs in her system at the time she was killed. Mcghee v. State, 2010 Tex. App.

LEXIS 5561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

340. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the evidence was relevant because (1) a police officer testified that track marks on a person's arms were the result of heroin use; (2) during a raid on defendant's residence, police officers discovered 19.34 grams of heroin on the premises, along with numerous syringes that a police officer testified were commonly used to shoot heroin; and (3) evidence of track marks on defendant's arms made his alleged involvement with the criminal activity at the residence more probable than it would be without the evidence. Gomez v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8853 (Tex. App. Austin Nov. 9 2007).

341. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence defendant's book-in photograph because defendant did not object at trial or complain of an improperly suggestive photographic identification procedure by the State; the photograph was not prejudicial merely because defendant had an "angry look;" the photograph, which was used by a witness during her deposition to identify defendant as the perpetrator, was relevant as identity was an essential element of any criminal offense. King v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8766 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2007).

342. Photograph of the complainant's children was relevant to the case where, at trial, the complainant and her sister testified the complainant's two young daughters were in the car at the time of the shooting, while other witnesses claimed they did not see the girls in the car. The photograph showed the girls' size at the time of the offense and allowed the jury to evaluate whether the children would be visible in the car, particularly if they had ducked down when the shooting began. Brown v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 237 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 12 2007).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : General Overview

343. Defendant's claim that a trial court erred in excluding evidence in the guilt/innocence phase of his murder trial that his co-offender died in an unrelated armed confrontation with police, on the ground that how he died was not relevant, was resolved against him because, even assuming that the trial court erred in excluding the evidence that the roommate died in an armed confrontation with police, any error was harmless, as similar evidence was introduced by defendant when he testified. Perez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6814 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 23 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 2897, 165 L. Ed. 2d 924, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4763, 74 U.S.L.W. 3703 (U.S. 2006).

344. In a case of indecency with a child, the admission of irrelevant evidence at punishment that the victim's brother also abused the victim was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the victim testified that defendant did not know of the brother's abuse and because proper evidence of defendant's conduct warranted the sentence imposed. Dustman v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6588 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 17 2005).

345. Trial court should have excluded as irrelevant and prejudicial a BB gun that was found in a defendant's truck and that was not used during the charged burglary. The error was harmless, however, because the court did not have fair assurances that the mind of an average juror would have found the State's case less persuasive had the BB gun not been admitted. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4487 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 9 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6371 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 11, 2005).

346. In a trial for a violent sexual assault of a child, it was error to admit a letter that defendant wrote from prison in which he asserted that the victim lied about her age and that he defended himself when she attacked him, and because his testimony, prior to admission of the letter, was consistent with those claims, the letter was not relevant to guilt and was only relevant to defendant's promiscuous sexual conduct, which he also discussed in the letter; however, the error was harmless because the letter was largely exculpatory and the evidence of guilt was overwhelming. Reed v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5389 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 17 2004).

347. In defendant's burglary case, although the testimony of the victims regarding illegal drugs taken during the robbery was of only slight probative value, it was relevant for purposes of sentencing because it pertained to the circumstances of the offense, and therefore, the trial court erred by excluding it. In addition, although the victims denied any involvement in drug-related activities, the jury should have been allowed to assess their credibility and demeanor and the jury may have considered those circumstances in assessing defendant's sentence; therefore, the error was harmful. McKaine v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3777 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2004), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 170 S.W.3d 285, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7147 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

348. Trial court erred in excluding from jury consideration evidence of discriminatory enforcement of the Blue Law, former Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 9001; however, the error was harmless in that there was no hint of any reason that constituted the kind of invidious enforcement that gave rise to constitutional protection. Wolf v. State, 661 S.W.2d 765, 1983 Tex. App. LEXIS 5456 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 1983).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Constitutional Errors

349. Court did not err by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the medical examiner concerning the lapse of her medical license because defendant adduced no evidence that the status of the medical examiner's license in 2004 had any relevance to the facts or validity of her testimony, the State had a strong case, and the testimony as to the cause of the child's death was corroborated by a large amount of other forensic evidence; defendant cross-examined the medical examiner fully regarding the autopsy, and the record showed that the medical examiner was licensed when she performed the autopsy and compiled the autopsy report; thus, even if the trial court abused its discretion in limiting and denying cross-examination, defendant did not demonstrate harm. Valdez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10295 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 30 2006).

Criminal Law & Procedure : Appeals : Standards of Review : Harmless & Invited Errors : Evidence

350. Because the evidence of defendant's extraneous rule violations at the treatment center was irrelevant to prove that she consumed alcohol on a specific date, any error in the admission of that evidence was harmless. Strother v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10606 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

351. Defendant also failed to preserve for appellate review any claim that exclusion of the evidence violated the Texas Rules of Evidence because the rules were not argued or cited in defendant's brief. Even if the issue had been preserved, the court held that any error was harmless because the record contained ample evidence that defendant's wife harbored ill will towards him, and therefore the excluded evidence was merely cumulative. Rhodes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5218 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 30 2013).

352. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting defendant's military record into evidence, as the fact that defendant was charged with escape and had been discharged for misconduct did not make it more or less likely that he had committed the sexual assault offenses, the error was harmless because there was evidence supporting defendant's conviction, other evidence showed that he was untruthful about his military service, and the State never mentioned the extraneous offenses contained in defendant's military record. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

353. In a robbery trial, any error was harmless when the trial court allowed evidence of defendant's tattoos because an accomplice admitted he robbed the shoe store and testified that defendant was also involved in the robbery. Further, defendant's fingerprint was found on one of the shoe boxes handled by the robbers. Jefferson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 663, 2012 WL 234116 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 26 2012).

354. Because a crayon drawing found in the victim's clothes during the autopsy did not provide a small nudge toward proving or disproving some fact of consequence, the drawing was irrelevant and inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 402; however, under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), admission of the drawing was harmless error as the evidence against defendant was substantial and the drawing was not so emotionally charged that it prevented the jury from rationally considering the evidence before it. Soto v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8360, 2011 WL 5000393 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 20 2011).

355. In a capital murder trial, any error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 in admitting a drawing by a witness to the shooting that showed both the shooting and the immediate aftermath was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the events depicted in the drawing were testified to by several other witnesses, surveillance videos showed defendant's actions, and defendant confessed. Petty v. State, 346 S.W.3d 200, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5494 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 19 2011).

356. Court abused its discretion when it allowed the State to introduce evidence that defendant failed to appear for two drug tests, however, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights, because the evidence was brief and was not emphasized by the State, defendant had a prior criminal record, and there was direct evidence connecting defendant with the syringe that contained a trace amount of methamphetamine. Hood v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6301, 2010 WL 3049030 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 5 2010).

357. In an aggravated assault case, even if photographs of dead cattle were irrelevant, their admission was harmless error because testimony describing the dead cattle was admitted without objection. Walls v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9783, 2009 WL 5150073 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2009).

358. In an indecency with a child case, the court erred by admitting extraneous offense evidence due to the lack of similarity between the extraneous offenses and the charged offenses, the duration in time of twenty years between the offenses, and the lack of evidence concerning a continuing course of conduct by defendant. The extraneous acts did not take place in defendant's home and defendant did not ask the witness to touch himself or defendant. Crocker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432, 2009 WL 4725299 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009).

359. In a felony murder case, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's exclusion of expert testimony of two of her witnesses on her affirmative defense of insanity because, although relevant and probative of her defense, the excluded testimony was repetitive of the evidence of the history of mental illness, as described by defendant's husband. More importantly, the excluded evidence did not directly pertain to the question of whether defendant was sane at the time of the collision because neither witness ever evaluated defendant for sanity. Fisher-Riza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9769, 2009 WL 4358622 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

360. In defendant's drug case, error occasioned by the admission of improper testimony was harmless because the evidence of credibility was cumulative of testimony provided by the witness and was unrelated to the evidence upon which defendant was convicted. The admission of the testimony in question was not error of such magnitude that the jury's proper evaluation of the evidence was disrupted. Perkins v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8862, 2009 WL 3834119 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 18 2009).

361. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting evidence of defendant's prior burglary arrest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) where the tendency of the evidence was to show defendant was a bad person or that his character conformed to that of a person from whom criminal conduct might be expected. However, the error did not influence the jury, or had but a slight effect on its verdict of guilt, because the State's presentation of the alleged burglary, although factually detailed, was brief and received only passing mention in closing argument, and because the propensity and potency of the evidence to characterize defendant as a criminal was blunted by the previous, unopposed, admission of evidence of his prior conviction for manslaughter. Tello v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8401, 2009 WL 3518006 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 30 2009).

362. In a sexual assault of a child case, the court reversibly erred by admitting extraneous acts evidence because defendant's practice of not using a condom while engaged in consensual sex with an adult companion, or informing the companion of his HIV positive status, had the practical effect of prejudicing any defense raised by defendant regarding the complainant's credibility. Such an effect would have been detrimental to defendant, who sought to discredit the complainant by pointing out factual variances in his outcries, and by suggesting that the complainant was motivated to fabricate the assault to avoid being schooled in an alternative education program. Lopez v. State, 288 S.W.3d 148, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2050 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 26 2009).

363. In a theft case, a court reversibly erred by excluding evidence that the complainant was a prostitute because the jury could not properly evaluate a witness's story that he was the complainant's bodyguard and would have intervened to protect her, and his business interest, if she had been in danger. Thomas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6498 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26, 2008).

364. Exclusion of a witness's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 803(24) was not harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because, for purposes of the offense of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.07, the witness's statement was relevant to the issue of defendant's state of mind and it was an issue on which the State had the burden of proof; because the witness's statement would have given credibility to defendant's otherwise self-serving testimony that he was misled by the witness about the source of the witness's permission to use the truck, the trial court's exclusion of the witness's statement was prejudicial, which necessitated reversal of defendant's conviction. Watkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2539 (Tex. App. Beaumont Apr. 9 2008).

365. In a trial for aggravated robbery, it was error to admit testimony from an officer that people in the area commonly did not call police when they found a gun; however, the error in admitting the irrelevant evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44 because the evidence of guilt, while not overwhelming, was substantial; defendant admitted to involvement, and the complainant's testimony placed the gun squarely in defendant's hands during a robbery. Brown v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1406 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 28 2008).

366. In defendant's capital murder case, evidence in the guilt-innocence phase that painted a picture of the victim as a young man with a promising future whose life defendant had ended prematurely was irrelevant and appealed to the jury's sympathies. However, the error was harmless; defendant admitted to participating in the shooting, and a witness testified that defendant shot the victim and grabbed the bag of codeine. Durand v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6535 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 16 2007).

367. Even though the trial court erred by admitting photographs of the corpse of defendant's murdered wife, because it had no tendency to make more or less probable any fact of consequence to the determination of defendant's guilt, the error was harmless given other devastating evidence against defendant; this evidence included the fact that defendant's prior conviction was for murder and that he appeared calm and unemotional after his wife's murder. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6023 (Tex. App. Tyler July 31 2007).

368. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault on a child case, even if the trial court erred by admitting a statement defendant made to a witness regarding young women, the error was harmless; by the time the comment was admitted, the jury had already heard the victim's detailed testimony describing the sexual assault and defendant's wife's testimony regarding defendant's admission that he engaged in, at least, some sexual contact with the victim. Silva v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4720 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 19 2007).

369. Even though the trial court erred by admitting into evidence during defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial photographs of defendant, his co-defendant, and his roommate having sex, appearing to be intoxicated, and flashing a gang sign, the error was harmless because: (1) the photographs of defendant and the two others partying were not scandalous or shocking, but were innocuous in comparison to the photographs of the complainant and other women, who were naked and unconscious; (2) except for one comment during closing arguments, the State did not emphasize the evidence; (3) there was very little contemporaneous testimony concerning the photographs when they were admitted into evidence; and (4) the jury was manifestly able to consider the probative evidence and separate it from marginally relevant evidence because it acquitted the co-defendant and convicted defendant of the lesser-included offense of sexual assault. Casey v. State, 215 S.W.3d 870, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 230 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

370. In a case involving indecency with a child, a trial court erred by admitting photographs of the victim showing weight gain; however, the error was harmless considering the amount of inculpatory evidence against defendant. Dehart v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5111 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2006).

Energy & Utilities Law : Administrative Proceedings : Public Utility Commissions : General Overview

371. Substantial evidence pursuant to Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 2001.174 supported an order of the Public Utility Commission of Texas that raised the fuel factor component of the price-to-beat for an affiliated retail electric provider (AREP) because the Commission linked the measurement of the adequacy of the fuel factor to reflect significant changes in market price and the mechanism to correct inadequacies, and concluded that the New York Mercantile Exchange (NYMEX) was sufficient for both tasks, and because the Commission did not err in barring the order's opponents from presenting relevant evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401 where evidence regarding the AREP's purchase price and any windfall profits resulting from the fuel-factor adjustment did not bear on whether the NYMEX index had changed the requisite amount. Furthermore, the fuel-factor increase did not violate a set limit on the price-to-beat under Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.202 because the adjustments under § 39.202(l) were not limited by § 39.202(p). City of Alvin v. PUC of Tex., 143 S.W.3d 872, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 7685 (Tex. App. Austin 2004).

Environmental Law : Air Quality : Emission Standards : Stationary Sources : New Sources

372. In approving an application for an air quality permit necessary for an applicant to build a pulverized coal power plant, the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality did not err in excluding evidence that the best available control technology (BACT) analysis pursuant to Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 382.0518(b)(1) for a coal-fueled power plant should have included consideration of integrated gasification combined cycle (IGCC) or other coal-conversion processes where the IGCC evidence offered by an opponent of the application was not relevant because the opponent offered no evidence that IGCC was a process that could be applied to the pulverized coal power plant proposed by the applicant. An IGCC process, by which electricity is produced by the burning of gasses extracted from coal to drive turbines that turn electric power generators, is significantly different from the pulverized coal power plant, which produces electricity by burning coal to generate steam that drives a conventional steam-powered turbine, as proposed by the applicant. Blue Skies Alliance v. Tex. Comm'n on Envtl. Quality, 283 S.W.3d 525, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2534 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2009).

Environmental Law : Air Quality : Enforcement : Administrative Proceedings

373. Texas Commission on Environmental Quality did not err under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 382.0518(b)(1) in excluding as not relevant evidence that the best available control technology (BACT) analysis for an air quality permit applicant's coal-fueled power plant should have included consideration of integrated gasification combined cycle (IGCC) where the Commission had appropriately drawn the line between what constituted a control technology that could be applied to the applicant's proposed plant and what constituted a redesign of the proposed plant. An IGCC process was significantly different from the pulverized coal power plant proposed by the applicant, and because an opponent of the application had offered no evidence that IGCC was a process that could be applied to the proposed pulverized coal power plant, it had failed to meet its burden. Blue Skies Alliance v. Tex. Comm'n on Envtl. Quality, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 596, 2009 WL 214340 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 29 2009).

Environmental Law : Air Quality : Preconstruction Permits

374. In approving an application for an air quality permit necessary for an applicant to build a pulverized coal power plant, the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality did not err in excluding evidence that the best available control technology (BACT) analysis pursuant to Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 382.0518(b)(1) for a coal-fueled power plant should have included consideration of integrated gasification combined cycle (IGCC) or other coal-conversion processes where the IGCC evidence offered by an opponent of the application was not relevant because the opponent offered no evidence that IGCC was a process that could be applied to the pulverized coal power plant proposed by the applicant. An IGCC process, by which electricity is produced by the burning of gasses extracted from coal to drive turbines that turn electric power generators, is significantly different from the pulverized coal power plant, which produces electricity by burning coal to generate steam that drives a conventional steam-powered turbine, as proposed by the applicant. Blue Skies Alliance v. Tex. Comm'n on Envtl. Quality, 283 S.W.3d 525, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2534 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 14 2009).

Environmental Law : Air Quality : Prevention of Significant Deterioration

375. Texas Commission on Environmental Quality did not err under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 382.0518(b)(1) in excluding as not relevant evidence that the best available control technology (BACT) analysis for an air quality permit applicant's coal-fueled power plant should have included consideration of integrated gasification combined cycle (IGCC) where the Commission had appropriately drawn the line between what constituted a control technology that could be applied to the applicant's proposed plant and what constituted a redesign of the proposed plant. An IGCC process was significantly different from the pulverized coal power plant proposed by the applicant, and because an opponent of the application had offered no evidence that IGCC was a process that could be applied to the proposed pulverized coal power plant, it had failed to meet its burden. Blue Skies Alliance v. Tex. Comm'n on Envtl. Quality, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 596, 2009 WL 214340 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 29 2009).

Environmental Law : Solid Wastes : Municipal Landfills

376. Experts' conclusory opinions provided no evidence that a child's leukemia was caused by the mother's exposure during pregnancy to benzene from a landfill. Therefore, the testimony was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. City of San Antonio v. Pollock, 284 S.W.3d 809, 2009 Tex. LEXIS 292, 52 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 665 (Tex. 2009).

Estate, Gift & Trust Law : Probate : Procedures in Probate : General Overview

377. In a probate proceeding where the testator's wife contested the testator's daughter inventory of property, the first exhibit the daughters sought to admit into evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401; without either that exhibit or the second exhibit in evidence before the trial court, the trial court could not determine the community property agreement's validity and whether the agreement was enforceable, which were both issues of consequence to the determination of the declaratory judgment action. Haugen v. Olson, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 10495 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 15 2003).

Evidence : Authentication : General Overview

378. In defendant's stalking case, a reasonable fact finder could have found that the telephone number the victim attributed to defendant was his telephone number, and that defendant sent the electronic communications attributed to him by the State and depicted in the challenged exhibits. Accordingly, the challenged exhibits were relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them. Manuel v. State, 357 S.W.3d 66, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7152 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

379. Defendant's taped statements were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the detective participating in the taped conversation testified he was the operator of the recording equipment, it was functioning properly, and that the recording accurately reflected the conversation. Additionally, the tape statements were relevant because they contained defendant's version of the events. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements at his trial. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

Evidence : Authentication : Chain of Custody

380. There was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in admitting a methamphetamine exhibit in a possession trial, even though there was no identification of the exhibit by the store employee who say it fall from defendant, because the uncontroverted evidence established an unbroken chain of custody from the employee who first saw the item, to a manager, to the police officer who identified the item in court. Minze v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1978, 2010 WL 1006394 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 18 2010).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : General Overview

381. In an action in which a trial court awarded more than $ 2 million to a pedestrian for injuries she sustained when she was struck by a city transit bus driven by an employee of a transit authority contractor, the trial court did not err when it admitted into evidence the graphic photographs of the pedestrian's injuries; even though the driver objected to the admission of the photographs, any error was waived by the failure to object to testimony of the conditions depicted in those photographs; at trial, witnesses testified they saw the pedestrian in the crosswalk when she was struck and dragged by the bus, and the orthopedic trauma surgeon who treated the pedestrian when she arrived at the hospital and amputated her leg testified, without objection, about the nature and extent of her injuries. Castro v. Cammerino, 186 S.W.3d 671, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1765 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Admissibility

382. At defendant's murder trial, the court did not err by admitting an autopsy photograph depicting the bullet lodged in the tissue at the back of the victim's neck; the photograph was relevant to the cause of death--a gunshot wound to the head, and manner of death--homicide. Barr v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1714, 2014 WL 641351 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 14 2014).

383. Demonstration in which the prosecutor instructed defendant to stab the air 20 times while the prosecutor positioned himself in the place of the murder victim was relevant because it raised an inference that defendant had a motive to murder his wife. Davis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8372, 2011 WL 5026403 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 20 2011).

384. In a case involving injury to a child, there was no error in the State's admission of a golf club, similar to one found in defendant's apartment, to show that it could have been the type of weapon used to inflict injuries to a victim; the club had some probative value as demonstrative evidence. Lynch v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4107

(Tex. App. Amarillo May 23 2007).

385. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly admitted autopsy photographs of the victim where the photographs were taken before the autopsy procedure began and showed the condition of the body as it was received from the hospital; the photographs showed the bullet wound that testimony indicated was the cause of death, they illustrated that the victim was not otherwise bruised or injured as he would have been if there had been a fight before he was shot, and they showed no more than the nature of the victim's injury. Gray v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2363 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 29 2006).

386. In a capital murder case, a court properly admitted photographs of the victim's corpse where the photographs were probative of the crime scene and the injuries received by the victim, they were necessary for the State in developing its case, and, because they were not overly gruesome, the photographs did not pose the potential of impressing the jury in some irrational way. Shuffield v. State, 189 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 365 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

387. Admission of photos of a sexual assault victim, depicting her at the age she was when the assults allegedly occurred, was relevant to give a perspective on the victim's credibility. Baker v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5842 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2005).

388. Court did not err by admitting an investigation videotape into evidence because, although the content of the video might have been unpleasant to view, it depicted the reality of the brutal crime committed, it contained material that was the subject of testimony presented during the State's case in chief, and it was probative of the fact and manner of the victim's death and defendant's culpable mental state. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4185 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 1 2005).

389. Videotape that was offered as evidence about "the system" and was not offered as information about the capital defendant, or about how the capital defendant might be handled, was not relevant evidence that was admissible during the proceedings against the capital defendant; Tex. R. Evid. 401 defines relevant evidence as evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Sells v. State, 121 S.W.3d 748, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 63 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 986, 124 S. Ct. 511, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 8067 (2003).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Photographs

390. At defendant's murder trial, the court did not err by admitting an autopsy photograph depicting the bullet lodged in the tissue at the back of the victim's neck; the photograph was relevant to the cause of death--a gunshot wound to the head, and manner of death--homicide. Barr v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1714, 2014 WL 641351 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 14 2014).

391. In the murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's objection to a photograph showing the deceased's gang affiliation because the picture depicting a memorial to the deceased did not indicate he was violent and the photograph would have been cumulative. Wilson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 918, 2014 WL 310117 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2014).

392. In the murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's objection to a photograph showing the deceased's gang affiliation because the picture depicting a memorial to the deceased did not indicate he was violent and the photograph would have been cumulative. Wilson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 918, 2014

WL 310117 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2014).

393. In a murder trial, any error was harmless from the admission of photographs showing unusual items found during a search of defendant's home, including a plastic manikin torso and head suspended by a noose around its neck and replica human skulls; the jury had the means to discern whether the items in the photographs represented an obsession with violence or merely poor taste and a penchant for collecting strange things. Kirk v. State, 421 S.W.3d 772, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 788, 2014 WL 252086 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 23 2014).

394. In a murder trial, any error was harmless from the admission of photographs showing unusual items found during a search of defendant's home, including a plastic manikin torso and head suspended by a noose around its neck and replica human skulls; the jury had the means to discern whether the items in the photographs represented an obsession with violence or merely poor taste and a penchant for collecting strange things. Kirk v. State, 421 S.W.3d 772, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 788, 2014 WL 252086 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 23 2014).

395. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a photograph of defendant's back yard taken in 2006 because it showed defendant's knowledge and intent, as some lumber and a yellow chair were in defendant's backyard three years before similar items were added to the waste pile after defendant's encounter with an officer. Mellen v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12091, 2013 WL 5520369 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 26 2013).

396. In a prosecution for evading arrest, the trial court did not err by admitting the State's photographs over defendant's objection under Tex. R. Evid 403 because defendant challenged the officer's version of the events, there was no other evidence except the officers' testimony to establish that defendant refused to comply, and the pictures were not gruesome. King v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11185 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 30 2013).

397. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence photographs of the Sifuentes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8105 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 3 2013).

398. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting graphic photographs depicting the murder victim's injuries into evidence because they were probative of the manner of death and could be interpreted to indicate that the victim was shot twice in the back and that defendant planted the knife in the victim's hand, which was relevant to defendant's claim of self-defense. The court could not say that the probative value of the photographs was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because while the photographic depiction of the entrance wound was no doubt made more gruesome due to postmortem changes, that information was submitted to the jury solely by way of the autopsy report and the State did not focus on the condition of the wound. Rider v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5050 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 25 2013).

399. In a murder trial, there was no error in admitting autopsy photographs because they were highly probative to show the full extent of the victim's injuries and portrayed no more than the gruesomeness of the injuries inflicted. Salazar v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4983, 2012 WL 2357744 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 21 2012).

400. Photograph of a murder victim taken at the crime scene after she had been shot by defendant was properly admitted where: (1) witnesses identified the picture as that of the victim; (2) the photo was not gruesome and showed no indication that the body had been posed or otherwise disturbed; and (3) the jury saw a video that showed the entire episode without objection. The photo simply depicted the result of a violent assault by one person, defendant, on another person, the victim, and the photo's probative value was not substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. Bibbs v. State, 371 S.W.3d 564, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4677, 2012 WL 2135561 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 13 2012).

401. Seven autopsy photographs were properly admitted in a murder trial, even though defendant did not contest the cause of death, because they showed the severely decomposed state of the corpse, which the jury could have concluded contradicted defendant's claim that he cared deeply about her and killed her in sudden passion. Cantu v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1639, 2012 WL 664939 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 1 2012).

402. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court properly admitted autopsy photographs because they were not any more gruesome than what would be expected, the photographs tracked the doctor's testimony, and the photographs depicted the victim's bloody and bruised face and were vital to the State's case to the jury with regard to the manner and method of the victim's death. Gonzalez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 927, 2012 WL 361733 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

403. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting four photographs from the victim's autopsy because they helped the jury understand the extent of the victim's injuries, were demonstrative of defendant's intent, and did not constitute a large part of the pathologist's testimony and the State's case. The photographs were highly relevant and probative and not unfairly prejudicial. Ramirez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 455, 2012 WL 170996 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 19 2012).

404. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 402, the exclusion of the photographs of a witness based on irrelevance was within the trial court's discretion because defense counsel did not establish that the photographs depicted gang activity and only stated that it could show gang signs. Oliva v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 5428965 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2011).

405. In defendant's felony murder case, a court properly admitted a photo of the victim prior to death because it demonstrated the victim's health and physical characteristics, the photo of the victim while alive furnished a basis of contrast and comparison with other photos showing the wounds inflicted by the assault, and the fact that several witnesses identified the victim did not necessarily reduce the probative value of the photo. Flores v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 822, 2010 WL 411747 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 4 2010).

406. In a murder trial, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 in admitting photographs showing the victim's body and injuries from different angles and showing various views of the wounds because the photographs did nothing more than portray the consequences of defendant's actions. Tolopka v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 714 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 31 2010).

407. Picture of spinner rims was properly admitted because it aided the jury in understanding the police officers' testimony about the improvements that defendant made to the rental car he drove for approximately one week; that was helpful to the jury by enabling them to determine if the installation of spinner rims tended to demonstrate defendant's control over the rental car. In addition, a photograph of the spinner rims that were actually installed on the rental car would have been relevant for the same reason and admissible at trial. Rollins v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9891 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 31, 2009).

408. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for racing on a highway in admitting photographs that showed images of high performance additions to defendant's car, including the type of engine and several after-market additions, where the arresting officer testified the additions were commonly added to high-performance vehicles owned by racers to enhance a vehicle's overall performance. Based on the arresting officer's testimony, the photographs were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the alleged racing charge because the photographs had a tendency to make the determination that defendant was racing more or less probable by showing his car had high performance additions commonly used by racing vehicles. Sony v. State, 307 S.W.3d 348, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8688 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 11 2009).

409. In a murder case, autopsy photographs were properly admitted because the State had to prove that defendant caused the victim's death by shooting him with a deadly weapon, and a doctor's testimony described the type of injuries the victim received, the extent of those injuries, and the cause of his death. Additionally, although the photographs were somewhat gruesome, they were not enlarged. Ramirez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6640, 2009 WL 4377427 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

410. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed photographs of the victim to be admitted because the medical examiner who performed the autopsy stated that photographs of the child's body before and during the autopsy would assist him in describing his findings to the jury, the testimony was probative of the child's condition at the time defendant brought the child to a witness's house, and the testimony demonstrated the scope and extent of the child's injuries and the cause of death. Williams v. State, 294 S.W.3d 674, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4201 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 11 2009).

411. In defendant's injury to a child case, the court did not err in admitting photographs of the child because a deputy testified to his initial observations of the child before being life-flighted to the burn center; the boy had a large knot on the left side of his head and blood coming out of his nose. The photos were clearly relevant and needed by the State to rebut defendant's statements denying causing any other injuries to the child and defendant's claim of accidental injury. Smith v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 401, 2009 WL 1941999 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 22 2009).

412. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly admitted photographs because the exhibits constituted only two photographs and depicted nothing more than the reality of the brutal crime committed. The victim's body was clothed, and they were not extreme close-up shots. Badgett v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 342, 2009 WL 142324 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 21 2009).

413. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of defendant holding a pistol during his trial for possessing more than four grams of cocaine with intent to deliver and for possessing more than four ounces of marihuana where the photograph was relevant because it made it more probable that defendant knowingly possessed both the contraband and the pistol, and where that relevance was not outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice because no significant amount of time was required to introduce the photograph. Furthermore, even though the photograph had the potential for impressing the jury in an improper way pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) by suggesting that defendant was the sort of person who brandished a pistol during a telephone conversation, by linking defendant to the pistol found in the night stand of his motel room, albeit indirectly, the photograph was some evidence that defendant used the pistol to protect his drugs and money, and the State's only other evidence of such use, beyond defendant's simple possession of the weapon, was a police officer's testimony describing defendant's ambiguous movements when the officers entered his motel room. Rangel v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9008 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 5 2008).

414. In a capital murder case, the court properly admitted two photographs because the photographs bolstered a State witness's testimony that testifying as a "snitch" had detrimental consequences -- injury to his sister, the photographs presented little, if any, prejudice to defendant because no party suggested to the jury that defendant was connected to the stabbing of the witness's sister, and the time involved in the introduction of the two photographs was minimal and unlikely to distract the jury from considering the charged offense when compared to having the witness's sister testify before the jury. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

415. Defendant's arrest photo was properly admitted as relevant on the question of identification because defendant looked very different from how he looked in the courtroom. Defendant raised only a relevancy objection at trial and did not preserve his argument based on Tex. R. Evid. 403. Avendano v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS

5832 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31, 2008).

416. In a murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs of the victim at the crime scene because some of the photographs were used by the experts to explain the manner of the death and the amount of force used by defendant when hitting the victim with the baseball bat, tending to disprove his self-defense claim; other photographs, along with the testimony of the blood-spatter expert, addressed the absence of any struggle between the victim and defendant and that the victim was either on his knees or on the ground while being beaten, while some photographs depicted the brutality of the crime and the severity of the injuries and were probative of the manner of the victim's death. Grayson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2210 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 27 2008).

417. In a murder trial, there was no error in admitting an eighth grade photograph of the 17-year-old victim, shown with several school friends, as proof of identity; the victim's parent testified that the picture depicted what the victim looked like just prior to death. Hornsby v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 345 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 16 2008).

418. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence defendant's book-in photograph because defendant did not object at trial or complain of an improperly suggestive photographic identification procedure by the State; the photograph was not prejudicial merely because defendant had an "angry look;" the photograph, which was used by a witness during her deposition to identify defendant as the perpetrator, was relevant as identity was an essential element of any criminal offense. King v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 8766 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2007).

419. Trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 403 in admitting photographs of the victim's body in a capital murder case because they were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and were highly probative to show the victim's injuries and the specific circumstances of the murder. Gallo v. State, 239 S.W.3d 757, 2007 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1234 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007).

420. In a trial for intoxication assault arising from a car crash caused by defendant, there was no error in admitting photographs that showed, in graphic detail, the complainant's injuries, which included damage such that the complainant's liver was extruding from the complainant's body; the photographs were relevant to explain the nature of the injuries and the procedures used to treat the complainant, and, while undoubtedly explicit, they were not more emotionally loaded than any usual clinical photograph of a patient who sustained serious wounds. Strickland v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7383 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 11 2007).

421. Trial court properly admitted a photograph of a murder victim and his family because it was relevant to show a true appearance of the victim before his death, and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. While it showed the family smiling, the photograph was not the type that would impress the jury in an irrational but indelible way, no mention was made of the photograph during closing argument, and only one mention was made of the victim's children. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6256 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2007).

422. Defendant objected that certain photographs and his wallet were irrelevant and should not have been admitted into evidence; however, defendant did not attempt to explain how the wallet and pictures harmed him, other than to generally say that harm was evidenced by his lengthy punishment. That explanation is insufficient; thus, defendant's complaints with regard to those exhibits were overruled. Arnold v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2187 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 22 2007).

423. During the punishment of defendant's trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing testimony and photographs of the victim's injuries to show defendant committed the enhancement offense of a prior aggravated robbery under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.03; evidence establishing that defendant inflicted "serious bodily injury" upon his victim was an essential part of the State's proof of the enhancement offense; the photographs were relevant and highly probative. Thompson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 57 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 5 2007).

424. In a murder trial, photographs of the deceased were properly introduced into evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401, even though they showed the gruesome appearance of the body, which was badly burned in arson, because the photographs showed the position of stab wounds that caused death; although graphic, the photographs did not inject any additional, intangible, or inappropriate emotional element into the case such that the trial court should have necessarily excluded these photographs. Ledbetter v. State, 208 S.W.3d 723, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10040 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2006).

425. During a murder trial, the victim's mother identified a photograph of her son taken before the murder; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the photograph; the mother's identification had probative value in identifying the son as the victim. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7556 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 25 2006).

426. Where defendant was on trial for possessing or transporting chemicals with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine, the trial court did not err in admitting photographs which showed a vapor cloud spraying from canisters found in defendant's car over defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection as they were not so alarming in nature that they would have clouded the jury's mind with fear; instead, they provided a visual depiction of the disposal methods described through police testimony, and were relevant to police officers' belief that the canisters contained anhydrous ammonia. Daigger v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5846 (Tex. App. Austin July 7 2006).

427. In a case involving indecency with a child, a trial court erred by admitting photographs of the victim showing weight gain; however, the error was harmless considering the amount of inculpatory evidence against defendant. Dehart v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5111 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2006).

428. In an aggravated assault of a peace officer case, the trial court did not err in admitting the photographs of the officer, whose injuries were the basis for the arrest warrant, as the State did not wilfully withhold the photographs, defendant did not contend that he was surprised or otherwise disadvantaged by the introduction of the photographs, and whether defendant assaulted the officer was not at issue. Dunklin v. State, 194 S.W.3d 14, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 3596 (Tex. App. Tyler 2006).

429. Videotape of a driver's performance on field sobriety tests can be sufficient evidence to support probable cause to proceed with an arrest for driving while intoxicated. The reviewing court assumed that such a video, which was introduced in the trial court as permitted by Tex. R. Evid. 401, 1001, supported a probable cause finding where defendant failed to include the video in the record and the trial court did not file findings of fact. Amador v. State, 187 S.W.3d 543, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2090 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2006).

430. Where defendant, a large Caucasian man, was accused of burglarizing the homes of two Hispanic families, photographs of defendant's tattoos were admissible as evidence of defendant's selfishness and his impact on the victims. The photographs were not admissible to establish that defendant's race would make him more likely to engage in future criminal conduct. Hicks v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10663 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 28 2005).

431. Admission of photos of a sexual assault victim, depicting her at the age she was when the assults allegedly occurred, was relevant to give a perspective on the victim's credibility. Baker v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5842 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 26 2005).

432. In a trial for burglary, a photograph of the victim's daughter was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403, even though the daughter was not present. The small, studio-quality photograph was not unduly prejudicial, and it was relevant because the victim, defendant's former girlfriend, testified that her conduct toward defendant was motivated by the desire to protect her young daughter from confrontation. Wight v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4334 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 7 2005).

433. Photographs of a murder victim were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and were not unduly prejudicial to defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because a photograph of the victim lying in an ambulance immediately after firefighters removed her body from a burning house was both material and probative, as it established her condition at the crime scene, and because a photograph of her face taken during autopsy was also material and probative of the fact that the autopsy was performed on the same person removed from the crime scene by ambulance. The numerous autopsy photographs were also probative of the victim's cause of death, a material element in the offense of capital murder, and although the detail in the photographs was graphic, each served the purpose of illustrating the nature and extent of the victim's injuries. Vargas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2417 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 31 2005).

434. Court properly admitted autopsy photos because, although they were gruesome, they were no more gruesome than the injuries that defendant inflicted upon the victim when he committed the offense of intoxication manslaughter. Each of the six photographs depicted a different view of the victim and showed the different injuries that she suffered, and the State did not offer a large number of photographs, nor were the photographs it offered cumulative of the victim's injuries. Booth v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2351, 2014 WL 887286 (Tex. App. Eastland Feb. 28 2014).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Recordings

435. In a capital murder case, a trial court did not violate defendant's right to due process or right to present a defense by excluding a digital video disk (DVD) from evidence because defendant was able to present an effective defense and place the credibility of the witness into question without the admission of the DVD recording. Moreover, the only showing made by defendant concerning the DVD's relevance was that the DVD contained additional statements made by the witness that were similar to those made at trial; therefore, the DVD added nothing to the defense, and its exclusion was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Gonzalez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8954 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 3 2008).

436. In a capital-murder trial, the perpetrator's videotaped statement, which was relevant and probative to the State's case, was not improperly admitted over the perpetrator's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection, since the perpetrator did not overcome the presumption that the evidence was more probative than prejudicial since he admitted his direct involvement in causing at least one of the victim's stab wounds and starting the fire in her bedroom. Mata v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4505 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 7 2007).

Evidence : Demonstrative Evidence : Visual Formats

437. In a drug trial, video excerpts from a seized camera were properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, because they were material to the issues of possession-with-intent-to-deliver a controlled substance and a deadly weapon finding, in that they placed defendant in a drug house around the money and guns. They were not unduly prejudicial because they did not show actual drug dealing. Mincey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2825, 2009 WL 1058734 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 21 2009).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : General Overview

438. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : Business Records : Normal Course of Business

439. In the State's action under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA) that alleged that appellants, a husband and wife who operated a business assisting Spanish speaking individuals with immigration matters, had counseled consumers without legal authorization or qualification, appellants raised no valid complaints regarding the admissibility of the evidence and the trial court's rulings thereon where an exhibit consisting of a summary of the more than 2,180 G-28 forms filed by the husband was itself a business record entitled to be treated as other business records, making Tex. R. Evid. 1006 inapplicable, and where the testimony of an intelligence research specialist with the Citizenship and Immigration Services Branch of the United States Department of Homeland Security established the necessary predicate required by Tex. R. Evid. 803(6) because the specialist testified that the exhibit was a business record made in the ordinary course of business at Citizenship and Immigration Services, made at or near the time his department received the G-28 forms, by a person with knowledge of the events being recorded; furthermore, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a previous client of appellants who was testifying for the State to answer when asked if she obtained her residency status because any testimony going to the gravity of the harm done by engaging in the prohibited act was irrelevant and inadmissible. Avila v. State, 252 S.W.3d 632, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2270 (Tex. App. Tyler 2008).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exceptions : State of Mind : General Overview

440. Daughter's statements in her affidavit signed two days after the night her mother came to pick her up were not statements of her then existing state of mind or spontaneous remarks made while a sensation was being experienced such that they were admissible; the affidavit containing the daughter's statements in a conservatorship proceeding nearly two years prior to her death were not relevant to the damages suffered by the father due to the loss of his daughter's companionship and society. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Confessions : General Overview

441. During the punishment phase of a criminal trial where defendant was charged with endangering a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence from defendant's ex-boyfriend who was convicted of sexually assaulting defendant's daughter since the probative value of the confession was not substantially outweighed by its prejudice. Naivar v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4883 (Tex. App. Tyler May 28 2004).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Confessions : Corpus Delicti Doctrine

442. Trial court did not err during defendant's murder trial in admitting extraneous offense evidence of defendant's theft of a truck because the evidence was not relevant just to show character conformity, but was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to corroborate defendant's confession to police, in which he stated that he stole a green truck from a certain location and then drove that truck to the victim's home, where he then committed the murder. At trial, the State was able to corroborate that portion of defendant's confession by introducing evidence from a witness that his green truck had been stolen on the same day and from the same location as defendant indicated in his confession, and a police officer confirmed that he wrote a report for a stolen truck by the witness at the same time and location as described by defendant in his confession. Shuff v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5469 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 2 2013).

Evidence : Hearsay : Exemptions : Statements by Party Opponents : General Overview

443. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements defendant made in a letter concerning the murder because the statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as they were admissible as admissions of a party opponent. The statements were relevant because in the letter defendant did not claim, as he did at trial, that the shooting was accidental, and they were not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, as the statements supported the State's contention that defendant intentionally shot the victim, it related to defendant's state of mind which was a central issue at trial, and the letter was brief and not cumulative of other evidence. Benitez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9871, 2011 WL 6306643 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

444. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a tattoo of "187" on defendant's hand as a statement that defendant committed murder pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) because the record showed that defendant did not have the tattoo on the night of the shooting, it was placed on him after he was in jail in connection with the underlying murder charge, and went to his state of mind at the time of the shooting and clarified the circumstances surrounding the shooting. It was clear from the placement of the tattoo on his hand that it was an open and obvious statement he wanted everyone to see and it directly contradicted his defensive theory that he acted in self defense. Salazar v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6835, 2011 WL 3770297 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26 2011).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : General Overview

445. Messages retrieved from a murder victim's voicemail were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801 and were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted therein and they assisted the jury in establishing the time of the victim's death. White v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2224 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 23 2006).

Evidence : Hearsay : Rule Components : Truth of Matter Asserted

446. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not permitting defendant to cross-examine a detective about statements allegedly made by a third party during the murder investigation because the statements could not provide defendant with a defense to the capital murder charge unless the jury believed the statements, as they were offered to prove that the third party, not defendant, was the last person to see the victim alive. Therefore, the statements were hearsay, and because defendant did not argue that they were admissible under a hearsay exception, they were inadmissible. Tilford v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5933, 2011 WL 3273543 (Tex. App. El Paso July 29 2011).

Evidence : Inferences & Presumptions : Inferences

447. In a trial for possession hydromorphone, it was proper to admit unsealed and opened vials of medicine to support an inference that defendant's possession was not a one-time mistake. Moore v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5823, 2014 WL 2521537 (Tex. App. Tyler May 30 2014).

Evidence : Judicial Notice : Adjudicative Facts : Facts Generally Known

448. There was substantial evidence that the driver's violation of the ordinance occurred within the city limits because the administrative law judge could have reasonably inferred from the evidence that the sergeant witnessed the driver peel out inside the city limits or it could have taken judicial notice of the fact that the incident took place in the city. Tex. Dep't of Pub. Safety v. Botsford, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2649, 2014 WL 902567 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 7 2014).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Curative Admissibility

449. Defendant's statement to police that he had, 20 years earlier, been accused of improper conduct with his former stepdaughter, was not relevant to prove defendant's intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and it was unduly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Defendant did not "open the door" to admission of the statement, Tex. R. Evid. 107, by responding to a question by the State. However, given the evidence of guilt, the error was harmless. Cressman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9849, 2012 WL 5974013 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 29 2012).

450. Evidence of defendant's prior conviction for delivering drugs was admissible where, through his questioning of a defense witness, defense counsel had sought to paint defendant as a "white knight" not involved with drugs, thereby creating a false impression before the jury; by doing so, defendant opened the door to testimony to correct that false impression, and the prosecutor could only correct that false impression by cross-examination of the witness who created it. Jones v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7917 (Tex. App. Dallas Sept. 5 2006).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutor

451. In a criminal prosecution for capital murder, the trial court did not err by allowing the prosecutor's questions regarding the possible exchange of sexual favors for forgiveness of a drug debt; the evidence was admissible to show the relationship between defendant and the victim. Whitmire v. State, 183 S.W.3d 522, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

452. In a murder case, the prosecutor's affidavit regarding trial strategy was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401and Tex. R. Evid. 602 at a new trial hearing because it addressed the issue of effective assistance and included some statements made from personal knowledge; defendant did not seek to limit the scope of the affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Shanklin v. State, 190 S.W.3d 154, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

453. Where defendant was charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child, the State's expert to give expert opinion testimony as to the truthfulness of the complaining witness. The defense opened the door to the testimony by questioning the expert about the manipulation of children who make allegations of sexual abuse. Johnson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7412 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2005).

454. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence extraneous offense evidence, specifically, nine other images of children engaged in types of sexual conduct, because (1) a jury could find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant knowingly and intentionally possessed the additional nine images of child pornography; (2) the extraneous offenses made it more probable that defendant intentionally possessed the one image for which he was indicted; (3) the extraneous offenses were relevant to rebut the defensive theory of mistake; and (4) the probative value of the evidence outweighed the possibility of unfair prejudice. Boyd v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6907 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 25 2005).

455. In a murder case in which defendant shot and killed one of the occupants of a car that approached his house, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence of marijuana blunts in the victim's car because that evidence was irrelevant. Richardson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4342 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 8 2005).

456. In a murder case in which defendant shot and killed one of the occupants of a car that approached his house, a rifle belonging to defendant's brother was relevant evidence because the trial court's charge authorized the jury to convict defendant under the law of parties and the rifle showed the context in which the shooting occurred.

Richardson v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4342 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 8 2005).

457. In a case of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony of the complaining witness and two other children about extraneous acts by defendant; although defendant argued that the testimony was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it was not necessary to prove elements of the offense that were essentially uncontested, such as identity, intent, plan, preparation, and opportunity, the evidence was relevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2 to show defendant's intentions toward the complaining witness. Nesby v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3379 (Tex. App. Austin May 5 2005).

458. Defendant forfeited consideration of his argument that the monetary value of cocaine was not an element of his possession offense and was, therefore, irrelevant because the street value of rock-cocaine was admitted before the jury without objection earlier in the trial. Broussard v. State, 163 S.W.3d 312, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3382 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

459. Where defendant was charged with possession with intent to deliver cocaine after police searched him as a suspect in a nearby shooting, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the spent bullet from evidence. A defense theory that the shots were fired by men who placed the cocaine in defendant's pockets while he was unconscious was mere speculation. Seay v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2048 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 17 2005).

460. In a criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault, defendant's statement about robbing someone was part of a continuum of activity beginning with his presence in the victim's apartment. The statement was offered to assist the jury in identifying defendant as the perpetrator; the trial court properly admitted the statement. Williams v. State, 161 S.W.3d 680, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2014 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

461. Defendant's taped statements were properly authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901 because the detective participating in the taped conversation testified he was the operator of the recording equipment, it was functioning properly, and that the recording accurately reflected the conversation. Additionally, the tape statements were relevant because they contained defendant's version of the events. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statements at his trial. Raveiro v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 218 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

462. Where defendant was charged with the murder of her ex-boyfriend's new girlfriend, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a letter written by defendant to her ex-boyfriend. In the letter, defendant described the intensity of her feelings for him and her concern about the possibility of his philandering. Defendant's statements proved that she had a motive to kill the complainant. Harris v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 346 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 13 2005).

463. Where defendant was tried for murdering the victim in exchange for his wife's promise for a share of the insurance proceeds, the State's failure to charge the wife was irrelevant to the credibility of the State's key witness, defendant's girlfriend. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the proffered impeachment evidence. Day v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6238 (Tex. App. Austin July 15 2004).

464. In a child sexual abuse case, where defendant sought to introduce evidence of letters written by one of the victims, which allegedly discussed sexual topics, to show that the victim was not innocent, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit the letters since the letters were written after the abuse had occurred. Whitehorn v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 6373 (Tex. App. Waco July 14 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 67, 163

465. Defendant argued that the trial court erred by excluding evidence relating to his strained marital relationship with the victim because that evidence was probative of his state of mind and motivation at the time of his actions; however, because the only conduct elements potentially implicated for the crime of aggravated assault were the nature of the conduct and the result of the conduct, the circumstances surrounding the conduct were not relevant and were properly excluded. Novillo v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 5086 (Tex. App. Austin June 10 2004).

466. Relevance of an allegation of sexual assault on a minor made over two years after the one at bar, without more, was extremely minimal, and under those circumstances, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence. Keith v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4450 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2004).

467. Relevance of an allegation of sexual assault on a minor made over two years after the one at bar, without more, was extremely minimal, and under those circumstances, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence. Keith v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4450 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 18 2004).

468. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not err by admitting the kitchen knife used in the assault into evidence because the knife was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to prove the allegation that defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon, and was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it did not have an undue tendency to suggest that a decision be made on an improper basis. Hardy v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3214 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2004).

469. In trial for the aggravated kidnapping of a two-year-old girl, the trial court's decision to admit the evidence about defendant purchasing a condom the night before the kidnapping was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. The evidence about defendant's condom purchase tended to make the existence of a material fact, that defendant had planned to sexually assault the victim during the kidnapping, more probable than it would have been without the evidence; thus, the evidence was relevant and admissible. Howe v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2417 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 16 2004).

470. Videotape that was offered as evidence about "the system" and was not offered as information about the capital defendant, or about how the capital defendant might be handled, was not relevant evidence that was admissible during the proceedings against the capital defendant; Tex. R. Evid. 401 defines relevant evidence as evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Sells v. State, 121 S.W.3d 748, 2003 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 63 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 986, 124 S. Ct. 511, 2003 U.S. LEXIS 8067 (2003).

471. Subject to certain exceptions, all relevant evidence is admissible in a criminal prosecution under Tex. R. Evid. 402, and 401; "relevant evidence" means evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Haliburton v. State, 80 S.W.3d 309, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

472. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence that the two men, who defendant was with when he was arrested, were involved in a robbery a short time before the arrest, because it was within the zone of reasonable disagreement whether the robbery was so intertwined with the stop and arrest that the jury's understanding of the offense would have been obscured without it. Haliburton v. State, 80 S.W.3d 309, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 4822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

473. Officer's testimony that the quantity of marijuana recovered from the defendant's vehicle indicated that it was possessed for resale rather than for personal use was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 403 and Tex. R. Evid. 401. Gallegos v. State, 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 5042 (Tex. App. Dallas July 9 1999).

474. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 402, finding a piece of evidence to be relevant is the first step in a trial court's determination of whether the evidence should be admitted before the jury. Montgomery v. State, 810 S.W.2d 372, 1990 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 90 (Tex. Crim. App. 1990).

475. Relevancy is defined to be that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis--a pertinent hypothesis being one which, if sustained would logically influence the issue. Hence it is relevant to put in evidence any circumstance which tends to make the proposition at issue more or less probable. Montgomery v. State, 810 S.W.2d 372, 1990 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 90 (Tex. Crim. App. 1990).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Judicial Intervention in Trials : Comments by Judges : Limitations

476. In a suit on a sworn account brought by a law firm to recover its legal fees, the trial court questioned the law firm's principal witness to establish that the underlying legal matter was settled. The trial court acted within its discretion in attempting to limit the jury's exposure to needless and possibly confusing or misleading evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403; the trial court did not impermissibly comment on the weight of the evidence. Alam v. Wilshire & Scott, P.C., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5501 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Limited Admissibility

477. In a defamation action, a trial court did not err by admitting daily logs as business records for the limited purpose of whether a prudent investigation of complaints was conducted by an executive director of an independent living facility prior to banning a service provider; the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, and the logs were relevant because the bore on the directors motivation and state of mine and a substantial truth defense. Collins v. Sunrise Senior Living Mgmt., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2457, 2012 WL 1067953 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 29 2012).

478. In a murder case, the prosecutor's affidavit regarding trial strategy was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401and Tex. R. Evid. 602 at a new trial hearing because it addressed the issue of effective assistance and included some statements made from personal knowledge; defendant did not seek to limit the scope of the affidavit pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 105(a). Shanklin v. State, 190 S.W.3d 154, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 10675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2005).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Objections

479. On appeal of defendant's murder conviction, his complaint that the trial court abused its discretion by overruling his Rule 401 relevancy objection to three of the State's exhibits was not preserved for review. His appellate brief lacked a legal argument supported by authority asserting how the trial court abused its discretion or how the evidence to which he objected was irrelevant. Green v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14355 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 22 2013).

480. Buyer of imported vehicles failed to preserve its objection to a composite exhibit consisting of sales contracts and an invoice, although one contract showed a seller other than the plaintiff seller, by failing to specify which parts were inadmissible as irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Sunl Group, Inc. v. Zhejiang Yongkang Top Imp. & Exp. Co., 394 S.W.3d 812, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 832, 2013 WL 326324 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2013).

481. In a murder case, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant the opportunity to question an eyewitness about her experience with burning people to establish her as an alternate perpetrator. With little details regarding the alleged past conduct, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

482. Victim's brother testified that he was riding in the car with defendant when they saw a police car turn onto the street going the same direction they were driving; defendant became very nervous and when the police attempted to stop them, defendant sped away; when the victim's brother asked defendant why he did not stop, defendant told him there was a warrant for his arrest for touching the victim; thus, defendant did not show that his flight from the police was connected to some other transaction, and not with the indecency with a child offense, and, therefore, the trial court properly overruled defendant's objection that his flight from the police was not relevant to his indecency with a child offense. Mestas v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6947 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 29 2007).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Objections & Offers of Proof : Offers of Proof

483. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err in excluding his offer of proof at trial concerning an earlier outcry of sexual abuse by the victim regarding another individual because the testimony of the victim's mother in defendant's offer of proof provided only indirect evidence of any statement by the child. Although it was clear from the mother's testimony that she believed defendant's sister was coaching the child in the 2001 incident, no evidence showed that the specific statement attributed to the victim, then five years old, was false. Gonzales v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1435, 2009 WL 498032 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2009).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Preliminary Questions : General Overview

484. In making the initial determination of admissibility of evidence, Texas courts must apply the principles set forth in the evidentiary rules governing relevancy under Tex. R. Evid. 401- 403; to meet the relevancy test, the proffered evidence must, first, have probative value, and second, be of consequence to some issue in the trial under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

Evidence : Procedural Considerations : Rulings on Evidence

485. Trial court had not erred by excluding defendant's testimony regarding his attorney's advice and why defendant had left the country where the proffered testimony was immaterial, and therefore inadmissible, because it was not shown to be addressed to the proof of a material proposition. Claudio v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3818, 2012 WL 1656328 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

486. Court did not err in excluding all of defendant's proffered evidence at sentencing, because defendant did not separate the admissible evidence from the inadmissible evidence. Fegans v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2588, 2010 WL 1571217 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2010).

487. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions to continue his indecency with a child trial so that he could flesh out allegations in a report to child protective services (CPS) that the victim (who was four years old at the time) was "purging" at home and in school and was caught by her uncle in bed with her four-year-old cousin's head between her legs, which allegations defendant believed were exculpatory where defendant's argument was founded on a defective factual basis because nothing in the CPS report exculpated him; nothing in the report suggested that defendant did not molest the child as alleged in the indictment, even if the circumstances mentioned in the report were deemed true, but, rather, the circumstances described (when intertwined with imagination) suggested that the child could have been the victim of other molestation at the hands of unknown parties, or so a reasonable jurist could have interpreted the circumstances. Reder v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2624 (Tex. App.

Amarillo Apr. 10 2008).

488. On appeal of a conviction of misdemeanor theft, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's objection to the offender's question concerning profit margin in her inquiry as to the value of stolen retail property because the offender did not point to any offer of proof as required by Tex. R. Evid. 103, and the substance of the evidence she sought to offer was not apparent; thus, she forfeited her issue pursuant to Tex. R. App. P. 33; moreover, had she preserved her complaint, the trial court did not err; the offender complained that the trial court should not have sustained the State's relevance objection, but evidence that the victim had a profit margin did not tend to rebut the fact that the victim's sales price was at a fair market value. Smith v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5880 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2007).

489. Where defendant used a car jack to strike the hood of the complainant's SUV, the arresting officer was permitted to testify that $1500 was the estimated cost of repairing the damage based on his years of experience with criminal mischief cases; the officer also testified that the body shop's repair estimate was $ 1,530.01. Barnes v. State, 248 S.W.3d 217, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4261 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

490. Trial court did not err in not admitting an entire tape that included threatening phone calls from the victim, defendant's former wife, because defendant sought to admit the entire tape, and the messages on the tape that were unidentified had no relevance as to the victim and her alleged motives, and lacked a proper predicate for admission under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, and 404(b). Davis v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3649 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 12 2005).

491. Fact that a witness might have suffered a shoulder injury as a result of the accident did not tend to make the parents' allegation that their son suffered a shoulder injury as a result of the accident more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; thus, the witness's testimony was irrelevant under Tex. Evid. R. 401 and was properly excluded. Therefore, the trial court did not err in denying the parents' motion for a new trial. McGaffigan v. Mora, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4697 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 26 2004).

492. Trial court properly excluded evidence of a witness's mental health problems under Tex. R. Evid. 401 where there was no reasonable logical nexus connecting the ability of the witness to observe the details of an assault and communicate those details to the police and the witness's mental health problems. The evidence concerning the mental health problems of the witness was therefore not relevant. Goodwin v. State, 91 S.W.3d 912, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 8455 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2002).

Evidence : Relevance : General Overview

493. In a premises liability lawsuit, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in compelling discovery of two incident reports where its order was narrowly tailored to limit discovery to a period of three years, to the particular store where the underlying injury occurred, to the parking lot of that store, and to trip and falls. Although those incidents did not involve cart corrals, plaintiff broadly alleged that the store was negligent and failed to use ordinary care in maintaining the premises in a reasonably safe condition and free of hazards and thus, the reports were relevant and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. In re H.E.B. Grocery Co., L.P., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1777, 2014 WL 700749 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 18 2014).

494. In a case in which defendant was convicted of indecency with a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by limiting defendant's cross-examination of the victim's mother. Evidence that a male friend died of a drug overdose while in the mother's home was irrelevant to whether the mother had any ill feeling, bias, motive, interest, or animus that would lead her to fabricate allegations against defendant. Utkov v. State, 2012 Tex. App.

LEXIS 8147, 2012 WL 4470910 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 26 2012).

495. In a possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver case, as the additional evidence regarding the procedures that officers should employ in their task force manual when dealing with a confidential informant would have been a collateral matter, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for new trial; because the evidence related to an issue regarding the identity of an informant, it was irrelevant in that it did not address defendant's guilt. Cortez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4998 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 8 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Character Evidence

496. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of a tattoo on defendant's chest which read "murder is my motive" during sentencing because the tattoo was relevant to his character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9477 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

497. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of a tattoo on defendant's chest which read "murder is my motive" during sentencing because the tattoo was relevant to his character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9479 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

498. At the punishment phase of a criminal trial, evidence of defendant's tattoos could be presented as character evidence. Likewise, his choice of tattoos could demonstrate a motive for his crime. Albarado v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5471, 2009 WL 2055947 (Tex. App. Eastland July 16 2009).

499. Court did not err by refusing to allow defense counsel to cross-examine a police officer about prior incidents in which the officer allegedly used excessive force because the officer's character was not an essential element of the charge, claim, or defense to attempting to take a weapon from a peace officer, and the proffered testimony was not material because it did not address any fact of importance to the outcome of the action. Rico v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4141, 2009 WL 1623343 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 11 2009).

500. In a trial for interfering with the lawful custody of a child, proffered character testimony was irrelevant on its face because whether defendants had ever helped other children in the past was not evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that was of consequence more or less probable. Little v. State, 246 S.W.3d 391, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1126 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2008).

501. Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's testimony about incidents of property damage that were not included in the stalking indictment, which included testimony that someone piled her trash in front of her door, flipped her breaker box, flooded her yard, damaged her yard decorations, pulled down an outside light fixture, cut her satellite cable, and spray-painted her gate, because (1) the evidence was not improper character evidence under Tex. Evid. R. 404(a) as the victim never claimed that defendant committed the acts; and (2) the victim's testimony that the offenses against her property had occurred was relevant to establishing her state of mind at the time of the events in the stalking indictment. Marsh v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 3620 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 22 2004).

Evidence : Relevance : Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

502. In a firefighter's action alleging intentional failure to implement relief granted to him by a grievance examiner, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence of a demand letter because it was irrelevant. City of Houston v. Jackson, 135 S.W.3d 891, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2942 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2004), reversed by 192 S.W.3d 764, 2006 Tex. LEXIS 258, 49 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 492, 152 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P60178 (Tex. 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Compromise & Settlement Negotiations

503. With respect to breach of contract and promissory estoppel claims, a letter written in connection with the settlement of an unrelated lawsuit was relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 as proof of an agreement to pay a claimed sum; hence, it was not barred by Tex. R. Evid. 408. MG Bldg. Materials, Ltd. v. Moses Lopez Custom Homes, Inc., 179 S.W.3d 51, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5796 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

504. In a drug case, in light of the offense charged and the evidence adduced at trial, the evidence that defendant possessed a bogus license did not unfairly prejudice the jury or confuse the issues. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence. Gregory v. State, 159 S.W.3d 254, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1660 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

Evidence : Relevance : Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

505. Appellant's conviction for felony theft was affirmed because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence where nothing about the other individual's arrest for the January 30 break-in made any facts of consequence to the determination of appellant's guilt or innocence in the January 25 theft any more or less probable. Graves v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6522 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 17 2014).

506. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's shirts with gun shot residue particles on them because the evidence was relevant, as the shirts were collected from defendant's vehicle two days after the murder. The evidence was not prejudicial because it showed defendant's connection to a discharged weapon, directly or indirectly, at some point in time. Burks v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3243, 2014 WL 1285731 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2014).

507. Exclusion of testimony by defendant's wife, who was also the complainant's older sister, regarding alleged prior sexual abuse by the complainant's father was proper because it would have confused or distracted the jury from the main issue-whether defendant perpetrated the crimes against the complainant-and would have been more prejudicial than probative. The complainant, who was twenty-three at the time of trial, positively identified defendant, and no one else, as the perpetrator of the charged offenses, and when questioned outside the presence of the jury, the complainant denied any sexual abuse at the hands of her father. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1369, 2014 WL 505332 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 6 2014).

508. Evidence that defendant on trial for reckless injury to his five-week-old daughter previously put a blanket tip into the victim's mouth to quiet her cries was properly admitted as a prior bad act because it was relevant to the issue of his intent to harm the victim and to demonstrate the character of his relationship with her; the evidence's probative value outweighed its unfair prejudice because there was little danger it would impress on the jury in some irrational way, it took little time to develop, and the State needed it to prove defendant's mental state. Sanchez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 896, 2014 WL 298322 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

509. In the murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's objection to a photograph showing the deceased's gang affiliation because the picture depicting a memorial to the deceased did not indicate he was violent and the photograph would have been cumulative. Wilson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 918, 2014 WL 310117 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2014).

510. Evidence that defendant on trial for reckless injury to his five-week-old daughter previously put a blanket tip into the victim's mouth to quiet her cries was properly admitted as a prior bad act because it was relevant to the issue of his intent to harm the victim and to demonstrate the character of his relationship with her; the evidence's probative value outweighed its unfair prejudice because there was little danger it would impress on the jury in some irrational way, it took little time to develop, and the State needed it to prove defendant's mental state. Sanchez v.

State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 896, 2014 WL 298322 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

511. In the murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's objection to a photograph showing the deceased's gang affiliation because the picture depicting a memorial to the deceased did not indicate he was violent and the photograph would have been cumulative. Wilson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 918, 2014 WL 310117 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2014).

512. Defendant suffered no harm from the admission of evidence of a prior offense of aggravated assault/family violence against the same victim because, by his plea, defendant admitted he had a dating relationship with the victim, and the State only referenced the exhibit in its final argument to show a dating relationship between defendant and the victim. Pickett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15410, 2013 WL 6923977 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 27 2013).

513. Trial court did not err in admitting testimony showing that defendant was the driver of a vehicle involved in a drive-by shooting four days before the alleged victim was shot because the evidence was probative to show opportunity and identity and to rebut defendant's defensive theory that he was not the perpetrator, and there was nothing confusing or misleading about the evidence. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14602, 2013 WL 6253764 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

514. State was properly permitted to use a demonstrative exhibit of a photograph of two capsules of a prescription drug because it had unmistakable relevance, as it corroborated the victim's testimony, and it had little to no inflammatory effect unrelated to its probative value; the evidence tended to solve an issue in the case by shedding some light on the subject at hand-the drug that was given to the victim and her half-brothers to make them sleepy so that defendant could commit the child sexual assualt offenses against the victim. Ruiz v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14013, 2013 WL 6047030 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 14 2013).

515. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence because in light of the defensive theory to attack State's evidence, evidence that defendant chewed and destroyed crack cocaine during a prior traffic stop increased the likelihood that defendant did the same during the instant traffic stop. The court could not hold that the probative value of showing a lack of accident or mistake was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or the misleading nature of the evidence. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12925, 2013 WL 5676226 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 17 2013).

516. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's apology to the alleged victim because the apology was indicative of a consciousness of guilt and, thus, was highly probative and not outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. Smith v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11678 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 17 2013).

517. In a prosecution for evading arrest, the trial court did not err by admitting the State's photographs over defendant's objection under Tex. R. Evid 403 because defendant challenged the officer's version of the events, there was no other evidence except the officers' testimony to establish that defendant refused to comply, and the pictures were not gruesome. King v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11185 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 30 2013).

518. At issue in the case was the father's mental anguish following the death of his daughter; the single picture of the daughter's body was relevant to that issue and was properly admitted. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

519. Probative value of the two autopsy photographs substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice because defendant stated that he did not intentionally hurt the six-year-old child, but the medical examiner testified that neither of the two fatal injuries that the child sustained could have been caused accidentally or unintentionally; and the extent of the child's brain injury could not be determined from looking at the outside of his head. West v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9612 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 1 2013).

520. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence photographs of the Sifuentes v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8105 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 3 2013).

521. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting graphic photographs depicting the murder victim's injuries into evidence because they were probative of the manner of death and could be interpreted to indicate that the victim was shot twice in the back and that defendant planted the knife in the victim's hand, which was relevant to defendant's claim of self-defense. The court could not say that the probative value of the photographs was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because while the photographic depiction of the entrance wound was no doubt made more gruesome due to postmortem changes, that information was submitted to the jury solely by way of the autopsy report and the State did not focus on the condition of the wound. Rider v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5050 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 25 2013).

522. Trial court did not err by excluding a defense witness's testimony as it related to defendant's neighbor's arrests and drug-related involvement with police because while there was evidence indicating that the neighbor might have been the anonymous tipster, there was no evidence that he planted the drugs, and therefore the fact that he may have been tipster was not relevant to the jury's determination of whether defendant possessed drugs. Even if the evidence was relevant, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the relevance was substantially outweighed by the danger of confusing the jury or causing undue delay. Ivie v. State, 407 S.W.3d 305, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

523. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that evidence that two co-defendants had committed a nearly identical robbery just a few days before the instant robbery and that defendant knew about that robbery was relevant to show defendant's intent to participate in the instant robbery and was relevant to the State's theory that defendant had conspired with the two co-defendants to commit the instant robbery. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the danger of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of the evidence because the evidence tended to rebut defendant's theory that she had nothing to do with the instant robbery and capital murder. Ohlfs v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 11 2013).

524. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a letter defendant wrote to the woman who leased the apartment where the drugs were found because it was relevant, as defendant's statement in the letter that he had the "best dope around" could be seen as indicative of a willingness to provide the woman and perhaps others with dope, further connecting him to the woman and suggesting an intent to deliver. In addition, the letter was strongly probative to rebut any contention that his presence in the apartment was merely fortuitous and assisted the State with its proof that defendant's possession of the drugs was knowing. Bible v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455, 2013 WL 1411849 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 8 2013).

525. Court properly admitted evidence that defendant's girlfriend purchased a silver .38 caliber revolver shortly before the victim's death because a codefendant testified that defendant had used a silver gun, and another witness testified that defendant was carrying a "chrome .38, snub-nose revolver" on the day the victim was killed. The inherent probative force of the evidence concerning the guns was its tendency to show that defendant was the shooter, and although the evidence was prejudicial, it was not unfairly prejudicial. Buckley v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2246 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 7 2013).

526. Defendant made no showing that the complainant's immigration status was relevant to proving a material issue in the case and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's relevance objection, Tex.

R. Evid. 401; the trial court could have concluded that the prejudice from defense counsel's deportation and immigration-based questions far outweighed any probative value, Tex. R. Evid. 403. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2042, 2013 WL 1277883 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 28 2013).

527. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had previously, knowingly disregarded the lawful commands of a police officer because the State was entitled to rebut defendant's assertion that had he known they were police officers, he would not have pointed his firearm at them. Flores v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1809 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 26 2013).

528. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence defendant's jail telephone call recordings and summaries because they aided the State in its rebuttal of defendant's defense that he had no involvement or knowledge of the dealership's transactions. The trial court was within the zone of reasonable disagreement to find that the probative value of the recordings and summaries were not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Wood v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 31 2013).

529. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that he held the child victim's mother at gunpoint several days after the alleged assault occurred under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it constituted same transaction contextual evidence and was relevant, as the evidence showed that defendant confronted the victim's mother because he wanted to interrogate the victim about the assault and showed the jury how defendant reacted violently to the victim's outcry; the evidence was also necessary to show how defendant gained access to the victim's house to leave a letter in which he admitted to touching the victim. The admission of the evidence did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it made a fact of consequence, defendant's touching of the victim's genitals, more probable. Rodriguez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 213, 2013 WL 135723 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2013).

530. Trial court properly admitted a sex offender's prior written statements in his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding because the statements were relevant apart from their tendency to prove the sex offender's stipulated convictions. The prior inconsistent statements were neither unduly prejudicial nor cumulative of the matters that the sex offender admitted in his requests for admissions. In re Commitment of Bath, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586, 2012 WL 3860631 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

531. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding the underlying offense for which defendant was required to register as a sex offender because the State introduced statements made by defendant to officers that he did not think he should have to register as a sex offender because the sex with his thirteen-year-old stepdaughter was consensual. The State argued such evidence was relevant to show defendant's casual attitude regarding sex offender registration requirements and defendant's intent to ignore them; presentation of the disputed evidence did not consume an inordinate amount of time. Toliver v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6902, 2012 WL 3553380 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 17 2012).

532. In a murder case, the court properly admitted photographs of defendant's tattoos because the "REDRUM" and revolver tattoos were especially probative of defendant's intent and attitude relevant to his defense and testimony that he would never point a gun at someone else first. Given defendant's own counsel's indication that everyone had tattoos and criminal records, on both sides, there was no indication the evidence unfairly aroused the jury's hostility or sympathy. Luckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6686, 2012 WL 3241802 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2012).

533. Passenger's evidence concerning her physical, emotional, and economic limitations was properly excluded by the trial court because even if it was relevant, it was merely the presentation of cumulative evidence; the passenger's 2008 motion for reinstatement did not raise the issue of how her health and finances may have limited her ability to pursue her claim. Welborn v. Ferrell Enters., 376 S.W.3d 902, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6378 (Tex. App.

Dallas Aug. 2 2012).

534. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting portions of the victim's police interview during which he claimed defendant threatened to kill him like he had other boys because the statements were necessary to understand how defendant overcame the victim's resistance to the sexual assault and the evidence was relevant to rebut defendant's claim that he did not threaten the victim. The evidence was probative of whether defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon to accomplish the assault, presentation of the evidence took little time, and the statements did not suggest an improper basis for deciding the case. Sandles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5518, 2012 WL 3104377 (Tex. App. Dallas July 11 2012).

535. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing two witnesses to testify about extraneous offenses because it could have concluded that the evidence was relevant, probative, and necessary to rebut defendant's theory that the victim fabricated her allegation against defendant. The State's presentation of the evidence consumed very little time, and it was presented in a fashion to prove defendant's intent or knowledge of the offenses charged in the indictment. Guardado v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5514, 2012 WL 2832561 (Tex. App. El Paso July 11 2012).

536. Determination of the identity of the person fleeing from the police officer was a fact of significant consequence to the determination of the action, and an extraneous offense may be admissible, to show the identity of the accused, Tex. R. Evid. 403(b); therefore, evidence pertaining to identity was relevant and the trial court's decision to deny defendant's objection on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 401 was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5271 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 29 2012).

537. Determination of the identity of the person fleeing from the police officer was a fact of significant consequence to the determination of the action, and an extraneous offense may be admissible, to show the identity of the accused, Tex. R. Evid. 403(b); therefore, evidence pertaining to identity was relevant and the trial court's decision to deny defendant's objection on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 401 was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5271 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 29 2012).

538. Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it found that sex toys, lubricant, and a camcorder found in defendant's home were relevant during his trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they were relevant to the daughter's claims of the abuse she suffered from defendant and her stepmother and defendant told a coworker that his daughter might have hurt herself on sex toys she had been caught using. The trial court did not err by admitting the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it made facts of consequence more probable, each of the items went directly to the series of events described by the daughter, the jury was entitled to know the context in which the events took place, and the evidence took up only 47 pages of the 800 pages in the reporter's record. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

539. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting nude photographs of the daughter's stepmother during defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they were relevant to the daughter's claims of sexual abuse and her physical description of her stepmother's genitals. The photographs were probative because they contained compelling evidence that made the fact that the sexual abuse occurred as claimed more probable. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

540. Exclusion of the photographic evidence, of marginal relevance at best, was not calculated to cause, nor did it probably cause, the rendition of an improper judgment; because the photographs in question did not purport to show the condition of the property at the time of the annexation, but later, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding them. City of Lufkin v. Akj Props., Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5057, 2012 WL 2393087 (Tex. App.

Texarkana June 26 2012).

541. Trial court did not err in admitting a color photograph of a murder victim taken at her autopsy, which depicted a side shot of her from the neck up and showed a placard placed beside her body bearing a unique autopsy number, because the photo was not gruesome, and because the State needed to identify the person in the photo as that of the victim. The probative value of the photo was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Bibbs v. State, 371 S.W.3d 564, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4677, 2012 WL 2135561 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 13 2012).

542. Photograph of a murder victim taken at the crime scene after she had been shot by defendant was properly admitted where: (1) witnesses identified the picture as that of the victim; (2) the photo was not gruesome and showed no indication that the body had been posed or otherwise disturbed; and (3) the jury saw a video that showed the entire episode without objection. The photo simply depicted the result of a violent assault by one person, defendant, on another person, the victim, and the photo's probative value was not substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. Bibbs v. State, 371 S.W.3d 564, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4677, 2012 WL 2135561 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 13 2012).

543. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a picture of a pornographic videotape that contained adult pornography during defendant's trial on charges of indecency with a child and sexual assault of a child because it had some probative value, as a complainant testified that defendant used pornography in his bedroom immediately before sexually assaulting her and an officer testified about the use of pornography in grooming sexual assault victims. Admission of the picture was not unfairly prejudicial because defendant called the complainant's credibility into question, the officer provided unobjected-to testimony about similar materials found on defendant's computer, and the State focused on the evidence for a relatively short amount of time. Allen v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4598, 2012 WL 2106550 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

544. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a school principal's testimony about one of the complainant's bad hygiene during defendant's trial on charges of indecency with a child and sexual assault of a child because the State represented that its relevance would be demonstrated through later testimony and defendant did not argue that the relevance of the testimony was not demonstrated with later evidence. Allen v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4598, 2012 WL 2106550 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

545. In a murder case, a text message sent by appellant to his girlfriend after a shooting was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to show state of mind and that appellant did not act in self-defense; it was not subject to exclusion under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it was the only evidence of state of mind following the shooting, despite the fact that it contained a derogatory term. Guerra v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973, 2012 WL 1297718 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 17 2012).

546. In a capital murder case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a video recording and a photograph because their probative value was not substantially outweighed by the potential for undue prejudice. The evidence was probative to show appellant's presence at the scene of the crime and the degree of cooperation between appellant and his brother, the prejudice to appellant was not unfair, the challenged evidence did not create or add to any confusion regarding the events, there was little danger of misleading the jury, and, given the highly probative nature of the recording and photographs, the trial court could have concluded that there was no undue delay and that their presentation was necessary. Mccuin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1363, 2012 WL 566796 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 22 2012).

547. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of a pending assault charge against the father because it was relevant in determining whether termination of the father's rights was in the best interest of the child.. Defendant failed to show that its admission confused or misled the jury, was cumulative of other evidence, or unfairly prejudiced the jury under Tex. R. Evid. 403; a key issue in the trial was defendant's criminal history, and the pending charge was only a small fraction of that history. Davis v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1315, 2012 WL 512674 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 15 2012).

548. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court properly barred evidence of the victim's possible HIV condition because it found it irrelevant and too speculative; the proffered evidence showed only that the victim bit an accomplice, as the victim attempted to defend himself, and that the accomplice knew of the victim's possible HIV infection. The evidence was not enough to support defendant's defense of independent impulse and it lacked probative value. Gonzalez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 927, 2012 WL 361733 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

549. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting four photographs from the victim's autopsy because they helped the jury understand the extent of the victim's injuries, were demonstrative of defendant's intent, and did not constitute a large part of the pathologist's testimony and the State's case. The photographs were highly relevant and probative and not unfairly prejudicial. Ramirez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 455, 2012 WL 170996 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 19 2012).

550. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements defendant made in a letter concerning the murder because the statements were not hearsay under Tex. R. Evid. 801, as they were admissible as admissions of a party opponent. The statements were relevant because in the letter defendant did not claim, as he did at trial, that the shooting was accidental, and they were not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403, as the statements supported the State's contention that defendant intentionally shot the victim, it related to defendant's state of mind which was a central issue at trial, and the letter was brief and not cumulative of other evidence. Benitez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9871, 2011 WL 6306643 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 15 2011).

551. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an autopsy photograph depicting a murder victim's brain after it was removed from his body where the photograph had probative value because it showed the extent of the victim's injury and helped the jury understand how blunt force trauma-which other evidence showed came in the form of defendant's having kicked the victim in the head-caused the victim's death. Because the photograph had probative value and was not unnecessarily gruesome, the danger of unfair prejudice does did outweigh its probative value. Malone v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8602, 2011 WL 5118820 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 27 2011).

552. State did not refer to defendant as a drug dealer or elicit testimony that he was known as a drug dealer, and there was no dispute that defendant possessed marijuana; the State presented evidence that the marijuana was packaged for sale and that no one would purchase marijuana that had been in a person's underwear, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony. Eastland v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748, 2011 WL 5221252 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 26 2011).

553. In a case in which defendant was convicted of harassment in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 42.07(a)(2), the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of defendant's prior bad acts toward the complainant, his estranged wife, because the evidence was relevant to show both defendant's intent and the reasonable likelihood that the complainant was alarmed by defendant's threats, and because the evidence was relevant to rebut the defense's theory of the case. The trial court properly and adequately weighed the probative value of the evidence, which was not needlessly cumulative, against its potentially prejudicial effect, and the danger of undue prejudice to defendant was not so great that the trial court's decision to allow it should be disturbed. Sapp v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5331, 2011 WL 2732229 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

554. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that defendant's statement was relevant because the discussion of "I'll find a way out" without "snitching" and his reference to the "footage" made it more probable that defendant had some involvement in the crime. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that there was not unfair prejudice requiring exclusion of the statement because if the jury chose to credit it, it would not have been on an improper basis; rather, it would have been on the basis that defendant was part of the crime. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

555. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence concerning a syringe found in defendant's sock in jail following his arrest because the evidence was relevant to establish defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine and to rebut the defensive theory that defendant had no knowledge of the methamphetamine in either the van or in the vehicle defendant was riding in. Defendant failed to establish that the probative value of the evidence was significantly or substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine was seriously contested, the time necessary to present the evidence represented a negligible portion of the State's case, and limiting instructions were given. Phillips v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1383, 2011 WL 652846 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 23 2011).

556. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of the circumstances of defendant' arrest in July 2004 because evidence that defendant possessed methamphetamine at his father's residence on a later occasion was circumstantial evidence that defendant intentionally or knowingly possessed methamphetamine on an earlier occasion. Defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine was seriously contested, the time necessary to present the evidence represented a negligible portion of the State's case, and limiting instructions were given. Phillips v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1383, 2011 WL 652846 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 23 2011).

557. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated kidnapping, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that defendant, after committing the charged offense and on the same day, had ordered two minor girls walking down a street to get in his van where the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the evidence regarding defendant's encounter with the minor girls was relevant and admissible because that evidence revealed defendant's true plans about his encounter with the victim on the day he committed the offense. The trial judge could have reasonably concluded that the inherent probative force of the evidence, along with the State's need for the evidence, substantially outweighed the danger of any unfair prejudice to defendant, and the presentation of the extraneous offense evidence did not consume an inordinate amount of time. Frank v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 762, 2011 WL 379041 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 2 2011).

558. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 403, 404(b) in admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous misconduct where the evidence was admitted for purposes other than character conformity and was more probative than prejudicial because the State's need for the evidence was considerable, and although the content of the evidence was emotional, it made the existence of a material and, perhaps, the ultimate disputed fact at trial-defendant's identity as the perpetrator-more probable. Because the pattern and characteristics of the alleged offense against the victim were so distinctively similar to the misconduct adduced in the evidence that a "signature" by defendant was apparent, the evidence showed a modus operandi that the State used both in its identifying of defendant as the perpetrator and in establishing the manner in which defendant committed the offense. Curcuru v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9748, 2010 WL 5020178 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 9 2010).

559. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a fellow prisoner of defendant because it had a strong tendency to suggest that defendant was quick-tempered and prone to respond to the slightest provocation with homicidal violence, and it was directly relevant to the issue of defendant's identity as the murderer, as the prisoner testified that defendant spoke of putting "three in the back of the head" and expressed a preference for .22 caliber weapons, the same used to kill the victims. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the probative value of the prisoner's testimony was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or undue delay because only 51 pages of the 1347 pages of the reporter's record were devoted to the prisoner's testimony, including 15 pages for voir dire outside the jury's presence. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8313, 2010 WL 4053640 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 12 2010).

560. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting photographs showing defendant's tattoos because a criminal investigator testified that defendant's distinctive tattoos as depicted in the photographs identified him as a member of a particular gang, and defendant did not overcome the presumption that the relevant evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Pate v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8151, 2010 WL 3921177 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 7 2010).

561. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the district court erred by excluding evidence regarding the motivation of the authorities to prosecute the case against him because he failed to objected on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) during the trial. Even assuming that defendant had preserved error, the trial court did not abuse its discretion because: (1) the proffered evidence had no relevance to the issue of whether defendant had committed the offense of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle; (2) the trial court could have found that the evidence would have put the officers and the police department on trial, confused the issues, and caused undue delay; and (3) there was considerable evidence showing that defendant committed the offense, particularly the videotape showing defendant entering the bait vehicle on three separate dates. Bishop v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7056, 2010 WL 3369845 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2010).

562. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a prior robbery during defendant's aggravated robbery trial because: (1) it was committed the evening prior to the instant robbery; (2) defendant and his accomplice acted together in both robberies; (3) both robberies were committed against lone, older women using surprise, speed, and strength through force or the threat of force; and (4) both robberies were committed while using the same vehicle as a means of escape. Therefore, the probative value of the evidence was great, as it showed that defendant and his accomplice acted together in a continuing criminal enterprise and rebutted defendant's theory that he was not a party to the instant robbery but was merely present in the vehicle while it occurred. Davis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6949, 2010 WL 3341514 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 25 2010).

563. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence photographs of defendant's tattoos because a criminal investigator testified that defendant's distinctive tattoos identified him as a member of particular street gang, which was an element of the charged offense of organized criminal activity. Defendant did not overcome the presumption that the relevant evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Pate v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980, 2010 WL 3341853 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2010).

564. Even without medical evidence to verify it, defendant's volunteered statement to a police officer that he was HIV positive had probative value to show he was infected by the HIV virus when he sexually assaulted a child victim and was relevant as a circumstance of the offense that the jury could consider in assessing punishment under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1). Lewis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4545 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 16 2010).

565. In defendant's drug case, the court did not err by admitting evidence of an extraneous drug offense because the officer testified that he purchased methamphetamine from defendant, which made the intent to deliver much more probable, and the circumstances of the offense were just a simple transaction, which involved no violence or any potential inflaming factors. The testimony of was not a time consuming part of the trial, and while intent might have been proven by circumstantial evidence, the evidence was needed to rebut the defensive theories brought out during cross-examination of the witnesses. Padilla v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 674, 2010 WL 337673 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 29 2010).

566. In a case in which a jury had convicted a habeas corpus applicant of possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine, in the amount of 200 grams or more, but less than 400 grams, applicant demonstrated that trial counsel was deficient at the punishment stage of trial because counsel failed to: (1) object to a DEA agent's testimony on the dangers and societal costs caused by methamphetamine constituted deficient performance; (2) request pre-trial notice of the State's experts; (3) determine that a DEA agent would testify about methamphetamine addiction; (4) properly object to the agent's testimony about addiction and the number of people who could get high from the methamphetamine that applicant possessed; and (5) call an expert in rebuttal. During the punishment stage of trial, the prosecutors asked for a life sentence, relying heavily on the objectionable testimony that was introduced during both phases of trial, and because applicant had received a life sentence, the maximum sentence available for her offense, she had shown that there was a reasonable probability--one sufficient to undermine confidence in the result--that the outcome at the punishment stage would have been different but for her counsel's deficient performance. Ex Parte Lane, 303 S.W.3d 702, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1750 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

567. In defendant's online solicitation case, the trial court did not err by admitting the chat logs between defendant and the officer posing as a teenager because the inherent probative force of the chat logs was considerable as the logs established the sexually explicit content of the chats. That evidence tended to make it more probable than not that defendant had engaged in the online solicitation of a minor. Bailey v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9440, 2009 WL 4725348 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 475, 178 L. Ed. 2d 301, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 7971 (U.S. 2010).

568. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly admitted evidence from a witness that defendant liked young girls and oral sex because defendant was accused of fondling the breast of his victim and of performing oral sex on the victim who was ten years old, the evidence pertained to defendant's thoughts and did not implicate any conduct on his part, defendant's statements were the primary evidence of his intent and state of mind, and, the State had a significant need for the evidence. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8923, 2009 WL 3858016 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 18 2009).

569. In a murder case, evidence of defendant's drug dealing was properly admitted because, according to a witness, defendant and the victim were rival drug dealers, and proof of motive was important to the State's case because the State was unable to produce an eyewitness who actually saw defendant shoot the victim. The time spent attempting to prove that defendant sold illegal drugs was not out of proportion to the time required to present such evidence. Koy Timon Moore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7847 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 8 2009).

570. Court did not err by admitting extraneous offense evidence of defendant's assaultive behavior occurring prior to, and after, the sexual assault because the extraneous offense evidence was admissible to show the context in which the criminal act occurred because defendant's assaultive behavior was "blended, or connected" to the sexual assault forming an "indivisible criminal transaction." Moreover, the evidence was helpful to the jury in their determination whether defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon during the "same criminal episode." Quincy v. State, 304 S.W.3d 489, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7645 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 30 2009).

571. In defendant's tampering with a witness case, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence that the victim's father had recently kicked her out of his house because it was uncontested that defendant had previously threatened to kick the victim out if she became pregnant. That evidence served to establish a motive, if any, for the victim to make false accusations against defendant; the additional evidence regarding the victim's father's decision to kick her out, if true, did not lend any additional weight to that theory. Davis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6685 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26 2009).

572. Court did not erroneously admit evidence of an undercover drug buy the day before defendant's warrant was executed because the evidence of the undercover buy served to make a fact of consequence--defendant's care, custody, and control of the contraband with intent to distribute--more or less probable than without the evidence.

Further, the court instructed the jury that it could consider the evidence of the undercover drug buy only if it believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6391, 2009 WL 2488504 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 17 2009).

573. In a sexual assault of a child case, evidence that defendant had been subjected to unusual sexual events in his youth and that he related those events to the sexual assault of the child tended to rebut a contention that any contact with the child's penis was simply an accident, and therefore, the evidence was properly admitted. Additionally, the evidence took no additional time to develop initially, and was mentioned again during the trial only when defendant took the stand and denied making some of the statements. Watterson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2938, 2009 WL 1148751 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 29 2009).

574. Court properly admitted extraneous offense evidence because the extraneous offenses admitted tended to "make the existence" of a fact of consequence "more probable" and established that: defendant's gang was a criminal street gang, defendant had an affiliation with the gang, and defendant committed the instant offense as a member of a criminal street gang. Furthermore, the probative force and the State's need to admit the extraneous offenses outweighed the factors that favored exclusion; the evidence was not only relevant, but essential to the State's burden of proof. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2544, 2009 WL 997508 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2009).

575. In a case involving indecency with a child, testimony from defendant's former wife regarding defendant's sexual behavior with neighborhood boys and with his niece was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it was helpful to the jury in determining an appropriate sentence, and any issues relating to truthfulness or a lack of specificity went to the weight, not the admissibility, of the evidence and was for the jury to determine; moreover, the extraneous offense testimony was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it was probative, it would not have irrationally impressed the jury, the time needed to develop the evidence was minimal, and the State needed the evidence. To the extent the evidence showed defendant's sexual conduct with children, it was not unfairly prejudicial. Orr v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4152, 2009 WL 485502 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 27 2009).

576. In defendant's injury to a child case, the court did not err in admitting photographs of the child because a deputy testified to his initial observations of the child before being life-flighted to the burn center; the boy had a large knot on the left side of his head and blood coming out of his nose. The photos were clearly relevant and needed by the State to rebut defendant's statements denying causing any other injuries to the child and defendant's claim of accidental injury. Smith v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 401, 2009 WL 1941999 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 22 2009).

577. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly admitted photographs because the exhibits constituted only two photographs and depicted nothing more than the reality of the brutal crime committed. The victim's body was clothed, and they were not extreme close-up shots. Badgett v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 342, 2009 WL 142324 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 21 2009).

578. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence that defendant tried to flee from police during his arrest because it was relevant, as defendant failed to show that his flight was unconnected to the capital murder offense based on his testimony that he did so because he was wanted for a probation violation and did not want to go back to jail. The evidence was probative because it showed the context and circumstances of defendant's arrest, the State spent relatively time developing the evidence, and the evidence did not have a tendency to suggest a decision on an improper basis or that it impressed the jury in an irrational way. Baker v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9416 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 18 2008).

579. Defendant complained that the admission of evidence that he had left a note containing his name, jail address, and other information in the women's room was irrelevant and prejudicial; however, the trial court determined that the probative value of the evidence was substantial. Wilson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9395 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 17 2008).

580. In an aggravated assault case, a trial court did not err by allowing a victim's father to testify during the guilt/innocence phase of the case because his brief testimony, which included basic information about himself, the victim, the evening of the shooting, and the victim's condition, was relevant and not overly prejudicial. Sanchez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9072 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 4 2008).

581. In defendant's drug case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting in evidence the shotgun found on the back seat of the vehicle that defendant was driving just before his arrest because the probative value of the shotgun was considerable and significantly necessary to the State's case because it was a link tending to show that defendant knowingly possessed the cocaine. Additionally, the evidence of the shotgun was relevant to prove defendant's knowledge that he possessed narcotics. Harris v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9090 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 4 2008).

582. Court properly admitted photographs of defendant's tattoos at sentencing because the tattoos were probative of defendant's character for continuing to engage in criminal activities; defendant's relatives offered evidence regarding defendant's capability for rehabilitation, but those concepts differed significantly with the ideas portrayed by tattoos of Adolf Hitler and Klansmen with shotguns and nooses, among other images. Dean v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8441 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

583. In a capital murder case, the court properly admitted two photographs because the photographs bolstered a State witness's testimony that testifying as a "snitch" had detrimental consequences -- injury to his sister, the photographs presented little, if any, prejudice to defendant because no party suggested to the jury that defendant was connected to the stabbing of the witness's sister, and the time involved in the introduction of the two photographs was minimal and unlikely to distract the jury from considering the charged offense when compared to having the witness's sister testify before the jury. Padron v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6175 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 14 2008).

584. Items seized at the scene of a house fire were relevant under Tex. R. Evid 401, 402, 403, 404(b) to show that the fire started as a result of the cooking of methamphetamine on the stove and that the debris found in the burned house pertained to the use or manufacture of illegal drugs; defendant failed to establish that the trial court abused its discretion or that the determination fell outside of the zone of reasonable disagreement. Dentler v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5708 (Tex. App. Eastland July 31 2008).

585. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a life insurance policy covering her husband, of which defendant was the beneficiary, because the fact that defendant may have been motivated to shoot her husband by the $ 300,000 life insurance policy was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the State's attempt to prove defendant acted knowingly and intentionally. The trial court could have reasonably concluded the existence of the husband's life insurance policy related directly to the charged offense, did not have a tendency to confuse or distract the jury from the main issues in the case or have any tendency to be given undue weight by the jury; defendant admitted she shot her husband but claimed it was partially in self-defense and partially an accident; the trial court could have reasonably concluded that it was unlikely that presentation of the evidence of life insurance would consume an inordinate amount of time or merely repeat evidence already admitted. Armstrong v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 5448 (Tex. App. Dallas July 24 2008).

586. In an illegal possession of a weapon case, audio portions of the patrol-car videotape were properly admitted because an issue during trial was the course and conduct of the officer's investigation of defendants, and the statements concerned one defendant's friend's alleged drug use, and did not concern any drug use by either of the defendants. Gomez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2966 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 24 2008).

587. Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motions to continue his indecency with a child trial so that he could flesh out allegations in a report to child protective services (CPS) that the victim (who was four years old at the time) was "purging" at home and in school and was caught by her uncle in bed with her four-year-old cousin's head between her legs, which allegations defendant believed were exculpatory where defendant's argument was founded on a defective factual basis because nothing in the CPS report exculpated him; nothing in the report suggested that defendant did not molest the child as alleged in the indictment, even if the circumstances mentioned in the report were deemed true, but, rather, the circumstances described (when intertwined with imagination) suggested that the child could have been the victim of other molestation at the hands of unknown parties, or so a reasonable jurist could have interpreted the circumstances. Reder v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2624 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 10 2008).

588. In defendant's murder case, a trooper was properly allowed to testify concerning defendant's apparent false theft report because it was consistent with the State's theory that it was defendant's addiction to gambling that was at the heart of the money problems that essentially poisoned the relationship between defendant and the victim, his wife; part of the State's theory was that the victim was murdered when she threatened to quit her job and thus, cut off any further support of defendant's gambling. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

589. In defendant's robbery case, the State properly presented evidence of an extraneous robbery because the offenses occurred within three miles of one another and within a six-day time period, both took place late in the morning in large retail parking lots, and both acts were perpetrated quickly, snatching purses from unaccompanied females walking or standing in the parking lots; additionally, the testimony rebutted defendant's theories of alibi and that one victim's brief opportunity to view the perpetrator led to a mistaken identification; therefore, the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Evans v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 22 2008).

590. In defendant's murder case, the court properly allowed the State to reveal defendant's tattoos because the evidence was relevant to support the State's theory that defendant was a gang member who murdered rival gang members in retaliation; in addition, given the other evidence indicating defendant's admitted gang membership, the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Reyes v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 293 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 16 2008).

591. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of a gun found by the witness because its probative value was not outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice, when the witness testified that he found the gun around the same time as the aggravated robbery, lying on the road a few blocks away from the store, and this was approximately the same location where the officer observed defendant driving a car matching the description of the suspect's vehicle provided by police dispatchers at the time of the aggravated robbery and from which the officer observed defendant extend his hand and arm out of the window and then back into the car. Mouton v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 10076 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 20 2007).

592. In defendant's murder case, although the court erred in excluding the testimony and notes of a licensed counselor who had counseled defendant hours before the murder because the testimony provided some insight into defendant's state of mind at the time of the murder, the error was harmless; defendant's expert's testimony concerning defendant's sanity at the time of the offense was considerably more direct and probative than the tangentially relevant testimony of the counselor. Bradshaw v. State, 244 S.W.3d 490, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 9427

(Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

593. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011, evidence of the post-incident impact on the victim was relevant and probative of whether the assault did, indeed, occur, where defendant never formally admitted at trial that the victim had been sexually assaulted by someone (even by someone other than himself); furthermore, the potential prejudice that the evidence might have engendered was not outweighed by its probative value. Warren v. State, 236 S.W.3d 844, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 7636 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2007).

594. Trial court properly admitted a photograph of a murder victim and his family because it was relevant to show a true appearance of the victim before his death, and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. While it showed the family smiling, the photograph was not the type that would impress the jury in an irrational but indelible way, no mention was made of the photograph during closing argument, and only one mention was made of the victim's children. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6256 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2007).

595. Trial court properly admitted autopsy photographs of a murder victim because they did no more than visually depict what the medical examiner's testimony had already described, which was that the victim died of multiple gunshot wounds, and the probative value of the autopsy photographs was not substantially outweighed by their prejudicial effect because they were neither gruesome nor unnecessarily graphic, and because minimal time was spent on actually introducing the photographs following the medical examiner's testimony. While the manner of the victim's death was not disputed, the circumstances surrounding it were disputed, and the photographs lent visual support to the witnesses' description of those events. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6256 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2007).

596. At defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court properly admitted evidence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) that defendant possessed a semi-automatic weapon the week before the offense where the evidence showed that the victim was shot seven times by a semi-automatic weapon, and there was also ample evidence that defendant shot the victim. The evidence was not more prejudicial than probative because the State did not impute defendant's possession of the semi-automatic weapon to be a crime, the State did not imply that defendant was generally a criminal because he possessed the weapon, and there was no indication that the weapon might have been used in another offense. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6256 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2007).

597. In a suit on a sworn account brought by a law firm to recover its legal fees, the trial court questioned the law firm's principal witness to establish that the underlying legal matter was settled. The trial court acted within its discretion in attempting to limit the jury's exposure to needless and possibly confusing or misleading evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403; the trial court did not impermissibly comment on the weight of the evidence. Alam v. Wilshire & Scott, P.C., 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5501 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 12 2007).

598. In a capital murder case, evidence of appellant's gang affiliation was properly admitted pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 402 because it was relevant pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice as described in Tex. R. Evid. 403; there was ample evidence connecting appellant to the gang and their plan regarding the victim, and it included the gang's violent activities. Moreover, the evidence was not admitted to show that the murder was gang activity, but that it was predictable that a homicide would occur as the result of the conspiracy, in which some participants were violent gang members, to rob the victim. Arroyo v. State, 239 S.W.3d 282, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5111 (Tex. App. Tyler 2007).

599. Evidence of gang affiliation was properly admitted as relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 402 since it was offered to show a motive for a murder; the evidence was not limited under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and the probative value substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice. Rodrigues v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 4441 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 7 2007).

600. In a strict product liability action, the trial court properly excluded evidence regarding the drug use and prior kidnapping conviction of the deceased, an individual involved in a vehicle accident, because the evidence added nothing to the central issue of the trial, the design defect of a seat belt buckle, and the risk of unfair prejudice greatly outweighed the probative value of the evidence. The vehicle manufacturer did not establish that the exclusion of the evidence probably resulted in an incorrect judgment. AlliedSignal, Inc. v. Moran, 231 S.W.3d 16, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 3883, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17758 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2007).

601. In an aggravated sexual assault case, the court properly allowed a neighbor's testimony that on two occasions she caught defendant looking into her daughters' bedrooms while the girls were undressing because it demonstrated that defendant displayed an inappropriate sexual interest in teenage girls, thus rebutting the defensive theory that he was the victim of a frame-up; in addition, the evidence was probative of defendant's intent to commit the sexual offenses against the victims by showing that he had a similar pattern of gratifying his sexual desires through watching the neighbor's daughters undress, the evidence, which did not involve any physical touching, was not worse than the charged offenses and was not graphic, and the State's need for the evidence was significant. Mayfield v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2545 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 29 2007).

602. In a driving while intoxicated case, a court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the portion of a videotape that contained defendant's statements regarding Xanax and Valium because defendant's statement that he took the medications was in response to a question by the officer, and the question was relevant as a predicate inquiry to the administration of a field sobriety test. Layton v. State, 263 S.W.3d 179, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 1191 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. 2007).

603. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that police found a pistol in the trunk of his car when they arrested him because: (1) the extraneous offense in question, being a felon in possession of a firearm, was never presented to the jury; (2) the victim's description of the pistols used during the robbery general matched the pistol found in defendant's vehicle; (3) the weapon was found in a vehicle that closely matched the victim's description of a vehicle on the scene of the robbery; and (4) admission of the gun did not unfairly prejudice defendant. Young v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11371 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 21 2006).

604. Evidence of other contraband that police officers found in the room and evidence of the drugs found on the person of defendant's girlfriend, found while executing a search warrant was admissible when defendant was charged with possession of methadone that was found in the room because the evidence tended to establish the requisite affirmative link to the contraband. Davis v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 10721 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 14 2006).

605. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence relating to the search of the girlfriend and the discovery of the crack pipe because under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the evidence was relevant to the issue of whether the contraband and drug paraphernalia were present in the house and tended to prove an affirmative link between defendant and the methadone, and therefore the evidence was relevant to show defendant's knowledge or intent to possess the methadone. The probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because it had high probative value in affirmatively linking defendant to the methadone. Davis v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2526 (Tex. Crim. App. Dec. 14, 2006).

606. In defendant's robbery and drug possession case, a court properly admitted evidence of a "drug ledger" seized at defendant's apartment because, while searching the apartment for evidence related to drug transactions and defendant's possession offense, the officers discovered identification documents taken from the robbery victims, the drug ledger evidence assisted the jury in understanding how the officers linked defendant to the robberies and the circumstances under which he possessed cocaine, and the drug ledger was admissible as res gestae of defendant's offenses. Villegas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9334 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 27 2006).

607. In a robbery case, evidence from a videotape that defendant convinced an accomplice to claim the gun was his was properly admitted because defendant's participation was hotly contested at trial, the State needed to show the relationship between the two men and to show that defendant had influence over the accomplice, the evidence showed that defendant had a significant effect on the accomplice, and it supported testimony that defendant planned the robbery; in addition, the time spent introducing the evidence and developing the link was not substantial, taking approximately fifty pages of a twelve-hundred sixty-six page record on guilt/innocence. Smith v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9116 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 24 2006).

608. In defendant's criminal street gang case, defendant's prior conviction for aggravated assault, as well as other extraneous offenses, was properly admitted because evidence showing that defendant stabbed an African-American security guard who interfered when defendant and several other men were beating a Hispanic man was both relevant and highly probative; although the evidence was prejudicial in that it rebutted the defense effort to portray defendant as reformed, the jury had already heard graphic testimony from numerous witnesses about the assault, providing ample proof of defendant's propensity for brutal behavior. Chaddock v. State, 203 S.W.3d 916, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8861 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

609. In defendant's assault case, extraneous offense evidence regarding defendant's having cut a witness with a knife on a prior occasion was properly admitted because, under defendant's self defense theory, his intent in stabbing the victim was to defend himself and the State's theory was that defendant was the aggressor and his intent was not defensive; in addition, the evidence was more probative than prejudicial; the time the prosecution devoted to developing the evidence did not present a danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or undue delay. Salazar v. State, 222 S.W.3d 10, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8382 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

610. Defendant's motion to suppress the DNA evidence was properly denied because there was sufficient authentication evidence through the victim's sexual assault kit's markings and witness testimony showing that the kit was what it purported to be, and there was no affirmative evidence that the victim's samples were commingled, altered, or tampered with prior to their submission for DNA testing in April 2003. Dossett v. State, 216 S.W.3d 7, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7428 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

611. Defendant's oral statements about a dream containing details of the victim's murder were properly admitted into evidence because they were inculpatory admissions that were probative of his guilt; the statements revealed his knowledge of details about the crime scene that had not been released to the public, particularly the location and position of the body inside the business; the probative value of defendant's statements was strong because they constituted an admission against interest, revealing defendant's knowledge of the crime scene details not disclosed to the public; the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because the time used to develop the evidence during trial was relatively brief, the State's need for the evidence was high as the only other evidence linking defendant to the murder was DNA evidence, and it was the only direct evidence of defendant's intent to kill the victim rather than just sexually assault her. Dossett v. State, 216 S.W.3d 7, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 7428 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

612. In a trial for indecency with a child, it was proper to exclude evidence of conduct by the complainant's mother, such as extramarital affairs and involvement in pornography and drug abuse, because the probative value in establishing a motive for the complainant to make false accusations against defendant was low. Jimenez v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6538 (Tex. App. Waco July 26 2006).

613. In defendant's murder case, evidence of the history of physical abuse in the relationship between defendant and the victim was relevant and properly admitted; the extraneous-offense evidence rebutted defendant's claim of accident and showed that he intended to cause death, serious bodily injury, or bodily injury; in addition, the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

614. Trial court did not err when it allowed the introduction of defendant's threatening statement to a jailor relating to his release from prison under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07. § 3(a); this statement was highly relevant in assessing punishment for the attempted murder of police officers, and it was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Espinosa v. State, 194 S.W.3d 703, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 4611 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

615. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly admitted autopsy photographs of the victim where the photographs were taken before the autopsy procedure began and showed the condition of the body as it was received from the hospital; the photographs showed the bullet wound that testimony indicated was the cause of death, they illustrated that the victim was not otherwise bruised or injured as he would have been if there had been a fight before he was shot, and they showed no more than the nature of the victim's injury. Gray v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2363 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 29 2006).

616. During defendant's trial for indecent exposure, the danger of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of evidence that defendant walked around nude in front of his stepdaughters, masturbated in the presence of his stepdaughter, and inappropriately touched his stepdaughter because the evidence was probative to show defendant's intent and motive to sexually gratify himself in the presence of others and to rebut his defensive theory of mistake. Tennison v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 2120 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 16 2006).

617. In an action in which a trial court awarded more than $ 2 million to a pedestrian for injuries she sustained when she was struck by a city transit bus driven by an employee of a transit authority contractor, the trial court did not err when it admitted into evidence the graphic photographs of the pedestrian's injuries; even though the driver objected to the admission of the photographs, any error was waived by the failure to object to testimony of the conditions depicted in those photographs; at trial, witnesses testified they saw the pedestrian in the crosswalk when she was struck and dragged by the bus, and the orthopedic trauma surgeon who treated the pedestrian when she arrived at the hospital and amputated her leg testified, without objection, about the nature and extent of her injuries. Castro v. Cammerino, 186 S.W.3d 671, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1765 (Tex. App. Dallas 2006).

618. In a capital murder case, a court properly admitted photographs of the victim's corpse where the photographs were probative of the crime scene and the injuries received by the victim, they were necessary for the State in developing its case, and, because they were not overly gruesome, the photographs did not pose the potential of impressing the jury in some irrational way. Shuffield v. State, 189 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 365 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

619. In a capital murder case, a court did not err by excluding testimony in mitigation of punishment regarding a history of family sexual abuse of multiple generations of children in defendant's family because the fact that others in defendant's family were abused did not by itself make him more or less morally culpable for the crime for which he was on trial, nor did it, by itself, make a jury's finding of mitigation any more or less probable than it would have been without the evidence. Shuffield v. State, 189 S.W.3d 782, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 365 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

620. Defense counsel's lack of an objection to evidence that defendant put his hands over his front pockets during his pat-down, ran from the police, and discarded "little white bags" while in flight did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel because the evidence was relevant to show defendant's motive for striking a police officer and the reason for his flight, and the fact that the bags were never found did not make the officer's testimony inadmissible for lack of relevance or probativeness; furthermore, the evidence might also have been viewed as same transaction contextual evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the events surrounding the stop, flight, and arrest were so connected that they formed an indivisible criminal transaction. LeBleu v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 887 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 1 2006).

621. Court rejected defendant's claim that the trial court erred in admitting a photograph of the victim's head after the shooting, showing the bullet entry; the court found no actual reference to the photograph in testimony, and given that the court had to presume the probative value outweighed any prejudicial effect, the court was unable to say that the picture inflamed the jurors to convict on an irrational basis, considering that the picture was not enlarged, gory, or gruesome, and the evidence was relevant and could have aided the jury in understanding the testimony regarding the victim's wound and death. Whitmire v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 9593 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 17 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 183 S.W.3d 522, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

622. In a murder case, the trial court was within its discretion in denying the admission of evidence regarding the gang membership of four State's witnesses under Tex. R. Evid. 403 as it was highly prejudicial: the only purpose for allowing the gang membership testimony was to show bias, and it was not relevant. Barlow v. State, 175 S.W.3d 839, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7110 (Tex. App. Texarkana 2005).

623. In a murder trial, defendant waived his Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403 objections to the portion of a surveillance videotape that depicted the victim's wife kneeling and crying over the victim's body after defendant had fled the store. Two witnesses testified, without objection, regarding actions depicted on the videotape and verbally conveyed the same imagery. Fernandez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 7068 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 30 2005).

624. Court properly admitted defendant's statement regarding his involvement in a Mexican drug organization which was relevant as to whether he knew the marijuana was concealed in the car, it also demonstrated motive and intent, and the testimony was corroborating in that it tended to connect defendant to the offense. Mora v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6975 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 25 2005).

625. Court did not err by admitting evidence concerning the circumstances of a prior sexual assault conviction where defendant encountered the victims in the parking lot of their residences, waited for the victims to return to their rooms, approached them under the guise of needing help, and made advances toward raping them but ejaculated before penetration. Because intent was a material element of the offense on which the State carried the burden of proof, the probative value of the witness's testimony was high and was not overcome by the danger of unfair prejudice. Fields v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5494 (Tex. App. Austin July 14 2005).

626. In an injury to a child case where defendant contested his guilt by claiming that he did not injure the child but that she fell, the trial court did not err in permitting the State to introduce evidence that defendant had previously committed an extraneous offense against another young child as it may have been helpful to the jury to rebut defendant's defensive theory and show that he injured the victim. Furthermore, evidence of the extraneous offense was not of such a nature as to impair the efficacy of a limiting instruction: the evidence showed that the child involved in the extraneous offense was not seriously injured but, at most, had bruises on her face from defendant's hands. Harrell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4578 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

627. In a trial for indecency with a child, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a prior indecency conviction. The current charge arose from defendant's exposing himself, and he argued that he had merely forgotten to zip his pants; the extraneous offense evidence therefore tended to make a fact of consequence--whether defendant had or lacked intent to arouse or gratify sexual desire--more or less probable. Arp v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4535 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 15 2005).

628. Evidence of juvenile appellant's negative drug test was properly found to be unreliable where his probation officer failed to test his urine sample for adulterants that could produce a false negative because she was out of the necessary supplies. Furthermore, the evidence had low probative value to rebut appellant's marijuana possession charge and was outweighed by the risk of jury confusion under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because an undercover officer testified that he saw appellant take approximately two puffs from a marijuana cigar, and appellant's expert testified that if appellant had only smoked such a small amount of marijuana, there was only a 15 percent chance that he would have tested positive for marijuana on a urinalysis test. In re J.A.C., 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4519 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 14 2005).

629. In a murder trial, evidence was properly admitted, under Tex. R. Evid. 401 -- 404, of a shooting incident that occurred eight days after the murder. The extraneous offense evidence was relevant to the development of the case and was admissible to show the development of the investigation and defendant's intent or knowledge regarding the gun; as to prejudice, the evidence was presented almost matter-of-factly and included no injuries, disturbing photographs, or emotional testimony. Gonzales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4532 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2005).

630. Although it could not be said that defendant's act of kicking out the window of a police officer's patrol car after he was arrested for burglary of a habitation was so intertwined with the charged offense to make it admissible as same-transaction contextual evidence, or that defendant's act was material to an issue in the case, even if the trial court abused its discretion by admitting the officer's testimony, the admission of the evidence did not have a substantial and injurious effect on the jury's verdict and therefore did not affect defendant's substantial rights because there was substantial evidence of his guilt. Franklin v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4401 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 9 2005).

631. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of prior statements made to police by two individuals whom the State contended were with defendant at the time of a shooting where evidence that both individuals made statements that defendant admitted to being involved in a freeway shooting and later recanted them was relevant because the statements, even if recanted, indicated that the witnesses had knowledge that a freeway shooting had occurred and showed the witnesses' willingness to implicate defendant in order to exonerate themselves, thus making the State's theory that all three men were involved more probable than the theory would have been without the evidence. Furthermore, defendant had not demonstrated that the negative attributes of the statements substantially outweighed their probative value because the State had made clear that the statements had been recanted so that the jury was not given the impression that the witnesses still maintained that defendant had admitted the shooting to them. Dinh Tan Ho v. State, 171 S.W.3d 295, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4405 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

632. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of a bullet hole in a car allegedly involved in a freeway shooting because the existence of the bullet hole in the car had a tendency to make the fact that the car was involved in the shooting more probable and was thus relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Furthermore, evidence of the bullet hole was not unfairly prejudicial because there was no definitive evidence that the bullet hole occurred during another shooting at a caf, as defendant alleged, and because the jury did not even know about the cafe shooting. Dinh Tan Ho v. State, 171 S.W.3d 295, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4405 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2005).

633. Trial court should have excluded as irrelevant and prejudicial a BB gun that was found in a defendant's truck and that was not used during the charged burglary. The error was harmless, however, because the court did not have fair assurances that the mind of an average juror would have found the State's case less persuasive had the BB gun not been admitted. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4487 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 9 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6371 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 11, 2005).

634. In a trial for burglary, a photograph of the victim's daughter was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403, even though the daughter was not present. The small, studio-quality photograph was not unduly prejudicial, and it was relevant because the victim, defendant's former girlfriend, testified that her conduct toward defendant was motivated by the desire to protect her young daughter from confrontation. Wight v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4334 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 7 2005).

635. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's statement under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) where it appeared that it believed that the portion of the statement in which defendant admitted to threatening a prostitute with a box cutter referred to the complainant because the statement corroborated the complainant's testimony and was relevant to the issue of consent. Furthermore, the statement was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it strengthened the State's case on the consent issue and because, while the acts described in the statement were probably distasteful to at least some, if not all, of the jury members, they were not any more inflammatory than the charged offense. Marc v. State, 166 S.W.3d 767, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4228 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

636. Court did not err by admitting an investigation videotape into evidence because, although the content of the video might have been unpleasant to view, it depicted the reality of the brutal crime committed, it contained material that was the subject of testimony presented during the State's case in chief, and it was probative of the fact and manner of the victim's death and defendant's culpable mental state. Ramirez v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4185 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 1 2005).

637. Defendant's convictions for aggravated sexual assault and indecency with a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 21.11(a)(1), 22.021(a)(B)(iii)-(iv), 22.021(a)(2)(A)(ii) (Supp. 2004-05) were affirmed because the trial court did not err in admitting DNA evidence found on the victim because the location of defendant's DNA was consistent with the victim's account of the attack and the DNA evidence was clearly relevant in determining the credibility of the victim's accusation. Also, the DNA evidence was not unfairly prejudicial because it provided circumstantial proof of the offense charged; and the State's need for the evidence was great because there were no witnesses that could disprove defendant's contention that his DNA was innocently transferred onto the victim, but the discovery of his DNA on top of a fresh bruise served to dispute his theory. Rivera v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3997 (Tex. App. Austin May 26 2005).

638. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's objection to testimony regarding whom an officer had named as the "defendant" in the case, which defendant claimed was unfairly prejudicial because it had the prejudicial effect of telling the jury that he was the subject of investigation from the very beginning and that he had to be guilty, because the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the testimony was relevant to the jury's evaluation of the complainant's allegations. Nor could it be said that the probative value of the testimony was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because the officer's testimony was not the type of testimony that would suggest that the jury make a decision on an improper basis. Dunbar v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3676 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 12 2005).

639. In an action for subsurface trespass brought by oil and gas lessors against their lessee, the trial court did not err by admitting into evidence an internal memorandum written by an employee of the lessee more than 20 years earlier where the memo was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 on the ground that its recommendation to drill despite title problems could have helped the jury to decide whether the lessee was reasonable in delaying its development of a tract of land because of title problems with another tract. Furthermore, language in the memo about "illiterate Mexicans" was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because the memo could not be considered an appeal to prejudice in language clear and strong, especially because it was written by an employee of the lessee and did not ask the jury to decide the case on an improper basis. Mission Res., Inc. v. Garza Energy Trust, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2650 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 7 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 166 S.W.3d 301, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 3443, 160 Oil & Gas Rep. 1144 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi 2005).

640. Photographs of a murder victim were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and were not unduly prejudicial to defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because a photograph of the victim lying in an ambulance immediately after firefighters removed her body from a burning house was both material and probative, as it established her condition at the crime scene, and because a photograph of her face taken during autopsy was also material and probative of the fact that the autopsy was performed on the same person removed from the crime scene by ambulance. The numerous autopsy photographs were also probative of the victim's cause of death, a material element in the offense of capital murder, and although the detail in the photographs was graphic, each served the purpose of illustrating the nature and extent of the victim's injuries. Vargas v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2417 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 31 2005).

641. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by ruling that a witness's testimony that he sold a gun to defendant's friend was relevant and that its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403. Even if the gun was not the one used in the murders, the testimony was some evidence of the friend's interest in weapons of the sort used to commit the murders. Scott v. State, 165 S.W.3d 27, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2168 (Tex. App. Austin 2005).

642. During defendant's robbery trial, the trial court properly engaged in the balancing test required by Tex. R. Evid. 403 when it admitted into evidence two extraneous offenses that occurred after the robbery and after defendant had been arrested because the contested evidence was relevant to the issue of whether defendant, by his appearance, language, and conduct, placed the victim in fear of imminent bodily injury at the time that he stole beer from the victim's convenience store and because his subsequent conduct showed his ability to place another in fear of imminent bodily injury, it was, therefore, relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Furthermore, the evidence, which was that defendant had kicked out the back window of the patrol car and, while being taken to jail, had kicked a deputy, was admissible as same transaction contextual evidence. Hayden v. State, 155 S.W.3d 640, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 243 (Tex. App. Eastland 2005).

643. In an indecency with a child case, because intent to satisfy sexual appetite was an element of the crime, the victim's younger sister's testimony that defendant had "french" kissed her when he took her alone for a ride and asked that she not tell anyone was relevant; thus, the trial court properly allowed it. Further, this evidence showing that defendant acted inappropriately with another young girl was highly probative, making the fact of defendant's sexual contact with the victim more probable, gave credibility to the victim's complaint, and diminished defendant's credibility. Mejia v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 11615 (Tex. App. Tyler Dec. 22 2004).

644. In an aggravated sexual assault of a child case, a court did not err by excluding a portion of the testimony of an attorney representing the victim's mother who was present at a custody hearing involving the victim because something occurring at the custody hearing had no probative value in showing who committed a sexual assault that occurred a month before the hearing. Additionally, even if the testimony was somehow relevant, the trial court could have reasonably decided that its admission would lead to unfair prejudice, greatly mislead the jury, and confuse the issues with which the jury was presented. Holmes v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 10661 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 30 2004).

645. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not err by admitting the kitchen knife used in the assault into evidence because the knife was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to prove the allegation that defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon, and was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it did not have an undue tendency to suggest that a decision be made on an improper basis. Hardy v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS

3214 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 8 2004).

646. In defendant's sexual assault case, a court did not err permitting the victim's stepfather to testify that he saw defendant in the parking lot of the family's apartment complex a few weeks after the victim made her outcry where that evidence tended to corroborate the victim's testimony and was not, in itself, evidence of misconduct or bad character. The prosecutors' description of defendant as a "sexual predator" was a logical inference from his overall behavior as shown by the victim's testimony. Williams v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 2878 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 1 2004), writ of certiorari denied by 544 U.S. 927, 125 S. Ct. 1652, 161 L. Ed. 2d 489, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 2556, 73 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2005).

647. Testimony of a witness that a defendant stated that if he found out who helped his wife move out of their apartment, he was going to kill that person, was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to show the defendant's mental state a few days prior to the commission of a murder; the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because its prejudicial effect was related to its probative value rather than to an unrelated matter. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

648. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that a defendant ingested methamphetamine shortly before a murder was committed because the jury could have inferred from the evidence that the defendant's reasoning was altered, the evidence was offered to show the defendant's mental state rather than as character evidence, and the trial court engaged in a Tex. R. Evid. 403 balancing test and did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

649. In making the initial determination of admissibility of evidence, Texas courts must apply the principles set forth in the evidentiary rules governing relevancy under Tex. R. Evid. 401- 403; to meet the relevancy test, the proffered evidence must, first, have probative value, and second, be of consequence to some issue in the trial under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Ramsey v. Reagan, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 276 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 16 2003).

650. Evidence of defendant's prior history of sexual assault against a child victim was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as "other crimes, wrongs, or acts" pursuant to Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37. McCulloch v. State, 39 S.W.3d 678, 2001 Tex. App. LEXIS 1327 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2001).

651. Defendant's death sentence for capital murder was vacated where the probative value of the admission of a photograph under Tex. R. Evid. 401 of the victim in her casket was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice to the defendant under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Reese v. State, 33 S.W.3d 238, 2000 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 108 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000).

652. Where defendant was convicted of sexual assault, trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403 in admitting testimony from the victim and his sister of the effect of the assault on the victim; testimony of an inflammatory or sympathetic nature will not bar its admissibility if it is relevant to the issue at trial, and the issue need not be contested. Ranels v. State, 1996 Tex. App. LEXIS 2867 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 20 1996).

Evidence : Relevance : Liability Insurance

653. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 403, the testimony of a claims representative for defendant's insurer that the insurer was liable was not barred by Tex. R. Evid. 411 because it allowed for an inference of fault on the part of defendant, which was a fact of consequence in the manslaughter prosecution under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.04. Mitchell v. State, 377 S.W.3d 21, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8970, 2011 WL 5994154 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 9 2011).

654. Mistrial was properly granted in a manslaughter/criminally negligent homicide prosecution after the prosecutor asked defendant's expert about a finding by defendant's insurer that defendant was at fault because the question was manifestly improper under Tex. R. Evid. 401-403. What the insurer concluded had very little probative value on the question of whether defendant caused the fatal accident, and it was extremely prejudicial, likely to confuse and mislead the jury, and lead to time-consuming collateral litigation. Ex parte Wheeler, 203 S.W.3d 317, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1968 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006).

Evidence : Relevance : Prior Acts, Crimes & Wrongs

655. Evidence of methamphetamine found at the murder scene was properly admitted because it was relevant to establish a motive for defendant's actions and to rebut her claim of accidentally shooting the victim; there was no evidence presented that defendant was in possession of the drugs, and the evidence was admissible because the jury could infer that the prior relationship between the victim and defendant was one that involved drugs. Taylor v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 3 2014).

656. Court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior conviction for possession of cocaine because the defensive theory was that he did not know the cocaine was in his pocket because it was placed there while he was unconscious; therefore, the evidence was relevant to rebut defendant's defensive theory. Rios v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5867 (Tex. App. El Paso May 30 2014).

657. At defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony that he committed extraneous offenses in that he supplied drugs to the victim in the course of his sexual assaults. The evidence helped to fill in the gaps and explain the circumstances surrounding the offense. Washington v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 933 (Tex. App. Austin Jan. 30 2014).

658. Evidence that defendant on trial for reckless injury to his five-week-old daughter previously put a blanket tip into the victim's mouth to quiet her cries was properly admitted as a prior bad act because it was relevant to the issue of his intent to harm the victim and to demonstrate the character of his relationship with her; the evidence's probative value outweighed its unfair prejudice because there was little danger it would impress on the jury in some irrational way, it took little time to develop, and the State needed it to prove defendant's mental state. Sanchez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 896, 2014 WL 298322 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

659. Evidence that defendant on trial for reckless injury to his five-week-old daughter previously put a blanket tip into the victim's mouth to quiet her cries was properly admitted as a prior bad act because it was relevant to the issue of his intent to harm the victim and to demonstrate the character of his relationship with her; the evidence's probative value outweighed its unfair prejudice because there was little danger it would impress on the jury in some irrational way, it took little time to develop, and the State needed it to prove defendant's mental state. Sanchez v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 896, 2014 WL 298322 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 28 2014).

660. Trial court did not err in admitting testimony showing that defendant was the driver of a vehicle involved in a drive-by shooting four days before the alleged victim was shot because the evidence was probative to show opportunity and identity and to rebut defendant's defensive theory that he was not the perpetrator, and there was nothing confusing or misleading about the evidence. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14602, 2013 WL 6253764 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 4 2013).

661. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence because in light of the defensive theory to attack State's evidence, evidence that defendant chewed and destroyed crack cocaine during a prior traffic stop increased the likelihood that defendant did the same during the instant traffic stop. The court could not hold that the probative value of showing a lack of accident or mistake was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or the misleading nature of the evidence. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12925, 2013 WL 5676226 (Tex. App. Eastland Oct. 17 2013).

662. Testimony from a State's witness that defendant appeared to be either high on drugs or coming off a high on the morning of his attack against the complainant was admissible because it established an affirmative link between defendant's earlier condition and the offense, rather than being mere background contextual evidence; defendant appeared high earlier in the day, asked the witness for money, and told the complainant he broke into her house because he was looking for money. Steele v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10488 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 20 2013).

663. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting an extraneous offense regarding marijuana found on defendant's person and in his car because it was admissible same transaction contextual evidence; defendant's possession of an illegal substance explained his possible motive for hitting a detective and fleeing the scene before the drugs could be found, and he was not acting suspiciously until the detective moved closer. Finney v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8317 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2013).

664. Defense counsel preserved for review the issue of whether the trial court erred in admitting an extraneous offense because defense counsel emphasized what rules his request for a running objection was based on, and the trial court stated that the evidence was admitted as inextricably intertwined with the offense. Finney v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8317 (Tex. App. Dallas July 8 2013).

665. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the extraneous offense evidence (unadjudicated aggravated robbery) over defendant's objections, because the evidence supported the State's theory that defendant intended to participate in the offenses. Menendez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7742 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 26 2013).

666. Trial court did not err during defendant's murder trial in admitting extraneous offense evidence of defendant's theft of a truck because the evidence was not relevant just to show character conformity, but was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to corroborate defendant's confession to police, in which he stated that he stole a green truck from a certain location and then drove that truck to the victim's home, where he then committed the murder. At trial, the State was able to corroborate that portion of defendant's confession by introducing evidence from a witness that his green truck had been stolen on the same day and from the same location as defendant indicated in his confession, and a police officer confirmed that he wrote a report for a stolen truck by the witness at the same time and location as described by defendant in his confession. Shuff v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5469 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 2 2013).

667. Evidence of defendant's cocaine use after the charged murder offense was admissible to show his consciousness of guilt and had relevancy beyond character conformity because defendant stated that he went on a cocaine binge because he felt guilty about the murder. Shuff v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5469 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 2 2013).

668. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that evidence that two co-defendants had committed a nearly identical robbery just a few days before the instant robbery and that defendant knew about that robbery was relevant to show defendant's intent to participate in the instant robbery and was relevant to the State's theory that defendant had conspired with the two co-defendants to commit the instant robbery. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the danger of unfair prejudice did not substantially outweigh the probative value of the evidence because the evidence tended to rebut defendant's theory that she had nothing to do with the instant robbery and capital murder. Ohlfs v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4660 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 11 2013).

669. At defendant's trial for unlawfully appropriating a firearm, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence of another rifle theft and pawn transaction because it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to provide the same transaction context for the single theft of the rifles. Defendant's theft of the two rifles was a single act to deprive the victim of his property. Sutterfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972, 2013 WL 1281843 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 28 2013).

670. Appellant did not object at trial on Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) grounds or any grounds that would have put the trial court on notice that he was objecting to the introduction of such evidence, plus his hearsay, speculation, and relevancy objections did not preserve error under Rule 404(b), such that he failed to preserve this issue for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a). Hawkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 7 2013).

671. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had previously, knowingly disregarded the lawful commands of a police officer because the State was entitled to rebut defendant's assertion that had he known they were police officers, he would not have pointed his firearm at them. Flores v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1809 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 26 2013).

672. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence that defendant lied about his military service because his fictitious military involvement and explanations to his wife about living at various military posts set forth the necessary facts to explain to the jury how defendant isolated the minor victim from her mother, defendant's wife, during the period of abuse; without defendant's stories of military service, the victim's testimony about the abuse made little or no sense. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

673. Even though the trial court abused its discretion by admitting defendant's military record into evidence, as the fact that defendant was charged with escape and had been discharged for misconduct did not make it more or less likely that he had committed the sexual assault offenses, the error was harmless because there was evidence supporting defendant's conviction, other evidence showed that he was untruthful about his military service, and the State never mentioned the extraneous offenses contained in defendant's military record. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

674. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that he held the child victim's mother at gunpoint several days after the alleged assault occurred under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it constituted same transaction contextual evidence and was relevant, as the evidence showed that defendant confronted the victim's mother because he wanted to interrogate the victim about the assault and showed the jury how defendant reacted violently to the victim's outcry; the evidence was also necessary to show how defendant gained access to the victim's house to leave a letter in which he admitted to touching the victim. The admission of the evidence did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it made a fact of consequence, defendant's touching of the victim's genitals, more probable. Rodriguez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 213, 2013 WL 135723 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 10 2013).

675. Defendant's statement to police that he had, 20 years earlier, been accused of improper conduct with his former stepdaughter, was not relevant to prove defendant's intent under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and it was unduly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Defendant did not "open the door" to admission of the statement, Tex. R. Evid. 107, by responding to a question by the State. However, given the evidence of guilt, the error was harmless. Cressman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9849, 2012 WL 5974013 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 29 2012).

676. Defendant's relevancy objections did not preserve his argument that admission of extraneous offense evidence of uncharged sexual conduct violated Tex. R. Evid. 404; in any event, because the same evidence came in through other testimony without objection, any error was cured. Goodwin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6918, 2012 WL 3590723 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 20 2012).

677. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting portions of the victim's police interview during which he claimed defendant threatened to kill him like he had other boys because the statements were necessary to understand how defendant overcame the victim's resistance to the sexual assault and the evidence was relevant to rebut defendant's claim that he did not threaten the victim. The evidence was probative of whether defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon to accomplish the assault, presentation of the evidence took little time, and the statements did not suggest an improper basis for deciding the case. Sandles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5518, 2012 WL 3104377 (Tex. App. Dallas July 11 2012).

678. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by allowing a police officer to give an opinion about appellant's intent to fight at the time of his arrest; the officer was not speculating about appellant's inner thoughts, rather, the officer was drawing an inference from her own observations. The information was relevant, it did not describe an extraneous offense or bad act, the inclusion of the information was not so prejudicial that it should have been excluded on that ground, and it was presented alongside copious evidence that appellant was driving while intoxicated and attempting to flee from police. Link v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3350, 2012 WL 1495182 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 30 2012).

679. Because the robberies occurred in the same geographic area within a relatively brief time frame, and all were committed by an assailant who covered his hands with socks or gloves, and whose face was completely covered by a similar covering, leaving only the eyes exposed, there are sufficient common characteristics between each of the robberies, that the extraneous offenses were relevant to prove identity and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 404(b). Heigelmann v. State, 362 S.W.3d 763, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1670, 2012 WL 688427 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 2 2012).

680. In a trial for the aggravated kidnapping of a former girlfriend, extraneous acts evidence from another former girlfriend was relevant to rebut the defense theories that the current charges were exaggerated and that the witness testified to an admission by defendant because of her relationship with the complainant. Vela v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6917, 2011 WL 3821045 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2011).

681. In a case in which defendant was convicted of harassment in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 42.07(a)(2), the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of defendant's prior bad acts toward the complainant, his estranged wife, because the evidence was relevant to show both defendant's intent and the reasonable likelihood that the complainant was alarmed by defendant's threats, and because the evidence was relevant to rebut the defense's theory of the case. The trial court properly and adequately weighed the probative value of the evidence, which was not needlessly cumulative, against its potentially prejudicial effect, and the danger of undue prejudice to defendant was not so great that the trial court's decision to allow it should be disturbed. Sapp v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5331, 2011 WL 2732229 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

682. At defendant's trial for burglary of a habitation based on evidence showing that defendant and his brother broke into a mobile home and stole a TV set, the trial court ruled that evidence of two extraneous burglaries committed by his brother was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, probative, and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). The appellate court held that defendant was not harmed by the admission of the evidence because it was not unduly emphasized by the State, and it did not have a substantial effect on the jury's verdict. Crutchfield v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4959, 2011 WL 2638402 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2011).

683. Trial court erred by admitting into evidence other lawsuits, verdicts, and judgments against the corporation that owned and operated the cemetery concerning the double sale of burial plots because the evidence was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, as the events occurred at different cemeteries with different employees, they occurred more than a year apart, and there was no evidence that the events were part of a system, scheme, or plan. The error was not harmless because appellants' attorney intended for the evidence to be a significant and pervasive part of the trial; because there was no evidence of three of the four appellants suffered compensable mental anguish, the jury's award of $ 100,000 to each had to have been based on something other than properly admitted evidence. Serv. Corp. Int'l v. Guerra, 348 S.W.3d 221, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 417, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1191 (Tex. 2011).

684. Jury could reasonably infer that the letter was written by defendant, and that he composed it with an eye toward establishing an alibi or exculpatory evidence regarding his pending charge; all this made a fact of consequence, that defendant knowingly or intentionally possessed the drugs found in the police car where he had just been sitting, more probable, and the letter was relevant evidence. In re F.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4104, 2011 WL 2175857 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 27 2011).

685. Child victim's testimony that defendant assaulted her mother immediately after she confronted him about the sexual abuse was relevant to show defendant's unsettled and combative demeanor after the incident, which indicated a consciousness of guilt and as an assault against an adult witness, could be seen as tampering with the witness. Therefore, the evidence was admissible and trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object. Cueva v. State, 339 S.W.3d 839, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3333 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2011).

686. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence concerning a syringe found in defendant's sock in jail following his arrest because the evidence was relevant to establish defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine and to rebut the defensive theory that defendant had no knowledge of the methamphetamine in either the van or in the vehicle defendant was riding in. Defendant failed to establish that the probative value of the evidence was significantly or substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect, defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine was seriously contested, the time necessary to present the evidence represented a negligible portion of the State's case, and limiting instructions were given. Phillips v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1383, 2011 WL 652846 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 23 2011).

687. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of the circumstances of defendant' arrest in July 2004 because evidence that defendant possessed methamphetamine at his father's residence on a later occasion was circumstantial evidence that defendant intentionally or knowingly possessed methamphetamine on an earlier occasion. Defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine was seriously contested, the time necessary to present the evidence represented a negligible portion of the State's case, and limiting instructions were given. Phillips v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1383, 2011 WL 652846 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 23 2011).

688. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated kidnapping, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that defendant, after committing the charged offense and on the same day, had ordered two minor girls walking down a street to get in his van where the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the evidence regarding defendant's encounter with the minor girls was relevant and admissible because that evidence revealed defendant's true plans about his encounter with the victim on the day he committed the offense. The trial judge could have reasonably concluded that the inherent probative force of the evidence, along with the State's need for the evidence, substantially outweighed the danger of any unfair prejudice to defendant, and the presentation of the extraneous offense evidence did not consume an inordinate amount of time. Frank v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 762, 2011 WL 379041 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 2 2011).

689. In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err under Tex. R. Evid. 403, 404(b) in admitting evidence of defendant's extraneous misconduct where the evidence was admitted for purposes other than character conformity and was more probative than prejudicial because the State's need for the evidence was considerable, and although the content of the evidence was emotional, it made the existence of a material and, perhaps, the ultimate disputed fact at trial-defendant's identity as the perpetrator-more probable. Because the pattern and characteristics of the alleged offense against the victim were so distinctively similar to the misconduct adduced in the evidence that a "signature" by defendant was apparent, the evidence showed a modus operandi that the State used both in its identifying of defendant as the perpetrator and in establishing the manner in which defendant committed the offense. Curcuru v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9748, 2010 WL 5020178 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 9 2010).

690. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of a prior robbery during defendant's aggravated robbery trial because: (1) it was committed the evening prior to the instant robbery; (2) defendant and his accomplice acted together in both robberies; (3) both robberies were committed against lone, older women using surprise, speed, and strength through force or the threat of force; and (4) both robberies were committed while using the same vehicle as a means of escape. Therefore, the probative value of the evidence was great, as it showed that defendant and his accomplice acted together in a continuing criminal enterprise and rebutted defendant's theory that he was not a party to the instant robbery but was merely present in the vehicle while it occurred. Davis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6949, 2010 WL 3341514 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 25 2010).

691. Court abused its discretion when it allowed the State to introduce evidence that defendant failed to appear for two drug tests, however, the error did not affect defendant's substantial rights, because the evidence was brief and was not emphasized by the State, defendant had a prior criminal record, and there was direct evidence connecting defendant with the syringe that contained a trace amount of methamphetamine. Hood v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6301, 2010 WL 3049030 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 5 2010).

692. In defendant's drug case, the court did not err by admitting evidence of an extraneous drug offense because the officer testified that he purchased methamphetamine from defendant, which made the intent to deliver much more probable, and the circumstances of the offense were just a simple transaction, which involved no violence or any potential inflaming factors. The testimony of was not a time consuming part of the trial, and while intent might have been proven by circumstantial evidence, the evidence was needed to rebut the defensive theories brought out during cross-examination of the witnesses. Padilla v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 674, 2010 WL 337673 (Tex. App. El Paso Jan. 29 2010).

693. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for the aggravated sexual assault of his eleven-year-old step-grandson in admitting pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) the testimony of defendant's nephew (one of the State's rebuttal witnesses) that defendant had sexually assaulted him where defendant's defense was that his step-grandson and his granddaughter were fabricating their accusations because defendant had testified in his own behalf and after having been fully admonished as to the consequences, and he denied sexually assaulting not only the victim but also his granddaughter. Moreover, there was no merit in defendant's argument that any remoteness of the extraneous offense automatically made the testimony irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Espinoza v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 559, 2010 WL 227680 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 21 2010).

694. In defendant's sexual assault case, the court properly admitted extraneous offense evidence because the disputed testimony was relevant for several reasons; the disputed evidence was relevant because DNA evidence left by the anal sexual assault connected defendant to the charged offense, and the evidence at trial showed that the same individual committed all of the sexual offenses. The complainant's testimony was relevant as same transaction contextual evidence to show the events in question were closely interwoven and to aid the jury in understanding the context in which those events transpired. Walker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9780, 2009 WL 5103274 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 29 2009).

695. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court did not err in admitting evidence that the child was in counseling since the alleged sexual assaults and that defendant's children were removed because evidence regarding the child's need for counseling was probative circumstantial evidence that increased the likelihood that she was sexually abused by defendant, and evidence that it was necessary to remove the children was probative circumstantial evidence that tended to show that the state believed something was occurring that warranted removal. Herrera v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9690, 2009 WL 4981327 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec.

696. In an indecency with a child case, the court erred by admitting extraneous offense evidence due to the lack of similarity between the extraneous offenses and the charged offenses, the duration in time of twenty years between the offenses, and the lack of evidence concerning a continuing course of conduct by defendant. The extraneous acts did not take place in defendant's home and defendant did not ask the witness to touch himself or defendant. Crocker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9432, 2009 WL 4725299 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 11 2009).

697. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault of a child case, the court properly admitted evidence from a witness that defendant liked young girls and oral sex because defendant was accused of fondling the breast of his victim and of performing oral sex on the victim who was ten years old, the evidence pertained to defendant's thoughts and did not implicate any conduct on his part, defendant's statements were the primary evidence of his intent and state of mind, and, the State had a significant need for the evidence. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8923, 2009 WL 3858016 (Tex. App. Waco Nov. 18 2009).

698. Trial court abused its discretion by admitting evidence of defendant's prior burglary arrest pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) where the tendency of the evidence was to show defendant was a bad person or that his character conformed to that of a person from whom criminal conduct might be expected. However, the error did not influence the jury, or had but a slight effect on its verdict of guilt, because the State's presentation of the alleged burglary, although factually detailed, was brief and received only passing mention in closing argument, and because the propensity and potency of the evidence to characterize defendant as a criminal was blunted by the previous, unopposed, admission of evidence of his prior conviction for manslaughter. Tello v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8401, 2009 WL 3518006 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 30 2009).

699. Trial court erroneously admitted a 1993 judgment convicting defendant of misdemeanor assault where the judgment was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it had no relevance apart from proof of character conformity. Moreover, evidence of the conviction was not available for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 609 because the record contained no evidence that the victim of the assault was female, and there was thus no proof that it was a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. Tello v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8401, 2009 WL 3518006 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 30 2009).

700. In a murder case, evidence of defendant's drug dealing was properly admitted because, according to a witness, defendant and the victim were rival drug dealers, and proof of motive was important to the State's case because the State was unable to produce an eyewitness who actually saw defendant shoot the victim. The time spent attempting to prove that defendant sold illegal drugs was not out of proportion to the time required to present such evidence. Koy Timon Moore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7847 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 8 2009).

701. Court did not err by admitting extraneous offense evidence of defendant's assaultive behavior occurring prior to, and after, the sexual assault because the extraneous offense evidence was admissible to show the context in which the criminal act occurred because defendant's assaultive behavior was "blended, or connected" to the sexual assault forming an "indivisible criminal transaction." Moreover, the evidence was helpful to the jury in their determination whether defendant used or exhibited a deadly weapon during the "same criminal episode." Quincy v. State, 304 S.W.3d 489, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7645 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 30 2009).

702. In a sentencing trial for felony assault to a family member, there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 when the trial court admitted testimony from defendant's wife about the circumstances of a prior assault and guilty plea. The testimony was relevant punishment evidence because it illustrated defendant's propensity for family violence and that he was not deterred by his earlier conviction. Murchison v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7481, 2009 WL 3050823 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 24 2009).

703. Court did not erroneously admit evidence of an undercover drug buy the day before defendant's warrant was executed because the evidence of the undercover buy served to make a fact of consequence--defendant's care, custody, and control of the contraband with intent to distribute--more or less probable than without the evidence. Further, the court instructed the jury that it could consider the evidence of the undercover drug buy only if it believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense. Stewart v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6391, 2009 WL 2488504 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 17 2009).

704. Where defendant was convicted of three counts of promotion of child pornography and four counts of possession of child pornography, the trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) by admitting an exhibit showing a list of subfolders and 900 file names from defendant's computer. The evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for the State to show that defendant organized, stored, and shared the downloaded images and that his doing so was not the result of mistake or accident. Wenger v. State, 292 S.W.3d 191, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4859 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

705. In a trial for indecency with a child, in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(b), there was no error under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, 404, in admitting extraneous offense evidence. Evidence of possession of child pornography was relevant to defendant's intent to arouse or gratify his sexual desire; evidence of methamphetamine use was relevant to show defendant's state of mind at the time of the charged offense and tended to show how the offense unfolded and progressed; and evidence that defendant physically abused the victim and two other children, in addition to providing context about the relationship between the victim and defendant, was admissible to show the victim's state of mind and explain why the victim did not speak up earlier about the abuse. Stinson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3186, 2009 WL 1267348 (Tex. App. Dallas May 8 2009).

706. During defendant's criminal trial for the sexual asault of a child, the State was permitted to introduce extraneous offense evidence that defendant encouraged the victim's involvement in several crimes to rebut defense counsel's opening remarks that defendant was a positive influence on the victim. The trial court determined the extraneous offense evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to correct the false impression created by the defense; the extraneous offense evidence was relevent under Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it tended to make less probable defendant's argument that he was encouraging the victim to be a decent and productive citizen. Ytuarte v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3056, 2009 WL 1232327 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 6 2009).

707. In a sexual assault of a child case, evidence that defendant had been subjected to unusual sexual events in his youth and that he related those events to the sexual assault of the child tended to rebut a contention that any contact with the child's penis was simply an accident, and therefore, the evidence was properly admitted. Additionally, the evidence took no additional time to develop initially, and was mentioned again during the trial only when defendant took the stand and denied making some of the statements. Watterson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2938, 2009 WL 1148751 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 29 2009).

708. Court properly admitted extraneous offense evidence because the extraneous offenses admitted tended to "make the existence" of a fact of consequence "more probable" and established that: defendant's gang was a criminal street gang, defendant had an affiliation with the gang, and defendant committed the instant offense as a member of a criminal street gang. Furthermore, the probative force and the State's need to admit the extraneous offenses outweighed the factors that favored exclusion; the evidence was not only relevant, but essential to the State's burden of proof. Fuentes v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2544, 2009 WL 997508 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 14 2009).

709. In a sexual assault of a child case, the court reversibly erred by admitting extraneous acts evidence because defendant's practice of not using a condom while engaged in consensual sex with an adult companion, or informing the companion of his HIV positive status, had the practical effect of prejudicing any defense raised by defendant regarding the complainant's credibility. Such an effect would have been detrimental to defendant, who sought to discredit the complainant by pointing out factual variances in his outcries, and by suggesting that the complainant was motivated to fabricate the assault to avoid being schooled in an alternative education program. Lopez v. State, 288 S.W.3d 148, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2050 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 26 2009).

710. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not err in admitting the victim's videotaped statement because defendant raised the issue of self-defense. A witness testified that in defendant's altercation with the victim, the victim was the aggressor and defendant tried to resist retaliating; as a result of that testimony, defendant's alleged assault of the victim was relevant rebuttal evidence to prove that defendant acted with the requisite intent. In re B.H., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1852, 2009 WL 692613 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 18 2009).

711. In defendant's assault case, the court did not abuse its discretion by admitting photographs of injuries to the victim's husband's upper arm, neck, wrist, and forehead and a photograph of a broken chair to fully understand the context of the altercation. It was also within the court's discretion to conclude that the injuries to the victim's husband and the means by which they were inflicted were so connected to the injuries alleged in the indictment as to form an indivisible criminal transaction. Lopez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1755, 2009 WL 638182 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 12 2009).

712. In defendant's sexual assault of a child case, the trial court did not err in excluding his offer of proof at trial concerning an earlier outcry of sexual abuse by the victim regarding another individual because the testimony of the victim's mother in defendant's offer of proof provided only indirect evidence of any statement by the child. Although it was clear from the mother's testimony that she believed defendant's sister was coaching the child in the 2001 incident, no evidence showed that the specific statement attributed to the victim, then five years old, was false. Gonzales v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1435, 2009 WL 498032 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 27 2009).

713. Victim's knowledge of defendant's violent past was not relevant in a retaliation-by-threat case for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401. The witness did not testify that his knowledge that defendant had actually killed a person contributed to his fear. Pollard v. State, 277 S.W.3d 25, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 233 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

714. In defendant's aggravated robbery case, evidence during the punishment phase of defendant's gang affiliation was relevant to defendant's punishment and the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. An officer testified that defendant's gang was involved in narcotics trafficking, theft, kick burglaries, and other similar offenses. Sutton v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9068 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 4 2008).

715. In an aggravated assault case, testimony that defendant was a member of the Mexican Mafia was properly admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) as it was necessary to prove why the girlfriend gave conflicting statements (intimidation) and supported the State's theory that defendant's motive was to stab the victim for being an ex-member of the gang. Salinas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6910 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 10, 2008).

716. In defendant's murder case, a trooper was properly allowed to testify concerning defendant's apparent false theft report because it was consistent with the State's theory that it was defendant's addiction to gambling that was at the heart of the money problems that essentially poisoned the relationship between defendant and the victim, his wife; part of the State's theory was that the victim was murdered when she threatened to quit her job and thus, cut off any further support of defendant's gambling. Stafford v. State, 248 S.W.3d 400, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 1280

(Tex. App. Beaumont 2008).

717. In a trial for retaliation by threat against a witness, it was error to admit evidence of defendant's 20-year-old murder conviction; the evidence admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as context to explain the witness's fear of defendant because the witness's state of mind was not an element of the offense of retaliation under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 36.06. Pollard v. State, 255 S.W.3d 184, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 609 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2008).

718. In defendant's robbery case, the State properly presented evidence of an extraneous robbery because the offenses occurred within three miles of one another and within a six-day time period, both took place late in the morning in large retail parking lots, and both acts were perpetrated quickly, snatching purses from unaccompanied females walking or standing in the parking lots; additionally, the testimony rebutted defendant's theories of alibi and that one victim's brief opportunity to view the perpetrator led to a mistaken identification; therefore, the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Evans v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 477 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 22 2008).

719. At defendant's capital murder trial, the trial court properly admitted evidence pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) that defendant possessed a semi-automatic weapon the week before the offense where the evidence showed that the victim was shot seven times by a semi-automatic weapon, and there was also ample evidence that defendant shot the victim. The evidence was not more prejudicial than probative because the State did not impute defendant's possession of the semi-automatic weapon to be a crime, the State did not imply that defendant was generally a criminal because he possessed the weapon, and there was no indication that the weapon might have been used in another offense. Johnson v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 6256 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2007).

720. In a fraud action brought by the principals of a home health business against an investor, the testimony of the investor's prior business partner was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) as proof of the investor's motive in seeking involvement with the business, his intent to commit fraud by association with the business, and his plan for gaining control over the business's financial affairs and siphoning off the business's assets. The prior business partner testified that he had also sued the investor for fraud under circumstances very similar to those in the underlying case. Rogers v. Alexander, 244 S.W.3d 370, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 5103 (Tex. App. Dallas 2007).

721. In an aggravated sexual assault case, the court properly allowed a neighbor's testimony that on two occasions she caught defendant looking into her daughters' bedrooms while the girls were undressing because it demonstrated that defendant displayed an inappropriate sexual interest in teenage girls, thus rebutting the defensive theory that he was the victim of a frame-up; in addition, the evidence was probative of defendant's intent to commit the sexual offenses against the victims by showing that he had a similar pattern of gratifying his sexual desires through watching the neighbor's daughters undress, the evidence, which did not involve any physical touching, was not worse than the charged offenses and was not graphic, and the State's need for the evidence was significant. Mayfield v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 2545 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 29 2007).

722. In a burglary trial, there was no error in the admission of evidence that defendant had, in his possession when he was arrested, items taken in a subsequent burglary from the same victim; the evidence was admissible to rebut a line of questioning directed at burglaries that occurred after defendant was in custody. Ellis v. State, 2007 Tex. App. LEXIS 414 (Tex. App. Tyler Jan. 24 2007).

723. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence that police found a pistol in the trunk of his car when they arrested him because: (1) the extraneous offense in question, being a felon in possession of a firearm, was never presented to the jury; (2) the victim's description of the pistols used during the robbery general matched the pistol found in defendant's vehicle; (3) the weapon was found in a vehicle that closely matched the victim's description of a vehicle on the scene of the robbery; and (4) admission of the gun did not unfairly prejudice defendant. Young v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 11371 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 21 2006).

724. Extraneous offense testimony was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the issue of identity and was admissible to prove that defendant posed as a police officer and sexually assaulted a prostitute; the facts of the charged offense and the extraneous offenses showed a pattern of conduct sufficiently distinctive to constitute a signature. Page v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2521 (Dec. 20, 2006).

725. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence relating to the search of the girlfriend and the discovery of the crack pipe because under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the evidence was relevant to the issue of whether the contraband and drug paraphernalia were present in the house and tended to prove an affirmative link between defendant and the methadone, and therefore the evidence was relevant to show defendant's knowledge or intent to possess the methadone. The probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because it had high probative value in affirmatively linking defendant to the methadone. Davis v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2526 (Tex. Crim. App. Dec. 14, 2006).

726. In defendant's robbery and drug possession case, a court properly admitted evidence of a "drug ledger" seized at defendant's apartment because, while searching the apartment for evidence related to drug transactions and defendant's possession offense, the officers discovered identification documents taken from the robbery victims, the drug ledger evidence assisted the jury in understanding how the officers linked defendant to the robberies and the circumstances under which he possessed cocaine, and the drug ledger was admissible as res gestae of defendant's offenses. Villegas v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 9334 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 27 2006).

727. In defendant's assault case, extraneous offense evidence regarding defendant's having cut a witness with a knife on a prior occasion was properly admitted because, under defendant's self defense theory, his intent in stabbing the victim was to defend himself and the State's theory was that defendant was the aggressor and his intent was not defensive; in addition, the evidence was more probative than prejudicial; the time the prosecution devoted to developing the evidence did not present a danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or undue delay. Salazar v. State, 222 S.W.3d 10, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 8382 (Tex. App. Amarillo 2006).

728. Evidence of a judgment that terminated defendant's parental rights to three of her children after the date that she allegedly murdered her newborn infant was relevant at her capital murder trial under Tex. R. Evid. 401, and had relevance apart from mere proof of character conformity in compliance with Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), because an extraneous offense/bad act that took place subsequent to the offense for which a defendant was on trial did not make the extraneous offense/bad act inadmissible per se; furthermore, the judgment was introduced by the State after defendant had testified that the infant's death on the night in question was not the result of any intentional or knowing conduct on defendant's part, and the termination judgment contained findings by the trial judge that defendant "knowingly" placed or allowed her other children to remain in conditions dangerous to their physical or emotional well-being, which at least arguably made it more probable that defendant's acts or omissions on the night in question were done either intentionally or knowingly. Fergerson v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 6589 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 26 2006).

729. In defendant's murder case, evidence of the history of physical abuse in the relationship between defendant and the victim was relevant and properly admitted; the extraneous-offense evidence rebutted defendant's claim of accident and showed that he intended to cause death, serious bodily injury, or bodily injury; in addition, the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Brown v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 5163 (Tex. App. Austin June 16 2006).

730. In a murder trial, there was no error in allowing a witness to testify that he had seen defendant in possession of a gun four to five years before the murders. Springsteen v. State, 2006 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 2340 (Tex. Crim.

App. May 24 2006).

731. Trial court did not err when it admitted evidence that defendant had been seen selling drugs a month before her indicted offense of being a felon in possession of a firearm because the testimony, elicited from a witness present when the indicted offense was committed, was relevant and tended to make the existence of defendant's intent to possess a firearm more likely than not, as the witness testified that he knew of five prior occasions on which defendant sold crack cocaine and also commented that drug dealers were often armed to protect themselves from being robbed. Moody v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1762 (Tex. App. San Antonio Mar. 8 2006).

732. In a resisting arrest case, counsel was ineffective where, inter alia, counsel failed to investigate or interview defendant in detail about his criminal history or his prior contacts with the arresting officer; failed to seek discovery from the State; failed to file and obtain rulings on a motion in limine to require the State to raise extraneous matters outside the presence of the jury; failed to prepare defendant to testify; failed to object to evidence of inadmissible extraneous matters during the guilt phase; invited evidence of unadjudicated arrests during the punishment phase; and failed to object to failure of the punishment-phase charge to include a reasonable doubt instruction. Walker v. State, 195 S.W.3d 250, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1381 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2006).

733. Where defendant was convicted of intoxication manslaughter, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of his prior driving record at the punishment phase; the evidence was relevant to sentencing, because it gave the jury a complete picture of defendant's driving history. Bernal v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 1002 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 8 2006).

734. Defense counsel's lack of an objection to evidence that defendant put his hands over his front pockets during his pat-down, ran from the police, and discarded "little white bags" while in flight did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel because the evidence was relevant to show defendant's motive for striking a police officer and the reason for his flight, and the fact that the bags were never found did not make the officer's testimony inadmissible for lack of relevance or probativeness; furthermore, the evidence might also have been viewed as same transaction contextual evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because the events surrounding the stop, flight, and arrest were so connected that they formed an indivisible criminal transaction. LeBleu v. State, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 887 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 1 2006).

735. In a criminal prosecution for capital murder, the trial court did not err by allowing the prosecutor's questions regarding the possible exchange of sexual favors for forgiveness of a drug debt; the evidence was admissible to show the relationship between defendant and the victim. Whitmire v. State, 183 S.W.3d 522, 2006 Tex. App. LEXIS 170 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. 2006).

736. Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence extraneous offense evidence, specifically, nine other images of children engaged in types of sexual conduct, because (1) a jury could find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant knowingly and intentionally possessed the additional nine images of child pornography; (2) the extraneous offenses made it more probable that defendant intentionally possessed the one image for which he was indicted; (3) the extraneous offenses were relevant to rebut the defensive theory of mistake; and (4) the probative value of the evidence outweighed the possibility of unfair prejudice. Boyd v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6907 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 25 2005).

737. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission of evidence that the petitioner had used and sold illegal drugs roughly 10 years before his arrest for sex crimes was not relevant to the jury's sentencing determination. The petitioner's involvement with illegal drugs was separate and unrelated to his sex crimes, and was therefore not helpful to the jury in making its sentencing determination. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006

U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

738. Habeas petitioner's counsel's failure to object to the admission during the jury's sentencing determination of images of adult bestiality taken from the petitioner's computer. The images did not form part of the factual basis for the charges to which the petitioner had plead guilty, and had no relevance to the jury's sentencing determination apart from demonstrating the depths of depravity to which the petitioner had sunk; even if the evidence were relevant in some tangential way to the determination of his sentence, it was highly probable that considerations of unfair prejudice would have sufficed to keep this evidence from the jury. Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16596 (5th Cir. Tex. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 126 S. Ct. 1621, 164 L. Ed. 2d 334, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2520, 74 U.S.L.W. 3543 (U.S. 2006).

739. Evidence of an extraneous assault offense that defendant allegedly committed against his wife after her aggravated kidnapping and six days before his trial on that charge was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) for the purpose of showing his intent to inflict bodily injury on his wife where defendant's intent was a fact of consequence because the indictment included an allegation that he intended to commit murder or to inflict bodily injury when he abducted his wife. Furthermore, evidence of defendant's subsequent alleged assault of his wife was relevant because his subsequent conduct made it more probable that he intended to inflict bodily injury on his wife during the charged offense. Simoneaux v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5628 (Tex. App. Tyler July 20 2005).

740. Court did not err by admitting evidence concerning the circumstances of a prior sexual assault conviction where defendant encountered the victims in the parking lot of their residences, waited for the victims to return to their rooms, approached them under the guise of needing help, and made advances toward raping them but ejaculated before penetration. Because intent was a material element of the offense on which the State carried the burden of proof, the probative value of the witness's testimony was high and was not overcome by the danger of unfair prejudice. Fields v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 5494 (Tex. App. Austin July 14 2005).

741. In an injury to a child case where defendant contested his guilt by claiming that he did not injure the child but that she fell, the trial court did not err in permitting the State to introduce evidence that defendant had previously committed an extraneous offense against another young child as it may have been helpful to the jury to rebut defendant's defensive theory and show that he injured the victim. Furthermore, evidence of the extraneous offense was not of such a nature as to impair the efficacy of a limiting instruction: the evidence showed that the child involved in the extraneous offense was not seriously injured but, at most, had bruises on her face from defendant's hands. Harrell v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4578 (Tex. App. Eastland June 16 2005).

742. In a trial for indecency with a child, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a prior indecency conviction. The current charge arose from defendant's exposing himself, and he argued that he had merely forgotten to zip his pants; the extraneous offense evidence therefore tended to make a fact of consequence--whether defendant had or lacked intent to arouse or gratify sexual desire--more or less probable. Arp v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4535 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 15 2005).

743. In a murder trial, evidence was properly admitted, under Tex. R. Evid. 401 -- 404, of a shooting incident that occurred eight days after the murder. The extraneous offense evidence was relevant to the development of the case and was admissible to show the development of the investigation and defendant's intent or knowledge regarding the gun; as to prejudice, the evidence was presented almost matter-of-factly and included no injuries, disturbing photographs, or emotional testimony. Gonzales v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4532 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 14 2005).

744. Trial court should have excluded as irrelevant and prejudicial a BB gun that was found in a defendant's truck and that was not used during the charged burglary. The error was harmless, however, because the court did not have fair assurances that the mind of an average juror would have found the State's case less persuasive had the BB gun not been admitted. Moreno v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4487 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 9 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 6371 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 11, 2005).

745. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's statement under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) where it appeared that it believed that the portion of the statement in which defendant admitted to threatening a prostitute with a box cutter referred to the complainant because the statement corroborated the complainant's testimony and was relevant to the issue of consent. Furthermore, the statement was not inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it strengthened the State's case on the consent issue and because, while the acts described in the statement were probably distasteful to at least some, if not all, of the jury members, they were not any more inflammatory than the charged offense. Marc v. State, 166 S.W.3d 767, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 4228 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2005).

746. In an aggravated assault trial, the fact that defendant was known to carry guns did not pertain to prior bad acts and was relevant to the disputed issue of whether defendant was in fact carrying a gun on the night in question. Morga v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2975 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 20 2005).

747. Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of two prior extraneous acts in defendant's trial on charges of possession of pseudoephedrine with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine because there was no direct evidence of defendant's intent, and intent could not necessarily be inferred from the act itself. The evidence of the prior extraneous act in which defendant was found with fresh track marks in his arm was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because methamphetamine use and addiction was highly probative regarding commission of the charged offense, and the evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to show intent, plan, and absence of mistake. Fulfer v. State, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2449 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 31 2005).

748. In a criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault, defendant's statement about robbing someone was part of a continuum of activity beginning with his presence in the victim's apartment. The statement was offered to assist the jury in identifying defendant as the perpetrator; the trial court properly admitted the statement. Williams v. State, 161 S.W.3d 680, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 2014 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2005).

749. Where defendant was tried for aiding seven men escape from prison, evidence of the post-escape crimes committed by the seven men bore heavily upon defendant's character and moral blameworthiness; the evidence was admissible to help the jury determine an appropriate sentence for defendant's crimes. Rodriguez v. State, 163 S.W.3d 115, 2005 Tex. App. LEXIS 1084 (Tex. App. San Antonio 2005).

750. In a murder trial, extraneous evidence was properly admitted regarding the specifics of cocaine that was purchased together by defendant and the victim because the evidence was relevant to motive. The ruling was within the zone of reasonable disagreement as to whether the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Worsham v. State, 2004 Tex. App. LEXIS 4342 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 13 2004).

751. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that a defendant ingested methamphetamine shortly before a murder was committed because the jury could have inferred from the evidence that the defendant's reasoning was altered, the evidence was offered to show the defendant's mental state rather than as character evidence, and the trial court engaged in a Tex. R. Evid. 403 balancing test and did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence. Saxer v. State, 115 S.W.3d 765, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 7512 (Tex. App. Beaumont 2003).

752. There were sufficient similarities between aggravated robbery with a deadly weapon, the offense with which defendant was charged, and the extraneous offenses of aggravated sexual assault/aggravated kidnapping and kidnapping, to uphold the trial court's determination that the extraneous offense evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 404(b). Booker v. State, 103 S.W.3d 521, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 611 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2003).

753. Court did not err in admitting the alleged victim's testimony that after defendant accused her of infidelity, he assaulted a neighbor, because the testimony was admissible as same-transaction contextual evidence. Lewis v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1837, 2014 WL 644812 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 19 2014).

Evidence : Relevance : Relevant Evidence

754. Information in defendant's driver's license record was properly admitted because it confirmed that his driver's license number was used to pawn rings on the day of the robbery, and it showed defendant's height, which indicated he was the person who had held a gun; the evidence supported a fact of consequence-that defendant participated in the robbery. Deleon v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 9009 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 14 2014).

755. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in excluding as irrelevant his proffered evidence that he had hepatitis B and the complainant did not because he did not offer direct evidence that he had hepatitis B at the time of the 2010 sexual assault; the actual evidence of his hepatitis B infection was his statement to the complainant's mother sometime in 2003 that he was infected. Liriano v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 8772 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 12 2014).

756. Witness's testimony was relevant because the fact that defendant was angry and agitated earlier the same evening of the stabbing tended to prove his intent to commit an act clearly dangerous to human life against the victim without a reasonable belief that deadly force was necessary to protect himself. Allen v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7895 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 22 2014).

757. Evidence of methamphetamine found at the murder scene was properly admitted because it was relevant to establish a motive for defendant's actions and to rebut her claim of accidentally shooting the victim; there was no evidence presented that defendant was in possession of the drugs, and the evidence was admissible because the jury could infer that the prior relationship between the victim and defendant was one that involved drugs. Taylor v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 7282 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 3 2014).

758. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of defendant's expert as irrelevant as to whether the trooper was lawfully discharging an official duty when defendant drove at him because the expert's opinion regarding the justification for the use of force was not based on any information regarding the trooper's encounter with defendant. Ramos v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6818 (Tex. App. Austin June 26 2014).

759. Defendant did not point to any evidence that the victim's mother hit the victim order to get the victim to lie about being sexually assaulted; evidence that the mother had allegedly hit the victim, without more, was irrelevant to the mother's veracity. Coleman v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6691, 2014 WL 2809064 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 19 2014).

760. Where defendant appealed his conviction for intoxication manslaughter, the trial court did not err by allowing one of the State's experts to testify about the results of his blood test and by admitting her report into evidence. His blood alcohol concentration near the time of the collision was relevant to whether he had lost the use of his normal physical and mental faculties at the time of the collision. Martin v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6544, 2014 WL 2802912 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 18 2014).

761. Appellant's conviction for felony theft was affirmed because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence where nothing about the other individual's arrest for the January 30 break-in made any facts of consequence to the determination of appellant's guilt or innocence in the January 25 theft any more or less probable. Graves v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6522 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 17 2014).

762. Where a former employee alleged that a former employer terminated the employee because the employee refused to drive a truck without a required permit and a jury found in favor of the employer, any error in excluding seven overweight permits as irrelevant was harmless because the excluded permits were not relevant to the first jury question since whether the truck was overweight on the day in question was not relevant to whether the employee was discharged, and the jury did not reach the remaining questions. Nezat v. Tucker Energy Servs., 437 S.W.3d 541, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6518, 38 I.E.R. Cas. (BNA) 1033 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2014).

763. In a sexual assault case, the jury was to determine whether defendant penetrated the child's sexual organ and an expert properly relied on a case study to support his opinion that penetration of the child's sexual organ could have occurred even in the absence of physical evidence of penetration; therefore, the discussion of the study served to make the fact of penetration more probable in light of the expert's medical examination findings. Allen v. State, 436 S.W.3d 815, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 6465, 2014 WL 2619438 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 13 2014).

764. Court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior conviction for possession of cocaine because the defensive theory was that he did not know the cocaine was in his pocket because it was placed there while he was unconscious; therefore, the evidence was relevant to rebut defendant's defensive theory. Rios v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5867 (Tex. App. El Paso May 30 2014).

765. Counsel's testimony was insufficient to support an award of attorney's fees in a suit affecting the parent-child relationship because the mother did not identify her counsel as an expert on attorney's fees in response to the father's request for disclosure and did not show good cause or a lack of unfair surprise or prejudice, which made the attorney's testimony incompetent and irrelevant. In re B.L.B., 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5447 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 22 2014).

766. Trial court abused its discretion in denying the deletions and revisions in the lease drafts on hearsay and relevancy grounds in parties' dispute over the terms of an oil and gas lease because they were offered to show what was said, such that they were not hearsay, and they were clearly relevant to the parties' intentions. PNP Petroleum I, LP v. Taylor, 438 S.W.3d 723, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5402, 180 Oil & Gas Rep. 1049 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 21 2014).

767. Because a mandatory settlement credit did not have to be pleaded as an affirmative defense, the trial court did not err in admitting the settlement agreement into evidence; the existence and amount of the settlement were facts of consequence in the case. Dalworth Restoration, Inc. v. Rife-Marshall, 433 S.W.3d 773, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5271, 2014 WL 1941822 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 15 2014).

768. Assault defendant failed to request notice of other crimes and acts evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) and therefore could not complain of the adequacy of the State's notice; moreover, the notice gave her reasonable notice of a neighbor's expected testimony that defendant sought to bribe her to say that the victim struck defendant first. Additionally, this bribery evidence was relevant as consciousness of guilt and was not unfairly prejudicial. Cavazos v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5045, 2014 WL 1881691 (Tex. App. Amarillo May 8 2014).

769. Defendant was not was denied the right to present a full defense when the trial court refused to allow his DNA expert to testify regarding lab bias because the expert's proposed testimony was not relevant to the issues before the jury; absent any evidence of lab bias, the substance of the proposed testimony-that context could influence experts and that all human beings had bias-was more appropriate for cross-examination than for expert testimony. Millage v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3801, 2014 WL 1407331 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 8 2014).

770. Child victim's therapist's testimony was relevant in defendant's continuous sexual abuse of a child trial where: (1) the therapist testified that the child was in group therapy with him for approximately 10 sessions; (2) he described the child's demeanor in therapy and her ability to interact with others in the group; (3) he testified he came up with an individual treatment plan for her; and (4) he gave more general testimony concerning the many ways children make their outcries after abuse, including the issue of delayed outcry that was tied to the case in that the jury would need to evaluate the credibility of the child's delayed outcry. Paramo v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3717, 2014 WL 1413794 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 7 2014).

771. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence regarding defendant's membership in a gang because it was relevant to show defendant's motive for shooting the two victims and to rebut defendant's theory that he shot at the vehicle in self-defense. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3618 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 3 2014).

772. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's shirts with gun shot residue particles on them because the evidence was relevant, as the shirts were collected from defendant's vehicle two days after the murder. The evidence was not prejudicial because it showed defendant's connection to a discharged weapon, directly or indirectly, at some point in time. Burks v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3243, 2014 WL 1285731 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 26 2014).

773. Statement that defendant made in jail to the effect that he was in jail for not following the rules could reasonably have led to an inference that he knew and chose not to follow the "rule" that he was not allowed to be in possession of a firearm because he was a felon; the statement was relevant to whether or not he was the individual who was in possession of the firearm. Greer v. State, 436 S.W.3d 1, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 3192, 2014 WL 1621787 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 20 2014).

774. Because defendant failed to object to the relevance of his jailhouse tattoos, as opposed to an alleged gang affiliation, and failed to object to the State's continued questioning about his tattoos, testimony concerning his tattoos was admitted into evidence without objection. While defendant failed to obtain an adverse ruling in the first place, even if he had, he would have waived the objection by failing to either interpose it each time the evidence in question was offered or seek a running objection. Shipley v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2868, 2014 WL 1004498 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 14 2014).

775. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing defendant to cross-examine the CPS supervisor about an investigation into the victims' adoptive grandfather because testimony was irrelevant, as the supervisor testified that the grandfather sexually abused his sons not his daughters and there was no evidence that any victims identified the grandfather as the perpetrator of the sexual abuse. Oliver v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2836, 2014 WL 1016244 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 13 2014).

776. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing defendant to cross-examine the foster mother because the evidence was not relevant, as none of the victims made outcries of sexual abuse against their adopted grandfather, the foster mother's adult son, or the foster mother's ex-husband, and the foster mother's testimony was that none of the victims were left alone with any of those men. The foster's mother's encounters with CPS and her own past experience as a victim of sexual abuse was also irrelevant. Oliver v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 2836, 2014 WL 1016244 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 13 2014).

777. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was appropriate because testimony that defendant showed signs of impairment consistent with the use of hydrocodone supplied a logical connection between defendant's admitted use of hydrocodone and his driving. As such, that testimony was relevant; because the challenged evidence was relevant and reliable, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the videorecording of defendant's statement and the expert's testimony. Everitt v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1667, 2014 WL 586100 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 13 2014).

778. Exclusion of testimony by defendant's wife, who was also the complainant's older sister, regarding alleged prior sexual abuse by the complainant's father was proper because it would have confused or distracted the jury from the main issue-whether defendant perpetrated the crimes against the complainant-and would have been more prejudicial than probative. The complainant, who was twenty-three at the time of trial, positively identified defendant, and no one else, as the perpetrator of the charged offenses, and when questioned outside the presence of the jury, the complainant denied any sexual abuse at the hands of her father. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 1369, 2014 WL 505332 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 6 2014).

779. At defendant's trial for robbery, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony regarding his efforts to resist arrest because evidence relevant to his flight from the scene was a circumstance indicative of guilt. Johnson v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 471, 2014 WL 222929 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 16 2014).

780. To be relevant in this driving while intoxicated case, the evidence needed to influence the jury's determination of whether defendant was intoxicated. Parr v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 183, 2014 WL 69567 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 9 2014).

781. Defendant admitted to taking a Xanax pill at noon and drinking at least two drinks at a bar on the day he was arrested, and he was arrested about four hours after consuming the Xanax, such that the pharmacist's testimony was relevant to the jury's determination about whether the combination of Xanax and alcohol contributed to defendant's intoxication. Parr v. State, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 183, 2014 WL 69567 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 9 2014).

782. Taxing Authorities' legal theory concerning abandonment of ownership rights had to fail because none of the Taxing Authorities' evidence concerning activities or conditions on the property was relevant to the trial court's inquiry of who was entitled to the excess proceeds. Dallas County City of Grand Prairie v. Sides, 430 S.W.3d 649, 2014 Tex. App. LEXIS 5042, 2014 WL 1847415 (Tex. App. Dallas May 8 2014).

783. Without knowing the terms of the settlement agreement, there was no basis for finding that the location, amount or expenditure of the settlement funds was relevant to a claim or defense in the underlying suit or was calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence; discovering the total amount of the settlement would not reveal anything about the owner's alleged role in hiring a company. In re Bdpj Houston, Llc, 420 S.W.3d 309, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15491, 2013 WL 6907155 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 31 2013).

784. Discovery regarding the location, amount, or expenditure of the settlement funds would not be relevant to whether the owner held money which in equity belonged to the manager, and thus the trial court abused its discretion in compelling discovery that was not relevant, and conditional mandamus relief was granted. In re Bdpj Houston, Llc, 420 S.W.3d 309, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15491, 2013 WL 6907155 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 31 2013).

785. Sometimes a settlement agreement is protected with conditions of confidentiality, but that does not make the agreement or its contents undiscoverable as a matter of law, and the rule provides that a settlement agreement is discoverable if relevant to the underlying litigation without regard to the settlement's confidential nature. In re Bdpj

Houston, Llc, 420 S.W.3d 309, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15491, 2013 WL 6907155 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 31 2013).

786. Owner consistently argued that the information regarding a settlement was not relevant, the manager did not cite authority showing that an objection was ineffective because it was not based on privilege or confidentiality, and the owner did not waive its objections. In re Bdpj Houston, Llc, 420 S.W.3d 309, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15491, 2013 WL 6907155 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 31 2013).

787. Defendant suffered no harm from the admission of evidence of a prior offense of aggravated assault/family violence against the same victim because, by his plea, defendant admitted he had a dating relationship with the victim, and the State only referenced the exhibit in its final argument to show a dating relationship between defendant and the victim. Pickett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15410, 2013 WL 6923977 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 27 2013).

788. Upon entry of an agreed final divorce decree, the husband filed a motion for new trial in which he alleged his attorney lacked the authority to sign a settlement agreement on his behalf while he was in federal prison. The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it excluded an exhibit consisting of an engagement letter between the husband and his attorney, because the husband failed to explain how the letter made it more probable that the presumption of authority to settle could be overcome. Phillips v. Phillips, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 15275, 2013 WL 6726819 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 19 2013).

789. On appeal of defendant's murder conviction, his complaint that the trial court abused its discretion by overruling his Rule 401 relevancy objection to three of the State's exhibits was not preserved for review. His appellate brief lacked a legal argument supported by authority asserting how the trial court abused its discretion or how the evidence to which he objected was irrelevant. Green v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14355 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 22 2013).

790. State was properly permitted to use a demonstrative exhibit of a photograph of two capsules of a prescription drug because it had unmistakable relevance, as it corroborated the victim's testimony, and it had little to no inflammatory effect unrelated to its probative value; the evidence tended to solve an issue in the case by shedding some light on the subject at hand-the drug that was given to the victim and her half-brothers to make them sleepy so that defendant could commit the child sexual assualt offenses against the victim. Ruiz v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 14013, 2013 WL 6047030 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 14 2013).

791. Court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing the patient's counsel to pose certain questions, because counsel provided an extensive cross-examination of the doctor concerning his opinion that the patient had a behavioral abnormality that made him likely to commit a predatory act of sexual violence, and courts were allowed discretion to control testimony to avoid confusing the jury. In re Romo, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 13495 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 31 2013).

792. In a civil commitment proceeding, defense counsel's cross-examination of an expert was not improperly limited because counsel sought to elicit information that did not make the existence of any fact of consequence to the determination of whether an inmate was a sexually violent predator more or less probable. In re Ramirez, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12917, 2013 WL 5658597 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 17 2013).

793. Because defendant presented no evidence showing the relevance of the witness's prior misdemeanor conviction or the circumstances surrounding his alleged dismissal from the sheriff's department, the trial court did not err by limiting her cross-examination of him. Sheffield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12789, 2013 WL 5638878

(Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 15 2013).

794. Trial court could have found that the pages from the company's website in 2010 were not relevant because the issue was whether the company made an offer on its website in 2009, and as the court found that the plain meaning of the words on the website in 2009 was not an offer, the homeowners did not show that the ruling probably caused the rendition of an improper judgment. Mcatee v. City of Austin, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12518, 2013 WL 5855638 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 10 2013).

795. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by precluding defense counsel from asking a witness whether she saw the child victim play with her sexual organs based on Tex. R. Evid. 412 because the testimony was not enough to make it probable that a three-year-old child masturbating in some vague way two days before the assault caused the presence of physical trauma two days later. In addition, the incomplete information was of minimal probative value, even if relevant. Turner v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12690, 2013 WL 5614311 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 10 2013).

796. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a photograph of defendant's back yard taken in 2006 because it showed defendant's knowledge and intent, as some lumber and a yellow chair were in defendant's backyard three years before similar items were added to the waste pile after defendant's encounter with an officer. Mellen v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12091, 2013 WL 5520369 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 26 2013).

797. In a prosecution for interference with child custody in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.03(a)(1), as there was no mutual agreement between defendant and the children's mother to vary from the divorce decree's terms of possession, evidence of their past dealings regarding possession of the children was properly excluded as irrelevant. Gallegos v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12149, 2013 WL 5460044 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2013).

798. In a prosecution for interference with child custody, the trial court properly excluded evidence that defendant sought to present to show that the mother was not a fit custodial parent, as it was not relevant to any issue in the case. Gallegos v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 12149, 2013 WL 5460044 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2013).

799. Medical records were properly excluded in a medical malpractice action because no expert testified that the child's twin's records were significant to an opinion on the cause of the child's death or the standard of care, the expert did not list the twin's records among the records he had reviewed in formulating his opinions, nor did he discuss the twin's hospitalization in his testimony. Woodard v. Sherwood, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11923 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 23 2013).

800. In a sexually violent predator civil commitment case brought under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a)(2), the trial court did not err in admitting a videotape appellant had made of a comatose woman that demonstrated the extent of his voyeurism and the escalation of his voyeurism to sexual assault, pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401. In re Chapman, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11404, 2013 WL 4773231 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 5 2013).

801. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a shovel into evidence because the State's theory was that defendant dumped the victim's body in a wooded area and covered the body with grass clippings, rocks, leaves, and bamboo, and the fact he had a shovel readily available to assist him was relevant. Briscoe v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10859 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 29 2013).

802. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defense counsel's relevance objection to a question posed to defendant's girlfriend regarding whether members of the Nigerian community generally preferred to handle themselves matters that were otherwise appropriate for law enforcement because it was relevant to the question of whether defendant's witnesses were biased against the State. Agbogwe v. State, 414 S.W.3d 820, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 11103 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 29 2013).

803. Defendant's conviction for driving while intoxicated was proper because the statutory-warning form did not constitute improper "bolstering" of the officer's earlier testimony. Although the form confirmed the officer's testimony that defendant had refused to provide a blood sample and had refused to sign the form, it also contained the statutory warnings themselves, a physical description of defendant, identifying information such as defendant's date of birth and driver's license number, and information concerning the date and time of the alleged offense. Condarco v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10741 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 27 2013).

804. Because the evidence of defendant's extraneous rule violations at the treatment center was irrelevant to prove that she consumed alcohol on a specific date, any error in the admission of that evidence was harmless. Strother v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10606 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 22 2013).

805. Testimony from a State's witness that defendant appeared to be either high on drugs or coming off a high on the morning of his attack against the complainant was admissible because it established an affirmative link between defendant's earlier condition and the offense, rather than being mere background contextual evidence; defendant appeared high earlier in the day, asked the witness for money, and told the complainant he broke into her house because he was looking for money. Steele v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10488 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 20 2013).

806. Daughter's statements in her affidavit signed two days after the night her mother came to pick her up were not statements of her then existing state of mind or spontaneous remarks made while a sensation was being experienced such that they were admissible; the affidavit containing the daughter's statements in a conservatorship proceeding nearly two years prior to her death were not relevant to the damages suffered by the father due to the loss of his daughter's companionship and society. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

807. At issue in the case was the father's mental anguish following the death of his daughter; the single picture of the daughter's body was relevant to that issue and was properly admitted. In re Estate of Macdonald, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 10135, 2013 WL 4081419 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 13 2013).

808. Expert's deposition testimony and accompanying report did not constitute admissible evidence, because the deposition testimony and report were conclusory and lacked indicia of reliability. Schronk v. Laerdal Med. Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9916 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 8 2013).

809. At the punishment phase of defendant's trial for robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence photographs of his wife after a domestic violence incident because the photographs were "relevant" for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a) to a police officer's testimony that defendant might have a propensity toward intoxication and violence; the photographs were also helpful to the jury in assessing a proper sentence. The definition of "relevant," as stated in Tex. R. Evid. 401, did not readily apply. Cordova v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9947 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 8 2013).

810. In defendant's unauthorized use of a motor vehicle case, a court did not err during punishment the phase by admitting a photograph of defendant's chest tattoo that read "murder is my motive" because a defendant's choice of tattoos was some evidence of his character, and therefore, the photograph was relevant to defendant's character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9474, 2013 WL 3943108 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

811. In defendant's evading arrest case, the court did not err during the punishment phase by admitting a photograph of defendant's chest tattoo that read "murder is my motive" because a defendant's choice of tattoos was some evidence of his character, and therefore, the photograph was relevant to defendant's character. Gossett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9473, 2013 WL 3943120 (Tex. App. El Paso July 31 2013).

812. During defendant's sentencing hearing for his aggravated robbery convictions, the court did not err in admitting evidence regarding the general reputation of a gang and his tattoos because the probative value of a detective's testimony was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice; the testimony was relevant. Hickman v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9323 (Tex. App. Dallas July 29 2013).

813. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of defendant and an accomplice entering a casino shortly after robbing the victim because it provided at least a small nudge in providing corroboration of the accomplice's testimony, whose credibility was highly contested. Maldonado v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9277 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2013).

814. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting baggies of cocaine and a lab report because the evidence was relevant, as there was testimony by multiple witnesses that defendant and his accomplices used cocaine together after the murder, the baggies were found with the money that had been taped in the trunk of the vehicle in which defendant and his accomplices were riding at the time of their arrest and helped corroborate the accomplice's testimony. Maldonado v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 9277 (Tex. App. Waco July 25 2013).

815. At defendant's trial for continuous sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a licensed professional counselor who treated sex offenders; the expert's testimony about grooming for a sexual offense was relevant to assist the jury in understanding defendant's behavior. Cox v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8890 (Tex. App. Waco July 18 2013).

816. Where defendant was convicted of multiples counts of aggravated sexual assault, attempted aggravated sexual assault, and indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of the two sexual assault nurse examiners. The testimony of the nurses as to the children's accounts of abuse by their grandfather tended to make more probable the fact that the abuse actually took place; accordingly, the evidence was relevant. Trevino v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8618 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 11 2013).

817. In a misappropriation of trade secrets action, the court did not err in excluding appellees' prior pleadings in which they accused 16 parties of conspiring to steal trade secrets; the minimal relevance of the pleadings was substantially outweighed by the risk of distracting the factfinder from the issues by provoking speculation regarding the disposition or settlement of the cases against the former defendants. Southwestern Energy Prod. Co. v. Berry-Helfand, 411 S.W.3d 581, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 8549, 182 Oil & Gas Rep. 798 (Tex. App. Tyler July 10 2013).

818. Proffered expert testimony, even if relevant, was not necessarily admissible, and assuming the trial court erred in limiting appellant's cross-examination of the expert, given his testimony on his credentials and that supporting his methodology, any error likely made no difference in the jury's verdict. In re Weissinger, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7819, 2013 WL 3355758 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2013).

819. In a liability insurance coverage dispute, testimony on whether the claimants had contracted asbestosis was properly excluded as irrelevant and confusing because bodily injury, as defined in the policies, occurred upon exposure to asbestos and was not determined on a case-by-case basis. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Chi. Bridge & Iron Co., 406 S.W.3d 326, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7856, 2013 WL 3270615 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 27 2013).

820. Although some of the testimony concerning the course of litigation was relevant to the attorney's breach of contract claim, other evidence that was admitted without objection was relevant only to the client's affirmative defense of prior material breach; it was clear the parties understood the issue of prior breach and that the issue was actually tried. James A. West, P.C. v. Pugh, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7911 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 27 2013).

821. Facts in the certificates of account status were relevant, in connection with a claim that a company could not affirmatively seek to enforce an arbitration clause by not meeting all franchise tax requirements under Tex. Tax Code Ann. § 171.253, and thus it was appropriate for the court to take judicial notice of the certificates from the Texas Comptroller. Dish Network L.L.C. v. Brenner, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7838, 163 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P61367 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 27 2013).

822. Jury had the responsibility of resolving a credibility issue, and the court presumed the jury did so in favor of the verdict; furthermore, this particular testimony was not relevant to the appeal. Zavadil v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7840 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 27 2013).

823. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the extraneous offense evidence (unadjudicated aggravated robbery) over defendant's objections, because the evidence supported the State's theory that defendant intended to participate in the offenses. Menendez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7742 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 26 2013).

824. Officer saw appellant had slurred speech, bloodshot eyes, was unsteady on his feet, and smelled of alcohol, and this supported a finding of intoxication; furthermore, the officer said appellant displayed all clues of intoxication on a horizontal gaze nystagmus test, appellant said he had consumed a drink that evening and he refused to submit to a blood alcohol test or other field sobriety test, which was relevant to intoxication, and his speeding was also a factor the jury could have considered in his driving while intoxicated trial. Lovett v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7636 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 25 2013).

825. Relevant to the offense of aggravated assault was a weapon, and the exhibit gun had no inflammatory attributes and was presented only as an aid to the firearm expert's testimony, such that the trial court did not err in admitting the exhibit for demonstrative purposes. Moore v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7436 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 19 2013).

826. During defendant's trial for burglary of a habitation with intent to commit sexual assault, the court did not err in allowing a witness to testify that he made sexual advances toward her while they were on a date and that she rejected his advances because the testimony was relevant to determining his intent and state of mind when he entered the victim's house about two hours later. Badura v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7249 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

827. Cost of one complainant's medical care was not relevant to any guilt/innocence issue because it did not tend to make more or less probable the existence of any fact of consequence related to the elements of the crime of intoxication assault, but this was not reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) and did not have a substantial or injurious effect on the jury's determination of guilt, given that (1) the extent of the complainants' injuries was not contested and the evidence each one suffered serious injuries was overwhelming, (2) when later evidence of medical expenses were admitted, defendant did not object, (3) evidence of the various injuries suffered was properly admitted to prove an element of the offense, that each complainant suffered serious bodily injury, and (4) the jury would likely have surmised that the required medical care would have been costly. Sharp v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7235 (Tex. App. Eastland June 13 2013).

828. Negotiability of the note was not relevant in this case between the original parties to the note; precedent established that the elements of a claim for nonpayment of a promissory note were the same whether the instrument was negotiable or not. Ropa Exploration Corp. v. Barash Energy, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7290 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 13 2013).

829. Based on his conviction for first-degree felony offense burglary of a habitation with intent to commit sexual assault, defendant did not show why it was reasonable for him to believe that the findings of fact and conclusions of law established he was not required to comply with sex-offender registration, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 62.001(5)(D); it was within the trial court's discretion to determine that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were not relevant evidence. Durham v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7301 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 13 2013).

830. Relevance was not the only grounds on which the evidence was excluded; alleged rebuttal evidence and to be offered to rebut other evidence, not as part of the case-in-chief, and in many instances the evidence was sought to be offered as part of appellant's case-in-chief or the rebuttal arguments they made were in response to argument not in evidence. Estate of Muniz v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 7158 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 12 2013).

831. Limited liability company's argument that the forum-selection clause was procured through fraud was relevant, if at all, to the enforceability of the clause, not to whether the parties otherwise entered into an agreement that contained the clause. In re Harris Corp., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6769, 2013 WL 2631700 (Tex. App. Austin June 4 2013).

832. Father claimed there should have been separate trials, but the issue to be resolved against the father and mother was whether their rights to the child were to be terminated, and the petition alleged the same grounds, and the facts supporting grounds for termination under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(E), (2) showed that one parent's endangering conduct often related to the other's same conduct; the parents' admitted drug use, the mother's inability to provide a safe environment, and the father's repeated incarcerations supported the claim that the father endangered the child, and these facts were relevant to the best interest determination because the children were often left with the mother when the father was incarcerated, and neither one was able to provide a safe environment long-term, plus they lacked adequate family support, and the housing the father provided created unsanitary living conditions, and thus the case against the mother and father were not properly severable because the two cases involved the same issues and facts and were intertwined, for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 41, 174. In the Interest of T.G., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6714 (Tex. App. Tyler May 31 2013).

833. Appellant objected to testimony on grounds that it was more prejudicial than probative, presumably under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and when the State sought to admit photographs, appellant set forth a relevance objection, but at neither time did appellant assert a due course of law or due process objection, plus he failed to continue objecting and did not obtain a running objection or ask for a hearing outside of the jury's presence, and thus he failed to preserve this claim for review. Mccowan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 6138 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 16 2013).

834. Although a corporation tried to argue its declaratory judgment sought relief that was broader than a mere denial of a company's clams, any such argument was irrelevant; the corporation failed to establish its ownership interest in the stock, and the corporation could not maintain a declaratory judgment claim for the right to cancel preferred shares because it did not own any shares to cancel, and the trial court did not err in granting summary judgment in this regard. Hydroscience Techs., Inc. v. Hydroscience, Inc., 401 S.W.3d 783, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5575 (Tex. App. Dallas May 7 2013).

835. Evidence of defendant's cocaine use after the charged murder offense was admissible to show his consciousness of guilt and had relevancy beyond character conformity because defendant stated that he went on a cocaine binge because he felt guilty about the murder. Shuff v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5469 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 2 2013).

836. Lender discussed the irrelevancy of the failure to pay a fee, the existence or not of a closing, and other items, but these factors had no relevance as to whether an informal fiduciary relationship existed; the court had to look to the evidence of the parties' relationship prior to the specific transaction. Constr. Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Chicago. Title INS. Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5339 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 1 2013).

837. It was not necessary to have a written agreement between the lender and title company, or an actual purchase of services, and the absence of consideration was not relevant; it was enough to establish consumer status, for purposes of Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.45(4), if the lender sought to acquire the services of the title company in good faith. Constr. Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Chicago. Title INS. Co., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5339 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 1 2013).

838. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of another potential suspect because defendant made an offer of proof but did not tender any other evidence connecting his brother's alleged drug use or dealing to his murder. Honish v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5139 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 25 2013).

839. Father said he would keep living with the mother as long as she was making efforts to fight her alcohol problem, and his refusal or inability to grasp how the alcoholism affected the children was a major issue, such that the trial court could have properly considered the severity of the mother's alcoholism as relevant to the issue of whether the father's rights were to be terminated. In re O.N.H., 401 S.W.3d 681, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 5000, 2013 WL 1749419 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 24 2013).

840. Trial court did not err by excluding a defense witness's testimony as it related to defendant's neighbor's arrests and drug-related involvement with police because while there was evidence indicating that the neighbor might have been the anonymous tipster, there was no evidence that he planted the drugs, and therefore the fact that he may have been tipster was not relevant to the jury's determination of whether defendant possessed drugs. Even if the evidence was relevant, the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the relevance was substantially outweighed by the danger of confusing the jury or causing undue delay. Ivie v. State, 407 S.W.3d 305, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

841. Trial court did not err by excluding an agent's testimony concerning the identity of the tipster because the agent stated he did not know but only had ideas as to who the tipster was. Ivie v. State, 407 S.W.3d 305, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 18 2013).

842. Trial court did not err by refusing to allow defendant to cross-examine an officer about the confidential informant because the disallowed questions were not relevant to the issue of defendant's guilt or innocence, as the State did not rely on events related to obtaining the search warrant in proving defendant's guilt. Nwaogu v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4588, 2013 WL 1490489 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 11 2013).

843. Expert must testify before the jury has received the jury charge and before it has been instructed on specific elements and standards concerning specific claims, and the expert must have some leeway to reference the controlling legal terms and related concepts while testifying, otherwise, a jury would not be able to make sense of the expert's testimony or measure it against the charge's requirements, and the sponsoring litigant could not meet a motion for directed verdict; it follows that the standards governing admission of expert testimony do not automatically foreclose every reference to legal terms or the disciplinary rules in the course of expert testimony addressing an attorney's alleged breaches of the duties owed to a client, and such an expert properly may include these references when the trial court sets appropriate limits, and the continuum of potentially relevant testimony from an expert likely will vary according to the specific facts and the specific legal standards being litigated in specific cases. George Fleming & Fleming & Assocs., L.L.P. v. Kinney, 395 S.W.3d 917, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4507 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 9 2013).

844. Court did not err in prohibiting defendant from cross-examining two State witnesses regarding criminal charges that were pending against them when they testified; defendant failed to show how identifying their pending charges would have tended to show that their testimony might be biased in an unrelated prosecution of defendant for murder. Johnson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4467 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 9 2013).

845. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a letter defendant wrote to the woman who leased the apartment where the drugs were found because it was relevant, as defendant's statement in the letter that he had the "best dope around" could be seen as indicative of a willingness to provide the woman and perhaps others with dope, further connecting him to the woman and suggesting an intent to deliver. In addition, the letter was strongly probative to rebut any contention that his presence in the apartment was merely fortuitous and assisted the State with its proof that defendant's possession of the drugs was knowing. Bible v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4455, 2013 WL 1411849 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 8 2013).

846. Assuming character evidence was relevant, the error in excluding it was subject to a harm analysis for nonconstitutional error. Bundick v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4350 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 4 2013).

847. Assuming evidence was relevant, appellant did not provide a harm analysis, and the court could not find from its own review that the error, if any, had a substantial effect on the verdict, given that the State made a strong case for appellant's guilt, which evidence included eyewitness testimony that appellant fired a gun that killed the victim, as well as the victim's dying declaration that identified appellant as the shooter; the excluded testimony tried to establish a history of conflict between appellant and one witness, and while appellant discussed Tex. R. Evid. 404(a)(2), this applied to one who raised self-defense, which appellant did not, and nothing showed that the victim or witness had been carrying a gun. Bundick v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4350 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 4 2013).

848. Evidence was relevant to support explanations by witnesses that they lied to police because they were scared, and while appellant argued against admissibility, the court did not find his arguments persuasive, given that (1) the evidence was offered to show he had the ability to carry out his threats, and to corroborate the testimony, there was no requirement that the evidence show he owned or used the weapons, but only that he had access to them, and (2) the trial court did not weigh witness credibility to make a determination about admissibility of evidence. Hurst v. State, 406 S.W.3d 617, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4282 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 4 2013).

849. Employer claimed the trial court erred in denying its new trial motion based on no notice because the clerk did not send notice of the default judgment as per Tex. R. Civ. P. 239a, but the employer failed to cite authorities supporting this claim other than the rule itself; whether or not the trial court mailed notice was irrelevant because failure to do so was not reversible error in a restricted appeal. Lcs Corr. Serv. v. Chavera, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4410 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 4 2013).

850. To the extent that records of other injuries or medical conditions showed a personal injury claimant had back pain before a slip and fall incident, the records were relevant and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402. Absent evidence of other litigation, the medical evidence was not overly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and the admission of irrelevant medical records unrelated to back pain was harmless error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a)(1) because the judgment did not turn on records regarding unrelated conditions. Sparks v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 2013

Tex. App. LEXIS 4206 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 2 2013).

851. At defendant's trial for unlawfully appropriating a firearm, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence of another rifle theft and pawn transaction because it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to provide the same transaction context for the single theft of the rifles. Defendant's theft of the two rifles was a single act to deprive the victim of his property. Sutterfield v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3972, 2013 WL 1281843 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 28 2013).

852. In a child sexual assault case, testimony that a victim's mother sent inappropriate text messages to her underage step-daughter was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401; this did not show that the mother manipulated the victim into making a false accusation. Because the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence in question, the appellate court did not need to determine if the exclusion of that evidence prevented appellant from presenting a meaningful defense. Garcia v. State, 397 S.W.3d 860, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4035, 2013 WL 1248305 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 28 2013).

853. Within one issue, appellant did not make any attempt to apply law to the facts or those adduced in the offer of proof, and thus appellant's issue was inadequately briefed, but even if the court found it properly briefed, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence in question; appellant did not explain how the victim's depression was relevant to impeach her credibility as a witness in this sexual assault case, her mental stability, or her memory, plus appellant did not ask questions about the victim's medication and its effects, and the trial court was not given the change to consider the issue at the offer of proof, such that the trial court's decision to exclude the evidence set forth in the offer of proof was not error. Mathis v. State, 397 S.W.3d 332, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 4110, 2013 WL 1313775 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 28 2013).

854. Appellees' no-evidence motion was concerned only with the pastor's personal liability, and thus issues of the church's liability and the fraud claim were irrelevant. Williams v. Bell, 402 S.W.3d 28, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3208, 2013 WL 1197760 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 26 2013).

855. Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper because the admission of evidence was relevant, probative, and offered in rebuttal to defendant's portrayal of himself as a gentle, even-handed father. Although the State's need for the evidence was minimal, it took very little time to present evidence of both extraneous offenses and, in light of the entire record, that evidence had little, if any, potential to sway the jury in an irrational yet indelible way. Duncan v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3169, 2013 WL 1258449 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 22 2013).

856. Owner did not provide the trial court with a complete record of the arbitration proceedings that would have shown that the information he sought was relevant or necessary for the case, and thus the court could not find that the trial court erred in confirming the award despite the owner's claim of an error in the discovery ruling. Goldman v. Buchanan, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3086, 2013 WL 1281744 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 21 2013).

857. Appellant raised Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403 objections to a certain incident, but he did not claim that the extraneous offense evidence was improper character evidence, and as he did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), his complaint on appeal did not comport with his objections at trial, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a), and thus he did not preserve his complaint for review. Rudzavice v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3140, 2013 WL 1188924 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 21 2013).

858. Evidence of tenants' activities on commercial premises was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 to establish damages claimed by the tenants and to rebutting the landlord's assertions that the tenants did not have a legitimate operation. Rhey v. Redic, 408 S.W.3d 440, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 3054, 2013 WL 1150197 (Tex. App. El Paso Mar. 20 2013).

859. Evidence was admissible for determining the children's best interests, and the testimony was relevant to the best interest factors, such that it was not necessary for the mother's counsel to object to the testimony about extraneous offenses, counsel was not ineffective for failing to do so, and the court overruled appellant's issue related to a Daubert hearing. In re R.L.A., 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2745, 2013 WL 1092210 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 15 2013).

860. Although the court agreed that the motion for protective order under Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.6(b) did not specifically state why the discovery sought was not relevant, the attorney and firm made their objections and arguments to the trial court, and noted that all causes had been fully resolved by summary judgment, such that any information appellee could have provided was irrelevant; the arguments made were not conclusory and were supported by the record, and as the information appellants sought was irrelevant and would not have aided in the enforcement of the judgment for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 621a, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the protective order. Blankinship v. Brown, 399 S.W.3d 303, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2740 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 14 2013).

861. Evidence of other crimes may be admissible if it is relevant for other purposes apart from showing character conformity. Wilson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2428 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2013).

862. Evidence that appellant possessed another stolen wallet was likely not probative of whether appellant had robbed the victim in this aggravated robbery case apart from character conformity, and while the State could not introduce the extraneous evidence to show appellant robbed the victim because he robbed the other person in the extraneous case, the State could introduce the evidence to show it was less likely appellant had innocently obtained the victim's purse because he also possessed a stolen wallet; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of the extraneous offense robbery, as this tended to show that appellant's explanation that he innocently obtained the purse from another party was false, and evidence of the prior robbery was relevant for the non-character purpose of rebutting the defensive theory. Wilson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2428 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 12 2013).

863. Testimony was relevant to explain what led to the purchase of cocaine from appellant, and detective's testimony did not implicate appellant in any extraneous offense. Hawkins v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2282 (Tex. App. Eastland Mar. 7 2013).

864. Court properly admitted evidence that defendant's girlfriend purchased a silver .38 caliber revolver shortly before the victim's death because a codefendant testified that defendant had used a silver gun, and another witness testified that defendant was carrying a "chrome .38, snub-nose revolver" on the day the victim was killed. The inherent probative force of the evidence concerning the guns was its tendency to show that defendant was the shooter, and although the evidence was prejudicial, it was not unfairly prejudicial. Buckley v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2246 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 7 2013).

865. In defendant's evading arrest case, the court properly allowed testimony concerning typical behavior during a traffic stop because the testimony that very few people fled when a squad car initiated a stop by activating its lights was relevant to the offense of evading arrest, and went to defendant's intent. The fact that most people pulled over after the police initiated a stop made it more probable that defendant intentionally disregarded the officer's attempt to pull him over. Spencer v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2227, 2013 WL 1282307 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 6 2013).

866. In a divorce, it was not error to admit a husband's prescription bottles because the bottles were relevant, as the husband (1) introduced a photograph of the husband's prescription bottles, (2) elicited testimony from the wife which appeared to explain circumstances such as stress and depression related to the husband taking prescription medication, and (3) the wife's counsel specifically sought to introduce the bottles to rebut the husband's questioning on cross-examination as to whether the medications were current. Howell v. Howell, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1991, 2013 WL 784542 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 28 2013).

867. Finding that respondent was a sexually violent predator (SVP) was proper under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.002(5) because there was no error in failing to allow respondent's counsel to question a witness on the interpretation of the SVP statute, Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.001-851.151. The questions respondent was not allowed to ask did not address a fact of consequence that would have made the doctor's prognosis more or less probable. In re Hill, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1881 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 28 2013).

868. Defendant made no showing that the complainant's immigration status was relevant to proving a material issue in the case and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's relevance objection, Tex. R. Evid. 401; the trial court could have concluded that the prejudice from defense counsel's deportation and immigration-based questions far outweighed any probative value, Tex. R. Evid. 403. Lopez v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 2042, 2013 WL 1277883 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 28 2013).

869. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence that defendant lied about his military service because his fictitious military involvement and explanations to his wife about living at various military posts set forth the necessary facts to explain to the jury how defendant isolated the minor victim from her mother, defendant's wife, during the period of abuse; without defendant's stories of military service, the victim's testimony about the abuse made little or no sense. Seery v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1772, 2013 WL 683327 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 21 2013).

870. Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding additional evidence regarding the receipt of text messages, because the record indicated that the evidence defendant wanted the jury to hear, the jury did in fact hear; the jury heard the evidence, though perhaps from fewer witnesses and in less detail than defendant would have preferred. Wooten v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1658, 2013 WL 625734 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 20 2013).

871. In proceedings on a petition to civilly commit an inmate as a sexually violent predator, it was not error to exclude evidence on the inmate's super intensive supervision parole plan because the issue was whether the inmate was a repeat sexually violent offender with a behavioral abnormality making the inmate likely to commit a predatory act of sexual violence, under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.003(a), so the inmate's parole supervision level was irrelevant. In re Smith, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1095, 2013 WL 476771 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 7 2013).

872. While the court agrees that a transferee's awareness of the fraudulent nature of a transfer is not one of the elements of a Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 24.005(a)(1) claim and that evidence of one badge of fraud is not conclusive, the evidence in this case included many factors that were relevant to the lessor's claim, including that the relatives' deemed admissions conclusively established that the transfers were made to insiders with no consideration right before a judgment was entered against the debtors, and the transfer's purposes was to hinder and defraud the lessor; this evidence, which was not rebutted, was sufficient to support the finding of the requisite intent under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 24.005(a)(1). Qui Phloc Ho v. Macarthur Ranch, Llc, 395 S.W.3d 325, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1199, 2013 WL 458323 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 7 2013).

873. At defendant's trial for possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance, cocaine, in a drug free zone, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of weapons found at the location where defendant was arrested; it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 to show that the weapons were used for protection of the drugs. Blue v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1231, 2013 WL 489998 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2013).

874. As the evidence appeared to show that claimed heirs were the decedent's heirs at law, and her will poured her estate into the disputed trust, the trust documents were relevant to the claimed heirs' claims and would be discoverable, such that the executor did not show a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court's ordering the trust documents to be produced, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 52.3, 52.7; the court denied mandamus relief. In re Paschall, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 1254 (Tex. App. Waco Feb. 7 2013).

875. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting booking photos of defendant and his father because the photos were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as they aided the prosecution in properly identifying and distinguishing defendant from his father. Wood v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 31 2013).

876. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence defendant's jail telephone call recordings and summaries because they aided the State in its rebuttal of defendant's defense that he had no involvement or knowledge of the dealership's transactions. The trial court was within the zone of reasonable disagreement to find that the probative value of the recordings and summaries were not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Wood v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 31 2013).

877. In appellant's murder case, the State offered a photograph to establish that the woman a sergeant identified as the victim was the same women whose autopsy he attended, and the sergeant identified the number visible in the exhibit as the number that applied to this case, and there was no error in the admission of the photograph in addition to the admission of the sergeant's testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403; the fact that the State offered the photograph in addition to the sergeant's testimony did not destroy the photograph's probative value, and it was still relevant evidence. Jackson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 889 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 31 2013).

878. Dates of affidavits in this case were highly relevant and indicated untrusthworthiness, and thus the affidavits did not fall under the business records exception and the court's holding in another case was not inconsistent with this case. Ortega v. Cach, Llc, 396 S.W.3d 622, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2013 WL 326317 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 29 2013).

879. Buyer of imported vehicles failed to preserve its objection to a composite exhibit consisting of sales contracts and an invoice, although one contract showed a seller other than the plaintiff seller, by failing to specify which parts were inadmissible as irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Sunl Group, Inc. v. Zhejiang Yongkang Top Imp. & Exp. Co., 394 S.W.3d 812, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 832, 2013 WL 326324 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 29 2013).

880. State was required to prove that appellant either intentionally or knowingly threatened or put the victim in fear of imminent bodily injury or death, under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.02(a)(2), and her testimony that she had a friend who was robbed more than once and was killed in the last one could have been construed as relevant to the element of fearing injury or death; the court could not say that the trial court erred in overruling the objection. Williams v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 695 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 24 2013).

881. Trial court did not err during defendant's murder trial in admitting photographs that were taken at the crime scene and at the victim's autopsy because the photographs had probative value; they were accurate depictions of both the crime scene and the victim's body that would assist a jury to visualize the crime scene as well as the extent of the victim's injuries caused by defendant's criminal act. Jameson v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 242, 2013 WL 150281 (Tex. App. Amarillo Jan. 14 2013).

882. City was entitled to mandamus relief, because the owner failed to object to the city's discovery requests, and the discovery information the city sought went to the heart of the owner's lost profits claim for inverse condemnation through a regulatory taking; the owner had a duty to supplement its answers to the city's requests for production and failed to do so, and the requested documents were relevant. In re City of Houston, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 21 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 4 2013).

883. There was evidence that once the victim voluntarily entered a car, he was prevented from leaving and later he was dragged out and beaten, and while it was true the men permitted the victim to leave, it appeared they only did so because they were already in the process of beating him to death, and to the extent appellant claimed the victim was released in a safe place, that would only be relevant for mitigation of punishment, and it was not relevant in this case; the evidence supported a finding that appellant restrained the victim for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 20.01(2), and the evidence supported a finding that appellant, as a principal or party, caused the victim's death in the course of the kidnapping. PeÃ»a v. State, 2013 Tex. App. LEXIS 32 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 3 2013).

884. In case law, the court held that a doctor's letter submitted to an attorney during litigation was not a routine entry in the patient's medical history and was inadmissible under the business record exception, but this was not relevant to the issue in this case, where a witness who was at trial also submitted a document that detailed when she worked in corroboration of her testimony. Ryland Enter. v. Weatherspoon, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10794, 2012 WL 6754966 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 28 2012).

885. Defendant failed to show how excluded evidence about his relative's death in jail was relevant to any fact of consequence because he offered the evidence to show his purported fear of law enforcement and explain his flight from the officer; however, the proffered evidence merely demonstrated that his relative died while he was incarcerated in the county jail. Defendant offered no evidence that the death resulted from any actions or wrongdoing by law enforcement officials. Sheppard v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10638, 2012 WL 6698963 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 21 2012).

886. Issue in this debt collection case was not whether the company's attorney constituted a debt collector, but whether the company was a debt collector and if that deprived the company of standing; thus, it was not relevant whether the company's attorney could have met the debt collector definition. Avdeef v. Rbs Citizens, N.A., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10603, 2012 WL 6632754 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 21 2012).

887. Because an expansion joint was the subject matter of the claims in question, it was undisputed that the joint was relevant to the litigation. Miner Dederick Constr., Llp v. Gulf Chem. & Metallurgical Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 10129, 2012 WL 6082714 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 6 2012).

888. Evidence that the victim was a drug dealer would have been irrelevant and inadmissible if offered to show that his life was not as valuable as other society members, and the trial court was within its discretion to limit the cross-examination in this regard during the punishment phase, as the victim's status as a drug dealer was collateral and irrelevant to the assessment of an appropriate sentence, and this status was not directly relevant to the murder charge; permitting impeachment of the victim's character with extrinsic evidence would have confused the issues and wasted the jury's time, and it was within the trial court's discretion to exclude the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Gladney v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9806, 2012 WL 5949473 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 28 2012).

889. In his aggravated assault on a peace officer trial, appellant opened the door to extraneous offense evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) by giving misleading testimony concerning his relationship with a neighbor, the person he thought he shot; appellant's testimony was relevant and necessary to (1) clarify the false impression, (2) rebut the reasonableness of his self-defense theory, and (3) show that he was prohibited from possession a firearm outside his house as a bond condition. Moten v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9541, 2012 WL 5696200 (Tex. App.

Waco Nov. 15 2012).

890. In a case stemming from a house fire and the resulting product liability lawsuit filed by real parties in interest against the manufacturer of a computer power supply/surge protector and others, the trial court abused its discretion in ordering the manufacturer to produce certain of its back up power supply products, discovery produced in relation to another lawsuit, and other documents because real parties failed to establish a correlation between the specific model they had purchased and another of the manufacturer's product lines, failed to show that their request was not narrowly tailored to include only relevant materials, and failed to show that the litigation information they sought was relevant. In re Am. Power Conversion Corp., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9369, 2012 WL 5507111 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 14 2012).

891. Trial court could have reasonably concluded that the phone records from the two and one-half hour window immediately before and after the accident were reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence to support the pleadings, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering production of the phone records from 4:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. on the date of the accident; whether the mother made threats to the driver did not make it more or less probable that she negligently entrusted the go-cart to her son, or that her son was negligent in driving the go-cart, Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3, Tex. R. Evid. 401, and the trial court abused its discretion in ordering those records to be produced. In re Moor, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9232, 2012 WL 5463193 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 8 2012).

892. Trial court did not err by refusing to allow a witness to testify that another witness had engaged in fraud and had accused her of assault because the testimony was not relevant in defendant's trial for engaging in organized criminal activity. Pittman v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 9057 (Tex. App. Tyler Oct. 31 2012).

893. There was no evidence that certain persons would have information that was relevant to residents' allegations, and although the company claimed that employees from a Texas entity would provide expert testimony, the company agreed if the case was dismissed to produce the entity witnesses in Louisiana. In re Mantle Oil & Gas, LLC, 426 S.W.3d 182, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8898, 183 Oil & Gas Rep. 364, 2012 WL 5323584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 25 2012).

894. In considering whether litigating in Texas would result in a substantial injustice to the company, the company argued that many witnesses were residents of Louisiana and beyond the compulsory subpoena power of the trial court under Tex. R. Civ. P. 176.3(a), and the company was not required to identify specific evidence or witnesses that it could not obtain via subpoena power; the company identified agency employees who had relevant information who were based in Louisiana, and none of them were subject to the Texas court's compulsory subpoena power, and as the company was already defending substantively identical claims in Louisiana, and witnesses and evidence were located there and beyond Texas compulsory subpoena power, the court found this factor weighed in favor of dismissal. In re Mantle Oil & Gas, LLC, 426 S.W.3d 182, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8898, 183 Oil & Gas Rep. 364, 2012 WL 5323584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 25 2012).

895. There was nothing to indicate that working interest owners played a role in operating the well or in decisions that might have led to the well blowout, and thus these owners were irrelevant to the dispute, in connection with the court's analysis of dismissal on forum non conveniens grounds. In re Mantle Oil & Gas, LLC, 426 S.W.3d 182, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8898, 183 Oil & Gas Rep. 364, 2012 WL 5323584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 25 2012).

896. Residents overlooked witnesses and evidence that was relevant to the case that was not located in Texas, and these were beyond the reach of Texas trial court subpoena power under Tex. R. Civ. P. 176.3, plus relevant physical evidence was located in Louisiana, and the residents did not point to specific acts or omissions on the company's part that took place in Texas; considering the public and private factors weighed in favor of dismissal. In re Mantle Oil & Gas, LLC, 426 S.W.3d 182, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8898, 183 Oil & Gas Rep. 364, 2012 WL 5323584 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 25 2012).

897. Defendant's allegation that the complainant's unlawful sexual contact with her thirteen years prior to the assault was irrelevant to disproving the allegation of a dating relationship was rebutted by the State because the complainant testified he and defendant were dating at the time he was injured, and defendant testified that during a phone call she made to the victim after he was injured, she told him "I love you" several times. Smith v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8848, 2012 WL 5238280 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 24 2012).

898. Evidence of drug use by appellant and others was relevant to show a motive for the robbery, and the trial court could have found that their drug issues provided a motive for individuals with no income. Biera v. State, 391 S.W.3d 204, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8782, 2012 WL 5199374 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 22 2012).

899. One witness's car had a direct connection to the robbery, and testimony of an accomplice's use of the credit cards to keep gas in her vehicle was relevant to show the use of the witness's car at the time of the robbery, such that the trial court could have found that evidence of the accomplice's credit card use was relevant to show the identity of the accomplice and appellant as the robbers; the ruling that the credit card evidence had relevance beyond character conformity in appellant's aggravated robbery case was not an abuse of discretion. Biera v. State, 391 S.W.3d 204, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8782, 2012 WL 5199374 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 22 2012).

900. Defendant's convictions for continuous sexual abuse of a young child and indecency with a child by exposure were proper because evidence of the victim being in contact with a registered sex offender did not demonstrate a relevant alternative source of sexual knowledge. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit it. Lubojasky v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8760, 2012 WL 5192919 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 19 2012).

901. Defendant's convictions for continuous sexual abuse of a young child and indecency with a child by exposure were proper because, with regard to the victim's alleged prior sexual behavior, other than her involvement, there was no similarity between those incidents and the current allegations against defendant currently, Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, and 412(b). Lubojasky v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8760, 2012 WL 5192919 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 19 2012).

902. Video recordings showing sex acts between dancers and patrons of the adult establishment were relevant, and therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them during defendant's trial, because they tended to show that the establishment was a prostitution enterprise and was relevant to the charged offense of aggravated promotion of prostitution. Coutta v. State, 385 S.W.3d 641, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8692 (Tex. App. El Paso Oct. 17 2012).

903. Though the court agrees that deportation, like incarceration, is a factor that may be considered (albeit an insufficient one in and of itself to establish endangerment), its relevance to endangerment depends on the circumstances, and under the appellate court's reasoning, the mere threat of deportation or incarceration resulting from an unlawful act, regardless of severity, would establish endangerment, and the Texas Supreme Court disagrees with that analysis; many offenses can lead to an immigrant's deportation, including entering the country unlawfully, and under the appellate court's reasoning, virtually any offense that could lead to deportation, even a minor one committed long before the parent's children were born, would create such an unstable and uncertain environment as to establish endangerment, subjecting countless immigrants to the potential loss of their children. The appellate court's broad reasoning necessarily applies to citizens as well, and any offense committed by a citizen that could lead to imprisonment or confinement would also apparently establish endangerment, simply because the parent's ability to be present in his children's lives would be uncertain, but the nation's Constitution forbids such a far-reaching interpretation of parental rights termination statutes. In the Interest of E.N.C., 384

904. Court agrees that an offense occurring before a person's children are born can be a relevant factor in establishing an endangering course of conduct, but the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services bears the burden of introducing evidence concerning the offense and establishing that the offense was part of a voluntary course of conduct that endangered the children's well-being. In the Interest of E.N.C., 384 S.W.3d 796, 2012 Tex. LEXIS 866, 56 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 19 (Tex. 2012).

905. In connection with appellant's murder conviction as a party, the State focused on appellant's post-offense conduct, and while this was relevant, it could not stand alone, as there also had to be sufficient evidence of an understanding or scheme to commit a crime; the evidence did not show that appellant anticipated that his brother-in-law would shoot the victim, and nothing showed that he he assisted or encouraged his brother-in-law to kill the victim. Gross v. State, 380 S.W.3d 181, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1329 (Tex. Crim. App. Oct. 10 2012).

906. Appellate court noted that actions occurring after the event were relevant, but there was no prior or contemporaneous plan to shoot the victim, and it was speculation to conclude otherwise; the court agreed, and while appellant's post-offense actions could have supported a charge of hindering apprehension or prosecution, evidence of his involvement was insufficient to support his murder conviction under the law of parties. Gross v. State, 380 S.W.3d 181, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1329 (Tex. Crim. App. Oct. 10 2012).

907. Complainant's letter noted the apartment complex where she lived with her family and appellant, and thus the letter was relevant, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, in connecting appellant to where the aggravated sexual assaults took place. Conteh v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8440, 2012 WL 4788386 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 9 2012).

908. In evaluating ineffective-assistance claims for the failure to call witnesses, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has held that the failure to call witnesses at the guilt-innocence and punishment stages is irrelevant absent a showing that such witnesses were available and appellant would benefit from their testimony; the court believes the principle underlying this rule applies to the failure to call witnesses at a revocation hearing. Brown v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8223, 2012 WL 4477378 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 28 2012).

909. Incidents about which appellant wanted to introduce testimony did not implicate himself, and the victim did not make any threat toward him, nor did the victim's prior conduct show that he had any animosity toward appellant, and the evidence was not probative of the victim's state of mind as it related to the situation with appellant two years after the incidents took place, given that before the shooting, the two did not know each other; while appellant could introduce reputation or opinion testimony suggesting the victim was the first aggressor, appellant could not introduce specific acts because that was not admissible for these purposes, and nothing showed that the proffered testimony would have been relevant for any purpose besides character conformity, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Bottorff v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8220, 2012 WL 4477396 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 28 2012).

910. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of two witnesses concerning the victim's prior sexual history because it did not make it more or less probable that defendant touched the victim's breast and therefore was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. In addition, the evidence was properly excluded because it was an attempt to impeach the victim through the inquiry of specific instance of conduct, which was improper under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b). Gonzalez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8246, 2012 WL 4497999 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 28 2012).

911. In a murder case, the trial court did not err when it denied defendant the opportunity to question an eyewitness about her experience with burning people to establish her as an alternate perpetrator. With little details regarding the alleged past conduct, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Dayne Adenauer White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8107 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 27 2012).

912. In defendant's DWI case, he objected to the State's introduction of his blood-test results and extrapolation testimony because the blood draw occurred two hours after he was arrested and therefore was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to whether he had the normal use of his faculties at the time of the alleged offense. The trial court overruled the objection. Crenshaw v. State, 378 S.W.3d 460, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1254, 2012 WL 4372284 (Tex. Crim. App. Sept. 26 2012).

913. At defendant's trial for indecency with a child by contact, the trial court did not err by admitting his recorded interview with an investigator from the district attorney's office. Defendant's description of his sexual urges toward children was relevant to the elements of the offense. Mattingly v. State, 382 S.W.3d 611, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8126, 2012 WL 4457713 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 26 2012).

914. Taken in isolation, a father's conviction arguably could have been irrelevant, but his criminal history as a whole demonstrated that he had been convicted once every two years on average for almost 20 years, and taken in connection with his outstanding charges for murder and aggravated assault, this was relevant on the issue of whether the father engaged in a course of conduct that endangered the child; counsel could have found that objecting to the admission of prior convictions would have been futile, and the court could not find counsel deficient in this regard. Medellin v. Tex. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8225, 2012 WL 4466511 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 26 2012).

915. During the punishment phase of defendant's trial for intoxication assault, the trial court did not err by admitting a statement probative of defendant's general attitude of selfishness because the statement was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to show defendant's character and helpful to the jury in determining whether she was a good candidate for community supervision. Ford v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 8034, 2012 WL 4243715 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 20 2012).

916. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of the sexual assault nurse examiner who examined the child victim during the course of the State's investigation because she was deemed an expert in sexual abuse examinations, so her expert testimony could be helpful to the jury, including to explain why physical evidence would not necessarily be present on the body of a sexual assault complainant. The nurse merely reported the events of the examination and her clinical findings, and she did not offer an opinion as to whether the victim had been sexually assaulted and did not comment on the victim's veracity. Owens v. State, 381 S.W.3d 696, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7922, 2012 WL 4098990 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 19 2012).

917. Regarding evidentiary matters on damages, the court did not need to consider them because the issues were not relevant, as the company was not found liable for conduct upon which a damage award could be based. Schmieding v. Mission Petroleum Carriers, Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7907, 2012 WL 4092716 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 18 2012).

918. Trial court properly admitted a sex offender's prior written statements in his sexually violent predator commitment proceeding because the statements were relevant apart from their tendency to prove the sex offender's stipulated convictions. The prior inconsistent statements were neither unduly prejudicial nor cumulative of the matters that the sex offender admitted in his requests for admissions. In re Commitment of Bath, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7586, 2012 WL 3860631 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 6 2012).

919. Considering the admission of photographs of text messages under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), the text conversations that led up appellant's arrival at his ex-girlfriend's home were relevant in order to prove the motive appellant had for having a gun, and the messages provided contextual evidence, as they were sent immediately before appellant arrived. Trammell v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7149, 2012 WL 3612518 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 23 2012).

920. Text messages' probative value was not substantially outweighed by the prejudice in their admission, under Tex. R. Evid. 403, given that (1) the messages were relevant to the crime, and (2) even if there was error in admitting the messages, there was no harm; even without the text messages, there was enough evidence to substantiate appellant's anger. Trammell v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7149, 2012 WL 3612518 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 23 2012).

921. Police video of appellant in a patrol car after his arrest, which the State wanted to show his comments about possessing a gun, was relevant to whether he had access to a gun that he was accused of wielding during the aggravated assault, and he testified concerning his criminal history and drug use, and thus even if the trial court erred, such was harmless and the court found no abuse of discretion. Trammell v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7149, 2012 WL 3612518 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 23 2012).

922. Court erred during defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child in admitting portions of recorded telephone conversations between defendant and a detective, which stated that defendant would rather spend time with kids, because while the evidence was relevant to intent, the evidence was more prejudicial than probative. Dekneef v. State, 379 S.W.3d 423, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 7024 (Tex. App. Amarillo Aug. 22 2012).

923. Because the extraneous offense evidence showed that appellant was arrested in close proximity to the victim's house after a reported break-in, the trial court was within its discretion to find that evidence of the prior burglary had non-character conforming relevance that rebutted appellant's defensive theory of conspiracy. Garcia v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6924, 2012 WL 3574715 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 21 2012).

924. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence regarding the underlying offense for which defendant was required to register as a sex offender because the State introduced statements made by defendant to officers that he did not think he should have to register as a sex offender because the sex with his thirteen-year-old stepdaughter was consensual. The State argued such evidence was relevant to show defendant's casual attitude regarding sex offender registration requirements and defendant's intent to ignore them; presentation of the disputed evidence did not consume an inordinate amount of time. Toliver v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6902, 2012 WL 3553380 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 17 2012).

925. Appellant failed to meet his burden under the test for ineffective assistance, given that (1) he did not offer any authority or argument, under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(i), showing that the trial court would have erred in overruling an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, (2) the trial court did overrule appellant's relevance objection under Tex. R. Evid. 402 as to a deputy's testimony, (3) appellant did not raise the issue on appeal, although he claimed that one reason counsel should have objected on relevancy grounds was to preserve the issue for appeal, and (4) counsel's failure to object might have been sound trial strategy, as the testimony was brief, counsel already objected to relevance of the testimony, and a later objection was successful and the trial court instructed the jury to disregard the testimony concerning whether committing a crime was something to be expected from persons with a certain disease; the court could not say that counsel's failure to further object was ineffective assistance. Ozuna v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6858, 2012 WL 3525635 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2012).

926. Court rejected appellant's claim that photographs of the victim were more prejudicial than probative under Tex. R. Evid. 403; although they were gruesome, the photographs were probative of the extent and nature of the victim's injuries, and they did not portray anymore than the gruesomeness appellant inflicted. Dempsey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6871, 2012 WL 3525653 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 16 2012).

927. Facts underlying two summary judgment motions were identical, such that reversal of the insured's summary judgment required reversal of the excess insured's summary judgment; although the insured's cross-appeal was filed one day late under Tex. R. App. P. 26.1(d), 26.3, because the insured was entitled to reversal of the excess insurer's judgment, the timeliness of the cross-appeal was not relevant, and the motion to dismiss was moot. United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Lynd Co., 399 S.W.3d 206, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6770 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 15 2012).

928. In a murder case, the court properly admitted photographs of defendant's tattoos because the "REDRUM" and revolver tattoos were especially probative of defendant's intent and attitude relevant to his defense and testimony that he would never point a gun at someone else first. Given defendant's own counsel's indication that everyone had tattoos and criminal records, on both sides, there was no indication the evidence unfairly aroused the jury's hostility or sympathy. Luckett v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6686, 2012 WL 3241802 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 10 2012).

929. During defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in admitting, over defense counsel's objections, evidence of photographic lineups featuring a second suspect because the evidence was relevant as it showed that the victims picked defendant out of 12 different photographs rather than just six. Hendershot v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6632 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 9 2012).

930. For purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 152.202(a)(1), the record failed to show that substantial evidence was not available in Texas regarding the care of the children; the court could not presume there was no evidence in Texas that was relevant to the welfare of the children, and thus the ex-husband did not show that the Texas trial court lost exclusive jurisdiction under the statute. In re Brown, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6732 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 8 2012).

931. Passenger's evidence concerning her physical, emotional, and economic limitations was properly excluded by the trial court because even if it was relevant, it was merely the presentation of cumulative evidence; the passenger's 2008 motion for reinstatement did not raise the issue of how her health and finances may have limited her ability to pursue her claim. Welborn v. Ferrell Enters., 376 S.W.3d 902, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6378 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 2 2012).

932. Whether appellant's associate was the focus of the affidavit was not relevant, as the issue was whether probable cause to search the apartment was established by the affidavit; given the information given by a confidential informant, the magistrate had a substantial basis to find a reasonable probability that the evidence related to the sale of drugs would be found in the apartment, and the trial court did not err in denying appellant's motion to suppress. Loera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6434, 2012 WL 3156004 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 2 2012).

933. On appeal of defendant's conviction for continuous sexual abuse of a child, his complaint that the trial court erred by refusing to allow him to confront a witness was not preserved for appellate review because defense counsel did not articulate that either U.S. Const. amend. VI or Tex. Const. art. I, § 10 demanded admission of testimony about the victim's sexual relations with her boyfriend. Defense counsel's argument that the testimony was admissible as relevant evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401 was not sufficient to preserve the Confrontation Clause claim for review. Dukes v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 6151 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 26 2012).

934. Appellant did not qualify a witness as an expert or prove to the trial court that the purported testimony was relevant and reliable, and thus the testimony was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 702 and the Sixth Amendment right to compulsory process was not violated. Clark v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5973, 2012 WL 3025685 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 25 2012).

935. Appellant did not provide the records at issue, and thus the court could not evaluate whether the records were relevant to the defense or any prejudice resulted from their omission, for ineffective assistance purposes. Noland v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5911, 2012 WL 2989256 (Tex. App. Austin July 20 2012).

936. There was no merit to the argument that the trial court prevented appellant from showing a Brady violation by excluding testimony and records, and the documents appellant characterized as a subpoena duces tecum was merely a list of witnesses, and the excluded testimony had nothing to do with whether appellant committed harassment of officers at a jail where appellant was an inmate; the trial court would not have erred in finding that such was not relevant to the case. Hills v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5910, 2012 WL 2989260 (Tex. App. Austin July 20 2012).

937. Jury charge contained the impairment theory only of intoxication under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.01(2), and a rational trier of fact could have found that appellant was intoxicated when he was stopped by the officer, given that (1) his blood alcohol content was more than twice the limit only 34 minutes after being stopped, and (2) even with no retrograde extrapolation, the results were relevant and probative under the impairment theory, as the results tended to make it more probable that he was intoxicated when he was driving; furthermore, the officer testified that appellant had watery and bloodshot eyes, smelled of alcohol, and exhibited intoxication clues during field sobriety tests, and the officer believed appellant lost the normal use of his faculties given the alcohol, plus appellant's refusal to provide a blood sample, for purposes of Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.061, tended to show a consciousness of guilt, and thus the evidence supported appellant's conviction of driving while intoxicated with a child passenger under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.045. Lane v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5830, 2012 WL 2923324 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 19 2012).

938. Appellant did not show that the dispute in question was relevant to the lawfulness of the conduct used in obtaining the evidence, and thus the trial court did not err in denying an instruction under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.23. Criswell v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5882, 2012 WL 2989144 (Tex. App. Eastland July 19 2012).

939. On appeal from his convictions for compelling prostitution, sexual assault of a child, and sexual performance of a child, the appellate court found that the admission of photographs of items seized from a trash can outside of the studio were admissible because they were relevant and the probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Although the evidence might not have pertained directly to the complainant, proof of the activities at the studio was relevant to whether, in employing the complainant at the studio, defendant intended that she engage in sexual performance and prostitution. Wilkerson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5656, 2012 WL 2877623 (Tex. App. Dallas July 16 2012).

940. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by preventing defense counsel from asking the medical examiner about the percentage of people who died from violent deaths while having narcotics in their bodies because the question would not have elicited any relevant testimony, as the percentage did not make defendant more of less culpable of the victim's murder and did not make a jury's finding of mitigation any more or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Herrera v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5594, 2012 WL 2861673 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 12 2012).

941. As the extraneous offenses were not relevant for any reason beside character conformity, the trial court abused its discretion in admitting the evidence. Castle v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5570, 2012 WL 2862270

(Tex. App. Eastland July 12 2012).

942. Appellant claimed the trial court erred in denying his motion to suppress the videotape of the arrest, but there was no such recording; as the videotape was not relevant, the court went forward as if appellant challenged evidence suppression in general, as this was a fair reading of his argument. Varnado v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5597, 2012 WL 2860704 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi July 12 2012).

943. Officer testified that he stopped appellant because the officer witnessed appellant driving without turning on his headlights, for purposes of Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 547.302(a)(1), and it was shown that it was nighttime; any of the officer's subjective motives were not relevant, and the evidence supported the finding that the officer's detention was reasonable and the trial court did not err in denying appellant's motion to suppress. Baldez v. State, 386 S.W.3d 324, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5466, 2012 WL 2834043 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 11 2012).

944. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence a portion of defendant's statement to the police about manipulating and threatening other children into proposed sexual activity because the evidence made it more likely that he threatened the victim and it rebutted the defensive theory that defendant was guilty of only sexual assault, not aggravated sexual assault. Sandles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5518, 2012 WL 3104377 (Tex. App. Dallas July 11 2012).

945. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing two witnesses to testify about extraneous offenses because it could have concluded that the evidence was relevant, probative, and necessary to rebut defendant's theory that the victim fabricated her allegation against defendant. The State's presentation of the evidence consumed very little time, and it was presented in a fashion to prove defendant's intent or knowledge of the offenses charged in the indictment. Guardado v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5514, 2012 WL 2832561 (Tex. App. El Paso July 11 2012).

946. Store was entitled to partial conditional writ of mandamus, because the claimant's discovery requests for information relating to incidents at all 23 grocery stores in the slip and fall case was overbroad, the claimant's discovery request for accident and/or incident reports regarding other incidents was overbroad, and the trial court could have reasonably concluded that floor safety training records of managers, maintenance partners, and partners who were working in the area where the claimant fell could lead to relevant, admissible evidence to support the pleading. In re Heb Grocery Co., L.P., 375 S.W.3d 497, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5409 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 10 2012).

947. In the attorney's capacity as a paralegal working for the defendants, he spoke with his clients' former counsel about some or all of the clients and the status of the case, and the trial court could have found that the attorney would have been a material witness in the case, for purposes of Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 3.08, reprinted in Tex. Gov't Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G app. A (Tex. State Bar R. art. X, sec. 9), and would give relevant testimony concerning essential facts, and by its nature, such testimony was likely to be prejudicial to a party; the court found the trial court's decision to disqualify the attorney as attorney for the clients was not unreasonable, and the court denied the attorney's request for mandamus relief. In re Getz, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5385 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 9 2012).

948. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding expert psychological testimony who allegedly would have testified that as a result of his mental defects defendant was incapable of forming the necessary mens rea to commit an assault because defendant's amnesia was caused by his head injury, which occurred after the assault, and therefore could not be relevant to his intent at the time of the assault. In addition, the expert's report only noted that defendant told the expert that he had post-traumatic stress disorder, and nothing suggested that the expert himself confirmed the diagnosis. Iniquez v. State, 374 S.W.3d 611, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5436, 2012 WL 2742632

(Tex. App. Austin July 6 2012).

949. Stepmother's conversion was discoverable, and the stepson knew of the stepmother's assumption of control over his property as early as February 2008; that he might not have known that the property would never be returned was not relevant, as the conversion took place when the stepmother exercised control over the property or refused a demand for its return, and the stepson did not show that the discovery rule deferred the start of the limitations period as to his conversion claim. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5322, 2012 WL 2887932 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 5 2012).

950. Defendant failed to show an abuse by the trial court in excluding evidence where he did not show the exclusion of relevant and reliable evidence, Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, that formed such a vital part of his case that its exclusion effectively precluded him from presenting a defense, U.S. Const. amends. VI, XIV. Houston v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5276, 2012 WL 2511588 (Tex. App. Dallas July 2 2012).

951. Determination of the identity of the person fleeing from the police officer was a fact of significant consequence to the determination of the action, and an extraneous offense may be admissible, to show the identity of the accused, Tex. R. Evid. 403(b); therefore, evidence pertaining to identity was relevant and the trial court's decision to deny defendant's objection on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 401 was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5271 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 29 2012).

952. Determination of the identity of the person fleeing from the police officer was a fact of significant consequence to the determination of the action, and an extraneous offense may be admissible, to show the identity of the accused, Tex. R. Evid. 403(b); therefore, evidence pertaining to identity was relevant and the trial court's decision to deny defendant's objection on the basis of Tex. R. Evid. 401 was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. White v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5271 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 29 2012).

953. Where defendant entered a plea of guilty to four aggravated robberies, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's tattoos as it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to the jury's determination of his suitability for community supervision. Jackson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5221, 2012 WL 2445052 (Tex. App. Dallas June 28 2012).

954. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting pornography that was found at defendant's home during his trial for continuous sexual abuse of a young child or children in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.02(b) because they depicted events similar to some of the instances of sexual abuse described by the daughter and thus had a tendency to make the daughter's claims more plausible, and defendant did not overcome the presumption that the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Brown v. State, 381 S.W.3d 565, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5164 (Tex. App. Eastland June 28 2012).

955. Tex. R. Evid. 401 is helpful in determining what evidence should be admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 37.07, § 3(a), but the definition is not a perfect fit in the punishment phase; relevance is a question of what is helpful to the jury to determine the appropriate sentence for the particular defendant, however, evidence that is relevant may be excluded if the danger of unfair prejudice substantially outweighs the probative value of the evidence. Ex Parte Rogers, 369 S.W.3d 858, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 856 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

956. There was no reasonable strategy for counsel not to object to a witness's testimony in the punishment phase, and even though applicant did not address this matter in his habeas corpus writ, such was relevant, given that in the prior offense and this case, applicant exhibited behavior that was similar, and the attack on the witness was different, and this called into question the probative value of this evidence; had counsel adequately investigated this assault prior to trial, he would have had a stronger basis to ask for exclusion of the prejudicial testimony, and the witness's testimony was likely inflammatory, such that the danger of unfair prejudice substantially outweighed the probative value of the evidence. Ex Parte Rogers, 369 S.W.3d 858, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 856 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012).

957. Exclusion of the photographic evidence, of marginal relevance at best, was not calculated to cause, nor did it probably cause, the rendition of an improper judgment; because the photographs in question did not purport to show the condition of the property at the time of the annexation, but later, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding them. City of Lufkin v. Akj Props., Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5057, 2012 WL 2393087 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 26 2012).

958. In this termination trial, the court could not say the trial court committed error in considering certain facts and addressing such in conclusions of law, including the return of the mother's son to her; it was indicated that the couple tried to show that the mother used drugs with her pregnancy and she permitted her son to be raised by relatives, and afterwards the trial court heard testimony that the son had been retuned to the mother based on various factors that could have been considered as relevant to the best interest issue. In re A.L.D.H., 373 S.W.3d 187, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 5044 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 25 2012).

959. Trial court did not err by excluding opinion testimony from the officer because his opinion on the difficulty of obtaining a conviction when the victim of a sexual assault suffered from mental impairments did not make any of the facts the jury had to determine more or less probable, and therefore the evidence was not relevant. Myles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4911, 2012 WL 2357426 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 21 2012).

960. Appellant did not object to evidence of narcotics use when the State posed a question or when the witness answered, but at a bench conference, he argued that the evidence was not relevant, and this was sufficient to preserve the relevance objection given that the objection was deemed to apply when the evidence was subsequently admitted, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(1); at the bench conference, appellant did not object on prejudicial effect grounds, the objection at trial did not comport with the one on appeal, and he failed to preserve error on the claim that the testimony was prejudicial. Miles v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4929, 2012 WL 2356478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 21 2012).

961. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, the statement by the witness that she was afraid to select the photo of defendant in the photo lineup was relevant and admissible because it showed that she identified defendant as the person that perpetrated the victim's murder. Benavides v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4971, 2012 WL 2353731 (Tex. App. Dallas June 21 2012).

962. For purposes of appellant's driving while intoxicated case, appellant refused to give a breath sample on an Intoxilyzer machine; evidence of such was relevant to show a consciousness of guilt. Hill v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4812, 2012 WL 2226610 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 18 2012).

963. Ex-wife did not provide the court with a record from a hearing, so the court could not address her arguments related to whatever evidence was presented at that hearing; regardless, as the issue addressed the final possession order, the court considered any evidence that was relevant to possession cited and contained in the record, in considering custody for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 153.312. Michelena v. Michelena, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4823, 2012 WL 3012642 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 15 2012).

964. In a fraudulent transfer case, the exclusion of title insurance evidence and various documents as irrelevant and potentially confusing under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403 was not error; moreover, any error that might have occurred was harmless. Hahn v. Love, 394 S.W.3d 14, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4702, 2012 WL 2153675 (Tex. App.

Houston 1st Dist. June 14 2012).

965. Appellants' claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress failed given that they were grounded on the same conduct as their defamation claims, which had also failed; evidence of any alleged kickback plan was not relevant to the elements of these claims. Bell v. Express Energy Servs. Operating, Lp, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4491, 2012 WL 2036437 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 7 2012).

966. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a picture of a pornographic videotape that contained adult pornography during defendant's trial on charges of indecency with a child and sexual assault of a child because it had some probative value, as a complainant testified that defendant used pornography in his bedroom immediately before sexually assaulting her and an officer testified about the use of pornography in grooming sexual assault victims. Admission of the picture was not unfairly prejudicial because defendant called the complainant's credibility into question, the officer provided unobjected-to testimony about similar materials found on defendant's computer, and the State focused on the evidence for a relatively short amount of time. Allen v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4598, 2012 WL 2106550 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

967. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence a school principal's testimony about one of the complainant's bad hygiene during defendant's trial on charges of indecency with a child and sexual assault of a child because the State represented that its relevance would be demonstrated through later testimony and defendant did not argue that the relevance of the testimony was not demonstrated with later evidence. Allen v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4598, 2012 WL 2106550 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 7 2012).

968. Trial court was not allowed to consider certain statutory arguments in determining the validity of an arbitration clause, as the arguments challenged the formation and performance of the contract as a whole instead of just the arbitration clause alone; the only relevant issues would have been those that were related to the specific making of the arbitration agreement. Aetna Life INS. Co. v. Weslaco Indep. Sch. Dist., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4379, 2012 WL 1964576 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 31 2012).

969. Evidence at trial showed that the amount found on defendant during booking was 0.15 grams and was found in a one-dollar bill, and although the amount and packaging of cocaine found on each male were similar, they were not identical; in addition, the officer testified that suspects typically transported narcotics in bills of money such that the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence. Arreola v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 4166, 2012 WL 1868680 (Tex. App. Eastland May 24 2012).

970. For materiality and relevance purposes, the State's theory that appellant had ill will towards the victim was aided through introducing prior extraneous acts, and because the nature of the parties' relationship was material in order to show motive, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the prior acts were admissible, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Jurasek v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3973, 2012 WL 1810197 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 17 2012).

971. Appellant claimed that even if the extraneous acts were relevant, they should have not been admitted under Tex. R. Evid. 403, but the State's establishment of motive relied almost exclusively on the extraneous acts against the victim or in retaliation for the current charge against appellant, and the parties' relationship was probative in helping develop the State's case and show motive; there was no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in overruling appellant's objection. Jurasek v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3973, 2012 WL 1810197 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 17 2012).

972. Trial court had not erred by excluding defendant's testimony regarding his attorney's advice and why defendant had left the country where the proffered testimony was immaterial, and therefore inadmissible, because it was not shown to be addressed to the proof of a material proposition. Claudio v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3818, 2012 WL 1656328 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 10 2012).

973. Worker's employer offered expert witness testimony and a video to explain how diesel reacted to an open flame, and this evidence was relevant because the increased volatility of gasoline instead of diesel was important concerning the determination of various issues; the volatility of gasoline was still relevant even though there was no evidence that the fuel used was pure gasoline, and the lack of volatility of diesel fuel was also relevant, plus the oil company did not object to the expert's testimony, which was cumulative of evidence in the video, and for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1, the erroneous admission of evidence was harmless if it was just cumulative. Gardner Oil, Inc. v. Chavez, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3655, 2012 WL 1623420 (Tex. App. Tyler May 9 2012).

974. Evidence of appellant's prior convictions was directly relevant to many issues in the case including knowledge of the illegality of the substance and appellant's credibility, for purposes of Tex. R. Evide. 403 and appellant's drug possession case. Johnson v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3592, 2012 WL 1582236 (Tex. App. Austin May 4 2012).

975. Trial court cut off questioning on certain issues, but those issues were not mentioned in the motion for a new trial based on ineffective assistance; there was no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in sustaining these relevancy objections. Arroyos v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3574, 2012 WL 1555900 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 3 2012).

976. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by allowing a police officer to give an opinion about appellant's intent to fight at the time of his arrest; the officer was not speculating about appellant's inner thoughts, rather, the officer was drawing an inference from her own observations. The information was relevant, it did not describe an extraneous offense or bad act, the inclusion of the information was not so prejudicial that it should have been excluded on that ground, and it was presented alongside copious evidence that appellant was driving while intoxicated and attempting to flee from police. Link v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3350, 2012 WL 1495182 (Tex. App. Eastland Apr. 30 2012).

977. Grantees could only receive the interest that was owned and conveyed to them by a farming trust, which was a one-fourth mineral interest, and thus the settlement agreement between the trust and others was irrelevant regarding the disputed mineral interest, which never passed to the trust via application of the case law doctrine or under a deed. Philipello v. Taylor, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3324, 2012 WL 1435171 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 25 2012).

978. Appellant's statements to his wife and testimony that his statements were not truthful did not indicate involuntariness, and the inquiry was to be considered without regard to truth or falsity; nothing from appellant's meeting with his wife indicated involuntariness, appellant affirmatively wanted to continue the interrogation, and his belief about being in custody was irrelevant to whether he was in custody for Miranda purposes. Morales v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3150, 2012 WL 1406458 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 24 2012).

979. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in allowing witnesses to testify during the punishment phase because defendant's membership in an organization that promoted and practiced polygamy and underage marriages that resulted in the sexual assault of children was relevant to the question of his character for purposes of punishment. Jessop v. State, 368 S.W.3d 653, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3176, 2012 WL 1402117 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2012).

980. State was allowed to rebut testimony about appellant's character for truthfulness by asking about specific conduct instances, and appellant did not claim they were irrelevant, and they shared many similarities; the court is aware of no authority that restricts the State from asking whether the witness had heard that the defendant was convicted of a particular crime. Ethridge v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3110, 2012 WL 1379648 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 18 2012).

981. Fact that members of the allegedly targeted group sat on the jury did not necessarily defeat the prima facie case showing, but was relevant in the finding of discriminatory practices, and the fact that the State kept some of its strikes did not defeat the case. Ethridge v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 3110, 2012 WL 1379648 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 18 2012).

982. For purposes of appellant's conviction of intentionally or knowingly causing serious bodily injury to a child, the means by which appellant injured the baby was not relevant; what was important was that appellant knowingly or intentionally caused a serious injury by at least one of the ways listed in the indictment, and the evidence supported the finding. Herrera v. State, 367 S.W.3d 762, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2940, 2012 WL 1297553 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2012).

983. In its new trial motion, a landlord made an argument regarding a list of expenses being improperly admitted, but the objection was untimely and did not preserve the complaint for reivew; to hold otherwise would have permitted the landlord to agree to the relevancy of the list, wait for a verdict that was not favorable, and then complain about relevance. Breof Bnk Tex., L.P. v. D.H. Hill Advisors, Inc., 370 S.W.3d 58, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2942, 2012 WL 1301231 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 17 2012).

984. In a murder case, a text message sent by appellant to his girlfriend after a shooting was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to show state of mind and that appellant did not act in self-defense; it was not subject to exclusion under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because it was the only evidence of state of mind following the shooting, despite the fact that it contained a derogatory term. Guerra v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973, 2012 WL 1297718 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 17 2012).

985. Appellant objected on grounds of hearsay and relevancy and he claimed the evidence was more prejudicial than probative, but he did not raise an objection on confrontation or insufficiency grounds at trial and thus he did not preserve those arguments for review. Mclamore v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2909 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 12 2012).

986. In defendant's trial for indecency with a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11, the trial court properly excluded as speculative and irrelevant defendant's evidence that the victims' mother's friend, with whom the mother was drinking at the time of the incidents, was a convicted child molester whose probation was revoked due to his proximity to the two boys. Smikal v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2904, 2012 WL 1259127 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 12 2012).

987. In his murder trial, appellant argued that the photographs depicting the victim's dismembered body, a crime scene videotape, and related testimony amounted to inadmissible evidence of the offense of abuse of a corpse under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 42.08; because the dismemberment evidence was relevant to show an intent to conceal evidence or consciousness of guilt, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling appellant's objection under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Jones v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2381, 2012 WL 1004735 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 27 2012).

988. In this murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting autopsy evidence and finding it was relevant for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, given that (1) the medical examiner testified that the photographs would help him explain his findings and would help the jury understand the victim's injuries, (2) the testimony and autopsy report concerned the cause of death, which was relevant, and (3) the photographs, while not entirely clear, appeared to depict only the initial condition of the body and not autopsy mutilation; the court's analysis was the same whether or not a third photograph was admitted and shown to the jury. Jones v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2381, 2012 WL 1004735 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 27 2012).

989. Heir relied on the perpetuities clause, for purposes of Tex. Prop. Code Ann. § 112.036, in support of her will interpretation, but the clause did not contradict the language terminating the trusts and directing the distribution of assets, and the trusts did not terminate in accordance with this clause; because the trusts had already terminated, and the clause addressed asset distribution in the even the trusts failed to terminate within the time set forth in the rule against perpetuities, it was irrelevant to how the trust assets were to be divided. Nash v. Beckett, 365 S.W.3d 131, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2308, 2012 WL 967698 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 23 2012).

990. Motion for rehearing contained arguments that a creditor did not prove her claim, and these statements were responsive to the motion and were relevant; the court overruled the claim that the trial court erred in overruling objections in this regard. Moore v. Ellsworth, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2180, 2012 WL 954626 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 21 2012).

991. Pictures of shell casings on appellant's porch and the dent in his truck did not make any fact of consequence, here the claim of self-defense, more or less probable, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402; one officer testified that it was found that the dent had nothing to do with the shooting, and given that the evidence suggested appellant shot the victim from inside his truck and one shell casing was found in the vehicle, there was little to no relevance the casings on the porch could have had to the offense, and thus the pictures were improperly admitted. Dyke v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2181, 2012 WL 954625 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 21 2012).

992. Erroneous admission of irrelevant photographs of a dent in appellant's vehicle and shell casings on his porch did not influence the jury or had only a slight effect, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that neither were discussed at voir dire, most of the State's argument addressed the self-defense claim, and to the extent references to appellant's driving and shooting habits could have related to the photographs, they could have also related to the testimony of another witness. Dyke v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2181, 2012 WL 954625 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 21 2012).

993. Appellant claimed the purpose for which the State offered the evidence was not a purpose discussed in the rules; however, the exceptions to the hearsay rules are not dependent on the reason why a party wants to offer the hearsay, and the only relevant inquiry concerning the purpose of hearsay is whether the out-of-court statement is being offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Why the proponent wishes to admit the evidence, beyond offering it for the truth of the matter asserted, is immaterial, and how the hearsay evidence supports the proponent's trial theory or fits into the proponent's trial strategy does not affect its admissibility under an exception under the rules. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

994. Appellant objected to a witness's testimony under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), suggesting a relevancy complaint, but he did not object on expert qualification or reliability grounds or on Tex. R. Evid. 403 grounds; thus, the only issue preserved for review was the claim that the witness's testimony was inadmissible because it was not linked to appellant. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

995. Testimony of a witness and doctor showed the beliefs and character of appellant as shown by his association with a church, and the court did not construe the evidence to be that of victim impact; here, where appellant was charged with a sexual crime against a child, membership in an organization that routinely engaged in activities resulting in sexual crimes against children was relevant because it related to appellant's character. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

996. If the defendant's membership in an organization and the organization's nature and activities give the jury valuable information regarding the character of the defendant, such information should be allowed into evidence, as the jury is concerned at the punishment phase with evaluating a defendant's background and character, and a person's beliefs and associations reflect his background and character; thus, evidence of a defendant's membership in an organization and that organization's activities is admissible because it is relevant to the issue of the defendant's character. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

997. Evidence showed that appellant was a member of a church and the church engaged in illegal practices, including the promotion of underage and plural marriages and resulted in the sexual assault of children; thus, appellant's membership in an organization that practiced and promoted polygamy and underage marriages resulting in sexual assaults to children was relevant to appellant's character for punishment purposes, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing testimony in this regard. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

998. Because appellant did not offer argument or authority on his claims under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 403, 404(b) and his claims for due process and due course of law, the complaints were inadequately briefed and presented nothing for review. Keate v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2117, 2012 WL 896200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 16 2012).

999. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the results of the blood test showing that defendant had a prescription drug in his system because the evidence was relevant during defendant's driving under the influence trial, as it assisted the jury in determining whether defendant's intoxication was due to the drug. Armstrong v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2041, 2012 WL 864778 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 15 2012).

1000. Grant of summary judgment in favor of the company men and others in the employee's action, in part, for defamation was proper because no evidence existed to support the defamation claims and any inferences of a kickback scheme were not relevant. Bell v. Bennett, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2097, 2012 WL 858603 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2012).

1001. Grant of summary judgment in favor of the company men and others in the employee's defamation action was proper because expert testimony about bankruptcy was not relevant to any element of the defamation claims, nor was the bankruptcy testimony relevant to any element of the employee's other pleaded claims. Thus, the expert was property struck as an expert witness. Bell v. Bennett, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2097, 2012 WL 858603 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 15 2012).

1002. Although the jury found appellee was in breach, the issue of its substantial performance was irrelevant because the jury found that any breach was excused, based on appellant's material breach, and appellee did not have to prove its substantial performance. 1.9 Little York, Ltd. v. Allice Trading Inc., 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 2112, 2012 WL 897776 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 15 2012).

1003. When the landowner purchased its tract, it did not obtain an assignment of claims possessed by the predecessor in interest, an estate, and although the landowner later obtained assignments from estate heirs, this was not done until almost one year after the lawsuit was filed; this made it irrelevant for purposes of deciding whether the landowner had standing, given that a later-acquired interest did not confer standing retroactively. La Tierra De Simmons Familia, Ltd. v. Main Event Entm't, Lp, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1928, 2012 WL 753184 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 9 2012).

1004. There was some disagreement about whether the characterization of an injury was relevant to the issue of standing, but the court did not need to decide the question because even if there was relevance in this regard, the injury to the tract was permanent and accrued before the landowner obtained the property. La Tierra De Simmons Familia, Ltd. v. Main Event Entm't, Lp, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1928, 2012 WL 753184 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 9 2012).

1005. Court agrees with its sister courts that Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) allows evidence of an unadjudicated juvenile offense to be admitted so long as it is relevant and shown beyond a reasonable doubt that it was the defendant that committed the offense; the statutory construction argument raised by appellant had already been rejected, and he did not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to show that he committed the unadjudicated crime of which he complained. Alvarado v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1936, 2012 WL 762026 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 9 2012).

1006. Given the vague nature of a witness's allegations, it could hardly be said that he showed appellant committed some kind of a crime, and the history of the witness and appellant was not necessarily relevant; counsel asked what the parties' problem was, the witness answered, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the answer to stand. Vertiz v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1730, 2012 WL 690398 (Tex. App. Tyler Feb. 29 2012).

1007. Court properly allowed an expert witness to testify about the similarity of physical evidence recovered from the crime scene because the tapes from the crime scene and defendant's home were offered to show that because the tapes were similar, it was more likely that they came from a common source, and if they came from a common source, it was more likely that the tape in defendant's home came from the packaging for the marijuana in the murder victim's home. The testimony showed the similarities of the tapes and was therefore relevant to show that defendant was at the crime scene and had a motive for shooting the victims. Robinson v. State, 368 S.W.3d 588, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1483, 2012 WL 593558 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 24 2012).

1008. State argued that appellant's relevance objection did not preserve an objection under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and any error was harmless in any event, and the court agreed; the court did not find any objection to a witness's testimony about treaties between gangs on the basis of Rule 403, and thus no issue was preserved in this regard. Zavala v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1447, 2012 WL 601412 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 23 2012).

1009. In a capital murder case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a video recording and a photograph because their probative value was not substantially outweighed by the potential for undue prejudice. The evidence was probative to show appellant's presence at the scene of the crime and the degree of cooperation between appellant and his brother, the prejudice to appellant was not unfair, the challenged evidence did not create or add to any confusion regarding the events, there was little danger of misleading the jury, and, given the highly probative nature of the recording and photographs, the trial court could have concluded that there was no undue delay and that their presentation was necessary. Mccuin v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1363, 2012 WL 566796 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 22 2012).

1010. Although a contractor challenged the jury's finding of control, it also claimed the finding was immaterial, but the finding was relevant to determine whether the contractor owed a duty to the worker. Nowak Constr. Co. v. Avalos, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1170, 2012 WL 473500 (Tex. App. El Paso Feb. 15 2012).

1011. Court properly admitted the contents of social networking web pages because there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a finding that the exhibits were what they purported to be -- web pages the contents of which defendant was responsible for. There were numerous photographs of defendant with his unique arm, body, and neck tattoos, as well as his distinctive eyeglasses and earring, and there was a reference to the victim's death and the music from his funeral. Tienda v. State, 358 S.W.3d 633, 2012 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 244

1012. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court properly barred evidence of the victim's possible HIV condition because it found it irrelevant and too speculative; the proffered evidence showed only that the victim bit an accomplice, as the victim attempted to defend himself, and that the accomplice knew of the victim's possible HIV infection. The evidence was not enough to support defendant's defense of independent impulse and it lacked probative value. Gonzalez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 927, 2012 WL 361733 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

1013. In defendant's capital murder case, the trial court properly admitted autopsy photographs because they were not any more gruesome than what would be expected, the photographs tracked the doctor's testimony, and the photographs depicted the victim's bloody and bruised face and were vital to the State's case to the jury with regard to the manner and method of the victim's death. Gonzalez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 927, 2012 WL 361733 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 2 2012).

1014. Appellant's attempt to impeach a doctor's credibility was not covered under Tex. R. Evid. 806, and when applicable, the rule allowed the declarant's credibility to be challenged; the declarant's credibility was not an issue at trial, and a witness's testimony regarding information he received from the declarant was relevant only if the jury found the declarant's statement was accurate and truthful, and because the declarant's statement was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was inadmissible and the trial court properly excluded it. Lozano v. State, 359 S.W.3d 790, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 718 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

1015. Trial court did not err by prohibiting defendant from eliciting testimony at trial that pertained to the drug seller's identity because the trial court could have reasonably determined that even if defendant and the seller were not the same person, it was not logically less probable that defendant possessed cocaine with intent to deliver it on the date of his arrest merely because someone else did so at the apartment on other occasions. Harris v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 732, 2012 WL 254086 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 26 2012).

1016. Under Tex. R. Evid. 401, the trial court found that defendant's acquittal in the assault charge on police officers had no tendency to make the existence of any fact of consequence to the determination of the aggravated sexual assault charge more or less probable. Lopez v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 676, 2012 WL 256103 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 26 2012).

1017. Appellant did not assert an objection to the extraneous-offense evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 403, nor was such an objection apparent from the context of his objection for relevance under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), and thus this was not preserved for review under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1). Bryant v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 479, 2012 WL 171243 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2012).

1018. Although the State had not elicited testimony connecting appellant to another armed robbery when the State offered certain evidence, the State later offered evidence through other testimony, from which the jury could have found that appellant committed that robbery; evidence was not to be excluded merely because its relevance might depend on other evidence being produced later in the trial, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 104(b), and the court saw no reason why this standard should not have applied when the trial court made its admissibility finding of the extraneous evidence at punishment, especially given that the trial court had the chance to reconsider the same evidence when appellant objected. To the extent appellant argued that the extraneous evidence was irrelevant, the court found no abuse of discretion. Bryant v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 479, 2012 WL 171243 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2012).

1019. To the extent appellant challenged the extraneous-offense evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, in determining the threshold issue of admissibility of relevant evidence, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the evidence on condition that the State connect appellant to the offense through evidence elicited from other witnesses, which the State did, and by determining that the evidence was admissible. Bryant v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 479, 2012 WL 171243 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 19 2012).

1020. Appellant claimed that his medical records were admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 803(4), (6), but this was not presented at trial as a ground for overruling the State's hearsay objection under Tex. R. Evid. 801(d), and although the records were included in the bill of exceptions, such was not made on the predicate for admission under either hearsay exception appellant raised for the first time on appeal; even if the court assumed that the trial court understood the bill of exceptions to be a proffer of admission, the records did not establish that appellant suffered from a medical condition that was relevant to his prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the patient history did not show that he had a condition that mimicked the symptoms of intoxication, and no other potential relevance for the records was shown, such that exclusion of the records did not affect a substantial right under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

1021. No adverse ruling regarding appellant's father's testimony about appellant's medical records apepared, his offer of proof had no testimony from the father, and the record contained no explanation of how a diagnosis of neurofibromatosis was relevant to any contested issue in this driving while intoxicated case, such that the issue was not preserved for review, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 and Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), (b). Bradley v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 410, 2012 WL 150969 (Tex. App. Beaumont Jan. 18 2012).

1022. Appellant objected on relevance grounds when one question was posed, but appellant did not further pursue the objection and only objected further on the grounds of speculation; the record did not show a Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) objection, the trial court was not put on notice of the complaint that the evidence was improper character or extraneous offense evidence, the objections made did not preserve error for a complaint under Rule 404(b), and moreover an officer did not specifically refer to appellant's extraneous offense evidence. The issue was waived. Phillips v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 244, 2012 WL 113047 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 12 2012).

1023. Appellant did not make an offer of proof regarding the contents of a letter and the relevance thereof, and therefore he failed to preserve this issue for review. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 100, 2012 WL 29326 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 5 2012).

1024. Under Tex. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), appellant had to proffer with some degree of specificity the substantive evidence he intended to present with regard to the victim's anger and the relevance thereof, but he failed to do so, and thus he did not preserve this argument for review. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 100, 2012 WL 29326 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Jan. 5 2012).

1025. Hearing to determine counsel's strategy would not be necessary when determining if appellant established prejudice, given that counsel's strategy was not relevant to whether the result of the trial would have been different. Lewis v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 86, 2012 WL 28707 (Tex. App. Waco Jan. 4 2012).

1026. Fact that no cocaine was found on appellant or in her house would have been relevant to assessing whether she possessed cocaine on an earlier point in time, but although the court found that matters concerning the search and arrest warrant were relevant, limiting the scope of cross-examination of a detective, while error, did not contribute to appellant's conviction or punishment, given that (1) the detective's testimony was cumulative to a certain extent, (2) much of his testimony was corroborated by recordings that were admitted into evidence, (3) appellant did not introduce evidence that contradicted the detective's testimony, (4) appellant was allowed to fully cross-examine the detective, except for search warrant testimony, and (5) the State presented a strong case.

Bussey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1505, 2012 WL 626316 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 3 2012).

1027. Defense counsel pursued a subject in a backdoor effort to introduce evidence of appellant's acquittal, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by restricting the cross-examination under Tex. R. Evid. 611(b); appellant did not present anything other than her acquittal that would have raised double jeopardy issues, and thus testimony concerning her acquittal was not relevant. Bussey v. State, 2012 Tex. App. LEXIS 1505, 2012 WL 626316 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 3 2012).

1028. Court disagreed that appellant's relevance objection preserved his objection under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), and even if it had, appellant failed to preserve any issue because his objection was untimely as made after the question was asked and answered. Cavazos v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10185, 2011 WL 6917580 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Dec. 29 2011).

1029. Actions of appellant's supervisors were irrelevant in determining whether appellant was in custody when he gave his statement. Aguilera v. State, 425 S.W.3d 448, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10211 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 29 2011).

1030. Appellant testified that, although he first did not have a thought either way as to whether he could leave, he later thought he could not leave when the officer went with him to the restroom after appellant gave his statement; however, this alleged incident was irrelevant in determining whether appellant was in custody earlier when he gave the officer his statement. Aguilera v. State, 425 S.W.3d 448, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10211 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 29 2011).

1031. As the State pointed out, testimony of the child's caregiver concerning the child's medical condition 14 months after sustaining his injuries was relevant and probative of appellant's intent and the fact that serious bodily injury was inflicted although appellant admitted only to mildly shaking the child; the caregiver's testimony was relevant for the State to meet its burden, in appellant's injury to a child trial, of proving that the child had sustained serious bodily injury as alleged in the indictment and defined in Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 1.07(a)(46), and the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's relevancy objection. Gonzales v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10119, 2011 WL 6415125 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 22 2011).

1032. Photographs of the child at the hospital were probative, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, of the trauma inflicted on the child and the fact that serious bodily injury had been inflicted, in connection with appellant's injury to a child trial. Gonzales v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10119, 2011 WL 6415125 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 22 2011).

1033. Hypothetically correct jury charge for aggravated assault was that (1) appellant (2) intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly (3) caused the victim bodily injury by striking him in the head, (4) appellant used or exhibited a baseball bat during the assault, and (5) a bat was a deadly weapon under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 1.07(17); a rational jury could have found appellant guilty, given that a witness testified that appellant hit the victim on the side of the head with the bat, a weapon which can obviously cause death or serious bodily injury, the victim had a "busted lip" and appellant had injuries consistent with being the aggressor, the court found nothing unbelievable about the witness's testimony, the jury was free to resolve any conflict in the testimony of all witnesses, and the fact that appellant could not cross-examine the victim, who did not testify, was irrelevant. Vega v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10017, 2011 WL 6742504 (Tex. App. El Paso Dec. 21 2011).

1034. Evidence of appellant's prior drug use and drug sale involving the informant was relevant to disproving the defense theory that appellant had no knowledge of the drug deal, and the trial court could have found that appellant's previous drug-related transactions with the informant were probative to the jury's determining if the drugs were in appellant's possession, either actually or constructively; the trial court also could have admitted the extraneous crimes because they were probative to show appellant's presence at the place that was part of the plan to deliver the informant the drugs, and appellant's prior relationship with the informant was relevant to show appellant knew that his meeting with the informant was for delivering drugs. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

1035. Informant's possible bias was made known to the jury, and the trial court allowed appellant to develop other testimony regarding the informant's possible bias, plus the jury heard evidence concerning the existence of an outstanding warrant against the informant for failure to stop and give information following and accident; given the information that the jury had about the accident and warrant, the trial court could have found that allowing more details about the incident would have wasted the jury's time, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, and the court found that appellant was not deprived of the right to confront the informant and the trial court did not err in limiting the testimony in this regard. Anderson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 10038, 2011 WL 6743297 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 21 2011).

1036. In the proceeding to commit respondent as a sexually violent predator (SVP), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by restricting respondent's cross-examination of one of the State's experts, because the doctor's subjective feelings concerning the verdict in respondent's attempted aggravated sexual assault case was not a fact of consequence in respondent's SVP case for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401. Respondent could not challenge the facts of his final convictions in the SVP proceeding, and attempted aggravated sexual assault of a child was one of his predicate convictions under Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 841.002(8)(A). In re Dees, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9807 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 15 2011).

1037. In a sexual assault of a child case, the evidence of the victim's emotional problems was not relevant or admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 as the evidence could not be used to impeach her because there was no suggestion that her emotional problems could impair her ability to recall events or would compromise her credibility. Lester v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9728, 2011 WL 6238157 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 14 2011).

1038. Appellant's alleged use of marijuana and Xanax might be relevant to whether his decision to waive his rights was done in a manner that was both knowing and intelligent. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9800, 2011 WL 6229164 (Tex. App. Beaumont Dec. 14 2011).

1039. Young child told officers to come in, and the first officer did not see a man before he entered the house, and thus that the man did not contradict the child's invitation was not relevant to an inquiry about the officers' belief before entering the home; there was nothing in the record from which the trial court could have inferred any level of maturity of the child, who was estimated to be around six to eight years old, that would have allowed the officers to believe that she had apparent authority to consent to the officers' entry, and thus the trial court erred in finding the officers' entry was legal and in denying appellant's motion to suppress. The court did consider the realities the officers faced in responding to a call for assistance from Child Protective Services, but without some objective evidence that the child had authority to invite the officers in, they could not enter without a warrant or some other exception to the warrant requirement. Caldwell v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9545, 2011 WL 6061525 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 7 2011).

1040. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in admitting pornographic photographs and videos seized from defendant's home; the evidence was relevant because it served to demonstrate defendant's intent, demonstrate defendant's identity, and bolster the victim's testimony, the credibility of which had been attacked. Pallm v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9402, 2011 WL 6043025 (Tex. App. Tyler Nov. 30 2011).

1041. Exhibit, consisting of an indictment of the father for aggravated sexual assault of a child, a complaint against the father, and a judgment based on his guilty plea to indecency with a child, was relevant to the father's defense to the sole ground of termination alleged under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(Q), as well as the best interests of the child issue; it was reasonable to believe that a relevancy objection would have been overruled, and the failure of counsel to raise that objection did not fall below an objective standard of reasonableness. In the Interest of T.E., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9251, 2011 WL 5865712 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 23 2011).

1042. Property owners' expert's testimony was properly admitted because the expert's opinion was that the owners' property flooded because of an increase in elevation of the development relative to the owners' property; that testimony was neither speculative nor otherwise unreliable. The expert specifically testified the increase in elevation altered historical surface water drainage patterns, and his testimony was based on his own visual inspection of the property where he noted diversions from the historical drainage patterns due to increases in elevation, as well as a drainage area map used by the company that constructed the development. Marin Real Estate Partners., L.P. v. Vogt, 373 S.W.3d 57, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9259, 2011 WL 5869520 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 23 2011).

1043. Property owners' appraiser's testimony was properly admitted because the appraiser specifically stated he developed his estimate based on the one-acre tract as a property independent from the nineteen-acre tract. To develop his estimate, he researched comparable sales in an attempt to find the best comparison possible and he also prepared his appraisal using the "highest and best use" analysis, which required the appraiser to consider what was the potential best use for the property being appraised. Marin Real Estate Partners., L.P. v. Vogt, 373 S.W.3d 57, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9259, 2011 WL 5869520 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 23 2011).

1044. Trial court erred in sustaining appellees' objections to letters attached to a summary judgment affidavit by a testator's cousin because the letters were relevant to an evaluation of appellees' limitations defense; the letters were not included as summary judgment evidence to prove the truth stated in the letters, but to provide some evidence as to when a controversy arose between the parties on the issue of the testator's intent. Estate of Denman, 362 S.W.3d 134, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 9262, 2011 WL 5869479 (Tex. App. San Antonio Nov. 23 2011).

1045. Pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 402, the exclusion of the photographs of a witness based on irrelevance was within the trial court's discretion because defense counsel did not establish that the photographs depicted gang activity and only stated that it could show gang signs. Oliva v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8940, 2011 WL 5428965 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 10 2011).

1046. Evidence concerning the child's death was relevant to show that appellant had a motive for starting the fire in question; given appellant's contentious relationship with the child's mother and appellant's anger over the child's being, the jury could have inferred that appellant started the fire to divert any blame for the death of the child.

1047. Although appellants argued that the trial court could have allowed testimony about conversations between trial counsel concerning the parties' agreement under Tex. Disciplinary R. Prof. Conduct 3.08(a)(5), reprinted in Tex. Gov't Code Ann., tit. 2, subtit. G app. A (2005) (Tex. State Bar R. art. X, sec. 9), appellants did not cite to any cases that held that where the trial court could have taken a certain action but did not, it necessarily amounted to an abuse of discretion, and there were competing interests of appellees to go forward with their counsel and of appellants to present evidence; the timing of the proposed offer to revive the parties' agreement led the court to find that the evidence was not relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion. Rancho La Valencia, Inc. v. Aquaplex, Inc., 357 S.W.3d 137, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8935 (Tex. App. Amarillo Nov. 9 2011).

1048. In a case involving the civil commitment of a sexually violent predator, to the extent that a patient complained about the foundational data used by experts in reaching their opinions, the complaint was not preserved for appellate review because no objection was made to the use of records or actuarial tests. To the extent that the patient challenged the expert opinions as baseless and not relevant, the testimony of the experts was not conclusory or speculative; the experts testified that they based their opinions on the facts and date gathered from the records they reviewed, their interviews with the patient, the risk assessment conducted, and the actuarial tests administered. In re Mason, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8531 (Tex. App. Beaumont Oct. 27 2011).

1049. State did not refer to defendant as a drug dealer or elicit testimony that he was known as a drug dealer, and there was no dispute that defendant possessed marijuana; the State presented evidence that the marijuana was packaged for sale and that no one would purchase marijuana that had been in a person's underwear, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony. Eastland v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8748, 2011 WL 5221252 (Tex. App. Waco Oct. 26 2011).

1050. Court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence of bias, because the grandmother was not a witness at trial and Tex. R. Evid. 613(b) did not allow defendant to question the mother about the grandmother's actions in an attempt to show the grandmother's bias, interest or motive, and to the extent defendant argued the evidence of the mother's abuse when she was five years old was relevant to show bias or motive, he did not establish either ground through mother's testimony outside the jury's presence. Sturgeon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8467, 2011 WL 5042087 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 25 2011).

1051. Because a crayon drawing found in the victim's clothes during the autopsy did not provide a small nudge toward proving or disproving some fact of consequence, the drawing was irrelevant and inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 402; however, under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), admission of the drawing was harmless error as the evidence against defendant was substantial and the drawing was not so emotionally charged that it prevented the jury from rationally considering the evidence before it. Soto v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8360, 2011 WL 5000393 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 20 2011).

1052. Bills included fees relative to a forcible detainer action, but the lessors did not prevail because the lessee vacated the premises before trial, and awarding the lessors the total fees included in the bills would have been tantamount to awarding fees for a separate action on which the lessors did not prevail; although termination of the lessee's right of possession was relevant to the lessors' claims for purposes of showing that this did not release the lessee's obligations, such did not result from the termination, and the lessors did not conclusively establish that the total amount of fees requested were reasonable and necessary. Mnc Spring Shadows, L.P. v. Kearney, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 8075, 2011 WL 4794949 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 11 2011).

1053. Trial court clarified that certain evidence fell outside the scope of a prior limine ruling, appellant objected to admission of the evidence on the basis of relevance, and the trial court noted the objection and granted appellant a running objection; thus, appellant preserved his relevance objection for review, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A). Gonzalez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7764 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 28 2011).

1054. Court assumed that the evidence of appellant's head-butting of a man at a restaurant was erroneously admitted for relevance purposes, but given that (1) the jury heard the victim's extensive testimony regarding appellant's assault, (2) there was testimony from a nurse confirming the nature of the victim's injuries, and (3) the State only briefly mentioned the head-butting incident and the victim testified briefly about the incident, the admission of the evidence was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the evidence had no impact on appellant's substantial rights. Gonzalez v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7764 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 28 2011).

furthermore, under these circumstances when there was no connection between the victim's relationship with her female friend and any motive for her to exaggerate the incident involving appellant juvenile, any de minimis probative value of that information would be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice in putting the victim on trial for her sexual orientation. In re O.O.A., 358 S.W.3d 352, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7416 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 13 2011).

1056. Court saw no connection between the victim's relationship with her female friend and any motive for her to exaggerate the incident in question involving appellant juvenile, and the nature of the victim's relationship with her friend did not make the victim's account of the incident involving appellant more or less probable; even assuming the victim were homosexual, a person's sexual orientation, alone, had no bearing on his or her propensity for truthfulness, and injecting evidence of a witness's sexual orientation into trial under circumstances like those in this case would risk derailing the focus of the trial and putting the victim on trial, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 412(a), (b)(2)(C). In re O.O.A., 358 S.W.3d 352, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7416 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 13 2011).

1057. State needed to explain the relationship between appellant and the victim, and letters from appellant to the victim helped explain the dynamics of their relationship and thus were relevant; appellant did not identify specific instances of prior misconduct contained in the letters that were introduced or would suggest that he acted in conformity with his character in committing the offense, nor was it shown that the letters were more prejudicial than probative, and the trial court did not err in admitting the letters. Munsinger v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7318, 2011 WL 3915671 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 7 2011).

1058. Company president's arrest and behavior thereafter had nothing to do with the intent of the parties concerning the execution of their agreements or the termination of one agreement; the president's basis for terminating, not his reason, was what was relevant, and the testimony about the arrest was irrelevant, plus presented a clear danger of unfair prejudice, even though the court did not condone the president's actions. Nichols v. State, 349 S.W.3d 612, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7253 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 6 2011).

1059. In defendant's stalking case, a reasonable fact finder could have found that the telephone number the victim attributed to defendant was his telephone number, and that defendant sent the electronic communications attributed to him by the State and depicted in the challenged exhibits. Accordingly, the challenged exhibits were relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting them. Manuel v. State, 357 S.W.3d 66, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7152 (Tex. App. Tyler Aug. 31 2011).

1060. Much of the testimony was relevant to appellant's defensive theories, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), because the testimony showed his knowledge of sulfuric acid, its volatility, and his manufacture of methamphetamine at the residence where the children, including the one injured and the victim in this case, could access the equipment; thus, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence concerning appellant's use or manufacture of methamphetamine in his trial for aggravated injury to a child with a deadly weapon under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.04(a), (e). Escobedo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7113, 2011 WL 3836438 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2011).

1061. Information sought by an injured person in the request for production was relevant and discoverable because, whether or not the accident was caused because the waste management company did not properly train its drivers in safety matters, or improperly scheduled them, or because it did not employ a safety director when other locations did, was relevant to the claim that the office was deficient in its safety training and management. In re Waste Mgmt. of Tex., Inc., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7192, 2011 WL 3855745 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2011).

1062. Exhibit, a computer-generated animation of the crime scene, was relevant, and the fact that the cars in the animation might have looked similar or that the background was either not to scale or not there did not cause the probative value of the evidence to be outweighed by unfair prejudice under Tex. R. Evid. 403; the exhibit was not cumulative of other evidence and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting it. Murphy v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7230, 2011 WL 3860444 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 31 2011).

1063. Defendant argued that photographs were not relevant because he pleaded guilty, but the court noted that the introduction of evidence was to enable to jury to intelligently assess a penalty. Murphy v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7230, 2011 WL 3860444 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 31 2011).

1064. Photographs were helpful because they showed the victim's wounds; although the body was nude, that was only one factor the court was to consider in its analysis under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and the trial court's holding that the probative value of the photographs was not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Murphy v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7230, 2011 WL 3860444 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 31 2011).

1065. In a dispute concerning whether a workers' compensation claimant who was injured while driving home had been paid for driving other employees, the trial court reasonably could have excluded deposition testimony from two company executives based on relevance under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 and/or personal knowledge under Tex. R. Evid. 602. The executives did not know the claimant and were not present when he was hired, and testimony regarding the tax treatment of the payments was not material to whether the per diem payments were for driving. Tex. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Guar. Ass'n v. Brooks, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 7269, 2011 WL 3890405 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 31 2011).

1066. Appellant was not prevented from asking alternative questions seeking the kind of information that he claimed was relevant, and he did not ask more specific questions or make a bill of exception, such that it was not shown that the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the State's relevancy objection. Watson v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6942, 2011 WL 3796137 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2011).

1067. During defendant's trial for murder, the court did not err in limiting defendant's cross-examination of a witness because the line of cross-examination sought by defendant did not demonstrate any bias or prejudice by the witness against defendant; even if the testimony was somehow marginally relevant, the trial court retained wide discretion to impose a limit on the cross-examination. Requeno-portillo v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6898, 2011 WL 3820747 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 25 2011).

1068. Fraud that an agent committed on an investor was for an annuity amount, not the extent of his agency or ability to bind the insurance company, such that it was notice of the limitations of his agency that was relevant to the apparent authority issue. Nat'l W. Life Ins. Co. v. Newman, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6401 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 11 2011).

1069. Urban studies were relevant to the city's regulation of adult businesses' operations, as the studies indicated what such businesses attracted; the city relied on relevant studies, its experience, and public comment when adopting the new sexually-oriented business ordinance. E.B.S. Enters. v. City of El Paso, 347 S.W.3d 404, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6232 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 10 2011).

1070. Doctor's definition of complication, as interpreted within the medical community, was relevant to give the settlement term a meaning consistent with that to which it was susceptible; the trial court did not err in accepting this definition. Contreras v. Clint Indep. Sch. Dist., 347 S.W.3d 413, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6231 (Tex. App. El Paso

Aug. 10 2011).

1071. Appellees' affirmative defenses of accord and satisfaction, release, and res judicata were relevant to the patient's breach of contract claim and specifically tailored to that claim in appellees' summary judgment motion. Contreras v. Clint Indep. Sch. Dist., 347 S.W.3d 413, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6231 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 10 2011).

1072. Parties cited authority for the argument that an investigating officer could testify as to causation, but this was irrelevant, given that the expert did not serve as an investigating officer in this case. Husain v. Petrucciani, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6180, 2011 WL 3449497 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 9 2011).

1073. Appellant offered no argument at trial or on appeal as to the relevancy of certain evidence, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's relevancy objection. Villasenor v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6172, 2011 WL 3435376 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 8 2011).

1074. Property owner was entitled to mandamus relief from an order requiring the owner to produce tax returns in an action by a trust for asbestos contamination; assuming the relevance of the tax returns, they were not material because the trust did not carry its burden of demonstrating that the information it sought had not already been provided in a different form or that it was not available through less intrusive means. In re Beeson, 378 S.W.3d 8, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 6058 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 4 2011).

1075. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the knives recovered from defendant's vehicle to be relevant because defendant admitted in his statement made in 2005 that he had collected knives since he was a child and he carried a knife in his vehicle 1989 for protection. This evidence was relevant to show defendant's considerable familiarity with knives and to provide a "small nudge" toward demonstrating his opportunity, means, and capacity to have committed the murder of the victim, who was stabbed to death. Tilford v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5933, 2011 WL 3273543 (Tex. App. El Paso July 29 2011).

1076. In a criminal solicitation of a minor for sexual assault case, under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the defense witness's testimony about the veracity of the chat room logs because it was irrelevant as he could not say whether the State's or defendant's version of the chat logs was an accurate version of the actual chat sessions. Pudasaini v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5582, 2011 WL 2905592 (Tex. App. Dallas July 21 2011).

1077. Because the testimony contained in the record addressing the victim's pending driving while intoxicated (DWI) charge reflected that he had no agreement with the State regarding a dismissal of the charge, and he had no expectation of leniency in return for his testimony against defendant, the trial court was entitled to conclude that the victim's pending DWI charge was not relevant on the question of the victim's motivations in testifying. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5338, 2011 WL 2732270 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

1078. Because the trial court could reasonably decide that the existence of a pending driving while intoxicated charge was not relevant to show bias, and because the trial court could have decided that the possibility of prejudice from the testimony to the proceedings outweighed the probative value of the excluded testimony, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing defendant to recall the victim during the presentation of defendant's case to the jury. Smith v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5338, 2011 WL 2732270 (Tex. App. Beaumont July 13 2011).

1079. In an action against a trucking company for wrongful death, which arose from a collision between the decedent's vehicle and an 18-wheel truck, the court erred in admitting two positive drug tests of the truck driver because one drug test occurred four years prior to the accident and the second test occurred eight months after the accident; the evidence was not relevant. Tornado Trucking, Inc. v. Dodd, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 5123, 2011 WL 2641272 (Tex. App. Waco July 6 2011).

1080. At defendant's trial for burglary of a habitation based on evidence showing that defendant and his brother broke into a mobile home and stole a TV set, the trial court ruled that evidence of two extraneous burglaries committed by his brother was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, probative, and admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). The appellate court held that defendant was not harmed by the admission of the evidence because it was not unduly emphasized by the State, and it did not have a substantial effect on the jury's verdict. Crutchfield v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4959, 2011 WL 2638402 (Tex. App. Tyler June 30 2011).

1081. Trial court did not err in sustaining the State's objection to evidence about a civil lawsuit stemming from the same incident where the deputy's testimony was not the only means through which defendant could have communicated to the jury that he threatened civil litigation in the media. Lewis v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4861, 2011 WL 2536161 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 28 2011).

1082. There was no evidence that a handgun being in a backpack had any relevance to the commission of the offense of murder or to appellant's self-defense claim, and for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 402, the trial court did not err in excluding testimony concerning how to safely carry a handgun. Knapper v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4782, 2011 WL 2503463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

1083. Law concerning when a peace officer can use deadly force is different from the law concerning when someone other than a peace officer can use deadly force; even if testimony about when an officer could use deadly force was relevant, the trial court would not have erred in excluding the evidence based on the danger that the jury could have been confused by the evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403. Knapper v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4782, 2011 WL 2503463 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 23 2011).

1084. Trial court erred by admitting into evidence other lawsuits, verdicts, and judgments against the corporation that owned and operated the cemetery concerning the double sale of burial plots because the evidence was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, as the events occurred at different cemeteries with different employees, they occurred more than a year apart, and there was no evidence that the events were part of a system, scheme, or plan. The error was not harmless because appellants' attorney intended for the evidence to be a significant and pervasive part of the trial; because there was no evidence of three of the four appellants suffered compensable mental anguish, the jury's award of $ 100,000 to each had to have been based on something other than properly admitted evidence. Serv. Corp. Int'l v. Guerra, 348 S.W.3d 221, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 417, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1191 (Tex. 2011).

1085. Trial court improperly admitted evidence that the decedent's widow would put any punitive damages she received from the corporation that owned and operated the cemetery into a trust to pay for funerals for persons who could not afford them because it was not relevant to proving any of the factors to be considered when determining the amount of punitive damages or to penalizing or punishing the corporation. Serv. Corp. Int'l v. Guerra, 348 S.W.3d 221, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 417, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1191 (Tex. 2011).

1086. Even if one assumed that statements were party-opponent admissions under Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(2)(A) and relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, otherwise relevant evidence could be excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 403; in addition to possibly confusing the jury and unfairly prejudicing the State's case, admission of the statements would have been cumulative, and the trial court did not err in excluding these statements. Mcneal v. State, 2011 Tex. App.

LEXIS 4629, 2011 WL 2420271 (Tex. App. Dallas June 17 2011).

1087. During appellant's civil commitment trial, the trial court did not err by excluding an expert's testimony that appellant did not commit the crimes for which he had been convicted because the issue of whether appellant had been wrongfully convicted was not at issue. In re Commitment of Hinkle, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4504 (Tex. App. Beaumont June 16 2011).

1088. For purposes of Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 401.013(a)(2), the trial court could have found that a lay witness was competent to testify regarding the employee's physical and mental faculties during his shift and the minutes preceding his death, her testimony was relevant on the issue of whether he was intoxicated, and her testimony was not rendered irrelevant because she did not observe the employee at the exact minute of his death; the witness's testimony supported the findings that the employee was alert and possessed the normal use of his faculties at the time of his death. Dallas Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4564, 2011 WL 2436505 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 16 2011).

1089. Evidence supported appellant's conviction of attempted burglary of a habitation under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 15.01(a), 30.02(a)(1), as the fact finder could have inferred that he intended to commit theft when he tried to enter through a window he had broken, he fled when he was interrupted, he was unemployed, and he gave inconsistent explanations; the court disagreed with the appellate court to the extent it suggested that a reasonable fact finder could not consider appellant's lack of money as a circumstance relevant to his intent. Gear v. State, 340 S.W.3d 743, 2011 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 829 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011).

1090. At least part of an acceptable method of calculating partial-taking damages required determining the market value of the landowners' entire tract of land before the taking; thus, the testimony of the landowners' appraisal expert as to the property's pre-taking value was relevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony. State v. Petropoulos, 346 S.W.3d 525, 2011 Tex. LEXIS 416, 54 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 1133 (Tex. 2011).

1091. Evidence of the decedent's unredacted will did not tend to make the likelihood that the decedent forged the quitclaim deeds more probable or less probable than it would be without this evidence; thus, it was properly excluded. Kingsley v. Beck, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4294, 2011 WL 2225537 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 7 2011).

1092. Second judge's decision to hear a motion to suppress amounted to an agreement to reconsider the matter, and any error committed by a first judgment regarding the motion was irrelevant because that holding was nullified by the second judge's denial of the motion. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4246, 2011 WL 2163716 (Tex. App. Dallas June 3 2011).

1093. Evidence appellant admitted weighed against him was sufficient for a jury to have found him guilty of driving while intoxicated, given that two officers testified that appellant displayed signs of intoxication, which testimony alone was sufficient to support the conviction, plus appellant's refusal to submit a breath test tended to show consciousness of guilt and was relevant, for purposes of Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.061; the jury also considered one officer's testimony that he found all six clues for intoxication on a horizontal nystagmus gaze test, which the court considered even though this officer's testimony was inadmissible, the jury viewed a videotape of appellant's performance, and the jury was free to consider appellant's claims and reconcile that with other evidence tending to show his intoxication. Hall v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4183, 2011 WL 2150195 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 2 2011).

1094. When defendant was convicted of failing to comply with sex offender registration requirements, the trial court did not violate his right to present a defense by excluding evidence of his defense that he was prosecuted under the wrong statute. A police officer's opinion about which charge was "easier to prove" was not relevant under

Tex. R. Evid. 401 to whether defendant was guilty of failing to register a change of address because he was able to fully litigate whether he was living with a woman at unregistered address or simply visiting her. Davoust v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4114, 2011 WL 2090260 (Tex. App. Dallas May 27 2011).

1095. Jury could reasonably infer that the letter was written by defendant, and that he composed it with an eye toward establishing an alibi or exculpatory evidence regarding his pending charge; all this made a fact of consequence, that defendant knowingly or intentionally possessed the drugs found in the police car where he had just been sitting, more probable, and the letter was relevant evidence. In re F.R., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4104, 2011 WL 2175857 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 27 2011).

1096. Trial court did not err by refusing to exclude the blood alcohol test under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because the test result was circumstantial evidence that, coupled with other evidence, tended to show that defendant was intoxicated at the time she drove. Damon v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4017, 2011 WL 2112807 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 26 2011).

1097. Although hearsay was a frequent objection to summary judgment evidence, other grounds included that the statements were irrelevant, defectively vague, and violated of the Statute of Frauds and the Statute of Conveyances; because the trial court may have granted the objections for reasons other than hearsay and those grounds were not challenged, appellant waived his complaint regarding objections that were sustained. Goodenberger v. Ellis, 343 S.W.3d 536, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 4062 (Tex. App. Dallas May 26 2011).

1098. Appellant did not object to the State's introduction of evidence concerning an alleged fight with an inmate, such that he failed to tell the trial court that he wanted he trial court to determine the threshold issue of relevancy, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), and he failed to preserve any alleged error. Hardeman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3858, 2011 WL 1901978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 19 2011).

1099. Appellant did request a bench conference regarding the admissibility of evidence concerning his alleged assault on the detention officer, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), and contrary to appellant's claim, there was no requirement that the initial determination of whether an extraneous offense was relevant be made following a hearing instead of some other form of review; the prosecutor's statement that he intended to prove the assault through testimony by the officer was sufficient for the trial court to make an initial determination of relevance. Hardeman v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3858, 2011 WL 1901978 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 19 2011).

1100. At defendant's criminal trial for aggravated sexual assault and indecency with a child, a witness was permitted to testify that defendant said that he had given the victim a vaginal exam; Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) did not apply, because the testimony was not about an extraneous act or offense. Since the testimony constituted evidence that defendant admitted touching the victim's sexual organ, it was not more prejudicial than probative under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Babineaux v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3632, 2011 WL 1833123 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 12 2011).

1101. Because the child victim's mother's testimony that, because of the incident, she gave up a job and a wedding, was relevant to rebut defendant's contention that the mother manipulated the victim to fabricate the assault so that they could get back into the good graces of her family, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the testimony. Cueva v. State, 339 S.W.3d 839, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3333 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2011).

1102. Child victim's testimony that defendant assaulted her mother immediately after she confronted him about the sexual abuse was relevant to show defendant's unsettled and combative demeanor after the incident, which indicated a consciousness of guilt and as an assault against an adult witness, could be seen as tampering with the witness. Therefore, the evidence was admissible and trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object. Cueva v. State, 339 S.W.3d 839, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3333 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi May 2 2011).

1103. Court rejected the contention that a business's claims should fail because the owner's claims failed, because the resolution of the owner's claims was irrelevant to the analysis of the business's indemnification claims. Petroleum Solutions, Inc. v. Head, 454 S.W.3d 518, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3289 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 29 2011).

1104. Appellant contended that the complainants did not own partnership assets, but that was irrelevant to the theft count; appellant was accused of unlawfully appropriating the money the complainants invested in the partnerships. Bender v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 3096, 2011 WL 1561994 (Tex. App. Austin Apr. 19 2011).

1105. Photograph of a deceased person's hand wearing a glove had probative value because it established that the assailants took precautions to avoid leaving fingerprints; the photograph also had probative value as to appellant's liability as a party, plus no other photographs of the deceased person were admitted, and thus the photograph was relevant and its probative value outweighed any possible prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Garcia v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2848, 2011 WL 1442341 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Apr. 14 2011).

1106. In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, evidence that defendant was driving a vehicle that matched the description of the vehicle involved in the shooting and that he attempted to flee from officers when one of them tried to pull him over was probative of his consciousness of guilt. Therefore, defendant's flight was relevant evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401; the probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Owens v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2871, 2011 WL 1435499 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 14 2011).

1107. Court reviewed sealed records and found nothing of any impeachment value relevant to this case, and the trial court's actions in sealing the records did not deprive appellant of any favorable evidence. Brewer v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2327, 2011 WL 1169243 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2011).

1108. Appellant did not meet his burden of showing it was reasonably probable that the outcome of the trial would have been different if the prosecutor had emphasized an apparently clerical error; whether or not appellant was released or in jail on the day of his arrest was not relevant to the issue of whether he possessed cocaine with intent to deliver. Brewer v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2327, 2011 WL 1169243 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2011).

1109. Complainant's tattoos indicated possible gang affiliation, but nothing indicated that the altercation leading to the murder was gang-related; the trial court could have found that the tattoo words had little probative value. Smith v. State, 355 S.W.3d 138, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2426 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 31 2011).

1110. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding from evidence an affidavit regarding drug use and the victim's desire not to prosecute appellant, given that (1) the trial court could have found that the victim's drug use was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it did not affect appellant's culpability, (2) appellant was allowed to question the victim regarding the possible effects of her drug use, but she did not say that the offense did not occur or that she compelled appellant's actions due to using drugs, (3) voluntary intoxication was not a defense to the commission of a crime under Tex. Penal Code § 8.04(a), and (4) the trial court could have found that the victim's desire not to prosecute was not relevant to any issue in the case during the guilt-innocence phase and invaded the trier of fact's province; furthermore, appellant did not offer only the admissible portions of the affidavit. Deaton v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 2229, 2011 WL 1126041 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 29 2011).

1111. Court remanded the cause for a jury trial on only the amount of the attorney's fees, and any evidence concerning property owners' claims for trespass, or any other claims, was irrelevant, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402. Ogu v. C.I.A. Servs., 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1979, 2011 WL 947008 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 17 2011).

1112. Court acted within its discretion in concluding that the complainant's alleged prior use of alcohol with her mom was not relevant to whether the complainant could accurately recollect events that took place when she was not staying in her mother's home, because such testimony would not be relevant to the complainant's ability to recollect the events of the crimes alleged, which occurred when the complainant was staying with defendant, not her mother, during spring break. Vega v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1852, 2011 WL 882329 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 15 2011).

1113. While defendant claimed evidence of the nature of an arrest warrant was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 in his prosecution for, inter alia, evading arrest, defendant waived his argument because he failed to object every time the nature of his arrest warrant came into evidence or obtain a running objection. Even if the argument had not been waived, an error would have been harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because strong evidence of defendant's guilt was presented, including video recordings of the police pursuit and the testimony of the police officers regarding the fact that defendant drove his car toward the first police officer. Williams v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1426, 2011 WL 677390 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 25 2011).

1114. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that defendant's statement was relevant because the discussion of "I'll find a way out" without "snitching" and his reference to the "footage" made it more probable that defendant had some involvement in the crime. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that there was not unfair prejudice requiring exclusion of the statement because if the jury chose to credit it, it would not have been on an improper basis; rather, it would have been on the basis that defendant was part of the crime. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1115. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that defendant's statement was relevant because his words "they don't have anything on me" could be interpreted as an assertion that he escaped detection by the police because otherwise he would already have been arrested. It made it more probable that defendant was part of the crime in question Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1116. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that defendant's statement "I can't take it for life, they might as well kill me" was relevant and probative because it indicated that defendant believe that he could go to prison for life if convicted, and therefore the statement made it more probable that defendant committed the crime. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1117. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by determining that defendant's statement "it could have been anybody, fool" was relevant because the context made clear that defendant was happy about his belief that nobody could be identified from the tapes, thus keeping his name "out their mouth." In addition, the statements made it more probable than not that defendant participated in the crime. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1118. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's statement about another associate "snitching" on him because it could be probative as it gave an indication of defendant's culpability and made it more probable that he committed the crime. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1119. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's admission that he was paid after the crime because the State had the burden to prove that defendant received renumeration for the killing in order to prove its capital murder charge, and therefore defendant's statement about receiving money was relevant. Quintanilla v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 1353, 2011 WL 665328 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 24 2011).

1120. In an action for breach of a gas purchase agreement, evidence of early pays and appellant's relationship with a third party was properly admitted to show they had oral agreements and the third party's authority was not encompassed by the sole written contract between them. This evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for purposes of establishing apparent agency. Reliant Energy Servs. v. Cotton Valley Compression, Llc, 336 S.W.3d 764, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 959, 173 Oil & Gas Rep. 732 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 10 2011).

1121. Testimony concerning matters disposed of by summary judgment in a dispute between a condominium association and a unit owner was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402. Bosch v. Cedar Vill. Townhomes Homeowners Ass'n, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 804, 2011 WL 346317 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 3 2011).

1122. Gang evidence admitted at punishment was relevant under case law and probative of appellant's character, the testimony did not consume an inordinate amount of time at the hearing, and the jury sentenced appellant to much lower than the permitted 99 years in each possession with intent to deliver case, such that the probative value of the gang evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Gilmore v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 616 (Tex. App. Dallas Jan. 28 2011).

1123. In defendant's murder case, whether the complainant used drugs over a month earlier did not rebut the toxicology report showing no drugs in her system at the time she was shot, and thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the evidence irrelevant. The only evidence defendant offered was testimony that defendant's daughter would not stay with them after her grandfather's funeral because of the complainant's drug use. Mcghee v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 675 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 27 2011).

1124. Appellant argued that the bedroom was under his exclusive control, and thus the police had probable cause to believe that appellant committed, within their view, the offense of unlawful possession of marijuana, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 14.01(b) and Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. § 481.121(a); thus, the police were authorized to arrest appellant without a warrant, and the subjective intention of the police, to interrogate appellant concerning a capital murder, was irrelevant to whether appellant's arrest was illegal. Crenshaw v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 665, 2011 WL 286126 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 27 2011).

1125. Defendant was not entitled under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.36(a) to offer evidence of diminished capacity because his experts' reports, which did not address the standard for recklessness under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 6.03(c) or knowledge under § 6.03(a), could not support a claim that defendant was guilty only of manslaughter under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.04(a), rather than murder under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 19.02. Thus, the experts' testimony was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and was properly excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 702. Quick v. State, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 680, 2011 WL 286155 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 27 2011).

1126. Texas Department of Family and Protective Services had to prove that at least one statutory ground for termination occurred and that termination was in the best interest of the children; any evidence that the mother engaged in conduct constituting a ground for termination or that related to the best interest of the children was relevant. In re D.O., 338 S.W.3d 29, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 407 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 20 2011).

1127. Fact that one child placed a Nazi symbol on his book was relevant to determining whether the mother endangered the child's well-being and also to evaluating his best interests; it was not shown that the admission of the evidence unfairly prejudiced the mother under Tex. R. Evid. 403, and if the trial court did err in allowing the evidence, the error was harmless. In re D.O., 338 S.W.3d 29, 2011 Tex. App. LEXIS 407 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 20 2011).

1128. Evidence pertaining to appellant's conduct with two other women, where he allegedly anally raped one and forced the other to engaged in sexual acts at gunpoint, had logical relevance apart from character conformity because it showed that the victim's allegations were less likely to be fabricated, plus it rebutted appellant's statements that he would not have engaged in the alleged conduct; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling appellant's objection under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Jordan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10244, 2010 WL 5541695 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 30 2010).

1129. During defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child, the court did not err in admitting into evidence five child pornography photographs found on defendant's computer; his possession or viewing of child pornography was relevant circumstantial evidence of his intent to arouse or gratify his sexual desire. Wooley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10306 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 30 2010).

1130. In an eminent domain proceeding, the trial court abused its discretion in excluding evidence of the prior owner's environmental remediation agreement. Exclusion of the evidence was harmful, because it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401-402 to the jury's determination of the market value of the property. Caffe Ribs, Inc. v. State, 328 S.W.3d 919, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10188 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 28 2010).

1131. In a product liability action against a tire manufacturer, the trial court was within its discretion in excluding evidence regarding nylon cap plies; while the addition of a nylon cap ply might have prevented injury to a mother and children, a father did not demonstrate why evidence of the way tires were manufactured 12 years after the manufacture of the tire at issue would have been relevant to the feasibility of adding nylon cap plies in 1997. Hathcock v. Hankook Tire Am. Corp., 330 S.W.3d 733, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 10032 (Tex. App. Texarkana Dec. 17 2010).

1132. In defendant's trial for four counts of sexual assault of a child, the trial court did not err by refusing to admit evidence of specific instances of conduct under Tex. R. Evid. 608(b) to show that the victim's father had also been indicted for aggravated sexual assault of a child. For purposes of relevance under Tex. R. Evid. 401, defendant failed to show how the offense made more probable the existence of any motive, bias, or interest on the part of the witness; in fact, the evidence posed a risk of confusing or misleading the jury. Harris v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9999 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 16 2010).

1133. Where defendant convicted of driving while intoxicated after a traffic stop challenged the officer's basis for stopping him, the trial court erred by not including an Tex. Crim. Proc. Code Ann. art. 38.23(a) instruction in the jury charge. The videotape of the stop and the officers' testimony about the videotape was relevant for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it created some affirmative evidence to show that the stop was not justified. Dyer v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9964 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 16 2010).

1134. Trial court did not err by admitting testimony regarding an alleged threat defendant made against the unborn child of a witness because the testimony was relevant to the jury's determination of defendant's future dangerousness because it had a tendency to make the existence of defendant's future dangerousness more probable than it would be without the evidence. The statement had probative value, as the fact that he would make such a statement to a pregnant woman regarding an unborn child was some evidence of defendant's character, and it was not unfairly prejudicial, as it was not mentioned again after the witness testified. Martinez v. State, 327 S.W.3d 727, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1653 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010), cert. denied, No. 10-9833, --U.S. --, 131 S. Ct. 2966, 180 L. Ed.2d 253, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 4238 (2011).

1135. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion for a continuance, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. arts. 29.03, 29.08, given that (1) the State disclosed its witness list in February and appellant and counsel knew they were going to trial almost one month before the trial setting, (2) appellant provided no explanation of why counsel could not have interviewed the witnesses or hired an expert sometime between February and April, (3) appellant did not provide affidavits showing what testimony he would have elicited from the witnesses, had a continuance been granted, (4) if records were not relevant to the case, he could not show that he was harmed by their late production, and (5) the trial was not overly complex and counsel presented a competent defense. Suazo v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9781, 2010 WL 5018971 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 10 2010).

1136. In defendant's prosecution for interference with child custody under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 25.03(a)(1), evidence that he continued to pay child support after July 2006 was relevant and not unfairly prejudicial as it tended to rebut his claim that he and the complainant had reconciled and that he believed that the divorce decree was void. Long v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9804 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 9 2010).

1137. Mother did not object at trial to relevance or that any relevance was outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice and she did not preserve this complaint for review, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1; furthermore, the mother testified without objection to the substance of certain testimony, and any error in admitting evidence was cured where the same evidence came in elsewhere without objection. In the Interest of S.R., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9681, 2010 WL 4983484 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2010).

1138. Evidence of the mother's drug or alcohol impairment while driving was relevant in determining whether she engaged in conduct that endangered the children and in determining the best interest of the children; for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, the probative value of that evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. In the Interest of S.R., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9681, 2010 WL 4983484 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 8 2010).

1139. Had the Texas Department of Child Protective Services sought termination of the mother's parental rights due at least in part to her alleged failure to comply with the trial court's orders, then the transcript of the adversary hearing might have arguably been relevant, but, because the Department abandoned that ground, and the trial court did not charge the jury on that ground, the transcript had no tendency to make any fact of consequence more or less probable; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the transcript of the adversary hearing from evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 401. In the Interest of T.T.F., 331 S.W.3d 461, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 9599 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 2 2010).

1140. Court presumed without deciding that an objection to relevance preserved the alleged error that testimony did not assist the trier of fact for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 702; the court did not need to decide this issue because appellant's argument failed on the merits. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

1141. Officer, based on her experience, testified that sexually abused children often cry out to multiple persons, making the child's similar actions appropriate, and this enhanced an inference drawn from the fact that the child cried out to multiple adults and made it more probable that she was sexually abused; the officer's testimony was about a child victim's behavior, not a direct opinion on whether the child was telling the truth, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the officer's testimony, as it was relevant and assisted the trier of fact. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

1142. Nowhere did the court see an objection to the reliability or relevance of the witness's testimony and the context did not suggest that appellant objected on either of these grounds, for preservation purposes; it might have been apparent from the context that appellant objection on qualifications grounds, but he did not argue this on appeal. Shaw v. State, 329 S.W.3d 645, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8902 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Nov. 9 2010).

1143. Appellant pointed to actions by the trial court during the punishment phase of the trial, but those actions were irrelevant for purposes of this appeal, as appellant's challenge related only to his self-defense theory at the guilt-innocence phase. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8834, 2010 WL 4361885 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Nov. 4 2010).

1144. Text messages received by appellant were relevant evidence of his ability to follow community supervision conditions and terms, if granted, including those under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a)(1)-(2), (14), and this evidence was also proper to aid the jury in determining the appropriate length of his sentence, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1); the trial court could have reasonably found that the State introduced the text messages not for the truth of the matter asserted, but to impeach the credibility of character witnesses to test their knowledge of appellant, and no abuse of discretion was found. Barrientos v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8879, 2010 WL 4395423 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Nov. 4 2010).

1145. Police officer was properly permitted to testify as to the number of intoxicated people he had encountered during his career as it was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to establish the basis for his opinion that appellant was intoxicated. Schmidt v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8795, 2010 WL 4354027 (Tex. App. Beaumont Nov. 3 2010).

1146. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit evidence of a fight between the victim and his older brother because defendant failed to show the victim's propensity to fight when challenged was a pertinent character trait that had any relevance in a sexual assault on a child case. Soto v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8709, 2010 WL 4273173 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 29 2010).

1147. When defendant pleaded guilty to intoxication manslaughter in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 49.08(a), the doctrines of double jeopardy and collateral estoppel did not preclude the trial court at sentencing from determining that defendant's prior offense involved alcohol even though the State had reduced the charge in the prior case from driving while intoxicated (DWI) to obstruction of a highway or other passageway; double jeopardy did not attach, because there were no common factual elements between DWI and obstruction of a highway or other passageway. Under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 401-402, the trial court was permitted to consider all relevant evidence at sentencing. Cherian v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8646, 2010 WL 4244002 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 28 2010).

1148. Expert testimony valuing property on which a large natural gas processing plant had been built as vacant rural residential property was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and was unreliable under Tex. R. Evid. 702 because the expert failed to explain why the existing use of the property would not be presumed as the highest and best use, did not offer fair market value of the land based on its condition at the time of the condemnation, and did not account for all relevant factors affecting valuation. Enbridge Pipeline (east Texas) L.P. v. Avinger Timber, L.L.C., 326 S.W.3d 390, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8629, 172 Oil & Gas Rep. 722 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 27 2010).

1149. In a case in which a client sued an attorney and a law firm for breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, negligence (legal malpractice), and negligent misrepresentation, which was premised on the contention that the trial judge in the underlying action did not tell the attorney the parties would be limited to five days to try the case, the equal inference rule did not apply, and the trial court erred in granting no-evidence summary judgment on that ground because the record as a whole contained sufficient circumstantial evidence to enable a reasonable juror to infer that the alleged conversation in which the judge told the attorney he would limit trial time did not occur. The judge's testimony that it was his habit or practice not to limit the time to try a case, not to engage in substantive conversations about a case with only one side, and not to discuss pending cases in social settings, was evidence tending to make it less probable the purported conversation with the attorney occurred, and the pretrial history of the underlying litigation, together with the judge's testimony, taken as a whole and viewed in the light most favorable to the client, was sufficient to raise a fact issue on whether the judge made the alleged comment to the attorney. Total Clean, Llc v. Cox Smith Matthews, Inc., 330 S.W.3d 657, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8369 (Tex. App. San Antonio Oct. 20 2010).

1150. Although defendant contended that the trial court erred in sustaining the State's objection when defendant offered the ticket and booking information pertaining to an individual arrested on the night and at the location where defendant was arrested, defendant provided no argument for the relevance of the excluded evidence, other than asserting that such evidence allegedly impeached the arresting officer's testimony regarding the basis for the arrest of the other person. Because the evidence was not relevant to the issues in this case, the trial court did not err in excluding it. Howard v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8362, 2010 WL 4069330 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Oct. 19 2010).

1151. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the victim's mother to testify that the victim had experienced approximately 12 episodes of urinary incontinence at school because it tended to corroborate the victim's accusations and made the existence of the alleged penetration more probable. Arredondo v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8465, 2010 WL 4137425 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 19 2010).

1152. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the testimony of a fellow prisoner of defendant because it had a strong tendency to suggest that defendant was quick-tempered and prone to respond to the slightest provocation with homicidal violence, and it was directly relevant to the issue of defendant's identity as the murderer, as the prisoner testified that defendant spoke of putting "three in the back of the head" and expressed a preference for .22 caliber weapons, the same used to kill the victims. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the probative value of the prisoner's testimony was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or undue delay because only 51 pages of the 1347 pages of the reporter's record were devoted to the prisoner's testimony, including 15 pages for voir dire outside the jury's presence. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8313, 2010 WL 4053640 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 12 2010).

1153. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting photographs showing defendant's tattoos because a criminal investigator testified that defendant's distinctive tattoos as depicted in the photographs identified him as a member of a particular gang, and defendant did not overcome the presumption that the relevant evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Pate v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 8151, 2010 WL 3921177 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Oct. 7 2010).

1154. Trial court did not err by admitting during sentencing an audio recording of jokes defendant told his brother on the telephone while in jail over his First Amendment objection because it was within the zone of reasonable disagreement that the evidence was indicative of defendant's character and thus relevant to the issue of future dangerousness; the jocks, which defendant told after raping, beating, and murdering a 15-year-old girl showed that he found the topics of violence and disrespect towards women to be humorous. The evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it had a tendency to make the existence of defendant's future dangerousness more probable, and it was not so prejudicial that there was a clear disparity between the degree of prejudice and its probative value. Davis v. State, 329 S.W.3d 798, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1207 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1155. Trial court did not err when it allowed the State to present evidence that defendant had become a Satanist while imprisoned on death row because the evidence was relevant to the issue of defendant's future dangerousness and outside the protection of the First Amendment, as an expert testified that some members of the religion advocated violence, that Satanic religious publications like the ones found in defendant's cell discussed rituals of destruction and human sacrifice, and that various people had committed murder and mutilation in the name of Satan. Davis v. State, 329 S.W.3d 798, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1207 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1156. While the use of the term "all" in a discovery request to a company president and his wife appeared to be quite broad, the request was restricted to a class of documents and by date; the discovery requests were not overly broad and were relevant to the trace the purported transferring of money and assets to deflate the net worth of companies, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 24.1(a)(1) and Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 52.006, so as to inhibit the individual from collecting on his judgment, and the court rejected a privacy claim by the president and wife. In re Williams, 328 S.W.3d 103, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7779 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 23 2010).

1157. Individual's discovery requests spanning several years was relevant in proving his allegations that companies' net worth, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 24.1(a)(1) and Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 52.006, was inaccurate at the time the cash deposits in lieu of supersedeas bond were made because of the purported fraudulent transfers, for purposes of Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 24.001-.013. In re Williams, 328 S.W.3d 103, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7779 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 23 2010).

1158. For purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 24.1(a)(1), Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3(a), and Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 52.006, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring the president and wife to produce other records and documentation of their personal finances in ascertaining the net worth of the companies; for purposes of Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 41.003(a), a jury in an underlying case awarded an individual punitive damages against a company, and the court found the award supported by the evidence, and with the exception of the personal income tax returns, the financial information the individual sought to obtain through post-judgment discovery was highly relevant and material to determining the net worth of the company. In re Williams, 328 S.W.3d 103, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7779 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 23 2010).

1159. Scope of individual's discovery requests needed to be broad so as to trace the purported moving of assets and money that allegedly occurred in preparation for a possible negative jury verdict in the underlying case; the court was not persuaded by relevancy and broadness arguments. In re Williams, 328 S.W.3d 103, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7779 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Sept. 23 2010).

1160. In appellant's trial for driving while intoxicated with child passengers, the court was not suggesting the amount of drugs in appellant's body was irrelevant to the inquiry of whether his condition was caused by the prescription drugs; while a quantitative analysis would have strengthened the State's case, it was not performed and such an analysis was not required. Smarr v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7478, 2010 WL 3518746 (Tex. App. Texarkana Sept. 10 2010).

1161. During a civil commitment hearing, the trial court did not err in sustaining the State's relevancy objection to a question to a psychologist concerning whether a diagnosis of pedophilia predisposed a person to commit acts of sexual violence because the psychologist had not diagnosed respondent with pedophilia. In re Commitment of Robertson, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7421 (Tex. App. Beaumont Sept. 9 2010).

1162. Evidence regarding a child-welfare complaint investigation was relevant to prove the State's allegation that appellant knew an investigation of drug possession and/or child welfare complaint was in progress; thus, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence regarding the welfare complaint because it went to a material element of the State's tampering case under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 37.09(a)(1) and was not an extraneous offense under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b). Beck v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7265, 2010 WL 3434075 (Tex. App. Waco Sept. 1 2010).

1163. Given what the State had to prove regarding the evading arrest and tampering counts, the evidence describing how methamphetamine was made was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it tended to show that the stop was lawful for the evading arrest indictment and it tended to show that a knowing offense was being committed for the tampering indictment, and thus the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's relevancy objection. Lewis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7292, 2010 WL 3433992 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2010).

1164. Certain testimony and a DVD were relevant to the elements of both counts of evading arrest and tampering, and the testimony also corroborated accomplice testimony regarding appellant's intent; the testimony in question did not unduly delay the trial and appellant raised no argument about the DVD's length, such that the trial court did not err in overruling appellant's Tex. R. Evid. 403 objection and in admitting the evidence. Lewis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7292, 2010 WL 3433992 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 31 2010).

1165. Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the still photos, because the trial court could have properly determined the still photos had a connection to defendant and a bearing on the case; the photos were relevant to show that someone in defendant's home had sexual proclivities toward anal sex and female bondage, which corroborated the complainant's description of events. Shakouri v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7064, 2010 WL 3386598 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 30 2010).

1166. To the extent certain matters were relevant to the court's analysis, the court took judicial notice of those matters. Vista Healthcare, Inc. v. Tex. Mut. Ins. Co., 324 S.W.3d 264, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 7046 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 26 2010).

1167. Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence photographs of defendant's tattoos because a criminal investigator testified that defendant's distinctive tattoos identified him as a member of particular street gang, which was an element of the charged offense of organized criminal activity. Defendant did not overcome the presumption that the relevant evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Pate v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6980, 2010 WL 3341853 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2010).

1168. Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by allowing the State to question him about testimony he gave in a prior trial because at trial defendant specifically objected to the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 403, but on appeal he argued that the testimony was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6738, 2010 WL 3279386 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 19 2010).

1169. Although a shareholder requested a hearing on appellee's objections, he did not request a privilege log or an in camera inspection on all withheld documents, for purposes of Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.3(b); the shareholder did not contend that appellees possessed specific responsive documents and failed to disclose them, nor did the shareholder contend that the documents sought in his motion to compel were relevant to the determination of certain issues, such that the shareholder failed to show that the trial court's denial of his motion to compel probably caused the trial court to improperly grant summary judgment for appellees, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Haase v. Gim Res., Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6832 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Aug. 19 2010).

1170. Appellant alleged that a witness was not called and could have been beneficial, but appellant did not show that the witness was able to testify at trial, there was little of any testimony that would have been relevant to the trial, and certain remarks did not show that counsel provided ineffective assistance. Mcclanathan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6598 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 16 2010).

1171. Evidence of trace quantities of controlled substances that were found in defendant's car during the same search in which the methadone was found was relevant and admissible because it was visible in a baggie and on a scale, and the baggie was found in the location where the trooper had seen defendant secret something. Lamkin v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6484, 2010 WL 3170647 (Tex. App. Eastland Aug. 12 2010).

1172. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by overruling defendant's Tex. R. Evid. 401 objection to a family counselor's testimony because the evidence was relevant, as the counselor's testimony identified some behavioral manifestations of sexual abuse and how the victim exhibited some of those behaviors. Berzley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6463, 2010 WL 3159875 (Tex. App. San Antonio Aug. 11 2010).

1173. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding documents dating from 2004 and 2005 on the basis of the State's objection that they were irrelevant to the issue of whether family violence had been committed. Goad v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6349 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2010).

1174. Complaints about the actions of the assistant district attorney were not relevant to the issue of the constitutionality of Title IV of the Texas Family Code and the ex-husband did not show the statutes at issue were unconstitutional as applied to him. Goad v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6349 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 6 2010).

1175. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 404(b), the trial court could have reasonably determined that the testimony about appellant's pretrial supervision and having been found competent to stand trial in a separate case was relevant rebuttal testimony that appellant was motivated to commit the underlying offenses to demonstrate that he was not competent to stand trial in the other case. Espinosa v. State, 328 S.W.3d 32, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6341 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 5 2010).

1176. When a letter was offered into evidence at trial, defense counsel said "no objection," thereby waiving any alleged error in admission of that evidence, plus there was testimony about the letter, to which there was no objection; moreover, attempts by one to fabricate evidence were admissible, the evidence showing that appellant fabricated evidence was probative, and he did not show that the evidence had the potential to impress the jury in an irrational way. Seeger v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6064, 2010 WL 2998750 (Tex. App. Tyler July 30 2010).

1177. Amended pleadings added claims arising from or related to the conduct of the husband in contemplation of marriage and during marriage; even if the scope of proper discovery excluded inquiry into the husband's conduct before the wife's amended pleadings, after it was served, the rules authorized proper discovery, and the court declined to grant mandamus based on the executor's contention that the trial court abused its discretion by not sustaining his relevancy objection to the wife's production requests. In re Rogers, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 6210, 2010 WL 2991144 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 30 2010).

1178. Relevancy objection was properly overruled pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 401 and 702 in a case involving sexual abuse of a child because defense counsel had previously cross-examined the nurse practitioner about her experience with false allegations of sexual abuse and circumstances involving the absence of physical findings; thus, the redirect of the nurse practitioner regarding statistics of confirmed cases of sexual abuse where there were no physical findings was relevant. Cortez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5854, 2010 WL 2889670 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 22 2010).

1179. Question to appellant's aunt in the punishment phase regarding the criminal history of appellant's brother and sister was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because one of the issues was whether appellant was a suitable candidate for community supervision and, in determining that issue, the character and criminal background of family members with whom appellant would associate was relevant under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 11(a)(3); any error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) because the aunt never responded and appellant had, inter alia, tested positive for alcohol on two separate occasions during urinalysis tests while out on bond. Jones v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5860, 2010 WL 2889690 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 22 2010).

1180. Testimony of defendant's former girlfriend during the punishment phase as to the impact of an extraneous offense on her was not victim impact evidence because she was the victim of that extraneous offense, and the testimony was admissible in a case of evading arrest or detention using a motor vehicle. Guerra v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5655, 2010 WL 2816215 (Tex. App. Amarillo July 19 2010).

1181. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the affiant's deposition concerning a different case because that deposition did not pertain to the original lender, for relevance purposes, and the debtor never challenged the trustworthiness of the lender's documents. Simien v. Unifund CCR Ptnrs, 321 S.W.3d 235, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5585 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

1182. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by prohibiting defendant from questioning his daughter about the victim's use of marijuana because whether the victim used drugs over a month earlier would not rebut the toxicology report showing no drugs in her system at the time she was killed. Mcghee v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5561 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. July 15 2010).

1183. In appellant's aggravated sexual assault of a child trial, appellant's admission of how he contracted gonorrhea, which the victim also had, was relevant, and the failure to object to admissible evidence was not ineffective assistance. Edens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5485, 2010 WL 2784438 (Tex. App. Tyler July 14 2010).

1184. Evidence of the burglary to view pornography was admissible at the punishment stage of the trial because it was relevant to sentencing in appellant's aggravated sexual assault of a child trial, and the failure to object to admissible evidence was not ineffective assistance. Edens v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5485, 2010 WL 2784438 (Tex. App. Tyler July 14 2010).

1185. Appellant did not meet his burden of affirmatively showing his flight was directly connected to the pending drug charges and not connected with the murder charge, and thus evidence of appellant's flight was relevant. Staley v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 5167, 2010 WL 2680000 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 7 2010).

1186. Ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of U.S. Const. amend. VI was shown where defendant's counsel failed to object to evidence that one of two women who died after being run over by defendant's truck was pregnant; evidence of her pregnancy was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. R. Evid. 402 because the fact that the woman was pregnant did not tend to make it more or less probable that defendant had the requisite intent to injure her and there was no evidence that defendant in fact even was aware of the woman's pregnancy. White v. Thaler, 610 F.3d 890, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 13329 (5th Cir. Tex. 2010).

1187. Court acted within its discretion in admitting the challenged testimony, because evidence that defendant wore a shirt commemorating a notorious gang founder with a violent history was relevant to explain his motive for urging his accomplice to shoot the store employee. Carey v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4876, 2010 WL 2573846 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 29 2010).

1188. Defendant's conviction for engaging in organized criminal activity, with the two predicate offenses being aggravated sexual assault of a child, was improper because evidence that the children's current foster parent had been accused of sexually molesting foster children under his care in the past was certainly relevant to the defense. Thus, the trial court's exclusion of that evidence on relevancy grounds was erroneous. Kelly v. State, 321 S.W.3d 583, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4506 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 17 2010).

1189. For purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.071, § 2(a)(1) and Tex. R. Evid. 401, though circumstantial, the evidence clearly proved that appellant killed the victim's cat, which suffered wounds similar to those suffered by the victim; that appellant would kill a house cat was some evidence of his violent nature, the prosecutor's assessment of this evidence as showing appellant's brutality was rational and was a legitimate reason for admitting the evidence, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Tex. R. Evid. 403 in admitting this evidence. Davis v. State, 313 S.W.3d 317, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 723 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1190. Appellant appeared to claim that a doctor's testimony was admissible because it was relevant and no rule of evidence required its exclusion, but this contention was incorrect because the evidence was rendered legally irrelevant by Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 8.04. Davis v. State, 313 S.W.3d 317, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 723 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1191. Cross-examiner must still show the relevance of the vulnerable status or other alleged source of bias to the witness's testimony and it is not enough to say that all witnesses who may, coincidentally, be on probation, have pending charges, be in the country illegally, or have some other vulnerable status are automatically subject to cross-examination with that status regardless of its lack of relevance to the testimony of that witness; thus, to the extent that Maxwell v. State, 48 S.W.3d 196 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001), is inconsistent with Carpenter v. State, 979 S.W.2d 633 (Tex. Crim. App. 1998), the court overrules it. Irby v. State, 327 S.W.3d 138, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 725 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1192. Probationary status, pending charges, unadjudicated crimes, or other bad acts may be admissible to show motive or bias if the proponent makes a logical connection between the base fact and the witness's testimony; otherwise, it is irrelevant. Irby v. State, 327 S.W.3d 138, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 725 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1193. Texas has an important interest in protecting the anonymity of juvenile offenders and under Tex. R. Evid. 609(d), Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 51.13(b), that anonymity is explicitly protected, and to hold that any juvenile who happens to be on probation at the time that he also is the victim of a crime or a witness in a criminal proceeding automatically loses that privacy protection is not required by the constitution or by common sense; Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308 (1974), is not a blunderbuss that decimates all other evidentiary statutes, rules, and relevance requirements in matters of witness impeachment, and it is a rapier that targets only a specific mode of impeachment--bias and motive--when the cross-examiner can show a logical connection between the evidence suggesting bias or motive and the witness's testimony. The court therefore rejects the absolutist position that a probationer, particularly a probationer whose guilt has not yet been adjudicated, is always in a vulnerable relationship with the State and that mere status is always automatically relevant to show a witness's possible bias and motive to testify favorably for the State as inconsistent with Texas and United States Supreme Court precedent. Irby v. State, 327 S.W.3d 138, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 725 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1194. Any evidence showing that the juvenile victim had a motive to make up this story was relevant and admissible for impeachment purposes, but the court agreed with the trial court and court of appeals that appellant failed to make a logical connection between the victim's testimony concerning his sexual encounters with appellant and his entirely separate probationary status, such that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding this impeachment evidence because it was irrelevant. Irby v. State, 327 S.W.3d 138, 2010 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 725 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010).

1195. Appellant failed to preserve any error associated with the trial court's exclusion of answers to certain questions; after the State objected, appellant did not tell the trial court how the questions were relevant, nor was such apparent from the context of the questions asked, and although appellant properly preserved a complaint by informing the trial court that he wanted to cross-examine a witness about certain issues, the trial court was concerned about interrogation that was repetitive and appellant had already asked several questions in this regard, such that the trial court did not err in limiting the cross-examination. Ramirez v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 4365 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 10 2010).

1196. Even if defendant had objected to a witness's testimony at trial, the trial court would not have abused its discretion in allowing the testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), given that evidence that defendant had delivered drugs to another person about two weeks before his arrest was relevant to show that, on the date of his arrest, he possessed the methamphetamine with the intent to deliver. Gately v. State, 321 S.W.3d 72, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3785 (Tex. App. Eastland May 20 2010).

1197. Because forgery was not pleaded as an affirmative defense under Tex. R. Civ. P. 94 in a suit for a constructive trust, handwriting evidence was not helpful and thus was irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, 702. Estate of Wallis, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3710, 2010 WL 1987514 (Tex. App. Tyler May 19 2010).

1198. Identity of the driver was contested and was one of the key contested points before the trial court; that a hoodie, possibly belonging to defendant, was found in the car at the time of the arrest the next day, when defendant was indisputably driving, did not tend to make it more likely that defendant had been the driver the previous day, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401. Johnson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3884, 2010 WL 2010762 (Tex. App. Austin May 19 2010).

1199. To the extent that the State argued that the evidence, certain drawings, somehow showed that defendant was the mastermind behind the crime, it was undisputed that the three men were friends and that defendant's nickname was "G-Money," but it was unclear how a drawing on which "G-Money" was displayed would corroborate certain evidence; it was not shown that the hoodie in which the drawing was found was defendant's or that the drawing was his, and the court could not find that the trial court's decision to admit the evidence as relevant was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Johnson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3884, 2010 WL 2010762 (Tex. App. Austin May 19 2010).

1200. Even if the trial court erred by admitting drawings, defendant had not demonstrate reversible error under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that nothing connected the drawings to any sort of organized gang and there was no indication that these drawings amounted to any sort of gang affiliation evidence; the trial court admitted the drawings as one more means of showing defendant's presence in the vehicle at the time the aggravated robbery occurred, defendant's argument that the evidence was unfairly prejudicial found little support in the record, and at most, by showing that the evidence lacked relevance, defendant showed that the evidence did not tend to prove or disprove any disputed fact, not that his substantial rights were affected by the drawings' admission. Johnson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3884, 2010 WL 2010762 (Tex. App. Austin May 19 2010).

1201. There was sufficient evidence to support the finding that the ex-husband, who was an attorney, became the ex-wife's attorney, investment advisor, and custodian of her assets prior to the parties' marriage, and thus the ex-husband owed the ex-wife a fiduciary duty, which was separate from his fiduciary obligation as a spouse; even if the only fiduciary responsibility arose from the general duty between spouses, such a duty would remain relevant to the court's analysis of the statutory affirmative defenses to enforcement of a post-marital agreement. 4.105. Izzo v. Izzo, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3623, 2010 WL 1930179 (Tex. App. Austin May 14 2010).

1202. In considering the enforceability of the parties' agreement, the evidence supported a finding that the ex-wife did not understand the meaning or effect of the agreement at the time it was executed, given that (1) she was unaware of the value of her ex-husband's law practice, (2) the trial court was free to disbelieve the ex-husband's claim that the ex-wife had access to the firm's records and books, as testimony suggested that she did not have the requisite financial and computer literacy to obtain financial information, and (3) information as to the potential value of contingency fee cases, while relevant to the firm's value, could not be ascertained from a review of the firm's bank statements. Izzo v. Izzo, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3623, 2010 WL 1930179 (Tex. App. Austin May 14 2010).

1203. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting autopsy photographs, given that (1) the medical examiner's testimony about the wounds was relevant and the pictures were a visual representation of that testimony, (2) the wounds were described in the autopsy report, which was admitted without objection, and (3) defendant's argument was that the results of the crime were horrific, but the result of the crime was the very issue that was relevant. Jett v. State, 319 S.W.3d 846, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3559 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 12 2010).

1204. Defendant's tattoo constituted some evidence that he was a member of the gang and was admissible under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07 as probative of his character, even without the State's compliance with the requirements of case law, and thus the trial court could have reasonably concluded that such evidence of defendant's gang affiliation was relevant in the punishment phase of the trial. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1205. Evidence of valuable narcotics left in plain view may tend to prove that a robbery was not the motive for the shooting of a victim and thus the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the photographs and diagram were relevant to disproving defendant's alternate theory of how the victim was killed; defendant did not explain how the negative attributes of the photographs and diagram substantially outweighed any probative value and the photographs and diagram were not unfairly prejudicial because no evidence identified the narcotics as defendant's. The trial court did not err in admitting the evidence. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1206. Firearms, viewed together, served to disprove defendant's theory that the victim was shot during a robbery because such valuable property would have been the target of any robbery, and defendant's concealment of the murder weapon along with the other firearms showed a consciousness of guilt, a relevant fact at issue and the court could have found that the additional firearms were relevant. Anderson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3440, 2010 WL 1839945 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1207. Although an owner requested a hearing on appellees' objections, he did not request a privilege log or an in camera inspection of all withheld documents under Tex. R. Civ. P. 193.3(b), and the trial court denied the owner's motion to compel upon the findings that the responses were adequate; the owner did not contend that the documents sought in his motion to compel were relevant to the determination of certain issues and thus he failed to show that the trial court's denial of the motion to compel probably caused the trial court to improperly grant summary judgment in favor of appellees, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Haase v. Gim Res., Inc., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3431 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1208. Photographs of defendant, his car, and its contents were relevant, as the identity of the convenience store robber was a fact of consequence in this aggravated robbery case and the evidence obtained at another store made the determination of whether defendant was the robber more probable, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402. Lively v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3387, 2010 WL 1780138 (Tex. App. Texarkana May 5 2010).

1209. Trial court acted within its wide discretion during defendant's murder and engaging in organized criminal activity trial by admitting a gang unit police officer's testimony that defendant had previously been the victim of a shooting; although evidence of the earlier shooting did not establish conclusively that the shooting in the instant case was gang-related, it nonetheless provided a "small nudge" toward proving that it was, and that was all that was required. Lucio v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3241 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 29 2010).

1210. Witness overheard a conversation between the child victim and her brother; given the circumstances, the trial court could have found that the witness's opinion regarding the emotional undercurrent of the conversation was rationally based on her hearing perception, and the witness's opinion was relevant to help the jury's credibility determination regarding prior testimony by the brother. Cockrell v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3208, 2010 WL 1705538 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 28 2010).

1211. Defendant's intent, and the absence of mistake or accident, was a fact of consequence in this case alleging a violation of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 62.055(a), and evidence of defendant's employment and failure to report his employment status was relevant because it tended to establish an elemental fact and rebut a defensive theory; the fact that defendant did not inform the police department of his employment was some evidence establishing his intent to violate the registration requirements, and it was sufficient that the evidence provided a small nudge toward proving or disproving a fact of consequence, and the trial court did not err in admitting this evidence. Garcia v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2899, 2010 WL 1611006 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 22 2010).

1212. Whether the child victim was penetrated by defendant was at issue in this case for aggravated sexual assault and indecency; the trial court could have reasonably determined that the pediatrician expert's testimony that children who are sexually abused by way of penetration might not show any physical injuries was relevant and assisted the jury in understanding the evidence in this case, such that the trial court did not err in admitting the expert's testimony. Casillas v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2888, 2010 WL 1609697 (Tex. App. San Antonio Apr. 21 2010).

1213. Private club was entitled to mandamus relief from a discovery order requiring it to produce documents containing members' names in a defamation suit; although the names of members who allegedly made defamatory statements might be relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 and subject to discovery under Tex. R. Civ. P. 192.3(b), other members' names were not, and the order was thus overbroad. In re Houstonian Campus, Llc, 312 S.W.3d 178, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2805 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Apr. 16 2010).

1214. It is not enough that the evidence is relevant; pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 403, the probative value of the evidence must not be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, misleading the jury, or by considerations of delay or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. King v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2811, 2010 WL 1510204 (Tex. App. Tyler Apr. 16 2010).

1215. Court did not err in excluding all of defendant's proffered evidence at sentencing, because defendant did not separate the admissible evidence from the inadmissible evidence. Fegans v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2588, 2010 WL 1571217 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 8 2010).

1216. Evidence indicating that defendant's son's siblings had also been subject to medical child abuse was relevant to understanding the magnitude of the motivational force, which the average person would have difficulty comprehending; the medical record and testimonial evidence showing that the siblings were also victims of medical child abuse was relevant to prove motive and the evidence was admissible pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) in defendant's injury to a child trial. Williamson v. State, 356 S.W.3d 1, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 3432 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. May 6 2010).

1217. Explanation of an objection did not appear to argue a violation of the right against self-incrimination, but assuming the objection was preserved, defendant's complaint about having to show his tattoos on his legs to the jury had no merit; it had been repeatedly held that the display of a defendant's tattoos to the jury was not a violation of the right against self-incrimination, because the defense was an attempt to show that the victims were mistaken as to defendant's identity, evidence of a name tattoo was relevant, and that the tattoo may have been his name mattered little because it was no less identifying that eye or hair color, which an accused could be compelled to disclose to the jury. Sauceda v. State, 309 S.W.3d 767, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2437 (Tex. App. Amarillo Apr. 5 2010).

1218. Evidence regarding the bar staff's affirmative conduct was relevant to issues of negligence and causation under the premises-liability claim. Del Lago Ptnrs. v. Smith, 307 S.W.3d 762, 2010 Tex. LEXIS 284, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 514 (Tex. 2010).

1219. Defendant failed to explain how letters would have impeached his girlfriend's credibility, and on their face the letters did not evince relevance or impeachment value and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the letters. George v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2425, 2010 WL 1269676 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 31 2010).

1220. Photographic lineup, testimony about why defendant's picture was included in the lineup, and the victim's identification of defendant had a tendency to make his identity more probable than it would be without the evidence; therefore, the lineup was relevant. Morgan v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2853, 2010 WL 1224318 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 31 2010).

1221. Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in overruling his relevancy objection to certain testimony, defendant did not dispute the crux of the testimony against him and it was reasonable to believe that the claimed fraudulent acts provided some guidance about whether defendant was to be continued on probation or imprisoned, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), such that the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. Fletcher v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2218 (Tex. App. Dallas Mar. 29 2010).

1222. During defendant's trial for unlawful possession of a firearm and possession of cocaine, the trial court, without abusing its discretion, could have determined that the fact that defendant's adult daughter previously possessed and disposed of a handgun was not probative of any fact of consequence to the determination of defendant's guilt; the court could have determined that any relevance the evidence possessed was substantially outweighed by the danger of confusion of the issues involved in defendant's prosecution. Taylor v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2024, 2010 WL 1027534 (Tex. App. Amarillo Mar. 22 2010).

1223. Defendant had made a relevancy objection at trial, but this did not preserve error concerning a Tex. R. Evid. 404(b)claim, and thus he could not argue on appeal that the evidence constituted inadmissible character evidence, which he did not assert in the trial court. Gilmore v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1944 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 18 2010).

1224. There was no evidence in this case that defendant's stepfather's experience in the sex offender treatment program would be the same as her experience and thus the trial court did not err in sustaining a relevance objection and excluding the testimony. Hoselton v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2009 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 18 2010).

1225. After noting the victim's symptoms of post-traumatic stress from defendant's repeated abuse, including being burned with a lighter on his genital area, a State expert testified, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, § 5(a), that it would be in the best interest of the eight-year-old victim for defendant to be denied community supervision; defendant did not contest this evaluation, her expert was not involved with the victim and thus her testimony was not relevant to this finding, and even if the trial court erred in excluding defendant's expert's testimony, it did not affect defendant's substantial rights and had to be disregarded under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Hoselton v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2009 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 18 2010).

1226. State was required to prove the victim's death was caused by a gunshot wound to the head and photographs were used to explain the manner and circumstances of death; although the photographs might have been gruesome, they were relevant and the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's relevance objection. Davis v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 2008, 2010 WL 746428 (Tex. App. Texarkana Mar. 5 2010).

1227. When the workers' compensation administrative record was admitted into evidence under Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 410.306(b), redacted documents properly could have been excluded under Tex. R. Evid. 401 as irrelevant in part and under Tex. R. Evid. 403 because of the likelihood of confusion; thus, the trial court adequately informed the jury of the appeals panel's decision under Tex. Lab. Code Ann. § 410.304(b). Fort Worth Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Seifert, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1575, 2010 WL 730362 (Tex. App. Waco Mar. 3 2010).

1228. Record showed that statements from potential witnesses would not necessarily have been beneficial to defendant, and the record was otherwise silent as to the significance and relevance of the statements; given the lack of evidence establishing the relevance of the statements, and given the potentially harmful nature of portions of their statements, defendant failed to rebut the presumption that counsel's decision to not offer their statements was a reasonable one. White v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1351, 2010 WL 668902 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 26 2010).

1229. In order to refute defendant's self-defense claim in his murder trial, based on the 2004 murder of his brother, it was relevant for the State to show that on another occasion, defendant used a knife to cut a man, without provocation or threat; thus, that 2006 offense was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to rebut the self-defense theory. Oakes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1349, 2010 WL 668541 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 25 2010).

1230. State was required to prove that a death of a particular individual had occurred in the manner alleged, which was shooting, and a photograph helped supply such proof and thus had a tendency to make the existence of a fact that was of consequence to the determination of the action more probable than it would be without the evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401. Oakes v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1349, 2010 WL 668541 (Tex. App. Amarillo Feb. 25 2010).

1231. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a spoliation finding in a customer's slip-and-fall negligence action against a grocery store because even though at least one hour of video footage of the events preceding the customer's fall was relevant, the footage would not have shown whether liquid was on the floor, how long it was on the floor, whether a walk through by an employee was done, and when it was done. Clark v. Randalls Food, 317 S.W.3d 351, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1431 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Feb. 25 2010).

1232. Ex-wife's testimony describing how defendant forced her into unwanted sexual activity had no tendency to prove or disprove the suggestion that defendant's wife was a manipulative control freak who would or could coerce her daughters into making false accusations against their father. Schoff v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1350, 2010 WL 668904 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 23 2010).

1233. In defendant's aggravated assault against a public servant trial, the State was required to prove that defendant acted intentionally or knowingly under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 6.03; none of the excluded evidence regarding defendant's mental health explained how defendant's psychotic state affected her ability to perceive that the officer was a public servant or showed that defendant was so delusional that she was unaware that she was striking his vehicle, such that the trial court could have found the evidence was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Woods v. State, 306 S.W.3d 905, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1106 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 17 2010).

1234. In defendant's aggravated assault against a public servant trial, assuming the evidence of defendant's mental state was relevant, the trial court was within its discretion to exclude the evidence on the grounds that the probative value of the evidence of defendant's hospitalization three days after the incident was substantially outweighed by the danger that the evidence would confuse the issues under Tex. R. Evid. 403; without being tied to defendant's actions at the time of the offense or having its significance explained in terms of the effect of her mental illness on her perceptions, the fact of her hospitalization might merely evoke fear or pity and affect the jury in some irrational way. Woods v. State, 306 S.W.3d 905, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 1106 (Tex. App. Beaumont Feb. 17 2010).

1235. Because the DIC-24 Statutory Warning Form was relevant to prove that defendant refused to submit to the taking of a specimen of breath and was provided with the required information before her specimen was requested, a trial court did not err in admitting the DIC-24 Form during defendant's driving while intoxicated trial. The DIC-24 Form contained the information that Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.015 required to be given in writing. Zamora v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 943, 2010 WL 456941 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 11 2010).

1236. Given that a contract was between appellant and appellee and not a corporation, the corporation's status or ability to tender payment was irrelevant. Giannakopoulos v. Eris, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 897, 2010 WL 431273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 9 2010).

1237. Appellant did not appeal the finding that he breached the contract with appellee and thus whether he asserted other claims that would support an award of attorney fees was irrelevant. Giannakopoulos v. Eris, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 897, 2010 WL 431273 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 9 2010).

1238. Extraneous evidence linked defendant to a car chase and thus sufficient evidence existed for the jury to find that defendant committed the extraneous offenses, and the trial court did not err in admitting this evidence as relevant to punishment, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1). Frederickson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 830, 2010 WL 395183 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 4 2010).

1239. In defendant's felony murder case, the court properly allowed the victim's daughter to testify to her relationship with her father because the gist of the witness's testimony set up the circumstances immediately leading up to the murder, and was relevant to show the probative circumstances of the crime. Arguably, the two questions regarding the relationship between the victim and the witness were necessary to establish the connection between them, as well as the victim's actions immediately prior to his death. Flores v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 822, 2010 WL 411747 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 4 2010).

1240. In defendant's felony murder case, a court properly admitted a photo of the victim prior to death because it demonstrated the victim's health and physical characteristics, the photo of the victim while alive furnished a basis of contrast and comparison with other photos showing the wounds inflicted by the assault, and the fact that several witnesses identified the victim did not necessarily reduce the probative value of the photo. Flores v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 822, 2010 WL 411747 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Feb. 4 2010).

1241. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting certain messages, which were clearly relevant to motive in defendant's murder trial and the probative value was not substantially outweighed by any prejudicial effect. Lopez v. State, 314 S.W.3d 54, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 725 (Tex. App. San Antonio Feb. 3 2010).

1242. In defendant's aggravated sexual assault case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's relevancy objection to the testimony of the victim's mother that defendant owned pornography because the mother's testimony corroborated the fact that defendant owned pornography he could have shown to the victim. Defendant's ownership of pornography was relevant to the allegation of sexual assault and relevant on the issue of intent. Garrett v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 685, 2010 WL 338202 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 1 2010).

1243. In defendant's murder case, the court properly admitted testimony regarding the victim having worked for defendant as a prostitute because the witness testified that the cycle of violence evolved from "slapping" to the point of "pretty brutal beatings." That testimony tended to show that defendant was violent toward the victim in the past and that his violence toward her was escalating; therefore, the testimony was relevant to the charge of murder. Wilson v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 604, 2010 WL 323537 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 28 2010).

1244. Company did not explain on what issue the dates on photographs were relevant and the company did not demonstrate how the exclusion of the dates on the back of the photographs led to the rendition of an improper judgment for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.1. Weeks Marine, Inc. v. Barrera, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 438, 2010 WL 307878 (Tex. App. San Antonio Jan. 27 2010).

1245. Trial court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's trial for the aggravated sexual assault of his eleven-year-old step-grandson in admitting pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) the testimony of defendant's nephew (one of the State's rebuttal witnesses) that defendant had sexually assaulted him where defendant's defense was that his step-grandson and his granddaughter were fabricating their accusations because defendant had testified in his own behalf and after having been fully admonished as to the consequences, and he denied sexually assaulting not only the victim but also his granddaughter. Moreover, there was no merit in defendant's argument that any remoteness of the extraneous offense automatically made the testimony irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Espinoza v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 559, 2010 WL 227680 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 21 2010).

1246. In defendant's indecency trial, and in relation to his nephew's testimony that defendant sexually assaulted him, the defense was that the victim in the current case and the nephew fabricated their accusations, such that the trial court's ruling to allow the nephew's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) was not outside the zone of reasonableness; the court also disagreed with defendant's argument that any remoteness of the extraneous offense automatically made the testimony irrelevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Espinoza v. State, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 523, 2010 WL 227661 (Tex. App. Eastland Jan. 21 2010).

1247. Trial court did not err in allowing a witness's testimony, which was not about science or scientific causation, but rather was about actual practice and a general understanding in the oil and gas industry as to what constituted commencement of operations; the witness was qualified to testify about the practices in the industry with which he was familiar, despite the fact that he was not a driller, and because the issue of a nonoperator's compliance with the joint operating agreement's requirement of commencement of operations was submitted to the jury, this kind of evidence was relevant and appropriate. Valence Operating Co. v. Anadarko Petroleum Corp., 303 S.W.3d 435, 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 300 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 15 2010).

1248. Complained-of statement was not relevant in the court's analysis and thus the trial court could have granted a motion for summary judgment without considering the statements or evidence, which were challenged by special exception. Brown v. Am. Fid. Assur. Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 296 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 14 2010).

1249. Affidavit was not relevant in the court's analysis and the trial court could have granted a motion for summary judgment without considering the challenged affidavit, which was challenged by special exception. Brown v. Am. Fid. Assur. Co., 2010 Tex. App. LEXIS 296 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 14 2010).

1250. Neighbors' videotaping inside the landowners' house from their property, over the fence, constituted an actionable invasion of privacy; even if the court held that the advice of the animal control unit to videotape the landowners' dog was somehow relevant to the issue of liability, there was no evidence that the dog was barking at the time of the filming, inside the kitchen at the time of the filming, or that the neighbors were advised to film inside the landowners' house. Baugh v. Fleming, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9847, 2009 WL 5149928 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 31 2009).

1251. Picture of spinner rims was properly admitted because it aided the jury in understanding the police officers' testimony about the improvements that defendant made to the rental car he drove for approximately one week; that was helpful to the jury by enabling them to determine if the installation of spinner rims tended to demonstrate defendant's control over the rental car. In addition, a photograph of the spinner rims that were actually installed on the rental car would have been relevant for the same reason and admissible at trial. Rollins v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9891 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 31, 2009).

1252. To corroborate an accomplice's testimony, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.14, the State offered the testimony of one witness and defendant's parole officer; because the officer's identification testimony identified defendant as the male robber in the photographs taken during the robbery, the testimony tended to make it more probable, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, that he was the male robber, and thus the testimony was relevant and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence as relevant. Mendez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9785, 2009 WL 5150071 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2009).

1253. Defendant's parole officer's identification testimony substantively contributed to make the existence of a fact, that defendant was the male robber depicted in photographs, more likely, and the evidence was offered in an effort to corroborate accomplice-witness testimony, and thus the officer's testimony did not constitute improper bolstering. Mendez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9785, 2009 WL 5150071 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2009).

1254. In an aggravated assault case, even if photographs of dead cattle were irrelevant, their admission was harmless error because testimony describing the dead cattle was admitted without objection. Walls v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9783, 2009 WL 5150073 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 30 2009).

1255. In defendant's sexual assault case, the court properly admitted extraneous offense evidence because the disputed testimony was relevant for several reasons; the disputed evidence was relevant because DNA evidence left by the anal sexual assault connected defendant to the charged offense, and the evidence at trial showed that the same individual committed all of the sexual offenses. The complainant's testimony was relevant as same transaction contextual evidence to show the events in question were closely interwoven and to aid the jury in understanding the context in which those events transpired. Walker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9780, 2009 WL 5103274 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 29 2009).

1257. In defendant's capital murder trial, defendant maintained that he did not know how the victim was injured and thus the nature of the injuries and the victim's cause of death were at issue; one exhibit was not duplicative of another because each exhibit showed a different side of the victim's skull, a doctor used both exhibits to explain his testimony, while the photographs were gruesome, they were no more gruesome than would be expected given the injuries, and because the doctor's testimony was relevant, the photographs were also relevant. Nothing demonstrated that trial counsel's failure to object to the photographs was deficient, such that the court heeded the strong presumption that trial counsel provided reasonable professional assistance. Andrus v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9574, 2009 WL 4856202 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 17 2009).

1258. In a case in which a jury had convicted a habeas corpus applicant of possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine, in the amount of 200 grams or more, but less than 400 grams, applicant demonstrated that trial counsel was deficient for failing to object to: (1) an officer's testimony regarding the extent of the methamphetamine problem; and (2) the prosecutor's argument, that "people" were bringing methamphetamine into the county to poison the children and turn them into addicts and that children were in fact shooting up and smoking methamphetamine. However, applicant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed because she was unable to show that there was a reasonable probability, sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome that, but for counsel's deficient performance, the result of the trial would have been different. Ex Parte Lane, 303 S.W.3d 702, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 1750 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

1259. Expert's opinions in a products liability case on how a fire started were subjective and conclusory because they were unsupported by testing; thus, they were not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, were not based on a reliable foundation under Tex. R. Evid. 702, and constituted no evidence that an alleged design defect in a dryer caused the fire. Whirlpool Corp. v. Camacho, 298 S.W.3d 631, 2009 Tex. LEXIS 1041, 53 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 179 (Tex. 2009).

1260. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the a creditor's employee's deposition concerning a different case because that deposition did not pertain to the lender and the debtor never challenged the trustworthiness of the lender's business record documents. Simien v. Unifund Ccr Ptnrs, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9411 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 10 2009).

1261. In a felony murder case, defendant was not harmed by the trial court's exclusion of expert testimony of two of her witnesses on her affirmative defense of insanity because, although relevant and probative of her defense, the excluded testimony was repetitive of the evidence of the history of mental illness, as described by defendant's husband. More importantly, the excluded evidence did not directly pertain to the question of whether defendant was sane at the time of the collision because neither witness ever evaluated defendant for sanity. Fisher-Riza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9769, 2009 WL 4358622 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 3 2009).

1263. Court disagreed with an architecture firm that expert testimony as to whether the firm breached an architect's standard of care would serve any relevant purpose for the trial court prior to trial; the trial court was perfectly capable of determining whether the contract required the firm to apply the law in its design, whether the law prohibited the use of a septic system, and whether the design included a septic system, such that a certificate of merit would not be required for the trial court to determine if the claim had merit. Parker County Veterinary Clinic, Inc. v. Gsbs Batenhorst, Inc., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8986, 2009 WL 3938051 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 19 2009).

1264. Testimony regarding the number of people imprisoned as a result of the informant's work was not relevant to the issue of defendant's guilt, however, the objection was abandoned, because defendant failed to request a running objection or to otherwise make an objection outside the presence of the jury on the issue, and additional testimony was offered on the issue by the informant without objection. Perkins v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8855, 2009 WL 3834116 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 18 2009).

1265. In defendant's drug case, error occasioned by the admission of improper testimony was harmless because the evidence of credibility was cumulative of testimony provided by the witness and was unrelated to the evidence upon which defendant was convicted. The admission of the testimony in question was not error of such magnitude that the jury's proper evaluation of the evidence was disrupted. Perkins v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8862, 2009 WL 3834119 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 18 2009).

1266. There was no abuse of discretion in allowing the testimony of the State's expert, a clinical supervisor and therapist, regarding the effects of sexual abuse on children, because the expert's generic testimony was connected to the facts of the case through the complainant's testimony, and the admission of the testimony, if erroneous, did not have a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict. Bullock v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8872, 2009 WL 3838861 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 18 2009).

1267. In defendant's murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting burglary evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.36(a); the victim had ended her relationship with defendant, he had not been living at her apartment for at least a month prior to her death, her apartment had been burglarized about a month before her death, a witness testified that he and defendant had committed the burglary, defendant's commission of the offense rebutted the claim that his relationship with the victim was amiable, and the burglary evidence was relevant to show defendant's state of mind at the time of the offense and a possible motive for the murder. Woods v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8749 (Tex. App. El Paso Nov. 12 2009).

1268. Testimony in defendant's aggravated robbery case that defendant struck the victim in the face was not met with any objection and was relevant, even though assault with bodily injury was not an element of the crime, because it gave the jury information essential to understanding the context and circumstances of events which legally were interwoven. Nelson v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8630, 2009 WL 3734953 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 10 2009).

1269. On considering whether the jury should have been instructed on the lesser included offense of theft in defendant's robbery trial, whether none or some of the stolen property was recovered had no relevance to any threat component and the issue was whether the statement, "I only stole cigarettes from that store," was any evidence tending to refute the other evidence of a threat by defendant; the victim testified that he feared for his life based on defendant's actions and the evidence failed to satisfy the requirement that, if a jury found defendant guilty, he was guilty only of the lesser offense of theft. Thus, there was no error in failing to submit theft to the jury. O'Neal v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8523, 2009 WL 3643789 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 5 2009).

1270. Trial court erroneously admitted a 1993 judgment convicting defendant of misdemeanor assault where the judgment was not admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) because it had no relevance apart from proof of character conformity. Moreover, evidence of the conviction was not available for impeachment under Tex. R. Evid. 609 because the record contained no evidence that the victim of the assault was female, and there was thus no proof that it was a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. Tello v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8401, 2009 WL 3518006 (Tex. App. Amarillo Oct. 30 2009).

1271. Evidence pertaining to defendant's flight from justice and efforts to arrest him for assault on a public servant was relevant and admissible at sentencing under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), which governed the ruling on relevance instead of the general Tex. R. Evid. 401 definition, because defendant's flight was an extension of his conduct during the offense and showed his lack of respect for lawful authority. Campbell v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 8643, 2009 WL 3593481 (Tex. App. Texarkana Oct. 28 2009).

1272. Photograph depicted the victim holding his newborn baby and there was testimony that his daughter had been born the month prior to the victim's kidnapping and murder; the photograph was relevant in defendant's capital murder trial to show a true appearance of the victim prior to his death. Acevedo v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS

8109, 2009 WL 3353625 (Tex. App. Dallas Oct. 20 2009).

1273. Defendant did not complain that the State failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the acts were attributable to him or that evidence of these acts was irrelevant, and for purposes of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 12.45, the fact that defendant had not been finally convicted of the two pleaded and barred offenses did not matter; thus, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1). McClenny v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7908, 2009 WL 3246774 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 8 2009).

1274. Because defendant did not object to each question regarding a bag and its contents or request a running objection and obtain a ruling, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1), (2), defendant did not preserve either the issue of relevance or prejudice regarding the evidence for appellate review. Esparza v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7756, 2009 WL 3153253 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Oct. 1 2009).

1275. Because defendant pleaded true to multiple allegations in the State's motion to adjudicate, a witness's testimony would not have been relevant to the trial court's decision to proceed to adjudication. Mccarthy v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488, 2009 WL 3048701 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 24 2009).

1276. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit evidence of a co-defendant's sentence, which was not relevant to the issue of what punishment defendant was to receive. Mccarthy v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7488, 2009 WL 3048701 (Tex. App. Austin Sept. 24 2009).

1277. Witness's testimony was relevant to rebut the contention that defendant would have stopped if the victim really meant no because the testimony evidenced that, shortly before this incident, defendant did not stop in response to an unambiguous no and the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the witness's testimony was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) in defendant's trial under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11. Villarreal v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7305, 2009 WL 2965281 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 17 2009).

1278. Trial court did not err in admitting the extraneous offense evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a)(1), given that (1) evidence of the hit-and-run collision was relevant because it revealed a pattern of lawbreaking, deception, and evasion, (2) the jury was instructed to consider the evidence only if it found that defendant committed the act beyond a reasonable doubt, and (3) defendant's identity was proven by fingerprints and a driver's license. Ashire v. State, 296 S.W.3d 331, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7316 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 17 2009).

1279. Any abusive or neglectful conduct by the mother towards the child's older sibling was relevant in an inquiry to determine whether the mother's parental rights to the child were to be terminated under Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 161.001(1)(E). Mann v. Dep't of Family & Protective Servs., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7326, 2009 WL 2961396 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Sept. 17 2009).

1280. Even if Tex. R. Evid. 412 was not applicable, the victim's sexual history was inadmissible under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 403, given that there was nothing reflecting that the prior sexual assault made the victim's lack of consent more or less probable and the probative value, if any, was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect because the evidence had the potential to impress the jury in a irrational and indelible way and defendant cited to little if any need for the evidence. Woods v. State, 301 S.W.3d 327, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7252 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Sept. 10 2009).

1281. In a driving while intoxicated case, a trial court did not err by admitting a DIC-24 form into evidence because it was relevant to prove that defendant refused to submit to the taking of a specimen of his breath and that defendant was provided with the required information under Tex. Transp. Code Ann. § 724.015 before his specimen was requested. Frnka v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7095, 2009 WL 2882939 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

1282. In a driving while intoxicated case, even though defendant made several challenges to the trial court's admission of a DC-24 form into evidence, because the only objection made at trial was for relevance, that was the only issue preserved for appellate review. Frnka v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 7095, 2009 WL 2882939 (Tex. App. San Antonio Sept. 9 2009).

1283. Evidence was factually sufficient to support defendant's conviction as a party of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon while engaging in organized criminal activity, given that (1) defendant's friend fired at a vehicle in which the victim was hiding, (2) a witness testified that she saw defendant outside and that he pointed a gun with a silver-colored barrel at a car, (3) the fact that no ammunition was found in the street matching the chrome pistol was irrelevant because under the law of parties, it was not necessary for defendant to have actually fired the gun, (4) the jury was entitled to credit certain testimony and discount defendant's alibi, and (5) the court could look at defendant's actions, in displaying the pistol and attempting to secretly leave the scene, plus the fact that he owned the assault rifle used by another, as evidence of a common purpose. Vasquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6970, 2009 WL 2914263 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2009).

1284. Jury was authorized under the indictment, the evidence, and the jury charge to convict defendant of deadly conduct while engaging in organized criminal activity under the law of parties; thus, it was irrelevant that defendant did not actually fire the gun himself because his conviction rested on his assistance to another in committing the offense and defendant did not explain why his conviction for deadly conduct was improper by addressing the evidence under the law of parties. He had not provided the court with a valid ground to reverse the conviction. Vasquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6970, 2009 WL 2914263 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 31 2009).

1285. In defendant's tampering with a witness case, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence that the victim's father had recently kicked her out of his house because it was uncontested that defendant had previously threatened to kick the victim out if she became pregnant. That evidence served to establish a motive, if any, for the victim to make false accusations against defendant; the additional evidence regarding the victim's father's decision to kick her out, if true, did not lend any additional weight to that theory. Davis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6685 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 26 2009).

1286. In a child pornography case, habeas relief was denied to an accused on the basis of ineffectiveness of trial counsel relating to a failure to object on the basis of relevance because, since the gravamen of the offense was the accused's intentional or knowing possession of images of child pornography, the images themselves and how the accused intentionally or knowingly possessed them (via his home computers) were highly relevant to the prosecution. Ex Parte Yusafi, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6715, 2008 WL 6740798 (Tex. App. Beaumont Aug. 26 2009).

1287. In a murder case, autopsy photographs were properly admitted because the State had to prove that defendant caused the victim's death by shooting him with a deadly weapon, and a doctor's testimony described the type of injuries the victim received, the extent of those injuries, and the cause of his death. Additionally, although the photographs were somewhat gruesome, they were not enlarged. Ramirez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6640, 2009 WL 4377427 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

1288. Jury properly found that an employee did not sustain a compensable injury because the State offered expert medical opinion that the employee's injury was a neuropathic stress fracture caused by pre-existing diabetes, which he had difficulty controlling, and not arising out of the employee's employment. Lyons v. State Office of Risk Mgmt.,

2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6651, 2009 WL 2596053 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 25 2009).

1289. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly denied defendant's request for a social worker to testify as to a recommendation for the children's placement because there was ample testimony presented by others with firsthand knowledge that the child's mother was a bad parent, and the social worker's recommendation did not have any direct or logical connection to the proposition that some other adult caused the injury to the child. Munoz v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6475, 2009 WL 2517664 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 19 2009).

1290. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly denied defendant's witness's testimony relating to the field of false confessions because the witness's testimony could not have assisted the jury in understanding the evidence or in making a determination of a fact issue. He did not intend to offer an opinion as to the truth or falsity of defendant's confession, and during cross-examination defendant admitted the truth of the portions of his confession that he earlier claimed were inaccurate. Munoz v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6475, 2009 WL 2517664 (Tex. App. El Paso Aug. 19 2009).

1291. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the recording of a telephone conversation defendant had with his brother while he was incarcerated, given that (1) the contents were not tremendously probative of whether defendant was intoxicated and the contents were not unfairly prejudicial, (2) both sides of the conversation were relevant for the arguable inference that defendant tacitly admitted committing the offense of driving while intoxicated, and (3) while the coarseness of the language used might have offended some jurors, the court was not persuaded that it made the jury more likely to convict defendant; even if the admission of the recording was error, it did not harm defendant, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that (1) defendant admitted that it was his fault for drinking and driving, (2) the arresting officer reported observing signs consistent with intoxication while defendant was driving and while he was performing field sobriety tests, and (3) defendants' blood alcohol concentration was well above the level for legal driving. DiCarlo v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6371, 2009 WL 2476630 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 14 2009).

1292. Crime at issue was aggravated assault, and possession of or conviction of possession of a controlled substance by the victim was a collateral issue, and the simple fact that the victim had been convicted of, and was still on probation for, a felony bore on his credibility such that the specifics of any particular crime were duplicative and irrelevant; evidence of items seized under a 1998 search warrant had little, if any, bearing on the victim's credibility, and thus was inadmissible and the court overruled defendant's claim that the trial court erred in not applying the Confrontation clause exception to Tex. R. Evid. 608(b). Aguilar v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6369, 2009 WL 2476628 (Tex. App. Austin Aug. 14 2009).

1293. In termination cases, for best interest purposes, because some listed factors may be inapplicable to some cases and other factors not on the list may also be considered when appropriate, the court will only discuss the factors which were made relevant by the evidence submitted at the trial and will combine the court's analysis of factors where the evidence may concurrently apply. In re K.P., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6301, 2009 WL 2462564 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 13 2009).

1294. Evidence that defendant did not comprehend the reasons for his wife's arrest and that his speech was slurred would tend to make it more probable that he was intoxicated, such that the evidence was relevant, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402. Hernandez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 6356, 2009 WL 2476523 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Aug. 13 2009).

1295. Detective's testimony was relevant to explain how defendant became a suspect; the testimony did not present evidence of a prior crime or connect defendant to any crime or bad act. Galvez v. State, 2009 Tex. App.

LEXIS 6300, 2009 WL 2476600 (Tex. App. Waco Aug. 12 2009).

1296. Because a mother failed to challenge at least one ground for termination, the court normally would not have addressed the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the trial court's findings as to the other two grounds, but because the evidence relevant to those two endangerment grounds was also relevant in evaluating the findings as to the father, the court addressed them as well. In re V.R., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5953, 2009 WL 2356906 (Tex. App. Fort Worth July 30 2009).

1297. In defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child under the age of fourteen in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the rebuttal testimony of the State's expert who testified that the complainant's "normal" behavior would not necessarily negate sexual abuse; the testimony was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 because it directly rebutted the defense witnesses' testimony and because it tended to make less probable the defense contention that observed interactions between the complainant and defendant suggested a normal relationship. Briones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5944, 2009 WL 2356626 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. July 30 2009).

1298. Assuming a father's proffered testimony concerning the possibility of parole was relevant, even if he was successful in obtaining parole the next time he was eligible, it would be more than two years from the date of the filing of the petition to terminate, and the evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in its conclusion that the father was unable to care for the children while he was incarcerated; he did not arrange for a caregiver for the children before going to prison, he did nothing to protect them while he was out of prison and left them with the unfit mother when he went to prison, and there was evidence that the father had neither supported the children, nor been involved in their lives for some time. In re D.H., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5998 (Tex. App. Eastland July 30 2009).

1299. Given that the court was required to consider the commission of family violence in determining child custody, for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. § 153.004(c), questions regarding custody proceedings would have been relevant to the victim's motivation to exaggerate her testimony at defendant's assault trial. Ryan v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5412 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 15 2009).

1300. Trial court could have found that evidence of defendant's drug dealing, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), had some logical relevance aside from character conformity, plus the evidence was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, given the other evidence admitted at trial, including evidence of defendant's gang membership; assuming it was error to admit the extraneous offense evidence, defendant's substantial rights were not affected under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b), given that the jury was instructed to use the evidence for the limited purpose of determining a relationship between defendant and another and the drug dealing was not mentioned by the State in closing arguments and thus was not emphasized. Mata v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5410, 2009 WL 2045250 (Tex. App. San Antonio July 15 2009).

1301. Because defendant did not analyze his complaint the expert testimony was not relevant, defendant waived the issue, but even if the court addressed the issue, the testimony was admissible; defendant argued that the victim continued to see him, making her assault story unlikely, and in light of defendant's posture, the witness's testimony of how victims of domestic violence interact with their abusers and why the victims might lie was relevant to the case. Booker v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5541, 2009 WL 2006428 (Tex. App. Dallas July 13 2009).

1302. Trial court did not improperly consider the State's exhibits in assessing punishment, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a), given that (1) the photographs of the items found in a storage unit and in defendant's car were relevant to punishment because they showed the circumstances and context of the offense, and (2) because the trial court was determining punishment for possession of methamphetamine with intent to deliver, the context in which the offense was committed, including evidence connecting defendant to the manufacture of methamphetamine, was relevant to this case; even if the trial court erred, the error was harmless under Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b) as there was no indication that these exhibits had any particular influence on the trial court in determining punishment. Ridgway v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5151, 2009 WL 1929460 (Tex. App. Dallas July 7 2009).

1303. In an aggravated robbery case, defendant was properly denied the opportunity to impeach a victim regarding the amount of her paycheck because it was not relevant to the offense charged. Moore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4982, 2009 WL 1886450 (Tex. App. Waco July 1 2009).

1304. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting extraneous offense evidence in defendant's trial for indecency with a child in violation of Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 21.11(a)(1); defendant's opening statement opened the door to admission of the evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), the evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to combat the defensive theory of fabrication by the victim, and the probative value of rebutting the allegations of fabrication and accidental touching outweighed the prejudicial impact for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403. Norwood v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4979, 2009 WL 1941291 (Tex. App. Amarillo June 30 2009).

1305. One court concluded it should not ignore the reality that a search is rarely conducted by an officer without some knowledge of the prior investigation and, therefore, the court should adopt a more pragmatic and common-sense approach permitting some deficiencies to be cured by an officer's more extensive knowledge of the premises; although the court emphasizes that an officer's knowledge of the premises cannot be used to entirely replace the description in the warrant and emphasize that the better practice is for the description in the warrant and affidavit to be sufficiently descriptive, the court adopts the reasoning of the one court and concludes the executing officer's knowledge of the premises to be searched is relevant to the validity of the search warrant. The court emphasizes this knowledge is being considered only on the issue of the description of the premises, not as to the probable cause to believe a crime had been committed. Rogers v. State, 291 S.W.3d 148, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4897 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 26 2009).

1306. Trial counsel presented a relevancy objection based upon Tex. R. Evid. 401 and made no objection that the probative value of the exhibits were substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice; therefore, nothing was presented for review. McGinnis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4799, 2009 WL 1800826 (Tex. App. Eastland June 25 2009).

1307. Where defendant was convicted of three counts of promotion of child pornography and four counts of possession of child pornography, the trial court did not violate Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) by admitting an exhibit showing a list of subfolders and 900 file names from defendant's computer. The evidence relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 for the State to show that defendant organized, stored, and shared the downloaded images and that his doing so was not the result of mistake or accident. Wenger v. State, 292 S.W.3d 191, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4859 (Tex. App. Fort Worth June 25 2009).

1308. Testimony regarding the firing of a gun was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to two facts in issue in defendant's trial for aggravated sexual assault of a child: whether defendant, in fact, used or exhibited a deadly weapon and whether the victim was in the car with defendant against her will. Yepez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4694, 2009 WL 1835330 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 24 2009).

1309. In a trespass to try title action, the trial court erred in finding that a couple's 28-acre deed was sufficient because nothing identified which 28 acres out of a larger tract was being conveyed; although the couple presented parol evidence showing that taxing authorities and others identified the couple as the owners of the 28-acre tract and they erected a fence and gate, none of this evidence was relevant to the sufficiency of the deed because it was not referenced within the deed, and thus the deed was void for an insufficient description and the court rendered judgment for the claimants. Lowell v. Miguel R., 293 S.W.3d 764, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4696 (Tex. App. San Antonio June 24 2009).

1310. Any alleged misstatements contained in documents outside the appellate record were irrelevant to the issues on appeal such that the motion to appoint a special master was denied. Whatley v. Walker, 302 S.W.3d 314, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4699 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. June 18 2009).

1311. Court did not err by refusing to allow defense counsel to cross-examine a police officer about prior incidents in which the officer allegedly used excessive force because the officer's character was not an essential element of the charge, claim, or defense to attempting to take a weapon from a peace officer, and the proffered testimony was not material because it did not address any fact of importance to the outcome of the action. Rico v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4141, 2009 WL 1623343 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi June 11 2009).

1312. Defendant objected to the victim's testimony concerning a book on the grounds of leading, and after he made his hearsay objection, the State rephrased its questions and no objections were raised, and when the exhibit was offered, defendant objected on the grounds of duplicity and relevancy, such that defendant failed to preserve error under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1 on claims that the testimony was hearsay and irrelevant; moreover, the victim's statements were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but were offered to show his state of mind and basis for his actions, such that the statements were not hearsay and were relevant. Miller v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4157, 2009 WL 1653070 (Tex. App. Eastland June 11 2009).

1313. In defendant's capital murder case, the court properly allowed photographs of the victim to be admitted because the medical examiner who performed the autopsy stated that photographs of the child's body before and during the autopsy would assist him in describing his findings to the jury, the testimony was probative of the child's condition at the time defendant brought the child to a witness's house, and the testimony demonstrated the scope and extent of the child's injuries and the cause of death. Williams v. State, 294 S.W.3d 674, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4201 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. June 11 2009).

1314. In order for a love poem to have been admissible, it had to be authenticated under Tex. R. Evid. 901(a), but it was not, and failure to authenticate a document rendered it inadmissible even if otherwise relevant and admissible; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the love poem because it was not relevant to punishment, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401 and Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 37.07, § 3(a), and the poem's impact on the jury could have been to imply that the victim deserved her fate. Akeredolu v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4112, 2009 WL 1609372 (Tex. App. El Paso June 10 2009).

1315. Summary judgment evidence showed that a fence was built correctly on a boundary line as set out by a prior judgment; even if an affidavit was relevant at this juncture, it was so rife with qualifying language that it simply did not specify a correct location, and it specified where a location might have been found based on information given by an individual. Freeman v. Cherokee Water Co., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3984 (Tex. App. Texarkana June 5 2009).

1316. Counsel's failure to object to extraneous offense evidence did not show that counsel was functioning ineffectively; counsel could have reasonably concluded that the previous offense was relevant, and hence admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), to prove defendant's knowledge of the victims' house and his intent to steal their property in his burglary trial and to substantiate defendant's identity as the burglar, and it was also reasonable for counsel to conclude that the evidence was more probative than unfairly prejudicial under Tex. R. Evid. 403. Counsel could not be deemed ineffective for failing to object to evidence that was, on balance, unobjectionable. Santos v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3876, 2009 WL 1563571 (Tex. App. Austin June 3 2009).

1317. Defendant's disregard of his stepbrother's conditions of community supervision and his placing the victim in danger by leaving her at his stepbrother's residence unsupervised were relevant and highly probative with respect to the jury's determination of punishment for sexual assault. Worthy v. State, 295 S.W.3d 685, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3672 (Tex. App. Eastland May 28 2009).

1318. There was evidence that defendant possessed a practice bomb with the intent to cause alarm or a reaction of any type by an official of a public safety agency organized to deal with emergencies, namely, the police, and the fact that neither of the officers dispatched to the scene was especially alarmed by the practice bomb was irrelevant, as the question was what defendant intended. Ahmad v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4038, 2009 WL 1507052 (Tex. App. Fort Worth May 28 2009).

1319. Defendant and one other man in the photo array had medium length hair, three men, short hair, and one man, a receding hair line, but even if the court concluded this aspect of the procedure was suggestive, it was not impermissibly so because the difference in hair length would not have been relevant to the victim's identification of defendant because the perpetrator was wearing a cap. Moore v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3719 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. May 21 2009).

1320. Title problems were not relevant to a termination provision in a sales contract; a survey included 5,531.6 acres and resulted in a variance of more than 10 percent under the contract, such that either party could have terminated the contract. Fawcett, Ltd. v. Idaho N. & Pac. R.R. Co., 293 S.W.3d 240, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3304 (Tex. App. Eastland May 14 2009).

1321. Examination did open the door to the State's question concerning defendant's child protective services history, as defense counsel asked questions concerning background checks on all of the child's adult family members except defendant and the only possible relevance of these questions would have been to show that other family members had a history of bad acts concerning children; it would have been fundamentally unfair to allow defense counsel to ask these questions about all other family members and not allow the State to ask the same question about defendant, the child's mother, in defendant's injury to a child trial. Gutierrez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3296, 2009 WL 1335154 (Tex. App. Dallas May 14 2009).

1322. During defendant's criminal trial for the sexual asault of a child, the State was permitted to introduce extraneous offense evidence that defendant encouraged the victim's involvement in several crimes to rebut defense counsel's opening remarks that defendant was a positive influence on the victim. The trial court determined the extraneous offense evidence was admissible under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) to correct the false impression created by the defense; the extraneous offense evidence was relevent under Tex. R. Evid. 401, because it tended to make less probable defendant's argument that he was encouraging the victim to be a decent and productive citizen. Ytuarte v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 3056, 2009 WL 1232327 (Tex. App. San Antonio May 6 2009).

1323. To the extent that the evidence that a patient was selectively mute is relevant to the distress and deterioration finding, the court found such evidence insufficient. State ex rel. E.R., 287 S.W.3d 297, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2933 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 29 2009).

1324. Because defendant waived his right to counsel, his complaint that his appointed attorney was never officially relieved of her duties to represent him was irrelevant. Colomb v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2973, 2009 WL 1163413 (Tex. App. Waco Apr. 29 2009).

1325. In an indecency with a child case, the court committed reversible error in the admission of sex toys because there was no suggestion that sex toys were used in any way related to the complainant, and the State emphasized those items in providing a detailed description of each item, making certain to emphasize their graphic nature by carrying them in a single plastic tub, pointing out the testifying officer's wearing of gloves, and repeatedly apologizing to the jury for the graphic nature of those items. Warr v. State, 418 S.W.3d 617, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2538 (Tex. App. Texarkana Apr. 15 2009).

1326. Defendant's conviction for capital murder was appropriate because a photograph of the victim and her family at an amusement park did not portray the victim as part of a family living an ideal life, nor did it depict the other family members as victims; furthermore, three of the family members depicted were also victims in the shooting. The evidence, although circumstantial, strongly supported defendant's guilt; the appellate court had a fair assurance that the admission of the photograph did not influence the jury or had but slight affect and thus, even if its admission was an abuse of discretion, it was not reversible. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2009 WL 988647 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 13 2009).

1327. Defendant's conviction for capital murder was appropriate because a crime-scene video was relevant to show the victim's death and the consistency of the physical evidence with an eyewitness' testimony. It did not involve an unusual and overwhelming emotional impact. Jones v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 5866, 2009 WL 988647 (Tex. App. Dallas Apr. 13 2009).

1328. Homeowners presented no citation to the record that demonstrated that appellants' alleged misrepresentation about being registered with the Texas Residential Construction Commission Act was a producing cause of their damages and the court failed to see how appellants' registration or failure to register with the Act had relevance to damages caused to the homeowners, and thus the trial court properly granted a directed verdict on the homeowners' claim under the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.41-.63. B&W Supply, Inc. v. Beckman, 305 S.W.3d 10, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2413 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Apr. 9 2009).

1329. There was evidence of a significant number of substantial violations of the restrictions and this evidence supported a finding that the fundamental character of the neighborhood had been abandoned, as was the developer's affirmative defense; the landowners presented no evidence of any prior attempts to enforce the restrictions or that they purchased their properties in reliance on the restrictions and their individual intent was relevant to the abandonment analysis only to the extent that they purchased in reliance on the restrictions, which they did not, and that they attempted to previously enforce the restrictions, which they did not, and the trial court did not err in holding that the landowners waived the nonwaiver provision. Musgrove v. Westridge St. Partners I, LLC, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2660, 2009 WL 976010 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 9 2009).

1330. Because the State had to prove that defendant had two prior driving while intoxicated (DWI) convictions, the State's two exhibits were relevant to establish an element of the offense of felony DWI and to demonstrate that defendant was the same person as the person convicted of the prior two DWIs; thus, the value of these records was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury when defendant had not stipulated to the prior convictions, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403. Paschall v. State, 285 S.W.3d 166, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2201 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Apr. 2 2009).

1331. Evidence regarding the allegedly subpar work by various subcontractors was relevant to many claims, including proportional responsibility, and the court was not persuaded that evidence regarding the quality of the house was unfairly prejudicial to appellants merely because a third-party subcontractor potentially responsible for a particular task was absent from the trial after settling with the homeowners. Daneshjou Co. v. Bullock, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2001, 2009 WL 790200 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 27 2009).

1332. In a breach of lease case relating to oil and gas leases, a previous lessee contended that testimony that wells had not been fully developed was conclusory and was unable to support a judgment; the testimony did not change the evidence, which showed that the previous lessee complied with a contract by drilling at least two wells that produced in paying quantities. Exxon Corp. v. Emerald Oil & Gas Co., L.C., 2009 Tex. LEXIS 113, 52 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 467 (Tex. 2009).

1333. Defendant did not show that the result of the trial would have been different even had counsel made a particular objection because the areas of inquiry he challenged were not necessarily relevant to whether or not he was guilty, and thus defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel. Kesse v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 2095, 2009 WL 793755 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Mar. 26 2009).

1334. Evidence regarding the value of a sawmill and the amount of money expended in trying to close the sale of the real estate related solely to reliance damages, which were precluded by the liquidated damages clause of the earnest money contract; only the evidence of the amount of money actually collected by the buyer through sales of material salvaged from the dismantled sawmill was relevant to the oral escrow agreement and the alleged breach thereof. Tiger Truck, LLC v. Bruce's Pulp & Paper, LLC, 282 S.W.3d 176, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1910 (Tex. App. Beaumont Mar. 19 2009).

1335. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the utility knife, the pocket knife, and wire cutters that were found on defendant's person after his arrest into evidence because they were relevant, as the officer testified that such items were commonly used for burglaries and the State's purpose for introducing the items was to show defendant's intent; defendant's possession of the items tended to show his intent to commit the offense of burglary and assisted the jury in drawing an inference that he entered the garage with the intent to commit theft. Enloe v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1866 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 19 2009).

1336. In an aggravated assault case, the trial court did not err in admitting the victim's videotaped statement because defendant raised the issue of self-defense. A witness testified that in defendant's altercation with the victim, the victim was the aggressor and defendant tried to resist retaliating; as a result of that testimony, defendant's alleged assault of the victim was relevant rebuttal evidence to prove that defendant acted with the requisite intent. In re B.H., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1852, 2009 WL 692613 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 18 2009).

1337. In a dispute concerning the location of an express access easement, the parties both purchased land owned by the original grantor; the trial court did not err by excluding all evidence of defendants' proposed location for the easement because it showed that the easement was to be located through property that was not part of the original tract. The excluded evidence was not relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Shed, L.L.C. v. Edom Wash 'N Dry, L.L.C., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1853, 2009 WL 692609 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 18 2009).

1338. In defendant's assault case, the court did not abuse its discretion by admitting photographs of injuries to the victim's husband's upper arm, neck, wrist, and forehead and a photograph of a broken chair to fully understand the context of the altercation. It was also within the court's discretion to conclude that the injuries to the victim's husband and the means by which they were inflicted were so connected to the injuries alleged in the indictment as to form an indivisible criminal transaction. Lopez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1755, 2009 WL 638182 (Tex. App. Austin Mar. 12 2009).

1339. Trial court's decision to overrule a relevancy objection based on Tex. R. Evid. 401 regarding questions about the criminal history of defendant's family members was not beyond the zone of reasonable disagreement because the character of the people he would have worked and associated with was relevant to his suitability for community supervision. Williams v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1810 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Mar. 12 2009).

1340. Trial court did not err in not allowing the result of a polygraph examination into evidence, given that (1) the authorities cited by defendant were not more compelling that the authorities found to be unpersuasive on this issue, (2) the witness testified that the theory beyond polygraph examinations was scientifically valid, but his testimony did not stand up to scrutiny, (3) the witness's testimony as to how well defendant did on the test and his experience in giving the test did not show that the theory behind the technique was valid, (4) nothing showed that the test was reliable or that the specific theory behind it was valid, and (5) defendant offered little evidence to support a conclusion that polygraph evidence was based on a valid underlying scientific theory or that the examiner's conclusions would be relevant. Cyphers v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1716, 2009 WL 606550 (Tex. App. Tyler Mar. 11 2009).

1341. In defendant's evading arrest case, the court properly excluded a defense witness's testimony because the proffered testimony that it was "standard operating procedure" for law enforcement agencies in general to routinely make video and audio recordings of police pursuits was not germane. The witness did not have personal knowledge as to the standard procedures of the Corpus Christi Police Department regarding recordings of police pursuits. Gomez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1700 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Mar. 5 2009).

1342. Sexual assault nurse examiner testified that the victim had suffered an internal vaginal laceration consistent with an aggressive sexual assault and that the nurse had only seen a similar laceration once before in her 18 years performing such examinations, in which a woman was raped with a beer bottle; defendant contended that the previous incident had no probative value because there was no suggestion that he penetrated the victim with a beer bottle, but the mere fact that the previous victim's injury was occasioned by forceful penetration was probative, even if the specific mechanism of injury might not have been, plus defendant did not ask that the jury be instructed to disregard the nonresponsive beer bottle portion of the witness's answer in defendant's sexual assault trial. Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

1343. Defendant was not harmed when a nurse admitted that her testimony, which was unfavorable to defendant, was motivated by a desire to make sure the victim got justice; the evidence of the nurse's possible bias might have helped, not hurt, the defense in defendant's sexual assault trial, and the error, if any, of the admission of the nurse's allegedly irrelevant testimony did not affect defendant's substantial rights for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

1344. Defendant limited one issue to the admissibility of a sexual assault nurse examiner's testimony under Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402 and he did not object under Tex. R. Evid. 403 or request a balancing test; thus, the court limited its review solely to determining whether the nurse's testimony had any relevance to the issues contested at trial in defendant's sexual assault trial. Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

1345. Defendant was indicted for sexual assault under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.011(a)(1)(A), (b)(1), he claimed he engaged in consensual sexual relations with the victim but no penetration, and thus evidence that would tend to prove or disprove penetration or the use of force or violence would meet the materiality component of relevance, plus the proffered evidence satisfied the probative component as well; the evidence from a sexual assault nurse examiner tended to prove that defendant, using force or violence, penetrated the victim's sexual organ and the nurse's testimony tended to prove that certain lacerations suffered by the victim generally did not occur in the absence of forceful vaginal penetration, which was a consequential fact for the jury's determination. Shackelford v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1441, 2009 WL 508478 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

1347. Although the testimony an ex-husband cited might have been relevant to his assault claim, it did not establish that the trial court erred in refusing to award damages on that claim, plus he failed to provide any relevant citations to authority under Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h), and thus the court overruled his claim that the trial court erred in refusing to award damages on his claims for assault, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and defamation. Siddiqui v. Siddiqui, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1443, 2009 WL 508260 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Mar. 3 2009).

1348. Mostly all of defendant's excluded testimony referred to alleged instances of his father's manipulative conduct during defendant's childhood many years earlier, which was time far too remote for the events to have qualified as an imminent threat; because the excluded testimony did not relate to an imminent threat for duress purposes under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 8.05(a), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by deciding the proffered evidence was irrelevant to defendant's duress defense. Solley v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1118, 2009 WL 396268 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 19 2009).

1349. Because defendant was offering the evidence in question rather than attempting to exclude it, the only issue affecting admissibility was whether the evidence was relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401. Vazquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1058 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 17 2009).

1350. Victim testified that her mother was not present when the sexual assaults by defendant occurred and the mother testified that she continued her relationship with defendant because she thought the case would not come to trial, not because she believed the assaults never occurred; thus, the mother's continuing relationship with defendant was not relevant, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, to the issue of whether the victim was telling the truth in defendant's aggravated sexual assault trial, and whether or not the mother believed the assaults occurred was not relevant to whether the victim was telling the truth, as the testimony of a child sexual abuse victim was alone sufficient to support a conviction, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.07 Vazquez v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1058 (Tex. App. Dallas Feb. 17 2009).

1351. Victim's knowledge of defendant's violent past was not relevant in a retaliation-by-threat case for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401. The witness did not testify that his knowledge that defendant had actually killed a person contributed to his fear. Pollard v. State, 277 S.W.3d 25, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 233 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

1352. Because the trial court did not err in its determination that the measure of damages was the cost to complete the project that exceeded the costs that would have been payable to the contractor, the value of the proposed building was not relevant to an issue of material fact, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401; even if the trial court erred in precluding the use of an income stream in determining the value of the proposed building, or if the trial court erred in excluding testimony on such value, such error did not probably cause the rendition of an improper judgment under Tex. R. App. P. 44.1(a). Stonehill-PRM WC I, L.P. v. Chasco Constructors, Ltd., L.L.P., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1019, 2009 WL 349136 (Tex. App. Austin Feb. 11 2009).

1353. Extraneous offense evidence in a pistol, bullets, and marijuana were relevant apart from proving defendant's action in conformity therewith, and thus the evidence was admissible. Mathis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1466, 2009 WL 3003252 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 10 2009).

1354. Marijuana and bullets were relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401 to proving or disproving a fact of consequence beyond mere action in conformity with bad character under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), given that (1) the bullets found in defendant's apartment were the same caliber and manufactured by the same company as those found at the crime scene, (2) possession of the casings was not indicative of illegal activity but the bullets provided a connection to the murder, and (3) testimony suggested that defendant took some marijuana from the victim, which could have established motive and corroborated a witness's account of the events after the murder. Mathis v. State, 2009 Tex.

App. LEXIS 1466, 2009 WL 3003252 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 10 2009).

1355. Because defendant fled and pointed a pistol at officer when they attempted to arrest him, the gun was admissible and relevant to display a consciousness of guilt. Mathis v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 1466, 2009 WL 3003252 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Feb. 10 2009).

1356. Trial court did not err by implicitly sustaining the State's relevance objection to a victim's excluded testimony, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, given that the important fact of consequence was the animus between the families and its general source, not the underlying details. Svitak v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 796, 2009 WL 279462 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

1357. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the State's relevance objections to defendant's wife's testimony about reports she made to the state child protective services department; the trial court did not understand how it was relevant that reports were made if there had not been a showing that anyone knew the wife was the source of the report. Svitak v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 796, 2009 WL 279462 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Feb. 5 2009).

1358. In a driving while intoxicated case, evidence of defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant because there was no evidence as to the dosage, the exact times of ingestion, or the half-life of the drug; a lay juror was not in a position to determine whether the drugs, taken more than 12 hours before arrest, would have any effect on defendant's intoxication. Without expert testimony to provide the foundation required to admit scientific evidence, the testimony regarding defendant's use of prescription medications was not relevant. Layton v. State, 280 S.W.3d 235, 2009 Tex. Crim. App. LEXIS 149 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009).

1359. For qualified immunity and First Amendment analysis purposes, the speech at issue consisted of a peace officer's report to a district attorney's office alleging that police officers unlawfully tampered with an existing government record; the identity of the person who created the record was irrelevant. Turner v. Perry, 278 S.W.3d 806, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 470 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 27 2009).

1360. Whether a lessor fraudulently represented to lessees and a guarantor that another entity was the lessor at the time the leases were entered into was relevant to counterclaims but not to the lessor's burden of proving that it was currently the lessor who could enforce the leases and guaranties with respect to its breach of contract claims. A.J. Morris, M.D., P.A. v. De Lage Landen Fin. Servs., 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 457, 2009 WL 161065 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 22 2009).

1361. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, evidence of defendant's sales of cocaine was relevant to the issue of his motive to conspire to kill the victim; there was substantial evidence of defendant's guilt in the delivery of controlled substance cases, which would have subjected him to some of the highest penalty ranges available, and the victim's potential testimony would have been an integral part of any successful prosecution of those cases, and thus this factor weighed in favor of the admission of the extraneous-offense evidence. Toliver v. State, 279 S.W.3d 391, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 345 (Tex. App. Texarkana Jan. 21 2009).

1362. Defendant's only objection was on the basis of relevance, plus he failed to object to certain questions and testimony on recross-examination, such that defendant, under Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a)(1)(A), failed to preserve error on his claim that the State improperly impeached defendant's witness under Tex. R. Evid. 608(a), (b), 609(f). Scott v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 131, 2009 WL 51035 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

1363. Because defendant failed to respond to the State's relevance objection and because there was nothing in the record to show that a witness actually made any prior inconsistent statements, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 801(e)(1)(A), to which Scott's hearsay exceptions under Tex. R. Evid. 613(a), 803(8) would apply, the court could not say that the trial court abused its discretion by not allowing defendant to impeach the witness. Scott v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 131, 2009 WL 51035 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Jan. 8 2009).

1364. In a case in which a jury found defendant guilty of the offense of murder, the trial court did not err in excluding defendant's testimony regarding the specifics about the "immoral teachings" that he believed his children's grandmother and the complainant had been exposing the children to because defendant did not explain, nor was a reviewing court able to discern, how any testimony about the contents of any "immoral teachings" would have had any tendency to make his self-defense claim more or less probable. Washington v. State, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 4434, 2009 WL 40168 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Jan. 8 2009).

1365. Issue of the certainty of conviction absent the prejudicial event was not relevant in this case because the improper statement occurred during the punishment phase, after defendant had already been convicted. Moore v. State, 278 S.W.3d 444, 2009 Tex. App. LEXIS 9 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Jan. 6 2009).

1366. Evidence that defendant failed to appear in 1999 and that his bond was forfeited was relevant and admissible as evidence of guilt, and defendant failed to present any evidence showing that his failure to appear was not flight from prosecution, plus he presented no argument that the probative value of the evidence was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Tex. R. Evid. 403; thus, he did not show that the trial court abused its discretion or committed reversible error in admitting the evidence, for purposes of Tex. R. App. P. 44.2(b). Pratte v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9716 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 31 2008).

1367. Trial court did not err by admitting evidence that defendant tried to flee from police during his arrest because it was relevant, as defendant failed to show that his flight was unconnected to the capital murder offense based on his testimony that he did so because he was wanted for a probation violation and did not want to go back to jail. The evidence was probative because it showed the context and circumstances of defendant's arrest, the State spent relatively time developing the evidence, and the evidence did not have a tendency to suggest a decision on an improper basis or that it impressed the jury in an irrational way. Baker v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9416 (Tex. App. Dallas Dec. 18 2008).

1368. Defendant complained that the admission of evidence that he had left a note containing his name, jail address, and other information in the women's room was irrelevant and prejudicial; however, the trial court determined that the probative value of the evidence was substantial. Wilson v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9395 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 17 2008).

1369. Defendant argued that the pretrial identification was tainted because officers did not take written descriptions from witnesses until after the identification, but the statements were not in evidence, defendant did not explain the relevance of the statements, and he cited no case law in support of his contention, contrary to Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(h). Reed v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9500 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 17 2008).

1370. Because defense counsel failed to lay any predicate regarding the inception of defendant's tattoos, the existence or non-existence of the tattoos was not relevant to identification and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing the evidence; one victim identified defendant and another victim did not recall seeing any tattoos, such that it would have been improper for defendant to show his tattoos to the jury without an explanation of when they were acquired, and without the proper predicate, the proffered evidence was not relevant and was more prejudicial than probative. Harris v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9474 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 16 2008).

1371. Because no seizure occurred when the police took possession of abandoned property, as in this case, the lawfulness of the arrest, for purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 14.01, was not relevant. Bailey v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9213 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 11 2008).

1372. In defendant's trial for sexual assault of a child under Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 22.021(a)(B)(i), the trial court did not err in admitting extraneous evidence under Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.37, § 2; the victim testified that defendant fondled her several times, beginning at age 11 or 12, and this testimony was relevant to the state of mind of the victim and defendant, as well as the previous relationship between them. Hawkins v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9208 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Dec. 11 2008).

1373. Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a photograph of defendant holding a pistol during his trial for possessing more than four grams of cocaine with intent to deliver and for possessing more than four ounces of marihuana where the photograph was relevant because it made it more probable that defendant knowingly possessed both the contraband and the pistol, and where that relevance was not outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice because no significant amount of time was required to introduce the photograph. Furthermore, even though the photograph had the potential for impressing the jury in an improper way pursuant to Tex. R. Evid. 404(b) by suggesting that defendant was the sort of person who brandished a pistol during a telephone conversation, by linking defendant to the pistol found in the night stand of his motel room, albeit indirectly, the photograph was some evidence that defendant used the pistol to protect his drugs and money, and the State's only other evidence of such use, beyond defendant's simple possession of the weapon, was a police officer's testimony describing defendant's ambiguous movements when the officers entered his motel room. Rangel v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9008 (Tex. App. Austin Dec. 5 2008).

1374. In an aggravated assault case, a trial court did not err by allowing a victim's father to testify during the guilt/innocence phase of the case because his brief testimony, which included basic information about himself, the victim, the evening of the shooting, and the victim's condition, was relevant and not overly prejudicial. Sanchez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9072 (Tex. App. Eastland Dec. 4 2008).

1375. In defendant's drug case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting in evidence the shotgun found on the back seat of the vehicle that defendant was driving just before his arrest because the probative value of the shotgun was considerable and significantly necessary to the State's case because it was a link tending to show that defendant knowingly possessed the cocaine. Additionally, the evidence of the shotgun was relevant to prove defendant's knowledge that he possessed narcotics. Harris v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9090 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Dec. 4 2008).

1376. Court properly sustained the prosecutor's relevance objections because defense counsel did not limit his questions specifically to the assault victim's experience during the period surrounding the incident in question; the questions regarding whether Paxil could be used to treat "obsessive/compulsive disorder" and whether its side effects included "agitation and anxiety"--were asked in a general fashion, not about the victim's own experience on the medication. Scott v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9142 (Tex. App. Houston 14th Dist. Dec. 4 2008).

1377. In a capital murder case, a trial court did not violate defendant's right to due process or right to present a defense by excluding a digital video disk (DVD) from evidence because defendant was able to present an effective defense and place the credibility of the witness into question without the admission of the DVD recording. Moreover, the only showing made by defendant concerning the DVD's relevance was that the DVD contained additional statements made by the witness that were similar to those made at trial; therefore, the DVD added nothing to the defense, and its exclusion was within the zone of reasonable disagreement. Gonzalez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8954 (Tex. App. San Antonio Dec. 3 2008).

1378. In defendant's indecency with a child case, the court properly excluded evidence that a boyfriend of the victims' mother was a registered sex offender because evidence of the boyfriend's registered-sex-offender status would only have been relevant if the identity of the alleged perpetrator of the offenses was an issue in the case. However, evidence of an alternative perpetrator was not relevant to the determination of whether the alleged offenses occurred. Shaw v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 9038 (Tex. App. Waco Dec. 3 2008).

1379. Admission of a victim's testimony that he would not feel safe if defendant were released was relevant during the punishment phase of defendant's trial. Boone v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8665 (Tex. App. Dallas Nov. 19 2008).

1380. Defendant's claim of ineffective assistance failed under the prejudice prong of the test; there were credibility concerns regarding a jailer, whom defendant claimed counsel was ineffective for not bringing in to testify, plus duplicate testimony that defendant requested and was refused a breath test was only slightly relevant to the issue of whether defendant was intoxicated, not nearly to the degree that its absence undermined the court's confidence in the verdict of guilty of felony driving while intoxicated under Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 49.04, 49.09. Baker v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8621 (Tex. App. Texarkana Nov. 18 2008).

1381. Court properly admitted photographs of defendant's tattoos at sentencing because the tattoos were probative of defendant's character for continuing to engage in criminal activities; defendant's relatives offered evidence regarding defendant's capability for rehabilitation, but those concepts differed significantly with the ideas portrayed by tattoos of Adolf Hitler and Klansmen with shotguns and nooses, among other images. Dean v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8441 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Nov. 6, 2008).

1382. For purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 404(a)(2), 405, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant to offer evidence of the victim's two assault convictions; the mere fact that the victim assaulted another in 2001 did not suggest any intent or motive for the victim to attack defendant years later, no connection was shown with the victim's more recent assault conviction and the events in question, and neither conviction was relevant to demonstrate either the reasonableness of defendant's fear of danger, for self-defense purposes, or that the victim was the first aggressor. Nolan v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8662 (Tex. App. Austin Oct. 31 2008).

1383. Evidence of defendant's association with white supremacists and racist beliefs was relevant, for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 401, 402, because it provided the motive for defendant's violent sexual assault on the victim; based on defendant's use of racial slurs before and during the incident, the court could not say the trial court abused its discretion in finding such evidence relevant for the purpose of demonstrating motive. Tuck v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8525 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 30 2008).

1384. Trial court did not err in finding that the potential character conformity inference did not substantially outweigh the relevant purpose of showing motive for the aggravated sexual assault with evidence of defendant's skinhead and neo-Nazi affiliation, given that (1) the evidence was probative for establishing motive, (2) the record did not support the notion that the evidence was going to tend to impress the jury in an irrational manner, (3) the trial court instructed the jury to consider defendant's other bad acts only for the purposes of determining the motive and intent, (4) the court presumed the jury followed the trial judge's instructions, (5) the evidence was developed quickly, and (6) although the evidence was not essential to the State's case, the State had a compelling reason for presenting the evidence. Tuck v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 8525 (Tex. App. Houston 1st Dist. Oct. 30 2008).

1385. Extraneous offenses were same transaction contextual evidence under Tex. R. Evid. 404(b), relevant under Tex. R. Evid. 401, and properly admitted by the trial court, given that the events were interwoven and provided information to the jury that was essential to understanding the context of the offense of assault on a public servant; the evidence of the circumstances of the assault was essential because it tended to prove the allegations in the indictment, and based on defendant's aversion to arrest, the jury could have inferred the requisite intent to cause bodily injury to the trooper, plus even if evidence of the extraneous offenses was not admissible, any error was harmless, given that the trooper was asked what charges were filed against defendant. Mosley v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7091 (Tex. App. Tyler Sept. 24, 2008).

1386. For best interest purposes, the court disagreed with the child's guardian ad litem's contention that because (1) the child cried uncontrollably during the mother's first visit, when the child was six months old, and (2) the child referred to her foster parents as mommy and daddy, this was evidence that she preferred them over her biological parents; evidence that a parent is unable to console her infant child may be relevant to other of the factors, such as the emotional and physical needs of the child and the parental abilities of the parent, but it is doubtful that such evidence is indicative of the infant's conscious, volitional desire to maintain a parent-child relationship or to permanently sever that relationship, and it is likewise doubtful that evidence an infant or toddler refers to her foster parents as mommy and daddy is probative on this issue. Evidence of an infant's or a toddler's conduct and statements like those of the child in question is not relevant to the issue of whether the child desires termination of the parent-child relationship, for purposes of Tex. Fam. Code Ann. §§ 153.008, 153.009. In the Interest of S.N., 272 S.W.3d 45, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 7020 (Tex. App. Waco 2008).

1387. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering discovery sought by real parties in interest from relators, and thus the court denied mandamus relief, given that (1) the financial documents real parties requested were relevant to the cause of action alleged, (2) relators offered no evidence as to why the production of the financial documents were privileged or exempted from discovery, (3) relators cited no authority in support of an asserted constitutional right to privacy and it had previously been determined that there was no constitutionally protected privacy right in one's personal financial records, and (4) relators did not carry their burden of showing that the requests were overbroad. In re Manion, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6813 (Tex. App. Amarillo Sept. 11 2008).

1388. In a breach of contract suit by former employees of a corporation, the admission of certain documents on the corporation's operators' misappropriation counterclaim was proper as they were relevant in establishing the amount of reimbursement sought by the operators due to an employee's actions in falsifying customer invoices, which required the operators to reimburse the customers. Tucker v. Inter-American Oil Works, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6944 (Tex. App. Eastland Sept. 11 2008).

1389. Evidence of one's subjective belief about what a contract said or about whether an amendment occurred was not relevant to whether there was a meeting of the minds sufficient to amend the contract. Paciwest, Inc. v. Warner Alan Props., LLC, 266 S.W.3d 559, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6812 (Tex. App. Fort Worth 2008).

1390. For purposes of Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.36(a), defendant's membership in a prison gang was relevant to the circumstances of the murder and the evidence was not offered solely to show that defendant murdered the victim because he acted in conformity with his bad character; for purposes of Tex. R. Evid. 403, the probative force and the State's need to admit evidence that the victim and defendant were members of the same prison gang outweighed factors that favored exclusion, as the evidence of guilt was so compelling, the gang evidence did not consume inordinate time, and such was not mentioned in closing argument. Vasquez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6831 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Sept. 4, 2008).

1391. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's statement, which contained a list of persons to whom defendant admitted he had sold methamphetamine as well as his admissions that he had bought approximately a half-ounce of methamphetamine every week for the last three years, that he used about a quarter-ounce every week, that he sold the rest, and that he sold enough methamphetamine to support his habit, because those portions of the statement that related to defendant's selling methamphetamine were relevant to proving intent to deliver, which was an essential element of defendant's offense, possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver. Furthermore, the probative force and the State's need to admit the statement outweighed the factors that favored exclusion because defendant's admission that he regularly sold methamphetamine was compelling evidence that he intended to sell methamphetamine, and his admission further served to rebut his theories that the drugs were planted on him and that the money that he carried when he was arrested had come, not from selling drugs, but from payments from his rental properties. Bridges v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6634 (Tex. App. Fort Worth Aug. 29, 2008).

1392. Trial court properly admitted nine autopsy/crime scene photographs of the deceased victims involved in a fatal car crash where they depicted the victims' bodies at the scene of the collision and as they were received at the morgue, and they were offered during the medical examiner's testimony to identify the victims prior to autopsy. Cortez v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6533 (Tex. App. Corpus Christi Aug. 27, 2008).

1393. In a theft case, a court reversibly erred by excluding evidence that the complainant was a prostitute because the jury could not properly evaluate a witness's story that he was the complainant's bodyguard and would have intervened to protect her, and his business interest, if she had been in danger. Thomas v. State, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 6498 (Tex. App. Dallas Aug. 26, 2008).
